Search for registrar put on hold

■ A UI search to fill a key position fails to find "the right person."
 By Lisa Pogue
 The Daily Iowan

After conducting three sets of interviews and turning away numerous candidates for the UI registrar position, a search committee plans to regroup during the fall semester after the current registrar decided to postpone his retirement. Registrar Jerald Dallam said he volunteered to stay for the fall semester as a full-time employee to continue to fill the position after the committee announced that its search had failed. Originally, the 21-year veteran planned to begin phased retirement July 31, when his successor would have taken over.

"We are grateful to have his expertise and continuing involvement in this important office," Lola Lopes, the university's associate provost for undergraduate education, wrote in a memo to top administrators. Unsuccessful searches are not rare, Lopes said. She cited this year's nine-month search for a new dean of the Graduate School, which produced no "viable candidates." A search committee for that position will also start over in the fall.

"We just didn't find the right person for the job," said Lopes, who will make the final hiring decision.

The 10-member search committee plans to meet with Lopes again next week to discuss when and how the search will be conducted, said Linda McGuire, an associate law dean and a committee member. The committee will probably look at alternative ways to attract candidates, such as making additional contacts with school offices and requesting that candidates be nominated by co-workers, McGuire said.

Lopes said that approach will be more personal than the original recruiting methods. Advertisements for the registrar position were placed in February publications of the

U.N. declares war on AIDS

■ The AIDS conference ends with an agreement on the first global blueprint to fight the disease.

By Dafna Linzer
 Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — In the first global approach to battling a disease, the United Nations Wednesday adopted an AIDS blueprint that sets tough targets for reducing infection rates and protecting the rights of people with the virus.

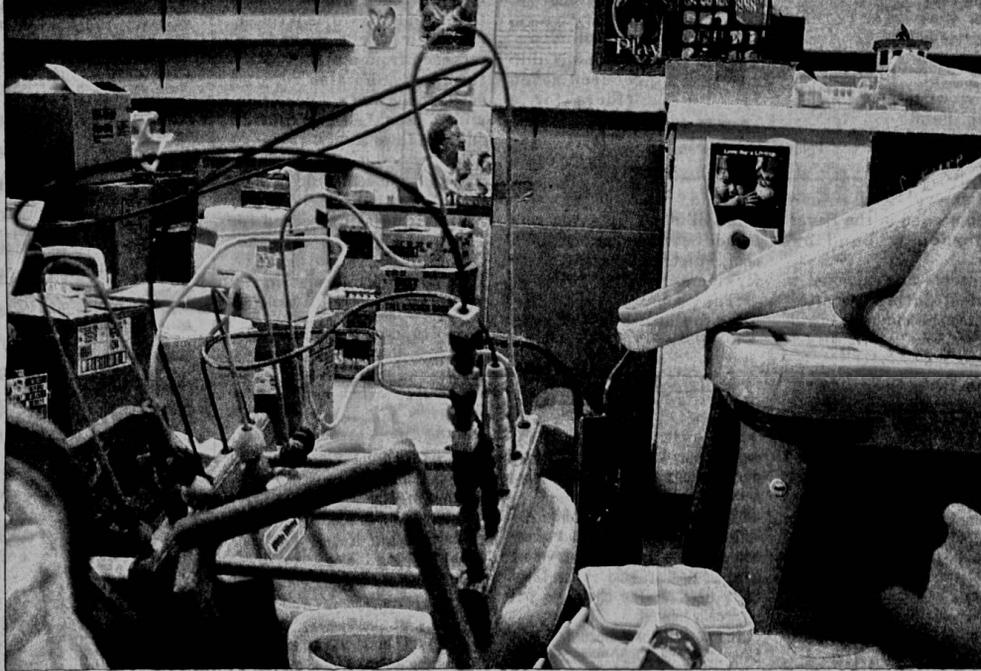

Under pressure from Islamic countries, Western nations were forced to back away from specifically naming the most vulnerable populations, including homosexuals and prostitutes. But experts said Wednesday that the heart of the document was in the details of the plan, not the language. "It's not a perfect text, but it is a good text, action-oriented, and practical," said Australian Ambassador Penny Wensley, who co-chaired negotiations on the draft.

With the rap of a gavel and a round of applause, the 16-page Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS was adopted by consensus by the 189-nation General Assembly. It calls for accelerating efforts to find a cure for the disease that has taken more than 22 million lives.

"After today, we shall have a document setting out a clear battle plan for the war against HIV/AIDS, with clear goals and a clear timeline," U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan said. "It is a blueprint from which the whole of humanity can work in building a global response to a truly Toys lie cluttered, waiting to be packed at the former home of the Toy Library in the Old Public Library building. Ruth Rhodes, the "toy librarian," rests in the back after a long day of packing. The Toy Library will re-open in Sycamore Mall.

Toy Library checks out of downtown

Bundles of toys, some in boxes and others loose, formed small mountains in the 4Cs Toy Library Wednesday afternoon — one day before a truck would arrive to carry it all to a new home.

After months of searching, the toy-lending library finally found a one-year residence in the Sycamore Mall, and many of its customers say the location will not discourage them from continuing to make regular visits. The library, which allows families to check out a wide variety of toys that some say they wouldn't otherwise have access to, plans to re-open July 5. The library had been located in space leased by the UI in the Old Public Library for 15 years. But when the university decided to move all of its offices out of the building, the library received an eviction notice, and some thought it would never open again.

"It's kind of hectic these days," said toy librarian Ruth Rhodes, who has been packing toys in the 202 S. Linn

St. building for the past several days. "But we're so pleased. It's going to be heaven."

"It's not going to be downtown ... but I think the new location is still going to have a lot of advantages," said Donna D'Alessandro, a UI assistant professor of pediatrics and a one-year

Street riots in Northern Ireland won't stop UI students from participating in a study-abroad program at a world-class university in a nation that threatens to explode into hostility.

In the past week, Northern Ireland's capital city, Belfast, has experienced some of the worst riots in three years, after Protestant militants began throwing rocks and bottles at Catholic schoolgirls. Police with helmets and shields eventually had to separate several hundred young men and teenagers from both sides after being pelted with stones and bottles.

"Anytime you go to another country, there's always a risk," said John Rogers, a UI study-abroad adviser. But then, he added, "the risks of traveling within our own country are similar."

UI junior Liz Craig is one of three students who will take on those risks when her group leaves for Northern Ireland on Sept. 17. Craig, who will study English and political science at Queens University in Belfast, said the ever-changing political and social atmosphere

Fed snips away at interest rates for sixth time this year

■ Some financial experts complain the quarter-point cut is too small.

By Martin Crutsinger
 Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve cut interest rates for the sixth time this year on Wednesday, but by just a quarter-point, sending a signal that its most aggressive recession-fighting effort in nearly two decades may be coming to an end.

Analysts said they still expected at least one more quarter-point move at the Fed's August meeting, but they also said the country has probably seen the last of the bolder half-point rate reductions the Fed had been using to keep the record, 10-year economic expansion alive. "The Fed left the door open to doing whatever it needs to do to get the economy moving again, but the dosage will be smaller," said Allen Sinai, the chief economist at Decision Economics in New York.

Wall Street investors, who had hoped for another half-point cut, took the smaller one in stride. The Dow Jones industrial average, which had been up approximately 25 points before the Fed's mid-afternoon announcement, finished the day down 37.64 at 10,434.84. The NASDAQ composite index, however, rose a modest 10.12 to close at 2,074.74.

The quarter-point rate cut pushed the Fed's target for the federal-funds rate, the interest that banks charge each other, to 3.75 percent, down from 6.5 percent, where it stood before the Fed began cutting rates on Jan. 3.

The Fed action was immediately followed by a quarter-point cut in commercial banks' prime lending rate, sending the benchmark for millions of

It's summer - time to flock to school

■ Summer classes may appeal to students looking to "lighten the load" during the academic year.

By Deidre Bello
The Daily Iowan

The UI director of Admissions said Wednesday he can't explain why enrollment decreased slightly during the past academic year but is up this summer.

"I don't see a relationship between variations in fall and summer enrollment," Michael Barron said.

When enrollment dipped by 535 students last fall, university officials touted a higher four-year graduation rate — which increased to 37 percent — resulting in part from the new four-year contract. The contract, which incoming freshmen are eligible to sign, guarantees that the university will offer the courses needed for graduation if a student takes at least 15 hours per semester. But statistics released this week indicate that some students are taking fewer hours during the school year and registering during the summer to catch up. This summer, 157 more students are taking classes than did last year. The figure includes an increase of 128 junior and senior liberal arts students, a report shows. During the three-week session, enrollment rose by 367.

The days of taking small summer-school classes are over.

Students traditionally take summer courses to graduate on time, Barron said. The advantage of taking a three-week course is that students have a full summer ahead of them after the May session, he said.

"Students can lighten up the load just a little," he said. Some students take fewer hours during the year and make up hours during the summer, said UI senior Noah Mundahl. In addition to taking 15 semester hours each semester during the academic year, Mundahl is taking two summer courses in order to graduate on time.

"For me, it was realizing [that taking summer classes] was more important than a summer job," he said, adding that starting graduate school and his career as soon as possible are his top priorities.

Students from other universities and local high schools who wish to take summer classes at the UI factor into the enrollment increase. Another boost is the continuing increase in engineering and business students.

The Tippie College of Business showed an increase of 72 over last year's figure of 537, while enrollment in the College of Engineering grew by 61 from 347.

The business school typically offers multiple introductory classes during the summer, which are capped at 50 students per section.

"The days of taking small summer-school classes are over," said Nancy Hauserman, the school's associate dean for the undergraduate program.

Summer courses allow students to build more intimate relations with classmates and professors, accommodate an internship, and graduate in a timely fashion, she said.

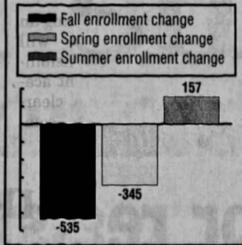

Also represented in the statistics are students who want to gain admission to the business school.

"The demand to get in remains as high as ever," Hauserman said, adding that the college has made an effort to offer more popular courses because of the increasing interest in summer enrollment.

applied for an internship but wasn't accepted. Like many others, he is taking summer classes in order to graduate on time.

Coralville scurries to enlist RAGBRAI help

■ The town needs 500 more volunteers before the 10,000 riders roll in next month.

By Lisa Kanning
The Daily Iowan

With a month to go until more than 10,000 bike riders pedal into Coralville, RAGBRAI committee members are looking for more volunteers to pitch in.

The Coralville RAGBRAI committee is looking for 500 more volunteers to fill its quota of 1,000 for the event, which begins July 27, said

Sherry Carpenter, a volunteer committee co-chairwoman.

The RAGBRAI housing committee is also looking for people to board riders both in their homes and on their lawns.

Volunteer shifts for RAGBRAI, sponsored by the Des Moines Register, will be two hours in length, Carpenter said.

"We have something of interest for everybody," she said.

Volunteer opportunities are available for people of all ages, she said. Before the riders arrive, children are needed to help decorate the streets and sidewalks with chalk along Fifth Street.

Other workers are needed in the campground areas to assist with parking, hand out courtesy bags, and direct people to the showers. Volunteers are also needed in the Beverage Garden to hand out drinks.

Volunteers are expected to be busiest during the afternoon once the majority of riders get to Coralville, Carpenter said.

The people who are registered to ride aren't looking to be entertained or wine and dined.

— Patti McGillin,
volunteer co-chairwoman

Last year, volunteer committee co-chairwoman Patti McGillin housed seven riders for a night.

"It was delightful to meet the people I did," she said.

McGillin set up seven cots in her basement to provide a cool, quiet, and restful place for riders.

"The people who are registered to ride aren't looking to be entertained or wine and dined," she said.

During her visitors' stay last year, McGillin lit up her tree with lights to help riders find their way home as they returned from a night out on the town. She also set out goodie bags and a quick grab-and-go breakfast and provided fresh towels.

"It's good to know that someone can come and feel at home in my house," she said.

Individuals interested in volunteering can call the Coralville City Hall at 351-1266 for more information.

Bus-accident victim files lawsuit against state

A former Iowa football player who contends that a Coralville bus hit him in February 2000 and his wife have filed separate lawsuits against the state of Iowa.

The lawsuits, filed by Iowa City residents Raynard and Priscilla Manning, seek reimbursement for medical bills and other unspecified damages. The Mannings filed similar suits against the city of Coralville and bus driver Patricia Burrier in September 2000, which are still pending.

The accident allegedly occurred Feb. 3 on Newton Road, Johnson County District Court records said. The Mannings of 741 Alpine Drive, were walking east toward Woolf Avenue after attending an Iowa-Kansas basketball game at Carver-Hawkeye Arena. A westbound Coralville Transit bus, driven by Burrier of Wellman, Iowa, allegedly struck Raynard Manning, according to court records.

UI Public Safety officers allegedly routed pedestrians "in an unsafe manner," causing the bus to injure Raynard Manning, court records said.

Public Safety officials declined to comment on the case.

Police on lookout for robbery suspect

Iowa City police are looking for a suspect in connection with a robbery and assault of an elderly man Monday evening.

The incident took place in the alley behind the 400 block of East Davenport Street at 6 p.m. The alleged thief offered to assist the 81-year-old victim, a native of New York, in locating a business, said police Lt. Richard Wyss.

The suspect then struck the victim's face, causing minor nose and mouth injuries. The victim was knocked to the ground and robbed of an undisclosed amount of money, according to police records.

The suspect is described as a white male; he was walking a dog at the time of the attack.

Anyone with information regarding the incident is encouraged to contact Iowa City police at 356-5272.

Police investigate lascivious acts with child complaint

Coralville police are investigating a complaint after a young girl reported awakening early Tuesday morning next to a stranger kissing her face.

Police responded to a call to 704 Fifth Street after the juvenile reported the alleged lascivious acts with a child complaint, said Police Chief Barry Bedford. The child was not physically injured.

The perpetrator is described as a 5 feet, 5 inches tall 30-year-old male with dark hair, dark skin, and a scruffy beard. He was wearing dark clothes.

The man fled through the front door when the girl yelled. Three other family members in the house at the time did not hear or see the suspect. Upon arrival, police officers searched the area but found no one.

"I don't want to scare people [by saying there is a dangerous person loose]," Bedford said. "But they should take precautions and make sure they are secure, especially while they are sleeping."

Police said there was no evidence of a forced entrance; they are unsure whether the door was left unlocked at the residence.

The police are in the process of investigating several leads.

U.N. agrees on blueprint to help world fight AIDS

global challenge."

The three-day U.N. conference brought together more than 3,000 health experts, scientists, lawmakers, aid workers, and people living with the virus.

First detected in homosexual men in the United States 20 years ago, the AIDS virus has exploded across the developing world, with more than 36 million people now infected. More than two-thirds of those afflicted are in Africa — most of them women.

A last-minute compromise on the declaration came after Western nations reluctantly agreed to drop language specifically naming groups vulnerable to the disease — including homosexuals and prostitutes — because it was offensive to some Muslim nations.

Instead, the new language refers to those who are at risk because of "sexual practice" and "livelihood," and prisoners as those made vulnerable through "institutional location."

Egyptian diplomat Amr Rashdy, who led the push to change the language, said his country could live with the final document. "The outcome is fair and we accept it," he told the Associated Press.

But others argued that the original language would have better served those most in need of protection.

"For many, there is a reluctance to recognize groups affected by HIV/AIDS including men having sex with men; much of that reluctance is based on religion and on culture," said Mary Robinson, the U.N. high commissioner for human rights. "A failure to recognize it means the numbers of those infected can only grow."

Annan, who has made fighting AIDS a personal priority, acknowledged that tackling the issue had exposed "painful differences" among nations.

"Everyone has learned something here at this conference. In some countries, maybe it will take a bit longer to recognize the reality and the need to respect the rights of every individual," he said.

Dr. Paul Delay, the chief of the HIV/AIDS division at the U.S. Agency for International Development, said that despite the changes, "the targets have not been diluted."

Though not legally binding, the document calls on governments to create AIDS policies and programs to quickly reduce infection rates and protect those most at risk.

It makes specific references to cooperation needed between public and private sectors. It also recognizes the need for greater access to affordable drugs.

Drug companies have lowered prices, but African leaders at the summit said prices are still too high for most in the developing world.

Other targets set forth in the document include:

- The development of national strategies and financing plans to combat HIV/AIDS by 2003.

- The number of infants infected with HIV should be reduced by 20 percent by 2005 and by 50 percent by 2010 through providing treatment to expectant HIV-positive mothers.

- By 2003, countries should develop national programs to increase the availability of drugs to treat HIV infections by addressing issues such as pricing, and by 2005 they should make progress in implementing comprehensive health care programs.

Annan, who was nominated Wednesday by the Security Council for a second term as U.N. secretary-general, says $7 billion to $10 billion is needed annually to halt AIDS and reverse its effects.

The AIDS document "supports the establishment on an urgent basis of a global HIV/AIDS and health fund to finance an urgent and expanded response to the epidemic," he said.

member of the library.

Better access, including more building space and parking areas and no stairs to climb, is one of the most prominent advantages. Sycamore Mall may mean a longer drive for some customers who enjoyed the convenience of the downtown location. But it is now closer to other customers, 4Cs coordinator Teresa Guither said.

It may also draw the interest of a new crowd because of the additional exposure the mall creates, said Judith Pascoe, a UI associate professor of English and supporter of the library.

The Toy Library's new site is also "right across the parking lot" from other services offered by 4Cs in its administration building at 1500 Sycamore St.,

Guither said.

"I think [the location] will end up being a blessing," she added.

After a lot of "begging" for help throughout the community, a deal with Sycamore Mall finally came through, Guither said. Because the mall was unable to offer an extended lease and requested rent payments too high for the 4Cs budget, it originally was not an option.

It was an unfamiliar issue for the Toy Library, whose space in the Old Public Library was rent-free.

However, 4Cs board member Kay Prediger and her husband, Dale, volunteered to pay the mall's rent for one year at a reduced rate. Kay Prediger, a longtime childcare director, said she felt it was important the library stay open.

"This at least gave us some extra time," Guither said.

Plans are underway concerning a permanent location, and details should be settled within a year, said Guither, who would not include the specifics of the plans.

"It's an incredible resource for the community," D'Alessandro said. "I'm so thankful it's going to continue. I can't say that enough. Iowa City would be diminished without it."

The Toy Library is not in danger of losing customers — 85 to 90 percent are university-affiliated — because people enjoy the personal attention and care their children receive there, she said.

D'Alessandro's son loves to go the library, not only to borrow the toys, but also to see Rhodes.

"She knows who I am, my child, and what [toys] he'd be interested in," D'Alessandro said.

attracted her to Belfast in the first place. It will be interesting to witness political and social unrest firsthand, she said.

However, she may not even come close to any potential unrest: Queens is located in the southern part of the city, while recent fighting has been concentrated in the north.

Both the students and the UI have been in touch with study-abroad program directors at Queens, who have kept them informed about local conflicts.

The UI study-abroad program also checks the U.S. State Department's Web site, which alerts American travelers of places to avoid and provides timely information on world conflicts. The State Department issues warnings for places where Americans are being threatened or targeted.

Rogers said the study-abroad program follows the State Department's lead and cancels any program when students are endangered. He couldn't recall ever doing so.

He added that the study-abroad program is prepared to cancel the trip if serious conflict develops before the group leaves and that the three students will return to the United States if they are in danger while in Belfast.

"I'm pretty much OK, unless I begin shouting out that I'm either Catholic or Protestant," Craig said. "The city's about as safe as any American metropolis."

UI senior Courtney Donohue, who recently returned from Belfast, said much of what happens in the city is over-hyped by the media. Campus life is not affected by conflicts that take place elsewhere in city, she said.

"As long as you don't wander into a bad part of town in the middle of the night, you'll be OK," she said. "If you stay smart, then you're going to be fine."

Students shouldn't worry about living there, Donohue said; they should instead enjoy the cultural opportunities they encounter. This is a sentiment that Craig seems to share.

"I'm set on going, and nothing can stop me," she said. "Unless they tell me I can't go."

business and consumer loans down to 6.75 percent, the lowest level in seven years.

Analysts suggested the Federal Reserve's quarter-point rate cut represented a compromise between Fed officials still concerned that the economy could tumble into a recession and an opposing Fed camp that is growing worried about overdoing the rate relief and sowing the seeds of higher inflation next year.

As evidence of the internal debate, analysts noted the Fed's brief statement announcing its decision. The statement provided no explanation for why the central bank had decided to switch from a half-point cut to a quarter-point cut and instead dwelt on the continued threats to economic growth.

"The patterns evident in recent months — declining profitability and business capital spending, weak expansion of consumption, and slowing growth abroad — continue to weigh on the economy," the statement said.

"It looks like the Fed was split down the middle, and the quarter-point rate cut was a compromise," said David Jones, the chief economist for Aurbrey G. Lanston & Co.

American manufacturers, who have been the hardest hit by the yearlong economic slowdown, expressed disappointment with the decision to move rates down by just a quarter-point.

"Manufacturing has been in recession for nine months, and production losses have been comparable to the recession of 1990-91," said Jerry Jasinowski, the president of the National Association of Manufacturing. "There are still no clear signs of recovery."

ARCHIE BUNKER MOVED US FORWARD ...

PC gets applause

The death of Carroll O'Connor, who played Archie Bunker on "All in the Family," has sparked renewed interest in the show. Many news programs aired clips while reporting the actor's death and funeral, and TV Land ran a marathon of "All in the Family" over the weekend.

Heard today, the words of Archie Bunker sound shocking. The reason is immediately recognizable: They are not politically correct. Hearing Bunker complain about the problems he faces because of "spics" and "spades" tempts some non-bigoted people to applaud him simply for not being PC. That reaction, though understandable, is foolish.

Political correctness is so unpopular now that something's quality of being PC serves as an argument against it. For example, Sen. Bob Smith, R-N.H., attempted to characterize opposition to the Boy Scouts by whining, "We are in this age of political correctness. That is what we are talking about here — political correctness." Opposition to Archie Bunker's bigotry can be labeled in the exact same way.

PC now has a negative connotation because it has been attacked by individuals wishing to take America back to a time where ideas such as those espoused by Archie Bunker were tolerated

The truth is that Archie Bunker, like almost everyone on the wrong side of political correctness, was an ignorant jerk. The people of the United States ought to pride themselves that Bunker would be afraid to open his mouth today, lest he reveal his idiocy.

Many people complain that political correctness restricts free speech. It unfortunately does not. Most of the time, those people forget that the First Amendment guarantees nothing about popularity. Americans will always have the right to complain about a "colored family" moving next door or to kick homosexuals out of their troop or Klan meeting, but they will never have a constitutional guarantee to be respected afterwards.

Certainly, political correctness goes too far sometimes, especially when combined with ignorance. A few years ago, David Howard, an aide to the mayor of Washington, D.C., resigned over controversy about his use of the word "niggardly," which means the same as "stingy" and is no way related to the racial slur. Patriotism and religious faith also can be taken too far, but few would consider such paradigms undesirable in general. Political correctness is no different.

Americans desire to treat others with respect, even in the words they use. Most Americans look unfavorably upon those who denigrate entire groups of people through stereotyping and the use of disrespectful names. Political correctness is the name for this attitude. PC now has a negative connotation because it has been attacked by individuals wishing to take America back to a time where ideas such as those espoused by Archie Bunker were tolerated. "Those were the days" for the ignorant and prejudiced. America is much better off politically correct.

GOV.'S WALKING TOUR IS A POLITICAL SCAM ...

Vilsack's aimless wanderings

Summertime in Iowa is known for an arduous tour from the Missouri to the Mississippi. Little municipalities swell to maximum occupancy, citizens are rerouted to accommodate the pushy crowd, and sweaty public officials elbow to capitalize on the sudden statewide recognition.

No, it's not RAGBRAI. It is Gov. Tom Vilsack's walking tour across Iowa. A new event, Vilsack canvasses the state, stopping in the tiniest of villages to hear the voices of rural Iowa. No one would argue that Vilsack does indeed hear voices, but they are not of the variety that provide plans to improve the quality of life.

Vilsack's transparent goal is to energize his Democratic base. He must persuade it to fight hard in 2002 for the liberal promise of low teaching standards, an easy job for every unionized thug, and abortion on demand. The walking tour is a public-relations scam that backfired. The first headlines of the trip screamed that Vilsack is firing an undisclosed number of state workers. If layoffs were the first day's proclamation, citizens should be concerned about what misfortunes await revelation by the end of the tour.

Visits to East Coast cities to persuade resettled professionals to return does nothing to retain college students who are still here.

In two and a half years' time, Vilsack has produced one proactive measure, the Iowa 2010 project. In reality, Iowa 2010 is a tourniquet made in Mexico that fails to stop the draining of Iowa's lifeblood, its native youth. Vilsack has spent marginal time on retention and sizable time pushing for foreign immigration. The governor is the cause of the GOP Legislature's ridiculous symbolic protests, such as attempting to designate English as the official language of Iowa. These transplanted workers would exhaust our social services when Vilsack tours the pastoral provinces announcing layoffs.

Vilsack approached retention of talent the wrong way. Visits to East Coast cities to persuade resettled professionals to return does nothing to retain college students who are still here. Lack of culture and the weather are not the reasons people leave Iowa. Many Iowans are content to watch reruns of professional wrestling in their underwear. Minneapolis, Chicago, and Kansas City freeze and roast at the same latitude as Des Moines and Cedar Rapids.

The difference is the larger metropolitan areas offer competitive salaries, lower taxes, and diversions that make harsh weather tolerable. The governor has reason to worry about re-election next year. Iowa needs a governor with fiscally sound plans to make the state among the best nationally. Iowa does not need someone to entertain presidential wannabes and orchestrate a strategic influx of Democratic-voting migrant laborers.

The Internet: They have that on computers now

Computers control the world. To a certain degree, they even control time. (Need I remind you of Y2K?)

But what's the greatest feature of any computer? What controls us more than any other computer program? To quote the great philosopher, Homer Simpson, "The Internet! They have that on computers now!"

Yes, they do. And in a nation dominated by the impulse for instant gratification, the Internet has created a new level of desire. From shopping online to MP3s — which are the ultimate cure for the age-old problem of having a song stuck in your head — the Internet offers access to instant everything. What better medicine for Americans, whose official motto should be, "I want what I want, and I want it now!"

But the Internet's not for everyone, because if you don't own an Internet-ready computer at home, public Internet access is something of a commodity. That surprises me, considering how addicted our culture seems to be to the Internet.

The Chicago Public Library, for instance, has only one computer with Internet access set up at each of its branch locations. Granted, this is a huge library system with hundreds of branches throughout the city, but there's hardly a day when the waiting list for its Internet-ready computers doesn't extend into tomorrow. Another thing is you're not allowed to reserve the computers over the phone — their 56K modems are probably tying up the line. So, you have to hike down to the library branch of your choice when it opens at 9 a.m. (the crack of dawn, if you ask me) and write your name on a reservation list along with approximately 50 other people who have all rolled out of bed for the same purpose.

Everyone can reserve the Internet for up to an hour. But the library is open for fewer than 12 hours every day, and I've never been closer than 12th in line.

Libraries aren't the only problem. Consider university campuses. The UI has a gazillion million computers scattered around campus, or some such ludicrous number, and all but a handful require you to be a current UI student to use them. In part, the implementation of the new Hawk ID security system came in the wake of Tarsha Claiborne's threats sent via e-mail to dental students.

But this incident only prodded the UI into adopting a policy that universities around the world have long practiced. From Bradley University in Peoria, Ill., to DePaul University in Chicago, all the way to the University of Nijmegen in the Netherlands, Internet access on university campuses is only available to students. I understand the need for security. But say you live in one of these college towns, you're not a student, and you don't own a computer. These university campuses have Internet access up the wazoo. It should be more readily accessible, especially because public Internet access in many of these cities is still largely unavailable.

Nijmegen, for instance is a sensible college town outside of Amsterdam, but it only has one public library with three Internet-ready computers. At least, when in Europe, you have the option of visiting a pricey Internet café.

As their name suggests, Internet cafés are places where you can go for a café latte and check your e-mail or partake in other on-line activities. Some of these specialized cafés even offer free Internet access with the purchase of any alcoholic beverage. I like that idea. Internet cafés seem to be a growing trend, but right now, are more popular in Europe than America. Because these specialized cafés are a commodity, and many have a monopoly in their area, they tend to set their prices relatively high. I like to check my e-mail about seven times a day (that's roughly once during each hour I'm awake). So for me, the Internet café I found when I was backpacking through Salzburg, Austria, was something of a godsend. Of course, I came out of the café hobbled, my arm in a sling, and my leg severed below my knee. But that's the price of addiction, I suppose.

Judging by the long lines in many public libraries for access to their Internet-ready computers, I'd say there's quite a demand for more Internet access in America outside of a university setting.

Americans want what they want, and they want it now, and what we want is to control the world. Computers with Internet access control the world. Americans want the Internet. The Internet controls us. Thank God they have that on computers now.

Tom Tortorich is a DI columnist.

Budget cuts exact heavy toll

State agencies will severely cut back on their level of services.

DES MOINES — Budget cuts approved by this year's Legislature will raise community-college tuition up to 17 percent and slow inspections of manure lagoons, among other things, officials said Wednesday.

"We simply cannot continue to provide the same level of services with fewer funds," said Ted Stilwill, the head of the Department of Education.

Stilwill and a string of other state agency officials issued statements detailing how they plan to deal with budget cuts approved by lawmakers this year.

that will be affected.

Officials at the Department of Natural Resources said they will cut maintenance and close sections of 55 state parks, but Director Jeff Vonk said he hoped to avoid raising fees to use the parks. Officials said they would seek local volunteers to help keep parks open.

"Our park managers will seek help from their local communities for maintenance activities, such as mowing and litter pickup that could result in opening some of the closed facilities," said Steve Pennington, the acting parks administrator.

Report: Drug war targets blacks

Twelve percent of all black men, ages 20-34, were incarcerated last year.

By Diane Scarponi
Associated Press

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — When an epidemic of crack and gang violence erupted in cities such as New Haven in the 1990s, police and lawmakers struck back.

The war on drugs yielded dozens of new laws, including mandatory sentences for drug dealers and heavier penalties for dealing crack.

But those laws also had unintended consequences in minority communities.

Black men make up less than 3 percent of Connecticut's population but account for 47 percent of inmates in prisons, jails, and halfway houses, 2000 Census figures show.

One in 11 black men between the ages of 18 and 64 in Connecticut is behind bars, the Census found. In 1990, that figure was approximately one in 25.

Similar disparities can be seen across the country. In Louisiana, one of the few states to receive updated race statistics from the Census, black inmates outnumber whites 3-to-1; blacks account for only a third of the state's population.

Nationwide, the Justice Department reported that 12 percent of all black men between the ages of 20 and 34 were incarcerated last year.

Yale political-science Professor Donald Green said the density and poverty of cities combined with law-enforcement tactics have put more blacks in prison.

"Drug use is similar in white and nonwhite populations, but the level of enforcement is very different between the two groups," he said. "Violent crime is more associated with gang activity, associated with drug abuse in minorities, and enforcement is aimed overwhelmingly in that direction."

Also, Green said, poor people of all races turn to crime when there are no other opportunities.

Israeli Prime Minister gets U.S. cold shoulder

The Israeli leader and President Bush disagree publicly and privately on Mideast peace.

By Mark Lavie
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — On his way to the White House, Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon was hoping for talk of U.S.-Israeli unity at the expense of Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat.

Instead, Sharon wound up his Washington visit Wednesday after a cold shower of public disagreement with President Bush.

Sharon and Bush clashed in public over how much reduction in Mideast violence would be enough to trigger further political moves. And in a closed meeting, they disagreed over the explosive issue of freezing construction in Jewish settlements in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

"There must be a total cessation of violence" before any negotiations, Sharon said at every opportunity, even correcting a reporter who asked about "cessation."

"Total cessation," Sharon interjected.

Bush made it clear from the outset that his administration does not share the all-or-nothing Israeli view. He spoke of a need for an all-out effort by Arafat to stop the violence, but he also said he would concentrate on "what's realistic and what's possible."

The president sent Secretary of State Colin Powell to the Middle East ahead of Sharon's departure Wednesday to nudge the peace effort forward.

"This is going to be a long and difficult process," Powell said in Egypt, his first stop before talks with both sides today in Israel.

Sharon and Bush face different pressures, so the tension at their meeting was not surprising, said David Makovsky of the Washington Institute for Near East Policy.

"Sharon has political pressures because of a spate of killings of settlers on West Bank roads," Makovsky said. Settlers have run funeral corteges past the prime minister's office, he noted.

Bush, Makovsky said, is being pressured by Arab allies to force Israel to accept terms to end a conflagration they fear could spread to their countries.

Powell's mission in the Middle East is to shore up the shaky cease-fire negotiated two weeks ago by CIA Director George Tenet and to press the sides to adopt measures recommended by an international commission headed by former U.S. Sen. George Mitchell.

Paul Walker stars in The Fast and the Furious as Brian O'Conner, an undercover police officer.

After watching souped-up imported cars tear through city blocks at nearly 200 mph, suddenly those 25 mph residential speed limits just seem too confining.

That's the effect of The Fast and the Furious. After leaving the theater, you could sense the adrenaline in the parking lot as all the audience members hustled to their cars, eager to play street racer.

The Fast and the Furious builds around a series of dynamic driving sequences and holds the action together with a plot line reminiscent of West Side Story. While investigating a series of highway hijackings, undercover police officer Brian O'Conner (Paul Walker) uses his high-speed driving skills to get in good with LA street racing ringleader Dominic Toretto (Vin Diesel) and his precocious sister Mia (Jordana Brewster); however, he soon finds himself in the middle of a street war against rival gang leader Johnny Tran (Rick Yune).

Director Rob Cohen has made a career for himself by turning thinly written projects such as The Skulls and Dragonheart into watchable fare. Cohen succeeds again with The Fast and the Furious, thanks to a fleet of muscle cars and the cast of young actors who drive them. The outrageous decals, shimmering paint jobs, and push-button, turbo-charged engines on display will make young kids give up their dream of playing pro sports and turn street racer.

Cohen stages one particularly thrilling scene on an expansive California highway. As a member of Dominic's gang dangles from a speeding semi, a trio of black sedans try to usher him to safety. The sequence is remarkable for its suspense value but even more so for its choreography. Cohen weaves the vehicles around, beside, and even underneath the semi, creating a spectacle that is unexpectedly graceful for a film driven by sheer engine power.

"He's like gravity," says Mia of brother Dominic. The same can be said for Diesel himself, who commands attention in his every scene. Diesel's on-screen persona owes a great deal to his rough voice, and his imposing physical appearance and intense gaze complete Dominic's fiery, competent character. Though Diesel struggles when Dominic gets sentimental over the loss of his father, the stilted and unnecessary dialogue excuses his missteps.

Unfortunately, Walker doesn't come close to matching Diesel's weighty presence. Walker's performance calls to mind Keanu Reeves' most "surfer dude" moments. Walker's expressionless "So what do we do now?" and goofy attempt at a cocky grin made the audience laugh uncomfortably. However, like Reeves, Walker's good looks will likely be enough to keep landing him roles.

While The Fast and the Furious breaks no new dramatic ground with a tepid romance between Brian and Mia and a transparent hijacking sub-plot, the film succeeds in making race tracks seem obsolete. Watching The Fast and the Furious is an intoxicating experience. After this movie, don't be surprised if next time you're at a red light, you find yourself revving your engine and throwing a smug glance at the driver next to you.

Local DJ catches national ear

Chaircrusher and his label, Cornwarning, is generating sound and gaining attention.

By Aaron Brim
The Daily Iowan

Local electronic-music producer Kent Williams, a.k.a. Chaircrusher, is snagging the attention of the national media. The publicity stems from tracks Williams has produced and uploaded onto MP3.com.

In the June 2001 issue of Urb Magazine, the publication noted that "it's a mystery why a bigger label hasn't yet wandered into his cornfield."

"I guess they just stumbled across it, and they liked what they were hearing," Williams said.

Cornwarning, Williams' record label, with a title that sounds like the Iowa version of foot-and-mouth disease, is reportedly "Iowa's first techno label."

"I believed what I was doing was better than a lot of what I was hearing from some of these major record labels," Williams said. "So I saved up enough cash to start my own label." Cornwarning is composed of five DJ/producers. Recently, Williams teamed up with distinguished Detroit remixer Sean Deason to rework "Burundi2," a track Williams originally produced nearly three years ago.

Deason has worked with prominent Detroit electro pioneers Kevin Saunderson, Derrick May, Juan Atkins, and Richie Hawtin, and his clientele includes Carl Craig and Def Jam Records. He has established his own record label, Matrix Records, a world-renowned organization at the forefront of the Detroit techno market.

Chaircrusher's latest release, "Burundi2," integrates a tribal chorus with a rather simple melody and ends up somewhere between a mellow house composition and a creepy techno track.

Deason's remix of the track utilizes a quivering melody and a basic beat structure, but the tribal essence present in the original version is relatively nonexistent. This mix is too chilled for a Red Bull-induced patron to go ballistic on the dance floor, but it would fit in nicely on a downtempo compilation.

"Burundi2" will be available in vinyl format next week, Williams said. Five hundred copies of the Stone City EP will be test-pressed. "I have always loved music creation as one of the most effective forms of self-expression," he said. "I have always been a musician in one form or another."

CORNWARNING

Cornwarning will celebrate its latest release at Gabe's Rotation Saturday night. Chaircrusher, along with Deason and local DJ Alert, will provide the electronic tunes until their fingers bleed. For further info on the Cornwarning label, check out www.cornwarning.com.

ARTS BRIEF

Napster cuts a multi-label deal

LONDON (AP) — Hundreds of independent record companies in Britain and Europe signed a licensing agreement with Napster that will make thousands of tracks available to computer users worldwide.

Britain's Association of Independent Music and the Independent Music Companies Association signed the deal Tuesday with the Redwood City, Calif.-based Napster on behalf of Europe's independent record labels.

Napster, the former music industry bad boy, has been moving toward legitimacy after a court ruled it must remove protected works from its song-swapping service.

This latest deal — Napster's first direct, multilabel agreement — will help boost the company's file of songs when its online music-subscription service launches this summer.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Don't let someone you work with tempt you to do things that you know are wrong. Get ahead by working hard. You can push your own creative ideas. Join groups that offer a challenging position.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do things that you enjoy. It's time to pamper yourself and make the changes that will help you feel like a million bucks. Don't hold back. It's time you put yourself first.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Don't let someone you live with drive you crazy today. Get out and do what you want. Sticking around the house will only lead to petty differences. Your love life is getting stale. It's time to consider a change of pace, if not a new mate.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You'll enjoy getting together with friends. New relationships can develop if you take the time to experience new activities. Go out and enjoy. Luck will be on your side today if you know what you're doing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You'll be in a go-getter mood. Take on a challenge at work and don't be afraid to put yourself on the line. You will come up with the ideas needed to make a project fly. Remember, slow and steady wins the race.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't fool yourself. You'll be emotional today. Channel your energy into love, not war. You need intense physical activity to use up that tension. It's time to let loose. Try something new if you're tired of the daily grind.

The Ledge By Jesse Ammerman

Ways to liven up your plane trip

- Pretend to doze off for a while, then wake up and inform those in your row about this really weird dream you just had. Tell them that they were in it.
- Mention cheerfully that you think your hijacking scheme should work better now than it did last time.
- Remark to those sitting near you that you wish you hadn't eaten so many burritos for lunch.
- Keep glancing at your watch, and angrily mutter, "I thought this was supposed to be a magical time-traveling machine! My travel agent is so fired."
- Tell the person next to you that your hobbies include golf, reading, and projectile vomiting. Act queasy.
- When the flight attendants pass out food, ask for the lobster bisque, rack of lamb, and a white burgundy wine. If you get pretzels instead, berate them and shred your cocktail napkin in an act of defiance.
- When flying above the clouds, stare out the window and complain loudly that you still don't see any angels or other heavenly creatures.
- Jump into the cockpit and fly that baby yourself.

quote of the day

Everybody was afraid that if I stopped dancing, the tour wouldn't go on, and if the tour doesn't go on, a lot of people would be out of work, and I would stand to lose a great deal of money myself.

— Michael Flatley, creator of the Riverdance phenomenon, on his decision to insure his legs for $50 million. The 42-year-old dancer is currently in the middle of his Feet of Flames tour.

BASEBALL ROUNDUP

Chris Gardner/Associated Press

Atlanta Braves pitcher Odalis Perez reaches back to throw a pitch to a Philadelphia Phillies batter during the second inning Wednesday.

Braves in first place with win over Phillies

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Chipper Jones drove in three runs, and Odalis Perez allowed two earned runs as the Atlanta Braves moved into first place in the NL East with a 10-4 victory over the slumping Philadelphia Phillies on Wednesday.

The Braves, who trailed the Phillies by eight games on June 1, have won six straight, sweeping the New York Mets and Philadelphia on the road. The nine-time defending division champs are in first place for the first time since beating Cincinnati on opening day.

The Phillies, who tied the Chicago Cubs for the worst record in the majors last season, are 7-16 since topping out at 35-18 on June 1 and now trail the Braves by a half-game.

Mets 5, Cubs 4

CHICAGO — Joe McEwing hit a two-run homer, and Todd Zeile and Lenny Harris had RBI singles as the New York Mets rallied to beat the Chicago Cubs, 5-4, Wednesday to snap a six-game losing streak.

The Cubs lost despite two homers from Sammy Sosa, who is tied for third in the NL with 25.

The victory kept the Mets from being swept by the Cubs for the first time since 1992.

Yankees 15, Indians 5

NEW YORK — Tino Martinez went 4-for-5 with a homer and five RBIs to give some rare run support to Mike Mussina as the New York Yankees beat the Cleveland Indians, 15-5, on Wednesday.

The Yankees scored one more run in this game than they had in Mussina's previous six starts. Mussina (8-7), signed to an $88.5 million, six-year contract in the offseason, had been averaging only 3.6 runs of support coming into the game.

Pirates 6, Brewers 2

PITTSBURGH — Jason Schmidt pitched a four-hitter and hit one of the more unlikely homers in the majors this season, leading the Pittsburgh Pirates past the Milwaukee Brewers for the third-straight night, 6-2, Wednesday.

The Brewers have lost the momentum they created by sweeping the Cubs in Wrigley Field last weekend, falling to 0-5 in PNC Park — with five more games to go in what is fast becoming the most inhospitable venue in the NL to them.

Marlins 9, Expos 1

MIAMI — Jesus Sanchez allowed two hits in eight innings in his first start of the season, and Charles Johnson and Mike Lowell each drove in three runs as the Florida Marlins beat the Montreal Expos, 9-1, Wednesday night.

The Marlins, who have won 10 of their last 13, trail the Atlanta Braves by two games and the Phillies by a half-game in the NL East.

Twins 4, White Sox 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Kyle Lohse scattered three hits over seven innings to earn his first major league victory as the Minnesota Twins beat the Chicago White Sox, 4-1, Wednesday night to move back into first place in the AL Central.

Jacque Jones homered for Minnesota, which has a half-game lead in the division after Cleveland's 15-5 loss to New York earlier Wednesday. The Indians had held the top spot since June 20, the day Lohse was called up from Triple-A Edmonton.

Orioles 7, Blue Jays 3

TORONTO — Tony Batista hit a tiebreaking, two-run homer against his former team as the Baltimore Orioles beat the Toronto Blue Jays, 7-3, Wednesday night.

Batista, claimed on waivers Monday, went 3-for-4, and his homer off Esteban Loaiza (5-8) gave Baltimore a 5-3 lead in the sixth. Loaiza allowed five runs on eight hits in 5 1/2 innings.

BASEBALL BRIEFS

Sox put Martinez on disabled list, activate Florie

BOSTON — The bad news for the Boston Red Sox was having to put ace Pedro Martinez on the 15-day disabled list Wednesday. The silver lining was resolving the situation with reliever Bryce Florie — for now. Martinez, who hasn't won since May 30 and gave up four runs in less than five innings in Boston's 7-6 victory over the Tampa Bay Devil Rays on Tuesday, will be out at least through the All-Star break.

The Red Sox filled Martinez's roster spot with Florie, who is returning to the majors for the first time since being hit in the eye last Sept. 8 by a line drive off the bat of the New York Yankees' Ryan Thompson.

DeMuth gets plate assignment for All-Star game

NEW YORK (AP) — Dana DeMuth, in his 18th season as a major league umpire, will work behind the plate in next month's All-Star game at Safeco Field in Seattle.

The commissioner's office also announced Wednesday that Dale Scott, Jim Joyce, Jerry Layne, Ron Kulpa, and Anthony Randazzo will be part of the umpiring crew for the July 10 game.

DeMuth also worked the 1990 All-Star Game at Wrigley Field in Chicago.

Bengie Molina activated, Burke optioned to minors

ANAHEIM, Calif. — The Anaheim Angels activated catcher Bengie Molina from the disabled list Wednesday and optioned rookie catcher Jamie Burke back to Triple-A Salt Lake.

Molina missed 46 games after straining his right hamstring while running the bases on May 4. He entered Wednesday night's game against Texas hitting .259 with no homers and 11 RBIs in 85 at-bats. The Angels were 25-25 during his absence.

Last season as a rookie, Molina hit .281 with 14 homers and 71 RBIs — while catching more games (127) than any Angels catcher since Lance Parrish in 1990. He also was the hardest AL player to strike out, fanning once every 15.5 at-bats.

EDUCATION

City of Bettendorf Family Museum of Arts and Science Education Specialist Dance Instruction

The City of Bettendorf is seeking qualified candidates for the two positions of Education Specialist for dance instruction for the Family Museum of Arts and Science.

Under the supervision of the museum's Program Manager, the Education Specialist is responsible for planning and implementing activities, classes and workshops in movement and dance for children age 3 through 10.

Candidates must possess a level of knowledge normally acquired through the completion of a college degree or equivalent and two or more years of previous experience teaching dance to preschool and/or elementary aged children and dance performance. They may be assigned to indoor classrooms, exhibit galleries or outdoor events and activities and are required to be able to lift up to 20 pounds.

These positions are part-time/seasonal for 36 weeks beginning September 4, 2001 through June 3, 2002. Hours will range between six and 15 hours/week and will vary based on enrollments in museum dance classes and recital preparation. Starting wage is $10.50 per hour.

Please visit our job posting section on our website at www.bettendorf.org for additional information. Applications may also be obtained at City Hall, 1609 State Street, Bettendorf, IA 52722, and must be returned to Human Resources at City Hall by 5:00 p.m., July 20, 2001.

The City of Bettendorf is an Equal Opportunity Affirmative Action Employer. The City of Bettendorf complies with Americans with Disabilities Act.

Wizards, Jordan take Brown at No. 1

Wizards select high school senior; Bulls trade Elton Brand to the Clippers.

By Chris Sheridan
 Associated Press

NEW YORK — Jerry Krause stole the spotlight from Michael Jordan at the NBA draft on Wednesday, dealing his best player — Elton Brand — to the Clippers for unproven 18-year-old center Tyson Chandler.

On a night when high-school seniors were chosen first, second, and fourth, the crowd at Madison Square Garden let out an astonished howl when Commissioner David Stern announced the Clippers-Bulls trade.

It was the surprise moment of a night that saw Jordan make history by becoming the first NBA executive to select a high-school player first overall, as the Washington Wizards chose 19-year-old Kwame Brown of Glynn Academy in Brunswick, Ga.

Chandler, a 7-foot-1 center from Dominguez H.S. in Compton, Calif., went second before Pau Gasol, a forward for F.C. Barcelona, went third to Atlanta.

Gasol will eventually end up in Memphis with the Grizzlies as part of a trade that sent Shareef Abdur-Rahim to the Hawks for Lorenzen Wright, Brevin Knight and Gasol. That deal won't be official until July 18.

In another trade, the New Jersey Nets sent the rights to Eddie Griffin, selected seventh overall, to the Houston Rockets for the rights to their three first-round picks: Arizona forward Richard Jefferson (No. 13 overall), Stanford center Jason Collins (No. 18), and Pepperdine guard Brandon Armstrong (No. 23).

Also, Cleveland traded the rights to North Carolina center

Brendan Haywood, the 20th overall pick, to the Orlando Magic for center Michael Doleac.

The Bulls used the fourth pick on another high school senior, Eddy Curry of Thornwood H.S. in South Holland, Ill. Curry averaged 22 points, nine rebounds, and six blocked shots for 31-1 last season. The 6-foot-11, 285-pound Curry was the MVP of the McDonald's All-America game.

The Bulls, who had the youngest team in NBA history last season and won only 15 games, are now even younger after trading Brand, the co-Rookie of the Year in 1999-00. They also acquired forward Brian Skinner from the Clippers.

"We feel Tyson will be a very good player, but we wanted to get a veteran player, a proven player. Brand has proven himself. We know what we have," Clippers Vice President Elgin Baylor said.

Krause was not immediately available for comment.

Brown, a 6-foot-11, 240-pound center, stood up and hugged his family before walking on stage, smiling broadly, and shaking Stern's hand.

Stern, who has proposed a minimum age of 20 for incoming NBA players, wore a smile of his own as he watched Brown become the youngest player ever to hear his name announced first at an NBA draft.

Six high-school seniors made themselves eligible for this year's draft, and four were first-round picks.

Brown originally planned to attend the University of Florida before changing his mind when he learned he might be chosen among the top five. As a high-school senior, he averaged 20.1 points and 13.3 rebounds and was selected player of the year in the state of Georgia.

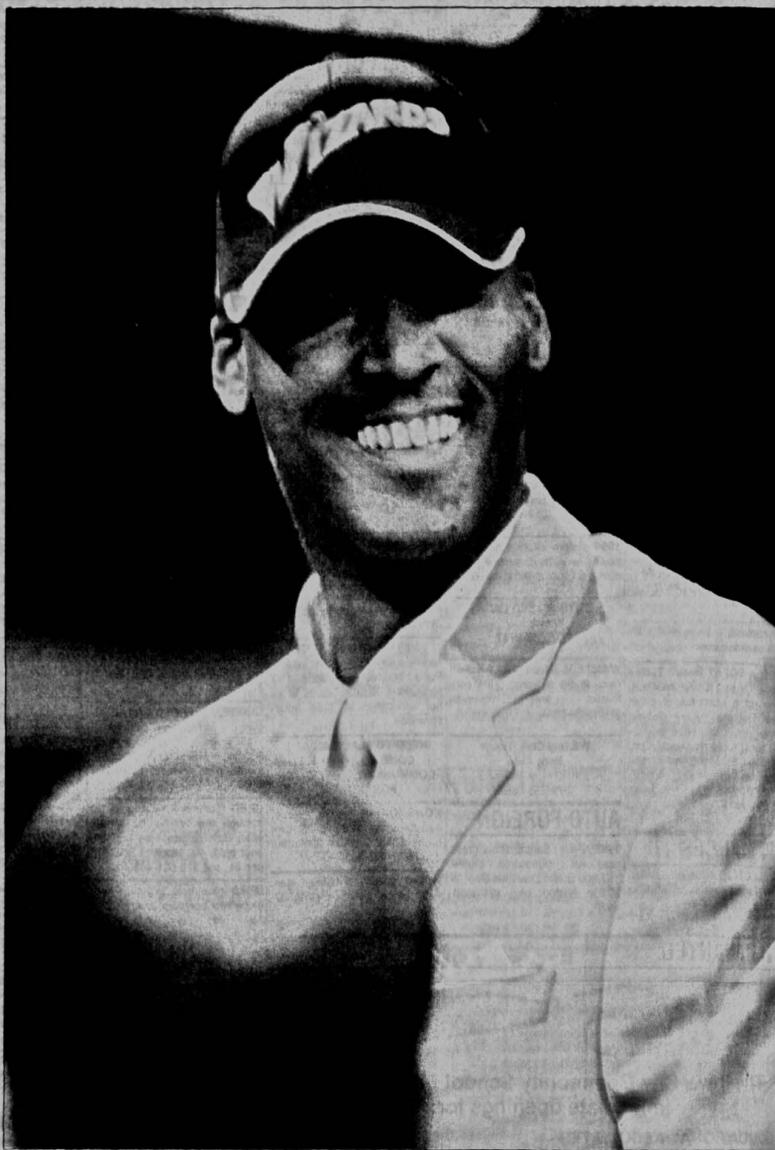

"I guess I just made history. It's great. I've never been so overwhelmed and nervous in my life," Brown said. "I'm now the representative of all high-school seniors, and I have to show it wasn't a mistake."

The Wizards considered trading the pick, but Jordan locked in on a player with enormous potential in a draft considered top heavy with big men.

"We were entertaining possibilities, but nothing could change our minds as to what he could do for the Washington Wizards," Jordan said.

Chandler, 18, has been a starter on one of the nation's top high-school teams since his freshman season. Earlier this year, it was believed he and Curry might be drafted first and second overall.

Now, they will be teammates.

IOWA WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Cavey to add needed height

At 6-3, the incoming freshman will be the second tallest Hawkeye.

By Laura Podolak
 The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's basketball team will rise to new heights next season with incoming freshman Jamie Cavey on the roster.

Cavey, from Mechanicsville, Iowa, stands 6-3, which makes her taller than all but one of the current post players for the Hawkeyes. Junior Amber O'Brien is the tallest at 6-4.

Iowa coach Lisa Bluder said Cavey's height is one of the biggest advantages of adding her to the Iowa roster.

"She brings height, and that is something that we really needed," Bluder said. "I think that we were undersized in every game we played last year."

Bluder also said Cavey's athletic family and success in high school will be beneficial to the Hawkeyes, who finished the 2000-01 season second in the Big Ten and won the Big Ten Tournament.

"She comes from a winning program and an athletic background," Bluder said. "Her sister played at Southwest Missouri State, which made it to the Final Four last year. She enjoys the game and plays a position that we really needed."

Cavey said that although she is nervous about going to

Blazek adjusting to new style of football

Former Hawkeye A.J. Blazek changes his game (and his number) with Arena Football.

When A.J. Blazek finished his eligibility with the Iowa football team last fall, many thought it would be the last time to see the charismatic player in uniform — but for fans missing number 52, the wait is over.

The former Hawkeye center is playing with the Chicago Rush, a first-year team in the Arena Football League, after signing a contract in March.

Blazek's agent was the one who found him the opportunity at the Rush, and Blazek said the process is similar to the free-agent signing for the NFL.

"The teams invite you to camps," he said. "You do a bunch of drills, and then they decide if they want to sign you to a contract or not."

Blazek had to sign a waiver, agreeing that the team wouldn't owe him anything for any injuries during the tryout process. However, after the two-day tryout, the 6-1, 285-pound Blazek received a contract and a new uniform.
