10 YEARS LATER

A decade later, memories prevail

By Megan L. Eckhardt
The Daily Iowan

It was an unseasonably warm Thursday, but some took time to recall the blustery November afternoon a decade ago when a disgruntled graduate student went on a 12-minute murder spree before taking his own life.

"Ten years is a long time for some people, but it doesn't seem like a long time to me," said Gerald Payne, a UI physics and astronomy professor who was in Van Allen Hall when the shooting began.

"When I look back on the people, I don't think about their scientific accomplishments. I think how they affected peoples' lives ... my life, how they reached out and touched people."

Payne recalled how Christoph Goertz, a physics and astronomy professor, took students to meetings and invited them to his home to have dinner; how Linhua Shan, a researcher, met new students at the airport and was always trying to help others; how Physics and Astronomy Department Chairman Dwight Nicholson assisted new students trying to make familiar an unfamiliar city.

All were gunned down in Van Allen Hall by Gang Lu, a 27-year-old doctoral student from the People's Republic of China on Nov. 1, 1991.

Lu also murdered their colleague Robert Smith, an assistant professor in the department, and T. Anne Cleary, the associate vice president of Academic Affairs. With a shot through the mouth, he paralyzed Miya Rodolfo-Sioson, who was working part-time as a secretary in Cleary's Jessup Hall office, before turning the .38 caliber revolver on himself.

Lu was angry because his doctoral dissertation wasn't nominated for an academic honor in the spring of 1991, and felt his complaints were being ignored. Goertz and Smith had nominated Linhua Shan for the award, Lu's perceived rival. Lu filed a complaint the following month. Cleary concluded the complaint had no merit.

Those that remember the tragic event gathered together at the Newman Catholic Student Center Thursday night in memory and prayer for the victims.

The congregation chorused in prayer, and a few shed tears for those lost. They

Bridges may be targets

By Leon Drouin Keith
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The FBI has alerted law-enforcement agencies in eight Western states that it has unconfirmed information that terrorists may be targeting suspension bridges on the West Coast.

The Justice Department confirmed the warning Thursday after California Gov. Gray Davis said law-enforcement officials had "credible evidence" that four California bridges, including the Golden Gate, may be the target of an attack.

The FBI, however, said in its alert that authorities had not yet corroborated the information but decided to issue a warning. The warning was sent Wednesday to law-enforcement agencies in California, Washington, Oregon, Arizona, Nevada, Utah, Montana, and Idaho.

"Reportedly, unspecified groups are targeting suspension bridges on the West Coast," the FBI said in the message. Six "incidents" were planned during rush hour between Friday and Nov. 7, the agency said.

Justice Department spokeswoman Mindy Tucker said the information that prompted the warning was "at a lower level" than what led to the FBI's general warning to Americans on Monday. "We are working to verify the validity" of the information, Tucker said.

A senior U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the threat is based on new information acquired by U.S. intelligence and law enforcement since Monday's warning. The official said a foreign Islamic terrorist group may be targeting the bridges.

Davis mentioned the warning Thursday during a news conference in which he also appointed the state's new terrorism security czar, George Vinson, a 23-year veteran of the FBI.

"The best preparation is to let terrorists know, we know what you're up to, we're ready for you," Davis said.

Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge said in a telephone interview Thursday that even though federal authorities had not publicly released the information, he would not second-guess Davis' decision to do so.

"I respect the decision Gov.

United Way adjusts to cuts

By Deidre Bello
The Daily Iowan

Local human service agencies will serve fewer substance abusers, persons with disabilities, and troubled teenagers as they grapple with a $1.2 million cut in federal and state grants, the United Way of Johnson County said Thursday.

The group released a report detailing how 17 of the county's 39 agencies will be affected by the economic downturn during a press conference Thursday as it kicked off a campaign to educate the community and examine ways to raise funds.

Officials said they anticipate deeper cuts during the coming year and agencies dealing with youth and families, substance abusers, and people with disabilities will be most affected.

"We see this as not just a one time thing," said Beverly Weber, executive director for United Way. "We see cuts as ongoing and we want to stay on top of this."

A second report on the rest of the agencies will be available in April, Weber said. Through educating the public of the struggling agencies, officials hope to attract more donations from businesses and individuals.

Department of Human Services cuts will have a ripple effect on services at the United

For Washington D.C. interns, life goes on

By Deidre Bello
The Daily Iowan

UI students interning in Washington D.C. are carrying on with their normal duties despite the nationwide anthrax panic that reportedly has some schools pulling their interns out of the nation's capital.

The nine UI students participating in the Washington Center internship program encounter police on every street corner and pass through metal detectors daily as new anthrax discoveries lead to frequent briefings about the feared bioterrorism agent.

UI senior and D.C. intern Dan Kresowic said some schools are offering their students incentives, such as full academic credit and a free plane ticket home, to prematurely abandon their internships. Texas A & M flew all of its student interns in D.C. home last week because of the anthrax scare, said UI junior Jenny Wing, who interns for a lobbyist group.

However, David Fitzgerald, a program manager at the UI Career Center, said he spoke with the Washington Center's Vice President Eugene Alpert who contends the rumors are untrue.

"The facts are troubling enough," Fitzgerald said of the anthrax findings.

Students and their parents should decide what is best for each student's safety, he said, adding that the UI does not plan to pull students out of D.C.

Approximately 360 students from across the nation are currently enrolled at the Washington Center and 90 are signed up for next semester, Kresowic said. "Being in D.C. we're at a higher risk for attacks, but I feel really safe here," said UI senior Josh Bowen, an intern in the White House executive office.

The finance major's daily routines have remained unchanged and he still opens White House mail, which is first screened at a location five miles away. But the scare has seeped outside Capitol Hill, where an anthrax-laced letter was sent to Senate

Anthrax scare spreads to Midwest

WASHINGTON — The fear of anthrax spread to the Midwest on Thursday with a preliminary finding of contamination at a Kansas City postal facility. Investigators established a link between the death of a woman in New York and more than a dozen cases of the disease elsewhere in the country.

The bacteria that killed Kathy T. Nguyen were "indistinguishable from all the others," including the strain in a letter to Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, said Dr. Steven Ostroff of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Officials said they had not yet learned how the woman became sick.

Nearly one month into America's bioterrorism scare, the threat seemed to be receding in the nation's capital as the Supreme Court reopened to employees on Friday. But New Jersey asked the Bush administration for hurry-up help in testing more than 1,000 postal facilities. It appears the state "is the front line of the anthrax attack on our nation," wrote acting Gov. Donald T. DiFrancesco.

In a cruel irony, officials said the suspected spores found in Kansas

Sports Column bouncer stabbed

By Mike Dhar
The Daily Iowan

Police are looking for a man who used a metal object from his Halloween costume to stab a bouncer at a crowded local bar early Thursday morning.

Sports Column employee James Reid suffered stab wounds to his stomach, side torso, and the back of his arms at 12:30 a.m., after a customer he was ejecting from the bar fought and stabbed him, according to police records.

Reid

Reid, a junior who plays on the Iowa men's baseball team, said he was unaware he had been stabbed until ten minutes after he had been hit, when a fellow employee noticed he was "bleeding significantly."

A Johnson County ambulance transported Reid to UI Hospitals and Clinics. Doctors told the 20-year-old that the stab wounds had penetrated muscle tissue and that he should stay inactive for a week, Reid said.

The infielder/outfielder led the Hawkeye baseball team with a .338 batting average in 29 games played last season, finishing the season with a 10-game hit streak.

Reid's assailant fled the scene immediately after the attack, moving southbound on Dubuque Street, according to police records. Witnesses described him as white, 5 feet 10 inches to 6 feet, 180 to 195 pounds, with short brown hair.

His costume consisted of white underwear over black spandex pants, a white sleeveless T-shirt, and a green helmet with two metal objects attached to it, said Iowa City police Sgt. Mike Brotherton. Witnesses also said the suspect had blood on his face when he left.

He fled the scene with a woman dressed in a cheetah costume. The woman had not been thrown out of the bar, Reid said.

Witnesses said the suspect used one of the metal objects in the stabbing, although police did not recover any weapon at the scene, Brotherton said.

Reid said he and another bouncer confronted the "heavily intoxicated" suspect when he tried to re-enter the bar after they'd already ejected him for fighting another customer.

"I told him, 'It's your choice: Either leave or stay here and get arrested,'" Reid said. "A lot of people were getting really annoyed with him."

The suspect wrestled with the two bouncers in the front corridor of the bar's south entrance as they tried to remove him, Reid said.

"It was basically a tug here and some wrestling there," he said.

"But as soon as he stabbed me, he started kicking and punching, and we self-defended."

No one chased the suspect because he fled too quickly, and employees did not realize someone had been stabbed, Reid said.

"He just took off, man," Reid said. "He knew that after he stabbed me, if he stuck around he'd be in real trouble."

The bar was exceptionally packed because of Halloween festivities, even more crowded than on a typical football weekend, Reid said, adding the crowd might have contributed to the night's events.

"That, and the full moon," he said. "It was ridiculous ... There were several fights."

COUNCIL PROFILE Fourth in a four-part series

'I thought two would be enough'

By Peter Rugg
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City Mayor Ernie Lehman has hated this town, loved it, and wanted to never run for City Council again.

"I really thought two terms would be enough and I didn't want to run again this time," he said. "But there's a few things we're working on that I want to see through."

Lehman, who is finishing out his second term on the council and is seeking a third, said he is referring to commercial land development. The council is in the process of acquiring 250 acres by the Eastern Iowa Airport and 50 acres north of the city.

Originally from northeast Ames, Lehman grew up a farmer and graduated with a class of 15 from McCausburg High. When he was 18, after spending a year at Anderson College in Indiana, both of his parents were killed in a car accident, and he moved home to take care of his younger siblings before coming to the UI.

"I hated Iowa City when I was a student," he said. "I really didn't like the place."

During his time here as a student Lehman said he rarely drank and that there wasn't as much of an alcohol problem. He was quick to point out that such problems weren't the fault of the students.

"I know a lot of people think students are a bunch of drunks, but that's not true," he said. "Mostly the problems stem from the bars. Over the years, they've gotten bigger and bigger to the point where there's no way they can control what goes on inside them. I think we've reached the saturation point."

Once Lehman graduated with a degree in political science he said his feelings toward the city changed. He decided to stay and, after working as a car salesman, he opened Enzler's Inc., 118 S. Clinton St., 32 years ago. Since then, Lehman learned to love the city.

In the 1970s he started working in local politics with positions on several planning committees. Eight years ago he decided to run for city council.

"I never thought I'd stay on this long, and I really hope this [term] will be the last one," he said. "Government has become so complicated there's no way a layperson can understand it right off. I don't care how bright anyone is or how hard they try, it would take anyone at least a year on the council to get it."

Scott Morgan/The Daily Iowan

Some council members, such as Connie Champion, praise Lehman's work.

"He has a great willingness to compromise, and he respects every decision I make, even when he disagrees with it," Champion said. "It's wonderful working with him."

Aside from commercial development, Lehman said he has a good idea of what he wants to do with his future on the council. He said he would support the smoking ordinance, only support a 21-bar ordinance as a last resort, and allow police tactics such as a knock-and-talks as long as they had good reason.

For now, he's just trying compromise between extremes.

"It's a strange situation. You hire more cops, and they raise hell. If you don't hire cops, they raise hell — and there aren't enough," he said. "When both sides are raising hell — I figure we're doing our job right."

After Memmer trial, D.A.'s office slows to regular pace

By Mike Dhar
The Daily Iowan

Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White said it will take his office two months to recover from the recent double murder trial.

"I woke up two mornings ago from a dream: I was head coach at Iowa and all my quarterbacks were injured," said the now-relaxed attorney from behind a desk stacked with papers. "So I think I've finally moved on to other things."

White said he put in 20-hour days from Labor Day until Oct. 22, the day Jonathan Memmer was found guilty of two counts of first-degree murder. He worked until 1 or 2 a.m. and rose at 4 or 5 a.m. to prepare for the case.

"When he has a case, he gets really involved," said White's wife, Betty. "I didn't get to see much of him, but I survived ... He's done this before."

His work paid off when jurors found Memmer guilty last week. The Marshalltown native was convicted in the March 1999 bludgeoning deaths of Laura Watson-Dalton and Maria Lehner, whose bodies were found in the burned remains of a South Van Buren Street apartment.

The Johnson County attorney said his office will take two months to complete up to 15 civil cases postponed by the Memmer double-murder trial.

The office significantly reshuffled responsibilities during the trial. Its 13 assistant attorneys each took on five additional cases at a time, from 10 to 15, to compensate for work normally handled by White and fellow Memmer prosecutor, Michael Brennan.

"My office was terrific," White said. "I think everybody here felt they were playing a part in the trial by picking up the workload. We did postpone some things, but I don't think in a way that caused any problems."

While White worked on the trial, assistant attorneys also provided legal advice to the Johnson County Board of Supervisors. The board hired an outside negotiator to handle the ongoing sheriff's labor negotiations partly in response to White's busy schedule.

The case had more of an effect on White than any other he's taken on, his wife said.

"I think the brutality of the case really hit him," she said. "Being the father himself of two girls, you think about those things."

Because of his intense work schedule, White even missed a few phone calls from his daughters during the trial; the women now live in Southeast Polk, Iowa, and New York, respectively.

"There's no doubt about it that the Johnson County attorney is busy," said county supervisor Terrence Neuzil. "White devoted most of his thoughts, as well as his time, to the trial."

"I'm more effective if I can see, touch, feel the case," he said. "I spent time intentionally just looking at the [crime scene] photos ... Some days I had to consciously engage in some deprogramming."

It's been difficult for people to get in touch with White lately, Neuzil said he only saw him once during the trial — at a City High football game two weeks ago. White, a City High alumnus who describes himself as a big football fan, was taking an uncharacteristic break from work that night, Neuzil said.

"He didn't seem pre-occupied with the trial at that time," Neuzil said with a laugh. "We talked about City High football."

A 'great neighborhood tavern' gets a great honor

By Vanessa Miller
The Daily Iowan

In a dimly lit one-room bar isolated on the 300 block of Market Street, blue-collar workers and tired students lean against dark red walls.

Here, as they've done for the past 62 years, regulars of George's Buffet Inc. talk about the Yankees amid rising plumes of smoke.

"We get college professors to doctors to lawyers to construction workers in here — more for a good conversation than anything else," said bartender Rick Hills as he poured a glass of golden brown ale. "It's not like we have pin ball games or anything. This place is just a good neighborhood tavern that serves burgers."

For the first time since opening in 1939, George's, 312 E. Market St., is receiving nationwide recognition for being a "great neighborhood tavern."

New York City-based Black

A LOOK BACK

Book, an arts and culture magazine with a circulation of 150,000 in 32 countries, will feature the bar in its Nov. 22 issue. George's will join the company of bars in New York City, Los Angeles, and one in Alabama as one of six great neighborhood taverns. Criteria used in selecting George's included the number of regulars at the bar, the bartender's familiarity with patrons' drink preferences, and the establishment's service.

"Basically, it just has to be a place where you can go in alone... but never feel alone," said Andrew Paine-Bradbury, Black Book associate editor.

Jason Sheftell, a writer for the 200-page quarterly, discovered George's on a trip through Iowa City and remembered its inviting appeal when he began his bar analysis.

But the nationally recognized tavern's beginnings were more rooted in food than beer.

The bar originally opened as a buffet-style restaurant by George Kanak 62 years ago and first added hamburgers and cheeseburgers to the menu when Jim Wallace took over the tavern in 1963.

"He got the idea because he noticed that all our customers would leave around six o'clock and go to the Hamburg Inn," said Hills, a 14-year veteran at George's. "Now, we get employees from the Hamburg Inn to come down to our place."

Wallace bought the business when then-owner Ed Cruz was fatally shot in 1962 after surprising a burglar at the Hamburg Inn, 214 N. Linn St., one autumn evening. The suspect was tried but never convicted because the murder weapon could not be found.

The bar changed management six times. Current owner Mike Karr started as a waiter in 1976 and took over ownership in 1991. Despite its many changes, for some loyal customers, George's remains constant in its laid-back atmosphere.

"It's just a really human place," said Jeff Neighbors, a UI chemist and George's regular. "For instance, on Sept. 11 this place was full of people hugging and crying. In times of sadness and hurt, you want a place to go where everyone knows your name, and that is what this place is all about."

CITY BRIEFS

Supervisors may reallocate jail-repair funds

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors may have to reallocate $3,300 to repair a window and doors in the county jail after already running $200,000 over budget in renovations to the facility this summer.

Construction problems at the jail, 511 S. Capitol St., during the installation of a new roof and heating and cooling system, upgrading of the air system, and removal of broken solar panels may force the board to shift money around in the jail's $683,627 repair budget.

Supervisors said the decision will be made within a week and that the repairs should be completed within two weeks.

Supervisors also agreed to renew the Detention Alternative Program, a Lutheran Social Services program. The program strictly supervises juvenile offenders instead of placing them in detention. The offenders are allowed to attend school and take part in extra-curricular activities under constant supervision.

"We saved the county around $140,000 last year," said Juvenile Court Office Supervisor Brandon Beaudry, adding that the program started in 1999 has been very successful.

Supervisors said they will officially approve the renewal at next week's formal meeting.

In continuing action, supervisors decided to send a letter to the Tiffin City Development Board explaining their denial in early October of a 42-acre annexation to the town. Supervisors denied the annexation on the basis that it was inconsistent with the city's land use plan.

Landowner Dorothy Allen, a Johnson County resident, requested a "farmstead split" from the board that would allow her to divide her property for rezoning. Allen wanted to sell her house and two acres and maintain the surrounding area as farmland.

"It simply doesn't work with our land-use plan," said Supervisor Sally Stutsman.

Allen, who was at the meeting, declined to comment.

Public Safety investigates robbery

Public Safety is on the lookout for two men who robbed an unidentified victim at knifepoint Wednesday morning on the bike path along the Iowa River south of the Fine Arts Complex.

The victim was held-up on the west side of the river near a railroad tunnel by two assailants at approximately 7:15 a.m. Public Safety said.

An undisclosed amount of money was stolen, but the victim was not harmed, said Lt. Lucy Wiederholt of UI Public Safety. Wiederholt said she didn't know the victim's gender or status as a student.

The first attacker is described as a white male, 20-23 years old, between 6 feet and 6 feet 3 inches tall, approximately 180 pounds, with dark hair, brown eyes, and clean shaven. He was wearing a dark green stocking cap, a black T-shirt, a black leather jacket with silver studs on the sleeves, and very baggy cargo jeans at the time of the robbery. A wallet chain dangled down his left leg.

The second suspect is a white male, 20-25 years old, 6 feet 5 inches tall, approximately 200 pounds, with a blond goatee and sideburns, light eyes, and a silver earring in his left ear. He was wearing a black stocking cap, a gray and black down coat, trousers, and brown hiking boots at the time of the robbery.

Neither suspect has been identified, Wiederholt said. Anyone with information regarding the robbery should contact Detective Richard Gordon at 335-5022.

listened silently to each speaker, remembering that cold fall day filled with blood, shock, and tears.

A letter from Greg Smith, whose husband studied the Northern Lights, showed how one hit very hard by the tragedy has overcome the event. But the memory prevails.

"Last night, I was standing outside looking at the sky. The night was filled with auroras. I was transported back to Iowa City, Nov. 8, 1991. That night, one week after the tragedy that changed my life, I was comforted by the Northern Lights," Smith wrote. "I have come to realize that grief is not something to get over. There is a hole in my heart that will always be there.

"I still cry." Cheryl Tugwell was paired with Shan and his wife, Yiling, in a program to help foreign families transition into Iowa City life. She has kept contact with Yiling, who lives in California and is remarried with a 2-year-old son.

"She has told me she has good memories and they sustain her," Tugwell said. "She has overcome the past and looks toward the future."

Campus Minister Jason Chen said the community should learn from the tragedy that shook the city and reverberated across the nation.

"Gang Lu's death taught us what deep-seated envy can do to a community, and that's what we can't forget," Chen said. "Unfortunately, there's a little of Gang Lu in all of us. The fact that five vibrant lives were lost 10 years ago can not be changed, but the meaning can, so their deaths won't be in vain."

City, Mo., had likely been exported from the nation's capital.

"The assumption at this point is that this is a contamination process from Brentwood," the main postal facility in Washington that has been shut down for more than a week, said Rex Archer, the Kansas City health director. The idea is that spores "settled out of the air and got on these envelopes."

The preliminary test results at a specialty postal facility — coupled with the discovery of spores at a private Indiana company — marked the first known spread of spores off the East Coast in the nation's month-long struggle with bioterrorism.

More than 170 area postal workers in the Kansas City area joined thousands of other Americans on antibiotics and local officials moved quickly to reassure the public.

The positive test results came from swabs taken on two bags of employees' trash in the first-day cancellation section of the Stamp Fulfillment Center, said Gary Stone, the facility's manager. At a news conference, he said that the affected portion of the facility had been closed and that it had its own ventilation system.

"The mail that we found and sequestered, which is where the samples tested positive, did not come through the mail stream with any letter that might end up in your home," he said.

In Florida, anthrax was found in a sixth post office, prompting local officials to speculate that more than one letter was sent to the publishing company where the bioterror campaign first appeared.

Officials disclosed the presence of a small amount of anthrax on a printer in a private mail maintenance center in Indiana on Wednesday. Peter Beering, terrorism preparedness coordinator for Indianapolis and Marion County, said the printer was among several items shipped to the firm for servicing from a contaminated mail-processing center in Trenton, N.J.

Despite the discovery of contamination in four Food and Drug Administration mailrooms in suburban Maryland during the day, officials in the nation's capital said they believed the city had weathered the worst of its own struggle with bioterrorism.

"Our mail was postponed for a while," Bowen said of his personal mail. "It takes a lot longer for mail to arrive. I can tell people

Several of the UI interns travel in and out of federal buildings, but few work directly with the mail and most say they don't fear for their safety.

UI junior Melissa Lettier works just five minutes from Davis made; he exercised his judgment," Ridge said. Federal authorities, "thought it was important enough to relate to the governor, and the governor thought it was important enough to relate to his citizens," Ridge said.

In response to the warning, Oregon Gov. John Kitzhaber ordered stepped-up police patrols of the state's most heavily traveled bridges. But he said the move was only as a precaution, and said there was no reason for motorists to avoid using the bridges.

"One of the objectives of terrorism is to terrorize people," he said. "It would be an unfortunate victory we would hand them if people simply stopped driving."

The bridges in California identified by Davis as possible targets were: the Golden Gate and Bay Bridges, both in San Francisco, the Vincent Thomas Bridge at the Port of Los Angeles, and the Coronado Bridge in San Diego.

Security around the bridges has been heightened and involves the National Guard, U.S. Coast Guard, and California Highway Patrol, he said.

The Golden Gate, a 4,200-foot-long suspension bridge, spans across the Golden Gate Strait at the entrance to San Francisco Bay. It carries some 110,000 vehicles per day. The 4½-mile long San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge carries some 270,000 vehicles daily.

"We feel we're well-prepared for any nefarious and criminal actions," said Jeff Weiss, spokesman for the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge. "We're routinely inspecting the IDs of workers ... on the bridge to assure that everyone

Action for Youth, which gives counseling and other services to young adults, said agency director Jim Swaim. That agency currently has 30 staff members, and two positions have remained open since August, he said.

The cuts will also affect the Teen Parent Program, which served 117 pregnant and parenting teens last year, he said.

"Either fewer people will be seen or fewer services will be available," Swaim said.

Grants from the U.S. Department of Human Services changed from being competitive to a process that spreads them across the board, causing agencies to struggle further, said Brian Loring, director of Neighborhood Centers of Johnson County, which provides services to children and families in three low-income areas in the county.

As a result, Loring said a grant his agency had received for six years called "Successful Families" was cut by $176,000. The grant funds after-school, childcare, and parent-enrichment programs. The prevention program, which provides after school activities to youth, was hit hardest, he said.

About 50 staff members work at the Loring's agency, which serves about 35,000 people a year. No layoffs have occurred so far but Loring said he doesn't anticipate hiring anyone.

NATION BRIEFS

Microsoft, Justice Department to give judge settlement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Microsoft Corp. and the Justice Department agreed to present a settlement of their antitrust fight to a trial judge today, but states involved in the case decided to ask for more time, people familiar with the negotiations said.

The Bush administration seemed on the brink of settling the historic case, launched under its predecessor, with wide implications for the sagging economy and technology industry that relies heavily on Microsoft products.

U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft planned a news conference for today immediately following a court hearing. It was unclear whether any officials from the states also suing Microsoft would attend.

State attorneys general who joined in the original lawsuit decided Thursday to proceed more slowly and ask U.S. District Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly for an additional four days to a week to examine the details, people close to the talks said.

Bush extends restrictions on White House records release

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush issued an order Thursday night that lets past presidents, beginning with Ronald Reagan, keep some of their White House papers private even after the 12-year wait now required by law.

Advocates for government declassification expressed disbelief. Some said the executive order would usher in a new era of government secrecy.

Some 68,000 pages of Reagan's White House records, including the vice presidential papers from President Bush's father, were supposed to have been opened in January, 12 years after Reagan left office, as provided by law. But the White House delayed the release three times to review constitutional and legal questions.

White House counsel Alberto Gonzales defended Bush's executive order Thursday but did not say when or if the Reagan papers would be opened to the public.

What's News-

In Business and Finance

Economy Shrank In Third Quarter

Economic output contracted in the third period for the first time in more than eight years.

Gross domestic product, a measure of all goods and services produced in the U.S., fell at a 0.4% annual rate, the Commerce Department said. The economy was already weak even before the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, and many economists believe it has entered a recession—generally defined as at least two consecutive quarters of contraction.

Though the GDP drop was smaller than many economists had expected, other key recent reports came in worse than expected. Consumer confidence plunged in October to its lowest level in seven years, according to the Conference Board. Until now, robust consumer spending had been enough to offset declining business spending.

And the housing market, which had been one of the economy's few remaining bright spots, showed new weakness in September. Sales of existing homes plunged nearly 12%, their biggest tumble in six years.

Travelers Bypass The Bright Lights

Wary of air travel and high-profile resorts, more Americans are vacationing in smaller, sleepier spots they can drive to.

Among the destinations seeing business surge since the terrorist attacks: Reno, Nev., a gambling mecca about four hours from San Francisco; and Saratoga Springs, N.Y., a resort town about three hours north of New York whose heyday predated the rise of jet travel.

Walt Disney Co., for one, is trying to counter the trend with a big marketing push to lure visitors to its parks. After pulling its television advertising for about three weeks after the attacks, Disney now is spending tens of millions of dollars on TV ads and placing spots in unsold slots on its ABC and ESPN networks.

Bayer Will Still Profit From Discount Cipro

Under pressure from the U.S. government to cut its prices, Bayer Corp. announced what it termed a "historic" accord last week to sell the government Cipro, the anthrax-fighting antibiotic, for 95 cents a pill. But generic makers and critics say the pact is still enormously profitable.

Ranbaxy Inc., a generic-drug maker in Princeton, N.J., has offered to sell the pill for 40 cents apiece in the U.S., "and we'd still be making money at that price," said Dipack Chattaraj, Ranbaxy's president. Ranbaxy's parent company, based in India, sells a generic form of Cipro there for about 30 cents a pill. "It's a very easy product to make," Mr. Chattaraj said.

A Bayer spokeswoman declined to comment on the company's costs and pricing on Cipro. Helge Wehmeier, president and CEO of Bayer Corp., the U.S. subsidiary of Germany's Bayer AG, said in a statement, "Bayer is fully committed to supporting America in its war on bioterrorism."

Cipro's wholesale price in the U.S. averages $4.67 a pill. Bayer normally sells it to the U.S. government for $1.77 a pill.

Intel's Moore Gives Caltech $600 Million

In the largest donation ever to a university, Gordon Moore, co-founder of Intel Corp., and his wife, Betty, are giving $600 million to the California Institute of Technology.

Sony Uses PlayStation To Boost PS2 Sales

Sony Corp.'s PlayStation franchise will soon face competition from Nintendo Co.'s Gamecube and Microsoft Corp.'s Xbox, the software giant's first foray into the video-game industry. Sony's response: Use the original PlayStation, a technological dinosaur, to grab more of the lower end of the market, where Nintendo's handheld Game Boy reigns. The strategy aims to ensure consumer loyalty to PS2, the PlayStation's popular successor.

Sony plans to release a portable version of PlayStation along with a slew of new kids' games, including one based on the wildly popular "Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone" book and movie of the same name. The film is scheduled for release on Nov. 16.

For Windows XP, No Sudden Impact

Microsoft held a splashy introduction for its Windows XP software, but analysts said the product probably won't provide much of a kick to the moribund PC industry, at least not right away.

And although the program does promise greater reliability than its predecessors and lots of snazzy new features, some critics say its links to other Microsoft services are designed to help the company dominate the Internet, just as it now controls the computer desktop.

Dell Computer Corp., meanwhile, which used custom-made PCs to rocket to the top of the PC market, introduced a prebuilt PC called the SmartStep, designed to compete with off-the-shelf models sold in chain stores.

GM Agrees to Sell Hughes to EchoStar

General Motors Corp. agreed to sell its Hughes Electronics Corp. subsidiary, including the DirecTV business, to EchoStar Communications Corp., the owner of the Dish Network Service. The $25.8 billion deal, which came after News Corp. withdrew its offer, would join the nation's two biggest satellite-TV companies. Because of that, it is almost certain to face intense regulatory scrutiny.

Delays at the Baggage Scanner

State-of-the-Art Machines Are Slow, Inaccurate; Frustrates Trip Alarms

By ELLIOT SPAGAT

Security experts, worried travelers and government officials are imploring airlines to scan checked baggage for bombs now that suicidal terrorists have struck domestically. But will airlines do that? Not likely.

Fewer than 150 sophisticated luggage-scanning machines capable of detecting bombs and plastic explosives were scattered at 47 U.S. airports at the end of September. Even though the Federal Aviation Administration paid for them—at a cost of about $1 million apiece—airlines complain that they are slow, cumbersome to operate and notorious for sounding false alarms.

L-3 Communications Holdings Inc., one of only two companies certified by the FAA to make the explosive-scanning machines, says false alarms sound for only about 22 of every 100 bags. But that rate that would create chaos if each one of those pieces of luggage had to be opened and searched. The other certified company, InVision Technologies Inc., has a similar rate. The problem is that the machines look for things that are dense, meaning that that shoes, pots and even fruitcakes can set off alarms.

Early Days

"We're dealing with first-generation, first-generation-and-a-half, equipment," says Dick Doubrava, managing director of security for the Air Transport Association, a trade group for major airlines. The airlines refer questions on security matters to the group instead of discussing them themselves.

A scan of a suitcase shows the relative density of objects in the bag.

▲ InVision's CTX5500 can handle up to 384 bags an hour. It is 14 1/2 feet long and weighs 9,350 pounds.

In addition, the scanners, which slice and dice suspicious objects into hundreds of pictures, like a hospital CT scan, can each handle only about one plane load of luggage an hour, about 150 bags. With an estimated one billion bags checked each year at U.S. airports, airlines fear a logistical nightmare unless the machines run faster and more accurately.

What's more, the machines are so big—the fastest one is nearly 16 feet long—that it is hard to find floor space for them in crowded terminals or cramped baggage rooms.

Airlines have other scanning technology at their disposal, including the X-ray machines used to check all carry-on luggage. Those cheaper scanners can handle more bags and are good at spotting metal, but they are not designed to detect sophisticated explosives. Israel, known for its strict security procedures, uses the sophisticated scanners.

Airlines have come under criticism for failing to use the machines even after the FAA buys them. The Transportation Department found that airlines screened on average only 350 bags a day in July, far less than the equipment is capable of handling. Even if the FAA supplied hundreds more machines to expand screening to all domestic flights, aviation experts say the process would bring maddening waits for passengers.

With so many glitches, the FAA planned to wait until 2009 to begin phasing in requirements for airlines to scan all checked bags for explosives at U.S. airports. When the suicide hijackings that destroyed the World Trade Center and damaged the Pentagon spurred calls for a much faster pace, FAA Administrator Jane Garvey said the agency could move the date up to 2004.

"Completely unacceptable," said Philadelphia Mayor John Street after she announced the accelerated timetable at a conference of mayors last week.

Similarly, consumer advocates are dismayed by the lack of progress since Pan Am Flight 103 blew up over Lockerbie, Scotland, in 1988, the result of a plastic explosive in a bag. Paul Hudson, executive director of the Aviation Consumer Action Project in Washington, D.C., says the government and airlines simply haven't wanted to spend money.

Before Sept. 11, the FAA required only that airlines scan bags of domestic passengers whose reservation information posed security questions, estimated at 3% to 5% of all travelers, according to Transportation Department Inspector General Kenneth Mead. Using their computer systems, airlines flagged suspicious activity using closely guarded criteria, such as a passenger's travel history and how a ticket was purchased, and set aside suspect bags for scanning. But since Sept. 11, the FAA has begun requiring airlines that have advanced scanners to use them continuously, not just to check luggage of suspicious passengers.

Ramping Up

InVision, which made nearly all of the 142 explosives scanners in use at 47 U.S. airports as of the end of September, was producing four machines a month before Sept. 11. The company says it can ramp up to as many as 50 a month if it moves to round-the-clock production. L-3 was making two to four machines a month before Sept. 11 and says that in six months it can step up production to 35 to 40 a month.

To ensure competition, Congress has required the FAA to buy the same number of machines from InVision as from L-3. But the L-3 machines have been plagued with questions about bugs.

An L-3 machine at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport "had operational problems from the day it was installed in the spring 2000," Mr. Mead told Congress recently. Between July 2000 and July 2001, it needed to be repaired every 84 hours on average, with more than six hours needed to fix it. Joseph Paresi, who heads L-3's security-systems division, says the scanner's performance has since improved and notes Mr. Mead's findings were limited to one airport. InVision says it ran into the same kinds of problems as L-3 when it began introducing machines in the mid-1990s.

Americans Back Off TV News

By SALLY BEATTY

No news isn't good news, but for some people it might be a good idea for a while.

A month after terrorist attacks sent Americans scrambling to their TV sets, some once-avid TV news viewers are tuning out. Doctors and psychiatrists say there is anecdotal evidence that news-media overload is becoming an increasingly common complaint, what with the constant flow of scary developments and myriad news channels now available.

Researchers who study the way Americans consume media say people are on emotional overload. Those pulling back from TV news "still want major developments and they want to have programming interrupted if there are major events that warrant that," says Steve Ridge, an executive with Frank Magid Associates, a media-research and consulting firm in Marion, Iowa. "Once they have an update, they're seeking TV that is going to entertain, relax and amuse them."

On Oct. 19, the American Psychiatric Association issued 10 guidelines for coping with "bioterrorism anxiety." No. 2 on the list: Stop watching so much TV news. (The No. 1 tip: educate yourself, since "facts are frequently less frightening than rumors and myth.")

"If television or other news reports significantly increase feelings of anxiety and helplessness, don't watch or read them," the APA urged.

Nielsen figures show daytime TV viewership fell to about 29 million homes the week of Oct. 14, down nearly 20% from the week beginning Sept. 9, when an average of 36 million TV homes were watching TV, but still above the roughly 27 million homes watching TV at the same time the year before.

The media fatigue some are feeling is a relatively new phenomenon. The last time the U.S. was at war, in 1991, the explosion of media outlets hadn't happened yet. In 1991, CNN and its sister channel Headline News, both part of AOL Time Warner Inc., were available in less than 60 million homes, compared with more than 80 million homes today.

CNN's war coverage sparked a boom in new TV channels and networks. In 1996, NBC and Microsoft Corp. launched the news channel MSNBC, while News Corp. started the Fox News Channel. News media also took their first steps onto the Internet in the mid-1990s.

An academic overhaul

It's nearing that time of the semester when students must once again trudge to their advisers' offices for the requisite pre-registration meeting. Advisers are rarely able to provide students with any real direction on their college journey. These meetings are generally superfluous; students are handed registration numbers — which could easily be distributed on ISIS — and sent away to vie for classes.

Such unnecessary proceedings underline an important truth about the University of Iowa: You can get a great education here, but you can depend on no one but yourself to plan it. This is not because of the university's size. At the University of Wisconsin-Madison, for example, freshmen go through a carefully outlined set of criteria designed to aid them in choosing their majors. First, students find their "personality type" (or types) using the Holland Classification System, which defines six broad types, such as "Realistic: People who enjoy or do well in technical, physical, mechanical, or outdoor activities." Based on the types with which they identify, students discover a corresponding list of departments and majors. For example, Agricultural Engineering is considered a good major for Realistic, Investigative, and Conventional types. Further, students can read about career options based on those standards.

Freshmen are assigned general advisers who help guide young students through registration, but each of these "advisers" has as many as 350 students to worry about.

Certainly, this is not a perfect system. But it's better than the UI's freshman-orientation program, wherein new students are essentially handed a list of courses from which they must plan their schedules and try to graduate in four years.

Although freshmen at the UI are assigned general advisers who are helpful at guiding young students through the perils of registration, each of these "advisers" has as many as 350 students to worry about. Clearly, this does not allow general advisers time to develop strong, personal relationships with their students. Even after students are assigned advisers in their departments, they rarely maintain significant relationships with them. Like the students they are charged with aiding, the advisers are busy people.

The UI academic advising system needs an overhaul, which, among other changes, should encourage peer advising and do away with extraneous add/drop signature requirements. Until this happens, students must realize that they are their own best advisers.

Dangerous legislation

The reports of the first casualties of America's War on Terrorism have started coming back from Afghanistan, but just last week, there was a quiet battle in Washington that ended in the assassination of the Bill of Rights.

In a stunning show of support for the Bush Administration, the Senate passed the Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism act, or USA PATRIOT act. Giving sweeping power to law enforcement to investigate and obstruct possible terrorists, the PATRIOT act passed both houses of Congress by large margins. In the Senate, it passed by an astonishing 98-1 vote, with Russell Feingold, D-Wis., as the sole dissenter. The PATRIOT act is a dangerous piece of legislation passed during a time of fear. In the long run, it could have disastrous consequences for civil liberties.

The PATRIOT act is only the latest in a long line of reactionary blunders committed by the government during times of crisis. During the Civil War, Abraham Lincoln suspended the writ of habeas corpus, thereby making it legal to arrest political dissidents and toss them in jail indefinitely. During World War I, Congress passed the now infamous Sedition Act, which made it a crime to criticize the government. During World War II, Japanese-Americans were rounded up and placed into internment camps because of their suspected disloyalty to the war effort. In all these cases, the civil rights of the minority seemed a small price to pay for public safety.

In the long run, the PATRIOT act could have disastrous consequences for civil liberties.

In hindsight, it is obvious that during these times of crisis, we were ready and willing to sacrifice exactly what we were supposed to be fighting for. Freedom has always been the first casualty when the United States goes to war.

Interestingly, it seems as though Congress knew it was passing a questionable law.

Included in the bill was a "sunset clause" that calls for re-evaluation of the act in the year 2006. If the new powers have been used unreasonably, Congress is supposed to recognize its mistake and repeal the new laws. Perhaps instead of simply rubber stamping the president's proposal, Congress could have seriously pondered the long-term effects. The addition of this "sunset clause" is tacit admission to the fact that this bill is simply a ploy to quiet the fears of the American people. There is no proof that the powers granted by the PATRIOT act could have prevented the horrors of Sept. 11, but there is plenty of reason to be afraid that the intrusion of the government into our private lives could bring even more horror.

With the passage of the PATRIOT act, members of Congress have shown that they do not care about freedom, only about national security. We have taken the first step down a dark road that ends in tyranny and oppression. When that day comes, and every telephone is tapped and every e-mail secretly intercepted, we will have two kinds of terrorists: those who break the law, and those who make the law.

Stepping Up with BUDS!

America drinks and goes home.

— Frank Zappa

The University of Iowa is among 10 universities across the country participating in the "Stepping Up Project," the express purpose of which is to reduce binge drinking through its support of alternative activities such as the UI student-subsidized "Planet X Family Fun Center." And yet the downtown Iowa City economy has more taverns per acre than almost any other city in the Midwest. Indeed, alcohol is big business locally and nationally, and with the endless barrage of cultural cues from family and peers, reinforced with billions of dollars spent yearly on advertising by the alcohol industry, it is no wonder that many young people regard alcohol consumption as a "sexy," fun-filled pastime.

The down side of this is that young adults are confronted with two sets of conflicting social signals that are bound to leave them in a quandary. Fortunately, a new program to promote responsible drinking on college campuses across the country has been developed. This program is a more realistic and economical approach that college administrators, students, and bar-owners will immediately recognize as sensible, appealing, non-contradictory, and — gosh darn-it — just plain fun! Introducing the "Belly Up - Don't Spill" project (BUDS!). Made possible through a combined $950,000 grant from Seagrams Inc. and the W.C. Fields Foundation for Alcohol Conservation, BUDS! is the responsible way to approach alcohol consumption by young people in the modern college environment.

Each year in Iowa City and college cities across the country, thousands of gallons of perfectly good alcoholic beverage product are wasted through unrefined drinking regimens of college students. Alcohol ends up on the face, neck, even the shoulders of young people who miss their mouths or slobber excessively on themselves because they suffer from Faulty Imbibing Syndrome (FIS). Worse, alcohol is sometimes spilt outright on the floor from containers carelessly wielded by FIS sufferers. The Belly Up-Don't Spill project coordinators understand that peer pressure and advertiser-driven consumer culture make it nearly impossible for many students to stop drinking once they've started, and that, in these times of state budget cuts and economic hardship, FIS-related alcohol spillage can adversely affect students' personal finances.

BUDS! is here to make the difference. Studies indicate that when students practice "bellying up" to the bar and pay closer attention to their consumption practices, they tend to spend less money and enjoy their recreational time more. That's also why BUDS! is so very important to a working class university like the UI, where students must exercise thrift but also demand entertaining and enriching social activities. Remember, less spillage equals more money in your pocketbook!

Here's how it works. BUDS! counselors will be dispatched to every popular bar in town, teaching student drinkers the proper techniques of bellying up to the bar, ordering, and handling one's favorite drinks in such a way as to get the most out of every drop: Once you have safely "bellyed up" and your drink order has been successfully consummated, lift the drink to your lips, open your mouth slightly, and tip the container 15 to 20 degrees. Return the drink to the bar. Carefully repeat this action as necessary, each time increasing the number of degrees you tilt the container. Remember — no dribble! (If you smoke, exercise care in positioning your ashtray a safe and reasonable distance from the alcoholic beverage.)

After repeating this activity several times and the container yields no more liquid, carefully put the container to your lips, open your mouth, and tilt your head back while giving the container one last turn of 150 to 180 degrees. Return the glass to the bar.

There. You did it. High-fives all the way around. You're a BUDS! achiever! It is now time to order another drink and do it all over again. A few more hours of this and you'll be ready for some square dancin' at Planet X. Tavern owners will immediately recognize the incredible sense the BUDS! program makes.

In addition to its catchy, consumer-friendly acronym, the BUDS! emphasis on responsible approaches to reduced spillage means less clean up for proprietors and their staffs at the end of each night. The BUDS! program saves students money. UI administrators' endorsement of BUDS! will allow them to say that they are addressing irresponsible alcohol consumption like never before. W.C. Fields would be proud.

With BUDS! everyone's a winner. Let's stamp out FIS together. Make the BUDS! commitment today: Say "No" to waste and "Yes" to responsible drinking with BUDS!

The House acted for weeks enacting a package of measures aimed at Americans' confidence after terrorists' Sept. 11 attacks into weeks.

Airport security bill passes

By Jim Abrams
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House passed aviation security legislation Thursday after rejecting a Senate version that would have turned airport screening operations over to federal employees. The vote was a major victory for the White House and its Republican allies.

The bill, which takes steps to make airplanes and airports safer from attack passed, 286-139.

It followed after a crucial 218-214 vote to defeat the Senate-passed, Democratic-backed alternative. The Republican-backed bill would allow screening to be contracted out to private employers.

"The American people deserve tough security standards and the House plan delivers," President Bush said in a statement. "I urge the House and Senate to work together to send a strong and effective bill to my desk."

The House action could delay for weeks enacting a wide-ranging package of new security measures aimed at restoring Americans' confidence in flying after terrorists hijacked four airliners Sept. 11 and turned them into weapons of mass destruction. Lawmakers now face the task of trying to find a compromise with the Senate, which voted 100-0 three weeks ago to pass the measure making screeners federal employees.

"My greatest fear is that if it goes to a conference, it never comes out," House Democratic leader Dick Gephardt said earlier Thursday.

Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., a key sponsor of the Senate bill, said he expected the Senate to stand by its emphasis on federal screeners and "fight to restore these important security measures."

Bush met GOP lawmakers Thursday morning and made calls throughout the day trying to win over the last undecided members. "I want every mom and dad who gets on an airplane to feel safe," he said. In the end, eight Republicans voted for the Senate bill while six Democrats voted against it.

The Republican bill puts the government in control of the training and supervision of airport baggage screeners but allows the president to decide whether screeners should be public servants or private employees.

GOP conservatives strongly resisted the formation of a new federal work force of some 28,000 people. Rep. John Mica, R-Fla., a chief sponsor of the Republican bill, said he was determined not to "create the biggest bureaucracy in the history of a generation."

Democrats asserted that the current system, in which airlines contract out security functions to private companies, has failed to provide air travelers with adequate security and that screening must become a law enforcement operation.

"Do you want to contract out the Capitol Police?" Gephardt asked his colleagues. "Do you want to contract out the U.S. Marines? If it is good enough for us, it is good enough for the American people."

Special forces 'cocked and ready'

By Robert Burns
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The United States is urgently working to land hundreds more clandestine warriors in Afghanistan to intensify pressure on the Taliban, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said Thursday.

Rumsfeld said the extra troops are crucial to U.S. efforts to improve the bombing campaign by pinpointing targets and coordinating with opposition forces. He mentioned no specific number but said he hoped for a three- or four-fold increase from the current number, which is between 100 and 200.

"We have a number of teams cocked and ready to go," he told a Pentagon news conference on the 26th day of U.S. bombing. "It's just a matter of having the right kind of equipment to get them there in the landing zones ... where it's possible to get in and get out, and we expect that to happen."

He said the plan includes placing U.S. troops with a wider ring of rebel forces, in both northern and southern Afghanistan. The United States also is supplying rebels with ammunition and arms "as fast as we can," once liaison forces make sure the supplies will be used and not sold, he said.

Rumsfeld revealed that one recent attempt to land U.S. special operations troops was called off after the helicopter-borne troops encountered ground fire, presumably from the Taliban militia. The Taliban control most of Afghanistan and are harboring Osama bin Laden and his Al-Qaeda network.

Other landing teams have been thwarted by bad weather, Rumsfeld said.

He announced he will visit countries on the periphery of Afghanistan this weekend after meeting with his Russian counterpart, Sergei Ivanov, in Moscow on Saturday. He declined to identify the other countries he would visit, saying meeting plans had yet to be worked out. Before the U.S. bombing campaign began Oct. 7 he visited Uzbekistan, Egypt, Oman, and Saudi Arabia.

Rumsfeld on Tuesday had confirmed for the first time that a small number of U.S. special operations forces were inside Afghanistan to help designate targets for U.S. warplanes and to act as liaison with the Northern Alliance of opposition forces who seek to oust the Taliban.

The number of such special troops in Afghanistan apparently is between 100 and 200. The Pentagon has been reluctant to provide specific numbers out of concern for security.

"I'd like to see as soon as humanly possible the number of teams go up by three or four times," Rumsfeld said. He said the present number was "nowhere near as many as we need."

"We're going to be adding people, to have a reasonable cluster of American special forces who are able to be in there, serve as liaison, assist with the communication, assist with the targeting, assist with the resupply," he added.

NATION BRIEF

Consumer spending is lowest in 15 years

The National Association of Purchasing Management said manufacturing activity sank to 39.8 from 47 in September, the 15th consecutive month of decline. An index above 50

Manufacturers have been hardest hit by the economic slump. To cope with sagging sales, factories have sharply cut production and slashed 1.1 million workers from payrolls in the last 14 months.

The latest batch of economic news released Thursday showed that the damage inflicted by the attacks was worse than many analysts had expected. Economists believe the economic picture is likely to get worse before it gets better.

The V.S. NAIPUL reading scheduled for Nov. 4 has been canceled. His latest work, HALF A LIFE, will be reviewed next week.

A ghastly ghost film scares no one

Film: 13 Ghosts
Director: Steve Beck
Writer: Neal Marshall Stevens
Starring: F. Murray Abraham, Tony Shaloub, Shannon Elizabeth, and Matthew Lillard
Length: 89 minutes
Rated: R

In defense of 13 Ghosts, it's not the worst supernatural horror film in recent memory. That dubious honor still goes to Lost Souls, last year's utterly unwatchable Winona Ryder/Ben Chaplin fiasco.

However, 13 Ghosts isn't far behind. It's hard for a horror film to be effective when it's not scary in the least. Despite its legion of meticulously done-up ghouls and a lavish, often captivating mansion for them to haunt, 13 Ghosts wouldn't even move a viewer to raise an eyebrow, let alone jump out of her or his seat.

Just in case you do go to see this movie, be advised that a major problem will arise in the film's opening scene, when you'll grow impatient with the angry ghosts and want to jump on screen and kill the sniveling Matthew Lillard yourself.

Things get worse when Lillard escapes the scene unscathed.

This tedious prelude sets up the story of Arthur Kriticos (Tony Shaloub), a math teacher struggling to support his two children (Shannon Elizabeth and Alec Roberts), who inherits an ornate, modernistic mansion from his deceased, eccentric uncle (F. Murray Abraham).

Upon unlocking the front door, Arthur quickly learns that the house is actually a giant, mechanical holding tank for his uncle's collection of ghostly spirits, and that he must save his children from the ghouls he has unwittingly set free.

The house itself is the only mildly interesting part of the movie. On the floor of the mansion's main room, a series of concentric wheels spin, directing the movement of the house's sliding glass walls, which reveal secret passages and dictate the release of the ghosts trapped in the basement.

But once you absorb the interesting concept of house as machine, there's not much else to hold your attention. The film's moments of "suspense" consist of one chase-down-a-dark-hallway after another, all of which look exactly the same in the house's nondescript glass hallways.

The movie's most pathetic suspense device is the "spectral viewers," a pair of glasses that allow the wearer to see ghosts. 13 Ghosts repeatedly lifts the clichéd horror film scene in which a helpless onlooker watches her or his friend get killed, forcing characters to "spectral view" in agony as a ghost only they can see rips their counterpart to shreds.

In an effort to invest 13 Ghosts with some narrative weight, the film reveals that the captive ghosts represent signs of the black zodiac, people who suffered certain horrific deaths. This twist could have led to the development of some potentially frightening and interesting characters.

Instead, 13 Ghosts all but ignores its namesakes, showing the walking deceased in brief bursts, wasting the impressive makeup work done by Howard Berger and Victoria Down.

For a film whose previews call attention to its violent and sexual content, 13 Ghosts is surprisingly tame. A few more open wounds and splattered blood would have at least elevated the film from a tangled mess of mythology and supernatural phenomena to an unpretentious gory spectacle. The only thing horrific about 13 Ghosts is its utter lack of everything that makes a horror film fun.

Radiohead voted world's best band

LONDON (AP) — Moody rockers Radiohead were voted the world's best band at the annual Q music awards Monday.

The band — which topped both British and U.S. charts last year with its Grammy-winning album Kid A — beat REM, U2, and British bands Manic Street Preachers, Stereophonics, and Travis to take the prize, chosen by readers of Britain's Q magazine.

Past Q awards ceremonies, held at London's expensive Park Lane hotel, have seen boisterous behavior by some attendees. But this year, the present-day chart-toppers were upstaged by John Lydon — formerly Johnny Rotten of the Sex Pistols — who received the "inspiration" award for his influence on music.

Lydon — who arrived at the hotel in a horse and cart and with his trademark shock of hair dyed orange and black — accepted his award in stalwart punk fashion.

"Who wants this?" the 45-year-old punk pioneer asked the audience. "Because it doesn't mean anything to me."

Snoop Dogg signs to MCA, brings Doggy Style

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Rapper and actor Snoop Dogg has signed with MCA Records.

The signing also brings Snoop Dogg's Doggy Style Records — which includes artists La Toiya Williams, Soopafly and E-White — into MCA's fold for marketing and distribution.

"Snoop is not just a legendary hip-hop artist; he's become a celebrity with his acting, relentless touring, and discovery of new talent," MCA Records President Jay Boberg said Monday. "We are extremely fortunate and thrilled to enter into this partnership with him and the Doggy Style family."

The 30-year-old Snoop Dogg, also was pleased.

"This partnership joins the highest caliber of creative talent and business ability," he said. "Doggy Style will change the face of urban music. We're ready to unleash the best artists I know with MCA."

Besides releasing albums, the deal includes the production of companion films starring each of Doggy Style's artists.

IOWA 116, ILLINOIS ALL-STARS 68

Almost too easy

Iowa took care of business in its first game of the season — even if it was an exhibition

By Tyler Lechtenberg
 The Daily Iowan

The Iowa men's basketball team kicked off the season in style Thursday, obliterating the Illinois All-Stars, 116-68.

The game was only an exhibition, but Iowa coach Steve Alford was satisfied with what he saw on the Carver-Hawkeye Arena floor.

"I thought we guarded; I thought we created," he said. "In a game where we had little to no emphasis offensively, we scored 116 points and shot 57 percent from the field."

Iowa's duo of Reggie Evans and Luke Recker led the Hawkeyes with a combined 43 points. Evans scored 22 points and grabbed 11 rebounds, while Recker scored 21.

Other Hawkeyes contributed solid nights in Iowa's first competitive contest of the year. Starting point guard Pierre Pierce, a true freshman, scored 14 points and dished out 6 assists. Forward Glen Worley and guard Chauncey Leslie added 14 and 13 points apiece off the bench, respectively.

The Hawkeyes controlled the game from the opening tip, when Duez Henderson found Recker streaking down the court for a lay-up and a quick, 2-0 lead.

From there the Hawkeyes jumped ahead 12-2, and never looked back.

Defense was a key for the Hawkeyes in the victory; more than nine minutes passed before the All-Stars cracked into double digits on a lay-up by former Illinois State player Rico Hill.

Iowa maintained a big lead in the first half, leading 57-31 at the break.

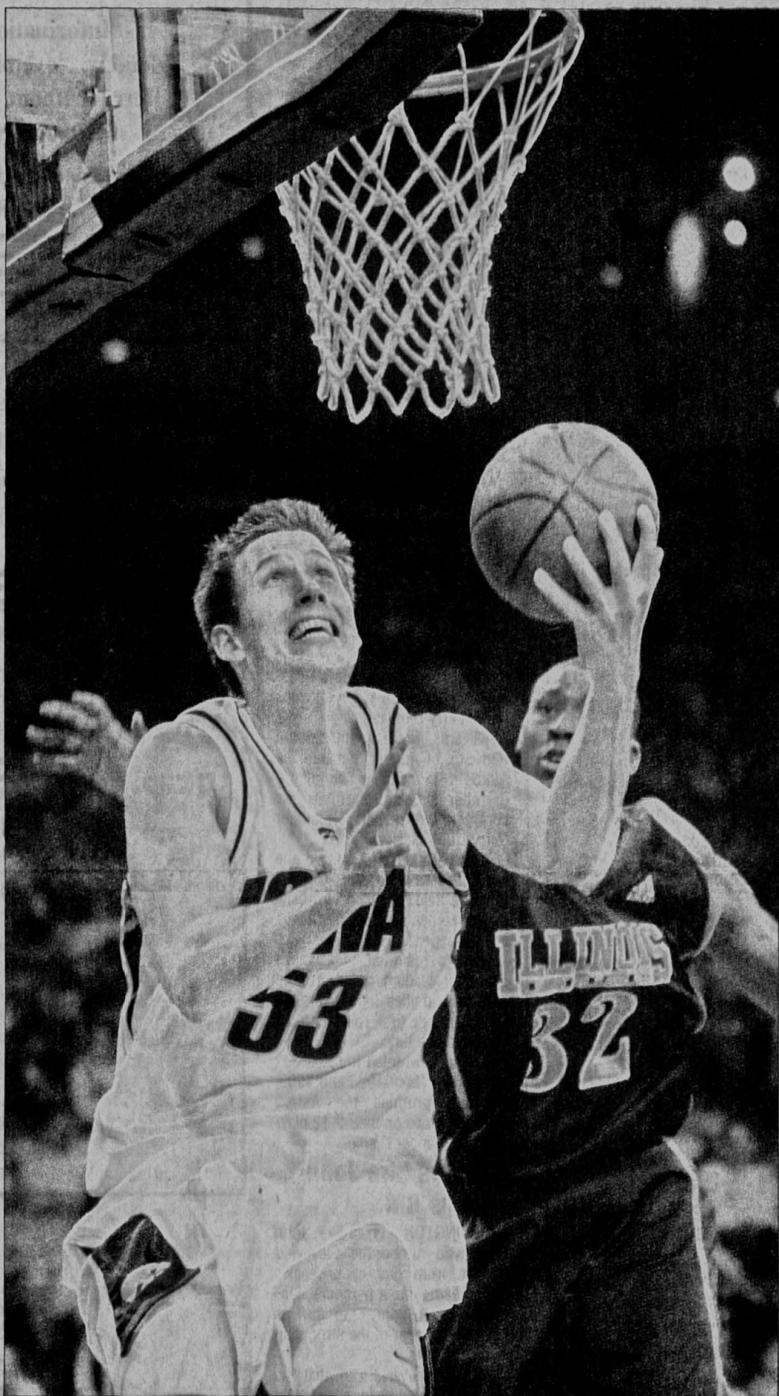

Evans and Recker combined for 30 points in the first half to lead the Hawkeyes in scoring with 16 and 14 points, respectively. As a team, the Hawkeyes shot a blistering 63 percent from the floor.

The story stayed the same after intermission, with the Hawkeyes outscoring the All-Stars, 59-37.

The half started out in lackluster fashion, but a Recker-to-Pierce alley-oop six minutes into the half got things rolling once more for the Hawkeyes and brought the crowd to its feet. On the next possession Pierce returned the favor, setting up a Recker 3-pointer that doubled up Iowa's lead over the All-Stars, 70-35.

From there, Iowa coasted to a 116-68 victory playing mainly its second unit. Iowa outrebounded the All-Stars, 54-29, and out-shot the visitors 57 percent to 34 percent.

With defensive questions heading into the contest, Alford said after the game he was satisfied with his team's effort as a whole but that there was still room for improvement.

"We're not nearly nasty enough," he said. "We had a four minute stretch where we gave them no points — that's nasty."

Of the many good performances for Iowa, it was Pierce who impressed his teammates the most. In addition to his scoring and passing prowess, Pierce took care of the ball as well, committing only one turnover in 26 minutes of play.

"He didn't have that many turnovers, he brought the ball up, and that's exactly what coach wanted us to do," center Sean Sonderleiter said. "He looks like he's not even a freshman; he looks like he's been doing this for a couple of years."

The only Iowa players not to see action Thursday were freshmen Erik Hansen and Marcellus Sommerville, who dressed but did not play, and sophomores Brody Boyd and Courtney Scott, who were in street clothes.

Iowa is in action again on Nov. 7, when they take on the Harlem Globetrotters at 7 p.m. in Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

Yankees win second thriller

By Josh Dubow
 Associated Press

NEW YORK — Scott Brosius must have learned something from watching Tino Martinez.

Brosius matched his teammate's feat from the night before, hitting a game-tying homer with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning as the New York Yankees beat the Arizona Diamondbacks 3-2 in 12 innings in Game 5 Thursday.

"I did get goose bumps," Brosius said. "This is a World Series game. It's fun to hang around these guys who are getting the big hits. I'm just hanging on the coattails."

He did more than that, once again saving the Yankees from going on the brink of elimination in the World Series with his homer off Arizona closer Byung-Hyun Kim. New York now heads back to the desert up 3-2 after Alfonso Soriano's winning hit.

Before Wednesday, there had been just three homers that tied or won a Series game with two outs in the bottom of the ninth. So the Yankees just went out and did it on consecutive nights.

That's the kind of run it's been for New York, winning four titles in five years under Joe Torre.

New York's bats have been unable to solve the Diamondbacks' pitching staff, except for

GAME PREVIEW

Ferentz intends to utilize defense

By Melinda Mawdsley
 The Daily Iowan

Last year's match-up against Wisconsin went into the record books as just another defeat, but it lingers in the mind of Kirk Ferentz as the turning point of all he's trying to accomplish.

"It was the first time we played Big Ten defense," the Iowa football coach said about the 13-7 loss.

And the Hawkeyes never looked back, going on to win two of their final three games of 2000, establishing some defensive prowess that has carried over in resounding fashion halfway through the 2001 campaign.

Sitting at 4-3 overall and 2-3 in the conference, Iowa is disappointed because it hasn't capitalized on the play of its defense. Last year's weakest link is now turning opponents'

Hawkeyes travel to Big Ten Tourney

By Roseanna Smith
 The Daily Iowan

Oct. 26 is a day the Iowa field hockey team would like to forget.

The 2-1 loss to No. 5 Michigan State left the Hawkeyes a little frazzled and a lot frustrated.

But the Iowa squad won't be walking onto Northwestern's field at the Big Ten Tournament this weekend without positive thinking.

"We've got to use it as momentum to go into the tournament," junior Tiffany Leister said. "We're still getting better and better. We have nothing to hold our heads down about. We have to look to the future and look into the Big Ten Tournament."

The outlook won't be easy. Today the fourth-seeded Hawkeyes face off against No. 5 Penn State at noon. When the two teams last met, No. 16 Iowa came up with the 2-1 victory, but much has changed for the Nittany Lions since Oct. 5.

Since that loss, Penn State has run over each of its last eight opponents, including Princeton, Syracuse, and Michigan. The Nittany Lions are 12-6 overall and 3-3 in the conference.

While Penn State is ranked ahead of the Hawkeyes at No. 13 in the nation, the two teams have an extensive history in the Big Ten Tournament. Last year, Penn State claimed a 3-1 second-round victory in Ann Arbor.

"This is going to be the toughest tournament I've ever seen," Iowa coach Tracey Griesbaum said. "You look at Penn State as a fifth seed or us as a fourth seed and see the quality of opponents."

"It is what it is now; we've put ourselves here. We could have changed things with a win Friday, but Iowa has won three games in three days before. That's where my thoughts are."

To get there, Griesbaum said it would be essential for Iowa to play two complete halves along with solid fundamentals — those are two things Iowa struggled to do in last week's loss to Michigan State. Iowa is 11-1 when it puts up the first point.

Also opening today are No. 2 Ohio State against No. 7 Indiana and No. 3 Michigan versus No. 6 Northwestern. As the top seed with a 15-4 record overall, Michigan State receives a first-round bye.

Griesbaum said she expected tough competition all around this weekend.

"Everyone is going to come completely with their game faces on," she said. "At this point, I don't think people really see the seedings, they see the opponent. Penn State is going to be great. We just need to go in and play."

Tech holds off N. Carolina

By Keith Parsons
Associated Press

ATLANTA — Joe Burns ran for a career-high 198 yards and a touchdown and Georgia Tech held North Carolina to 13 yards rushing in the Yellow Jackets' 28-21 victory Thursday night.

George Godsey threw for 187 yards and a touchdown and ran for another as Georgia Tech (6-2, 3-2 Atlantic Coast Conference) snapped the Tar Heels' five-game winning streak.

North Carolina quarterback Darian Durant played the entire game for the first time this season and threw for 286 yards and three touchdowns. He had split time this season with Ronald Curry, but Curry sat out with a hamstring injury.

The Tar Heels (5-4, 4-2), who dropped 1½ games behind Maryland in the ACC, pulled within seven points on Durant's 21-yard scoring toss to Sam Aiken late in the fourth quarter.

But Georgia Tech ground out the clock behind the running of Burns, forcing North Carolina to use its final two timeouts. The Yellow Jackets converted 10 of 17 third-down attempts, including five straight in the second half.

Two came on offside penalties on the Tar Heels.

Burns scoring run, a 51-yarder midway through the fourth quarter, gave the Yellow Jackets a 28-14 lead. He broke a tackle at the 20 and outran the defense for Georgia Tech's longest scoring play of the season. He broke his previous career high of 179 yards, set against Maryland in 1998.

on any running play in the second quarter. Durant was the leading rusher, gain 12 yards on five carries.

Jonathan Smith caught eight passes for 82 yards, including a 17-yard touchdown early in the second quarter to give Georgia Tech a 7-0 lead. Durant's first scoring toss, a 30-yarder to Kory Bailey, tied the game at 7.

Luke Manget, who missed five field goals in the Yellow Jackets' last game, missed a 32-yarder in the second quarter, but added two field goals for a 13-7 halftime lead.

Manget has made 120-straight extra points, breaking the school record of 119 held by Scott Sisson. It's also an ACC record.

Astros hire Jimmy Williams as manager

HOUSTON (AP) — Jimmy Williams was quick to accept the Houston Astros' offer to manage the club — and sidestep a question about the team's playoff woes under Larry Dierker.

Williams, fired by the Boston Red Sox in August, became the Astros' 13th manager Thursday, a day after agreeing to a three-year contract with general manager Gerry Hunsicker.

"Gerry called and offered the job and I said I'd sleep on it," Williams said. "I called him back in 45 minutes and told him I was a fast sleeper."

NBA

Jordan, Wizards victorious

By Paul Newberry
Associated Press

ATLANTA — Michael Jordan resembled His Airness more than His Oldness.

Jordan scored 31 points in Game 2 of his latest comeback and showed he hasn't lost the winning touch, leading the Washington Wizards to a 98-88 victory over the Atlanta Hawks on Thursday night.

After being held to 19 points in his return two nights earlier, Jordan mustered some vintage moves and a dunk out of his 38-year-old body and refused to let the young Wizards falter down the stretch.

The teams managed only three baskets in the final three minutes, but one of them — the clinching play — involved Jordan. He drew a double-team 12 feet from the basket and passed to an open Chris Whitney, who sank a 3-pointer with 39 seconds remaining to give the Wizards a 93-86 lead.

Jordan came out with 9.6 seconds remaining, slapping hands with his teammates.

He shot only 13-of-30 and threw up some certified bricks, but he also had six rebounds, six assists, two steals, and only one turnover.

Doing his part to help the economy, Jordan helped draw a crowd of 20,072, the largest ever to see a sporting event at 3-year-old Philips Arena.

It's not the first time Jordan has played before a big crowd to Atlanta, normally one of the league's weakest-drawing teams. In 1998, with reports swirling of his second retirement, Jordan and the Bulls played before 62,046 at the Georgia Dome — the largest crowd in NBA history.

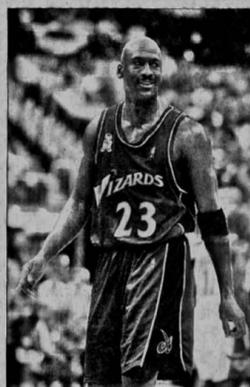

Jordan scored as many points in the first half — 19 — as he did in the opener against the Knicks, when he shot 7-of-21 and missed a 3-pointer with 18 seconds that would have tied the game.

Most striking but not really surprising considering the quality of his team, Jordan actually scored two more points than the rest of Washington's starters combined in the first half.

There were glimpses of the classic Jordan.

Midway through the first quarter, he missed a jumper, but the Wizards corralled the loose ball and Whitney fired a pass to Jordan breaking loose under the basket. He flew through the air for the dunk, pumping his fist as he landed while flashbulbs went off throughout the arena.

Early in the fourth, he brought the crowd to its feet again when he blew past Chris Crawford off the dribble; flew by Jason Terry along the baseline and flipped in a shot with his right hand over Nazr Mohammed.

Other times, Jordan showed his age. On consecutive possessions in the final period, he barely grazed the glass on a drive from the left side, then hit the side of the backboard with a 15-foot jumper over Crawford.

Jordan also filled his role of mentor and player-coach. Christian Lettner got a pat on the rump after a nice play, but Tyrone Lue got an earful after failing to get back on defense, allowing Dion Glover to go in for a breakaway dunk.

their side-arming closer, Kim. They had scored just four runs in 41 innings against the rest of the staff before Brosius' drive gave them five runs in 3 1-3 innings off Kim.

Like Martinez, Brosius is also in the final year of his contract. With prospect Drew Henson waiting in the minors, Brosius might have played his last home game at Yankee Stadium. He sure made it memorable.

Acquired before the 1998 season from Oakland, all Brosius has done is win in New York. He has a .349 career average with four homers and 13 RBI in 63 Series at-bats, winning the MVP in 1998 against San Diego and helping New York to two more titles.

He has struggled this post-season with a .160 average, but he has had a knack for big hits. There was a two-run double in a 3-2 Game 2 victory against Seattle in the ALCS, and a go-ahead hit in the sixth inning of Game 3 against Arizona.

None could match his feat in the ninth inning against Kim — not even his go-ahead homer in Game 3 of the 1998 Series against San Diego's Trevor Hoffman.

With the Yankees facing the prospect of must-win games against Arizona aces Randy Johnson, Curt Schilling, and Jorge Posada doubled, leading off the ninth.

After Shane Spencer and Chuck Knoblauch grounded out, Brosius delivered, driving a 1-0 pitch into the left-field seats that sent Yankee Stadium into delirium.

Brosius ran around the bases with his arms raised over his head as his teammates poured out of the dugout in yet another wild celebration. The stadium shook as Brosius took a curtain call.

"I had missed a couple of pitches," he said. "I was just trying to hit something hard."

Brosius then contributed to the winning run with a sacrifice bunt that set up Soriano's hit and sent Brosius and his teammates leaping out of the dugout again.

heads — and occasionally knocking them off.

But the Big Ten's top-ranked unit suffered its own staggering blow when senior cornerback Matt Stockdale suffered a season-ending foot injury against Michigan on Oct. 27.

He had the team-high 12-pass deflections at the time he went down, but more important, he was an emotional catalyst on a secondary that has shown dramatic improvement and maturity.

Now, redshirt freshmen Chigozie Ejiashi and Aramis Haralson will be asked to grow up fast before a sold-out Camp Randall Stadium on Saturday. They will be called upon to defend junior Lee Evans, one of the premier wide receivers in the Big Ten.

Senior safety Shane Hall has spoken to both players about the task before them.

"They know we are looking to them to step up and play," Hall said. "If we communicate with them, and they are as aware as Stockdale was, it will be easy for them."

But Stockdale was a senior that spent hours watching film to prepare. Hall said both Ejiashi, who is listed as the starter, and Haralson understand what it takes to play in the Big Ten.

"I think they'll be ready," Hall said.

The secondary's job will be made slightly easier if the defensive linemen can pressure Wisconsin's quarterback, whoever it ends up being. Junior Brooks Bollinger, who sat out the Michigan State loss with a groin injury, likely will be back behind center. He's 21-5 as a starter, including a win over Iowa last year.

However, the defensive line will be without senior Jerry Montgomery again on Saturday, after he aggravated a previous knee injury on Oct. 27. Sophomore Jared Claus has filled Montgomery's shoes admirably thus far, even if 17 tackles wouldn't indicate such.

"He's a real serious, conscientious player," Ferentz said. "He's playing well and just keeps getting better. If there's a positive out of a negative, that's it."

Wisconsin coach Barry Alvarez thought his defensive line would be a positive. But injuries have beset his defense and statistics back it up. The Badgers are giving up 380 yards a game, which has factored into their surprising 4-5 record and 2-3 Big Ten mark.

Iowa's ever-improving offensive line will look to exploit Wisconsin's weaknesses and avenge last season's loss. Actually, the Hawkeyes would like to end their four-game losing skid to the Badgers.

Senior quarterback Kyle McCann has faced Wisconsin twice. Once as a freshman and last year as a junior. He will be the starter again on Saturday with junior back-up Brad Banks slated to receive first-half action as well.

In the Oct. 27 loss to Michigan, McCann wasn't welcomed into huddles with the warmth of Kinnick Stadium welcomes, receiving showers of boos, but he said he's pretty thick-skinned and concerned with those that actually dictate the outcome of games — his coaches and teammates.

"Head coaches and quarterbacks are in the same lot," McCann said. "When you win, you're great. When you lose, you're the idiot. That's part of it."

McCann and the rest of his teammates are anxious to take the field on Saturday. Wisconsin is a team that has given Iowa fits, but it's another foe that the Hawkeyes believe they can defeat.

"It's a big challenge up there," Claus said. "I've heard rumors about that place. We just have to be ready, and we will be."

Freshman to get first Iowa start at center

By Tyler Lechtenberg
The Daily Iowan

In search of a spark, Iowa volleyball coach Rita Buck-Crockett decided to tinker with one more aspect of her lineup this weekend. Freshman Kassie Petty will start at setter, marking the first time this season anyone other than sophomore Renee Hill has led the team's offense.

Petty's first action as starting setter will come when Iowa, 3-17 overall, 1-11 Big Ten, hosts Michigan St. on tonight at 7 p.m. in Carver-Hawkeye Arena. On Saturday, Iowa hosts Michigan at 7 p.m. in the same venue.

"We've made a lot of changes; we've tried a lot of different things," Buck-Crockett said. "The only thing I have not tried to change is the setter."

The insertion of Petty, a native of Escondido, Calif., in the lineup will give the Hawkeyes a change of pace, Buck-Crockett said.

"It's not that Renee is not doing her job, but maybe there's something more Kassie can bring," she said. "She is a leader on the court."

Buck-Crockett feels no apprehension about sending a freshman out to lead the team because Petty, one of the team's most versatile players, has a good grasp on the intricacies of the game.

"Kassie knows the game very well," she said. "I would rather have the ball in her hands than some junior's or senior's on some other teams."

The Hawkeyes gave both the Spartans and the Wolverines stiff challenges the first time the teams met at the end of September. In Ann Arbor, Mich., the Hawkeyes lost, 3-2, to Michigan, falling 15-8 in the final game. The next night in East Lansing, Mich., the Hawkeyes couldn't quite overcome an early 2-0 deficit to the Spartans, and fell in four games, 3-1.

After winning its last two contests, Michigan State is tied with Minnesota for sixth place in the Big Ten with a 6-6 record during conference play; overall, the Spartans are 13-6. Senior Erin Hartley paces the Spartans with 3.87 kills per game, while sophomore Nikki Colson leads the Spartan offense with 12.64 assists per game.

The Wolverines sport an 11-8 overall record and sit in fifth position in the Big Ten with a 7-5 mark in conference games. The Wolverines boast a very balanced offense — Erin Moore, Chantel Reedus, and Jennifer Gandolf all average more than three kills per game.

Despite her Hawkeyes' struggles this season, Buck-Crockett said she is very impressed with their resiliency and steadfast determination.

"Their mood is extremely good because they know that they should be winning these matches," she said. "It's frustrating because they're not. They're all working really hard to get that monkey off their back."

"Their eyes are strong," she said. "When you look into someone's eyes, you see that power. I still see that power in their eyes."

NCAA Board approves basketball rule changes

By Michael Marot
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — The NCAA Board of Directors approved a series of college basketball eligibility, recruiting, and scholarship changes Thursday.

The board reduced the punishment for players who played professionally on overseas teams and reinstated the summer recruiting period that was to end after last July.

The panel also announced a moratorium on the so-called 5/8 rule and allowed schools to add a ninth scholarship this year. Beginning next year, a school could qualify for one additional scholarship if it meets NCAA criteria.

The most immediate effect could come from the professional policy, which required players to sit out one college game for each professional game played. Under the policy approved Thursday, the maximum penalty will be eight games, or 20 percent of a school's games, whichever is less.

"I think the impetus for it came about because of the number of institutions who have foreign students who have played on professional teams," said David Berst, NCAA Division I Chief of Staff. "It should be understood that this does not deal with a professional who actually received pay, but for those who participated and otherwise didn't take anything."

Woods struggling with back problems

By Doug Ferguson

Associated Press
HOUSTON — Tiger Woods never looked so mortal.

He had to squat to perform the most simple task Thursday, sticking a tee in the ground. An easy practice swing was accompanied by a grimace. Woods took a big rip with his driver and pursed his lips, trying to hold back a scream of pain.

"It's [tough] getting old," he joked when he was done.

This was no laughing matter. For the first time in his young career, Woods was faced with an injury that is the most common in golf and has slowed so many careers — back problems.

He injured his lower right back on the eve of the Tour Championship while getting worked on in the PGA Tour fitness trailer.

"I've never had this problem. This is a first," Woods said. "I don't see how it cannot concern me."

Woods declined to give details on how the injury occurred, but the impact was clear throughout the first round of the Tour Championship.

He grabbed his lower right back after a big swing on No. 2, mumbled to himself before just about every swing, and sat on a cooler during a lengthy wait on No. 9.

Perhaps the most telling impact of the injury came on No. 6, a 430-yard hole where his preferred tee shot was a hard 3-wood with a slight fade. After standing over the ball, Woods backed off and called over his caddie, asking for a driver.

"I can't hit anything hard," he told caddie Steve Williams.

Woods finished with a 1-under 70, five strokes back of Bernhard Langer and Frank Lickliter, still in range of winning at Champions Golf Club for the second time in a row.

If he does, both victories will be marked by injuries.

Two years ago at the Tour Championship, Woods' tee shot landed right in front of a softball-sized rock on the 15th hole of the opening round. He tried to hit through the rock, and suffered a stinger to his left wrist.

That was the most pain he has felt on the golf course, but he conceded that Thursday was his most miserable playing a full round of golf.

"I definitely feel it," he said. "The hardest part is where you're standing around. I'm fine walking. The problem is when I have to rotate and bend over. Those are the things that are integral parts of our game."

The timing is ironic.

About four hours before his back flared up Wednesday, Woods was in the clubhouse talking about one of the most incredible streaks that belongs to Jack Nicklaus — 146 consecutive starts in the major championships.

"It's amazing that he could play that long without any kind of serious injury," Woods said.

How serious his back injury is remains to be seen.

Woods was shifting his feet from side to side, like a kid learning his first dance steps, trying to stay loose with two dozen reporters surrounding him when he broke away in the middle of a question.

"I've got to go," he said, starting to feel more pain from standing around.

He left to see Tom Boers, the back specialist known for working with other PGA Tour players like Fred Couples, Ernie Els and Davis Love III.

"I do know that it's sore, it does hurt," Woods said. "I'll get it fixed tonight, and hopefully tomorrow I'll be 100 percent."

Woods turned pro in 1996 and has been relatively injury-free except for the rock incident at Champions two years ago.

This year has been different.

In February, he strained ligaments in his right knee when an overzealous fan trying to get an autograph stepped on his heel.

Woods also had an Achilles' injury during the U.S. Open that he has declined to discuss.

Alabama, Ohio State, and USC struggling

By Richard Rosenblatt
Associated Press

Once again, there's no title talk at Alabama, Ohio State, or USC this season — not even conference title talk.

In fact, the Crimson Tide, Buckeyes, and Trojans may all end up with losing records and without a spot in any of the 25 bowl games.

Times have changed for three of college football's glamour programs, which have combined for 12 national championships — six for Alabama and three each for Ohio State and USC. Bama won a title most recently, in 1992.

New coaches were hired, enthusiasm restored, and winning was supposed to be at hand. About the winning part...

Alabama is 3-4 under coach Dennis Franchione entering Saturday's homecoming game against LSU (4-3); Ohio State is 4-3 under Jim Tressel as it travels to Minnesota (3-4); and USC under Pete Carroll is 3-5 with a home game against Oregon State (3-4).

In contrast, a trio of new coaches are faring quite well. Larry Coker at No. 1 Miami is 6-0, Gary Crowton at No. 13 BYU was 8-0 entering Thursday's game against Utah, and Ralph Friedgen at Maryland is 7-1.

Alabama, which blew fourth-quarter leads in three of its last four games, needs to win three of its final four to have a post-season chance. Alabama is tied for third place in the SEC West.

"I'm just going to try to win a game," says Franchione, who left TCU and replaced Mike DuBose. "Any of that other talk is very premature, I think. I always say you have to play yourself into the position to talk about those things."

The Buckeyes have blown leads of 18 and 17 points in their last two losses. When Tressel left Youngstown State to replace John Cooper, there was a feeling Ohio State was good enough to win the Big Ten Conference and compete for a national title.

"The honeymoon ended when we were 1-1," says Tressel. Ohio State lost to UCLA in its second game, and is currently tied for fourth in the Big Ten with a 2-2 mark.

And then there's USC. Like Alabama and Ohio State, the Trojans have faded in the fourth quarter, losing four in a row by a total of 14 points. They need to beat Oregon State on Saturday, then California and UCLA to qualify for a bowl.

"The guys talk about it some," says Carroll. "I am dwelling more on what's going around us right now and what is in front of us. We want to put together some back-to-back games where we get feeling that we are accomplishing something."

Iowa beats Creighton in season finale

By Jeremy Shapiro
The Daily Iowan

It was another perfect Thursday for the Iowa soccer team.

Iowa blasted Creighton, 4-1, in an entertaining regular-season finale at Hawkeye Recreation Fields. The win improved the Hawkeyes' overall record to 8-9-1 and gave them a much-needed confidence boost heading into Big Ten Tournament play on Nov. 8.

Iowa continued its flawless Thursday tradition. They are 3-0 on that day, including an emotional 1-0 win against rival Iowa State on Sept. 27. The team hopes that the unusual streak continues as the Big Ten Tournament opener against No. 3 seed Illinois just so happens to be on a Thursday. Iowa has never advanced past the first round of the tournament. Creighton provided the challenge Iowa needed to prepare for the Illini as the Blue Jays gave the Hawks plenty of fits on offense and defense.

The Hawkeyes opened with a quick goal by sophomore Nichole Gatens 10:45 minutes into the game. It was the Iowa City native's first career goal and set the tone early that Iowa would be on the attack.

Most of the remainder of the first half was spent near the Blue Jays goal as Iowa had several tantalizing close chances to score. Every opportunity just missed the net or was gobbled up by the Creighton goalie.

"Creighton gave us some space and we lacked a bit of conviction not being able to get the score in the first half," Logan said. "It was great to see in the second half we maximized our opportunities and took better shots."

One of those shots occurred with 20:35 minutes remaining in the game. Freshman Nicholle Taylor streaked down one side of the field before kicking a beautiful cross-field pass to junior Julie Atkocaitis, who had beat most of the defense down the field. After slipping past the only defender left, Atkocaitis blasted a 25-foot shot that fooled the goalie.

"We talked at half-time about being proactive rather than reactive," Atkocaitis said. "I saw a space and called for the ball. There's a lot of pressure when you're only up one, so I was happy to put that one in."

Creighton fired back with a goal of its own with exactly seven minutes left. The Blue Jays continued pressure, but Iowa goalie Liz Hendel made several terrific saves to preserve the lead. Hendel had not seen much playing time this year behind starting goalie Britta Voegel.

"It felt good," Hendel said. "I was nervous because I hadn't been out there and wasn't feeling as sharp."

Junior Sarah Lynch calmed Hendel's and all the Hawkeyes fans' nerves with a game-clinching goal with 2:58 minutes left. Taylor added her own score with 24 seconds remaining.

After the win, Iowa's attention quickly turned to beating the Illini and avenging a 4-1 loss Oct. 26.

"This is a big confidence booster," Atkocaitis said. "We feel the momentum and will take into next week."

IOWA WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Hawkeyes to face Berdo in exhibition

By Roseanna Smith
The Daily Iowan

Lisa Bluder doesn't believe in scouting exhibition games, but that doesn't mean the Iowa women's basketball team won't be devising ways to contain former Hawkeye Mary Berdo and the rest of the Johnson Financial squad.

As a part of last year's second-round NCAA playoff team, Berdo is known around the Big Ten for her phenomenal 3-point shot. In fact, with the Hawkeyes last year, she knocked down five en route to scoring 21 points against Northwestern on Jan. 25.

Senior guard Leah Magner said though the matchup against her former teammate would be particularly interesting for the freshmen, she was mostly excited to get onto the court.

"I love the first game just because you get a little glimpse of what's going to happen in the season," she said.

According to Bluder, fans will probably see a few different looks. Iowa plans to use Sunday's game to experiment with different lineups and determine the efficiency of each player on the floor.

"We need to run the offense against some people who don't know what we're doing so we can take that and make some corrections before the Marquette game," Bluder said. "It's still a battle, they're going at each other every day in practice."

The coaches will also be tinkering with the point guard and center positions. Illinois transfer Kristi Faulkner received the nod to start at point guard over freshman April Calhoun during the press conference on Oct. 31, but Bluder said she was still torn between Beatrice Bullock or Jerica Watson at center.

Last year, Randi Peterson provided a stronghold at center as the No. 1 rebounder in the Big Ten Conference, but because she's gone, the Hawkeyes are scrambling for a replacement. This year, Bluder said she was convinced both Bullock and Watson were qualified for the job.

"Neither Jerica nor Beatrice will back down to anybody," she said. "They can handle it. I think the past experience with Randi proved to both of them that they can do the job even though they are undersized."

"The thing about Randi was that she had strength and speed and made up her lack of height with technique."

With the shadows left by Peterson and Consuegra, the Hawkeyes have to establish trust. The exhibition game will give the team a chance to become more comfortable passing under pressure.

"It's a process. With time, things will get better," Bullock said.

On the other side of the court, Bluder said the Hawkeyes will have a chance to test the waters of their new zone defensive look. Last year, the zone was run only to contain teams like Indiana.

"We have to be more of a full-court team," she said. "We're deeper at the guard position but not as experienced. We'll have to be more of a zone team — which is not what I enjoy coaching — but out of necessity will have to be."

The Hawkeyes will match up with former in-state all-stars, including Monica Huelman and Sarah Robson from Iowa State, Kris Homer, Kristin Santa, Megan Wright, and Lisa Brinkmeyer from Drake, and Barb Bennett, Nikki Spettel, and Kary Dawson from Northern Iowa.

"I think they're going to be good in the first half, but by the second half, I hope we can wear them out," Bluder said.

BIG TEN FOOTBALL

By Larry Lage
Associated Press

EAST LANSING, Mich. — This year was supposed to mark the final installment of the Drew Henson-Ryan Van Dyke rivalry.

Two of the best quarterbacks to come out of this state — Henson from Brighton and Van Dyke from Marshall — were going to play against each other Saturday for the final time.

Well, it hasn't worked out that way.

Henson decided to skip his senior season to play baseball in the New York Yankees' system, and Van Dyke is sidelined with a broken jaw.

Perhaps a new rivalry — within the in-state rivalry — will be started Saturday when Michigan State (4-2, 2-2 Big Ten) hosts No. 6 Michigan (6-1, 4-0) at 3:30 p.m. in Spartan Stadium.

The Spartans have won three of the past four meetings at home against Michigan, but just one of the previous five games overall. The game will feature two talented young quarterbacks: Michigan State sophomore Jeff Smoker and Michigan redshirt sophomore John Navarre.

Smoker, who is No. 1 in the Big Ten and eighth in the nation in passing efficiency, has completed 63.4 percent of his passes for 1,059 yards with eight touchdowns and four interceptions.

Navarre has completed 56.6 percent of his attempts for 1,592 yards with 11 touchdowns and four interceptions.

The last time Michigan played at Spartan Stadium, Smoker was a senior at Manheim (Pa.) Central High School, and Navarre was standing on the sidelines as a true freshman when Michigan State beat Michigan 34-31 in 1999.

Navarre thinks that experience, although he wasn't in uniform, will help him Saturday.

"It's like playing in your second game, compared to your first," the Cudahy, Wis., native said. "If it's not new, it is easier to prepare."

horoscopes

Friday, November 2, 2001 by Eugenia Last

ARIES (March 21-April 19): This is not a day to be shortsighted. If you have neglected your lover, he or she may be showing interest in someone else. Backtrack quickly.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Become involved in a sound moneymaking deal and you should do well. Family outings will be more beneficial than you realize.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Stay on top of things, especially problems with educational institutions or hospitals. Don't be too quick to give up. Obtain all the necessary information first.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You can't do everything alone. You will have to delegate work to others to meet deadlines. If you are too critical, others' enthusiasm and cooperation will wane.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Leave well enough alone when it comes to your personal life. Your greatest success will come through professional wheeling and dealing. Don't let emotions interfere with career objectives.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Take a break. Activities you enjoy will be rewarding. Make it clear to everyone that you need time for hobbies.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Make up your own mind. Don't let anyone coerce you. Lowered vitality may hinder your participation in group endeavors. Put your feet up and relax for a change.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Don't sit at home. You can establish a good friendship or find romance. Don't lead someone on if you really aren't interested.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be careful not to overdo it. Pamper yourself for a change, or minor health problems may be an issue. You'll be limited by exhaustion or injury are evident if you are reckless.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Look at all your options. Make physical changes to enhance your appearance, such as a new hairstyle, or start a fitness routine.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Sudden changes in your routine may be upsetting. You might want to look into residential moves. If uninvited visitors drop in and try to intrude, be honest.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): This is a great day to make amends or rekindle a flame with your loved one. You will both be in a mood for closeness, and a greater understanding and commitment can be reached.

The Ledge

Worst things about the day after Halloween

- You discover how hard it is for girls to get mascara off.
- While wandering around your apartment, you wonder where all the puke could have come from.
- You discover green paint on body parts you can't reach.
- Oh dear — I couldn't have slept with Bambi, could I?
- I didn't really kiss three Hayden Fry's, did I?
- OK, being Dick Cheney was heartless.
- I still contend that she was a she, despite what you guys say.
- Pictures, what pictures?
- They held class today?
- I wasn't wearing tights when I left the house.
- How should I have known blues would get the cowgirls.
- At what point did Wonder Woman turn into Elvira?

quote of the day

We were going to do a duet together, so I was looking forward to that. She was a beautiful lady.

— Ronald Isley, of the Isley Brothers, on a possible collaboration of Aaliyah and the Isley Brothers.
