Smoke rises over the distant mountains following military air strike against Taliban positions, as Afghans look on from near the village of Quruq, Takhar province, northern Afghanistan, Sunday, as the United States stepped up attacks.

U.S. hopes to triple special ops

By John J. Lumpkin
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — More U.S. special forces entered Afghanistan to support anti-Taliban rebels as top commanders said Sunday the Taliban government is weakening but still controls substantial troops that will take time to thin out and conquer.

"We're setting in for the long haul," said Air Force Gen. Richard Myers, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"We are going to continue to resupply" the anti-Taliban fighters of the opposition Northern Alliance "right through the winter," Myers said. "We think that they have every chance of prevailing."

The general said a couple more teams of special forces were inserted in Afghanistan the last few days. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said last week he hoped to at least triple the number of special forces inside Afghanistan, now believed to number between 100 and 200.

The teams are working with opposition leaders, and "the more teams we get on the ground, the more effectively we'll bring air power to bear on the Taliban lines," Myers said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

The teams are likely to include Green Berets, U.S. Army commandos who specialize in advising foreign troops. Special forces on the ground can also find hidden targets for U.S. air strikes.

The Pentagon said Sunday that U.S. bombing over the weekend focused on targets close to four key cities near the Taliban frontlines with Northern Alliance rebels: Bagram, Taloqan, Konduz, and Mazar-e-Sharif.

The Northern Alliance contends it has launched a major offensive near Mazar-e-Sharif. Capture of that city by anti-Taliban forces would open a major supply route from Uzbekistan and Tajikistan.

U.S. bombs also targeted caves and tunnels suspected as Taliban and Al Qaeda hideouts.

Myers said the United States has taken down Taliban air defenses, their transportation for resupplying its troops, and their communications.

"They have a substantial force left, but at this point that's exactly what we expected," he said.

Myers and Army Gen. Tommy Franks, the commander of U.S. forces in the war, declined to say whether it would take a major deployment of U.S. ground troops to topple the Taliban.

Appearing on ABC's "This Week," Franks was asked whether he would rule out the use of a large number of ground forces. "Absolutely not," he replied.

Members of Congress said it is too early to tell how long the war will last or whether more ground troops will be needed.

"I think our enemies, the more they're convinced that we're in this for the long haul, the shorter this 'thing' may last," said Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., on "Fox News Sunday."

Added Democratic Sen. Joseph Biden, the Foreign Relations Committee chairman: "It may very well be that as things move on," administration officials "have to insert, or at least contemplate, a larger infusion of ground forces."

Joining Biden on CBS' "Face the Nation," Sen. Chuck Hagel, R-Neb., said, "I don't see where you're going to put a half a million men on the ground like we did in Vietnam or any of the large-scale efforts."

I.C. may offer writers asylum

By Sara Faiwell
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City might soon attract such well-known writers as Salman Rushdie and Nobel Prize-winner Toni Morrison if chosen to be an asylum for international writers.

If approved by the City Council, the UI and Iowa City would be one of 20 cities chosen as homes to foreign writers who might not feel safe in their homelands. One writer would live in the city for one or two years, said Christopher Merrill, the director of the UI International Writing Program.

"Having a writer from a darker world is useful because it gives us a larger sense of the world," he said. "We want to make this formal."

The writers would have housing and a stipend provided jointly by the UI and Iowa City, Merrill said. Community members will hold fund-raisers to support the writers, Merrill said, adding that he didn't anticipate it would be expensive to support them.

With the asylum program, Iowa City could cooperate with the Paris-based International Parliament of Writers to hold a conference at the UI later this winter, Merrill said. The conference would draw well-known writers such as Rushdie and Morrison, he said.

"This would be great for Iowa City, because you are getting high-profile writers who are deeply concerned with human rights," he said. "We forget how good we have it here, and that isn't always the case in other countries."

The IWP is a one-of-a-kind program, with nearly 1,000 writers from 115 countries having completed residencies in Iowa City. Merrill said the asylum program would be similar to the IWP, which has already been providing informal safety to international writers.

Palestinian poet Ghassan Zagtan has been in Iowa City for the past 10 weeks with the IWP. Three days after he arrived, his poetry house in his home country was bombed three times. The second floor was taken out, computers were demolished, and one of his colleagues was injured.

"They were targeting the life of daily people," he said.

Zagtan said the academic and cultural atmosphere in Iowa City is intellectually stimulating for the writers in the program.

Rehman Rashid of Malaysia is also involved in the IWP. He said that in his homeland, writers are less-respected and more-scrutinized than they are in Iowa City.

"The environment in Iowa City is warm and encouraging, and writers can find sanctuary here," he said.

David Skorton, the UI vice president for Research, who also made the proposal for asylum to the City Council, said the university wants to maintain a worldwide reputation as a literary mecca because of the Writers' Workshop and the IWP. The literary walkway on Iowa Avenue was also designed for part of the theme, he said.

"It wouldn't be an exaggeration to say Iowa City is one of the literary centers of the world," Skorton said.

State to restore lab funds

By Kellie Doyle
The Daily Iowan

Iowa lawmakers plan to restore funding to the UI Hygienic Laboratory this week, keeping the research facility from the possibility of losing 4.3 percent of its state funding.

House Minority Leader Dick Myers, D-Coralville, said he is positive that a proposed measure that would restore $200,000 to the lab will be passed when the Legislature meets in a special session Thursday.

"It's a public-safety issue," Myers said. "We're interested in making sure the research continues."

Since the Sept. 11 attacks, the Hygienic Laboratory, the state's environmental and public-health lab, has been bombarded with requests to inspect possible bioterrorism threats, said David Skorton, the UI vice president for Research.

The lab has evaluated 12 cases of suspicious mail since Sept. 11, none of which tested positive, officials said.

DISTRICT B CANDIDATES

Champion looks to continue work

By Tony Robinson
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City City Councilor Connie Champion wants to continue her longtime involvement in local issues.

The District B candidate said her 35 years in Iowa City and 20 years as a local business owner will ensure that she will accurately represent her district, which she has served for the past four years.

Champion said the most important issue that will face the newly elected council is moving the city forward with economic development, and she strongly supports that goal. If elected, she promises to push for a grocery store in southeastern Iowa City, currently under consideration by the council.

Owning and operating women's clothing store Catherine's, 7 S. Dubuque St., gives her an important background in managing money — experience her competitor, Brandon Ross, lacks, Champion said.

"He doesn't have any conception of current economics, which will hinder his campaign," she said.

But Champion, 61, came across money troubles herself late last month.

The mother of eight was fined last month after her treasurer, Kent Jehle, failed to file papers with the Johnson County auditor disclosing how much money her campaign raised and spent. According to the Johnson County Auditor's Office, Champion raised approximately $2,000 and spent roughly half that amount by Oct. 2 but failed to file papers required by state law when a candidate raises or spends more than $500.

The mistake was "unintentional" and can be easily rectified, said Champion, who could not verify the amount of the fine.

Councilor Dee Vanderhoef said Champion is a "good solid woman of integrity" and that her failure to file the proper paperwork was an honest mistake. The oversight will not have a negative effect on Champion's campaign, she added.

Champion was among three councilors who voted against an alcohol ordinance that levies heavier fines against violators, saying it was ineffective. However, she has also voiced support of raising the age requirement for all bars to 21 if the current ordinance fails to work, and she also favors some sort of smoking ban in restaurants.

The Gary, Ind., native received a nursing diploma from the Cook County School of Nursing in Chicago before arriving in Iowa City in 1961. Champion has served on the Iowa City School Board and Historic Preservation Commission — a group that strongly pushed to preserve Old Brick, 26 E. Market St.

"Connie has been a champion for the neighborhoods and historical districts, and she will continue to support them," Vanderhoef said.

Champion is seeking her second four-year term on the council in Tuesday's election — a race she says is wide open. Champion received approximately 60 percent of votes in

When local activists asked Brandon Ross to run for the Iowa City City Council last August, he said no.

"The job pays too little, I have an infant, and I am not a politician," the 38-year-old Boston native said.

But Ross, who supports himself by buying old books for resale, decided to run against incumbent Connie Champion for a District B seat when he realized none of the district's candidates supported student, senior-citizen, low-income resident, or environmental issues.

"I was not ambitious for the office — I was ambitious for the issues," he said of his bid for council. "I consider myself a long-shot running against an incumbent in an area of wealth and suburban sprawl."

Ross said he doesn't support the "unenforceable" alcohol ordinance in effect since Aug. 1, is not in favor of raising the age requirement for all bars to 21, and supports a smoking ban in establishments earning a majority of their profits from food sales — an issue currently on the council's plate.

He also said he wants to eliminate "knock-and-talks," when Iowa City police approach homes in search of illicit drugs to earn federal funding.

Ross' ideas have earned both praise and criticism.

"I think he's a pretty bright guy," said Mayor Ernie Lehman, an at-large candidate up for re-election. Lehman added, however, that Ross has failed to study all the issues. He pointed to Ross' statements on the campaign trail to build more neighborhood grocery stores — something not feasible for Iowa City, Lehman said.

Ross' father's sudden heart attack and death Oct. 24 may have strengthened the District B candidate's resolve to achieve victory in Tuesday's race.

"I didn't really consider quitting," Ross said. "We all suffer loss. I think if we all keep in mind that our loved ones and ourselves are impermanent, then we can have the type of compassion that it takes to understand and treat people well."

Ross was adopted by a working-class family and grew up an only child in the Alston-Brighton area of Boston. He graduated from Boston University with a secondary-level teaching degree and taught high school for six years before becoming a reporter for the East Boston News and the Alston-Brighton Tab.

The UI Writers' Workshop drew Ross to Iowa City in 1988; he soon noticed the city's rapid rate of urban development. He said additions to downtown such as the kiosks and the number of parking garages under construction concern him. Last year, he joined the fight to stop the First Avenue extension, which was eventually approved.

"When you build parking amenities, you destroy your city," he said. "We must protect small businesses and neighborhoods. That's where the strength of the city lies."

Ross said he isn't letting his lack of experience as a politician stop his bid for the council.

"It's good to have diversity on the council. I ride a bicycle. I'm a renter. I represent people who are underrepresented," the former disc jockey said. "I'm resourceful and creative, and I'm not afraid of confrontation."

His potential has not gone unnoticed.

"I think he will be fine," said Councilor Irvin Pfab of Ross' possible council position. "I think he's an informed member of the public."

Volunteers respond in emergency drill

By Vanessa Miller
The Daily Iowan

Blood drips down Kyle Nicholson's face as he lies limply on the front lawn of the Johnson County Administrative Building.

Lying next to the 11-year-old, a National Guardsman in camouflage treats a gash on his own thigh. The scene at 913 S. Dubuque St. on Nov. 3 was one of organized "terror," as emergency workers tended to the wounded during an emergency drill.

More than 50 volunteers with fake blood and skin and black make-up participated in the Johnson County Emergency Management bomb drill. The operation was part of the trauma-center accreditation process for Mercy Hospital and the UI Hospitals and Clinics.

"Everything is going great," said Ron Stutzman, an Iowa City Fire Department battalion chief, who was responsible for evaluating the operation and finding areas for improvement.

The drill came as law-enforcement officials across the nation are on heightened alert, but it was the third of such drills conducted this year. The simulated bombing was scheduled long before the terrorist attacks on America, Stutzman said.

"We had planned this drill before Sept. 11, and now we are just more aware of how necessary it is," he said.

The drill began with the announcement of a "bomb explosion" shortly after 10 a.m. Three ambulances and an emergency squad arrived at the scene to test how long it would take to transport seriously injured and walking-wounded patients to the hospitals.

A second wave of emergency officials, including policemen and firemen, surveyed the building and checked for additional bombs and hazardous materials. The building was declared safe after a two-hour check.

"We always start out with a normal day, then bring it to one heck of a day, and then bring it back down to a normal day again," said Tom Hansen, the county emergency-management coordinator, of the drill.

Michael Sexton, 17, volunteered as a walking wounded victim. He was herded onto a city bus with other victims suffering minor injuries with a card dangling around his neck that read, "Minor contusions and abrasions on arms, face, and legs."

The large group was taken to UIHC, Mercy, or the Veterans Affairs Hospital, where medical personnel practiced working with large numbers of victims.

"I think everyone was pretty well prepared," Sexton said. "It's a good idea to test and see where they're at because I could see something like this happening in this day and age. I think these drills are definitely necessary."

Observers expect rancorous session

By Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — A looming special session of the Iowa Legislature will be mercifully brief, with not much of an agenda beyond wrestling with a sour state budget.

That's the formal agenda, however. The real agenda includes enough political tension to choke a horse, and the opportunities for nasty internal squabbling are countless.

Most are centered on primary-election politics or leadership battles, the nastiest kind of fights that exist.

For instance, Sen. Steve King is a staunch Republican from Kiron who made a splash by attacking GOP legislative leaders for bargaining with Gov. Tom Vilsack over a budget issue.

"The big spenders have had their day, and it is time for them to get out of the way," declared King. House Speaker

Brent Siegrist, a moderate from Council Bluffs, is one of the lead bargainers; it is not a coincidence that both Siegrist and King are seeking the Republican nomination in western Iowa's 5th District.

Don't be surprised if King's rhetoric gets even hotter during this week's special session, and be even less surprised when it shows up in his stump speech on the trail.

That, however, is only the beginning.

Rep. Chuck Larson of Cedar Rapids and Rep. Steve Sukup of Dougherty are fellow conservative Republicans, but it's a good deal more complex than that. Sukup is running for the GOP gubernatorial nomination, and Larson, wearing his hat as Iowa Republican chairman, spent a lot of time over the summer looking for a bigger-name candidate.

Sukup is furious that his own party chairman would seek to recruit a candidate to run against fellow Republicans. Larson denies he was actively recruiting, but Sukup doesn't believe him. Don't expect the two to bond very much this week.

The plot thickens even further. Siegrist's decision to run for Congress means that the top leadership job in the House is going to be coming open. Majority Leader Chris Rants of Sioux City is the leading candidate.

Rants has proven to be an able floor leader who has worked tirelessly at the political chores demanded of leaders, but he won't get a free pass. Rep. Danny Carroll of Grinnell is only one of the potential rivals.

Leadership fights are among the most vicious that are waged at the Statehouse because they're pure power struggles unrelated to ideology or other such baggage. With Rants running for speaker, his job is coming open, and the maneuvering is already underway for that spot.

CITY BRIEF

First Avenue Club stabbing not related to Sports Column incident, police say

An early morning stabbing at an Iowa City dance club Nov. 2 has no connection to a similar incident at a bar last week, police said Sunday.

Ronald Aguilar-Garcia was allegedly stabbed multiple times on his right arm in the parking lot of the First Avenue Club, 1550 S. First Ave., at 1:51 a.m. on Nov. 2, according to a police report. Aguilar-Garcia, 24, suffered a six- to eight-inch laceration on his right bicep and a small puncture wound on another part of his arm.

But police do not think the alleged attack is related to a stabbing incident at the Sports Column, 12 S. Dubuque St., early Nov. 1, said Iowa City police Lt. Dan Sellers.

Aguilar-Garcia told police he had been stabbed with a knife, but no weapon was recovered and reports do not specify what type of knife was used, Sellers said.

Aguilar-Garcia said a man assaulted him as he was leaving the club around 1:30 a.m. Aguilar-Garcia told police the man was angry because Aguilar-Garcia had been dancing with women the man knew, Sellers said.

Police said the suspect met and drove Aguilar-Garcia to the club, but Aguilar-Garcia told police he did not know who the man was, according to police reports.

The suspect would face charges of assault causing injury, police said, describing the him as a 170-pound Latino male in his 30s, 5-foot, 6-inch tall, with a mustache.

High court takes on death-penalty appeal

By Larry O'Dell
Associated Press

RICHMOND, Va. — While reviewing the case of a client appealing a death sentence for sodomizing and murdering a teenager, lawyer Robert J. Wagner made a startling discovery — the same attorney who had defended his client during trial had also represented the victim.

Wagner will tell the U.S. Supreme Court today that condemned man Walter Mickens Jr. deserves a new trial because his first one was tainted by the trial lawyer's conflict of interest.

"I really couldn't believe a lawyer would have accepted appointment to a death-penalty case after having represented the person the defendant was accused of killing," Wagner said in an interview.

The 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals rejected Wagner's argument last year, ruling 7-3 that he failed to prove the alleged conflict affected the outcome of the case.

A group of legal-ethics experts has taken Mickens' side, arguing in a friend-of-the-court brief that his Sixth Amendment right to effective legal representation was violated.

It was "a fundamental conflict of interests," said Larry Fox of Philadelphia, the former chairman of the American Bar Association's ethics committee and author of the brief. "For those of us in the ethics world, that's kind of a full stop."

Mickens, 47, has been on Virginia's death row for eight years, longer than any other inmate. He was scheduled for execution in April, but that was put off when Wagner appealed to the Supreme Court. If the high court rejects his appeal, Mickens' execution can be quickly rescheduled.

Mickens was convicted of capital murder for the 1992 death in Newport News of Timothy Hall, 17, who had been stabbed 143 times.

Wagner discovered in 1998 that at the time of Hall's death, the teen faced assault and concealed-weapons charges and was being represented by attorney Bryan Saunders.

After learning of Hall's death, a judge dismissed the charges against him. Three days later, the same judge appointed Saunders to represent Mickens on charges of killing Hall.

Saunders says he felt no conflict of interests and believed his duty to Hall ended when he learned his client was dead.

Wagner has argued that, among other things, Saunders failed to explore the possibility that the sexual encounter was consensual. Without the sexual assault, the murder would not have been a capital crime.

Virginia Attorney General Randolph Beales argues in a Supreme Court brief that such a defense was not plausible because it conflicted with Mickens' claim that he did not know Hall.

The state also notes that Saunders' co-counsel, who had no conflict, took the lead in the trial's penalty phase.

A panel of the 4th Circuit appeals court ruled 2-1 that Mickens didn't get a fair trial. At the very least, the majority said, Mickens should have been told about Saunders' situation so he could assess his lawyer's loyalty.

The full 4th Circuit reversed the ruling, and Mickens appealed to the Supreme Court.

George Rutherglen, a University of Virginia law professor who teaches legal ethics, said that while conflicts of interests often do not violate the Constitution, this one does.

Uncle Sam seeks new league of workers

By Ron Kampas
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — At least one-third of the federal emergency workers mobilized on Sept. 11 will reach retirement age in five years, and an anxious Uncle Sam wants you to consider a career replacing them.

From college students to retirees, the government is using patriotism to appeal to Americans to fill depleting ranks of federal doctors, firefighters, and structural engineers, among others.

The worries predate Sept. 11, stemming then from concerns over an aging workforce — average age 45. The attacks made the government's pleas more urgent.

"We need people who will rise to the occasion and respond to the need for public service NOW," the top government hirer tells college students in a letter.

If anyone misses the point, there is a new address for ex-federal workers who want to come back on board: patri-otquestions@opm.gov.

"There is a recognition that this a challenge — not a crisis, a challenge — and the agencies are developing a number of different strategies," said Ellen Tunstall, the assistant director for employment policy at the Office of Personnel Management.

One is the letter from agency Director Kay Coles James sent to campus newspapers across the country. The blitz was prompted by thousands of inquiries from students, the government says.

It is too soon to tell whether the appeals are working, but with the worst unemployment growth in two decades announced Nov. 2, the field appears fertile.

James casts her pitch in patriotic language that just weeks ago would have seemed as campus-friendly as a Tupperware party: "Our young people have realized there is no more important work — no more NOBLE calling ... than the work of government."

That rhetoric apparently resonates with federal workers. A new Brookings Institution survey finds that 90 percent say they are proud of their work, while 60 percent expressed frustration with the government for not getting more staff on board.

James outlines the areas of need: FBI investigators, CIA agents, Centers for Disease Control epidemic monitors, Food and Drug Administration staffers who keep the blood supply clean, Federal Reserve Board analysts who watch for attacks on the banking system, and Environmental Protection Agency monitors who are assessing the cleanup in New York.

The appeals are not just geared to college students. The government is opening doors for ex-employees and waiving a requirement that returnees surrender part of their pensions.

A lot of those who left were new mothers who wanted to stay at home, and the government is considering flexible schedules and other changes to lure them back, said Edmund Byrnes, speaking for the personnel office.

One directive tells managers to jettison the usual list of requirements when filling one-year "emergency need" appointments and to use their own judgment.

"You determine what qualifications are required," the directive begins. Previously, government requirements could delay hires for up to a year.

The Partnership for Public Service, which aims to improve federal hiring practices, recently published projections showing overall rates of attrition at the top seven agencies that are part of the government's emergency response plan.

Secret court wields power in terrorist hunt

By Anne Gearan
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — It meets for a few days each month in a windowless room in the Justice Department basement, a highly secretive court that can shape how the government spies on some U.S. residents.

Already viewed warily by civil libertarians, the court will grow more powerful as a result of the tougher anti-terrorism laws President Bush signed into law last month.

The court considers requests, almost always from the FBI, for warrants and searches related to foreign-intelligence operations inside the United States. From what little is known of the operation, the warrants typically allow the government to listen in on suspected spies or terrorists.

Civil liberties and privacy watchdogs say the court established by the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act now will be free to approve more and broader wiretapping against a wider range of people. The government may never have to disclose who was targeted, or why.

"[The surveillance act] already had just the minimal trappings of a judicial process," said David Sobel, a lawyer with the Electronic Privacy Information Center. The anti-terrorism measures "chip away at the very minimal procedures that currently exist."

The court has approved thousands of warrants since it was established by Congress in 1978, and only once has turned down the government.

The single, Reagan-era rejection was not a loss for the government, said Sobel, whose information about the court comes largely from Freedom of Information Act requests.

The Justice Department actually hoped the court would reject its request for permission for a break-in, presumably of an embassy, because that would bolster the government's view that the court did not have authority to rule in that area, Sobel said.

There is a good reason for the strong government track record, said former Attorney General Richard Thornburgh.

"The reason they're never turned down is because they're so meticulously prepared," he said.

The court was intended to police the kind of surveillance abuse seen in the Nixon era by requiring the FBI to go before a judge to get a national security-related warrant. Previously, the Justice Department or the White House could order such surveillance directly.

"It acts as a brake on people acting imprudently," Thornburgh said. "I am quite sanguine that it will continue to play that role."

U.S. says Taliban weakening

By Greg Myre
Associated Press

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — After four weeks of U.S. attacks, Afghanistan's ruling Taliban is no longer "functioning as a government," Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said Sunday. But an opposition attack on a key northern city was reported faltering only hours after it was launched.

That raised doubts whether the factious, poorly armed Northern Alliance opposition could exploit U.S. air strikes and topple the Taliban without the assistance of American ground troops.

Meanwhile, U.S. jets struck the frontline approximately 30 miles north of Kabul, according to Atiqullah Baryalai, the deputy defense minister of the Northern Alliance. In the Afghan capital itself, American bombs hit near the Intercontinental Hotel, set on a hill in the southwest part of the city.

They also struck the northeast town of Taloqan, which the opposition lost to the Taliban last year.

Rumsfeld, on a tour of frontline states in the war against terrorism, sought to dispel fears that the air campaign, now in its fifth week, was failing to crack the Taliban's grip on Afghanistan.

"The Taliban [is] not really functioning as a government," he declared after meeting Pakistani President Gen. Pervez Musharraf, a key Muslim ally in the anti-terrorism campaign.

Rumsfeld, who later Sunday went on to India, said the Taliban was "using [its] power in enclaves throughout the country" and was "not making major military moves."

"It is pretty much in static positions," he said of the Taliban's forces. Rumsfeld said the Islamic militia was using mosques as command centers and as ammunition-storage sites to spare them from American attack and "actively lying about civilian casualties."

Earlier Sunday, in Uzbekistan, Rumsfeld gave an assessment of the military campaign's success to date. "The effort to deal with the problem of terrorist networks is proceeding," he said. "It is, we believe, proceeding at a pace that is showing measurable progress."

A key element of the U.S. strategy has been to attack Taliban positions facing the Northern Alliance — especially on the front north of Kabul and on positions defending the Taliban-held city of Mazar-e-Sharif.

A birthday in a Kabul jail

By Kathy Gannon
Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — Dayna Curry celebrated her 30th birthday Sunday — and marked her 93rd day in a jail in Afghanistan along with seven other foreigners accused of preaching Christianity in this devoutly Muslim country.

Her mother, Nancy Cassell of Thompson's Station, Tenn. — waiting in neighboring Pakistan — said she had sent a package with a cake and candles for Curry that should arrive soon at the two-story prison where her daughter is held in the Afghan capital, Kabul.

Abdurahman Hottak, the Taliban's consulate department chief, said packages from the loved ones of all eight prisoners would be delivered. "That's good news," said Cassell, contacted by telephone. "There are just a whole bunch of small things for them to have fun with."

At the prison, surrounded by high dirty-white cement wall and barbed wire, the windows have rusted steel bars. The gate to the compound is gray steel, with a small opening that requires anyone entering to hunch over.

But the guards, sitting on broken chairs at the entrance to the detention center, are friendly. There is a steel bed as well, but without a mattress. One of the guards, Amir Jan, smiles and says the prisoners are in good health.

"They are very good, strong. Sometimes they are singing.

They get only good food from the restaurant, and they don't even drink the water here. They get mineral water from the market," says Jan, wrapping himself in the traditional woolen shawl worn by most Afghan men during the cold winter months.

The pounding of the U.S.-led aerial bombardment can at times be heard from the Kabul prison.

Curry and another American, Heather Mercer, are both employees of the German-based Shelter Now International organization. They were arrested on Aug. 3. The others — four Germans and two Australians — were arrested two days later. They were charged, along with 16 Afghan employees of Shelter Now International, with propagating Christianity.

Curry's mother, Cassell, said she hoped someone would be able to get letters out from her daughter. She hasn't heard from Curry since Oct. 22, when the workers' Pakistani lawyer, Atif Ali Khan, returned from Afghanistan with letters. John Mercer of Vienna, Va., the father of 24-year-old Heather Mercer, said it's worrisome to be out of touch with his daughter.

The elder Mercer, who spent two weeks in the Afghan capital, was evacuated from Kabul, along with Cassell, on Sept. 13 — two days after the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon because the U.S. government feared for their safety.

It broke their hearts to leave behind their children, whom they saw for the last time on the evening of Sept. 11.

Mercer's mother, Deborah Oddy, had arrived that day and saw her daughter only once before being evacuated. She is in Pakistan keeping a vigil for her daughter.

John Mercer said he pleaded with the Taliban to free his daughter and take him instead. It didn't respond. Contacted by telephone on Sunday, Mercer said he has received no news of his daughter in two weeks.

U.S. uses past & future weaponry

By Robert Burns
Associated Press

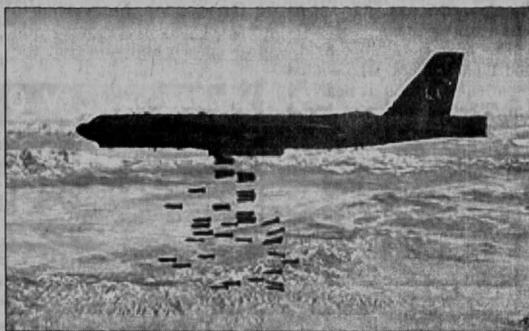

WASHINGTON — The U.S. fight in Afghanistan is relying on an odd mix of weapons — from the past, present, and future — for a military that before Sept. 11 already was making the transition from arming for the Cold War to tooling for new threats.

B-52s of Vietnam War vintage — some older than the Air Force pilots flying them — lumber hundreds of miles from an island in the Indian Ocean to drop tons of "dumb" bombs on Taliban trenches.

Million-dollar Tomahawk cruise missiles launched from Navy ships and submarines are aimed at turning terrorist camps into dust clouds.

Army helicopters and Air Force AC-130 gun-ships watch warily for Stingers, shoulder-fired anti-aircraft missiles that the CIA provided to Afghan rebels in their 1980s war against the Soviet Union.

sophisticated radar networks, fly 44-hour missions from Missouri to drop the latest version of a "bunker buster" bomb first used in the Gulf War.

Aircraft carriers, derided by some as irrelevant relics ready for retirement, launch dozens of fighter-bombers daily from the Arabian Sea, their sights set on decrepit but still dangerous Taliban air defenses and other targets.

One carrier, the USS Kitty Hawk, left most of its usual complement of Navy strike aircraft at its home base in Japan. The Kitty Hawk is loaded with Army special-operations helicopters, some of which launched commando raids on Afghanistan on Oct. 20.

Israel pulls out despite slayings

By Mark Lavie
Associated Press

TEL AVIV, Israel — Israel began withdrawing from a West Bank town early today despite a Palestinian attack hours earlier in Jerusalem that left two teenagers dead — one a girl born in the United States.

The Israeli pullout from Qalqilya was expected. Israel had sent forces into parts of six West Bank towns the day after Palestinian militants assassinated ultranationalist Tourism Minister Rehavam Zeevi on Oct. 17. They withdrew from Bethlehem and nearby Beit Jalla a week ago.

The military said Israeli forces were withdrawing a few hundred yards to the edge of Palestinian-controlled territory and into Israel. Palestinian witnesses said six Israeli tanks pulled back from the northern and southern entrances to the town and that tanks in other locations were preparing to leave.

The U.S. government had demanded repeatedly that Israel pull its forces out of all six towns it took over after Zeevi was killed by the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. The group said it was revenge for Israel's killing of popular-front leader Mustafa Zibri.

The United States is concerned that the increased Mideast tension could interfere with its effort to bring moderate Arab nations into its coalition to fight the Taliban regime and accused terrorist leader Osama bin Laden.

Israeli officials had said Sunday that the pullback from Qalqilya would proceed despite the attack in Jerusalem.

The shooting happened in a disputed part of the city, at a busy intersection. A Palestinian gunman sprayed an Israeli bus with automatic-rifle fire before two police officers and a civilian shot him dead.

The intersection is in front of French Hill, a Jewish neighborhood built on land Israel captured in the 1967 Mideast war and annexed to Jerusalem. Passengers on the bus included students from an Orthodox Jewish girls school.

Shoshana Ben-Yishai, 16, was shot in the head and died at a hospital. Israeli media reported that she had moved to Israel from Long Island, N.Y., when she was 5 years old and lived in Betar Illit, an ultra-Orthodox settlement in the West Bank. She was buried late Sunday in Jerusalem.

Israel Radio identified the other dead teenager as Menashe Regev, 14, of Jerusalem. More than 40 people were injured.

Police identified the attacker as Khatem Shweiki, 24, from the West Bank city of Hebron. Police said he belonged to the militant Islamic Jihad.

Iran drifts from hard-line stance

By Brian Murphy
Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran — The script was the same as past years: Protesters chanted "Death to America" and burned flags outside the former U.S. Embassy to mark the anniversary of the day the compound was overrun in 1979.

But amid this year's commemoration — attended by approximately 5,000 people Sunday — were hints that the old formulas are no longer enough. Iran's hard-line rulers have been troubled by recent street rallies and questioned over foreign policy.

Sunday's crowd at the embassy was filled out by students ranging in age from roughly 7 to teens, along with military conscripts. The children took advantage of a day away from classes by clowning around and paid little attention to the speakers, who included Ayatollah Ahmad Jannati, the head of the powerful Guardian Council.

"Death to America," chanted a group of elementary-school students at the urging of their teacher. Some youngsters could barely peer over their placards. Some carried messages in mangled English: "Dwin Wite USA."

Even state television sharply scaled back on coverage of this year's anniversary protest, which also included volunteer militia members and representatives from conservative Islamic groups.

None of the famous hostage-takers appeared at the demonstration, which marks the storming of the embassy on Nov. 4, 1979, after the Islamic Revolution ousted the U.S.-installed shah. Fifty-two Americans were held captive for 444 days.

Many of the main militants who took over the embassy have shifted support to reformist President Mohammad Khatami, who favors greater social and political freedoms. They also stayed away from this week's ceremonies that opened the former embassy compound to the public for the first time.

At Tehran University, an alternative anniversary gathering challenged the leadership to try to repair relations with the United States, which has indicated it would take Iran as a partner in the war on terrorism declared after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

"Our foreign policy should not put us next to Iraq, Serbia, Libya, and the Taliban," one student leader told approximately 250 people outside the university's mosque. "We have condemned the Sept. 11 attacks and sympathize with the American people."

Sandinista seeks comeback in tight race

By Eloy O. Aguilar
Associated Press

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Eleven years after losing power in an election, former Sandinista leader Daniel Ortega has a strong chance to regain the presidency in voting Sunday despite U.S. efforts to dent his campaign.

Former U.S. President Jimmy Carter joined thousands of local and foreign monitors scattered across Nicaragua to watch as polls opened — often hours late — in a country where political passions still run high in the wake of a civil war that ended in 1990.

Once a socialist revolutionary who wore olive-green uniforms, Ortega, 55, campaigned in pink shirts and with the slogan "the path of love."

It was meant to help overcome the bitterness many still feel toward his earlier government, which confiscated property, jailed opponents, and drafted tens of thousands to fight U.S.-backed rebels while trying to bring jobs and food for all.

He faces Enrique Bolanos, 73, of the governing Constitutionalist Liberal party in the contest for a five-year term. The former vice president saw most of his property confiscated by the Sandinistas during the 1980s.

Officials said first results might not arrive until after midnight. The law bars release of independent exit polls or quick counts before official results are offered.

With polls showing the race in a dead heat, the election atmosphere was tense and there were organizational glitches. Many voting places opened long after the planned 7 a.m. start, causing enormous lines.

"I've been here since 5:30," said Ivan Herrera, who waited impatiently in line at nearly 9 a.m. "I have a mechanic shop. I have work to do."

Claiming a threat of Sandinista violence, outgoing President Arnaldo Aleman said he "will not hesitate" to decree a state of emergency if disturbances break out.

Ortega suggested Nov. 3 that Aleman could be preparing to annul the elections if they go against his party.

"We ask God to enlighten the president to avoid causing fear in the population," Ortega said as he voted. "I call on our brothers Sandinistas to not let them provoke us" to violence.

The rumors were serious enough that Carter told a news conference that it "is not acceptable" to declare a state of emergency if there is merely a close vote.

But the former U.S. president, who also monitored the 1990 and 1996 elections here, said, "My prediction is that there will be a fair election."

Bolanos promises to continue the free-market policies of Aleman, but with a greater emphasis on fighting corruption. Allegations of shady dealings stained the reputation of the outgoing government.

Both Ortega and Bolanos also have promised to revise the constitutional amendments that put the supreme court, electoral council, and other agencies in partisan political hands and that blocked most of the country's political parties from reaching the ballot.

Ortega, too, has vowed to respect private property and free speech and said that the vice presidency, foreign ministry, and attorney general's posts would go to prominent figures who were imprisoned by the Sandinistas in the 1980s.

Hurricane Michelle rams Cuban coast

By Anita Snow
Associated Press

HAVANA — Powerful Hurricane Michelle slammed into Cuba's coast on Sunday, packing winds up to 135 mph and heading toward the country's premier tourist resort as the government evacuated more than a half-million people from low-lying areas.

Heavy surf also pounded beaches in the lower Florida Keys, which forecasters say will likely be brushed by Michelle's winds after it slices crosswise through Cuba.

With forceful winds and a death toll of 12 already in Honduras, Nicaragua, and Jamaica, the storm had local relief officials worried.

"We are afraid that it will be our Mitch," said Virginia Huergo, a relief coordinator for the Cuban Red Cross, referring to the hurricane that ravaged Central America in 1998.

"We are prepared for the worst," she said.

The International Red Cross in Geneva reported that 24,500 Red Cross volunteers in Cuba were helping authorities of the government in evacuation efforts. Approximately 560,000 residents had been evacuated — mostly to the homes of friends or family — and 66,000 were in shelters.

Michelle made landfall around 4 p.m. EST on the Zapata Peninsula, on Cuba's southern coast in the central province of Matanzas near the Bay of Pigs, approximately 70 miles southeast of Havana, the home to 2 million of Cuba's 11 million citizens. It was moving northeast, putting Cuba's premier vacation resort, Varadero, near its path.

Throughout the day, Michelle had spread heavy rains over Cuba as it neared the island's coast. Accumulations of 10 to 20 inches were expected in its path. Earlier, state television showed winds whipping palm trees along a deserted street on the Isle of Youth, off the main island's southern coast.

Thousands of the Isle of Youth's 72,000 people had been moved from their homes to more secure shelter, and all electricity on the island had been shut off as a safety measure, Cuban television said.

In other developments:

- A Washington spokesman for the Northern Alliance, Haron Amin, said preparations are under way for a multi-pronged attack on various fronts in the north of Afghanistan.
- Myers said "there's a lot of planning going on right now" concerning possible nuclear and biological threats from terrorists, including threats posed by Iraq's Saddam Hussein.
- A helicopter that crashed in bad weather the night of Nov. 2 in Afghanistan while attempting to rescue a sick soldier was identified as an MH-

53, probably an Air Force "Pave Low" special-forces troop carrier. Four crew members aboard the downed craft were injured, none critically; they were taken out by a second helicopter on the mission. F-14 Tomcats from the USS Theodore Roosevelt destroyed the downed helicopter to prevent its wreckage from falling into enemy hands. On Nov. 3, two more helicopters returned to rescue the ill special-forces operative and succeeded in flying him out.

- Franks and Myers took issue with a report in The New Yorker that 12 members of the Army's super-secret Delta Force special operations unit were injured — three seriously — in a raid Oct. 20 of a house used by Taliban leader Mullah Mohammed Omar.

The magazine said 100 soldiers in the raid faced more resistance from Taliban forces than expected and had to fight their way to safety.

Myers said that while "the Taliban probably did return fire" that overall, "there was no resistance. The Taliban was in complete disarray."

"We had a bunch of these young people who had scratches and bumps and knocks from rocks ... so it's probably accurate to say that maybe five or maybe 25 people were 'wounded,'" Franks said. "We had no one wounded by enemy fire, and I think that is probably worthwhile noting."

Hygienic Lab waits for funds

HYGIENIC LAB

"It's much busier than normal," Skorton said. "There are more samples than ever to cover. Any cut in the budget would make it very hard to fulfill its mission."

Vilsack called for the special session to discuss the state's budget problems and restore funding to some agencies.

UI President Mary Sue Coleman said she requested the funds be restored to the lab, calling it a "special circumstance."

"It has had many new responsibilities thrust upon it because of what's happened," she said. "It's a very stressful time."

The lab recently tested suspicious packages that had been sent to Rockwell Collins offices in Manchester and Coralville. One package the avionics company received contained a white powder believed to be anthrax; it tested negative.

This has added to the Hygienic Lab's already long list of "large-scale" responsibilities, Skorton said, which includes air and water testing.

He said he did not know specifically where and how the money, if recovered, would be used at the lab.

Last month, the lab's director, Mary Gilchrist, asked Congress for $300 million to help fund bioterrorism efforts by upgrading and further staffing the 80 public-health facilities across the country. The request amounted to 25 times more than the average $12 million the federal government has granted for similar efforts in the past.

UI lab officials have said employees have been forced to work longer hours because of the lab's increase in duties; more funding would allow more help to be hired. Officials were unavailable for comment Sunday.

"We're hoping the Legislature will see fit to give the lab the budget it was originally supposed to have," Skorton said.

Meanwhile, Coleman echoed lawmakers when she said she doubted whether the university's general fund will also see monetary returns during the special session.

Public Safety to change procedure after criticism

But Brenda Gritsch, an administrative assistant in Seashore Hall who often handles mail, said she is weary of Public Safety's inaction after she discovered the suspicious envelope in Seashore Hall last month that fit at least five of the 18 warning signs listed in a Public Safety memo outlining the U.S. Postal Service's precautions for handling mail and packages.

"There is a general concern that [Public Safety] was slow to respond," Gritsch said.

When she notified the department, she said, she was instructed to seal the envelope in a plastic bag and throw it away, or an officer would come and do the same if she did not feel comfortable handling the envelope.

Gritsch said she didn't want to throw it away, and waited seven days until Carol Showalter from the UI Health Protection Office took the envelope and examined it.

We feel if it's something people have a general concern about, we should take a look at it.

— Dave Zarifis,
University of Northern Iowa
public-safety director

Public Safety later ordered Showalter to destroy the computer disk inside, marked "Christian Articles, World Trade Center Attack," saying it had finished evaluating the case, Showalter said.

Ed Alcock, the president of Local 12 of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, said it took a string of phone calls to various university officials and law-enforcement agencies before Public Safety responded and that officials acted "rude" and "defiant" toward his requests to remove the package.

"I'm saying that is not how you treat people when everyone is so scared about anthrax right now," he said.

At the University of Northern Iowa, Public Safety responded to reports of a suspicious object the same day, said Dave Zarifis, UNI's public-safety director. The department has received only one report of a suspicious object, from a concession stand at the UNI-Dome two weeks ago. Upon examination, the package was found to be merely a salt shaker in a toilet-paper roll, Zarifis said.

"We feel if it's something people have a general concern about, we should take a look at it," he said.

U.S. tries again on global trade

By Martin Crutsinger

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration believes it can succeed where the Clinton administration failed in launching a new round of global trade talks.

The administration is mindful that two years ago, the Clinton economic team also was optimistic about progress. That hope disappeared in a cloud of tear gas, as thousands of anti-globalization protesters scored a huge victory when the negotiations collapsed in Seattle.

U.S. Trade Representative Robert Zoellick will head the American delegation for the discussions with 141 other nations beginning Friday in Doha, Qatar.

Qatar was the only country willing to serve as host for the World Trade Organization meetings after Seattle, and WTO officials now are worried about possible terrorist attacks in a region where anger about the U.S. bombing campaign against Afghanistan runs high.

The U.S. delegation has been scaled down drastically. Many members of Congress and representatives of U.S. companies who had planned to attend as observers backed out after getting security briefings that detailed the level of threats.

The Bush administration insists it learned valuable lessons from the Clinton team's failures in Seattle. For one, the length of the document that will set the agenda for a new round of trade talks is 12 pages, compared with the 30-plus pages of draft text before trade ministers in Seattle.

Left purposely vague are details about the items to be covered in the upcoming negotiations.

"There is clearly an element here where we are trying to get the round launched rather than deal with all of the elements in it," said a senior administration trade official. Speaking on the condition of anonymity, the official provided a preview of the discussions to a small group of reporters.

Major U.S. business groups have endorsed the more general text. They are concerned that another failure to launch trade-liberalization negotiations would sap confidence just when the global economy is facing tough times.

"The biggest problem in Seattle was not the demonstrators. It was that countries, including the United States, tried to pre-negotiate a guaranteed outcome," said Frank Vargo, the vice president for trade at the National Association of Manufacturers.

"Even if it means the language has to be more general and less specific, let's just get a new round launched," he said.

The Bush administration, aware that the previous administration insisted that failure was not an option in Seattle, is more cautious about Doha.

"My sense is our ability to launch the new trade negotiation is within our grasp, but we still have a lot of work to do," the trade official said.

Trade ministers will have several important issues to settle in Doha.

The European Union objects to a demand by the United States and many developing countries that all farm-export subsidies be phased out. Europe relies heavily on subsidies to support its smaller, less efficient farms.

City Council Endorsements

At-large: John Robertson

John Robertson is the DI Editorial Board's choice for an Iowa City City Council at-large position because we feel he embodies the qualities needed to move Iowa City in the right direction.

Robertson wants to facilitate greater communication and cooperation, both within the council and between it and the community it represents. He has suggested televising all City Council matters, as well as providing packets of council-meeting information to the public.

In addition, Robertson would like to see greater cooperation between the city and the UI. Specifically, he feels the City Council "should meet at least once or twice a year on the campus to deal with student issues." This is the type of effort needed to truly incorporate students into the local community.

Robertson is also opposed to the way the council has attempted to deal with alcohol consumption and smoking in Iowa City. He understands that the roots of binge drinking are societal, not local, and that "we will never arrest our way to a solution." He also believes a complete smoking ban is "excessive."

Finally, John Robertson is opposed to giving tax incentives to companies that locate in Iowa City, as it increases the burden on payers of property taxes. He would like to see the council focus on increasing job opportunities rather than strictly increasing the tax base simply to bring in more revenue.

We feel that these are all admirable and obtainable goals for the City Council, and that John Robertson is the candidate who can make them all possible.

District B: Brandon Ross

Brandon Ross is running for the Iowa City City Council District B position. We support Ross because, if elected, he promises to represent the underrepresented UI student body.

Ross has strong environmental convictions. He opposed the extension of First Avenue, and he is against developing more parking ramps in the downtown area. He believes that stopping urban sprawl in and around Iowa City will preserve the core strength of the city. These interests, coupled with UI Student Government President Nick Klenske's dedication to recycling, will provide the basis for a strong relationship between the City Council and the university.

Ross believes that the current drinking ordinances for downtown businesses are unenforceable and that making all bars 21-only will hurt downtown businesses. He supports the Charter Amendments and police reforms and opposes arrests for nonviolent offenses, such as alcohol violations. He supports a smoking ban on all restaurants that make 65 percent of their revenue from food sales because it promotes a safe working environment.

As a renter, Ross also supports renters' rights and believes that responsible students are often taken advantage of by their landlords just because they are students. He advocates proper inspection of rental properties and prompt repairs of units.

Ross' diverse background as a teacher, writer, musician, and disc jockey gives him a unique perspective if elected to the City Council. His decision to run came when he realized no one was representing issues that affect students and the environment. Ross genuinely seeks to affect the policies of Iowa City by representing those who have previously had little say in local politics.

Creating 'Us' and 'Them'

I found James Armbrust's guest opinion (DI, Oct. 29) a well-reasoned rebuttal to the pacifist viewpoint. All the same, he was not able to convince me. The fact that, in referring to Afghan civilians, he felt obliged to put the word "innocents" in quotes, goes to the heart of the faulty premises on which his reasoning is based.

He is correct that fundamentalist states are tyrannies. But in characterizing whole cultures as "mystical" cult groups, he seems merely to be creating the requisite distance between "us" and "them" that is required in the bombing campaign. We have to reject these simplistic denials of common ground.

As a first step, imagine that your government has been forcibly taken over by an extremist religious group. Imagine you have been stripped of your rights, terrorized by draconian laws, and are trying to survive in a war-torn country. Now, imagine your new "government" cooperates in terrorist attacks on the world's most powerful nation. Would you consider yourself "innocent" of these attacks?

To continue the thought experiment, how would you react if, in the course of exacting justice, this superpower (which has the means to root out terrorism through legal, economic, diplomatic, and less-wholesale military actions) killed or maimed your loved ones? Say your home had been destroyed and you had to spend the winter watching friends and family members starve. Would you consider yourself "neutral"?

However you feel about America's political and economic policies abroad, it is clear that in some cases, at least, we do create our own enemies.

Booing to avoid mediocrity

Since the game of Oct. 27, I have had to endure person after person divulging on radio and in print how disappointed they are with the Iowa faithful's behavior. Having committed the terrible crime of booing disappointing play, Hawkeye fans should hang their heads shamefully and apologize to the team and coaches, forget the whole incident, and move on to only pleasantly cheering our team, no matter how it performs. Too bad it doesn't work like that, not if you ever hope to win.

The worst thing we as loyal Hawkeye fans can do to our sports team is accept mediocrity, and one way of displaying that we will not be giving voice to our displeasure over sub-par play. Fans cheer what they approve and jeer and boo what they do not; it is as much a part of the game as anything else. Kyle Galloway, being a former athlete at the university, I am most surprised at you for not realizing this. How many times have poor calls by the officials been viciously booed during games in Kinnick, and how many articles have I read telling me I should hang my head as a fan? I didn't think so.

The fans voicing their opinions of the team's play or the coaching staff's performance is no different. If the team and the coaches don't want to be booed, then they need to strive to not give the fans anything to boo. They need to improve. It is that simple. I have played in and attended enough sporting contests to know that fans do not boo good play. Fans will be fans, and Hawkeyes are some of the best — just give them something to cheer about.

Creating holidays that are absolutely the Bomb!

Except for the much-appreciated nude actions of a few devout Opinions page fans, I am sad to report that last month's World Naked Day was not the smashing international hit I had expected.

In light of this development, I have turned to my top military and political advisers. In a recent closed-door brainstorming session, we discussed strategy late into the night.

Given the current global penchant (on all sides of every fray) for getting back at people over getting naked with them, we as a planet have, as my advisers see it, only a few viable options for a much-needed transnational morale-building holiday.

In devising our planetary proposals, we took as a given that there are currently far too many bombs sitting uselessly in warehouses around the world. As we speak, millions of tons of highly explosive materials are being neglected. In a recent interview with a dormant bomb, I was particularly struck by the bomb's poignant message.

"I'm a bomb," the dormant bomb said. "All I want to do is explode."

I know, buddy. I know how you feel. Don't worry, though. Hang in there. As the old song goes, "These bombs were made for bombin' / and bombin's what they'll do ..." You didn't think we were just gonna build you to have you sit around in a warehouse and scare people for the rest of your life, did you? Everyone knows that the purpose of building weapons is not to prevent warfare.

"I don't care whom I explode on or in what nation's name or for whose God," the sad bomb added. "That's all a bunch of rubbish to me. All I want is just to explode."

In the name of that sad little bomb, and for citizens in all corners of the world, we propose the following worldwide holidays:

World Bomb an Island Day
 Under this plan, each nation of the world would get to bomb one island of its choice. That island would be decided by the nation's citizens in either A) a democratic nationwide vote or B) a Time/CNN poll. There are plenty of islands out there that, frankly, are not very important to global political and economic stability. Corsica, for instance. Islands that are also countries, such as Japan and Greenland, are off limits. Well, except for Australia. Australia is OK to bomb. As long as your country votes democratically. Or the Time/CNN/TimeWarner/AOL/NBC/CIA/Keebler/NATO poll says the public's approval rating is at least 37 percent. Then you can bomb Australia.

Jesse Elliott

DRAWING CONCLUSIONS ON THE WALL

World Bomb-Walk Day
 The format for this holiday would follow the same guidelines as the traditional charity cakewalk. Rich individuals and media conglomerates would be invited to make donations in order participate in the walk. With the bombs they win, they could bomb other individuals and media conglomerates, or anyone else, really. As long as they don't hoard the bombs. Nobody likes a bomb-hoarder. Bomb-hoarding is what we are trying to get away from here.

World Bomb the Red Cross Day

We can't take complete credit for this whopper of an idea. The United States has already taken bold new steps in the implementation of a bombing campaign focused on the international terrorist organization known as the "Red Cross." With global participation, World Bomb the Red Cross Day could successfully give up to 30,000 bombs a place to finally explode. Plus, it would strengthen the economy ... somehow ... I think ...

World Bomb Some Dirt Day
 Again, our international council is following the lead of the United States with this bold, new bombing proposal. While not busy bombing the Red Cross into submission last week, U.S. fighter planes spent their days and nights bombing large portions of apparently strategically placed Taliban dirt into submission. The rebel Northern Alliance commended the efforts, noting in an interview yesterday morning: "Troops? Who bombs troops nowadays, honestly? Today's wars are being fought in the dirt, and as such it is imperative to bomb dirt instead of the enemy." The alliance later retracted the comment, noting that in reality most of what the jets had bombed was actually sand.

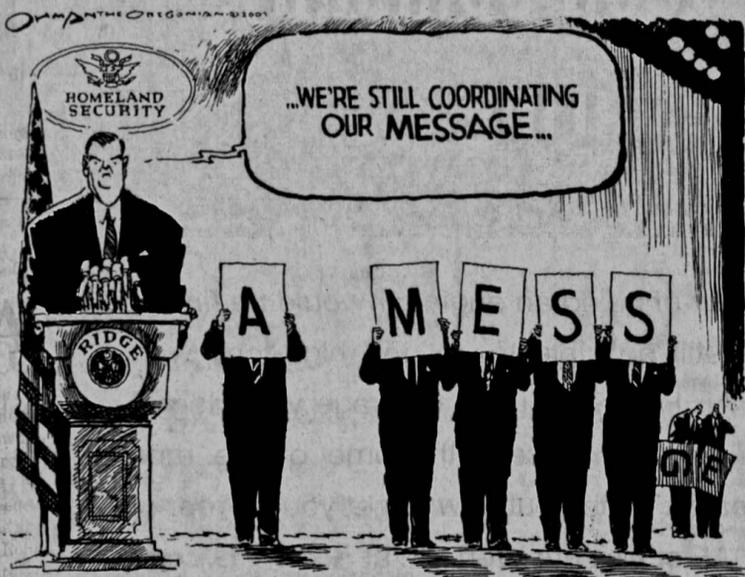

World Bomb the Rest of the World Day

This is really the most politically practical solution to the world's cry for more bombs to be dropped on the rest of the world. You have to give the people what they want, don't you? The collective planetary pandemonium that would ensue after a World Bomb the Rest of the World Day would delight astrological, environmental, and religious leaders alike, finally giving them a chance to apocalyptically declare, "You see. I told you so." Sales of the Bible and of Nostradamus lunch boxes would skyrocket, again strengthening the economy.

During my interview with that sad, dormant bomb, I learned a valuable lesson. I learned that I need to stop worrying and just love the bomb. Because bombs are people, too. And we need to stop giving human beings priority over bombs just because we don't recognize the bombs' humanity. I have undergone an important change of heart, and I now believe that, together, we can fight the forces of nakedness, and love, and openness, and bomb prejudice.

Together, we can bomb each other into oblivion. We can't do it any other way; we're going to need everyone's support to pull this off.

High drama in fabulous postmodern feminism

By Tracy Nemitz
The Daily Iowan

As far as writing is concerned, Lily James has almost done it all — advice columns, movie and CD reviews, magazine articles, short fiction, non-fiction, and novels.

Yet, despite her extensive list of published works, she remains outside of the mainstream — at least for the time being.

Her newest novel, High Drama in Fabulous Toledo, was recently nominated for Booksense 76, a list of books recommended by booksellers to each other, and reputable bookstores such as Prairie Lights Books are starting to take notice of her work.

James said the best way to make her name known is to get out there and network, which she will do at her reading today at 8 p.m. at Prairie Lights, 15 S. Dubuque St.

"Selling books is like handling a growing business," she said. "You need to get out there, and shake hands, and make friends."

You have to push yourself. If I'm on an airplane, I introduce myself as, "Hi, I'm Ellen. I'm a writer. I think you should read my book. In fact, I think you should buy the book for all your friends — it would make a great Christmas present."

High Drama in Fabulous Toledo tells the postmodern story of a woman named Ellen who is afraid that life is passing her by. She is kidnapped and finds that the life she is forced into is more intriguing than the mundane life she was taken from, and she decides not to return.

While some literary critics and scholars argue that the postmodern literary movement is over, James said aspects of it are still very much a part of today's fiction.

"Postmodernism examined what was standard and traditional and then tore everything down; it was based on breaking the rules," she said. "Now, we are looking at what new things we can make from the pieces, what we can do with this freedom. Now we are asking the question, 'What is the new shape of a narrative?'"

High Drama in Fabulous Toledo is actually a blend of both traditional and defiance of the norm, she said.

"What I wrote was very character-based and traditional," James said. "But now, I can do whatever I want with the characters. There is a lot of weird shit that happens in this book, and it is possible because of postmodernism."

Take, for example, the kidnappers in the book. Mary is an electro-sex princess, and Stef is a bouncer by day and a barbarian warrior the rest of the time. These two fuel the traditional plot of the kidnapping, shaping a classic plot into an unpredictable and humorous story.

James, who for the time being can only make it to two cities to promote the book, said the stop at Prairie Lights is very exciting. She will not only read from her novel but some of her nonfiction pieces as well. James, who has become an expert on postfeminism, hopes to share some of her insights with the audience.

"The feminist movement has left some bruises on men, and some women not sure how to identify themselves as women," she said. "Obviously, feminism was necessary, but it has alienated and disturbed a lot of people. It has gotten better the past few years."

James said an example was the movie Charlie's Angels.

"Those women are hot, and they kick ass, and are smart, and do what they want. But they can also wear leather pants and do the hair-flippy thing to get guys," she said. "We're still women, and guys should treat us as women."

Film: Hedwig and the Angry Inch
Director: John Cameron Mitchell
Writer: Mitchell
Starring: Mitchell, Michael Pitt, Miriam Shor, and Stephen Trask
Length: 91 minutes
Rated: R

By Aaron McAdams
The Daily Iowan

"It is clear that I must find my other half," says Hedwig Schmidt (John Cameron Mitchell). "But will it be a man or a woman? Will they be exactly like me, or will they be somehow ... complementary?"

Fun and painful, spiritual and sexual, Hedwig and the Angry Inch is fabulous as a giddy rock musical, but it is even more impressive as a tale of one individual's search for identity. As the film's glittery musical numbers tell us, rock 'n' roll is not always a road to fame but sometimes a necessity of self-understanding.

Hedwig's drag-diva persona and the name of her backing band, the Angry Inch, stem from a botched sex-change operation that left her no longer a man but certainly not a woman. Embarking on a tour of lifeless middle-American diners, Hedwig uses her music as catharsis, forcing her twisted history of escape from communist East Berlin, desertion by her husband, and subsequent search for wholeness, on her unwitting audiences.

Though clearly indebted to both Tim Curry in The Rocky Horror Picture Show and Joel Grey in Cabaret, Mitchell is nonetheless outstanding as the ringmaster of Hedwig's glam-rock circus. Through Stephen Trask's first-rate pieces of mock-epic rock, Mitchell finds the sympathetic side of Hedwig's bawdy self-objectification, letting tragedy peek through her dry, self-deprecating humor.

Despite the sadness that underlies them, Hedwig is packed with lines to make you grin. A product of a fractured Germany, Hedwig's only childhood joy was American Armed Forces Radio, which his mother made him listen to in the oven. The music of Toni Tennille, Lou Reed, and David Bowie "made as much of an impression on me as the oven rack made on my face," Hedwig muses.

In addition, Hedwig takes plenty of jabs at pop culture, slyly poking fun at the comparatively tame Broadway musical Rent for shamelessly misrepresenting the counter-culture that Hedwig has lived to the fullest extent. Mitchell directs as skillfully as he acts, happily departing from conventional realism as Hedwig chews glowing, larger-than-life gummy bears, traverses a sensual sea of Adding to Hedwig's torment is the success of MTV-certified rock star Tommy Gnosis (Michael Pitt). When Hedwig performs "The Origin of Love" and sings of people split from their "other half" at the beginning of time, we soon realize that Tommy, Hedwig's former lover and protégé, is the key to her quest.

Hedwig and the Angry Inch turns the fairy tale of the rock star upside down. While Hedwig may claim he is searching for stardom, he is really searching for love and someone to complete the tattoo of a fractured human life he wears on his hip. True, the glow of rock 'n' roll lights this film, but it is the tragic history from which the music grows that gives it substance.

D-Back magic

Arizona ends New York's reign with a 3-2 win

By Ben Walker
 Associated Press

PHOENIX — The final comeback belonged to the Arizona Diamondbacks, and it was the greatest of all.

Luis Gonzalez hit an RBI single to cap a two-run rally off Mariano Rivera in the bottom of the ninth inning, and Arizona stunned the New York Yankees, 3-2, in Game 7 Sunday night.

The Yankees were only two outs from their fourth-straight World Series title when it all fell apart.

Tony Womack tied it with an RBI double, and, after Craig Counsell was hit by a pitch to load the bases, Gonzalez blooped a soft single to center field.

Rivera, who had saved 23-straight postseason games, could do nothing but watch the ball fall in to end the Yankees' dynasty.

What began as a November duel between Curt Schilling and Roger Clemens climaxed with the Diamondbacks winning the title in just their fourth year of existence. It was the fastest rise in history, breaking the mark of five years set by the 1997 Florida Marlins.

The Diamondbacks did it by bouncing back from two of the toughest losses in Series history. They dropped Games 4 and 5 at Yankee Stadium, blowing two-run leads in the bottom of the ninth both times.

Randy Johnson, at 38, earned the victory in relief. He also won Game 6 on Nov. 3, a 15-2 romp.

Johnson and many other Arizona old-timers such as Mark Grace, Matt Williams, and Mike Morgan won their first championship ring.

The Yankees, the team that would not give up, nearly won it for the city that would not give in. A highly motivated bunch, they showed extra resolve after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks in New York.

The Yankees were a home-run swing away from elimination in the first round against Oakland, and they lost the first two games at Bank One Ballpark.

But back in the desert, they looked lost.

Alfonso Soriano's solo homer off Schilling put New York ahead 2-1 in the eighth. Rivera, the most dominant reliever in postseason history, set down the Diamondbacks in the bottom half.

Then in the ninth, Arizona rallied.

Grace led off with a single, and Rivera threw away Damian Miller's bunt for an error, putting runners at first and second.

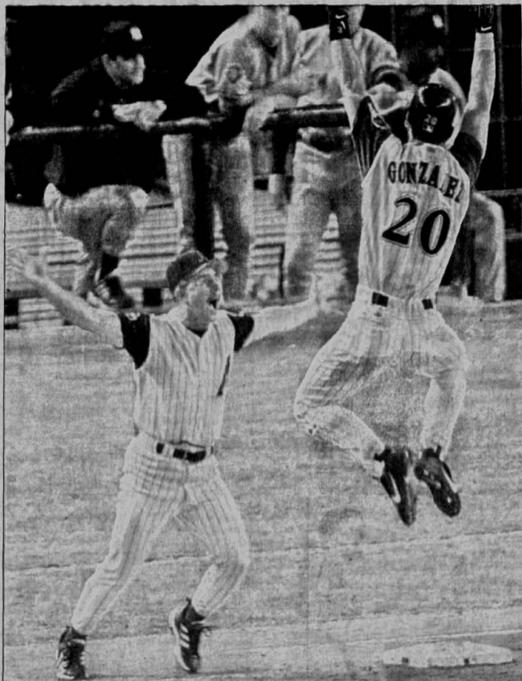

Jay Bell bunted into a force play at third, but Womack lined a tying double to the right-field corner. Counsell, who scored the winning run in Game 7 with Florida in 1997, was hit by a pitch.

With the infield in, Gonzalez hit it hard enough for a game-winning single that set off fireworks, pounding music, and deafening cheers.

The Yankees fell to 5-6 overall in deciding Game 7s of the Series.

Schilling was nearly untouchable at the start. The first pitcher to start three games in a

Costly penalties, turnovers plague Iowa in another Big Ten road loss

By Melinda Mawdsley
 The Daily Iowan

MADISON, Wis. — Eight games into the season, Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz expected injuries to befall his team. But all he could do was shrug his shoulders in regards to the sluggish start and continuing carelessness of the Hawkeyes in a 34-28 loss at Wisconsin — problems for which he blamed himself.

"It's my job to make sure our guys are ready," he said. "We weren't quite ready."

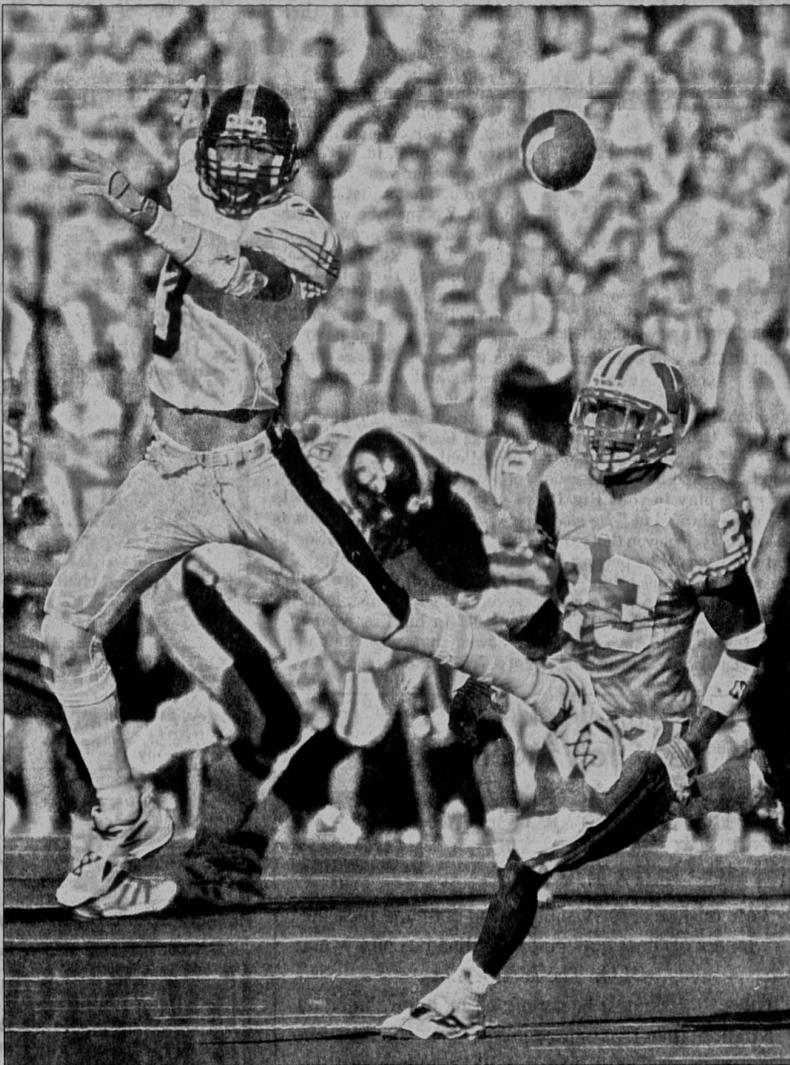

Seven first-half penalties at the cost of 58 yards, along with two costly turnovers just before the half, prevented Iowa from gaining any momentum and a marginal lead.

Trailing 20-14 in the second quarter, senior running back Ladell Betts fumbled the ball while trying to make a cut, and Wisconsin's Wendell Bryant recovered at Iowa's 22-yard line. One Anthony Davis rush and one Brook Bollinger pass later, the Badgers pushed their lead to 27-14.

Senior quarterback Kyle McCann, who was pulled in the first quarter, re-entered with 2:38 left in the half to engineer the Hawkeyes' two-minute offense.

Showing an efficiency that earned him the starting spot all season, McCann led Iowa down the field. Nearing Wisconsin's end zone, he took the snap and surged to the five-yard line before fumbling as he hit the ground. Badger Bryson Thompson fell on the football, and the Hawkeyes'

MADISON, Wis. — Kudos to the Wisconsin Badgers for doing their homework.

They knew entering their Nov. 3 game with Iowa that the Hawkeyes were bringing a banged-up defense and an inexperienced secondary to Camp Randall Stadium. The results were not surprising.

As he has done with most of the Big Ten teams, receiver Lee Evans lit up Iowa defensive backs on multiple occasions. Evans finished the day with 175 yards on seven catches. He probably would have had more if running back Anthony Davis hadn't had such a great day as well. Davis racked up 132 yards on the ground, slashing his way through a patchwork defense.

And Iowa?

The Hawkeyes faced a similar situation. Ladell Betts rushed for more than 100 yards on a defensive line that had lost three starters from Wisconsin's first game. Iowa was even presented with a young Badger secondary to attack as well, yet the Hawkeyes finished the game with just 213 yards passing.

Kirk Ferentz continues to say Iowa's losses are his fault because of the team's lack of preparation. While coaching plays a pivotal role in both

It was Iowa field-hockey coach Tracey Griesbaum's goal to win three games in three days at the Big Ten Tournament last weekend. Unfortunately, Ohio State came in the way Sunday, knocking the Hawkeyes off in the championship round, 2-1.

"As soon as the game was over today, we had to watch Ohio State get the trophy," Griesbaum said. "I think the team really took it hard. Our goal was to win the tournament, and we came up short. I felt like we were in the game. It hurt players that we didn't win; we were one goal short."

Jenee Doto converted on a pass from Lorena Margni for the Buckeyes' first goal at 13:46. Rebekah Heavrin tied up the score for Iowa four minutes later on a penalty corner.

Ohio State took the lead again with a goal from Margni on a penalty corner. The Hawkeyes earned their own

Bears win in overtime thriller

CHICAGO (AP) — Mike Brown returned an interception 16 yards for a game-winning touchdown for the second-straight week, giving the Bears (6-1) their sixth-straight win.

Trailing 21-7, the Bears scored two touchdowns in the final 28 seconds of regulation. James Allen caught a 34-yard pass from Shane Matthews that the Browns (4-3) tried to bat down in the end zone on the final play.

Chicago, which beat the 49ers, 37-31, in overtime Oct. 28 on Brown's 33-yard interception return after trailing by 19 points in the second half, couldn't move in overtime. Brad Maynard's 52-yard punt pinned the Browns (4-3) at their 12.

On second down, Couch's pass was tipped by Bryan Robinson, and Brown was there again, carrying the ball 16 yards to the end zone and then all the way out of the stadium.

Matthews' 9-yard pass to Marty Booker with 28 seconds left preceded Bobby Howard recovering an onside kick at the Browns' 47.

Cleveland looked in control, getting a fumble return for a TD from Courtney Brown on the second play of the game, inter-

Kansas gives Terry Allen the boot

By Doug Tucker
 Associated Press

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Terry Allen, the only coach in Kansas football history to keep his job after four-straight losing seasons, could not make it through a fifth.

Vowing to raise the lowly Jayhawks to the top of the Big 12, Athletics Director Al Bohl announced Sunday that Allen had been dismissed. Defensive coordinator and secondary coach Tom Hayes will be in charge the final three games but has no guarantee beyond that.

Allen, 20-33 at Kansas and increasingly unpopular with alumni, urged everyone to get behind the new coach.

"I'm sorry we were not successful," Allen said, while Bohl and Hayes waited to come to the front of the room and speak.

"We did our best and didn't fulfill what we needed to do. Success in this league is very difficult."

Under intense pressure to deliver a winning season in Bohl's first season as his boss, Allen, 44, faced the NCAA's toughest schedule.

Besides Big 12 powers Nebraska, Oklahoma, Kansas State, and Texas, the Jayhawks also played UCLA. A 51-7 loss to No. 2 Nebraska on Nov. 3 — after he had already been told he was fired — left the Jayhawks 2-6, 1-5 in the conference.

"We stumbled early on some things we needed to do. But the reality of the situation is, this is the toughest league in college football," Allen said.

Bohl, who led revivals at Toledo and Fresno State in lesser conferences, said he would tolerate nothing less than Championship football.

"I really believe what our objective should be at Kansas is to try to play in that Big 12 championship game," he said. "Because if you play in that game and win it, you'll be playing for the national championship."

Kansas has not won a conference title since it tied for the Big Eight championship in 1968. That was also the last year the Jayhawks beat Nebraska.

"It can be done at Kansas," Bohl said. "It will be done."

Asked how long it might take, Bohl replied, "I want us to get started in the next three games."

Allen's firing came as no surprise to his players.

"That's just the way it goes with the college football business," senior defensive tackle Nate Dwyer said. "It's cut-throat. Either you win or you get fired. That's just the way that is. We knew he was being

Injuries haunting Hawkeyes in late season

Injuries continued to plague Iowa, with Dallas Clark and Bob Sanders exiting the game before it concluded. The Hawkeye defense struggled throughout the game to stop the Badgers.

By Todd Brommelkamp
The Daily Iowan

With mounting injuries, Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz continued to shuffle his starting lineups on offense and defense for Iowa's Nov. 3 game with Wisconsin.

The Hawkeyes trotted out five first-time starters this season in their 34-28 loss to Wisconsin.

Defensively, the Hawkeyes featured four new faces, with two defensive backs and two linemen making their first appearances. Defensive back D.J. Johnson switched from safety to cornerback, which allowed for Derek Pagel to start at safety.

On the defensive line, Jared Clauss started his third game, while Joe Uselman got significant playing time, filling in for the injured Derrick Pickens and Jerry Montgomery.

"We have some obstacles to overcome right now from a health standpoint," Ferentz said. "But we know what we have to do, and we've got plenty of time to do it."

Iowa's offense featured a new starter as well, as tight end Eric Jensen filled in for Dallas Clark. Clark played on Nov. 3 but left the game in the second quarter after injuring his knee on a catch.

On the other hand

While five players drew their first starts, six did not get the chance to play.

In addition to Pickens and Montgomery on defense and Clark on offense, the Hawkeyes were also without the services of defensive backs Matt Stockdale, Shane Hall, and Chris Smith.

"We've just got to rally with what we've got and go," Ferentz said.

Offensive lineman Alonzo Cunningham and defensive back Bob Sanders also left the game with injuries.

Cunningham was involved in only six plays on Iowa's first two possessions before missing the rest of the game. Sanders did not see any action for the Hawkeyes during the second half after recording six tackles in the first half.

No help from redshirts

Fans hoping to see some of Iowa's talented 2001 recruiting class on the field this season may be in for a disappointment.

Ferentz may wish to use some of the players at positions that have been riddled by injuries, but the class has been adamant about sticking together.

While such decisions are not made on a whim, Ferentz did not rule out the possibility of still trying to change some players' minds.

"I don't think at this stage it would be wise [to use them]," he said. "We haven't hit the practice field yet, either."

Hill catching on

Senior wide receiver Kahlil Hill kept his streak of games with at least one reception alive with six receptions for 97 yards.

Hill has caught a pass in 31-consecutive games — each game of his Iowa career. His streak ranks eighth in the nation among receivers.

100 X 2

Running back Ladell Betts picked up his second 100-yard rushing performance of the season with 121 yards on Nov. 3. Betts rushed for 172 yards against Indiana on Oct. 20.

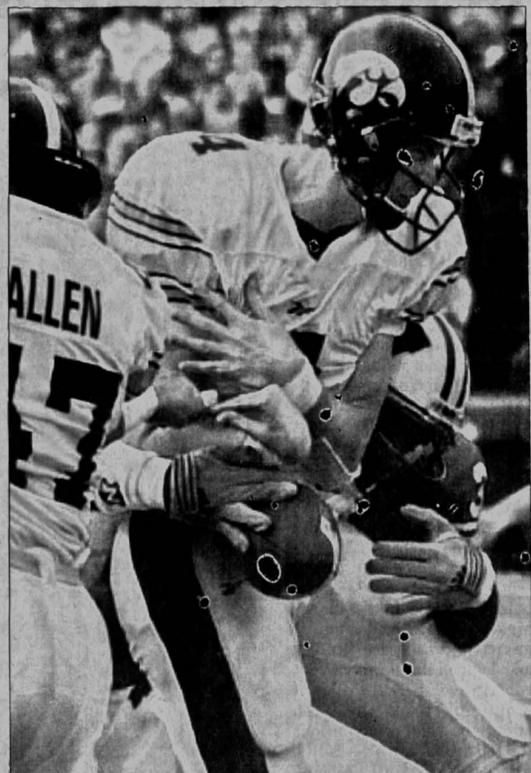

With three games remaining in his Iowa career, the senior back now has 11 such performances. Also, with his 38-yard touchdown run in the third quarter, Betts moved into 11th on Iowa's all-time scoring charts, with 132 points.

Hawks draw big crowd

The Badgers set a new season-high for attendance Nov. 3, drawing 79,421 fans to watch their game with Iowa.

It was the largest crowd to watch a Wisconsin game at Camp Randall Stadium since Nov. 15, 1997, when the Badgers hosted Michigan.

BYU is making a move in the AP media poll.

The Cougars (9-0), one of three teams without a loss, cracked the top 10 for the first time in five years at No. 9 in the Associated Press Top 25 poll.

Miami (7-0) and Nebraska (10-0), the other major college unbeaten, remained 1-2 in the poll, and Oklahoma, Florida, and Texas held steady from a week ago and Nos. 3-4-5.

BYU, which beat Colorado State, 56-34, Nov. 1, finished No. 5 in the final poll of the 1996 season. The Cougars, under first-year coach Gary Crowton, were No. 13 last week.

Miami, 38-0 winner over Temple, received 55 first-place votes and 1,781 points in Sunday's balloting by the 72 sports-writers and broadcasters on the AP panel. Nebraska had the remaining 17 first-place votes and 1,745 points.

In the USA Today/ESPN coaches poll, the top five are Miami, Nebraska, Florida, Oklahoma, and Texas.

OXFORD, Miss. — For six overtimes, Arkansas and Mississippi matched plays and scores.

Finally, in the seventh overtime — the most ever in a Division I game — the Razorbacks were 2 points better and the Rebels two yards short.

Jermain Petty stopped Mississippi tight end Doug Zeigler 2 yards from the end zone on a 2-point conversion try Nov. 3 to give the Razorbacks a 58-56 victory.

"There wasn't really a loser," Rebels quarterback Eli Manning said. "We just came up short."

Manning threw a school-record six touchdowns, five in overtime. He finished 27-for-42 for 312 yards.

Arkansas freshman Mike Jones was Manning's equal.

Jones — who came off the bench to replace Zak Clark — ran for 110 yards and two OT touchdowns. He also threw a 24-yard TD to George Wilson in the fourth overtime and found Decori Birmingham in

Hawkeyes rack up 109 points in first exhibition competition

By Roseanna Smith
The Daily Iowan

Iowa women's basketball coach Lisa Bluder has yet to draw any conclusions in her search for a perfect starting five.

Though the Hawkeyes clearly dominated all the statistical numbers in their 109-50 victory over Johnson Financial in Sunday's exhibition game, Bluder said the opener wasn't necessarily an accurate assessment of the upcoming year.

"I thought we played pretty well for a first game," she said. "I don't know if we were exactly tested tonight, but at the same time, I thought we did some nice things execution-wise with good help on defense and a great job on the boards."

Iowa started off with Illinois transfer Kristi Faulkner at point guard, seniors Lindsey Meder and Leah Magnier at guard, and Beatrice Bullock and Jennie Lillis down low, but substituted several different groupings from the 12th minute on. The combinations ranged from small — Lillis, Jerica Watson, April Calhoun, Meder, and Jenna Armstrong — to tall — Becca McCann, Tracey Schrupp, Jamie Cavey, Armstrong, and Calhoun.

Bluder said she hoped to come to a conclusion about the starting lineup by breaking the groupings down by scoring production and studying game film. This way, the questions surrounding a set point guard and center may be resolved.

Down low, both Bullock and Watson saw considerable minutes on the court. Bullock started the game and led the rebounding effort with nine boards. Watson's six assists led the team, working well on the run with both Armstrong and Faulkner.

"Really, I feel like either Beatrice or Jerica can play," Bluder said. "I feel very comfortable with either one. It gives us a different look, but I didn't feel like one was better than the other; I think both had some really good points."

Freshmen Armstrong, Calhoun, and Faulkner each had strong showings in their Iowa debuts in front of a crowd of 3,904. Armstrong was hot from the 3-point line, hitting 5-of-7 and scoring 25 points, and Faulkner and Calhoun traded off at the point.

Meder said she was impressed with the progression of the three new guards.

"Kristi is doing a great job leading us at the point and is showing a lot of poise," Meder said. "Jenna did a great job shooting, and April is going hard at it. She's going to give her full-heart effort every single time."

On the other side of the court, former Iowa guard Mary Berdo led Johnson Financial with 18 points. Though her infamously deep 3-point shot wasn't on, Berdo converted 9-of-12 from the free-throw line.

Iowa picked up 18 defensive rebounds and eight steals. Bluder said the Hawkeyes' intensity would have to improve for this week's game with Athletes in Action, featuring former Iowa center Randi Peterson.

"The improved competition will be good for us," she said. "We need to have that for the Marquette game [Nov. 13]. We can't go into Marquette with a false sense of confidence like you could get if you played two of these [same] exhibition games. We need some competitive competition, which I'm sure we'll see Thursday."

Volleyball team gets win at home

By Tyler Lechtenberg
The Daily Iowan

Harmony Hauser/The Daily Iowan
Carolyn Giese spikes the ball during the match against Michigan at Carver-Hawkeye Arena on Nov. 3.

The truth came out.

After dropping a 3-0 match to Michigan State on Nov. 2, the Iowa volleyball team embodied coach Rita Buck-Crockett's positive attitude during the season in a 3-1 thrashing of Michigan on Nov. 3.

"That's what we see every day in practice," she said after the win. "I told them that I believe in them, and when they start believing in themselves, we'll get over the hill. And they did it."

The Hawkeyes have been climbing the hill all season. After the weekend split, Iowa's record sits at 4-18 overall, 2-12 in the Big Ten. Michigan's record dropped to 11-10 overall, 7-7 in the Big Ten. Michigan State improved to 15-6 overall, 8-6 in the Big Ten after the weekend.

Consistent play, the main thing the Hawkeyes had been searching for, keyed the Hawkeyes in their win over the Wolverines. Freshman Kassy Petty started at setter for the second time in her volleyball career, but her leadership on the court overshadowed any inexperience, Buck-Crockett said.

"She is leading the team," Buck-Crockett said. "We missed that — we didn't have a leader. The rest of the team is accepting that leadership role by her."

Petty set up Hawkeye hitters all game long, leading the team with 47 assists. Senior Sara Meyer-mann, the Big Ten's kills leader, paced the Hawkeyes with 22, while freshman Cathi Netemeyer, a big spark off the bench, and sophomore Renee Hill chipped in with 13 and 11 kills, respectively.

The match began with Iowa playing well in bursts, but Michigan kept a steady level of play to take the first game, 30-22.

The second game started out with the two teams battling back and forth, eventually tying at 6-6. Then the Hawkeyes went on a 7-1 run to bring the score to 13-7, and from there the team never looked back. Netemeyer came off the bench and produced for the Hawkeyes; her four kills in five attempts helped Iowa close the second game with a 30-23 win.

Retaining momentum after intermission, Iowa jumped out to a 5-0 lead in game three. Michigan made a few mini-runs against the Hawkeyes, but Iowa fought off the rallies by staying aggressive and eventually won the third game, 30-22.

Iowa finished off the Wolverines in the final game in much the same fashion, taking the driver's seat early and never hitting the brakes. The Hawkeyes snapped their five-match losing streak with a 30-25 game-four victory.

Iowa's blocking skills showed Nov. 3, as the Hawkeyes out-blocked the visitors, 16-9.

Another key was role-playing by players such as Netemeyer and sophomore walk-on Erica Bertini, who started at defensive specialist for the Hawkeyes.

"We had nine players who were solid, and they came to play," Buck-Crockett said. "Everybody that we did put in did well. There was just a different feeling."

That feeling didn't quite show on Nov. 2 against Michigan State. The Spartans swept Iowa, 30-22, 30-16, 30-22, and never allowed the Hawkeyes to get into any semblance of a rhythm.

Meyer-mann again led the Hawkeyes in kills, with 16, while Petty racked up 25 assists. Freshman defensive specialist Pam Kavadas led the team with 10 digs in the loss.

But it was the team's play on Nov. 3 that will be remembered. The victory came as both an energizer and a relief to the team, Petty said.

"It feels incredible," she said. "It's a relief because it was frustrating to work so hard and not get anything out of it."

NEW YORK — This New York City Marathon was unlike any other — and not just because both winners set course records.

Tesfaye Jifar of Ethiopia and Margaret Okayo of Kenya pulled away for comfortable victories Sunday in a red-white-and-blue affair dedicated to the victims of Sept. 11.

Those colors were everywhere along the 26.2-mile course through the city's five boroughs: the arcs of balloons spanning the bridge at the start, where 50 doves were released; the lines painted on the asphalt to indicate the route; on shirts, shorts, and hats worn by runners; on flags and signs held by fans.

"It was very moving. Every time I went by a firehouse, I couldn't help but tip my hat," said 1984 Olympic champion Joan Benoit Samuelson, ninth among U.S. women and 21st overall.

"The crowds were thicker than I can recall being along First Avenue and in the Park when I've run here before. I hope this will help in the healing process for the city."

The marathon adopted the motto "United We Run," and there was a view of lower Manhattan, where the World Trade Center once stood, as runners crossed the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge. About 10 people ran in place of relatives killed Sept. 11, including Ralph Maerz, a 56-year-old ex-smoker whose 29-year-old son Noell died in Tower 2.

There were about 25,000 runners, roughly 5,000 fewer than normal, a disparity race organizers attributed to fears about safety.

Runners were told not to accept cups of water from spectators lining the course. The unprecedented marathon security also included more than 2,800 police officers and a no-flight zone banning private airplanes over the route.

The champions' performances Sunday were impressive, both generated in part by midrace breakaways under clear skies and with barely a breeze. Their times perhaps were helped by the first change in the course since 1977: Organizers eliminated a hill near Central Park, making for a flatter finish.

Asked if she would have broken the course record if that hill were still part of the race, Okayo didn't hesitate: "No, no way."

Jifar ran the 26.2 miles in 2 hours, 7 minutes, 43 seconds to become the first Ethiopian to win the race. He broke the 12-year-old mark of 2:08:01 set by Tanzania's Juma Ikangaa.

Okayo separated herself from other top women at about the 15-mile mark, shedding her black wool gloves as the temperature approached 60. She finished in 2:24:21, trimming 19 seconds off the race record set by Australia's Lisa Ondieki in 1992.

Jifar and Okayo each won $80,000 for finishing first, plus bonus money ($50,000 for him, $35,000 for her) for setting course records. It was the fourth time the men's and women's course records were broken on the same day in New York.

Jifar's first competitive race was just three years ago and he had never won a marathon. His older brother, Habte, is a world-class 10,000-meter runner, and he persuaded Tesfaye to try the sport.

Jifar was only seventh at the World Championships in August, but he looked like an experienced marathoner Sunday. He stayed right with the early leaders until each dropped off the pace, then separated from his final challenger, Kenya's Japhet Kosgei, with about three miles left.

Kosgei, the runner-up for the second-straight year, finished in 2:09:19. Another Kenyan, Rodgers Rop, was third, 32 seconds back.

Yankee errors prove costly

SERIES

Series since Minnesota's Jack Morris in 1991, he once again showed no ill effects from working on three days' rest.

Schilling allowed only one hitter to reach through six innings, and even that guy did not last long on the bases. Paul O'Neill, playing his final game before retiring, was thrown out trying to stretch a double into a triple in the first.

But given a 1-0 lead in the sixth on Danny Bautista's RBI double, Schilling gave it back.

A strange wind started swirling through the ballpark to start the top of the seventh. Maybe it was a precursor of what was to come because moments later, Arizona had blown its edge.

Schilling retired 16-straight hitters before slumping Derek Jeter led off with a single, and O'Neill followed with a single in front of center fielder Steve Finley.

Up came Bernie Williams, and Yankees manager Joe Torre had no intention to bunt with his No. 3 hitter. Besides, Williams has not had a sacrifice since 1996.

With Miguel Batista and Brian Anderson warming in the Arizona bullpen, Williams grounded into a force play that left runners at the corners.

Tino Martinez tied it with an RBI single, and Schilling escaped further trouble by getting two fly balls. Finley ran a long way into the right-center field gap to track down Shane Spencer's drive that ended the inning.

Clemens, pitching the biggest game of his great career, worked out of several early jams. The Diamondbacks caught up to him in the sixth after Finley led off with a single.

Bautista was next, and many people thought the man with five RBIs in the Nov. 3 15-2 romp would bunt. Arizona manager Bob Brenly once again crossed up his critics and let Bautista swing away, and it worked.

Bautista hit a drive into the left-center gap, and Clemens simply stood on the mound with his right hand on hip, watching the play unfold.

Finley scored easily, and Bautista was nailed at third on a fast, acrobatic relay by — who else? — Jeter.

Clemens, prone to being too pumped-up for big games, kept himself calm on the mound in the early going. Composed, he talked to catcher Jorge Posada before big pitches and listened to pitching coach Mel Stottlemyre's advice in the dugout.

The Rocket was more revved in other ways. He dropped a toss at first base while tripping over the bag for an error and later swung so hard that he stumbled across home plate.

Clemens was pulled after 6 1-3 innings with 10 strikeouts. He left without a Game 7 victory, the only thing missing on his Hall of Fame résumé.

The usually steady Yankees looked shaky in the field, again. Soriano and Clemens made errors, and the noisy crowd seemed to cause confusion on a couple other balls.

New York made seven errors against Arizona after committing a total of only five in the past three World Series.

Ferentz says both quarterbacks will see action against Northwestern chance to pull within a touchdown disappeared.

"Anytime we got stopped, it was mostly because of what we did," Betts said. "Turnovers killed us, especially mine."

However, the Hawkeyes' offense filtered back onto the field with an increased intensity to start the third quarter.

Led by junior back-up Brad Banks for the second half, Iowa found the end zone on its first two possessions. The first drive was all Betts, as he ran four times for 56 yards, including a zig-zag 38-yard touchdown run.

For the afternoon, he had 121 yards on 15 carries for an impressive 8.1 yards per carry average.

Wisconsin answered with a touchdown, as Bollinger and Davis continued their assault on Iowa's defense. But Banks rallied back, orchestrating his own 71-yard drive capped off by a one-yard scoring run to keep the game close through three quarters.

Both offenses dried up in the fourth, as the Hawkeyes' defense gave its own offense several opportunities for a comeback win — to no avail.

Poor offensive execution at the game's beginning and end, along with porous defensive play for a majority of Nov. 3, presented Bollinger and his Wisconsin offense ample opportunities to protect its weak defense.

After the game, Ferentz continued speaking about the need for his team to play "smarter" for four quarters.

"The bottom line is we have to make the plays, the smart plays," he said. "As a head coach, that's my responsibility to make sure those things take place."

Neither he nor any of his players used injuries to excuse the loss, though it's clear the team wasn't at full strength on either side of the ball. Offensively, sophomore tight end Dallas Clark, the team's third-leading receiver, left in the first half with an injured knee after a 14-yard reception. Ferentz didn't know the extent of the injury, though he was told it wasn't serious.

Defensively, the injured list is a who's who of veteran players. Senior defensive linemen Jerry Montgomery and Derrick Pickens watched the game in street clothes. Sophomore starting safety Bob Sanders didn't play in the second half, and junior defensive end Howard Hodges limped off the field behind Clark after the game. Both were on crutches.

The status of those players will be evaluated this week, as well as the starting quarterback spot.

McCann was ugly in the first quarter but moved the ball in the second before he fumbled; he didn't return afterward. Banks was his energetic, play-making self, except when he was asked to drop back and pass to win the game.

Playing the most he has all year, Banks completed 11-of-23 passes for 162 yards and two touchdowns, while rushing for 44 yards and another score.

Ferentz said he will mull over his options, but expected both McCann and Banks to play against Northwestern on Nov. 10.

"I'm just going to let the coaches make the decision," Banks said. "I'll be ready to play whenever they call me."

Hawkeyes on the bubble for NCAA berth penalty corner at the close of the half with no time remaining on the clock but were unable to convert.

The second half went scoreless, as Iowa (13-5) pressured the Ohio State defense relentlessly. In the final 10 seconds, the Hawkeyes earned another corner but once again could not get a shot off.

Griesbaum said the lack of production on corners was due to a simple lack of execution.

Without the automatic bid given to the Big Ten Tournament victors, Iowa will wait until 7 p.m. tonight when the NCAA selection committee announces Regional tournament games for next weekend.

"We're still on the bubble," Griesbaum said. "We have a 50-50 chance, if not more. But in the last NCAA polls, the No. 10-20 positions are really hard to predict."

The Hawkeyes were last ranked in the STX/NFHCA standings at No. 16, but their victories over top-10 opponents Michigan State and Penn State in the conference tournament may move them forward.

In fact, Iowa couldn't have been happier to stick a tournament-ending double overtime victory to the Spartans, who handed the Hawkeyes their only season loss, 2-1, at home on Oct. 26.

In second-round play on Nov. 3, Iowa took a 2-0 advantage with goals from Sarah Dawson and Maria Merluzzi. The Spartans earned one back when Jessica Wheeler chipped in a penalty corner, and with 2:33 remaining, Annabet Beerman took the game into overtime. Pattie Gillern finally broke up the tie in the second overtime for another 3-2 victory.

"We weren't happy we couldn't sustain our attack and let them back in, but the mental effort was really good."

Barb Weinberg registered a career-high 17 saves and Tiffany Leister and Lauren Stiver made defensive saves in overtime.

Iowa also played to overtime against No. 6 Penn State. Gillern finished a hard shot from Tiffany Fodera, deflected into the air by Nittany Lions goalkeeper Annie Zinkovich, for a 3-2 victory.

"We really felt like the underdogs in that game, because after we beat them (Oct. 5), they went on fire and strung together a lot of good wins," Griesbaum said.

wins and losses, defeats such as this one are usually the fault of players' poor execution.

With Kyle McCann at quarterback for Iowa's first two possessions, it was clear the Hawkeyes hadn't read up on the Badgers. McCann misfired on his first four pass attempts, forcing Iowa into two-straight three-and-out series. With Ferentz and offensive coordinator Ken O'Keefe scripting a large portion of first-quarter play, someone failed to add plays that attacked the Badgers' weaknesses. Poor play-calling coupled with a lack of execution led to the insertion of Brad Banks at quarterback.

While Banks provided what appeared to be a spark at points, he did nothing to quell the tide of opinion on who should be Iowa's No. 1 quarterback. He benefited from some brilliant play-calling, such as his score on a fake to Aaron Greiving. He kept Iowa in the game, yet also made plenty of minuscule mistakes that show his inexperience.

On defense, the Badgers slowly picked apart the Hawkeyes with a combination of big plays and execution that Iowa has been looking for in its own game. With a 10-0 deficit after the first quarter, the tone was set for a disappointing day in Madison.

Even with reserves such as D.J. Johnson, Joe Uselman, and Derreck Robinson in the game on defense, the Hawkeyes managed to tighten their belts in the second half and held the Badgers to just seven points. They were rewarded for their effort by an offense that became stagnant late in the game.

The Hawkeyes had three possessions in the fourth quarter, including one after a missed Wisconsin field goal that left the door open for a comeback. The Hawkeyes went three-and-out each time, the victim of penalties and bad execution. To add insult to injury, Iowa even got the ball back with eight seconds on the clock for a few Hail Marys down field.

The Hawkeyes can't control injuries, but they can control bad execution and mental mistakes such as penalties. Two of Iowa's three turnovers came from experienced players at a key point in the game, when Ladell Betts and McCann coughed the ball up on Iowa's final two possessions of the first half. Betts' fumble led to a Wisconsin touchdown, while McCann's came with under a minute to go before the half.

Iowa gave up 81 yards on penalties for things such as face masks, false starts, and obviously violating the two-yard halo rule on kick returns.

Over and over again, Ferentz has said his team is failing to play "smart football" in Big Ten play. If and when Iowa's coaches and players wise up will determine whether the 2001 season is Ferentz's most successful at Iowa or his most disappointing.

PGA TOUR

Weir victorious in 4-man playoff

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Mike Weir sure knows how to finish off the year in style.

In a thrilling conclusion to the PGA Tour season, Weir holed a 5-foot birdie putt to win the Tour Championship on the first hole of a four-man playoff Sunday, giving the Canadian his first victory of the season.

It was the second-straight year Weir won the final official event of the PGA Tour. A year ago, he surged past a world-class field at Valderrama to win the American Express Championship.

This one was even sweeter.

Weir, the first foreign player to win the Tour Championship, closed with a 67 and wound up in the playoff with hard-charging Ernie Els, the theatrical Sergio Garcia, and PGA champion David Toms.

Only Weir and Toms hit the fairway with their tee shots and only Weir had a decent shot at birdie.

He ended it quickly.

Els, desperate to keep alive his streak of at least one victory on the PGA Tour every year since 1994, was seemingly stuck behind the trees down the 18th fairway in the playoff when he hit over the branches to about 40 feet.

His birdie putt grazed the right edge of the cup.

"I gave myself a chance, at least," Els said. "I'm quite proud of myself for hanging in there."

Toms hit the fairway, just short of a sand-filled divot. He had 35 feet for birdie, but failed to cash in on what would have been his fourth victory of the year.

Garcia was in a familiar spot — behind a tree. He got questionable relief, but couldn't get out of the jungle, then hit his third shot over the green. But he wasn't done yet — his 80-foot chip broke away from the cup at the last second, leaving the 21-year-old Spaniard on his knees with his hands over his head in disbelief.

That set the stage for Weir, and the left-hander's putt was true.

Weir, who had to make it through Q-school only three years ago, won for the third time on the PGA Tour. It was his first victory in the United States, having won in Vancouver in '99 and last year in Spain.

He won $900,000 and a trip to the winners-only Mercedes Championship.

The Tour Championship has had 15 winners in its 15 years. None ended quite like this, with darkness descending on Champions Golf Club.

Toms, Garcia, and Els each closed with a 68 to join Weir at 14-under 270.

Charles Rex Arbogast/Associated Press
Mike Weir of Canada raises his fist after sinking the winning birdie putt on the first playoff hole of the Tour Championship at Champions Golf Club on Sunday in Houston.

Scott Verplank, the 54-hole leader, bogeyed the 17th to fall out of the lead and finished one stroke back, along with Kenny Perry.

Tiger Woods made an early appearance on the leaderboard, three strokes out of the lead when he made the turn.

He finished with two bogeys for a 70 and finished six strokes behind in a tie for 12th.

Still, he won the PGA Tour money title and the Vardon Trophy for the lowest scoring average for the third-straight year. With five victories, including the Masters and The Players Championship, he already clinched the PGA of America player of the year and likely will collect the tour's award, which is a vote of the players.

"All those are good things. I'm proud of the way I played the entire year," Woods said. "It wasn't quite as good as last year, but it was still a pretty darn good year."

It was thrilling finish to the PGA Tour season.

Verplank began the final round under warm, breezy conditions with a one-stroke lead over David Duval, although it was anyone's tournament at the turn.

Four players — Verplank, Toms, Weir, and Perry — were tied for the lead.

Verplank had said Nov. 3 that making all pars wouldn't get it done, and he proved to be a prophet. He was tentative with his birdie chances on the back nine, and missed a 10-foot par putt on 17 to fall out of the lead.

He missed an 18-foot birdie putt on the final hole that would have put him in the playoff, and wound up with an even-par 71.
