Guard will man airports

WASHINGTON — President Bush on Thursday asked the nation's governors to post National Guard troops at airports Thursday as a first step to take federal control of airline security and coax Americans back into the skies. "This nation will not live in fear," he said.

And governors pledged to mobilize National Guard troops against terrorism at airports, where jobs are drying up because of travelers' jitters. The Pentagon said it has authority to attack hijacked airliners as a last resort.

Talking about military pilots' new rules of engagement in the war against terrorism, outgoing Joint Chiefs Chairman Gen. Henry Shelton said, "The last thing in the world that one of them wants to do is engage a commercial aircraft."

"Don't get the impression that anyone who's flying around out there has a loose trigger finger," he said.

Sixteen days after attacks that killed thousands, the Bush administration moved on several fronts to calm a still-fearful nation, bolster the U.S. economy, identify the killers, and forge a wartime coalition of disparate nations.

Bush's new anti-terrorism chief, Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Ridge, carved out a commanding role in the administration. Officials said he would oversee as many as 100 employees, all but 10 or so borrowed from agencies outside the White House, and would have significant input on budgets for the 40-plus agencies involved in counterterrorism.

"Others will tire and weary; I understand that. But not our nation," Bush told hundreds of flag-waving airline workers at a pep rally at O'Hare International Airport in Chicago. Their industry and their jobs are in danger because of the Sept. 11 attacks.

Bush authorized $500 million in grants to the airlines to strengthen cockpit doors and study technology that would allow air traffic controllers to take control of a plane if the

UI to set guidelines to cope with cuts

By Chao Xiong
The Daily Iowan

University officials said Thursday that during the next week, they will draft a new set of principles to guide the UI through the newest round of state budget slashes.

Provost Jon Whitmore told a group of approximately 45 faculty and staff members that a proposed $21.9 million cutback was more "dire" than the $18.7 million already slashed this fiscal year and that it necessitates new guidelines.

"For us, it is a major hurdle, because we had time to prepare for the last cuts," he said. "There's no way we can absorb these cuts in six months." "Every means possible" to retain quality will be considered when making the cuts, he said. Whitmore will meet with faculty and staff members to gather suggestions for coping with the cutbacks, and he will present his findings to a university committee comprising President Mary Sue Coleman and faculty and staff. The provost said cuts will reach programs throughout the entire university.

Iowa Gov. Tom Vilsack last week proposed cutting $108 million — 7 percent — from the state budget to avoid a projected deficit at the end of the year. He also warned of another $200 million in cuts next year.

The proposed cuts would slash $17.8 million from the UI's general fund, 76 percent of which is designated for salaries. The Iowa Legislature will convene in January to discuss Vilsack's proposed cuts.

"There are no sacred cows," said UI law Professor Sheldon

Records fight in mall transition

Records filed in Johnson County court Thursday allege that the mall's former property manager, C.B. Ellis, has refused to hand over records and correspondence dating from when the mall was under his control.

MEMMER TRIAL

By Grant Schulte
The Daily Iowan

Public Safety officers confronted the stocky, light-brown haired man at the UI Field House two-and-one-half years ago.

Jonathan Memmer, holding a green gym bag, allegedly turned around and said: "I'm the man you're looking for. I'm not armed."

After months of legal wrangling following that initial arrest on March 26, 1999, the 26-year-old accused of slaying two women in a South Van Buren Street apartment will stand trial next week.

Jury selection for the trial will begin on Oct. 2. Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White said this week that prosecutors hope to begin presenting evidence by Oct. 5. That should take approximately 10 days he said; he expects the trial to last approximately four weeks.

Memmer, who has pleaded not guilty, is accused of bludgeoning to death Laura Watson-Dalton, a 29-year-old paramedic from Creston, Iowa, and Maria Therese Lehner, 27, who worked as an environmental scientist in Belton, Mo. Their bodies were found mutilated in the burned remains of 427 S. Van Buren St. Apt. 4 on March 19, 1999.

"There was initially a lot of anger when we first learned about it, but now we just want to see justice," said Jeff Sullivan, Lehner's cousin and a spokesman for the family. "We have to move on. Jonathan Memmer is so unimportant to us."

The family will not let Memmer's alleged actions spoil their memories of the woman "who had hundreds of friends."

After 2+ years, trial nears

"Maria was outgoing, and she was very trusting, which was probably what got her into trouble," he said.

Approximately a week after the murders, Sullivan said, worried family members approached him because Lehner had not called. Typically, she telephoned at least every other night. That's when Sullivan decided to call Iowa City police to see whether there had been any reports of missing persons.

"They told me there had been a double murder in the area," said Sullivan, his voice trembling. "At first, I was very distraught. I couldn't believe it was true. Then I felt tremendously shocked."

Both women were killed by blunt trauma to the head and multiple stab wounds, according to autopsies reports. Watson-Dalton was sexually assaulted, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Watson-Dalton and Lehner were visiting Iowa City at the time of their deaths to see friends and on business, respectively. The two did not know each other.

The state charged Memmer with murder on Feb. 25, 2000, after a state Division of Criminal Investigation crime-lab analysis allegedly identified Memmer's DNA on a cigarette butt found at the scene, a footprint consistent with his on Watson-Dalton's coat, and Lehner's blood on his shoes.

Prosecutors allege that Memmer brought the women to the apartment and, after killing them, set the residence on fire to destroy evidence. The apartment, now rented by Iowa City resident Beth Bergquist, has been refurbished. And the bedroom in which the bodies were allegedly found is pink-laced and filled with candy-colored, plush teddy bears.

Memmer is also charged with breaking into the apartment, which was rented to three UI students who left town for Spring Break four days before the bodies were found. He allegedly stole several items, including two VCRs and stereo equipment and then pawned several of the items at a local pawn shop under his own name.

According to police reports, Memmer bought an empty gasoline container and filled it with gas shortly before the fire.

The case has experienced multiple delays. The original defense attorneys, Ed Leff and Dennis Cohen, withdrew because of a potential conflict of interest with witnesses who were former clients. They were replaced last December by Cedar Rapids-based Mark Brown and Clemens Erdahl, who declined comment on the case.

Prosecuting attorneys also blamed slow state crime labs for the holdup in charging Memmer.

Sullivan, a sheriff's detective in Wisconsin, said he has been "disappointed by the delays and lack of communication" of the investigation.

"The family still doesn't know a lot about what happened, and this case wasn't like a big 'whodunit,'" he said. "But we'll wait. We just want to see justice done."

If convicted, Memmer faces a maximum sentence of life in prison without parole.

'Jonathan' or 'Jonathon'

By Grant Schulte
The Daily Iowan

Jonathan Memmer has never committed a crime, according to Johnson County District Court's computerized record system.

The county's database lists the 26-year-old man who will stand trial next week, charged with bludgeoning two women to death in an Iowa City apartment, as Jonathan Memmer, with an "o" in the last syllable of "Jonathon."

And although he has been the Marshalltown native's attorney for more than nine months, Clemens Erdahl said he was not sure which spelling is correct.

In a court request filed Sept. 14, Erdahl spelled his client's name "Jonathon." In the Sept. 26 written response to that request, Johnson County District Associate Judge David Remley spelled Memmer's name "Jonathan."

Such errors are common on court records, but they do not have an effect on a trial's outcome, said Paula Gibson, the Johnson County attorney's legal assistant.

"There are discrepancies on a lot of documents, whether it's with spelling or inaccurate information, but it will not complicate or delay any case," she said.

The error in Memmer's files will have no effect on his Oct. 2 trial because all defendants

It's all Greek to Homecoming Court

Basketball coach Steve Alford to be grand marshal

By Vess Mitev
The Daily Iowan

Seven out of eight Homecoming Court members belong to the Greek community, and none are minorities despite past efforts from UI Student Government to have the court better reflect the student body.

Last year, the court had four members involved with a fraternity or a sorority after UISG urged a wider variety of people to apply. Twelve percent of the student body belongs to a fraternity or sorority, according to the university.

Chad Barnard, one of the two Phi Kappa Psi members vying to be named Homecoming King tonight, said he thinks the selection is based on qualifications and leadership abilities rather than social connections.

"I didn't get asked about it [fraternity ties] in either one of my interviews," the finance major said. "The only place I mentioned I belonged to a frat was in the application."

Former UISG President Andy Stoll said the reason for the heavy Greek influence isn't a skewed selection committee but a homogenous pool of applicants. Homecoming officials said they received approximately 250 applications but did not track how many of those were Greek.

"The Greek system encourages people to participate," Stoll said. "Other students and student organizations tend to be less involved because of the time commitment. The Greek community, on the other hand, has the membership, the interest, and the time to get involved."

Kellan Brumback is the sole member of the court not involved with the Greek system. She said the interview process did not focus on connections with the Greek system but community involvement. Brumback has been a volunteer and worked with Dance Marathon and several other student organizations.

"I'm surprised," the industrial-engineering major said of the court's makeup. "It's not representative of the student body, but I'm glad I am able to represent the part that isn't in the Greek community."

Homecoming parade tonight

A 25-foot inflatable Herky the Hawkeye will tower over tonight's Homecoming parade, and Iowa men's basketball coach Steve Alford will be the grand marshal. The inflatable float, one of about 75 entries in the annual parade, was purchased through the sale of Homecoming buttons. It's the first of its kind for the university.

Parade director Matthew Peasley said that even though it takes a lot of work maneuvering the heavy electric generator that inflates the massive balloon, it's worth the trouble.

"It's an icon representing the UI," the senior said. "It was very expensive, but it was a great investment."

Although Peasley wouldn't say exactly how much the float cost, officials said the Homecoming Committee has stayed within its budget.

Buttons director P.J. Besinger said more than 13,000 buttons have been sold, but exact numbers won't be known until after Homecoming because of sales on order.

"So far, we're right on track, even though we have somewhere around 2,500 left over,"

Conrad Schmidt/The Daily Iowan

Official mulls union-voting eligibility

By Mike McWilliams
The Daily Iowan

The hearings on Mercy Hospital nurses' voter eligibility for a union election officially ended Thursday, but a hearing official said a decision on the matter will not be reached for at least two or three weeks.

After reviewing the exhibits and more than 900 pages of testimony, Ronald Sharp, a regional director in Minneapolis for the National Labor Relations Board, will reach a decision.

The hearings, which began last week, were conducted by the labor board at the Iowa City Post Office, 400 S. Clinton St. Mercy administrators said 135 nurses who have volunteered as charge nurses since January are like supervisors and ineligible to vote in a union pre-hearing conference Sept. 19. Union rules reportedly forbid supervisors from participating in union elections.

Mercy staff nurse Claudia Barber said charge nurses are responsible for general-assistance tasks, such as making phone calls for replacements if a nurse calls in sick. She said that charge nurses do not do any supervising.

"In my opinion, most of those [charge] nurses clearly aren't supervisors," she said. "I think it's one of [the administration's] tactics to oppose the union."

Staff nurse Karen Leigh said she thought the administration labeling the charge nurses as supervisory is "absurd."

"You can't have all chiefs and no Indians," she said. "Nothing operates that way."

Mercy Hospital employs approximately 400 staff nurses; Leigh said there is a very high desire among them to unionize.

A hearing officer from the labor board said the decision will be made once Mercy administration and the nurses have had a chance to review the record and file any other legal arguments with Sharp. Both sides have until Oct. 5 to file written legal briefs; they have already agreed to ask for more time because of the length of the transcript, the hearing officer said.

Mercy CEO Ron Reed and Vice President of Nursing Tom

Clancy refused to comment on the situation, citing policy rules against speaking with the media.

Work and patient-care conditions have declined, and nurses want more decision-making power at Mercy, Leigh said. Barber said the nurses at Mercy fully support the hospital and want to continue to work there.

"I think the administration and the pro-union nurses have the same goal of providing better health care for our patients," Barber said. "It's just that we have different ideas on how to accomplish that."

CITY BRIEF

Final day for voter registration arrives

Today is the last day for Iowa City residents to register to vote in the primary election for the upcoming Iowa City City Council race.

It is also the first day to vote in the primaries, which will be tallied Oct. 9. Registration to vote in the general election is open until Oct. 26. The general election will be held Nov. 6.

Two at-large seats and the District B seat are open for the 12 candidates vying for election.

Incumbents Mayor Ernie Lehman and Mike O'Donnell are opting for reelection in the at-large seats, and Connie Champion will run for a second term as the District B representative.

Six other candidates are running for the at-large seat: Leah Cohen, Brian Davis, Colby Friend, Ollie Habnab, John Robertson, and Aaron Winter. UI law student Jacob Felderman, who had planned to run, said Thursday night he was withdrawing from the race.

Joining Champion in the race for the District B spot are Tim Borchardt, Charles Major, and Brandon Ross.

From a duke to Amelia to poets

A LOOK BACK

By Jackie Hammers
The Daily Iowan

The Grand Duke Alexander of Russia, Carl Sandberg, Thornton Wilder, and Amelia Earhart have all stayed in the Shambaugh House.

But nearly a century after being built, the house stands empty, awaiting new occupants and a move down the street.

The UI will move the house next month, from 219 N. Clinton St. to a vacant parking lot at the intersection of Clinton and Fairchild streets. There it will house the International Writing Program, officials said.

The house was built by Benjamin Shambaugh, the first chairman of the political-science department and superintendent of the Iowa State Historical Society from 1907-1940.

"In 1902, when [Benjamin] Shambaugh was 31 years old, Shambaugh House was completed for $1,620, with no reasonable expense spared," the 1981 annual report of the UI Foundation shows.

For more than 50 years, the Shambaughs opened their home to guest lecturers at the university, including Sandberg, Wilder, and Earhart.

Besides famous guests, the Shambaughs were known for inviting a lot of students to visit their home.

"During Benjamin Shambaugh's 44 years of university service, one-third of the guests invited to Shambaugh House were students," the UI Foundation report shows.

But after some students repeatedly stole flowers from his garden, Shambaugh took matters in his own hands. According to stories documented in university archives, he had his wife and housekeeper put paper slips inside unopened flowers so that, when they opened, the thieves would get the message: "This courtesy of Benjamin Shambaugh's garden."

Shambaugh died from cerebral thrombosis in 1940 at age 69. He was still working at the university at the time.

He pioneered "campus courses," according to a university newsletter from 1982. The small discussion groups were an early predecessor to the present honors courses.

Shambaugh's wife, Bertha, donated the 4,884-square-foot house to the university in 1946, according to university documents; she continued to live there until she died, in 1953. She left the house to the university with the intention that it continue to board guest lecturers. She was known for her photography and books on the Amana Colonies.

The Shambaugh House also housed the university president for a year while the current president's house was being restored, said Robert Kirby, the assistant director of the Honors Program.

In 1956, the Shambaugh House became the International Center, a purpose it served until becoming the Honors House in 1982.

Once it is moved later this month, workers will begin rewiring and expanding accessibility to the basement and third floor of the building.

"They may add a rear stairwell,

Ben Plank/The Daily Iowan

UI freshman Jenny Mullins walks in front of the Shambaugh House, which the UI is moving to the intersection of Clinton and Fairchild streets.

depending on the use of the third floor," Kirby said. The number of changes made will be depend on the size of the budget, he said.

No building terrorist-proof

By Valliant G. Corley
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Architects can find ways to make high-rise buildings safer, but they cannot make them terrorist-proof, a fire-protection consultant told a convention of Iowa architects Thursday.

"If people want to take down a building, they'll find a way to do it," Michael O'Hara said at the Iowa Chapter of the American Institute of Architects convention.

The two commercial airliners that crashed into the World Trade Center in New York on Sept. 11 effectively became bombs because the jet fuel on board burned at 2,000 degrees on impact.

"It was a bomb," O'Hara said. "We don't design buildings to withstand a bomb."

O'Hara is the president of the MountainStar Group of Bloomington, Minn., which works with architects on improving fire safety in public buildings. He conducted a workshop on emerging fire-protection technology in building design.

"In our wildest dreams, we couldn't have predicted Sept. 11," O'Hara said.

"You can't get people out of the building," he said. "We know it's a 110-story building. After people are told to leave, it will take one to two minutes per story. It takes a long time to get people out of very tall buildings."

O'Hara, an engineer with 25 years of fire-protection experience, said putting more asbestos or other fire retardant around steel beams in the building could have slowed the spread of the fire.

"It could buy time," he said. "How much time is pure speculation. With those temperatures, steel will fail quickly. Could it have bought time? Yes, but how much time? Maybe 20 seconds, 20 minutes, 20 hours."

He said the building was designed to handle an office-furniture fire. "Jet fuel is something entirely different," he said.

In an interview later, O'Hara said only a few federal buildings and military buildings are designed to withstand bombs and terrorist attacks.

"We all want a lot of safety," he said. "When it comes down to it, there are certain economic costs. Somewhere, there's a balance. We haven't found it yet."

Overall, he said, a high-rise building is safe.

"It's the safest place you will be today," O'Hara said. "The most dangerous is your home."

He said that is because of the many safety features built into the modern tall building, and because more safety is being designed into them.

U.S. ratchets up haz-mat security

By H. Josef Hebert
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Authorities pulled over thousands of trucks carrying hazardous cargo Thursday and ordered companies to review security after reports of people obtaining fraudulent licenses raised concerns about a possible terrorist threat.

The nationwide security dragnet involves more than 50,000 trucking companies carrying everything from chemicals used to make soap to gasoline and fertilizer, as well as a review of 2.5 million commercial driver's licenses.

On any given day as many as 76,000 tanker trucks with millions of pounds of hazardous cargo traverse the nation, according to industry estimates. For many of these products, release in a crowded area could be deadly.

"Everything is being looked at a lot harder," said John Conley, the vice president of the National Tank Truck Carriers, which represents 200 companies that haul some of the most dangerous cargo, including poisonous chemicals and gases as well as highly inflammable fuels.

Conley said transport companies are being deluged by demands from shippers to take extra precautions and ensure that there are no problems with any of their drivers.

The heightened alert was triggered by disclosure that FBI agents investigating the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks had found that a number of Middle Eastern men had obtained fraudulent licenses to transport hazardous material.

Eighteen men had obtained such permits illegally from a state examiner in Pennsylvania. The FBI said Wednesday that none of Trucking companies nationwide have increased security since the terrorist attacks by, among other things, telling truckers not to leave their rigs unlocked and screening job applicants better.

those men is believed linked to the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

But the state of alert remained in effect amid concern that someone might be planning a terrorist attack using one or more of the tens of thousands of 18-wheelers that haul toxic and explosive cargoes every day.

The Transportation Department asked state police and truck inspectors to conduct roadside checks of all trucks carrying hazardous material. The inspections, generally conducted at truck weigh stations, began Thursday, officials said.

By Karen Gullo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The FBI released photos Thursday of the 19 suspected suicide hijackers with a plea for citizens to help with identities of some that are still in doubt. FBI Director Robert Mueller said some attackers had been linked to Osama bin Laden's network.

Separately, more arrests were made of Middle Eastern men who obtained bogus licenses to haul hazardous materials. The FBI said those men were not connected to the hijackers, who crashed planes into the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

The FBI isn't certain about the identities of all the hijackers.

The release of the photos, which come from passports, driver's licenses, and other documents identified with the hijackers, marked a change for authorities, who until now have kept them under wraps so that potential witnesses and others shown the photos get a fresh look at the men.

Mueller said the FBI believes that the names and photographs match those on the manifests of the hijacked planes. But questions remain about whether those are the true names of the hijackers.

"What we are currently doing is determining whether, when these individuals came to the United States, these were their real names or they changed their names," he said.

In other developments;

• An Arabic-language document containing prayers and spiritual references that was found at the Pennsylvania crash site of United Flight 93 is believed to have been used by the hijackers to prepare for their mission to bring the plane down, said a government official, speaking on the condition of anonymity.

• A grand jury in Boston investigating terrorism subpoenaed student records from the University of Rhode Island. It was among several universities that have received subpoenas from grand juries in the investigation.

• The FBI director said there was some evidence that "one or more" of the hijackers was related to sender, which could facilitate tracing the message to its origin.

Regarding the FBI's list of 19 hijackers, some of the names have slightly different spellings and others have additional names added, compared with the list released by the FBI on Sept. 14.

pilot was incapacitated. The president's proposal stopped short of assigning federal workers to perform security duties at airports, as is done in some other countries. The U.S. Conference of Mayors said Bush hadn't gone far enough and appointed a task force to come up with further security measures. "We want a federal force that is equal to or even better than the ones they have in Israel and Germany and France," said Executive Director Tom Cochran. "We do not have faith in the airlines to develop a security system for our airports." Rep. James Oberstar of Minnesota, the ranking Democrat on the House Transportation Committee, also faulted the president's plan. "The most basic responsibility of government is to protect its citizens in acts of war that threaten safety and security," he said. "We wouldn't think of contracting out our army to protect us against an open foreign invasion."

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., said steps to improve security should be linked with efforts to provide unemployment compensation, health care, and job training to the people affected by more than 100,000 layoffs in the airlines and related industries.

The administration said guard troops would receive three or four days of training from the Federal Aviation Administration and would be stationed at roughly 750 airport checkpoints nationwide. The federal government would absorb the cost, estimated at between $100 million to $150 million. The troops would augment current security but not replace it.

The $500 million for security upgrades would be used for immediate development of such measures as fortified cockpit doors, a video system to allow the cockpit crew to monitor the cabin, and transponders — the instruments that allow air traffic controllers to track planes — that could not be shut off, as was the case on one of the hijacked planes.

The government would oversee passenger and baggage security checks and perform background checks on security personnel. Uniformed federal workers would manage all operations; federal and nonfederal workers would share the security work. Many airport security workers would remain in the employ of private companies but with increased oversight by the government.

must provide the correct spelling of their names at their arraignment order, Erdahl said. Officially, Memmer's first name is "Jonathan."

"It's all the press' fault," he said. "I imagine that 30 or 40 years ago, some sharp reporter caught a spelling discrepancy that led to a defendant getting off the hook. The defendant now has to verify the correct spelling of his name so he can't come back and say, 'You prosecuted a different man.'"

Erdahl said such mistakes are insignificant, noting that in the paperwork from a house he bought Wednesday his wife's name was misspelled, and he still owns the house.

BUDGET CUTS

Kurtz, who attended Thursday's discussion. "Everything should be looked at."

Kurtz suggested changing state law to allow public universities to increase tuition in mid-year to compensate for budget cuts, but he said he didn't necessarily endorse such a move. The state's 15 community colleges are reportedly considering a mid-year hike.

However, Whitmore said, the legislative process would postpone such a move two years, and it was not likely to occur.

The state of Iowa Board of Regents will deliberate a 15 to 18 percent tuition hike for next year at an October meeting; it is expected to reach a decision in November.

"I think we will see a reasonable increase in tuition," Whitmore said, adding that he thinks the amount may slightly surpass the 15 percent range.

Each percentage point tuition rises reaps the university $1.1 million, he said. At least $4 million to $5 million is needed each year to keep up with inflation.

The steady decrease in state funding is accompanied by a drop in the number of Iowa high school graduates and a more "precipitous" decline in the number of those students who are college-bound, said Admissions Director Michael Barron, who was unable to provide exact numbers. The trend will not likely change and could result in fewer Iowans attending the state's universities, he said.

The university's reliance on out-of-state students, however, will keep the university from harm, said Lola Lopes, the associate provost for undergraduate education. Approximately 41 percent of the near-record freshman enrollment this fall was made up of out-of-state students, she said.

In addition, Illinois, which provided the university 18 percent of its students last fall, is expected to produce a "huge" increase in the number of high-school graduates, Lopes said.

hearing on the matter will be held in Johnson County Court on Oct. 5, Gutz said.

The downtown Iowa City mall will suffer with no records of its most recent history, he said. Gutz also said Ellis owes the current management firm approximately $84,500 from the late August and early September rent payments because Ellis continued to collect money from the mall's businesses when Waldbaum's management company took over.

On Sept. 14, Ellis faxed a representative of Waldbaum a copy of rent payments made to him from Aug. 24 to Sept. 11 totaling $84,516. Ellis wrote in the fax he would wire the cash to the new management company the next day but failed to, Gutz said.

"Ultimately, if [Waldbaum] is denied records and not given $84,000 that he has coming, it's going to do harm to the transition," Gutz said. "He can't continue doing business without knowing what the leases say."

Ellis could not be reached for comment Thursday.

Gutz said it has been difficult communicating with Ellis, who lives in Pittsburgh. The Cedar Rapids attorney said he has been holding teleconferences urging Ellis to send documents and money to the new managers.

Until then, he said, the new managers will continue the transition into managing 25 businesses at the downtown Iowa City mall.

"We don't anticipate any changes for consumers at the Old Capitol mall," Gutz said. "We are dedicated to keeping business as usual."

Job-loss claims skyrocket

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — New claims for unemployment benefits rocketed to a nine-year high last week, as the effects of layoffs and lost business spread.

The claims are certain to go higher yet, analysts say, as the effects of layoffs and lost business spread.

Separately, the Conference Board in New York said Thursday that newspaper want ads, a key barometer of the job market and the economy, had sunk to an 18-year low in August, even before the attacks.

In Washington, the Labor Department reported that for the week ending Sept. 22, new jobless claims jumped by a seasonally adjusted 58,000, to 450,000, the highest level since July 25, 1992.

Economists believe the increase shows only the first wave of layoffs stemming from the Sept. 11 attacks against the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. For the work week ending Sept. 15, claims actually fell because stunned workers, trying to get their bearings, didn't get around to filing for jobless benefits, analysts said.

"We will soon see the second wave of layoffs coming from the severely effected travel and tourism industries," said Lynn Reaser, the chief economist for Banc of America Capital Management Inc.

Since the attacks, more than 100,000 layoffs have been announced in the airlines and related industries.

Stan Shipley, an economist at Merrill Lynch, predicted that jobless claims will soar to more than 500,000 in the next few months.

The four-week moving average of jobless claims, which smoothes out week-to-week fluctuations, rose last week by 11,750, to 422,000.

On Wall Street, investors seeking safer havens bought up blue chips but sold off riskier technology shares amid worries about how long and how much the slumping economy will suffer from the terrorist attacks. The Dow Jones industrial average gained 114.03 points to close at 8,681.42.

With new uncertainties raised by the attacks and growing prospects that the U.S. economy could fall into recession, businesses will be reluctant to hire new workers in the months ahead, economists said.

The nation's unemployment rate shot up to 4.9 percent in August from 4.5 percent, the biggest one-month jump in more than six years. Economists predict the jobless rate will climb to 6 percent by year's end.

"Continued deterioration in the labor market is very likely over the next few months," said Ken Goldstein, an economist with the Conference Board, a private research group.

Officials: Cincy curfew helped

By John Nolan
Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Police said an overnight curfew helped them keep order when black protesters set fires and threw rocks and bottles after a judge cleared a white police officer in the fatal shooting of a black man.

Mayor Charlie Luken declared a state of emergency Wednesday night and assumed control of the police and fire departments. He was considering whether to extend the curfew past Thursday night.

"That curfew was a great tool for us," police spokesman Lt. Kurt Byrd said Thursday.

Luken was criticized after riots in April — sparked by the shooting — for waiting too long to impose a citywide curfew. On Wednesday, he authorized the curfew after police reported seeing crowds gathering and some youths putting on masks.

Police went to 12-hour shifts and canceled days off.

"I think the response by the city was better than in April," Luken said Thursday. "I think we learned things."

The mayor also said he had asked clergy to urge people to stay home Thursday night, saying protests "sometimes have unintended consequences that are not peaceful."

The disturbances occurred in Over-the-Rhine, the same predominantly black Cincinnati neighborhood that bore the brunt of the three-day riot triggered when Officer Stephen Roach shot Timothy Thomas, 19, as he fled police who sought him April 7 on 14 warrants.

A judge Wednesday acquitted Roach, 27, of negligent homicide and obstructing official business. Approximately 12 hours later, scattered vandalism began and continued into early Thursday.

Car windows were broken Wednesday night approximately a block from the site of a vigil for Thomas.

One news photographer was struck on the foot by a thrown brick. Another photographer, cut by glass from a broken window, was treated at a hospital.

A car was set on fire, and there were at least 30 trash-can fires, Byrd said. Twelve adults were arrested on charges of curfew violations, disorderly conduct, or other offenses, and two juveniles were charged with curfew violations, he said.

Police said the disturbances weren't nearly so bad as in April, when stores were burned and looted and some white residents were pulled from their vehicles and attacked. Approximately 75 adults and 40 juveniles were convicted of curfew-related charges.

Black activists said they thought Roach should have been convicted and jailed for what they perceived as an unprovoked shooting.

Prosecutor Michael Allen and City Councilor Phil Henslich said they deplored the violence. They said Roach received a fair trial and that the verdict must be accepted.

What's News— In Business and Finance

Stock Market Reels, Recession Looms

Stocks went into a frenzy after the terrorist attacks. The stock market last week suffered through one of its worst weeks ever, with the Dow Jones Industrial Average posting its biggest weekly percentage loss in 61 years. Stocks rebounded early this week before slumping again Wednesday. Some analysts believe the market won't stabilize until investors recover from the shock of the attacks and regain confidence in the nation's stability. Compounding that, a host of corporations are warning that their earnings may be even lower than forecasts made before Sept. 11. The attacks may also drive many companies to cut jobs in the weeks to come.

Before the attacks, some economists held out hopes that the economy could avert a recession. But now most of the pros believe there's no way around it. The consensus: The downturn has begun and will last until the end of the year. Many businesses and families are putting off big spending—everything from taking vacations to building corporate headquarters—until the picture improves.

Many economists think the economy will rebound in 2002, and some think the turnaround will come early in the year. The government may try to give the turnaround a hand: Lawmakers are preparing a package of tax cuts and other economic-stimulus measures that could total as much as $100 billion next year.

Airlines and Insurers Get Aid From D.C.

Airlines and insurance companies faced devastating losses after the attacks, but the government moved quickly to stem the losses. Air-travel bookings plummeted in the wake of the attack—and so did earnings forecasts. Many carriers slashed thousands of jobs or furloughed workers; jet maker Boeing said it may be forced to lay off 30,000 workers by the end of next year. Insurers, facing an estimated liability of $30 billion on the attacks, boosted premiums and sharply reduced coverage for airlines. Meanwhile, hotels and travel agencies have been flooded with cancellation requests and predict big losses—and job cuts—in the months ahead.

The government delivered an aid package that will give the airline industry $5 billion in cash and $10 billion in loan guarantees. The government also will help airlines shoulder their increased insurance load. Meanwhile, lawmakers are preparing legislation that would give the insurance industry a breather. Under the proposed rules, the government would become the insurer of "last resort" for practically all businesses that suffer future terrorist attacks—in other words, if insurers can't pay damage claims, the government will.

Tech Industry Fears A Crash Is Coming

The attacks dealt another blow to the already limping technology industry, as businesses and consumers defer and reconsider planned purchases of electronic gear. This hesitancy on the part of buyers is likely to overwhelm the potential "replacement spending" on equipment that was destroyed or damaged in the attacks.

And that's just the next few weeks. The signs don't look good down the road either. The uncertain economy is leading many companies to shrink many technology-related projects, or put them on hold. Spending on online advertising plummeted in the wake of the attacks—bad news for ad-driven Web sites, such as Yahoo, that were already reeling from an ad-spending slump that started last year.

There were some bright spots for the tech industry, however: Sales of mainframes, servers and storage equipment picked up in the days after the attack as companies bolstered their backup and recovery systems. Sales were also strong for equipment used to set up wireless networks, videoconferences and Internet phone calls. Meanwhile, some tech firms are adapting their products to meet an expected demand for security equipment.

Back to Business For Microsoft, HP

Two of the biggest players in the high-tech field resumed the daunting tasks that faced them in the days before the attacks.

Microsoft Corp. got back to its antitrust battle with the federal government. Government lawyers said they would make Microsoft's new operating system, Windows XP, a central focus in the final round of court hearings in their antitrust case against the company. Among the restrictions the government is likely to seek against Microsoft: banning the company from engaging in anticompetitive contracts; forcing it to disclose more of the inner workings of Windows to other software makers; and giving computer makers more power to distribute rival software on their PCs while preventing Microsoft from retaliating.

Microsoft, which is planning to release Windows XP in late October, said the conduct restrictions being considered "are every bit as radical as the now-discarded proposal to break up the company." In a separate move, Microsoft announced it would modify plans for its Passport service to allow rivals and other companies to set up similar services of their own. Passport is designed to let Internet users log on just once to get access to a host of Web sites.

Meanwhile, Hewlett-Packard Co. and Compaq Computer Corp. got back to the stump, trying to sell customers, stockholders and employees on the idea of combining the two companies. Company executives argue that the combined corporation would create a large platform of products that work together and help the companies cut costs.

Reaction to the plan has been strongly negative, with stock-market analysts expressing doubts about the combination and investors sending both companies' shares sliding. The terrorist attacks, and fears about the economy, have only deepened the misgivings.

Railroads May Get Help From U.S.

Senate Democrats are considering a multibillion-dollar investment in passenger rail service as part of the package to revive the battered economy. The proposed infusion—as much as $37 billion—would be a boon for struggling Amtrak. Meanwhile, a Republican lawmaker planned to introduce legislation to provide $71 billion in funds, loans and other assistance for a nationwide high-speed-rail network.

Advertisers Shift Focus In Wake of Attacks; Hard Sell Is on Hold

By ANNA WILDE MATHEWS

The neon of Times Square has taken on a red, white and blue cast. In the wake of the terrorist attacks, advertisers are stripping commercial messages from the iconic displays and replacing them with images of American flags, charitable messages and patriotic phrases.

Across the country, advertisers and outdoor-advertising companies have been switching promotional displays to reflect a newly somber, patriotic mood. Commercial messages are being toned down or replaced, as companies rush to associate themselves with the community spirit unleashed by the attacks.

"Everyone is seeing what everyone is doing and joining in," says Mike McGraw, an executive at Clear Channel Spectacolor, a unit of Clear Channel Communications, that focuses on Times Square displays.

Tempered Mood

The shift is an early example of the tone emerging in advertising generally after the attacks: scaled-back, sober and emphasizing public service rather than a hard sell. "We wanted to do something to reflect that it is not business as usual," says Steve Sturm, vice president for marketing at Toyota Motor Sales, a unit of Japan's Toyota Motor. The company's Times Square video display shows an American flag.

Toyota is reassessing all its advertising. Promotional messages "have to be tempered...to reflect the mood of the American public and the somberness of the times," Mr. Sturm says.

Some advertisers saw aspects of their messages become irrelevant overnight. FleetBoston Financial's Times Square video display had featured a list of New York automated-teller machine locations, including the World Trade Center. After the attack it started telling viewers they can donate to the Red Cross at Fleet branches. "The idea was to put the sign to public use right away," says Rena DeSisto, Fleet's senior vice president for corporate communications in New York. "It's not a time to be promotional."

Such shifts are occurring throughout the advertising industry, from billboards all the way down to e-mail marketing campaigns. Some Internet retailers say they've delayed mass mailings out of concern that hard sells or boasts of rock-bottom prices may be seen as inappropriate in the attacks' aftermath. Some also say that Internet retailers have to be more careful than, say, outdoor advertisers, to avoid appearing exploitative by sending out a barrage of patriotic images and sympathetic messages. E-mails strike many customers as a more personal form of communication than traditional advertising.

'Return to Normalcy'

Bluefly Inc., a New York-based Internet retailer of discount designer goods, was scheduled to send out a "hot deals" e-mail promotion Sept. 12, the day after the attacks. The e-mail would have touted designer dresses at 70% off, a selection of "hot items" for $19.99, designer ties and merchandise for children. The retailer instead delayed its e-mails until last Thursday. Bluefly added a preamble that touched on the delicate balance between returning to normal activity and reflecting on the tragedy: "While we fully recognize that shopping may not be a priority of yours at this time, we are resuming our regular weekly e-mail schedule in an effort to try to return to normalcy."

For billboard advertisers, it may

Times Square advertisers are among the companies that are changing their outdoor displays to show patriotic and public-service messages take longer to return to something resembling "normalcy" simply because their messages are so much more public. Messages are going up across the country, many as part of a campaign organized by the Outdoor Advertising Association of America that uses the simple statement: "In God We Trust. United We Stand." At the end of the same day of the attacks, executives at JVC, a subsidiary of Japan's Matsushita Electric Industrial, decided to redo the company's big display in Times Square. It had read, "Excite Your Senses...World Leader in Audio and Video." The day after the attacks, the display switched to the Outdoor Advertising Association's message.

Lamar Advertising is putting up about 150 giant billboards and at least 1,500 smaller ones around the country, as well as giving discounts to customers who want to mount public-service messages. Clear Channel is donating space from 50 huge, 14-by-48-foot billboards, as well as hundreds of slightly smaller displays. The campaign will link the company's name with charitable associations, by featuring the address clearchannel.com, where people can donate to a relief fund.

"We want to do anything we can for support," says Rob Richards, Clear Channel Outdoor senior vice president.

It can be an expensive decision for advertisers. HomeBanc Mortgage pays more than $10,000 a month to advertise on a 28-by-84-foot billboard in downtown Atlanta. It had featured the company's Internet service, but now will show a Red Cross phone number, along with the message "God Bless America." The bank's logo won't completely vanish; it is in the lower right-hand corner.

Companies that want to make a statement don't want to appear to be exploiting the message for commercial gain. In Dallas, radio station KBFB-FM, owned by Radio One, is covering its logo and name on some billboards with an American flag and the message, "God Bless America." Photos of some of the station's on-air personalities still will be on display.

"I wanted to make sure it wasn't self-serving," says George Laughlin, general manager of the station.

Survival Gear Gets Big Boost In U.S. Sales

Business is picking up for Sharon Packer, who runs a small Salt Lake City firm that sells Swiss-made bomb shelters starting at $16,000.

Before the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, her Utah Shelter Systems sold about one shelter a month, mostly to people worried about tornadoes or earthquakes. This past Thursday alone, she took six orders, all from people seeking protection against chemical or biological attack. "When I went to bed I still had 93 e-mails to answer," Ms. Packer says.

Phones are ringing off the hook at Neoterik Health Technologies Inc. in Woodsboro, Md., where anxious customers are paying $259.99 each for Survivor-brand gas masks and $495 for enclosed-bubble protectors for babies and pets.

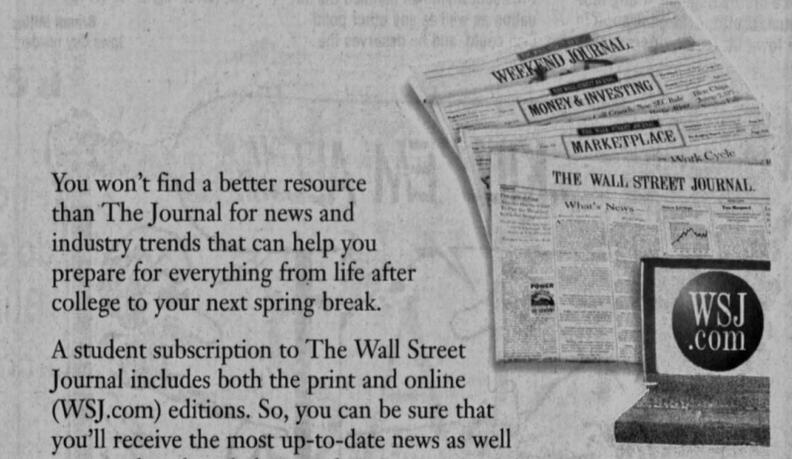

Fears of more terrorist assaults are providing a huge boost to the survivalist industry and other purveyors of emergency supplies and advice. In part, this is because the U.S. has no mass civil-defense shelter system. The Federal Emergency Management Agency doesn't offer recommendations on what to do in the event of a chemical or biological bombing, calling such events unlikely. "We don't view it as a significant threat and it's really not part of our policy," says spokesman Marc Wolfson.

So survivalist merchants work to fill this void. Utah Shelters, for instance, sells refuges designed to be dug into the ground, which range in price from $16,000 for a 32-foot-long steel silo to $33,000 for a 10-by-50-foot chamber that Ms. Packer, the firm's co-owner, calls "a virtual second home...complete with air conditioning, chemical toilets, light fixtures and vented air."

At the American School of Defense, a distributor of nuclear, biological and chemical protection gear in Kansas City, Kan., owner Jade Edwards says he typically sells about 100 M-95 brand gas masks a month; he sold 1,000 last week. Kurt Wilson, owner of Survival Enterprises, which sells survivalist products over the Internet and at a store in Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, says sales of ready-to-eat food and kerosene lamps have doubled in the past two weeks. "Business was slow for a long time," he says, "Now they call me up and say 'I've got $2,000 to spend.'"

Fight racism for the sake of America

The events of Sept. 11 could prove to be the worst tragedy America has seen in its entire history. The loss of life is unspeakably disturbing; however, some Americans' responses to the violence may be equally upsetting. We must remember that there are violent and racist individuals in every city in America. Because everyone seems to have already concluded that the attacks on NYC, Washington, D.C., and the plane that crashed in Pennsylvania were caused by a Middle Eastern terrorist group, I fear that people of Middle Eastern descent in America will be targeted by racists trying to avenge the loss of U.S. lives. Hopefully, I am wrong. However, there have already been isolated incidents of violence directed at mosques reported on the East Coast. We must not forget the actions our government took against Asian-Americans after the bombing of Pearl Harbor, and we cannot allow American citizens to perpetrate the same kind of racism now. The next year will test the resolve and effectiveness of the civil-rights movement and all of the anti-racist activism of the last 40 (no, make that 200) years.

Every citizen needs to guard against violence that may be directed at innocent people here at home. If any threats of violence are made against any individual, group, or organization in the Iowa City area, I personally will organize a group to stand watch and preserve the civil rights of those threatened. I invite others to take the same approach. Hopefully, no one in this community has anything to worry about. Hopefully, America is at least a little bit less racist than it has been historically. But let's not be caught off guard in case we haven't "overcome" as they said we would in the '60s.

Nation needs unity, not name-calling

I am writing to express my disbelief and disgust with those people who have written letters to the editor in which they either called our president stupid or accused him of not properly handling the situation our country is currently struggling through. This is a time when the people in this nation, whether Democrat or Republican, need to unite as Americans and be in full support of our president and our government and the decisions they make on our behalf. Instead of calling our president incompetent, or pointing out his public-speaking flaws, why not point out some of the good things that he is doing? For example, the establishment of a worldwide coalition to fight terrorism or the continued negotiations to resolve the issue peacefully. President Bush has handled the situation as well as any other politician could, and he deserves the support of the public in whatever he chooses to do next.

Reaction to events of Sept. 11

What happened on Sept. 11 was a shock to the world. Some say they saw it coming, but if they did, why was it not stopped? My thoughts go out to all the families who lost moms, dads, and children. Patriotism is needed now.

"Trite, Never Right"

Once again, Holly Eggleston is naïve, oversimplified, and all over the place in her recent column, "The immorality of it all" (DI, Sept. 26). I am sure that she is being facetious by describing herself as "a functional illiterate," but her tangential, disjointed writing style makes her columns painful reading (without even considering her knee-jerk conservative takes on her subject matter). Whether Eggleston is attacking feminism, abortion, or any other "contemptible crusade" favored by the left (note the use of the word "crusade," after the fashion of the woefully inept diplomacy of one George W. Bush), her column inevitably reads like a garbled mish-mash of conservative vitriol. Perhaps the subheading should be reversed to "Trite, Never Right" (or Write).

The beauty and the goodness in the everyday

You, too, may have walked by them scores of times and never really looked.

A pair of stainless-steel tendrils, anchored at the base, free at the top, oscillating from side to side, up and down and around, now one, now the other, now in tandem.

It was Sunday afternoon when I finally looked and saw Two Lines Oblique, by sculptor George Rickey, rising from its concrete mooring on the patio of the UI Museum of Art to sway with the breeze and the trees.

The rain had ceased, the clouds were surfing away over the Iowa River, the leaves were beginning to curl and dry and whip along the river bank, the crisp scents and humming sounds of autumn were in the air.

I felt then as I feel now: I want to move on with the seasons. I want to write about sculpture, and painting, and music. I want to revel in the outlandish configurations of the high-school marching band, to marvel at the bizarre custom of splitting the lunch bill, to advocate for ending sentences with prepositions. I want to bemoan state government's precipitous abandonment of higher education and rant about how we can't possibly carve more millions out of the university's hide. Anything, anything, anything else.

But Sept. 11 will not go away. Neither will my certainty that my children's generation — my students' generation — will be the one to pay for the failures and sins of its predecessors. The polls show widespread support for going to war; the arrival of my older son's Selective Service registration notice precisely on his 18th birthday last week reminds me that the apparatus for enlisting our youth as cannon fodder is in place. The flags have ascended from half-mast to full. The war planes and hit squads are poised for action. "America's New War" is the legend on CNN.

Meanwhile, eloquent voices, from survivors and relatives to the Dalai Lama and the pope, are calling for interrupting the cycles of violence. Congress has just approved a bigger Defense budget; talk is of better intelligence and sharpened special forces and airline bailouts; and now that we think we need the rest of the world to go into battle with us, the House at last has followed the Senate in agreeing to pay our hugely overdue dues to the United Nations. But where are the budgets for combating poverty and injustice? Is this not a time to make a renewed commitment to eradicating the roots of despair and rage and hate? Our past president alluded to this need in a speech to the Foreign Relations Council. Our current president has not, although his speechwriters finally wised up; polished declarations have replaced crude off-the-cuff remarks.

In these disheartening times, my thoughts constantly return to the out-sized hearts and extraordinary heroism of the ordinary people of New York, who continue to show us how individuals from every race, religion, ethnicity, and nationality, across the chasms of cultures and classes, can bond as a family. How to extend this basic decency, this common humanity, to our foreign policy?

My thoughts turn as well to the bard of my generation's war years — yes, the old (young) Bob Dylan. The answer, he said, is blowing in the wind.

So I lift my face to the autumn bluster, and look a little harder, and find a meditative center in the gentle oscillation of that sculpture.

Two flexing blades of silver grass, two arching rods, a double metronome keeping erratic time with the elements. Like the twin towers, made to bend, not break, in the wind.

Of course, Sept. 11 is still on our minds. Of course, we find metaphors everywhere.

And we suddenly see what was there all the time: the vapor trails of airplanes cleaving the brilliant daytime sky, the perfect half-moon against the torpid night sky, the weeds pushing up between cracks in the sidewalk, the patterns and textures of walls and floors. The ways people walk, the things they carry, the expressions they exchange on the street. The beauty and goodness in the everyday.

The answer, my friend, is in the core of our beings. Raising our heads from the wreckage, we are dazzled anew by the world, and we know we are still alive, and we hope that peace breaks out.

Judy Polumbaum is a DI columnist.

Swiss man goes on rampage; 15 dead

By Peter Hody
Associated Press

ZUG, Switzerland — A man enraged with local officials opened fire with an assault rifle and tossed a grenade in a crowded state legislature before shooting himself Thursday. Switzerland's worst-ever shooting spree left 15 people dead, including the gunman.

The rampage by Friedrich Leibacher, a 57-year-old Zurich resident, killed three members of the canton of Zug's seven-member government, as well as 11 of its 80 lawmakers. Fourteen officials were seriously injured, including government chief Hanspeter Uster, who was shot through a lung.

The spree plunged Switzerland into mourning and prompted an immediate rethinking of security standards in a country in which even the president has little police protection.

"It was like an execution," said lawmaker Hanspeter Hausherr, who was in the chamber when Leibacher stormed in, wearing a police vest and firing at least one magazine of 20 bullets from his 5.6 mm SIG "Sturmgewehr 90" in a five-minute frenzy.

He then detonated a grenade, which ripped doors off and shattered windows of the stately two-story building near Zug's quaint old town and glistening lake not far from Zürich. He then shot himself with a pistol.

As lawmakers hit the floor and the injured screamed in pain, journalists who were covering the parliamentary meeting took cover behind their press desks.

"Unbelievable, just unbelievable," said lawmaker Jo Lang, one lens of his glasses shattered and still in shock from the bullet that whizzed through his curly hair.

"I just remember the shout 'Get down,' said another lawmaker, Jean-Pierre Prodoliet. "Then I heard bang, bang, bang, five or 10 times. Then there was silence until the next bang, bang, bang."

Christoph Borner/Associated Press

Unidentified members of the Zug legislature and journalists wait for medical help Thursday in front of the legislature building in Zug, Switzerland, after a gunman stormed the local assembly and opened fire. He killed at least 15 people and wounded many others.

Zug's famously low taxes, proximity to Zurich airport, and stunning Alpine views have made it a favorite base for numerous foreign firms, including all the world's major commodity traders. Marc Rich, a fugitive U.S. financier who caused a storm by being pardoned by former President Clinton, has long been based there.

WORLD BRIEF

Leader says rebels have disbanded

SIPKOVICA, Macedonia (AP) — Calling for reconciliation in this war-weary country, Macedonia's top ethnic Albanian rebel leader announced Thursday that his forces had disbanded after surrendering thousands of weapons to NATO.

"We should all continue toward making the situation better," said rebel leader Ali Ahmeti, "I think what people want is peace."

Ahmeti spoke to reporters in a village of Sipkovic, a former rebel stronghold from which his forces had shelled Macedonia's second-largest city during a six-month insurgency.

Chechens seek out peace

By Angela Charlton
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Chechen rebel envoys have contacted Russian officials about possible disarmament talks, a Kremlin envoy said Thursday, in the first step toward peace negotiations in two years of war.

The tentative overture was announced just before President Vladimir Putin's 72-hour offer of talks — his first such serious proposal — expired. Putin had repeatedly rejected Western calls for a political settlement, insisting the rebels should be eliminated.

Kremlin envoy Viktor Kazantsev, appointed by Putin to oversee negotiations, said a representative of rebel leader Aslan Maskhadov approached his delegation in Chechnya. He provided no details.

"We have just barely started," Kazantsev said on RTR television Thursday from a plane to Moscow. "I'm not saying they're ready; they have doubts."

Kazantsev, who has been shuttling around Chechnya and nearby southern Russian republics since Putin's offer Monday, asserted that several dozen rebel commanders and fighters had "contacted" pro-Moscow Chechen officials. He did not elaborate.

"Discussions are under way. There will be a result, I am certain," he later told ORT television in Moscow.

His deputy, Nikolai Britvin, said in a telephone interview from the Chechen capital, Grozny, that a small number of rebels had already surrendered, but he did not say how many.

"The process has started, and it will continue tomorrow and for some time," he said.

There was no immediate response from the rebels.

Formidable obstacles remain to any peace settlement. The Russian military is desperate to avoid a repeat of its humiliating troop withdrawal at the end of the 1994-96 war in Chechnya, which resulted in de facto independence.

The Kremlin also wants to maintain a strong presence in the region and avoid the lawlessness that blossomed after the 1996 withdrawal — the main reason cited for sending troops back into Chechnya in 1999.

That invasion came after Chechnya-based rebels invaded the neighboring region of Dagestan and after deadly apartment bombings in Russia blamed on the rebels.

Maskhadov, a rebel commander during the 1994-96 war, played a key role in negotiating a peace deal, and he has repeatedly proposed negotiations in this war. He welcomed Putin's offer, but many experts question how much control Maskhadov has over the fractured rebel forces.

HAWKEYE SOCCER

Iowa slips by Cyclones, 1-0

By Jeremy Shapiro
 The Daily Iowan

It took merely 25 seconds for the Iowa soccer team to end four years of frustration against archrival Iowa State.

Only that long into the match, a streaking Sarah Lynch escaped notice from the Cyclone defenders and scored what ended up being the game-winning goal.

Thanks to stellar play by the Iowa defenders and a brilliant performance by freshman goalie Britta Voegelé, 89 minutes and 35 seconds later, the Hawkeyes celebrated a 1-0 victory. It was the team's first-ever win against Iowa State; the Hawks improved to 3-5 on the season.

"I was ready to score," said Lynch with a smile. "It was the Iowa State game, going up against our old coach [Stephanie Gabbert]. Still, it surprised me it happened that fast."

Iowa State (2-4) seemed stunned by the quick deficit. Both coaches agreed it changed the flow of the game, and they agreed that you can't leave the junior from St. Charles, Ill., open.

"When you have a player like Sarah Lynch, you can't give her an inch," said Iowa coach Wendy Logan. "She will punish a defense that is not on its toes, and that's exactly what she did."

Gabbert, who coached Lynch during her freshman year, also noted how dangerous she could be.

"You never want to give up a goal like that," she said. "We couldn't leave Sarah Lynch open like that and expect to stop her."

Lynch was held out of the second half because of dehydration. Logan did not want to take a chance to and put her back in. She is expected to be fine for the Minnesota game, Sept. 30.

With the lead, the Iowa defense took over to record its second shutout in three games. The Cyclones had plenty of chances, but Iowa defenders Michelle Mobily, Joni Anderson, Chrissy Howard, Tessa Price, and others always seemed to kick the ball out of danger.

"The defense denied them opportunities," Logan said. "There weren't many clear looks, and the few times they had them, Britta was in great position."

Perhaps the Cyclones' best scoring chance came with 26:24 left in the first half. Voegelé dove for an Iowa State shot but could not control the ball. Cyclone sophomore Nicole Wilcox recovered and took a shot that hit the post and lingered inches from the goal for a few seconds before an Iowa defender was able to knock it away.

With 1:12 left in the game, an Iowa State shot sailed inches away from the corner of the goal before falling out-of-bounds.

"We created some dangerous chances, so I'm very proud of how they responded after the early goal," Gabbert said. "I credit Iowa, because it got back on defense well and made it more difficult."

In only her sixth collegiate game, Voegelé stopped every dangerous Cyclone shot for her second shutout in a week.

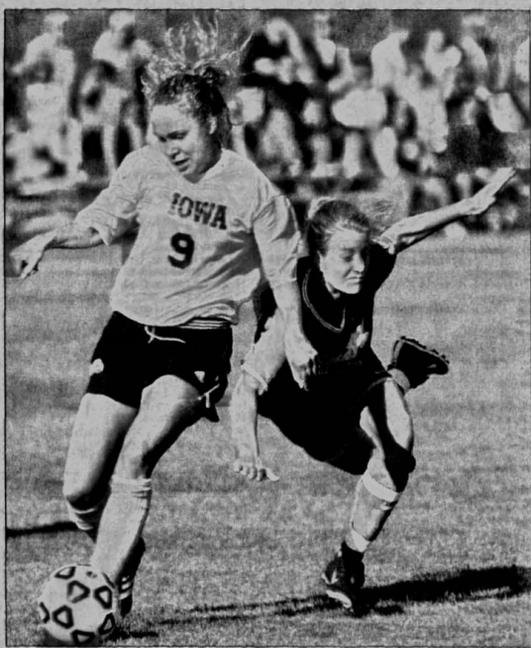

"It was fun playing in a rivalry game," she said. "I wasn't worried about them scoring. I had faith in our defense holding them back."

Gabbert played down her return to Iowa City, saying, "It was not a big deal."

The more-confident Hawkeyes head to Minneapolis feeling they can compete with anyone in the Big Ten. Minnesota is 2-4, 1-1 in the Big Ten. Iowa has never beaten the Gophers, but then again, Iowa had never beaten Iowa State until Thursday.

"We are playing well right now, and we definitely have momentum for the Big Ten games," Voegelé said.

HOME COMING • IOWA VS. PENN STATE • 11:10 • KINNICK STADIUM

Can they do it again?

Iowa linebacker Roger Meyer sprints across Beaver Stadium in celebration as a Penn State coach hangs his head in disbelief in front of stunned players just seconds after Iowa upset Penn State, 26-23, in double-overtime on Nov. 4, 2000.

Ferentz concerned about Penn State

Penn State is off to one of its worst starts in the Joe Paterno era.

Sitting at 0-2 for the fourth time in his 36-year stint as head coach, to say the 74-year-old coach is frustrated would be an understatement.

"I look at myself, but I am not losing confidence," Paterno said. "I know what we have to do better and what has to happen. In fact, I am excited about the challenge. I am angry."

That concerns Iowa football coach Kirk Ferentz.

"I think we're looking at a team that's got talent," he said. "They haven't truly gotten in rhythm yet. I'm not really getting sucked into this 'Woe is Penn State' thing. They've got a talented football team, and history has shown they'll bounce back."

One has to look back only as far as last year to understand Ferentz's words of warning. After stumbling out to an 0-2 record, the Nittany Lions ripped Louisiana Tech apart, 67-7, in their third game of the year.

Saturday's 11:10 a.m.

match-up between undefeated Iowa and winless Penn State will be each team's third game of 2001.

A crowd of around 68,000 is expected for the nationally televised game on ESPN, as the Hawkeyes take the field for the first time since Sept. 8 after a three-week layoff because of the postponement of the Sept. 15 Iowa State game after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. Last week was Iowa's scheduled bye week.

Before the layoff, Iowa had outscored its opponents, 95-19. The first-string defense surrendered zero points, but it's uncertain whether the Hawkeyes lost their momentum with the absence from hard contact and live game situations.

Kahlil Hill said the excitement and energy still linger.

I'm not really getting sucked into this "woe is Penn State thing." They've got a talented football team, and history has shown they'll bounce back.

Reds halt Phillies' climb back to first

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Lance Davis pitched two-hit ball over six innings and Corky Miller stole home, leading the Cincinnati Reds to a 2-1 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies on Thursday night.

The Phillies missed a chance to tie Atlanta for first place in the NL East. The Braves lost at Florida, 7-1, but stayed one game ahead of Philadelphia.

Davis (8-3) allowed singles to Johnny Estrada in the third and Jimmy Rollins in the sixth. He left after the first two batters reached in the seventh.

Scott Sullivan retired six of seven batters in the seventh and eighth, and Danny Graves pitched the ninth for his 29th save in 35 chances.

The fifth-place Reds won two of three against the Phillies for a second-straight series victory.

Marlins 7, Braves 1

MIAMI — Greg Maddux lost his third-straight decision, giving up four runs in the first three innings Thursday night as the Atlanta Braves lost to the Florida Marlins, 7-1.

Maddux (17-10), pitching for the first time since hyperextending his elbow Saturday in New York, fell behind in the first when Derrek Lee reached on just the 27th walk off the pitcher this season. Cliff Floyd hit an RBI double, and Kevin Millar followed with a run-scoring single.

Lee hit a sacrifice fly in the second for a 3-1 lead, and Lowell homered in the third.

No. 1 Miami sticks it to Pittsburgh

By Alan Robinson

PITTSBURGH — Clinton Portis scored on three short runs set up by Ken Dorsey's precision passing, and No. 1 Miami, showing no rust from a nearly three-week layoff, came out with its accustomed first-quarter flurry to beat Pittsburgh, 43-21, Thursday night.

Miami's second trip to Pennsylvania in less than a month ended just as its first, when an overwhelmed Penn State couldn't keep up with the Hurricanes' speed and size in a 33-7 victory Sept. 1.

This victory — Miami's 12th in its last 13 meetings with Pittsburgh — came just as fast and just as furious during a 20-point first quarter, with Portis scoring twice and Dorsey throwing an 18-yard TD pass to Andre Johnson on a fade pattern one play after a Pitt fumble.

Portis, constantly eluding defenders with his cutback running, ran for a career-high 131 yards on 24 carries, with two touchdown runs of 1 yard and another of 4 yards. Dorsey failed to throw for 300 yards

Lakers stacked for possible 3-peat

By John Nadel
 Associated Press

EL SEGUNDO, Calif. — When last seen in June, the Los Angeles Lakers were dismantling the San Antonio Spurs and Philadelphia 76ers to complete a 15-1 playoff run — best in NBA history.

Now, on the eve of training camp, it appears the pieces are in place for a third straight championship despite a semi-made-over roster and the off-season surgeries performed on Shaquille O'Neal, Derek Fisher, and Mark Madsen.

"The three-peat from my experience has always been a down year, less than the year before," Lakers coach Phil Jackson said Thursday, and he would know, having coached the Michael Jordan-led Chicago Bulls to three-straight titles twice in the 1990s.

"It's human nature to relax, there's no doubt about it," Jackson said. "I don't think it has to be like that for this team. Reaching 60 wins is what we're after. I think this team can do that."

Two years ago, Jackson coached his first Lakers team to an NBA-best 69-13 record en route to their first championship since 1988.

But the road was bumpy in the postseason — they lost playoff games by 19, 29, and 33 points, and had to rally from a 15-point deficit in the final 10½ minutes to beat Portland in Game 7 of the Western Conference finals.

That was nothing compared with most of last season, when injuries along with the well-publicized differences between O'Neal and Kobe Bryant contributed to a very unchampionship-like 48-26 record during 74 games.

Then, buoyed by the coming together of O'Neal and Bryant along with the excellence of Fisher, who missed the first 62 games of the season following surgery to repair a stress fracture in his right foot, the Lakers suddenly came together.

First came an eight-game winning streak to end the regular season. And then the incredible postseason run.

"They were the best team I'd ever seen in the playoffs," said Jackson, who singled out the 1983 Philadelphia 76ers, who went 12-1 in the postseason, for comparison, and didn't mention any of the championship teams he coached in Chicago.

The current Lakers, who leave today for training camp in Hawaii, have 10 holdovers from last season and 10 newcomers in the battle for 12 roster spots plus those on the injured list.

Fisher, who underwent surgery for another stress fracture in his right foot on July 3, and Madsen, who had an operation on his left wrist the same day, figure to be sidelined until at least December.

It's hoped O'Neal, who had surgery on his left small toe Aug. 29, will be in the starting lineup Oct. 30, when the Lakers open the season against Portland.

"I think he'll be ready sometime in training camp," Jackson said. "It takes a while before you really get yourself in shape."

Jackson said O'Neal had promised he would report to camp under 300 pounds and in great shape, but that was before his surgery.

Now, there's a bit of uncertainty.

"Another end of the scale — we're going to get something better from Shaq because he's not going to have the pounding practices at the beginning of the season," Jackson said. "We'd like him to be ready to really start rolling sometime at the end of November."

With the injuries and newcomers in mind, Jackson said he expected a slow start to the season, but added: "I don't think we'll be as panicked this year as last year."

Gone from last year's team are starting forward Horace Grant, backup center Greg Foster, and reserve guards Ron Harper, Tyronn Lue, and Isaiah Rider.

Among the newcomers are forwards Samaki Walker and Delaney Simpkins, center Jerani McCoy, and guards Lindsey Hunter and Mitch Richmond.

"We have been steadily putting this roster together since June 25," Jackson said. "We think we have some great additions to this team. We're going to miss a Horace, a Harp, a Tyronn Lue who helped us win championships."

HAWKEYE ROAD BRIEFS

Women's cross-country

This weekend: The Hawkeyes will travel to Palo Alto, Calif., Saturday to compete in the Stanford Invitational, running in the 4K race instead of their usual 5K. The 4K race simulates the U.S. Nationals and the World Championships.

Last weekend: The Iowa women finished 10th in the Illinois Invitational. Sophomore Georgia Millward has led the Hawkeyes in both meets this season, finishing in a season-best time of 18:40 at the Illinois Invitational.

On Iowa: It will be the Hawkeyes' first appearance at the Stanford Invitational. Hawk coach Joan Hansen is familiar with the course from her days as a college and professional runner, and she hopes to help the team learn new things from this course.

On the competition: Iowa will compete against a field of 46 teams. Wisconsin, Brigham Young, and host Stanford lead the pack of nationally ranked teams. The 46 teams will be divided into separate races prior to the meet.

Iowa key: The Hawkeyes will need to continue to focus on the course as they look ahead to their next big competition, the Big Ten Championships in October.

Coach's quote: "I have been very happy with our team's performance and improvement, both individually and collectively. There are going to be many national-caliber teams at this meet, and this is a good opportunity for us to prepare for the Big Tens."

— by Ali Noller

Men's cross-country

This weekend: Iowa will travel to Minneapolis to compete in the 37-team Roy Griak Invitational Saturday at 11 a.m. This meet marks the first at-large considerations for the national meet.

On the competition: Hawk coach Larry Wiecek said the Griak

Invitational is a good measuring stick against nationally ranked teams. Fifteen teams that competed in the 2000 NCAA Championships will compete in Minneapolis, including national powers Providence, Arizona, and Oregon. Eight of the 11 Big Ten schools will also compete Saturday, giving the Hawkeyes their first look at a number of conference schools.

On Iowa: The Hawkeyes will again be without their top runner, Trent Corey, but they may regain the services of No. 2 runner Nick Nordheim this weekend. Iowa had a very strong showing without the two last weekend at the Illinois Invitational, and Wiecek said he expects the Hawkeyes to excel this weekend even if Nordheim doesn't compete. Senior Shaun Allen and freshman Tony Rakarik had very strong showings last weekend, finishing sixth and 11th, respectively.

Hawkeye key: Last weekend, the Hawkeyes finished well, but Wiecek said he would like to see better pack running by the Hawkeyes. A tighter pack will give Iowa a better chance at running with the lead teams, allowing them to make some noise on the national stage.

Coach's quote: "We just have to execute like we've been training, and we've been racing the first two meets. We just have to polish it a little bit."

— by Tyler Lechtenberg

Volleyball

This weekend: Iowa will travel north, looking for its first Big Ten win when it plays Michigan and Michigan State. The Hawkeyes face off against the Wolverines in Ann Arbor, Mich., at 6 p.m. CDT today and take on the Spartans in East Lansing, Mich., at 6 p.m. CDT on Sept. 30.

On Iowa: The Hawkeyes stand at 2-6 overall, 0-2 in the Big Ten, and are on a three-match losing streak. The Hawkeyes lost, 3-1, to No. 21 Northern Iowa on Monday but came away feeling positive after a strong showing against the Panthers. The young Iowa squad practiced well this week, and coach Rita Buck-Crockett said the Hawkeyes are on the verge of taking their play up to the next level. Senior Sara Meyermann leads the nation in kills with 6.39 per game.

On Michigan: The Wolverines have a 3-5 overall record and a 0-2 record in the Big Ten. A young team, Michigan is led by sophomore Erin Moore's 3.1 kills per game and sophomore Lisa Gamalski's 10.21 assists per game. Iowa took both matches from the Wolverines last season.

On Michigan State: The Spartans ran through their nonconference schedule undefeated but were thrust into a buzz saw last weekend, losing their two opening Big Ten games. They stand at 7-2 overall, 0-2 in Big Ten competition. Senior Erin Hartley leads MSU with 4.24 kills per game. The Hawkeyes split with the Spartans last year.

Iowa's key: The Hawkeyes can level off their inconsistent play with improvement to their serving game. Iowa gave up too many easy points on serving errors against UNI, but a turnaround in that aspect of play could make a big difference for the Hawkeyes this weekend.

Coach's quote: "We're in the same boat as both Michigan and Michigan State. I think we're a better skill team than those two teams. It's just a matter of who is going to show up to play."

— by Tyler Lechtenberg

Women's tennis

This weekend: The Iowa women's tennis team will travel to Greenville, S.C., to compete in the Furman Invitational in its season opener. The competition will begin today at the Minor Mickel Tennis Center; play will conclude on Sept. 30.

Last season: The Hawkeyes competed in the NCAA Tournament for the third-consecutive year, led by senior Toni Neykova. In her junior season, Neykova earned all-Big Ten honors for the third-consecutive year.

On Iowa: Sophomore Cassie Hass returns for the Hawkeyes after being sidelined most of last season with an injury. Junior Steffi Hoch and sophomores Jennifer Hodgman, Pascale Veraverbeke, and Denitza Alexandrova are all coming off solid spring seasons and are looking to build off last year's success. Freshman Gloria Okino will also compete for the Hawkeyes.

On the competition: The Hawkeyes will compete against Furman, Clemson, Middle Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Vanderbilt, and Wisconsin.

Coach's quote: "I always feel a team isn't really a team until it takes its first trip of the season," Paul Wardlaw said. "I think it will be good for everyone to travel together and get a chance to compete. It should be a good weekend and a good tournament to get our season started."

Senior Bellisari to start for Buckeyes

By Rusty Miller
Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — The great quarterback controversy at Ohio State was over before it started.

Steve Bellisari, the starter for the last two years, is again scheduled to start Saturday when the Buckeyes play at Indiana in their Big Ten opener.

"My feeling was that unless he just had a horrendous Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Steve Bellisari deserves to be our quarterback," coach Jim Tressel said Thursday. "That doesn't mean he will always be our quarterback but I certainly didn't prolong the thought."

Bellisari completed only 5-of-23 passes in a 13-6 loss at UCLA. He hit on only one of his last 17 passes.

Early in the week, Tressel did not deny that he was taking a hard look at starting Scott McMullen, a sophomore back-up.

"After the game on Saturday, we didn't have a chance to evaluate everything," Tressel said. "After reviewing the ballgame, we had less thought of changing but not about how much better we had to get at that position."

After Thursday's practice, Ohio State quarterback coach Joe Daniels said there never was a quarterback controversy. "Not here," Daniels said. "I guess in other places around Columbus there was."

Daniels said he wasn't even aware that there was any discussion of unseating Bellisari as the starter.

Athletics won their 15th-straight home game, 6-2, over the Anaheim Angels on Thursday.

Lidle got the first complete game of his career as Oakland completed its fourth undefeated homestand of six games or longer this year.

Prior to this remarkable season, the A's had just two such perfect homestands since moving to Oakland.

White Sox 9, Twins 3

CHICAGO — Carlos Lee hit a two-run homer, and Paul Konerko drove in two runs Thursday to lead the Chicago White Sox over the Minnesota Twins, 9-3.

Magglio Ordonez and rookie Joe Crede each had two hits and two RBIs for the White Sox in their final home game of the season.

The win put the White Sox in a tie with the Twins at 80-73 for second in the AL Central after trailing them by 1 1/2 games in May. The loss by the Twins dropped Cleveland's magic number to three in the division.

Orioles 4, Red Sox 2

BOSTON — Rookie Sean Douglass won his second straight start, and the Baltimore Orioles scored four runs in the sixth inning to beat the Boston Red Sox, 4-2, Thursday night in Cal Ripken's last Fenway Park appearance.

Ripken, who is retiring after this season, went 0-for-2. He also walked, was hit by a pitch and scored a run.

The crowd gave Ripken standing ovations for each at-bat and during a 15-minute pregame ceremony.

Astros 6, Cubs 5

CHICAGO — Sammy Sosa carried a small American flag as he rounded the bases following his 59th home run, but he wasn't enough to carry the fading Chicago Cubs, who lost to the Houston Astros 6-5 Thursday night.

In the first game at Wrigley Field since the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, Shane Reynolds improved to 5-0 against the Cubs this season, and Vinny Castilla hit a three-run homer for the first-place Astros.

Houston increased its lead in the NL Central to four games over idle St. Louis and to nine games over the third-place Cubs. Chicago has lost five of six and dropped five games behind the Cardinals in the wild card race with nine games left — all at Wrigley.

Mets 12, Expos 6

MONTREAL — Desi Relaford hit a go-ahead home run in the eighth inning and an RBI double during a five-run ninth as the New York Mets rallied to beat the Montreal Expos, 12-6, Thursday night.

Pinch-hitter Mike Piazza lined a three-run double in the ninth as the Mets won for the eighth time in nine games and tightened the NL East race.

The Mets pulled within three games of first-place Atlanta, which lost, 7-1, to Florida. New York begins a three-game series against the Braves at Turner Field tonight.

Rockies 13, Padres 9

DENVER — Phil Nevin homered twice and drove in a career-high seven runs for San Diego, but the Colorado Rockies overcame an eight-run deficit and rallied past the Padres, 13-9, Thursday.

Larry Walker drove in four runs and Todd Helton hit a three-run homer for the Rockies, who trailed, 8-0.

Keyed by Helton's 46th homer, the Rockies scored a season-high nine runs in the third despite hitting into a double play.

for the first time in three games and missed a few open receivers, but still was 18-of-32 for 208 yards and a touchdown.

Miami led, 43-7, in the fourth quarter before Pitt backup quarterback Rod Rutherford, who accounted for all three Panthers scores, threw for a touchdown, and ran for another in the closing minutes.

Pittsburgh (1-2, 0-1 Big East) actually led for a brief few minutes, something it didn't do in its 35-26 upset loss to South Florida on Sept. 8, the last day either Miami (3-0, 2-0) or Pitt played before Thursday.

But Pitt's 7-6 lead off Rutherford's 2-yard scoring run 3:48 into the game didn't hold up long against Miami, which has outscored its three opponents, 47-7, in the first quarter.

Portis had scored from the 4 with 2:14 gone as Miami needed just seven plays to drive 62 yards on its opening drive, started by Dorsey's 23-yard swing pass to Najeh Davenport and highlighted by Portis' 22-yard run to the 6.

Dorsey then had completions of 11, 16 and 15 yards during a 62-yard, 13-play drive, including an 11-yard throw to Portis on a third-and-9, to set up Portis' 1-yard scoring run that made it 13-7.

From that point, the rout was play book. It's been exciting. Guys still feel like they are on top of the world, so we're going to take that into Saturday."

Iowa will also bring in a decisive statistical edge. The Hawkeyes' offense is averaging 489 yards in total offense to a paltry 227 yards for the Nittany Lions.

Defensively, Iowa is atop the Big Ten. The unit has given up an average of 9.5 points, while Penn State has allowed opponents to score 25.5 points and rack up nearly 290 rushing yards per contest.

However, the Nittany Lions have played a much tougher schedule. Miami is atop the national polls, and Wisconsin is a front-runner for the conference crown. Iowa's Mid-American opponents — Kent State and Miami of Ohio — provided a mid-challenge.

The differences in the schedule are matched by the varying attitudes both teams will bring into Kinnick Stadium.

Penn State is fighting for its reputation. Iowa is ready to reinstate itself as a Big Ten contender.

"You have to understand we really don't care who comes into our stadium," Hill said. "Our confidence is that high. They are going to be jacked up. They are trying to save their season, and we are trying to do something that we haven't done in a long time."

In addition to starting the season 3-0 for the first time since 1997, the Hawkeyes will attempt to beat Penn State in Iowa City for the first time since 1930. They will also try to prevent Paterno from winning No. 323 and tying Bear Bryant for the most victories in Division I college-football history.

Ferentz said he is hopeful that right guard Alonzo Cunningham will return to the lineup to help the Hawkeyes' cause. The senior sat out the first two games with an ankle injury. He started nine games at left tackle last season.

Senior quarterback Kyle McCann started four games last year, including Iowa's 26-23, double-overtime victory against Penn State. Since then, his record is 3-1, and he has emerged the clear leader of this promising Hawkeye squad.

And as the leader, he isn't going to dismiss Penn State or any future foe.

"We're mature enough to know that we really haven't done anything yet, and it's time to stay focused," he said. "We know that we have a long ways to go. We're anxious to get back out there and keep moving forward."

Belfry uncomfortably quiet

By Robert Millward
Associated Press

SUTTON COLDFIELD, England — Eerie silence from the bleachers greeted the players as they walked onto the 18th green at The Belfry.

Instead of Tiger Woods and Colin Montgomerie, two recreational golfers carrying their own bags prepared to putt before 2,000 empty seats.

The Ryder Cup had been scheduled to start today. Instead, it has been postponed for a year by acts of terrorism 3,000 miles away, and the deserted stands and hospitality tents reflect the gloom.

While workers prepared to dismantle the stands and tents, the Brabazon course where the cup was to have been contested opened for business on Wednesday, giving some of the 480 season members a surprise chance to play.

"I had tickets to come on Friday to watch the Ryder Cup and never expected to be playing," said Bob Woodley, a financial consultant from nearby Lichfield. "We heard on Tuesday that the course would be open again and didn't want to miss this opportunity."

"I've played here many times but never with all these stands. They look really weird with no one sitting in them."

Greenskeepers, cup organizers and staff at the nearby De Vere Belfry hotel had been working around the clock to prepare for the 34th edition of the biennial event between the United States and Europe, a competition that has become one of golf's top events.

Woods, David Duval, David Toms, and the rest of Curtis Strange's U.S. team were supposed to come to this course in central England to defend the title the Americans won so dramatically at Brookline, Mass., two years ago.

The United States staged the biggest comeback in cup history on the final Sunday to win the singles matches, 8½-2½, and recapture the title by one point. But the Americans riled the Europeans by running across the 17th green to celebrate Justin Leonard's 45-foot putt, with Jose Maria Olazabal still waiting to play his shot.

Fired up by that acrimonious ending, Europe was determined to regain the trophy it last won at Valderrama, Spain, in 1997. Captain Sam Torrance's team included Montgomerie, Sergio Garcia, Jesper Parnevik, Lee Westwood, and Darren Clarke.

The scoreboards and bleachers were in place. Huge white tents were awaiting merchandise as well as tons of food and gallons of drinks.

Then terrorists struck on Sept. 11, killing thousands in New York and Washington. The Ryder Cup, like many sports events, was put on hold.

The same 24 players, led by the same two captains, are back on their regular tours and are now due to face each other at the Belfry on Sept. 27-29, 2002.

But the hotels that had been fully booked for months now have scores of empty rooms, and this part of central England estimates it has lost $24 million in revenue.

Some 30,000 spectators a day were expected to visit the Belfry, not just on the three days of the match but in the three days leading up to it.

Hotels in central Birmingham, 10 miles away, have slashed the cost of rooms to try to make up for the losses.

"Ryder Cup business was booked a couple of years ago and we are not going to recoup those losses fully," said Clifford Grauers, managing director of the Hyatt Regency, where the cost of a double room has been cut from $238 to $140.

ROAD BRIEFS

Women's golf

This weekend: The Hawkeyes will travel to South Bend, Ind., to compete in the Notre Dame Invitational. The 54-hole competition will cover two days, featuring 36 holes on Saturday and the final 18 on Sept. 30.

Last week: Iowa finished tied for 10th out of 14 teams in the Lady Northern Invitational, facing stiff competition from seven Big Ten foes. The Hawkeyes were the last among the Big Ten teams.

Key stat: Freshman Liz Bennett tied Iowa's 18-hole record with a round of 69 on Sept. 22. She led all Hawkeye golfers by finishing in a tie for 16th place.

Iowa's key: Junior Heather Suhr needs to continue her strong start to the fall season. Suhr finished fourth in South Carolina and 20th in Illinois. Her fellow golfers need to follow her lead in order to get Iowa to the top in Indiana.

Coach's quote: "We have to get to work," Diane Thomason said.

Women's Rowing

The Iowa varsity rowing team will travel west to make its season debut at the Head of the Des Moines Regatta Saturday.

The Hawkeyes will compete against host team Drake University, along with Kansas State, Kansas, Minnesota, and the Minneapolis Boat Club.

The 18th annual Head of the Des Moines Regatta will be held on the Des Moines River between the Botanical Center and Prospect Park.

The Hawkeyes swept all varsity events at last year's regatta, winning the Open Eight, the Open Four, and the top two spots in the Women's Pair race. The Iowa Varsity Eight has won the title for the past five years.

Iowa coach Mandi Kowal is in her eighth varsity season for the Hawkeyes. She has led the team to the NCAA Championship meet for three of the past five years, starting in 1997, when the NCAA Championship meet was first established. Kowal coached Iowa to a ninth-place finish at last year's meet.

Nineteen veteran varsity rowers and 16 novice and recruited rowers make up the varsity team. This weekend's pair of Open Eight teams share equal talent.

"We are approaching this race to advance the team, and we are going to let the two Open Eight teams duke it out," Kowal said. "The biggest challenge for the Open Eight teams are their Hawkeye competitors."

Sean Tobin and Wendy Wisehart are beginning their fourth season as assistant coaches at Iowa. Tobin is active in the recruiting process of new athletes, and Wisehart is responsible for the Varsity Fours.

"We are using this regatta to get better," Kowal said. "This is a newer team, and the only pressure of this meet will be from me, as a coach. We are going to use this race as a big warm-up for the year. We will spend most of our energy on getting ready to race, and we are following a very simplified racing strategy."

The Hawkeyes' next competition will be on Oct. 14, when they travel to Rockford, Ill., for the Head of the Rock Regatta.

ISU's Moses signs with Green Bay

AMES (AP) — Former Iowa State football player J.J. Moses has found a new home in Tittletown.

Moses, a wide receiver and kick returner, signed with the Green Bay Packers and was assigned to the practice squad. The Packers called him earlier this week as he was walking into a history class at Iowa State, where he is finishing work on his degree.

"I was just entering the door, and my cell phone was ringing," Moses said. "I picked it up, and it was Green Bay on the line, and they said, 'Would you like to be a Green Bay Packer?' "I said, 'That sounds pretty good to me.'"

Moses, who completed his eligibility at Iowa State last year, was cut by the Kansas City Chiefs during the preseason. He had missed time in camp because of a hamstring injury and his replacement returned a kickoff 92 yards for a touchdown.

"It was a surprise," Moses said. "Things were going pretty good. But all things happen for a reason and it just wasn't meant to be. I have been blessed because I have been able to have another opportunity."

Wisconsin freshman won't play because of heart condition

MADISON, Wis. — Freshman guard Latrell Fleming will not be able to compete on the Wisconsin basketball team because of a recently diagnosed heart condition, university officials said Thursday.

The 6-foot-2 Fleming, a fourth-team All-State selection last season from Milwaukee Marshall High School, suffers from hypertrophic cardiomyopathy, a disorder of the heart muscle that generally includes enlargement of the heart and a thickening of the walls of the left ventricle, the officials said.

"Our concern right now is with Latrell's health and in getting him the medical attention he needs," coach Bo Ryan said in a statement to the press. "I am very thankful that this was discovered and that Latrell will be promptly cared for."

Fleming's condition was discovered after he passed out during a team conditioning workout. He was referred to Dr. David Bernhardt, a team physician, who ordered cardiac evaluations at University Hospitals and Clinics.

Fleming can remain on full scholarship for up to five years and can remain a part of the Badger basketball program as an undergraduate student assistant coach.

Fleming and his family declined comment on his medical condition.

Jazz sign Stockton for two more years

SALT LAKE CITY — John Stockton was willing to take a pay cut. He's fairly certain he'll be able to make ends meet with a salary of $8 million for each of the next two seasons.

The future Hall-of-Famer announced Thursday that he has signed a two-year contract extension with the Utah Jazz, the only team he's ever played for.

Stockton made $11 million last season, but agreed to take about $3 million less so that the Jazz would not exceed the estimated luxury tax threshold of $54 million.

"I just look at myself mostly as fortunate," Stockton said. "It's not like we'll be at the soup kitchen. This is a very good job. There's not a guy in the league who doesn't have one of the best jobs in the world."

He begins his 18th season with the Jazz next week, when training camp opens.

Stockton, the NBA's all-time leader in assists and steals, said he wasn't sure if he would play out the contract, and that team owner Larry Miller was the one who asked him to sign for two years instead of one.

"We may really need you two years from now," Miller recalled telling Stockton.

College football back in full swing

By Richard Rosenblatt
Associated Press

The coaching Bowdens are coming off losses, Joe Paterno is desperate for a win, and Fresno State is rooting for Oregon State to beat UCLA.

College football is back in full swing this weekend, with all Top 25 teams in action and six games with both schools ranked in the Associated Press poll.

Stadium security remains tight in the wake of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, but winning games becomes important again — beginning with Clemson at No. 9 Georgia Tech and Wake Forest at No. 18 Florida State.

Coach Bobby Bowden's Seminoles (2-1, 1-1 ACC) try to regroup against Wake Forest (2-1, 0-1) after a 41-9 loss at North Carolina. It was Florida State's worst regular-season defeat since Auburn won, 59-27, in 1985.

"You just hope we can recover from it," Bowden said. "It will be interesting to see how we respond."

Bowden's son, Tommy, hopes Clemson (2-1, 0-1 ACC) is up to the task when it visits Georgia Tech (3-0, 0-0). The Tigers were upset by Virginia, 26-24, last week.

"It's a game we have to win if we want to win the conference," he said. "You won't do it with two losses. In that regard, it's a must win."

Paterno, in his 36th year as coach at Penn State, is becoming frustrated with his team's inability to win. The Nittany Lions (0-2, 0-1 Big Ten) are at improving Iowa (2-0, 0-0).

JoePa still needs one win to equal Bear Bryant's major college record of 323. "I'm angry," he said. "I don't like to lose."

The way his team has played, the prospect of two wins isn't promising. After the Hawkeyes, who average 47.5 points per game, Penn State's next five games are against Michigan, Northwestern, Ohio State, Southern Mississippi, and Illinois.

And then there's No. 10 Fresno State (4-0, 1-0 WAC), which seems less worried about beating Louisiana Tech (1-1, 1-0) and more concerned about 19th-ranked Oregon State (1-1) beating 12th-ranked UCLA (3-0) in a Pac-10 game.

The Bulldogs figure it this way: Anytime a team they have beaten wins, it boosts their chances of finishing high enough in the final BCS standings to earn a bid to a Bowl Championship Series game — the Rose, Orange, Fiesta or Sugar bowls.

"If Oregon State puts it on UCLA, then that can help," Fresno State coach Pat Hill said. "If we win 13 in a row and our quarterback [David Carr] continues on a pace he's on, there's no question we should be in a BCS game."

Fresno State beat Oregon State, 44-24, on Sept. 2.

In other Top 25 games Saturday, it's No. 21 Mississippi State at No. 2 Florida, No. 11 Kansas State at No. 3 Oklahoma, No. 4 Nebraska at Missouri, Texas Tech at No. 5 Texas, No. 6 Oregon at Utah State, No. 14 LSU at No. 7 Tennessee, Central Florida at No. 8 Virginia Tech, No. 13 Washington at California, Alabama at No. 15 South Carolina, No. 23 Michigan State at No. 16 Northwestern, No. 22 Illinois at No. 17 Michigan, No. 20 BYU at UNLV, No. 24 Purdue at Minnesota, and Northern Illinois at No. 25 Toledo.

Friday, September 28, 2001 by Eugenia Last
ARIES (March 21-April 19): Focus on forming business partnerships or networking at worthwhile functions. If you present your ideas with gusto, individuals may be seriously interested in backing them. Take the initiative and get ahead today.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Difficulties with peers may throw you for a loop. Don't rely on others to handle a job that was assigned to you. You may have concerns, but professional duties are pressing and must be completed properly.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Social activities should be conducive to finding love and adventure. Travel or social engagements will lead to intriguing encounters. The more outgoing you are, the more successful you will be.
CANCER (June 21-July 22): Make sure all your finances are in order. This is a great day to finish contracts and deliver the goods. You're running a tight ship at home and will receive great pleasure from family.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You will discover opportunities by mingling today. Don't neglect your mate; take her or him to an event that could be professionally important.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Attractions toward clients will be one-sided and must be put out of your head. Concentrate on detail and work alone to finish your project. You will make headway if you focus.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Plan a social day with friends, family, or a loved one. You will come up with some splendidly creative ideas for entertainment that will please everyone.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Limitations at home can be expected if you have been restricting your mate's freedom. Back off if you want to keep the relationship intact. Do something special for her or him.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your mind will be wandering to exotic destinations. You need to start planning that winter vacation. Call siblings or old friends to catch up on recent news. An opportunity might arise through the company you keep.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You can make money if you concentrate on producing services or goods that will make domestic chores easier. Developing a small business on the side would ease your financial stress.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Emotional ups and downs have caused uncertainties in your life. It's time to weigh the pros and cons and make a decision that will change your living conditions. Give yourself some credit and don't take all the blame. After all, you have been fair.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Someone may be trying to take advantage of you. Guard your thoughts for now. Don't give in to the intrigue of a secret affair. You have nothing to gain from involvement in a triangle.

PRESENCE

Coaching against an idol

Homecoming 2001

FROM THE EDITOR

Dear Joe:

Jeremy Schnitker

An open letter to Joe Paterno:
Dear Mr. Paterno,
I think you're one of the greatest coaches of all time, in any sport. I think you're a man of utmost dignity. I think you're a man of class. If I had been lucky enough, I would have loved to play for your football team. You're one of the few coaches that is equally concerned with producing quality young men as producing a quality football team. However, recently, your teams haven't been living up to the Penn State standard you helped build. You had a team in 1999 that was No. 2 in the nation before faltering to an 9-3 regular-season record and a victory in the Alamo Bowl. Two of that year's top NFL picks were on your defense, yet somehow you managed to lose three-straight games at the end of the season. In 2000, your squad started out sluggish, but things turned around for a couple of big wins over Illinois and Purdue. Yet, just when a bowl berth seemed possible, the Iowa Hawkeyes came into the stadium you spent 50 years on the sidelines of and beat you. They beat you with a coach who is 28 years your junior. So far this year, your team has struggled, perhaps even more than the two previous seasons. Your offense has been lethargic at best, averaging only 227 yards per game. Your running game has produced a sparse 105 yards in two games, while your defense has allowed 578. Sure Wisconsin and Miami are good football teams. Miami may be the best in the nation, but you used to be able to beat those guys. It used to be that the No. 1 team in the nation would come into Happy Valley and be fought tooth and nail. This year, they came in and ran you over in front of 109,000 of your fans. Those fans have even begun to boo your squad. That used to be taboo in the valleys that surround your beautiful stadium. You're coming to Iowa City this weekend and your boys aren't favored to win. They're facing a team that, on paper, is bigger, faster, and more talented than yours.

That used to never be the case. Never before have you come into Kinnick Stadium with a team that most don't think has a chance to win. The whispers around the country are that you should retire. I'm in no position to tell you to do that. I'm just a 22-year-old college newspaper editor. Those decisions are to be made by athletics directors. I have no right telling a man who has likely accomplished more good deeds in the last year of his life than I have in my entire lifetime that he should quit doing what he loves and does best. I don't know you. I've only sat at the same table with you once, and I'm sure you have no idea who I am, nor do you care. But, as a fan of college football, I don't want to see you fall to mediocrity. While I'm a Hawkeye fan, I don't like seeing Penn State, one of the few class programs around, fall to ruin. And Joe, even you have to admit that it is pretty close to doing so. I'm not saying you should give it up, but maybe it's time you start looking at the situation you're in. The decision is yours. I just don't want to see a legend like yourself let his legacy be rubbed out by a few bad seasons. Sincerely,

Jeremy Schnitker

Growing up in Pittsburgh, Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz dreamed of being a Nittany Lion and playing for Joe Paterno.

Todd Brommelkamp ♦ The Daily Iowan

Kirk Ferentz can still remember spending the formative years of his childhood in awe of Joe Paterno. Things haven't changed much over the past 30 years.

Growing up in Pittsburgh, a blue-collar city where football is very much the life blood of the community, Ferentz would sit, glued to the television set once a week to watch Paterno's television show on Pennsylvania's public-television channel.

With his jet black hair, reflective shades, and Brooklyn accent, Paterno was mesmerizing to a young man who dreamed of playing football in a Nittany Lion uniform. Ferentz, who moved to Pittsburgh from Michigan when his father got a promotion with the United Way, would listen as the coach would expound about such players as Jack Ham and Franco Harris, both bound for greatness with the hometown Steelers.

Paterno was very much ahead of his time then. Unfortunately, it seems time may have passed the 74-year-old coach by. But Paterno, Ferentz's elder by nearly 30 years, still holds a very special place in the heart of Iowa's coach.

"Everybody in our conference looks up to him," Ferentz said. "When he says something, we all listen."

Perhaps no other Big Ten coach looks up to Paterno more than Ferentz does. As a high-school football player at Upper St. Clair High School in Pittsburgh, Ferentz hoped to some day play for Paterno in State College. Those dreams were dashed when Penn State did not recruit the talented linebacker. Ferentz thought of walking on as a member of the Nittany Lions' program, but he was persuaded not to by his coach.

It was the best advice he ever got. "I had two major problems — I was small and slow," Ferentz said. "Other than that, I was pretty good. That's why they didn't want me.

Coach Paterno has won 300-plus games by getting good players."

So Ferentz took his game to the University of Connecticut, the first school that accepted him, where he became captain of the team and an all-Yankee Conference player. After serving as a graduate assistant for one season Ferentz graduated from UConn in 1978, the same year Paterno led No. 1 Penn State to an undefeated regular-season record, only to be defeated by No. 2 Alabama in the Sugar Bowl, 14-7.

Despite never playing for Paterno, he was still very much a part of Ferentz's life. His father-in-law, Gerry Hart, played high-school football with Paterno at Brooklyn Prep, and his brother-in-law, Kevin, lettered at Penn State in 1976.

The family ties led to Ferentz's first meeting with his childhood idol. In 1985, he was spending a week with his wife and in-laws in Avalon, N.J., where

I met him on the beach. We talked very briefly, but he didn't know who the heck I was.

— Kirk Ferentz,
on first meeting Joe Paterno

Paterno happens to own a home. He was only supposed to be there a week but wound up staying for two.

"I met him on the beach," he said. "We talked very briefly, but he didn't know who the heck I was."

Paterno may not have known who the skinny kid just seven years removed from college was, but another legendary coach certainly did.

Following the 1980 season, Iowa football coach Hayden Fry went in search of a new offensive line coach. Ferentz, who had helped to lead Jackie Sherrill's Pittsburgh team to an 11-1 record and No. 2 national ranking, immediately caught his eye.

In 1985, as Paterno's squad once again finished the regular season with a perfect record and No. 1 ranking, only to lose to Oklahoma in the Orange Bowl, Ferentz and the Hawkeyes were enjoying their second trip to the Rose Bowl.

Unknown to Ferentz, his coaching success caught the eye of Paterno many times.

"I have watched him and at times thought about hiring him as a coach and so forth," Paterno said.

By the time the Nittany Lions joined the Big Ten in 1993, Ferentz had left the conference, and college football altogether, to join the coaching staff of the Steeler's biggest rival, the Cleveland Browns.

When Ferentz returned the Iowa in 1999, he had his first legitimate meeting with Paterno at that season's Big Ten media day. With his family's relationship with the legendary coach, the two immediately hit it off.

"He's been very kind to me," Ferentz said. "He kind of looks out for me a bit. He's just a quality, genuine person."

Since Ferentz took over the Iowa program, Paterno has not only kept an eye on the energetic coach but also on the Hawkeyes. Last season's double-overtime 26-23 victory over the Nittany Lions in State College caused Paterno to recognize the Hawkeyes as one of the up-and-coming teams in the conference.

So what does the man who is just two victories away from becoming Division I's all-time winningest coach have to say about the coaching job Ferentz has done at Iowa?

A lot.

"[Last year], they were young people who at time were not in position," he said. "You looked at them and thought, 'One of these days, they are going to be a heck of a football team,' because of the confidence the coaches had in them and the fact that the kids stayed healthy."

This season at Big Ten media day, Paterno put the Hawkeyes right up front with the Northwesterns and Michigans of the conference, calling them a sleeper and warning members of the media that putting Iowa in the bottom tier of the league would be a mistake. Paterno is sticking to his guns as he prepares to visit Ferentz and the Hawkeyes in Iowa City this weekend.

"I thought they would be a sleeper in the conference — I don't think you can call them a sleeper, but a contender in the conference right now," Paterno said. "I felt going into playing them last year that we were going to play a football team that was very, very well coached and was on the verge of becoming a fine team."

Such high praise from the coaching legend didn't sit well with a wary Ferentz.

I have watched him and at times thought about hiring him as a coach and so forth.

-Joe Paterno,
on Kirk Ferentz

"It would have meant more, but as a kid, he would always talk nice about Boston College then beat them by 45," Ferentz said. "That instantly comes to mind, but I hope it's true."

Unfortunately for Ferentz, this may be one of the final times the two coaches meet. As pressure mounts on the 74-year old Paterno to retire, the younger coach knows Paterno faces many obstacles on the recruiting trail, not unlike Ferentz's predecessor, Fry. Coaches from competing schools often bring up the age issue with veteran coaches such as Fry and Paterno. While Ferentz and the Hawkeyes stick to their product and sell recruits on Iowa, he knows often times he is the exception to the rule.

Ferentz often runs into Paterno on the recruiting trail as he mines high-school fields in the Allegheny region for talent. He even finds himself in direct competition with Paterno in his own neck of the woods, competing with the man he once watched on a black-and-white TV screen.

"I even ran into him in Chicago once," Ferentz said. "He still gets around."

A LONG TIME OFF

Zach Boyden-Holmes/The Daily Iowan

Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz addresses his team after practice on Sept. 20. Having not played a game since Sept. 8, the Hawkeyes have had three full weeks of practice since its last competition.

Adjusting to a long break

By Melinda Mawdsley
 The Daily Iowan

Kicking back on his parents' couch in Pittsburgh, Iowa football coach Kirk Ferentz had the perfect seat to watch Saturday's foe, Penn State, fall to Wisconsin.

Personal time for a college coach in season is nonexistent, so he took advantage of some unexpected free time to recruit, visit family out East, and catch some quality television.

Ferentz wasn't the only member of the Hawkeyes that utilized his extended time away from football, even if the circumstances surrounding the long layoff were tragic.

The Sept. 11 terrorist attack and its repercussions prompted the postponement of Iowa's Sept. 15 game against Iowa State. The Hawkeyes' scheduled bye week happened to fall Sept. 16-22, leaving them with three weeks to sit on their 2-0 record and a chance to step away and regroup for the grueling Big Ten season ahead.

Sophomore kicker Nate Kaeding hung out with his family and friends. Senior linebacker Roger Meyer ventured to Cedar Falls to see his sister's induction into the National Society of Collegiate Scholars. Senior quarterback Kyle McCann channel-surfed through the Sept. 22 slate of college football games.

But the resounding response through the ranks was that the past two weeks off have given the hyped up Hawkeyes a chance to fine-tune fundamentals and tinker with new twists in offensive and defensive schemes.

"We've gotten a chance to get back to the basics, if you will," Meyer said. "I think that will help this team because we do have a lot of young guys that really need to work on those fundamentals more than the older guys do."

After Iowa defeated Miami (Ohio), 44-19, on Sept. 8, Ferentz was not pleased with the reserves' effort in the second half and pointed it out as an area of concern.

Three weeks later, he said improvements have been made, which is promising because the backups haven't been forced to make big plays — yet.

"If we are going to expect to win, some of those guys are going to have to step forward," Ferentz said. "I don't know who they are right now, but we are going to have things happen where someone is going to have to step up and get the job done."

That job is currently being executed to near perfection by the first-string offense and defense through two non-conference games. Iowa's starting defense hasn't given up a point all season, and the offense ran through teams early in both of Iowa's two victories.

Running back Ladell Betts said there were a few signs of complacency during the lengthy break. Actually, it was quite the contrary.

"I thought practice was going to be kind of dreadful, but for the most part practice was upbeat, up-tempo," he said. "I think everybody is focused, and everyone realizes that we need to stay focused."

A strong corps of veterans and committed coaches were sure to pass that message along to the younger players. The Hawkeyes sweat sheets through the summer heat to get to the point where their effort is finally being rewarded with wins.

It will take more than time away from live contact and competition to steal a momentum they still feel they possess.

"We haven't had any reason to lose it," senior receiver Kahlil Hill said. "I think [the time off] might have been a blessing in disguise. We've got a lot of guys with some nicks, so we got those guys back healthy, and we've still got the momentum. Guys still feel like they are on top of the world."

PENN STATE

Penn State of disarray

By Todd Brommelkamp
The Daily Iowan

Anyone who believes Penn State coach Joe Paterno is complacent with his team's 0-2 start needed only to listen to his weekly press conference to learn otherwise.

"When I accept a loss, then you guys can start writing stories about my retiring," he said.

Whether he wishes to accept it, Paterno's team has started the season 0-2, and the 74-year-old coach is plagued with more questions than answers as the Nittany Lions prepare for their showdown with Iowa Saturday.

The Lions have struggled in games with both Miami and Wisconsin this season, managing just 454 yards of offense in two losses compared with the 1,036 their opponents have put up. Paterno has very few answers for his team's inability to turn the corner so far this season but still believes it can get back on track.

"I don't know what's going to happen the rest of this year," he said. "The only thing I have control over is our football team being better this week and then better the next week."

On the surface, it appears the Penn State program has fallen considerably since joining the Big Ten in 1993. After winning at least nine games in their first seven years of Big Ten play, the Lions suffered through a 5-7 season in 2000 and failed to make a bowl game for the first time since 1988.

Many in the football world cite Paterno's age as the biggest hurdle for the program to overcome. Some schools have begun to use the coach's many years against him in recruiting visits with high-school players. At 74, Paterno would be closing in on 80 by the time a new recruit would graduate.

Paterno addressed recruiting concerns at his weekly press conference Tuesday, saying the team's lack of success was in no way related to the type of talent he has brought into the program in recent years.

"We have to play ourselves into being a good football team," he said. "I have said repeatedly and will say again that we have some good, young players."

When the Nittany Lions take the field against the Hawkeyes on Saturday, fans will see a team not much unlike the Hawkeyes of the last two seasons when Kirk Ferentz was forced to play young, inexperienced players in because of numerous injuries.

The Lions are playing without three starters on the offensive line, including center Eric Rickenbach. The defense has also proved susceptible to injuries, with linebacker Derek Ware out for the season with a knee injury.

Paul Vathis/Associated Press

Penn State's Omar Easy is stopped by Delante McGrew for no gain in the first quarter of the game at State College, Pa., Sept. 22. The Nittany Lions lost the game by a score of 18-6.

"It's a little like what we've gone through," Ferentz said of Penn State. "They haven't had the most experienced guys up front."

Also not unlike the Hawkeyes in recent years, the Lions appear to have a quarterback controversy on their hands. With the graduation of Rashard Casey, the starting reins were handed over to junior Matt Sennecca. Sennecca, however, has proved unimpressive in his two games and was relieved by freshman Zack Mills in both contests.

Paterno muddied the waters further this week by saying he would not make a decision on who his quarterback was until several plays into Saturday's game.

Sennecca will be the starting quarterback against Iowa, but he knows Paterno may make a switch at some point and will be relatively comfortable if he does.

"We trust his decisions," Sennecca said of Paterno. "He knows what he's doing."

"We're [Mills and I] both trying to win; we've just got to see what happens."

On the defensive side of the ball, senior Shamar Finney has been every bit the leader Paterno expected. Finney leads the team with 18 tackles and knows it will take a team effort to get Penn State back in the win column consistently.

"It's difficult because we've already experienced what we're going through [last year]," he said. "We're just trying to come together and get the job done."

Given his record, no one doubts Paterno knows how to win. The only question in Happy Valley is whether he can do it with the squad he has this season.

"There are things that happen to you that start to make you wonder about your ability to win," he said. "If you really work hard and understand that if you keep hustling, something good is going to happen."

Falling apart

- Penn State has started a season 0-2 for the second year in a row.
- If Penn State loses Saturday, it will be the first time it will have started a season 0-3 since 1983. It was Iowa that beat them in their third game that year.
- Penn State's 131 total net yards against Wisconsin on Sept. 22 was the lowest ever of a Paterno-coached team.
- Penn State's longest drive against The Badgers on Sept. 22 was 20 yards.
- Starting quarterback Matt Sennecca has completed only four passes this season.
- The Nittany Lions ran for an average of 52 yards per game in their first two games.
- Penn State has lost to Iowa two out of the last three times the teams have met.

KINNICK STADIUM SECURITY

UI taking extra security measures

By Todd Brommelkamp
The Daily Iowan

Things will never be the same at athletics venues around the country following the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11. Iowa's Kinnick Stadium will be no different when it comes to upping its security.

Chuck Green, the director of UI Public Safety, announced expanded efforts to ensure the safety of those attending games at Kinnick Stadium at a press conference with Athletics Director Bob Bowlsby on Tuesday.

"This was a collaborative effort in reviewing our policy and coming up with a new plan to address this new reality," Green said.

The most notable of the many alterations will be the end of re-entry passes, which allow fans to leave the stadium at halftime and re-enter prior to the second half. Once a fan leaves, he or she will not be provided with any sort of pass or stamp to re-enter.

"We cannot maintain the same degree of security at the gate at halftime as at the beginning of the game," Green said, adding that after kickoff, his personnel take positions inside the stadium to monitor the crowds.

In addition to being prohibited from leaving, fans must also be aware of a much stricter policy on items carried into the stadium. Green released a new list of articles that will be considered illegal inside the confines of the stadium.

Besides the traditional contraband such as alcoholic beverages and coolers, the new list includes such items as strollers, video cameras, and personal chair backs. Some items will still be allowed such as foam seat cushions, small purses, clear bottles of sealed water, personal cameras, and binoculars, but Green said all items will be subject to search.

With all these measures being taken, Green assured fans they will not be patted down and searched unless they first raise suspicion.

"We will not be asking people to empty their pockets," he said. "But if they come through the gate and have got a big bulge in their pocket, then we might want to find out what that is."

Air space over Kinnick Stadium has also been restricted to a three-mile radius and 3,000 feet vertically in accordance with Federal Aviation Administration guidelines.

Bowlsby recommends fans arrive

The following items will not be allowed in Kinnick Stadium

- Bags of any size.
- Backpacks or "fanny-packs"
- Video cameras
- Alcoholic beverages
- Banners and signs
- Glass bottles and cans
- Botas and wine skins
- Large camera lenses
- Personal chair backs
- Tripods
- Coolers
- Thermoses
- Video cameras
- Strollers

Note: Fans are urged to arrive at the stadium at least one hour before game time.

roughly an hour prior to their usual times in order to compensate for security checks. He also urges people to follow the new guidelines and leave any restricted items at home or in their vehicles.

"There is going to be some inconvenience, and I say that regretfully," he said.

Parking near the stadium has also become a concern for Green. In the past, fans have parked in Lot 43 on the west side of the stadium on Friday evening and spent the night there. While this practice will not be eliminated, Green stressed that all vehicles must pay the parking fee and have the proper passes prominently displayed. If a vehicle does not have a pass conspicuously displayed it may be towed to another area of campus.

Both Bowlsby and Green stressed that the changes will have a positive effect on ticket-holders and are in accordance with the actions taken by many other teams in the wake of the attacks on New York and Washington.

"We have today and have always had a safe environment for our patrons to come and enjoy our football games," Bowlsby said. "I don't think any of that's going to change."

Adding to the hassle of the first-time regulations will be an increase in crowd size. Ticket sales for Iowa games have steadily risen since the team started the year 2-0, and as of Wednesday, there were approximately 5,000 tickets remaining for Saturday's game. Good weather could push attendance above the preliminary estimate of 68,000.

BIG TEN PICKS

Illinois-Michigan looks to be a thriller

Todd Brommelkamp

I thought college was supposed to be different from high school, but after four years, I still haven't managed to find a date for Homecoming. Thankfully, with no one to occupy my time other than the crew at ESPN College GameDay, I am able to focus solely on providing you with my less-than-expert insight into the Big Ten.

No. 22 Illinois at No. 17 Michigan

This may be one of the best games in the Big Ten this year.

Illinois has been surprising so far, getting off to a 3-0 start. It handled Louisville with relative ease last week, and it appears to be a very balanced football team.

Kurt Kittner threw for 301 yards against the Cardinals on offense, and Christian Moore had seven tackles and two picks on defense.

The Wolverines are 2-1 and have struggled in the Big House this season with Miami (Ohio) and once again with Western Michigan last weekend. With a young and rebuilding squad, Ann Arbor may not be the major advantage it has been in the past.

Illinois 21, Michigan 17

No. 23 Michigan State at No. 16 Northwestern

The only matchup featuring two unbeaten teams this week should be another one to keep an eye on, but I don't expect an upset.

I watched the Notre Dame game last week and was thoroughly unimpressed with the performance of the Spartans against a poor Fighting Irish team. The lone bright spot was receiver Charles Rogers, who earned Player of the Week honors after grabbing four passes for 116 yards.

Even though they have played a weak schedule so far, the Wildcats have looked good enough to merit their lofty ranking. Damien Anderson showed exactly what he can do to an under-prepared defense against Duke when he posted 250 all-purpose yards and scored four times.

Michigan State 10, Northwestern 21

No. 24 Purdue at Minnesota

Brandon Hance can almost drop the "That guy who replaced Drew Brees" tag if he keeps performing as he has Hance has thrown for 369 yards in two games and seems to have found a favorite in receiver Taylor Stubblefield.

The Boilermakers also feature a pair of solid running backs in Montrell Lowe and Joey Harris; each has more than 100 yards rushing this year.

Like Iowa, the Gophers must deal with adjustments after a two-week lay-off. So far, it doesn't look like making it to three-straight bowl games is much of a possibility for the Gophers.

The Metrodome is a tough place to play, but Purdue should be up to the task. Look for Minnesota's Glen Mason to have loosened his tie by halftime.

Purdue 27, Minnesota 9

Ohio State at Indiana

It's this week's battle of the under-achievers in beautiful Bloomington.

The Buckeyes looked like a Pop Warner League castaway after UCLA's repeated attempts to hand them a victory in the Rose Bowl failed. Steve Belisari has established himself as the most mediocre quarterback in a conference full of mediocre quarterbacks.

Still, the Buckeyes are playing the Hoosiers this weekend and could probably sleepwalk through this one provided they solve the threat Antwaan Randle El poses. Losing to Utah last weekend, coupled with the fact that they experiment with "college football's most exciting player," has to have Cam

Cameron waiting for the ax to fall.

Still, this is a big weekend for Indiana football, because the influx of crimson-clad Ohio State fans makes for a great picture on the cover of the media guide.

Ohio State 28, Indiana 21

Western Kentucky at Wisconsin

The Hilltoppers will have an awful big hill to top against the Badgers. The school's logo of a hand waving a towel may be apropos for this weekend's game.

Western Kentucky must go into Camp Randall facing a very deceptive Badger club. Wisconsin is a far cry from Kentucky State and Southwest Missouri State, the Hilltoppers' two victories this season.

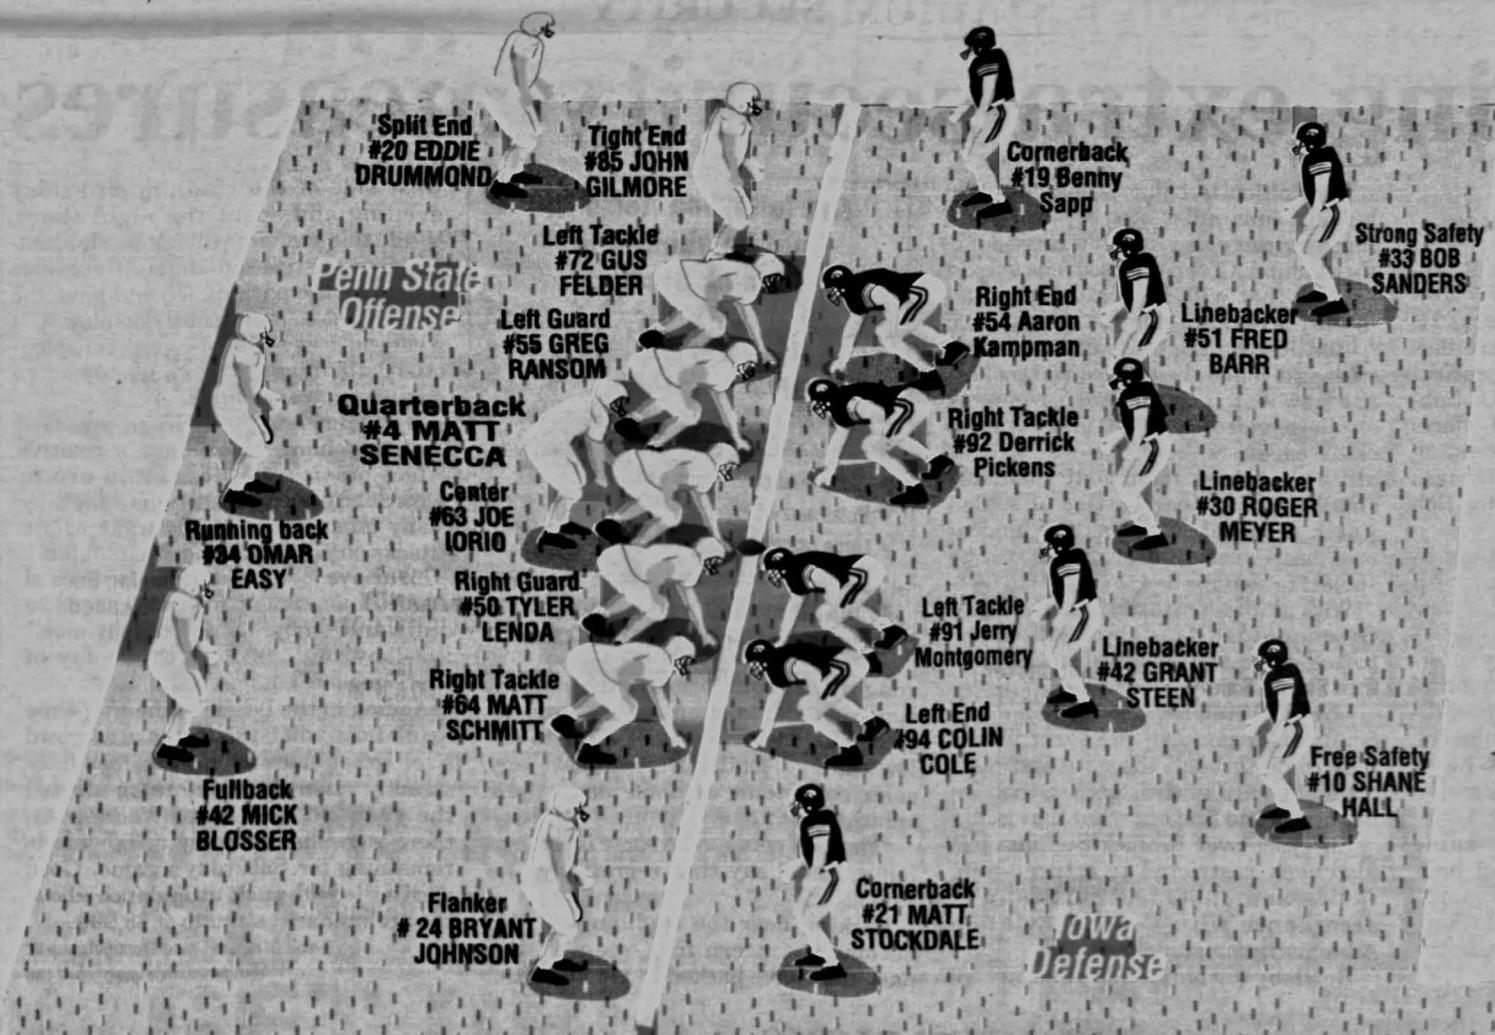

Wisconsin's two losses have come against ranked opponents in Oregon and Fresno State, and their victory over Virginia was also against a quality opponent.

The speedy Anthony Davis doesn't resemble your typical Wisconsin running back, and he's only a freshman. Davis rolled up 200 yards against Penn State a week ago, and he should come close to eclipsing that this weekend.

Wisconsin 41, Western Kentucky 7

THE MIDDLE LINEBACKERS

Splitting time

By Jeremy Schnitker
The Daily Iowan

Nobody wants to split time on the football field as a senior. After four, or even five, years of hard work, your senior year is supposed to be the one where you start and play every down.

Iowa senior middle linebackers Roger Meyer and Mike Dolezal don't have that option. They aren't alone at the top of the depth charts. They don't play every snap of a game. They split time.

Meyer starts, Dolezal gives him a breather.

But really, the two don't care all that much. Sure, they'd like to be on the field more, but they would rather put the team first.

Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz says that is what makes the two seniors so valuable to his team: They're team guys.

"I'm sure they're not both happy; one of them would like to get all the snaps, but they're just solid team guys," he said.

Meyer says splitting time isn't an ideal situation, but it's what they have to do.

"We all want to play, and we all want to go out there and start," he said. "I don't think there would be any hostility between the two of us because of playing time."

It's been a long road to get to where Meyer and Dolezal are at this season. After redshirting during their freshman seasons, the two started getting ample amounts of playing time from their sophomore years on. Yet neither has ever started an entire season. In 2000, Dolezal started Iowa's first six games before sitting out the Illinois and Ohio State games with an injury. Meyer stepped into his place, and he has started every game since.

Dolezal says he holds no grudge against the guy who took his starting spot. He's just happy that he is injury-free and playing.

"We've never let the competition interfere with our friendship," Dolezal said. "I was in his wedding this summer — we've been good friends. We realize that we both have to go out there and do the best we can."

Their best has been pretty good. Meyer, who emerged during last year's game against Northwestern, in which he had 16 tackles and was named the Big Ten's Defensive Player of the Week, tallied 95 tackles last season.

Dolezal had a career day against Nebraska in 2000, racking up 17 tackles.

So far this year, the two middle linebackers have combined for 21 tackles in Iowa's two victories.

Iowa linebackers coach Bret Bielema is not only impressed with the way Meyer and Dolezal perform on Saturdays, he says they're a joy to be around off the field.

"The best thing about those two is that they're just as much fun off the field as they are

Iowa's turn to win numbers game

Melinda Mawdsley

Penn State should beat Iowa — by the numbers.

The Nittany Lions have lost just one game in Kinnick Stadium — in 1930.

The last time Penn State opened 0-3, I was 5 years old.

Joe Paterno has more grandchildren (9) than Kirk Ferentz has head-coaching victories (6).

You get the picture? It isn't pretty in Iowa City. Penn State is a proud program with a rich tradition that usually eats Hawkeyes for a Saturday afternoon snack.

Normally, the Nittany Lions have both the numbers and the talent on their side, but this year is different. Position by position, the Hawkeyes are better, and it starts at quarterback and spills from the field over onto the sidelines. There's no question quarterback Kyle McCann can beat Penn State. He did last year.

The Nittany Lions will likely start Matt Sennecca but probably won't finish with him. Behind a banged-up, inexperienced offensive line, having little faith in the supposed offensive leader deserves a big "ugh."

But what stands out more than Iowa's superior talent on offense is the defensive difference between the two teams.

To take a quote from Sennecca himself: "They're big."

In size and ability, and you can bet the Hawkeyes' defense has been waiting years to serve as a mentor to the famed stoppers of Penn State.

Through two games, Iowa is atop the Big Ten standings on both the offensive and defensive sides of the ball. The offense is averaging nearly 48 points per game, while the defense is surrendering around 10 points per contest. The Nittany Lions are at or near the bottom in both categories.

Yeah, I know Penn State has played Wisconsin and Miami, while Iowa has played Miami of Ohio and Kent State, but the Nittany Lions have given zero indication they will avenge last year's double-overtime defeat at the hands of the Hawks.

Still, Penn State will be Iowa's biggest challenge of the year and will serve as a perfect way to kickoff the promising conference season. No team coached by Paterno can ever be counted out.

Perhaps he serves as the best indicator of Iowa's talent. Paterno has been bragging the Hawkeyes up since this summer, and the 74-year-old, two victories shy of becoming the winningest coach in Division I history, has been around a good team or 32.

Before an expected crowd of around 68,000, Iowa is looking to improve to 3-0 for the first time since 1997 — the last year it went to a bowl. Rest assured, the team isn't awed by Nittany Lion history, but it isn't willing to sign the death certificate on the program either.

"I'm not really getting sucked into this 'Woe is Penn State' thing," Ferentz said. "They've got a talented football team, and history has shown they'll bounce back."

But maybe it's the Hawks' turn to start playing, and winning, the numbers game. In 1983, when the Nittany Lions skidded to that 0-3 start, guess who handed them the third defeat?

Yes, Iowa. History lesson complete. Iowa 30, Penn State 13

tion.

The Hawkeyes are expecting the same energy on both sides and are prepared to wage a similar battle. With two weeks to rest, reflect on the Sept. 11 tragedy, and regroup for the Nittany Lions and the Big Ten season, Iowa couldn't be more ready to roll.

"With the tragedies and adversities that have been going on, there are going to be some ball clubs that are going to be able to respond to them and some that are going to fall back," Kaeding said. "It's just a point in the season where you are going to find out what type of team you are and what type of road you are going to travel."

At 0-2 with a 74-year-old, albeit feisty and healthy, Joe Paterno, Penn State appears to have been lapped by a refueled Hawkeye program.

No one on Iowa's roster is willing to entertain suggestions that the Nittany Lions are headed to the conference cellar. Looking at the opponent comparisons, it's clear Penn State has had the tougher go at it.

Miami is a national title contender. Wisconsin is a Big Ten front-runner. Iowa's opponents were hard to find on the map.

"They are going to be jacked up," Hill said. "They are trying to save their season, and we are trying to do something that we haven't done in a long time so you are going to have two emotional teams out there."

Iowa is attempting to start the season 3-0 for the first time since 1997. In Paterno's 36-year tenure as the Nittany Lions head coach, his teams have started 0-3 just once, in 1983.

The Hawkeyes are hoping to defeat Penn State in Kinnick Stadium for the first time since 1930. They are hoping the two weeks of healing and practice will be advantageous on Saturday.

"We've focused on more things in the playbook," Hill said. "It's been exciting. We had a chance to do some new things. There should be some surprises on Saturday."

on it," he said. "They're great students; they're great people. I've never had to worry about them getting a late-night phone call, getting in trouble with school.

"They just take care of business."

While both take a business-like approach to the game, their bodies are both molded about the same, and they play the same position, the comparisons could probably end there.

Outside of football, the two live completely different lifestyles.

Meyer is a married man, Dolezal is a bachelor. While Meyer is home spending time with the wife, Dolezal gets to hang out with the team a little more.

"We do have different personal lives," Meyer said. "I'm married, and I don't think he's even got a girlfriend, so he gets to spend a lot of time with the guys on the team."

Dolezal said the marriage thing has kind of hampered Meyer's time with the boys.

"Well, the ceremony may have been this summer, but he's been married for a while now," Dolezal said, laughing. "He's pretty busy with his wife, but we'll still stop by each other's apartment and stuff."

This may be the last year the two will play Iowa football, but it is likely that their presence will be felt in the years after they're gone. Ferentz said Meyer and Dolezal have done a lot to acclimate the younger guys to Iowa football.

"They play smart; they're good with younger players," Ferentz said. "They're everything you're hoping for from seniors."

Iowa sophomore defensive back Benny Sapp said Meyer has done a lot to help him along the way.

"He's always telling us stuff in the huddle; he's always telling me to keep my composure," Sapp said. "I've talked to the younger linebackers, and they'll tell me that Roger has told them a lot of things."

Dolezal says he's just passing down what the seniors taught him when he was younger.

"We're just returning the favor," he said.
