Japan ignores U.S., inks Iran oil deal

Japan is not affected by U.S. pressure, a Japanese official says.

Tokyo (AP) _ Japan ignored American pressure Thursday to demand major oil cuts from Iran or face trade sanctions, inking a major new oil deal with the Islamic republic.

The move is certain to anger the U.S. and other countries that have sought to punish Iran's nuclear weapons program, but Japan said it was looking out for its interests.

By canceling its deal with Iran, Japan would have risked losing access to about 80 percent of its oil supply. The country imported 38.5 million tons of oil from Iran last year, and another 2.5 million tons from Iraq and Kuwait.

"Japan will continue to work toward maintaining the stability and prosperity of the global energy market" through the deal, the government said in a statement.

Japanese officials said the deal will ensure Japan's energy security and help reduce the country's dependence on Middle Eastern oil, which currently accounts for more than 90 percent of its imports.

Japan's energy minister was quoted by the government as saying the deal will ensure Japan's energy security and help reduce the country's dependence on Middle Eastern oil.

The deal, which was announced by the Ministry of Economy, Trade and Industry, came as Japan's economy was struggling to recover from the 2011 earthquake and tsunami, which caused widespread destruction and killed more than 15,000 people.

The government said it would work to ensure that the energy deal does not affect Japan's relationship with the U.S. or other countries that have been pushing for tighter sanctions against Iran.

"Japan is committed to supporting international efforts to prevent Iran from acquiring nuclear weapons," the government said.

The deal would appear to contradict the U.S. policy of pushing for a diplomatic resolution to the dispute over Iran's nuclear program.

"We are committed to a diplomatic solution in Iran and to maintaining the global oil market," the government said.

UI LECTURE COMMITTEE'S SCOPE TOO NARROW

Balance speakers' politics

When world-renowned writer and former U.S. Senator, William F. Buckley, addresses the members of the University's Lecture Committee, one is left with the feeling that the committee is currently handicapped in its task of providing a full range of ideas.

Although many abortion-rights supporters have heralded the policy as a victory for pro-life speakers, others consider the policy as a threat to full expression. The Lecture Committee states that its purpose is to "proffer a great start to the policy of the University's ideas...". However, recent events have demonstrated that the committee is unable to carry out its role.

"We are playing politics, not the legal system," a supporter of the committee's policies admits. "Our goal is to make sure that the University's speakers are not too radical.

The new policy is an attempt to limit the University's freedom to present ideas. The Committee says that "it is not the function of the University to allow the expression of ideas which...". The University of Iowa's students are preparing a lawsuit to challenge the policy.

In the meantime, the university community is divided on the issue. Some believe that the new policy is necessary to protect the university's image, while others argue that it violates the First Amendment.
