U.S. small-arms arms stance dismays many

- The U.S. rejects any U.N. plan to link arms sales to controls on trafficking that interferes with gun ownership.

UNITED NATIONS
Blacklisting a tough position at a U.N. conference on small arms, the United States said Monday it would oppose any plan that interferes with the legal arms trade or the right of citizens to own guns.

The Bush administration believes the best way to curb trade in small arms is to arm nations with vast military strength to help them combat terrorists and rebels. Under-

No. 99-1089, which instructs the State Department to conduct a six-moun- th study of the trade in small arms and light weapons.

Pentagon spokesman Lawrence Wilkerson said Monday that it would oppose any plan that would interfere with the arms trade.

The Bush attitude was in line with the illegal trade in small arms and light weapons - reportedly weapons lost or captured in the war in Iraq - was below the radar screen worldwide - would be tough to track with so many nations and so many buyers.

There are many delega- tions that say the biggest issue is detecting the flow of small arms into the conflict zones of the world, Wilkerson said.

Still, 149 nations set up a fund to support a series of regional conferences to deter arms sales and to help those nations most affected by the arms trade.

The United States at- tended the conference in London and the Bush administration has said it wants to support efforts to reduce the flow of small arms.

U.S. under Secretary of State John Bolton on Monday told the G-8 summit that the U.S. is concerned about the trade in small arms and light weapons.

"The United States will not and cannot join consensus on a final document unless there is a vote or a resolution that is in accordance with our constitutional obligations," Bolton told delegates to the conference.

"We will not support any plan that interferes with the arms trade or the right of citizens to own guns."

CONTROL OF EXCESS STUDENT FUNDS IN QUESTION

UISG deserves control

Monika, the SF reported the emergence of a dispute between UISG, a student organization at the University of Iowa, and the university itself. The students who control excess endowment funds at the university a few years ago to deal with their student's debt, and the students who control these funds are now calling for UISG to return to a state where the money is controlled by a student organization.

Currently, the university controls the excess endowment funds. Various student groups have called for UISG to take control of the funds, placing them under the auspices of UISG, a student organization. There are several reasons why UISG deserves control of these funds. First, Jones' insistence that UISG control the funds is the only way to ensure that the funds are used for the intended purposes. Second, she ignores the fact that many students are not satisfied with the way the funds are currently being used.

The money under Jones' control is used to help manage UISG's numerous programs. However, each of these programs is run by student volunteers, and it is only proper that these volunteers have the authority to control the funds they use.

In conclusion, UISG deserves control of the excess endowment funds. It is the only way to ensure that the funds are used for the intended purposes.
UI among top in embarking on diversity

Diversity

This is the third year for the guided-mouse survey, which is being repeated as part of the University of Iowa's efforts to enhance diversity. Joe Child, the university's director of Diversity Initiatives, said that the survey was conducted with the purpose of gathering information about students, staff, and faculty members from the various racial and ethnic groups on campus. The survey included questions about the students' overall satisfaction with their school, their perceptions of campus life, and their feelings about the diversity of the campus community. The survey was administered during the fall semester, and the results will be used to help inform future diversity initiatives on campus.

Dr. William F. Schulz, the university's director of Diversity Initiatives, said he was "proudly diversity and has demonstrated commitment to the university's recognition. But Wall said he is not to support the university's diversity initiatives.

"The UI strongly supports diversity, but the university doesn't seem very diverse," said Wall. "This is a bigger problem with the university, but the university and the world are diverse. I don't see that as a problem. University and universe is a bigger problem.

"I don't think it's a problem that the university and the world are diverse. I don't think that somebody's not going to be an Iowa."

The five top institutions on the list of schools that support diversity are New York University, the University of California, San Diego, Brown University, and the University of Pennsylvania.

Saints plan staying put in New Orleans

■ State officials announced that the team will not move to another city.

By Mark Foster

HAYNES ROGUE, La. - The New Orleans Saints aren't going anywhere for a while.

State officials announced Monday that they have agreed in principle with the NFL team to extend the team's financial assistance contract by 12 more months, but the deal will include an ongoing audit to ensure the team's financial stability.

State officials, who have been asked to determine whether the team has the means to pay its bills, have agreed to extend the team's financial assistance contract by 12 more months, but the deal will include an audit to ensure the team's financial stability.

Lawrence Armstrong, an assistant to the Saints' medical staff, died on Sunday. The 51-year-old was the team's first assistant coach. He had been with the team for 12 years.

"It is a difficult time for all of us," team president Tim Beckles said in a statement. "We extend our deepest sympathy to the Armstrong family and all those who knew him."

Armstrong was a native of New Orleans and had been with the Saints since 1997. He was one of the team's most respected assistants.

"He was a true professional," said Saints head coach Sean Payton. "We appreciated everything he did for the team."
