Three incumbents square off against three challengers

By Casey Wagner
The Daily Iowan

Challengers hoping to oust three Iowa City city councilors in today's general elections face Iowa City voters who have rejected only three council incumbents in the last 20 years.

At-large Councilors Ernie Lehman and Mike O'Donnell and District B Councilor Connie Champion said new members on the council could hinder policy development because they do not fully understand the process. Their challengers, District B candidate Brandon Ross and at-large candidates John Robertson and Leah Cohen, however, said it was the council's flawed processes that inspired them to run.

"There's a lot of good discussion going on, and we feel we're comfortable the way the council is now," Champion said.

Johnson County Auditor Tom Slockett said it was a rule of thumb for incumbents to win, adding that he expects a record number of voters casting ballots in today's election.

Dee Norton, who served on the council from 1995 to 1999, said new city councilors overestimate their ability to quickly learn issues facing Iowa City. Even when candidates receive material in the mail about current discussions, they still can't understand what is actually going on in the council chambers, he said.

"It takes a while to get oriented," he said. "The city tries to give you background, but you have to get council experience with it."

Norton said he anticipates the City Council's voting will change if more than one incumbent is replaced by a challenger in today's election.

Iowa City resident Dan Brock said it is time to have new faces and ideas on the council. Challengers offer ideas and beliefs that are more inclu-

Record student turnout predicted

By David Bess
The Daily Iowan

The number of students looking to vote early in the Iowa City City Council election has exploded this year, with more than one-fifth of registered voters at the Burge Hall precinct requesting absentee ballots.

More than 300 of the precinct's 1,531 registered voters had opted to request an early ballot as of Monday evening, representing the highest percentage of early ballots of the city's 38 precincts. Campus precincts at Burge, the IMU, and Shimek Elementary School, which includes Mayflower Hall, are dominating the number of early ballot requests and number of registered voters, according to precinct reports released Monday.

"There is an unheard of number of registered voters in student precincts," said Johnson County Auditor Tom Slockett. "This is highly unusual."

Many say a surge of students returning early ballots on campus locations is an effort to keep the City Council supporting student issues, such as keeping the bars open to minors.

UI law prof, 'a giant,' dies at 76

By Sean Thompson
The Daily Iowan

A longtime UI professor and administrator, remembered best for leading the College of Law through a significant time in its history while personalizing law students' education, died Monday of pneumonia.

David Vernon was 76. The man who wore red suspenders and red socks every day was dean of the law school for five years, assistant to four UI presidents, and even twice served as UI provost, all in a 35-year career. He was also the Allan D. Vestal Professor of Law.

"David was just such a giant at the university," said UI President Mary Sue Coleman. "This is a sad day for the university."

The father and grandfather had been scheduled to continue teaching in the law school this semester as a semi-retired professor, but his cancer worsened over the summer. After an ongoing struggle this fall, he died at

Afghan government stumbles along

By Kathy Gannon
Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — It is almost noon, but a clock on the wall at the Telecommunications Ministry reads 8:35 a.m., and a guard said it's been that way for years.

U.S. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld told reporters in Pakistan on Sunday that after four weeks of bombing, the ruling Taliban is "not really functioning as a government" and is limited to "using its power in enclaves."

It's difficult to tell whether the U.S. bombing has really disrupted the Taliban's ability to govern Afghanistan. Even in the best of times, the Afghan government — regardless of who's running it — stumbles along at a minimal level of efficiency.

Major government ministries in Kabul are still open for business, although some employees have packed up their families and fled to Pakistan or the relative safety of rural villages.

The Health Ministry has no doors at the entrance of its four-story headquarters. But the minister, Mullah Abbas Akhund, is there at his desk, meeting with hospital administrators, doctors, and bureaucrats. He said there isn't much to do, however, because the ministry is low on money and medicine.

In the provincial cities of Jalalabad and Kandahar, Western reporters allowed there on escorted tours said the Taliban appeared to be in control. But access to officials and residents was limited.

Even before the bombing, the real center of the Taliban's power was not in the capital, Kabul, but in Kandahar, the southern birthplace of the Taliban and home of its spiritual leader, Mullah Mohammed Omar.

The Taliban maintain control over the rest of the country by dispatching trusted mullahs from Kandahar to serve as local governors.

Government policy is determined by consensus among a few key Islamic clerics who have been with Omar since the Taliban took shape in 1994. If no consensus emerges, Omar makes the final call — even though he holds no real constitutional or Cabinet post.

Somehow, the system seems to muddle along, often to the surprise of Afghans themselves. After decades of civil conflict and grinding poverty, Afghans have come to expect little — including from their own government.

At the Telecommunications

Ministry, which also functions as the phone company, the 12-story building — the tallest in this city of 1 million people — has an elevator shaft but no elevator.

Up on the third floor, stacks of yellowed files bound with string fill the shelves. Ministry worker Mohammed Arif thinks they're old bills, but he's not sure. No one has ever bothered to check them, Arif says. And he's worked there 36 years.

Male customers coming to pay their bills or apply for digital telephones — the city's latest technological improvement — jam his office almost every day.

Billings are a big problem, Arif explains, because of electricity shortages — more a legacy of Kabul's civil war than the recent bombings. One computer in the basement tallies up the number of hours each customer spends on the phone. "Most of the time, it works," Arif said.

UI simulating transportation

By John Malseed
The Daily Iowan

A chance to experience the nearly completed National Advanced Driving Simulator made Reates Curry's drive from Michigan worthwhile.

Curry is one of approximately 130 transportation-simulation specialists worldwide attending the first-ever Human-Centered Transportation Simulation Conference. The event is sponsored by the UI.

The simulator is the feature of the conference, which runs Sunday through Wednesday at the Clarion Conference Center in Coralville. Curry, a research engineer for the Ford Motor Co., said she was looking forward to seeing the state-of-the-art machine firsthand.

"Simulation is difficult to achieve, but this one's very real," she said. "It's got a very good feel for acceleration and movement."

The simulator is housed in a white sphere that slowly and deliberately moves along a square web of vertical and horizontal tracks, 64 feet on each side.

Fifteen cameras project high-definition video images 360 degrees on the interior walls. The computer images of simulated driving scenes are projected at 60 frames per second; standard television images move at 30 frames a second. The machine can be refitted with different vehicle frames to simulate various modes of transportation, including trucks, buses, farm equipment, and military vehicles.

"We bring folks from the conference to [the simulator] and ask for their input," said project director L.D. Chen. "When they go through the tour, they give us their impressions."

The simulator can test ground- and air-vehicle safety, driver competence, and driving behaviors under various influences including sleep-deprivation and intoxication, among other capabilities. Industry, government, and private businesses are expected to use the simulator at a rate of $1,000 per hour. The university operates the simulator at the Oakdale Campus in cooperation with the U.S. National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. The one-of-a-kind simulator ran millions of dollars over budget and debuted years after its target completion date.

Chen said the simulator is only ready for display and test runs.

"[It] is near completion, but it's not fully calibrated," he said. "You

Police file prostitution charges

By Grant Schulte
The Daily Iowan

An Iowa City woman who allegedly offered money and sex in exchange for cocaine was arrested and charged Nov. 2.

Margery Burns, 45, of 411 Peterson St. Apt. 8 was charged with prostitution and solicitation to commit a felony after she allegedly offered to have sex with Derrick Skinner, 20, in exchange for cocaine. Skinner was charged with conspiracy to deliver a controlled substance.

Iowa City police responded to a report of an intoxicated woman attempting to purchase cocaine at 2020 Broadway on Oct. 11, according to Johnson County District Court records. Burns allegedly offered Skinner sex and $40 just before 2:45 a.m., the records said.

Burns admitted to propositioning Skinner, the records allege. She was released on her own recognizance.

Skinner is being held on $10,000 bond at the Johnson County Jail on the drug charge.

Despite the recent arrest, incidents of prostitution in Iowa City are rare, said Iowa City police Sgt. Mike Brotherton. Only one arrest was made in both 1997 and 1998. Police arrested two women in both 1999 and 2000 for prostitution.

"We don't set up sting operations because there's really no need to," he said. "I don't see this as a significant incident."

But police have received and addressed requests from residents on Broadway and the surrounding area for increased patrols in the suburban neighborhoods.

"There have been problems there in the past," Brotherton said, adding that the area has been the location of loitering, criminal trespass, drug deals, and a drive-by shooting in May 1998.

Prostitution is an aggravated misdemeanor punishable by a maximum of two years in prison and a fine of $500 to $5,000. Burns faces felony charges for requesting cocaine in exchange for sex.

Iowa Child may use rainwater

By Mike Dhar
The Daily Iowan

Iowa Child developers unveiled plans Monday to utilize natural means to collect and purify water for their proposed indoor rain forest and aquarium.

Rainwater would be collected from parking lots, the rain forest's dome roof, and surrounding prairie lands to be purified by plants, mosses, fish, and bacteria. The organisms convert raw sewage into useable water, said University of Vermont ecology Professor John Todd.

The project consultant presented the plans Monday to approximately 60 Coralville residents at the Coralville Public Library.

"The hydrological cycles that drive life and the diversity of life on this planet are really quite extraordinary," he said. "I think this is possible. We have to use what I call nature's technologies."

Project officials call the new measures a cost-effective and environmentally friendly plan to supply natural resources to the proposed 4.5-acre facility, which has yet to gain approval.

Water-harvesting will account for approximately 2 percent of the project's total $220 million price tag and would not significantly increase its cost, Todd said. Iowa Child will include a learning center, rain forest, aquarium, and 400-bedroom hotel slated for completion near Interstate 80 and First Avenue in 2006.

Natural water-treatment facilities operating in approximately 10 countries serve as models for the Iowa Child Project. A "miniature" version of Iowa Child in Toronto uses approximately 400 species of organisms to purify sewage water, including goldfish, koi, and bait fish that devour the solid waste known as "sludge."

Facilities comparable with the proposed Iowa Child Project generate approximately 7,000 gallons of water per day, Todd said, adding that the amount would probably satisfy the needs of a proposed conference center in addition to the rain forest and other exhibits. The water could be used for most purposes with the exception of drinking, he said.

Two inches of rainwater over the surface of the facility and parking lot would provide 2 million gallons of water, Todd said.

Presenters compared the Iowa Child facility with similar projects around the globe.

The Eden Project, an indoor rain forest and educational center in Cornwall, England, opened in May and was expected to attract 1.5 million visitors in its first year, said David Oman, the vice chairman of the Iowa Child Institute.

"A story referred to Eden as the eighth wonder of the world," he said. "The question is, can we make [it] the ninth wonder of the world?"

Vilsack pushes for social services

By Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Gov. Tom Vilsack said Monday he has asked lawmakers to restore $3 million in social-services spending, while advocates for the poor want the governor to dip into the state's reserve funds to restore even more.

Advocates for the poor said $3 million isn't enough.

In a news conference Monday, they called for restoring $24.3 million in spending, with the additional money coming from the state's rainy-day fund. Republicans have strongly opposed touching the state's reserves.

"It's pouring out there, and the rainy-day fund needs to be used to deal with that," said Jim Kane of the Iowa Coalition for Housing and the Homeless. Michael Coverdale, an advocate for community-action agencies, said many families would fall through the cracks if the money isn't restored.

"We're seeing 760 families that won't have a chance," he said.

Meanwhile, Chief Justice Louis Lavorato said he'll cut more than $5 million from the court system's budget using a hiring freeze and eliminating a program that recruits volunteers to work with abused and neglected children.

He said ending the program was a painful step.

"It's a wonderful program that helped many children over the years, but it is not a basic court function," Lavorato said. "Under the circumstances, we cannot make exceptions."

Eliminating the program will save $1 million a year, and he said it was part of a court restructuring plan that will eliminate 185 jobs statewide and end magistrate courts in cities outside of county-seat towns.

"The level of service in some parts of the state will not be as high as people are accustomed to, but all Iowans will have access to essential court services," the chief justice said.

The governor issued an order last week that cuts state spending by 4.3 percent across the board, a $200 million reduction in this year's state budget, because the weak economy has dampened state tax collections.

He said he and Republicans so far have agreed to restore approximately $21 million in spending for key programs; they will meet again today.

The two sides agree on early retirement incentives resulting from negotiations with the union representing state employees. They also are talking about a buyout program for workers not eligible for the retirement program.

"We haven't reached agreement on that," Vilsack said. "There is a consensus this is a good idea."

Most Sept. 11 detainees released

By Karen Gullo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Most of the people arrested on unrelated criminal charges by investigators probing the Sept. 11 attacks have been released, the White House said Monday.

"The lion's share of the people are not still in custody," said White House spokesman Ari Fleischer. "The overwhelming number of the people were detained, they were questioned, and then they've been released."

The White House later said Fleischer was referring only to those detained on unrelated criminal charges. But neither the White House nor the Justice Department would say how many of the more than 1,000 people arrested or detained so far remain in custody.

That prompted new complaints from civil-liberties groups.

"The secrecy surrounding them is unacceptable," said Lucas Guttentag, the director of the immigrants' rights project at the American Civil Liberties Union.

"In order for the public to have confidence in the fairness of the investigation and make sure individual rights are preserved, the government needs to disclose more," he said.

The ACLU has filed a Freedom of Information Act request for information on those detained in connection with the investigation.

Justice Department spokeswoman Mindy Tucker said grand-jury secrecy rules and judges' orders prevent the department from releasing information. Records on those facing unrelated criminal charges are available from state and local law-enforcement agencies, she said.

Investigators have detained or arrested 1,147 people since the suicide hijackings as part of a massive dragnet to find associates of the hijackers and track down terrorists planning additional attacks.

Department officials have released daily figures about the number of people in custody but in most cases have not disclosed their names, where they are being held, or whether they have been released.

The arrested and detained fall into three categories: those held on criminal charges, usually unrelated to the hijackings, those detained on immigration violations, and those held as material witnesses.

O'Hare security breach causes uproar

By Mike Robinson
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Private security workers at O'Hare International Airport have been suspended for allowing a man to pass through a checkpoint with several knives and a stun gun in his carry-on luggage.

Federal law-enforcement officials said there was no indication the man was involved in terrorism. They said he told them he owned the knives for protection and mistakenly packed them in a plastic bag rather than his luggage before leaving for the airport.

In a statement issued Monday, Atlanta-based Argonbright Security Inc. said eight of the workers it hired to operate the screening operations at United Airlines' terminal had been suspended pending a company inquiry.

The Federal Aviation Administration is also investigating.

City officials said the workers, including one supervisor, failed to detain Subash Gurung, 27, of Chicago after two folding knives were discovered in his pocket when he passed through a metal detector.

The workers did not notice seven other knives, a stun gun, and a can marked "tear gas" when Gurung's bag went through an X-ray machine. Instead, they were found by United employees in the gate area who searched Gurung's carry-on bag, police spokesman Thomas Donegan said.

"Something obviously went seriously wrong here, and we're trying to find out if it's the employees' fault," said Monique Bond, a spokeswoman for the Chicago Department of Aviation. "If weapons were confiscated, he should never have been let through security."

Gurung, who told authorities he was unemployed, was arrested trying to board a United flight to Omaha, Neb., on Nov. 3, Donegan said.

He was charged with unlawful use of a weapon and attempting to board an aircraft with weapons, both state misdemeanors.

After being released on bail on those charges early Sunday, Gurung was re-arrested by FBI agents when he returned to O'Hare to retrieve his checked-in luggage. He was charged with a federal felony count of attempting to carry a weapon on an aircraft, Randall Samborn, a spokesman for the U.S. attorney's office.

"The investigation does not seem to reveal an illicit, suspicious, or nefarious intent about his trip to Omaha," Samborn said.

At a brief court appearance Monday, a judge ordered Gurung, a Nepalese citizen who is in the United States on an expired student visa, held without bond.

Transportation Secretary Norman Mineta, who was visiting Chicago Monday, called the incident "a case of traumatic dimensions."

He blamed United, saying the airline is in charge of screening passengers on its flights. Mineta called for the FAA to impose a substantial fine on United.

Drug smuggling going to pot

By Chris Roberts
Associated Press

EL PASO, Texas — At the Santa Fe International Bridge in El Paso, customs inspectors looking for terrorists are flinging open hoods and trunks, knocking on body panels, and getting down on their hands and knees to peek under vehicles.

Last week, inspectors dug out nearly 50 packages of pot, weighing a total of 70 pounds, from a false gas tank in a shiny Toyota Tercel.

The seizure illustrates what Customs Service and Border Patrol officials are seeing: Drug smugglers are getting back to business — and drug seizures are up sharply — after a lull prompted by the stepped-up security along the U.S.-Mexican border that followed the terrorist attacks.

Investigators believe smugglers are trying to push more drugs across the border to make up lost profits and are getting caught by the tighter security.

"They're desperate," said Carlos Quevedo, a spokesman for the Border Patrol's McAllen, Texas, sector. "They don't even care if it's daylight. They just want to get lucky."

Before Sept. 11, most vehicles were waved through border checkpoints. Now, because border officials went to the highest level of alert, nearly every vehicle gets looked over. Inspections include an examination of the trunk and the engine compartment.

In the two weeks immediately following the terrorist attacks, drug seizures along the 1,962-mile U.S.-Mexico border fell 80 percent compared with the same period last year. But the trend has since reversed.

Drug smugglers "decided to wait it out, hoping it would go back to the way it was, and that hasn't happened," said Vincent Bond, a customs spokesman in Southern California. So "they decided to risk the increased scrutiny."

Customs Service seizures of marijuana between Sept. 24 and Oct. 25 are up anywhere from 58 percent along the South Texas border to 394 percent in Arizona. Altogether, more than 32,000 pounds were confiscated in Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona.

Iran seeks limits on U.S. influence

By Brian Murphy

TEHRAN, Iran — The United Nations should exclude the United States and Afghanistan's neighbors from any possible post-Taliban peacekeeping mission or risk even more instability across Central Asia, Iran's foreign minister said Monday.

Such a position risks increasing friction with Washington, which may seek some continued military oversight in Afghanistan if attacks succeed in toppling the Taliban and uprooting Osama bin Laden's Al Qaeda command.

However, Iranian Foreign Minister Kamal Kharrazi insisted in an interview with the Associated Press that any U.S. presence on a post-Taliban peacekeeping force "would have a negative impact on the whole region."

"Central Asian countries are always sensitive to the presence of Americans and American soldiers," he said, adding that any peacekeeping force "should be composed of countries that do not have any specific interests in Afghanistan."

That would also mean excluding Iran, which shares a porous 450-mile-long border with Afghanistan.

Kharrazi, who plans to discuss Afghanistan next week in a U.N.-backed group that includes the United States, also warned that growing Muslim extremism fed by bin Laden and others could lead to a "more dangerous" world if not subdued quickly.

Kharrazi is considered one of the few politicians able to bridge the ideological rifts between Iranian hard-liners and moderates seeking Western-style reforms. He has strong revolutionary credentials, including a key role in the state media during the 1980-88 war with Iraq. Later, he served as Iran's envoy to the United Nations; he is considered to be close to reformist President Mohammad Khatami. "We are facing a new chain of developments in the Islamic world, facing a new extremism," Kharrazi said. "If wrong policies are taken, naturally it would be more dangerous, and there would be more [of a] gap between the Islamic world and the Western world, and it could lead to clashes."

Iran has attempted to juggle various aims since Sept. 11; it has snubbed the U.S.-led coalition against terrorism and opposed military action, even as it shares the common goal of bringing down the Taliban.

Iran believes the Taliban has warped Islam, and it has helped arm the anti-Taliban opposition in hopes the U.S. air strikes will clear the way for toppling the ruling Afghan militia. Iran came close to waging its own war after Taliban forces killed eight Iranian diplomats in 1998.

Now, Iran demands a key voice in forming a viable political leadership from the fractious mix of Afghan clans and ethnic groups.

Iranian leaders instinctively oppose returning the 86-year-old former Afghan monarch, Mohammad Zahir Shah, to a position of power; they dumped their own U.S.-backed monarch 22 years ago in the Islamic Revolution. Iran is pressing for the United Nations to cobble together a "broad-based" grouping of all Afghan ethnic factions.

Government chases after anthrax clues

WASHINGTON — Anthrax was detected inside the Pentagon and promptly removed, officials said Monday. Cleanup in the Senate office building where an anthrax-packed letter was opened proved to be more complicated.

Government agencies moved to test buildings around the country for the presence of anthrax spores, and officials at the Mayo Clinic unveiled a more rapid test for anthrax exposure.

Co-workers mourned the death of a New York hospital worker as investigators chased leads to the anthrax that killed her. Another victim came home from the hospital, and a third came out of intensive care.

"Even though we have been confronted with a deadly disease, there is hope," said Norma Wallace, 56, a postal worker in Hamilton, N.J., who was released from the hospital Monday after more than two weeks of treatment for inhalation anthrax.

Public-health officials looked for patterns among the 10 people infected with inhalation anthrax and prepared guidelines for doctors trying to distinguish it from the flu. And President Bush said he wants $175 million to buy mail-irradiation and other protective equipment for the Postal Service.

A postal facility in yet another government building tested positive for exposure — this time inside the Pentagon.

Anthrax spores were found in two mailboxes at a post office in the building. The entire office was decontaminated over the weekend, and further tests found no anthrax, officials said.

Further testing at the Food and Drug Administration showed how unreliable initial anthrax tests can be: Four mailrooms in Rockville, Md., that had tested positive last week were cleared with further investigation.

And in New Jersey, postal workers at two mail stations thought to be contaminated were told to stop taking antibiotics after subsequent testing found no anthrax in West Trenton and only traces in Princeton.

Researchers at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., said Monday they may have a DNA test that promises better results, produced in 30 minutes instead of days. "This should deter some of the anxiety," said Mayo microbiologist Franklin Cockerill.

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — A 73-year-old businessman, whose property was once taken away by the Sandinista regime that also jailed him, won Nicaragua's presidency over Daniel Ortega, the Sandinista candidate attempting a comeback 11 years after losing power.

Ortega conceded defeat Monday in his third-consecutive election defeat, and supporters of the victorious Liberal Party candidate, Enrique Bolanos, chanted "Strikeout! Strikeout!" as they celebrated.

"Nicaragua is the winner because we have taken another step toward the consolidation of democracy," Bolanos said. He called the Sandinistas "worthy and able opponents" and said they showed "respect for the institutions of democracy."

Ortega promised to continue working for national reconciliation and for a free-market economy from within the National Assembly for his Sandinista one of the most prominent issues in this election, and a lot of people have signed up to vote because of it," said Delta Delta Delta sorority President Angela Wolfe. She said City Council candidates have visited sorority meetings, urging members to vote in today's general election.

At-large candidates Leah Cohen and John Robertson and District B candidate Brandon Ross — all challengers — said more students will vote today opposing further moves to turn bars 21-only.

Some candidates and bar owners have been recruiting students to vote in the elections, saying the younger group should vote to take control of the policy changes that will most affect them.

Mike Porter, the owner of

One-Eyed Jakes, also said he has been trying to mobilize various student voters, including those he has spoken to at fraternity and sorority meetings.

Bartenders at Bo-James, which Cohen owns, have been making periodic announcements at the bar, campaigning for their employer as one who would support student issues.

"It's been a grassroots effort to educate student groups, departments, fraternities, and sororities," Porter said. "The incumbents on the City Council are anti-student-oriented."

At-large incumbent candidate

Ernie Lehman said more students might be voting in today's election because the council is discussing issues of relevance to them.

"The City Council rarely hears from students," he said. "It hears from people directly affected by the City Council's current decisions."

Slockett said there was also a record number of absentee-ballot requests this year in Johnson County and increases in voter registration. He said he expects a record number of voters in today's election.

lots were returned as of Nov. 3, compared with 2,110 absentee ballots returned in 1999. Monday evening saw 3,321 total absentee-ballot requests. Voter registration in Johnson County has jumped from 36,495 in 1999 to 41,192 this year.

Absentee ballots may be turned in directly to the Johnson County Auditor's Office until 8 p.m. today; they must be hand-delivered to make deadline.

sive toward the Iowa City population, he said.

On the campaign trail, Ross and Cohen have both cast their support for keeping bars under-21 and have spoken out against a nuisance ordinance that would impose greater penalties on landlords for neighborhood disturbances. The incumbents have said they support a smoking and nuisance ordinance.

"If the incumbents win, it will be more parking ramps, more bars, more taxes — more of the same stuff," Brock said.

Lehman said the council would welcome new members, but it takes a minimum of a year for new councilors to get oriented to the issues and the council process.

"You get a different impression of things when you're on the outside looking in," he said. "It's a great learning experience, and we all get through it."

Cohen said the incumbent candidates only work well with one another, but not with the other council members.

Ross described the incumbents as "putting on a front," saying the challengers are prepared to serve on the City Council and know the issues and projects the council is facing.

"The reasons we're running are because of these issues, and they say we don't know them," he said. "We know these issues as well as they do, probably even [better]."

Polls are open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. Individuals can call the Johnson County Auditor's Office at 356-6004 for more information.

UI mourns death of former law-school dean

VERNON

UI Hospitals and Clinics.

During his 1966-71 tenure as the law-school dean, the Boston native saw the number of his faculty more than double, resulting in smaller class sizes. Vernon put an emphasis on students' research and writing and increased advanced courses and seminars, in what he called the "Graduate College approach."

"He was dean for five years, and it was an era of the greatest educational change in the law school's history," said Arthur E. Bonfield, the current associate law-school dean, who knew Vernon from the beginning of his career at the UI.

Current law-school Dean N. William Hines, who was on the committee that hired Vernon as dean, spoke highly of Vernon's commitment to the school.

"The Iowa law school provides a quite different and higher-quality legal education today because of Dave Vernon's leadership," said Hines, adding that Vernon was a great source of advice during his ongoing tenure.

Vernon wrote six books and 30 articles in his area of expertise, contracts and conflict of laws. In addition to his tireless work with the law school, Vernon served as provost, the UI's chief academic officer, from 1973-74 and again from 1988-89, and took on special assignments for four university presidents.

Vernon was well-known among staff and students for wearing red suspenders and socks every day to work. Even in his faculty photo, Vernon made sure the socks and suspenders were visible, exemplifying his sense of humor.

"He was a wonderful human being," said Willard Boyd, who served as UI president from 1969-81 and worked closely with Vernon. "He was a person of enormous integrity and was beloved by students and colleagues."

After graduating from Harvard University Law School in 1952, Vernon began his teaching career at New York University Law School. He continued teaching at the University of Houston and the University of Washington law schools before becoming associate dean at the University of Washington.

Memorial services will be held Thursday at 2 p.m. at Agudas Achim Congregation Synagogue, 602 E. Washington Street. A law-school memorial will be held Friday at 1 p.m. in the Levitt Auditorium of the Boyd Law Building.

Vernon is survived by his wife, Rhoda, a son, Charles, a daughter, Amy, and three grandchildren.

Arif, who wears the Taliban-mandated turban and beard, sees himself more as a bureaucrat than a fighter.

"We are professionals," he said. "Governments come and go. What is it to us?"

On Monday, four customers huddled over pieces of paper, some stamped with thumb prints to identify the owner in a country where less than 30 percent can read. Some of the slips were bills, some were official papers identifying the telephone customer, the billing address, and even the name of the customer's father.

All these are necessary to pay bills or arrange for reconnection. "We keep track; if they don't pay, we cut off the service," Arif said.

Mohammed Iqas, a Taliban official who wears a green turban and a brown shawl to protect his shoulders against the cold, sits in a spacious office on the eighth floor.

He came to Kabul five years ago to teach but was recruited by the Islamic militia to serve in a senior post in the telecommunications ministry.

Iqas' job is to check the papers of customers applying for digital phones. When everything is in order, he calls another department and orders the phone.

"Of course, it is wartime, and things are bad," he said. "But I have hope for the future."

Davis' actions good for public

When looking back over the past two months, many would say that we as a nation have been living in fear of what might happen next. Will there be another attack on America, or is our war against terrorism working? No one knows for sure.

However, the FBI and other federal agencies are working together to determine if and when there will be another attack on America. Not only do these federal departments have to sift through piles of information, they also have to determine what is considered credible information. This past week, the FBI alerted the public to the possibility of further terrorist attacks. Its warning was not specific; the only information it gave the public was that there was a strong possibility of something happening in the next week, and that the public should be on alert.

The next day, California Gov. Gray Davis warned his constituents of a possible attack on major bridges in the state. He provided two specific examples in his press conference, mentioning the Golden Gate Bridge and Vincent Thomas Bridge in San Pedro as possible targets.

Was Davis wrong for informing the public of a possible attack in his state? Not only was he right, others should follow his example.

He said the information came from a credible source and said he and the National Coast Guard were taking extra precautions just in case something occurred. After Davis made his announcement, the White House and the FBI were not only upset with him for warning the public but also disagreed with him altogether. The federal government was upset because the warning sent to law-enforcement agencies nationwide was confidential.

Was Davis wrong for informing the public of a possible attack in his state? Not only was he right, others should follow his example. Davis said, "The best preparation is to let the terrorists know we know what they are up to, [that] we're ready, [and that] it's not going to succeed." Informing the public of a possible attack allows us to become prepared and allows us to put faith in our leaders. Davis — like any other human being — could not have lived with himself if an attack had occurred and he had failed to alert the people of his state.

True, he did release confidential information, but he also acted in the best interest of the citizens of California. So far, the FBI has provided only vague information, which does nothing to calm the public's fears — in fact, it generally instills fear in the public. If the FBI has credible, more-specific information, it should release that information to the public and understand that, in a way, it is deterring terrorism.

The United States is one of the strongest nations and is capable of defending itself from terrorism. We need to show other countries that we are doing everything possible to fight terrorism. One way to do so is by informing the public of a threat when credible information is available; our safety may depend on it. Davis did what he felt was right, and others should follow his example.

Taxes, chocolate, and the parallax view

Certain things are immutable in this version of the universe. Women prefer chocolate to orgasms. The Yankees always win the World Series. America has arduously taught all its bombs to be smart.

King George has promised us this about the bombs. The women, the chocolate, the Yankees?

The King makes no promises. Hasn't he promised us enough already? Besides, what can you say about women and chocolate? It's one of the great mysteries of life, but then, it's the mystery that keeps us going. Given that there are something like 6 billion people on this spinning, tumbling rock, and 3 billion of them are female, somewhere out there, there must be a woman who doesn't care for chocolate.

It's just that science hasn't found her, yet. She probably lives in a parallel universe. Of course, a lot of days, it seems like all women live in a parallel universe.

And the Yankees? Who knows? For most of the recent past, they seemed to live in a parallel universe, one in which they always won with grace and cunning, and the Red Sox always lost, bumbling and stumbling as mere mortals do, and the rest of baseball did a damn good Red Sox imitation once they matched up with the pinstriped ones.

But now? Now, it's possible to like these Yankees, because they showed themselves to be mere human beings after all. I mean, they unraveled Sunday night like the Red Sox would. Seeing the unbeatable Mariano Rivera suddenly morph into Derek Lowe was like watching Darth Vader turn into the Wizard of Oz, furiously punching random buttons on an incomprehensible machine and shouting. Pay no attention to the man behind the curtain.

If only real life could be so easy.

But no. In this universe, the one without a parallax view, we're stuck with King George and his smart bombs smattering the Afghan landscape and killing Afghan civilians.

Oh, I know; somebody killed several thousand American civilians, and that somebody is Osama bin Laden — the proof of which King George has only shared with Tony Blair, but then, the proof is too dangerous for us mere mortals to touch — and the Taliban is sheltering bin Laden, so boom goes Afghanistan. It's eye-for-an-eye time, now.

Of course, as Gandhi pointed out, this eye-for-an-eye stuff pretty soon leaves everybody blind.

No matter. And besides, the Taliban doesn't fight fair, as one of King George's minions, Donnybrook Rumsfeld, has pointed out. The Taliban fighters and officials hide among civilians.

Of course, that's sort of the same thing the English said about the Americans in the Revolutionary War: They don't fight fair. They hide behind trees.

The English used this as an excuse to deforest much of North America. A lesson America took to heart, apparently, because it deforested much of Vietnam during the Vietnam War. America would deforest much of Afghanistan, too, except that Mother Nature already did that.

And besides, to take our minds off of dead Afghans, King George and the Republicans are going to give us another tax cut. That'd be swell, huh?

It's called an economic-stimulus package, actually, and it's going to help businesses because they're the nation's employers.

No, really. As Rep. Bill Thomas, R-Calif., says, "They're the hardware stores, the diner down the street, the gas station on the corner."

Only, in reality, in this universe, it goes like this: IBM gets a tax break of $1.4 billion; GM gets $800 million; GE gets $670 million.

I don't know about your down the street or your corner, but those guys don't live anywhere near my neighborhood.

And it gets worse. TXU, which, as Paul Krugman of the New York Times points out, was once known as Dallas Power and Light, gets $600 million. Not that there's any kind of Texas connection going on here. But there's also Chevron Texaco, Enron (King George's campaign cash cow), Phillips Petroleum, ITC Global, and CMS Energy lining up at the trough.

As Krugman notes, they're all located in or near Texas, and they're all in the energy biz.

Odd, that. King George is located in or near Texas, and he was once in the energy biz.

Just coincidence, no doubt. It must be that damn parallax view, always getting in the way of things.

Bombs away.

Letters to the Editor

Vote today and make a difference

Last year, I had my first experience dealing with a student-hostile City Council. In my efforts to stop the new drinking ordinance, I learned how the current council views students — not as an asset to the community but as a menace to be controlled. For the first time in many years, students have the opportunity to change this perception and elect city councilors sensitive to student voices. The challengers in this year's City Council election (Brandon Ross, John Robertson, and Leah Cohen) represent a fundamental shift in the way Iowa City could be run.

Currently, the City Council has become increasingly hostile towards the needs of its student population. Its idea of solving the "drinking problem" includes passing more laws and trying to legislate the problem away. Unproductive laws have proven to be more of a simple nuisance than a real solution. How many times have the new ordinances actually reduced your drinking habits? How often have you been walking home late at night wondering, "Where did all the police go?"

This culture of focusing police efforts on the Ped Mall to hand out large fines and bring otherwise innocent students to jail does nothing except give underserving students police records and shortchanges the rest of the community of the police protection we rightly deserve. Additionally, many students at this university simply cannot afford this type of policing. These large fines only contribute to the huge pressures of the increasing cost of education and jeopardize their academic and work future by placing unnecessary marks on their personal records. Police don't want to be, and should not be, an instrument of fear and punishment. They are here to serve the people. The challengers understand this important point.

We must bring the community back together as one. Students and community are not separate; students are a part of this community and should be treated as such if we ever can expect productive changes. Without your help, these divisive attitudes will only be allowed to grow. Therefore I urge you keep Iowa City united and vote today for Brandon Ross, John Robertson, and Leah Cohen!

I would like to encourage students to vote today (polls are open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. — for your polling location, call the Johnson County Auditor's Office at 356-6004). If you need to register to vote, you can register online at www.sos.state.ia.us (register now for the next election).

I also want to remind students who have absentee ballots to turn those ballots into the auditor's office located at the Johnson County Administration building on Benton Street. Iowa law requires all absentee ballots be returned. Make your voices heard; take the five to 10 minutes necessary to fill out your absentee ballot. If you think students don't have any say in the amount charged for rent, convenient parking, community activities, and other regulations/laws affecting you — you are only right if you do not vote. Students are approximately 45 percent of the Iowa City population; make the councilors notice! VOTE TODAY!

Merry Event!

Now that Halloween has passed, I feel I must remind all marketers not to be so offensive as to use the "C" word in upcoming ads.

This objectionable word can easily be replaced with the word "holiday" as in holiday trees, holiday cards, and holiday carols.

Or you can go with "Seasons Greetings," because everyone enjoys the cold, windy, and dark season of winter.

Remember that it's always better to be politically correct than correct. Merry event!

Dark dancing & Radio Berlin

By Richard Shirk
The Daily Iowan

Radio Berlin brought darkness to Iowa City both musically and figuratively Oct. 30 when it played at the Theta Beta Potato house. The Vancouver four-piece reeled through the majority of the edgy and compelling tracks from The Selection Drones — Radio Berlin's second album of revivalist New Wave.

Shortly into its set, a swing of the bass guitar rendered the strings of Christmas lights in the living room/stage dead, leaving the only illumination the swirling points of lights from a spinning mirrorball. This was a perfect visual complement to the danceable and dark New Wave music of Radio Berlin, a band adept at engaging a crowd using shimmering guitars and keyboards over a steady and often danceable beat.

These New Wave tendencies, synth-infused melancholic love songs, and the overall bleak perspective bring inevitable (and mostly spot-on) comparisons with the dreary tone of Echo and the Bunnymen and Pornography-era Cure. The vocals are shared by bassist Chris Freyes and multiinstrumentalist Jack Duckworth, and the sound is somewhere between XTC's Andy Partridge and Colin Newman's singing style in the early days of Wire, but it hangs above a decidedly blacker sound à la Joy Division or Depeche Mode. This tone is furthered by the group's synth-drenched dirge style, which relies heavily on resonant dual keyboards, repetitive bass parts, and reverb-laden guitars.

Radio Berlin employed these elements to engage the audience, which was driven to dance as if it were 1979 by the driving drum beat and synth clang of "12 Fingers" and the pulsing bass drone of "Green Teeth" as well as "Eurenemi" — a guitar-harmonics-laced track from the band's 1999 Sibling.

The dark and alluring sound should promise a bright future for Radio Berlin, which will continue to tour in support of The Selection Drones until late November. The band was joined by the psych-folk of Romantic and the Siren and the dissonant and experimental keyboard skronk of Blue on Blue Eyes.

Take me out to the ball game

By David Bauder
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Arizona Diamondbacks, "The West Wing," and television itself were big winners Sunday night.

Faced with a rich night of choices on TV, Americans grabbed their remote controls and headed to the couch. An estimated 68.3 percent of the nation's households with televisions turned on the tube in prime time, Nielsen Media Research said on Monday.

That's an unusually high number. Only four times in the last several years has television's turn-on level been higher between 8 and 11 p.m.: Last year's Election Night and three nights of the 1994 Winter Olympics during the Tonya Harding-Nancy Kerrigan feud. Baseball's ultimate event — the seventh game of the World Series — led the way. An estimated 39.1 million people watched the Diamondbacks edge the New York Yankees on Fox. That's the biggest TV audience for a baseball game since the 1991 Game 7 between the Minnesota Twins and Atlanta Braves.

Against that competition, the twice-delayed Emmy Awards on CBS reached 16.9 million viewers, according to preliminary Nielsen estimates. CBS took a calculated risk scheduling the Emmys for Sunday night, betting that the World Series wouldn't stretch a full seven games. Eight of the last 25 World Series went to seven games.

CBS lost that bet, and the Emmy viewership was down 22 percent from last year. But considering that the Emmys are usually telecast in early September against light competition, the ratings were higher than CBS executives privately predicted.

The numbers were also higher than CBS would expect to get in the first Sunday of a "sweeps" month, where ratings are watched closely to set local advertising rates.

"The performance of the Emmys was outstanding, really outstanding," said Marc Berman, a ratings analyst for Media Week Online.

During the Emmy telecast, host Ellen DeGeneres joked that she would keep viewers updated on the World Series score so they wouldn't be tempted to switch. She wound up giving only one update.

Fox, meanwhile, flashed the winners of Emmy Awards on the bottom of the screen during the World Series. West Coast viewers learned who won Emmys on Fox three hours before the tape-delayed awards show was telecast on CBS.

"It was a pretty no-class thing to do," CBS spokesman Gil Schwartz said. "This is an event that celebrates all of television. To attempt to play the role of national party-pooper is sort of disappointing."

Fox said it was providing a service to viewers.

"Once the awards are given out, results are available on a variety of different outlets," Fox Sports spokesman Lou D'Ernilio said. "We certainly didn't want to diminish West Coast viewers' enjoyment of the event."

The network premiere of Ty Story II attracted 14.8 million viewers, making it ABC's biggest audience for a Sunday movie in nearly a year.

And NBC reached a relatively modest 13 million viewers for the premiere of its heavily promoted miniseries Uprising.

"It wasn't good, but it could have been worse," Berman said.

Yet another viewing choice Sunday night was the final installment of HBO's Band of Brothers miniseries. Those ratings weren't immediately available, but HBO executives expect they will be the lowest of the 10-part series.

Alford surprised by team's high ranking

By Tyler Lechtenberg
The Daily Iowan

Steve Alford has his Iowa men's basketball team further down the road to national prominence than he expected at this point in his career.

"I'd be lying if I thought to begin year three ... there were going to be certain polls where we were top-10 ranked," Alford said at his weekly press conference on Monday. "That's happened pretty quickly; now, we just have to make sure that we stay ahead of the game."

Staying ahead of schedule in 2001 will entail living up to expectations for this year's squad. After a 23-12 season in 2000-01, a strong group of returnees combined with talented newcomers has made this Hawkeyes team the subject of hype since mid-summer.

The mainstream preseason polls are now out, and the Hawkeyes rank eighth in the USA Today/ESPN poll and ninth in the Associated Press poll. The national publicity will help in terms of program image and recruiting, Alford said, but the preseason polls still don't hold much water.

"Gaining that attention from a national standpoint is good for our program," he said. "But is there any stock you hold in [the preseason rankings]? Not really."

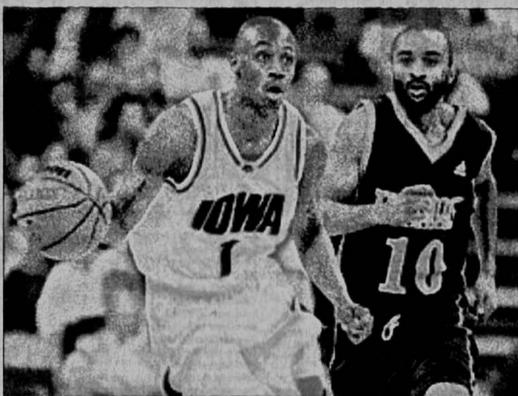

Iowa has one last chance to tune up before the regular season begins — a 7 p.m. Wednesday game against the Harlem Globetrotters. Alford plans to use the exhibition contest to fine-tune many aspects of his team.

"We're running out of time here as far as when we actually start the season," he said. "We've got to have things in place that we think are important through the first month of the season."

After a 116-68 drubbing of the Illinois All-Stars on Nov. 1, Alford was satisfied with his team's play in its first competitive action of the season, but he said plenty of work remains.

"Half-court execution is somewhere where we have to continue to get better and work on the screening and cutting part of our offense," Alford said. "From

A team effort crucial for Iowa

By Melinda Mawdsley
The Daily Iowan

The fear of close games is not conducive to a successful season, and senior Aaron Kampman may have a cure for Iowa's phobia.

Ferentz

"What we need to do is decide to win," he said.

Seems pretty elementary, but if that's the case, who in the world of Hawkeye football doesn't want to run off the field a winner?

Likely, no one.

However, Kampman said, he and his teammates, especially the veterans, will continue to drill home the fact that the final three opponents — Northwestern, Minnesota, and Iowa State — are beatable and that everyone on the roster has to contribute for wins to materialize. The need for a total team effort is underscored by the injuries that plague Iowa's roster.

Today's press conference with coach Kirk Ferentz should provide insight into the status of the banged-up players. Should the long list of those who either didn't play or saw limited action against Wisconsin turn into a "Will Not Play" against Northwestern, a challenge will be before the Hawkeyes.

Particularly on defense, where three reserves made their first start of the season against the Badgers, and the unit surrendered 434 yards. Only Indiana's 468 yards of offense Oct. 20 has topped that this season.

However, neither Ferentz nor his players will let injuries serve as their crutch. The inexperience and youth of

Schilling: 'Not our last'

Diamondbacks owner Jerry Colangelo pledges Arizona will not dismantle the champions

By Bob Baum
Associated Press

PHOENIX — The World Series champion Arizona Diamondbacks were still spraying champagne in the clubhouse when Curt Schilling pronounced this team no one-year wonder.

"I believe this is not our last," he said. "We have the makeup, and the chemistry, and the talent, and personnel to do it again, and maybe it will go through New York again. Who knows?"

Diamondbacks owner Jerry Colangelo repeatedly has rejected the notion that these are the Florida Marlins West, a team put together with high-priced free agents that will be sold to the highest bidder now that a title has been won.

Colangelo said the team was in the third year of a four-year plan. The contracts of free agents Matt Williams, Mark Grace, and Jay Bell expire after next season. Randy Johnson is signed through 2003, Schilling through 2004.

Colangelo was on his way to the baseball meetings in Chicago on Monday, but general manager Joe Garagiola Jr. repeated the promise.

"I can't be any more emphatic than Jerry has been," Garagiola said. "It's not going to happen. This team is not going to be dismantled. Is that saying there will be no changes? No. We have made changes every year if it's something we thought would make the club better. But those will be baseball-driven decisions."

While many of the players are in their mid- to upper-30s, they showed this season that they have some baseball left in them. Johnson is 38 and had arguably his best season, culminating it with five post-season victories, three in the World Series.

Schilling turns 35 this month. Grace is 37.

The bigger questions will be how Arizona handles its talented reserves.

Was this year's World Series the most exciting ever?

Arizona wins the World Series on a walk-off duck-fart single? "You gotta be kidding me!"

That was also how my buddy in Manhattan answered the phone immediately after Scott Brosius hit his Game 5 home run. Not "Hello," but instead, "You gotta be kidding me!" He went into a hoarse-voiced, 20-minute diatribe about how great it was to be a New Yorker, and I eagerly shared in his enthusiasm.

Aside from his argument that New York as a sovereign entity would defeat the Taliban in seven games, Timmy did assert that this was the best World Series he could remember. Although his last contention is questionable (I say six games), I have to agree with the latter — this Series had it all.

With two out in the bottom of the ninth in Game 4, Tino Martinez hit a two-run home run to tie the game. Amazingly, then, Brosius does the exact same thing the next night. Goosebumps.

Had Martinez not gone yard and the Yanks lost Game 4, they would have tied the 1919 White Sox for the dubious distinction of scoring the least amount of runs in the first four Series games. If you remember correctly, those Black Sox weren't exactly trying.

Game 6 saw Arizona hand New York the worst defeat in its storied World Series history. Game 7 featured future Hall of Fame pitchers, yet it ended when Luis Gonzalez hit a flare to deep shortstop to win the game in the bottom of the ninth.

I know that heaping superlatives on performances of this era degrades past accomplishments, so I am hesitant to call this "The Best Series Ever." However, when my kids ask me about the best World Series I've ever seen, I will begin by saying, "You gotta be kidding me!"

— Jesse Steinfeldt

Pardon my colleague for being one of the countless masses who choose to live in the now and forget about the past.

I was 8 years old when Kirk Gibson took Dennis Eckersley deep in Game 1 of the 1988 World Series. There was a lot of drama in the remainder of the Series, as well, and if I remember right, it was called one of the best Series ever. Until the next one came along down the line.

There are plenty of memorable World Series to go around that were better than the Diamondbacks and Yankees.

Compare Sunday's victory by Arizona with Florida's defeat of Cleveland in 1997. Wasn't that also an exciting Series, or did we happen to forget about it because it was four years ago? Maybe it lacked the overall drama of the 2001 Fall Classic, sans the drubbing in Game 6, but it was memorable as well.

Bernie Carbo's pinch-hit homer in the third game of the 1975 World Series and Carlton Fisk willing his home run fair in Game 6 made it appear as if the Red Sox were ready to break the Curse of the Bambino. Then came Cincinnati's Joe Morgan and a fly ball over a drawn-in Fred Lynn for a 6-5 victory in Game 7.

How about the Pittsburgh Pirates' near-elimination against the Yankees in 1960? The Pirates scored only 27 runs to the Yankees' 55 over seven games, but a single run from Bill Mazeroski ended things when he homered off Ralph Terry to end the Series.

That's three complete Series, off the top of my head, that compare with what America just witnessed — and there are plenty more.

Others may seem hesitant to call this "The Best Series Ever" just two days after it ended. How will people feel about this Series the next time there is a seven-game thriller in World Series play?

The best World Series ever? Jesse's buddy is right — you gotta be kidding me.

No room on Redskins' bandwagon

By Joseph White
Associated Press

ASHBURN, Va.—LaVar Arrington entered Redskin Park on crutches Monday, with no plans to join "The Tonight Show" fan club and absolutely, positively no vacancies on the Washington Redskins bandwagon.

"I don't want nobody jumping on it. There's no room," Arrington said. "Everybody who's been on it, if they let anybody get on it, shame on them."

"We as players, we don't want fair-weather fans — just like with the Ravens because they won the Super Bowl. And now it's 'All right, they're losing now, so I'm going to go with the Redskins.' We don't want you. I don't want somebody who's going to be switching up on me."

The Redskins (3-5) have won three straight — all at home — after starting 0-5, and remain 1½ games behind the Philadelphia Eagles in the NFC East. They are off this week, then the schedule toughens with road games at Denver and Philadelphia.

"This week is not about reinventing the wheel," coach Marty Schottenheimer said. "The focus is on things we have been doing, and how we can improve those things."

The week off will give Arrington more time to recover from the severe ankle sprain he suffered when he tripped over receiver Koren Robinson in the second half of Sunday's 27-14 victory over the Seattle Seahawks.

The injury typically keeps players out for a month or so — tight end Stephen Alexander has missed three games so far with the same injury — but Arrington has been remarkably resilient this season. He missed only one game after he sprained a knee against Green Bay, and he came back from a near-concussion in the Carolina game to make the play that turned around the season: a 67-yard interception return for a touchdown in the fourth quarter of a come-from-behind victory.

"It seems like as soon as I'm about to get it into overdrive, something happens," Arrington said.

While the Redskins have been gradually getting better every week, several players have attributed the turnaround to the anger developed as they became the subject of national ridicule during the winless start. Arrington, in particular, doesn't hide the chip on his shoulder.

"If Jay Leno can put some pads on and come down here and whip any one of us, from Darrell Green on, then he can say what he says on TV," Arrington said.

"This game is brutal, and I don't take this lightly. I'm on crutches. Does Jay Leno have to worry about getting on crutches after he does what he does — unless he trips on the stage or something? This is a serious sport, and I can't stand it when people try to play down what we do and try and make us a laughingstock when we're out for respect."

SPORTS BRIEFS

Chargers' Dwight has collapsed lung

SAN DIEGO (AP) — San Diego Chargers receiver-punt returner Tim Dwight suffered a collapsed lung in Sunday's loss to the Kansas City Chiefs and was hospitalized.

Coach Mike Riley said Monday that the team originally thought Dwight injured his ribs. Dwight's lung re-inflated after he was hospitalized Sunday night, and he was expected to remain there until today.

Dwight isn't expected to play in Sunday's game at Denver, Riley said. The Chargers lost, 25-20, to the Chiefs to fall to 5-3.

Iowa men's club rowing triumphs

The UI men's rowing club competed in the Wichita Frostbite Regatta, wrapping up the fall season on a high note heading into winter training and preparing for the spring sprint season.

With temperatures in the low 70s, the regatta didn't live up to its name. The 1.7 mile course was the shortest course of the fall season, with course lengths typically 2.5 to 3 miles in length.

The varsity squad placed fifth in the Open Men's 4+, sixth in the Lightweight Varsity 4+, and seventh in the Open Men's 8+.

The Novice Squad built on a strong performance at the Head of the Iowa — when it finished third in Wisconsin's Varsity program in the Novice Men's 4+ and second in the Lightweight Men's Novice 8+ — to bring home several medals.

Former NFL players to enter Iowa Hall of Fame

BOONE, Iowa — Four Iowa high school football stars, who went on to play in the NFL will be inducted into the state's Football Hall of Fame later this month.

Don Perkins of Waterloo West, Ed Podolak of Atlantic, Roger Craig of Davenport Central, and Chad Hennings of Van Horne Benton will be honored at halftime of the Class 4A state championship game at the UNI-Dome on Nov. 16.

Perkins and Hennings both played for the Dallas Cowboys, Craig played in three Super Bowls for the San Francisco 49ers, and Podolak spent nine years with the Kansas City Chiefs. Podolak and Perkins were the career rushing leaders for their teams when they retired. Craig became the first back in NFL history to top 1,000 yards rushing and receiving in the same season.

Gannon, Raiders handle Broncos

By Greg Beacham
Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — Tim Brown was around for Oakland's years of futility against the Denver Broncos. When the Raiders finally got the best of their archrivals, the veteran receiver led the way.

Brown caught two touchdown passes, and the Raiders emphatically snapped a seven-game losing streak against the Broncos, beating Denver 38-28 on Monday night in a victory that affirmed the westward shift of power in the AFC West.

The Raiders (6-1) won the division last season but lost twice to Denver, adding to a string of 11 defeats in 12 meetings with the Broncos and coach Mike Shanahan, who has taken extra pleasure in repeatedly beating the team that fired him more than a decade ago.

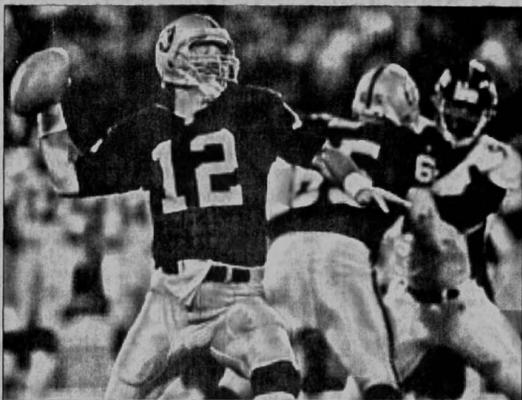

Jon Gruden, snarling and screaming on the sideline, got his first victory over Denver (4-4) with a game plan that made ample use of Brown and Jerry Rice, his veteran receivers. With the Raider Nation roaring its approval in a packed Coliseum, Oakland won its ninth-straight regular-season home game.

With two scores among his nine catches for 95 yards, Brown passed Don Maynard for fifth place on the NFL's career list with 89 touchdowns receiving. Brown and Rich Gannon communicated almost flawlessly during several lengthy scoring drives that broke down Denver's defense.

Zack Crockett rushed for two scores, including a three-yard plunge with 7:06 to play, while Rice caught three key passes for 47 yards. Gannon was 25-of-34 for 243 yards and three TDs.

The bad feelings between the franchises trickled down to the field on Monday night. Denver's Kenoy Kennedy and Oakland's Greg Biekert delivered hard hits on the borderline of legality, while Denver's Bill Romanowski and Oakland's William Thomas got personal fouls for nasty blows.

Oakland Raiders quarterback Rich Gannon (12) passes in front of Denver Broncos defensive end Kavika Pittman, right, and Raiders tackle Barry Sims in the first quarter, Monday night in Oakland, Calif.

In their first home game in more than four weeks, the Raiders won their fifth straight, matching St. Louis and Chicago for the NFL's best record.

The Broncos couldn't capitalize on the running of former MVP Terrell Davis, who looked sharp in his return to Denver's lineup after missing six games following knee surgery. Davis had 70 yards rushing on 17 attempts, while Rod Smith caught 10 passes for 91 yards and two TDs.

Erubiel Durazo wants to start at first base, but he would have to wait another season of playing behind Grace. Jay Bell, with a year left on his contract, has made it clear that he wants to end his career as a starter.

Trades are possible for the likes of Durazo or David Delucci, but the Diamondbacks want to hold on to their younger players for when the old guys finally call it quits.

Miguel Batista will be back, and so will embattled 22-year-old Byung-Hyun Kim, who could become a setup man if closer Matt Mantei successfully comes back from "Tommy John" elbow surgery.

Todd Stottlemyre is trying to make a comeback, and young reliever Bret Prinz will bring some much needed power to the bullpen.

Brenly believes Kim will recover from the psychological beating he took by giving up the two game-tying ninth-inning home runs in Yankee Stadium.

In the postgame bedlam Sunday night, Kim was shown on the giant screen at Bank One Ballpark wandering in the outfield with a big smile. The crowd gave him a huge cheer.

"It was like 49,000 people giving him a hug," Garagiola said. "It was just a wonderful moment."

The Diamondbacks probably couldn't hold a clearance sale anyway. Most of the highly paid players are nearing the end of their careers, and teams would be reluctant to pick up those contracts.

A World Series that went seven games undoubtedly will bring some much-needed money to a franchise that lost at least $48 million over its first three seasons.

Ten of the top players agreed before the season began to defer large chunks of their salary to help the financially strapped franchise through the next two years.

An estimated $16 million in World Series revenue will certainly provide a boost, and season-ticket sales that have declined each year since the 1998 expansion season probably will go up.

The team also did a huge business in merchandise sales over the past few weeks.

Arizona has just five free agents. The most prominent are starting right fielder Reggie Sanders and one of the World Series heroes, Danny Bautista. The others are pitchers Albie Lopez, Mike Morgan, and Bobby Witt.

Sanders could be headed elsewhere after resurrecting his career with 33 homers and 88 RBI this season. He had signed a one-year, $1 million contract and will get far more than that now.

The Diamondbacks retain the rights to second baseman Craig Counsell but probably will have to give him a big raise because he is eligible for arbitration.

The team was basking in its glory on Monday. Brenly and Garagiola made the rounds on radio talk shows. Johnson left for Los Angeles to appear on "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno." A parade was planned for downtown on Wednesday culminating with a rally at the ballpark.

Brenly, who shrugged off the criticism he got for his strategy moves throughout the Series, said he slept as soundly as he has in months.

"I really don't think it has completely sunk in yet," he said. "It was overwhelming. We talk all of the time in baseball and other sports about playing for the feeling instead of the money. That feeling last night, there is no way you can reproduce that chemically or any other way. That is the most unbelievable feeling you can ever experience. That's priceless."

a defensive standpoint, defensive transition and giving up too many drives to the middle were the two things that we tried to focus on in the last six days."

The center duo of Sean Sonderleiter and Jared Reiner will be tested against the Globetrotters, who sport five players taller than 6-10. However, Alford has confidence in his second-year players.

"Sean and Jared have shown a lot of progress over the last 10 days," he said. "Hopefully, that progress can continue."

Competing against the All-Stars gave him a chance to experiment with some new combinations, including pairing point guards Pierre Pierce, a freshman, and Chauncey Leslie, a transfer from Indian Hills Community College, in the same backcourt. The duo play off each other, Alford said, and may have the ability to jumpstart the offense when things become stagnant.

"We get very athletic in the backcourt that way," he said. "We have two jets out there who can mix things up and change the tempo of games. The more combinations you can throw at people to change the momentum of the game — it helps."

Sophomore Brody Boyd,

another option at point guard, sat out the Illinois All-Stars game last week with a partial tear in his right quadriceps, the same injury that sidelined him at the end of last season and during the summer. Boyd will not play against the Globetrotters, but he plans to practice Friday.

"It's very disappointing for me knowing I could be out there playing," he said. "It's frustrating, but it's just something you have to deal with."

new starters might explain the defensive woes on Nov. 3, but it doesn't excuse them.

"People get hurt. That's part of every season," junior defensive end Colin Cole said. "We have to put the next man in, and someone has to pick up somewhere."

And whoever he is has to step up now if the Hawkeyes' hopes for a bowl bid are to be realized. Two straight six-point losses to Michigan and Wisconsin were both emotionally and physically draining.

Both Kampman and senior running back Ladell Betts said they won't allow spirits to sink. Too many hours — too many years, in their cases — have been given to quit now.

In other words, perhaps it's time for a players-only meeting.

"It's getting to the point where we need to grab ahold of the team and make sure we're all staying together," Kampman said. "We will."

Sitting at 4-4 when Iowa could arguably be 8-0 provides perfect fodder for frustrated finger-pointing. So far, at least publicly, only Ferentz is placing blame — on himself.

And he isn't ready to make plans for a Winter Break in Iowa City when he believes this team has the talent for post-season play.

"We have some obstacles to overcome right now from a health standpoint," Ferentz said. "But we know what we have to do, and we have plenty of time to do it. I feel good about our football team. I have all the way through. I don't see anyone quitting out there."

Yankees preparing for an overhaul

By Josh Dubow
Associated Press

PHOENIX — Paul O'Neill walked through a somber New York Yankees clubhouse and said his goodbyes.

He hugged Roger Clemens, talked to other teammates, and delivered a message to rookie Nick Johnson: "You have to carry it on."

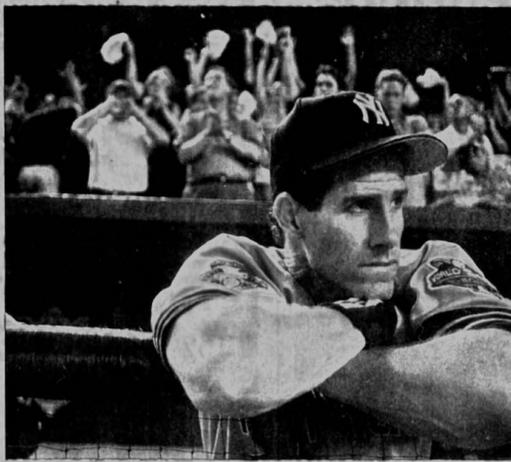

For the first time since the end of the 1992 season, O'Neill won't be there for the Yankees patrolling right field, hitting line drives, and throwing his equipment. Instead, the heart and soul of the Yankees will be enjoying retirement at home in Ohio.

He's not alone. The great Yankees dynasty that was denied a fourth-straight World Series title by Arizona's improbable Game 7 comeback is headed for what could be its biggest overhaul since it started in 1966.

Luis Sojo, who along with O'Neill is one of the seven Yankees who played on all four title teams, also is retiring. Fellow four-time winner Tino Martinez is eligible for free agency, as are Scott Brosius and Chuck Knoblauch, who have been around for three championships.

"We haven't even had five minutes to process this stuff yet," Brosius said. "We'll let that stuff play itself out."

The Yankees haven't faced so many difficult decisions in one winter since 1995, when Don Mattingly, Buck Showalter, Jack McDowell, Randy Velarde, and Mike Stanley all

But with George Steinbrenner's millions, a strong core led by Derek Jeter, Bernie Williams, and Mariano Rivera, three outstanding starting pitchers, and a talented farm system highlighted by Johnson, the Yankees aren't going anywhere.

"We'll be back," Steinbrenner said. "Mark that down. We'll be back."

The Yankees don't dwell on losses long. Steinbrenner said planning for 2002 would begin as soon as the team returned to New York.

"I'm not a good loser," Steinbrenner said. "I believe in what Ernest Hemingway said: "The way you get to be a good loser is practice, and I don't want to practice."

Several of the Yankees, including Jeter and Jorge Posada, sat in the dugout after Luis Gonzalez's game-winning hit off Rivera, watching the Diamondbacks' celebration and getting motivation for next year.

"You want to get back there," Posada said. "That's why you watch. You feel good for them, but it's tough to take."

The first move of the off-season will be finalizing new contracts for general manager Brian Cashman and manager Joe Torre.

"George and I have talked enough, and I think we are both sort of in agreement that we both want to keep this thing going on," Torre said last week when his contract expired.

Then the attention will turn to the free agents. The World Series' loss in which the Yankees scored just 14 runs in seven games highlighted the need for an improved offense, especially at the corners.

"We've done some pretty good things together over the last few years," Jeter said. "You don't know what's going to happen, but you know we've worked hard together."

New York has been grooming replacements for Martinez and Brosius.

Johnson has been one of the Yankees' coveted prospects in recent years and is ready to take over first base next year. There's also talk that New York might want to sign Oakland's Jason Giambi, eligible for free agency this off-season, and he could be a designated hitter.

Drew Henson might be a year away at third base as he makes the transition from football to baseball. Velarde could be a stopgap, the Yankees could trade for an established player, or re-sign Brosius for one year.

Knoblauch's situation might be a bit trickier. It is thought that at the time he was traded from Minnesota to the Yankees in 1998, New York agreed to an $18 million, two-year contract extension — a deal that has never been formalized.

"I obviously still want to be a Yankee," Knoblauch said.

Wickman re-signs with Indians; Rocker may be gone

CLEVELAND (AP) — Bob Wickman closed a new, three-year contract with the Indians on Monday, and probably ended John Rocker's stormy stay in Cleveland, too.

Wickman, who lost his closer's job when the Indians traded for Rocker during the season, signed through 2004 with a team option for 2005.

Wickman was eligible for free agency this winter, but decided to stay in Cleveland.

"I never thought about what the money would be like elsewhere,"

Wickman said. "This was my best choice and I am not going to second-guess it. For a year and a half, Cleveland has been a great place to be. I'm excited about where this team is headed."

Monetary terms were not immediately available, but the club recently offered the popular 32-year-old right-hander a $15 million deal.

"Personally, I'm delighted at this signing," Indians general manager Mark Shapiro said of his first move since replacing John Hart. "Bob is a tremendous closer. He has proven that."

Wickman had 32 saves in 35 chances during a turbulent second season with the Indians, who tried to replace him by trading for Rocker in June.

Baseball owners to discuss cutting teams

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

PHOENIX — Less than 48 hours after the last out of a riveting World Series, owners meet today uncertain whether to try to eliminate teams or start baseball's ninth work stoppage since 1972.

Owners have informally discussed cutting two teams, perhaps as soon as next season, with Montreal, Minnesota, and Florida mentioned most often as possible candidates.

But there's no indication owners will take any action when they gather in a Chicago suburb. Several high-ranking team officials contacted in recent days said they didn't expect definitive action, but they also said Commissioner Bud Selig had not informed them of his plans.

Selig also hasn't said whether he favors locking out players before free agents can start signing with new teams on Nov. 20. A lockout would be a risky strategy for a sport whose average attendance still hasn't fully recovered from the 232-day strike of 1994-95.

Arizona's thrilling victory over the New York Yankees in Game 7 of the World Series on Sunday night automatically terminated the collective bargaining agreement that was signed on March 14, 1997.

The deal, which was retroactive to the 1996 season, had a provision that it would expire this Oct. 31 or on the day of the final game of this year's World Series, whichever was later.

Under U.S. labor law, the provisions of the expired agreement remain in place until there's either a new deal or the sides bargain to an impasse, and management imposes new work rules.

Selig and union head Donald Fehr were both at Sunday night's game. Fehr is waiting for owners to tell players they are ready to start bargaining, but Selig has not said when that will be.

Some teams, especially those in low-revenue markets, favor locking out players. That would cause the labor confrontation to start during the off-season, when no games are affected, rather than during the next season.

But there are no indications Selig has attempted to solicit votes in favor of a lockout. Large-market teams generally are against a lockout because it would cause some season-ticket holders to not renew and could hurt advertising sales for next year.

Owners haven't met since they gathered June 13 in Pittsburgh. They were to have met Sept. 11 in Milwaukee, but that was called off following the terrorist attacks in New York and Washington.

Teams could propose to not lock out players and to not change work rules in exchange for the union giving a no-strike pledge through next year's World Series. That would ensure another season of labor peace as talks start.

Without such an agreement, teams would be vulnerable to a players' strike late next season. Players struck on Aug. 12, 1994, about two months after teams proposed a salary cap, and the walkout led to the first cancellation of the World Series in 90 years.

Fehr expects revenue sharing among the teams to be a key issue in the talks. Low-revenue teams want an increase in revenue-sharing money they receive from the large-market clubs, and the union's agreement is necessary for any change in revenue-sharing rules.

During talks prior to the last labor contract, teams spent about a year negotiating a revenue-sharing plan among themselves, and that proposal was altered during negotiations with the union.

Selig also plans to talk to teams about their lack of minority hiring in top-level positions.

Since the end of the season, Houston hired Jimmy Williams to replace Larry Dierker as manager, and Texas hired John Hart to replace Doug Melvin as general manager.

Da Bears work Da Draft

By Dave Goldberg
Associated Press

The Chicago Bears have discovered the secret to winning in the 21st century: draft well and get lucky. It's hard to tell sometimes which comes first.

"I don't know what to say. A higher power, luck, destiny, whatever you call it," Mike Brown said after he returned a deflected pass for the winning TD in overtime for the second week in a row.

That came after Chicago scored two TDs in the final 32 seconds of regulation — one after an onside kick recovery — to tie Cleveland. Chicago is now 6-1, tied with St. Louis for the NFC's best record.

Still, for all the luck involved in the Bears' first six-game winning streak since 1990, there's also good drafting. The Bears have been led the last few weeks by the first two picks of the last two seasons — Brian Urlacher and Brown from 2000, and wide receiver David Terrell and running back Anthony Thomas from this year.

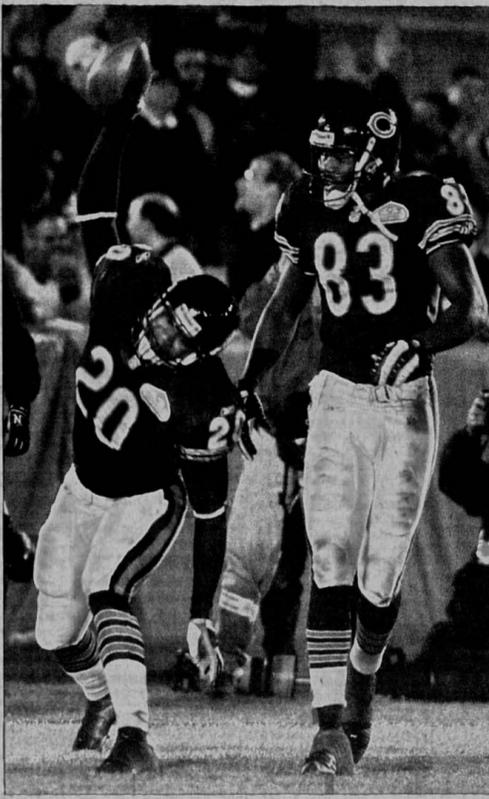

For the past decade, the Bears were one of the worst organizations in football.

Until last year, their recent first-round draft picks included Curtis Enis and Cade McNown, both disasters. But Mark Hatley, who made those choices, also made the picks of the last two years and was right on Urlacher, the ninth overall pick in 2000 after several teams passed thinking he would take time to develop at linebacker.

Wrong. Urlacher was defensive rookie of the year last season and is running 1-2 with the Giants' Michael Strahan for defensive player of the year.

Thomas was another gutsy choice — a hard runner at Michigan but seemingly a tad slow for the NFL.

Wrong. He's 10th in the NFL in rushing despite starting for only the last three games and has 534 yards on 105 carries, an average of 5.1. That's given the Bears a complement to a strong defense and their journeyman QBs — Jim Miller and Shane Matthews.

The Bears' draft picks weren't the only ones on display Sunday.

Cleveland's Courtney Brown, No. 1 overall in 2000, returned from a knee injury in Chicago, had three sacks in his first game this season, and returned a fumble for a touchdown. The Browns' Tim Couch, like Brown a No. 1 overall pick, is starting to fulfill his promise — he has 10 TDs and just four interceptions this season.

Then there's Drew Brees, the first pick in the second round this year by San Diego, where John Butler, the new GM, is enhancing the reputation he built in Buffalo.

Brees, chosen after San Diego traded the rights to Michael Vick, replaced the injured Doug Flutie, and rallied the Chargers from a 19-0 deficit before losing, 25-20. LaDanian Tomlinson, the Chargers' first pick, is seventh in the NFL in rushing and has been the kind of workhorse any team needs — he leads the NFL with 181 carries.

The Bears, Browns, and Chargers already have surpassed their win totals of last season.

MEN'S COLLEGE BASKETBALL

Duke; Maryland top first AP poll

By Jim O'Connell
Associated Press

Duke and Maryland were 1-2 Monday in the Associated Press' preseason college-basketball poll, just the second time two teams from the same conference have held the top spots.

The other time also involved two schools from the Atlantic Coast Conference, when Georgia Tech and North Carolina were 1-2 before the 1985-86 season.

Duke, the defending national champion, was the runaway No. 1 choice by the national media panel. The Blue Devils, who return three starters from the team that went 35-4 last season, received 61 first-place votes and 1,787 points.

Maryland, which lost to Duke in its first Final Four appearance, had six first-place votes and 1,634 points to match the school's highest ranking ever.

Duke and Maryland are scheduled to play twice this season — at Duke on Jan. 17, and a month later at Maryland.

The preseason No. 1 ranking is the fifth for Duke and first since before the 1998-99 season. The Blue Devils, who were No. 2 in last year's preseason poll, have been ranked in the top 10 before each of the last 12 seasons, except for 1995-96. Since the preseason poll began for the 1961-62 season, Duke has been ranked in the top 10 23 times.

"It's always an honor and very nice to be ranked No. 1," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said, playing down the preseason ranking for a team that lost consensus national player of the year Shane Battier and fifth-year senior Nate James. "Experience means so much. Fortunately, this group has that."

Illinois, which received two first-place votes, was third and was followed by Kentucky, which was No. 1 on three ballots. The rest of the Top 10 was UCLA, Florida, Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, and Saint Joseph's.

Virginia, another member of the ACC, led the Second Ten and was followed by Memphis, Stanford, Georgetown, Michigan State, Temple, Boston College, Oklahoma State, North Carolina, and Southern California.

The last five teams in the preseason poll were Syracuse, Indiana, Texas, Alabama, and Oklahoma.

The preseason Top 25 came from eight conferences, with the Big 12 leading the way with five teams — Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma State, Texas and Oklahoma. The ACC, which also had North Carolina, and the Big Ten — Illinois, Iowa, Michigan State and Indiana — were next with four teams each.

This is third-straight preseason poll and fourth in the last five that has two teams from the same conference in the top five.

Big Ten still mum on clock call at Michigan-Michigan State game

By Larry Lage

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Lloyd Carr was still waiting — and still fuming — Monday over a call that may have cost Michigan a shot at the national championship.

While the Big Ten was silent on whether game officials had blown a call that helped Michigan State beat the Wolverines on the final play Nov. 3, Carr said he remained convinced the decisive play never should have been run.

"I said what I meant, and I meant what I said," he said.

On Nov. 3, Michigan State's Jeff Smoker, scrambling and off-balance, lobbed a 2-yard touchdown pass to T.J. Duckett as time expired to give the Spartans a 26-24 victory.

The play was set up after officials ruled that 1 second should remain on the clock after Smoker spiked the ball following a 1-yard scramble.

Michigan (6-2, 4-1 Big Ten) fell from sixth to 12th in the Associated Press poll and from fourth to 10th in the Bowl Championship Series standings. The top two teams in the final standings play for the BCS national title in the Rose Bowl on Jan. 3.

When Carr was asked Monday if he had talked to Dave Parry, the Big Ten's supervisor of football officials, the coach paused for a few seconds before raising his right hand.

"I take the Fifth," he said at his weekly news conference.

On his weekly television show the day after the game, Carr was more vocal.

"I'm sure the Big Ten will make some kind of statement, because that play should never have been allowed to be run," he said. "Obviously, the clock in the last 10 seconds, there's a major error there, and something needs to be done about it."

The officials' decision to have a second on the clock for the final play was not the only ruling still being questioned.

Michigan State called its final time-out with 36 seconds left when the Wolverines sacked Smoker for an 11th time. Then Michigan was flagged for having 12 players on the field, which should have stopped the clock and left the Spartans with a time out to call with about 10 seconds left, before the final play.

"All you have to do is tell them that you don't want the time-out," Carr said, regarding that situation.

Also, there was no extra-point attempt, and officials did not immediately explain why.

"The conference office has no comment at this time," Big Ten spokeswoman Sue Lister said Monday.

Carr said he's going to work at instituting changes after the Nov. 3 game.

What changes? "I'm going to put a chapter in my book about this issue," Carr joked. "I don't want to talk about it and reveal all the things now that I'm dealing with. Let's talk about Minnesota."

Local coaches speak on Terry Allen firing

By Chuck Schoffner

DES MOINES — Dan McCarney knows Terry Allen as a longtime friend. Mark Farley knows him as a colleague.

Both were saddened by his dismissal as football coach at Kansas.

Allen, formerly the coach at Northern Iowa and an Iowa City native, was fired Sunday with three games left in the season.

"I just feel terrible about it," said McCarney, Iowa State's coach. "He's a personal friend. We both grew up in Iowa City. He just brought a lot of class and dignity to Kansas and the Big 12 Conference since he's been there."

Farley left Allen's staff at Kansas last spring to become the coach at Northern Iowa. He also coached under Allen at Northern Iowa.

"For him to be let go is disappointing," Farley said. "I'm sad personally, but Terry Allen will be fine. He'd tell you that himself."

Farley, whose team has a 7-2 record, many times has credited Allen for his advancement in coaching. Allen was 75-26 as Northern Iowa's coach from 1989-96, and his teams won or shared seven conference championships. But he struggled at Kansas, leaving with a 20-33 record.
