The thin blue line seeks diversity

By Vess Mitev
The Daily Iowan

Some Eastern Iowa police departments are trying to restructure their ethnic composition in response to the rising number of minorities living in Iowa.

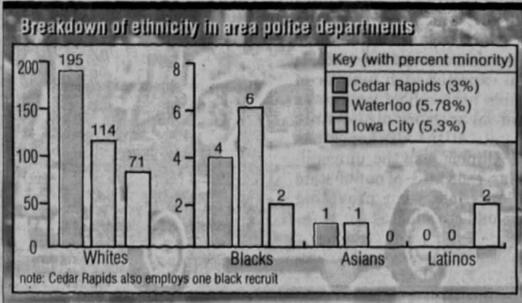

Three upcoming retirements on the Iowa City police force have opened up four spots, which officials say they will attempt to use to hire minorities. One hundred twenty-five applications have poured in, according to police records.

Iowa City has only two blacks and two Latinos on its 75-member force.

"We went out and encouraged minorities and women to apply," said Iowa City Police Chief R.J. Winkelhake. "I think it is important for the Police Department to fairly represent the community."

In Iowa communities facing similar population changes, such as Waterloo and Cedar Rapids, there has also been an effort to recruit minorities.

For many states, it's a rainy day

By Michael Rubinkam
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Unlike Iowa, many state governments are coming to the conclusion that, fiscally speaking, it's raining.

During the boom years in the 1990s, states deposited billions of dollars in "rainy-day funds" in case of recession or catastrophe. Now, from Michigan to Maine, Nevada to New York, states are dipping into those accounts or thinking about it.

Last week, Pennsylvania Gov. Mark Schweiker proposed tapping the state's rainy-day fund for only the second time since its creation in 1985 to cover $550 million of an expected $622 million shortfall. The fund contains $1 billion.

"The great news for Pennsylvanians is that we will be able, for the first time since World War II, to weather a recession without having to raise taxes, and it's in large measure due to our buildup of the rainy-day fund," Schweiker spokesman Steve Aaron said Jan. 31.

Iowa Gov. Tom Vilsack proposed dipping into the state's rainy-day fund last year to help offset a $300 million budget shortfall. The Republican-led Legislature opted against the measure, saying the slumping economy should not be considered an emergency, and Vilsack has said he won't propose the

Old Cap takes first step back

By Tony Robinson
The Daily Iowan

UI officials opened the Old Capitol doors Monday and outlined plans to restore the state's first capitol and repair the extensive water damage it sustained in a fire last fall.

Cracks ran down the walls of the 162-year-old building, its hardwood floors had caved in, and the spiral staircase was blocked with yellow tape — reminders of a Nov. 20, 2001, freak fire that destroyed the building's gold dome.

The building will first undergo exterior restoration while O.P.N. Architects Inc. reconstructs the gold dome and moisture is allowed to escape from inside the damaged structure. The restoration will also include a fire-suppression system, although officials have not yet determined any specifics.

Architects are currently gathering diagrams and other information for the first phase of the project.

"It is a necessity for us to become familiar with the building so we can conduct an accurate restoration," said Bradd Brown, the lead O.P.N. architect.

The university hired the Cedar Rapids-based firm last month to design a new dome and restore the inside of the structure. Construction has not begun; neither O.P.N. nor school representatives would speculate when it will start.

"Speed will be second priority to having it done right and not compromise the quality of the restoration," said Steve Parrott, the director of University Relations.

Architects initially scrambled to find documentation of the Old Capitol dome for restoration, but they hadn't gathered enough information until retired Iowa State University Professor Wesley Shank offered drawings and vital information of the building to the UI. The former architect and design professor collects drawings of historic Iowa buildings, and he happened to have diagrams from the Old Capitol restoration of the 1920s.

Surveillance as sophisticated as Bond

By Gian Sachdev
The Daily Iowan

Cameras that can be used to spy on people have become so tiny that they can be concealed in virtually anything, but they're only a problem when they fall into the wrong hands, an expert on video-surveillance technology said Monday.

Video-surveillance equipment can be hidden in such everyday objects as eyeglasses, smoke alarms, and baseball caps said Bill Schatzman, the founder and president of a North Carolina-based national security consultant agency, Schatzman & Associates.

Coralville tenant Matthew Martin contends that he stumbled upon this high-tech phenomenon in October 2001, when he told police that he had allegedly discovered evidence that his duplex owners had placed a hidden camera in his basement bathroom. They allegedly used the camera to record him and his girlfriend showering and changing, police reports have said.

Jennifer and Jason Zeman, both 26, were charged last week with electronic and mechanical eavesdropping after police allegedly uncovered evidence in the Zeman's home that a camera was concealed in Martin's bathroom sometime between May and October 2001.

During their search, investigators allegedly discovered the receiver component for the camera, used to transmit recorded images captured on the wireless device, videos containing adult material, and a number of computer disks.

Bush sticks to his guns on budget

By Alan Fram
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush proposed a $2.13 trillion budget on Monday that would pump billions into the war on terrorism but would challenge Congress by reining in resurgent deficits through cuts to job training, highways, and scores of other programs.

Foreshadowing tactics sure to echo until November's elections for control of Congress, Democrats embraced Bush's national-security plans. But they also blamed him and the ample tax cut he won last year for bringing back deficits and shortchanging domestic programs.

They complained that the budget would divert $1.5 trillion in Social Security and Medicare surpluses over the next decade to pay for other programs. In flusher times, lawmakers from both parties promised to use that money for debt reduction.

"The budget should promote long-term economic growth through fiscal responsibility, investments in people and technology, and honoring our commitments to Social Security and Medicare," said House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo. "The administration's budget fails on all three counts."

The Democrats' criticism is just one reason Bush's blueprint will hit election-year trouble in Congress.

Conservative Republicans oppose letting deficits return on the GOP's watch. Party moderates may resist his proposed spending cuts in toxic-waste cleanups, economic and urban development grants, and other programs.

Bush's spending plan for the budget year that begins Oct. 1 renews his call for tax cuts to bolster the economy, help lower-income Americans afford health insurance, and reward corporate research. It seeks more money for biomedical research, schools in poor districts, and park-land maintenance.

Right from its cover depicting a rippling Stars and Stripes, the spending plan makes it clear that its chief priorities of protecting Americans at home and pursuing enemies abroad.

"The budget I submit recognizes the vital role the military will play and recognizes we have only one alternative, and that is victory," Bush told cheering military personnel at Florida's Eglin Air Force Base.

Battling bioterrorists and other domestic security initiatives would double to nearly $38 billion. The Pentagon would get a $48 billion boost to $379 billion, including money for long-term contracts that will take years to spend. The figures include an overlapping $10 billion for

Out-of-state applicants rise sharply

By Peter Rugg
The Daily Iowan

The number of out-of-state applicants to the UI this fall have increased substantially more than their in-state counterparts, despite a 15.5 percent tuition increase for non-residents.

The Office of the Registrar reports that out-of-state applications to the university increased by 18 percent this year, while in-state applications have increased 6 percent.

"In the mid-80s, we had around 50,000 high-school graduates a year (in Iowa)," said Michael Barron, the UI director of Admissions. "Now, we have around 36,000. So in a way, there's more potential for growth outside of Iowa just because there are more students out there."

Although enrollment will be determined in May, when students respond to the UI's acceptance letters, this year's high number of out-of-state applicants will probably follow a trend in increasing non-resident students. The number of in-state students has steadily declined since 1999.

"I think one of the big changes for out-of-state students is that their flagship schools, particularly those students from Illinois, have become so competitive," said Lola Lopes, the UI associate provost for undergraduate education. "Iowa is reasonably close and reasonably inexpensive as far as out-of-state tuition goes."

According to the Office of Admissions, the UI has the lowest tuition out of the Big Ten for both in- and out-of-state students, $3,692 and $13,334, respectively. This fall, tuition will increase to $4,375 and $15,400, respectively.

All prospective students were notified of the tuition increase in literature sent by the university, Barron said.

"[The increase] really isn't an abnormal event in admissions," he said. "It's just a normal change a lot of universities are going through."

Barron said the UI's size may have been a draw for students.

"We're the smallest of the public universities in the Big Ten," he said. "So students and their families look at us, and they see all the extra advantages of a Big Ten school but also some of the advantages of a smaller school."

An expected high number of Illinois high-school graduates could mean more out-of-state students at the UI, Lopes has said. Illinois was the university's largest source of out-of-state students last year, providing 1,098 undergraduates.

City tightens funds for some agencies

By Mike McWilliams
The Daily Iowan

During its final city budget work session Monday, the Iowa City City Council informally decided not to fund three human-service agencies seeking funds from the city, citing inadequate revenue.

The organizations denied funding are the Arc of Johnson County, Visiting Nurse Association, and Youth Homes. The three agencies had requested nearly $6,000 in the first year that they have asked the city for money.

"The dollars aren't growing, and we can't afford to add new ones to the list," said Councilor Dee Vanderhoef.

The remaining 15 human-service agencies that have received funding from the city in previous years will receive more funding, less funding, or the same amount in fiscal year 2002.

The Emergency Housing Project, 331 N. Gilbert St., will receive a $4,000 increase from last year's $10,000 allocation. Funding for the Iowa Center for AIDS Resources and Education will decrease $1,650 from $11,000 last year, and the Rape Victim Advocacy Program will decrease $2,650 from $14,850.

Vanderhoef unsuccessfully proposed cutting more money from the ICARE and RVAP because they rely more on state and federal funding. The city contributes 0.3 percent and 3.4 percent to each agency's annual budget, respectively.

"I personally have a problem with decreasing ICARE," said Councilor Connie Champion. "AIDS is on the rise, and people with long-term diseases depend on ICARE for long-term physical care."

Under a proposal put forth by Vanderhoef and Councilor Irvin Pfab, current and future human-service agency funding would be capped at $455,000 per year — nearly $100,000 less than what was requested by the agencies for fiscal year 2003. The council informally agreed to the proposal.

Of the $455,000, $105,000 would come from the city's annual Community Development Block Grant from the federal government, $35,000 from utility enterprise funds, and $315,000 out of the general fund to help service agencies.

The council also informally agreed to waive, or significantly reduce, an agency's water and sewer fees and subtract that from the city's funding for an agency. It is aimed at freeing up money otherwise tied to paying utility bills for each agency.

Councilor Steven Kanner said the utility-bill waiver may not be the way to go.

"I think we need to look at that on a year-by-year basis," he said. "We're saying we're taking away utilities and that will free up other cash, but that may not always be the case."

Council OKs tax incentive for industrial park

By Mike McWilliams
The Daily Iowan

A proposed plan to offer developers rebates on property taxes in southeastern Iowa City has won the approval of a majority of the Iowa City City Council, but two councilors still aren't convinced it is the best way to stimulate economic growth.

David Schoon, the economic-development committee coordinator, said the group wanted the council to consider the designation of three tax-increment financing districts in the 375-acre Business Development Inc. Industrial Park on Highway 6 — so the city will be prepared in the future when businesses request such financing.

The tax plan offers a developer a property-tax rebate over a pre-determined amount of time.

The industrial park houses seven facilities, including Procter & Gamble, 2200 Lower Muscatine Road, and Blooming Prairie Warehouse, 2340 Heinz Road.

"[The industrial park] is pretty much developed," Schoon said. "The point is that there are a few small parcels that could be developed... [the tax plan] could be a tool to encourage development in an area that might not see development without some sort of assistance."

The majority of the council voted to go ahead with the proposal, but Councilors Steven Kanner and Irvin Pfab did not agree, saying such tax plans generally reward certain developers while neglecting others.

"Everyone tells me that [the tax plan] is great," Pfab said. "So, why don't we just [tax plan] the whole city to create a level playing field."

There are better ways to spur economic development in Iowa City, Kanner said, such as enhancing childcare programs.

"What we basically do with [the tax plans] is give money back to the rich developer," he said. "We need to concentrate on getting better childcare if we're going to get more and better development."

In other matters, the council decided to go ahead with the Iowa River Dam renovation project at a cost of $2.5 million — nearly $100,000 less than what was originally proposed. The project will include the construction of a pedestrian bridge across the dam at $1.2 million, with $1.3 million slated for restoration. The dam needs to be renovated to support the supply of water for the new water plant north of town.

The council also agreed to add John Morain's request for a liquor license to today's formal meeting agenda. Morain said he is in the process of purchasing Malone's, 121 Iowa Ave., from owner Kip Pohl.

Morain, who is from Des Moines, declined to comment on the terms of the sale.

Judge to rule on pipe-bomb charges

A local judge will decide in a hearing Thursday whether pipe bombs three former UI freshmen allegedly constructed in a dorm room fall under Iowa code as offensive weapons.

The ruling will determine if charges against Adam Fisher, 19, Nathaniel Krotz, 20, and Andrew Richie, 19, will stand or be altered. Each faces the charge of unauthorized possession of offensive weapons in connection with the March 22, 2001, incident.

Fisher's attorney, Leon Spies, filed the motion Jan. 14 to adjudicate the law to clarify the definition of offensive weapons, contending that a jury could not define the devices found in Fisher's room as such weapons.

Burge Residence Hall was evacuated by Public Safety, and local authorities safely removed the pipe bombs and diffused the devices.

The trio is scheduled to stand trial on April 22.

Police charge 2nd man with robbery

A second suspect in an armed robbery of a local gas station and subsequent car chase is in custody in the Johnson County Jail after his accomplice allegedly identified him during court testimony.

Norman Askew Jr., 37, who, authorities allege, successfully evaded police after the Oct. 30, 2001, incident, has been charged with first-degree robbery.

He was charged after Eddie Walker Jr., 39, recently picked him out of a photo line-up and identified him as the accomplice, court records said.

Walker allegedly drove the getaway car, with Askew allegedly in the passenger seat, from the Suburban Amoco, 370 Court St., after the two allegedly robbed the gas station with a knife.

Walker was apprehended after he crashed the car into a telephone pole. Askew evaded a two-hour search by Iowa City police, Johnson County deputies, the Iowa State Patrol, and the Cedar Rapids police helicopter, the records said.

Using their noodles for business

By Kellie Doyle
 The Daily Iowan

Ellie Palmas and David Allen have no qualms.

They are sure Iowa City is the prime spot for the noodle restaurant they have always dreamed of opening together.

"We have no doubt," said 23-year-old Palmas, who is from Ames. "Off the bat, we thought Iowa City. It was our No. 1 pick."

On Monday, the friends and partners began moving into the building space that just four days ago housed the Sub Shop, 19 S. Dubuque St. They said they hope to have their restaurant, ZMariks, which is Greek for "pasta," up and running by mid-April.

"We've talked about it for so long," said Allen, 26, of Des Moines. "We like the community. We want it to be a casual noodle house."

Everything prepared will be served in a bowl. Although they're still working on the menu, they said, they plan to prepare American, European, and Asian noodle dishes, rice bowls, and a variety of soups and salads.

Because service will be quick, alcohol will not be served in the restaurant. Customers will order at the counter, and within four to eight minutes, their meals will be brought to their tables.

Palmas, who is of Greek descent, and Allen have already hired an experienced full-time cook — Palmas' father, Jim.

"I have it in my blood, the restaurant background," Palmas said of her father, who has owned two fine-dining restaurants, one in Newton and the other in Ames.

Palmas and Allen decided they wanted to get a jump-start at opening a business after they realized they weren't satisfied with the industries they formerly worked in. Allen began working at a couple restaurants to get experience, and then they discovered through their realtor that Anne Rizzo would have space to lease in her building after the Sub Shop left.

Representatives from the Sub Shop did not return phone calls seeking comment Monday night. The partners said they are still deciding on a contractor to work on the inside of the restaurant, including the installation of new lighting and hardwood floors to replace the ceramic tiles. They said they are also excited about Rizzo's plan to reconstruct the building's front.

The project will bring the stone entrance, currently recessed approximately three feet, in line with the entryway of neighboring Discount Records, Palmas said.

Although they would not say how much they borrowed from a local bank to start up, Allen said they have enough money to do what they need.

"This happened much faster than I anticipated," Palmas said. E-mail: kellie-doyle@uiowa.edu

Stepping-Up to add 3 new students

By Jennifer Sturm
 The Daily Iowan

A UI organization created to solve the problems of underage and binge drinking will now have five student representatives instead of two — a move that UI Student Government members say will give students a stronger voice.

At a Stepping-Up executive committee meeting in early January, the members passed a proposal to add three additional student seats to the group. The proposal was originally introduced last summer, but negotiations postponed the decision.

The move will benefit Stepping-Up and its goals, said UISG President Nick Klenske.

UI junior Nick Herbold and UI junior Dilek Dogruyusever were appointed by Klenske as the Greek and at-large representative, respectively. A representative from the Graduate College has not been selected.

"The decision will bring new ideas and new voices to the group from the people who are most closely related to the problems that are trying to be solved," Klenske said.

New student representation will not improve underage or binge drinking in Iowa City, said KRUI 89.7 Issue One co-host Alex Stroda, who has publicly denounced Stepping-Up.

"Stepping-Up is fundamentally useless," he said. "The university is known as a party college. Students know this before they come. The group cannot change the culture."

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation gave the university a $830,000 grant to create Stepping-Up five years ago. Last year, the group was partly responsible for asking the Iowa City City Council to pass an alcohol ordinance that restricted the sale of drinks and toughened the fines levied against violators.

The group has also implemented several events as alternatives to late-night drinking.

Although it could take a generation to complete the objectives of the committee, Stepping-Up Chairwoman Carolyn Cavitt said a lot of progress.

"We have come a long way," she said. "Yet it feels like we have not done as much as we could, but change within the culture takes time."

WASHINGTON — Congressional committees took steps Monday to subpoena Enron's no-show former chairman, while the Justice Department rejected a Democratic call for a special prosecutor to investigate the collapse of his energy-trading company.

Former Chairman Kenneth Lay was to have been the star witness at congressional hearings this week, but he abruptly backed out Sunday night.

The Senate Commerce Committee scheduled a vote for today on a subpoena to force Lay's appearance.

Rep. Michael Oxley, R-Ohio, said the House Financial Services Committee would issue a subpoena to compel Lay's appearance "at the earliest practical date."

Lay, who resigned as chairman on Jan. 23, quit his remaining position as a director Monday.

"It's not possible to figure out what caused this huge Enron ship to capsize if you can't hear from the captain," said Sen. Ron Wyden, D-Ore.

Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., the chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, said a special prosecutor was needed because the Bush Justice Department could not be relied on to investigate objectively.

The Justice Department said in a statement that it sees no reason to appoint a special counsel to investigate Enron. "No person involved in pursuing this investigation has any conflict or any ties that would require a recusal," the department said.

Attorney General John Ashcroft stepped aside from the investigation last month because he had received campaign donations from Enron in his failed 2000 Senate bid. The probe is being led by Deputy Attorney General Larry Thompson.

At the start of a weeklong series of congressional hearings, William C. Powers, an Enron director and the dean of the University of Texas Law School, said his investigation into company activities found "a systematic and pervasive attempt by Enron's management to misrepresent the company's financial condition."

In a related development, a former Enron worker is accusing the company of spending money in an employee-benefits account on frequent payments to outside consultants. Robin Hosea, who was a former senior-benefits accountant, told the "CBS Evening News" on Monday that she was suspicious of the payments; but when she questioned her superiors, she was told the money was going to friends of executives and not to inquire further.

The Labor Department is investigating whether officials in charge of Enron's retirement plans violated federal pension law when thousands of workers heavily invested in company stock lost their retirement savings in the energy giant's collapse.

A Labor spokeswoman, Sue Hensley, said investigators have interviewed "a lot of folks," but they did not know whether Hosea was among them.

Republican lawmakers focused on Powers' report, released over the weekend, to keep attention on allegations of wrongdoing at Enron and away from the ties between the Houston-based company and Bush administration officials.

"At root, it is a corporate scandal," Sen. Peter Fitzgerald, R-Ill., said at a news conference by members of the Senate Commerce Committee.

Fitzgerald acknowledged that Enron was a "politically active" company but noted that the Clinton administration also appeared to have helped it.

Hollings homed in on the Bush administration, declaring, "We've got an Enron government." Hollings ticked off names of top Bush administration officials, some incorrectly, with ties to the company and listed benefits he said Enron received, such as loosened energy regulation.

Lay, who has been a friend of President Bush and his biggest campaign benefactor over the years, enjoyed high-quality access in Washington.

Enron spiraled downward into bankruptcy on Dec. 2. Countless small investors nationwide were burned by Enron's stock slide, along with state pension funds. Thousands of Enron workers lost their jobs and retirement savings that were dominated by company stock.

Allies warn U.S. about attacking Iraq

By Sally Buzbee
 Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Allies who strongly support the war on terror are squirming as the Bush administration debates whether Iraq should be the next target.

Russia, the Europeans, and Arabs — even NATO — all have made clear they won't necessarily support military attacks on Iraq.

America must identify "real dangers rather than imaginary," Russia's prime minister said Monday after meeting with President Bush.

And Germany's deputy foreign minister, noting that "the United States has old scores to settle with Iraq," warned, "This terror argument can't be used to legitimize old enmities."

U.S. officials have, in turn, made clear they would be willing to act alone. Iraq, one of three nations along with Iran and North Korea that Bush termed "an axis of evil," poses such a dangerous threat that pre-emptive action might be needed, they say.

At the same time, a senior Pentagon official known for his strong advocacy of attacking Iraq made it clear to European allies that Bush hasn't decided what to do.

The president spoke as he did "to begin the kind of debate" that allies have raised, said Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz.

"What the president did was to identify a problem," Wolfowitz said. He added: "We are a long way from decisions about what to do."

5 more Palestinians killed

By Mark Lavie
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — The Israeli military's legal adviser reportedly proposed tightening the criteria for targeted killings of Palestinian extremists — just as five members of a radical Palestinian group were slain Monday in what Palestinians said was the latest Israeli assassination of suspected militants.

Israel remained silent about its role in Monday's deaths, but the development focused new attention on the controversial Israeli policy in which dozens of Palestinians accused of terrorism have been killed.

Palestinian security officials said Israeli helicopters fired missiles at a car carrying five members of the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine near Rafah in the Gaza Strip. The attack left the car a mass of twisted, smoldering metal and killed four passengers instantly; a fifth died later.

"I heard a huge explosion, and then I saw fire coming from the car," said Suleiman Abu Arza, 32, who said he saw "bodies, arms of people spread all over."

Israel had no comment on the strike, but the Democratic Front, a radical wing of Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat's PLO, threatened revenge in a leaflet that promised to "very soon ... shake the land under the feet of the occupiers."

Arafat said the Rafah strike showed "the Israeli government does not want to calm down the situation."

"They are continuing their aggression and military escalation against the Palestinian people," he told reporters at his headquarters in the West Bank town of Ramallah, where he has been trapped for two months by Israeli tanks.

Since Israeli-Palestinian violence broke out 16 months ago, dozens of militants and many bystanders have died in "targeted killings," which Israel says are self-defense against those who plan attacks on its civilians. Israeli officials call them a last resort made necessary by the Palestinian Authority's refusal or inability to rein in militants.

Palestinians bitterly denounce what they term a policy of often political assassinations — such as the killing in August 2001 of Mustafa Zibri, who headed the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. The United States has criticized the policy, and human-rights groups say it violates international law.

In Israel, critics charge the killings are ineffectual and simply provoke more violence. "No assassination ended the suicide attacks" against Israel, commentator Michal Aharoni wrote in the Maariv newspaper. "Shedding their blood brings on the shedding of our blood."

A case in point was the Jan. 14 death of Raed Karmi, who headed the Al Aqsa Brigades — a militia affiliated with Arafat's Fatah — in the West Bank town of Tulkarem. Karmi, who had boasted of killing two Tel Aviv restaurateurs last year, died in an explosion widely attributed to Israel.

His death had been preceded by more than a month without Israeli civilian deaths — the longest such period since fighting erupted in September 2000 — and it swiftly put an end to the lull; 11 Israelis and an American died in a string of revenge attacks.

On Monday, the Israeli daily Haaretz reported that the military's legal adviser prepared a legal opinion advising a tightening of the criteria for "targeted killings."

According to Haaretz, the judge advocate general said such killings could be carried out only if there was clear evidence the target was about to plan or carry out a terror attack and he could not be arrested. The guidelines ban killings as retribution for past attacks, it said.

Israeli officials refused to confirm or deny the report.

But a senior Israeli defense official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said Israel never carried out revenge killings but rather targeted those who constituted "killing bombs" and would have killed men, women, and children.

100 years later, 'Game' returns to Central Asia

By Vladimir Isachenkov
Associated Press

MOSCOW — A century after the Russian Empire and the British Empire waged their so-called Great Game for supremacy in Central Asia, many in Russia are getting nervous about U.S. expansion into a strategic region rich in oil and natural gas. They fear the United States may use its military presence in the former Soviet Central Asian states to eventually elbow Russia out.

"Russia's political elite is seriously concerned about the United States expanding its political and military presence in Central Asia, even more so as countries in the region are eager to gain dividends from the American desire to get a foothold there," said Yevgeny Volk, the head of the Heritage Foundation's Moscow office.

Czarist Russia gobbled up Central Asian territory in a series of conquests that took approximately 150 years and lasted until the end of the 19th century. Britain became fearful of Russia's designs on its Indian realm, and the intense jostling for control, in which Afghanistan was one of the territories at stake, became a sort of forerunner of the Cold War.

The geostrategic prize in what some now see as a replay of the Great Game is Central Asia and the Caspian Sea basin, which hold the world's largest untapped oil and natural-gas reserves. The energy is worth an estimated $5 trillion, and the West, Russia, China, and India are all vying for control of pipeline routes that would deliver it to global markets.

Since the Soviet Union dissolved in 1991 and the Central Asian republics gained independence, cash-strapped Russia has found it difficult to keep them in its orbit. It has sent 25,000 troops and border guards to prop up a hard-line government in Tajikistan, but it has found it hard to preserve its clout with other nations.

The region's powerhouses, Uzbekistan and Kazakhstan, both have pursued independent courses and sought closer ties with the West. Turkmenistan, which has vast natural-gas reserves, has also taken an independent path.

Many voices in Russian politics and defense now say that by welcoming the U.S. military deployment in Central Asia for the war in Afghanistan, Russian President Vladimir Putin has ceded the few remaining levers in the region and lost critical points.

With Moscow's blessing, U.S. troops have deployed at an air base in Uzbekistan and at an airport in Kyrgyzstan, and other allied forces are expected to move to bases in Tajikistan and Kazakhstan.

Putin has argued that the U.S. military presence won't hurt Russia because the two are now partners, not rivals.

But with the re-emergence of other issues in dispute before the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, such as arms control and Russia's war in Chechnya, the brief U.S.-Russian honeymoon appears over. Russian officials and lawmakers have grown increasingly vocal in demanding that U.S. troops withdraw from Central Asia when the war in Afghanistan ends.

Parliament speaker Gennady Seleznyov and border guards chief Col. Gen. Konstantin Totsky are among those urging a quick U.S. pullout. "I will have objections if the United States and its allies wish to remain in Central Asia forever," Totsky said.

U.S. officials have sought to calm Russia by saying that no permanent bases are planned. But the specific format of U.S. involvement in Central Asia largely remains open-ended, and it "will last for years, at least through the end of George W. Bush's presidency and maybe longer," said Alexei Arbatov, the deputy head of the Russian Parliament defense-affairs committee.

Ethnic clashes in Nigeria escalate; thousands flee

By Glenn McKenzie
Associated Press

LAGOS, Nigeria — Gangs of youths armed with machetes, swords, and bows and arrows took to the streets of Lagos Monday in a third day of ethnic bloodletting in Nigeria's commercial capital. At least 55 people have been killed.

Grabbing what possessions they could, thousands fled as plumes of black smoke rose from the city's slums. The violence was the latest blow to a city still shaken by explosions at an army munitions depot that killed at least 1,000 people last week.

Soldiers were deployed Monday to help contain the violence, which began Feb. 2 between Yoruba and Hausa tribal fighters in the impoverished northern neighborhoods of Idi Araba and Mushin.

Nigerian Red Cross President Emmanuel Ijewere said his organization had counted 55 bodies by late Sunday. It was helping care for more than 150 people with gunshot, machete, and other serious wounds at area hospitals.

But witnesses spoke of dozens more killed overnight in clashes that, they said, spread to the nearby neighborhoods of Fadeyi and Onipanu.

In the morning, an Associated Press photographer saw a mob of Hausas hacking to death a suspected Yoruba militant with cutlasses and machetes in Idi Araba. The body of another man lay on the street outside the area's main hospital, while a third bloodied corpse lay across a highway in Fadeyi.

AP reporters counted 17 more burned, mutilated bodies Sunday. Gunshots reverberated through nearly abandoned streets Monday, as streams of residents fled, carrying whatever belongings they could.

Hundreds of people — mostly Hausa women, children, and elderly men — sought refuge at the Abalti army barracks, near Idi Araba. Officials there said they would soon be transferred to a camp set up at the Ikeja police college to house thousands of people displaced by last week's explosions.

Hundreds of others were already at the police college, where they lined up to receive meals of beans and rice served by Red Cross workers or dozed on bags of clothing and other belongings.

"I've lost my house and everything that I saved in 10 years of work," said market vendor Bello Adamu, 65, who planned to return to his village in northern Nigeria as soon as he could raise the bus fare.

In other parts of the city of 12 million people, life continued as normal, interrupted only by an occasional bus or truckload of refugees escorted by soldiers.

There are long-standing hostilities between the mainly Muslim Hausas and the Yorubas, most of whom are Christians and animists. The Hausas dominate Nigeria's north, while the Yorubas are the main tribe in the southwest.

The fighting died down Sunday after hundreds of police moved in and imposed an 8 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew. But it broke out again after midnight, when police appeared to have retreated. The handful of officers who remained on the scene were vastly outnumbered by fighters who openly toted machetes, swords, slingshots, and bows and arrows.

"We carried my grandmother from my house while they were shooting at us," said Mohammed Gurlunu, a 30-year-old Hausa resident who fled. "My neighbor's house was burning when we left, and maybe mine is burning now, too."

Africa's most populous nation is riven with ethnic, religious, and political divides. Thousands have been killed in periodic outbursts of violence since President Olusegun Obasanjo won election in 1999, ending 15 years of brutal military rule.

While a former military officer, Obasanjo is a Yoruba, and the army has traditionally been dominated by Hausas.

Last week's blasts at the munitions depot propelled shells and flaming debris for miles around in Lagos' northern Ikeja neighborhood. Many of those who died were women and children who fell into a canal and drowned during a late-night stampede to escape the explosions.

WASHINGTON — A federal judge on Monday blocked President Bush's appointment of a conservative lawyer to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, saying there are no vacancies to fill. The case has pitted the White House and Justice Department against Commission Chairwoman Mary Frances Berry, who is often critical of the civil-rights record of federal agencies and who lambasted Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, the president's younger brother, for his handling of the 2000 presidential elections. The Justice Department said in a lawsuit that Commissioner Victoria Wilson's term expired Nov. 29, 2001, at the end of the term of the commissioner she replaced — the late Judge A. Leon Higginbotham Jr. The department filed the lawsuit on Dec. 7 seeking to have attorney Peter Kirsanow of Cleveland seated on the commission. The department said a 2000 appointment by then-President Clinton had expired. U.S. District Judge Gladys Kessler said all commissioners serve six-year terms under a 1994 amendment to the federal law governing the appointment of commissioners. "That provision contains no exceptions or qualifications," she said as she issued her ruling in court. Berry and four other commissioners on the eight-member civil-rights panel contended that Wilson should serve a six-year term. The Bush administration and the three Republican-appointed commissioners said the law intended for Wilson to serve only until the end of Higginbotham's term.

idea again this year. Experts say states are much better equipped to handle an economic slowdown than they were during the last recession in the early 1990s, having increased their cash reserves from $7 billion in 1995 to $23 billion last year. Oregon, Arkansas, and Montana are now the only states without a rainy-day fund.

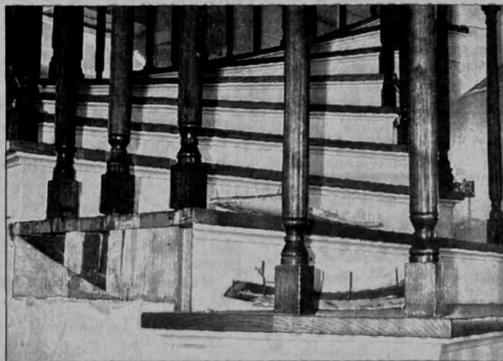

A report issued Jan. 31 by the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities found that states held an average of 7.7 percent of annual expenditures in reserve at the end of fiscal 2001, compared with 4.9 percent before the last recession. "During the economic boom, states squirreled a lot of money into these funds, and that's proving important now in the economic downturn," said Corina Eckl, who tracks state finances for the National Conference of State Legislatures. Faced with declining revenue, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, and Mississippi all raided their rainy-day funds in fiscal 2001. The trend continued this year, when six states enacted budgets that relied on surplus cash. With tax receipts falling sharply in the first quarter of the current budget year, Eckl said at least half the states are now proposing to use their emergency accounts. • In New York, Gov. George Pataki wants to use $646 million of the state's $3 billion rainy-day fund to close this year's budget shortfall and an additional $1.7 billion to cover next year's projected deficit. • Michigan Gov. John Engler proposed using cash reserves of $284 million to close the deficit for the budget year that ends Sept. 30. He wants to tap the fund again next budget year.

Water damage from last fall's fire has warped and cracked the steps on the Old Capitol staircase. The UI and the Old Capitol's restorer, O.P.N., have begun plans to fix the historic building.

"I've always been interested in old Iowa buildings, and I always kept diagrams in case a tragedy like this happened," he said. Damage to the Old Capitol is estimated between $5.2 million and $5.6 million. UI officials will file an insurance claim after all interior water-damage has been assessed. State officials have alleged that the blaze was accidentally ignited by South Dakota-based Enviro Safe Air workers who were removing asbestos with heat guns and torches at the time. The UI Foundation raised more than $47,000 in donations since the blaze. The largest con-

Waterloo police have only seven minority police officers out of 121 on staff — six blacks and one Asian — a situation police say needs to improve. Six minorities are employed on a 200-member force in Cedar Rapids — a number that officials hope to increase with the next round of hiring. Cedar Rapids police contacted minority leaders and, like other Iowa police departments, made recruiting visits to colleges and other urban centers in the state with high minority populations, relative to the state as a whole, such as Waterloo and Davenport. "We have nine minorities in our application pool," said Cedar Rapids Police Officer Joseph Ceruto. "That's fairly significant [given the demographics of the area]." According to 2000 Census statistics, Latinos in Iowa are the fastest growing minority, with Asians and blacks close behind. The effort to recruit more minority officers in Iowa City and elsewhere is a response to growing minority populations, police say. "We tried to lure people to come here," said Iowa City Police Sgt. Mike Brotherton. "Iowa City is changing, and we need to change right along with it." Brotherton went to Indian Hills Community College and other schools that offered police-science degrees to attract minority graduates to the department. According to the latest U.S. Census figures, Asians make up 5.6 percent of the Iowa City population, while blacks and Latinos make up 3.7 and 2.9 percent, respectively. The rising rate of Latinos in the area make Spanish-speaking officers crucial for the department, Brotherton said. "Anytime you have somebody who can speak another language, especially Spanish, that helps tremendously with some of the cases we deal with," he said. Language barriers can make a simple form of instructions — such as how to perform CPR or the Heimlich maneuver — more taxing for both police and the complainant. Translators are available for police, but officials said bilingual officers are needed to directly handle on-site emergencies. Other police departments say diversifying their force is a job that's far from done. "It's our continuing goal to become as diversified as possible," said Waterloo Police Chief Thomas J. Jennings. "Our community has become very different from the way it was a few years ago, and we must adjust." E-mail DI reporter Vess Miteff at: vessfstrbr@hotmail.com

"You wouldn't be committing an illegal action if you positioned a camera in a bathroom if you believed that there was suspicious criminal behavior being conducted there," Schatzman said. "But if someone positions a camera for personal use, that just isn't right." Schatzman's agency has worked with numerous manufacturing corporations, including some in the tobacco industry, to inform them how video surveillance can be used to target employee stealing, industrial espionage, and sexual harassment. He said the Internet has helped the proliferation of the technology. "There are tons of [Web] sites out there that contain all types of surveillance equipment," said Schatzman, a former FBI agent. "Covert cameras have been available since I was on the force in the '70s, but today, they're much more sophisticated and smaller." While Coralville police Lt. Ron Wenman said local authorities haven't dealt with many cases of this nature, they have happened before. In 1992, the Canterbury Inn in Coralville was ordered to pay $4 million in punitive damages and $300,000 in compensatory damages after its employees allegedly spied on customers. Attorney Tom Riley, who worked on the case, said employees had created a trap door that led from the laundry room to a wall behind the suite. The camera, he said, was positioned behind a two-way mirror facing the Jacuzzi and bed. E-mail DI reporter Gian Sachdev at: gian-sachdev@uiowa.edu

Defense Department anti-terrorism activities. Bush would use that Defense increase — the biggest since President Reagan's buildup two decades ago — to raise military pay by 4.1 percent while buying more pilotless surveillance planes, Stealth fighters, and other weapons. Last year's vision of uninterrupted annual surpluses has evaporated, thanks to the recession, the costs of fighting terrorism, and the $1.35 trillion, 10-year tax cut that Congress passed for Bush in the spring. Gone, too, are the president's year-old plans to retire $2 trillion in national debt by 2011. Bush forecasts a $106 billion deficit this year and $80 billion in 2003; not until 2005 is black ink projected. Also, last year's projected $5.6 trillion in accumulated 10-year surpluses has shrunk to $1 trillion, assuming the president's tax and spending plans are enacted. Democrats said even that dwindled surplus was inflated because of its reliance on Social Security and Medicare funds. "It's fictional. That's exactly what got Enron in trouble," said Senate Budget Committee Chairman Kent Conrad, D-N.D., referring to the bankrupt energy company's accounting tricks. But House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., said the eroded surpluses justified "limiting growth in spending for those programs that are not as essential during these trying times." Overall spending in 2003 would grow by $76 billion, or 3.7 percent, over this year's total. Projected revenue would increase by $102 billion, or 5.2 percent, to $2.05 trillion. The president sets aside $190 billion over the decade to set up Medicare prescription-drug benefits and overhaul the program. That is an amount lawmakers consider too low. More telling, however, is the one-third of the budget that Congress must approve each year and that excludes automatically paid benefits such as Social Security. Overall, that category would grow by nearly 8 percent to $773 billion. But aside from the robust increases proposed for defense and domestic security, everything else — from the space program to agriculture — would get a cumulative 2 percent boost, less than the inflation rate. Winners include the National Institutes of Health, whose $27 billion would culminate a bipartisan, five-year drive to double its budget. One of Bush's highest-profile reductions is the $9 billion cut — to $23 billion — for highway building. Many lawmakers predict the money will be restored. Twenty of the government's 48 job-training programs would be erased, including one to help migrant farm workers find jobs outside agriculture. Advanced technology grants to companies, one of former President Clinton's favorites, would be cut, as would funds for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and the U.S. Geological Survey.

POLICE LOG

James Eyman, 19, of Iowa City was charged with assault with a dangerous weapon on Jan. 31. Family members alleged that Eyman threatened to kill everyone in the house, including the dog, while holding a butcher knife, according to police reports. Dennis Richardson, 31, of Iowa City was charged with assault with a dangerous weapon on Jan. 29 at 9:43 p.m. at 1925 Boyrum St. Police allegedly observed Richardson strike two people with a baseball bat, according to police reports. Andre Goodwin, 21, of Milwaukee was charged with assaulting a peace officer on Feb. 2 at 2:09 a.m. at the intersection of Burlington and Linn streets. Police allegedly observed Goodwin fighting with other subjects. After the police restrained Goodwin's friend, Goodwin struck the officer in the face with his fist, police reports said. Goodwin was unable, at first, to recall his date of birth or middle name, according to reports. — by Gian Sachdev

Northeast-area fire station should be council's priority

After years of debate and a contentious vote, the First Avenue extension is finally complete. However, the road will remain closed until the Scott Boulevard extension is complete — a project that is slated to begin this summer. In addition, the construction of a Northeast-area fire station — an item that helped the controversial extension plan pass — has been postponed for a minimum of two years because of a lack of funds.

While budgetary shortfalls never fail to wreak havoc on civic planning, the construction of a Northeast-area fire station should remain a priority for the Iowa City City Council. Without the easy access such a station would provide, citizens and area development are placed in danger.

The delayed response time for the Northeast area is a danger to citizens and a hindrance to development.

According to Lt. Ken Brown, "It can take up to 10 minutes to reach the Northeast side — and every second counts."

Before the City Council's recent decision to postpone the building of the fire station, the lieutenant expected a fourth fire station this year. "The original [completion] date for station No. 4 was July 1, 2002, but of course, that's not happening now. And that was already a 4-year-old plan."

For now, it appears that residents of and developers in the Northeast area will have to continue wondering if fire engines will make it from downtown to their area in time — unless the council re-evaluates its budgetary priorities.

The City Council should take another look at what it is funding. While the library expansion is unquestionably beneficial for Iowa City, the $18 million would have a stronger, more immediate effect were it used instead to construct and staff the desperately needed fire station. Also, a fire certainly poses more danger to the citizens of Iowa City than do underage drinkers on the Pedestrian Mall. The council would be wise to review its spending priorities and shift funds to where they will do the most good.

Staying abreast of the situation in Washington

So what is it with John Ashcroft and breasts? There's something about being a son of the Confederacy that makes you anti-bosom?

Much to the great amusement of seemingly every female columnist in the country, the attorney general, in his esteemed wisdom (which previously led him to lose his Senate seat to a corpse), has decided to cover up the Statue of Justice in the halls of the Justice Department.

Of course, cover-up seems to be the prevailing mood, if not the mode, of the King George/Stealth President administration these days, so John Boy fits right in.

And what, you ask, was so offensive about Justice's Statue of Justice?

Well, the statue personifies justice as a woman, in the style of the ancient Greeks, and, in the delicate words of Dr. Susan Block, the statue has a bare boob.

The bare breast apparently so insulted the sensibilities of our prudish attorney general that he ordered the statue covered with a set of drapes, at a cost of many thousands of dollars to the taxpayers. (What? He couldn't just order up a $9 sheet from Kmart? God knows, if not the attorney general, that Kmart could use the business these days. Any business.)

No matter that the statue has stood in the Justice Department for more than 70 years. Or that the décolletage didn't seem to offend such legendary right-wing attorneys general as John Mitchell and Edwin Meese.

Admittedly, they were awfully busy covering up other things. But still.

No, Ashcroft didn't like the sight of a bare-breasted Statue of Justice looming over his right shoulder when he gave press conferences on such weighty matters as dispensing justice to the Taliban fighters we've picked up along the way and are now not sure what to do with, so we stashed them in Cuba hoping that everybody would forget about them.

(If Bill were still president, he'd know what to do with those Taliban guys. He'd trade them to Castro for two cases of real Havana cigars and a player to be named later. Bill knows the deep, inner meaning of a real cigar.)

Of course, it could be that we're underestimating the attorney general. It just might be that he was trying to protect the tender sensibilities of the Taliban guys. They do seem to have this thing about statues, as they proved when they blew up the two giant statues of Buddha in Afghanistan.

And, as they proved many times over, they also seem to have this thing about covering up women — to the point of invisibility.

But, in the case of the attorney general and the Statue of Justice, as Maureen Dowd of the New York Times has pointed out, Ashcroft could've just shifted his press conferences a few degrees to the south, thus avoiding the offending breast.

And, as I would point out, a few degrees to the South are where Johnny Reb's tendencies lie anyway.

All in all, I'm not sure which is more telling — that Ashcroft is such a prude he would go to the lengths of covering up a statue, or that it took him a year in office to discover that it was partially topless.

The Washington rumor mill has it that Ashcroft's next target is Venus on the Half-Shell. Talk about topless.

Of course, cover-ups aren't the only thing going on in Washington these days. There's also Enron.

Speaking of which, has anyone heard from the secretary of the Army lately? You remember him — Thomas E. White. He used to be a top honcho at Enron Energy Services, one of the "partnerships" that made Enron what it is today, before jumping ship to become secretary of the Army. Last June, actually, was when he changed careers.

What luck. Got out just in time.

Maybe we should make that Stealth Secretary of the Army, because he seems to be residing in the American colony of Incommunicado, just a few caves down from Stealth Brother Neil Bush.

And speaking of the Stealth Brother, his name popped up in the news recently in connection with Enron. In the '80s, according to the Times, the Bush family had business interests in Argentina, which lately has become the Enron of countries.

And Enron, in the late-80s, wanted to build a gas pipeline in Argentina but pay just 15 percent of the going rate for gas.

After the Argentine minister of public works, Rodolfo Terragno, decided in '88 that this maybe wasn't in the best interests of his nation, he got a phone call from Washington that went:

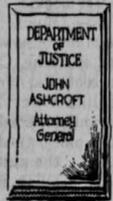

"Mister Minister, I'm the son of the vice president, and I've just returned from a campaign trip with my father. I'm calling you because I know you have a proposal from Enron sitting on your desk. I want to tell you that in my opinion this would be a good thing for your country."

And they say you can't buy influence in Washington. Terragno, by the way, says he knows the caller wasn't the Stealth Brother because he was acquainted with Neil Bush, the only other Bush son in the Argentine gas biz.

The other giveaway was that the caller couldn't speak very good English.

That's our Bush. Stay tuned. There might be more inside the Beltway than cover-ups.

Though you should cover your statues. The attorney general might be coming.

America's charge in the Middle East

A voice was heard in Ramah (Iah), weeping and much wailing; it was Rachel weeping for her children, and she was unwilling to take comfort because they are no more.

America has surrendered to all the terrorists in the Middle East. It has used a sacred privilege we have no right to exercise. As the remaining hegemon/super power, we do not have the privilege of opting out of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict as peacemakers, mainly because we have not been called out of world events. We opted out of the United Nations; we opted out of treaties that took years and several presidents to negotiate; we opted out of world affairs; we opted out of compassion for the common people of Iraq — we closed our eyes to the simple fact that not everybody LOVES Americans. The result is terrorism in the homeland, and as Herman Melville predicted in Moby Dick: BLOODY BATTLE[S] IN AFGHANISTAN!

By opting out of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, we are giving our ally, the Israelis, a false sense of security and pushing them into following mad men, like the crew of the Pequod following Captain Ahab in pursuit of Moby Dick — read it now.

Melville's Moby Dick examines the problematic of making one entity responsible, like Ahab's hatred of the White Whale, for all the terrorism in our cosmos. We can no longer allow for the tit-for-tat chase that always goes on in the Middle East to escalate into greater violence, because as the last standing hegemon before the end of this system of things (the ones having insight will understand this metaphor), America must act responsibly or face the consequence of our neglect.

We cannot abdicate our moral responsibility, like Esau, who did not respect sacred things and ended by being hated in order to satisfy lobbies at home, who in their hubris and zeal have blinded themselves to the fact that they are helping to create an apartheid state in the Middle East, a place where memory and hate run deep.

This fact should call for an examination of what the result will be of such a state: War until there is not one man, woman, or child, Jew or Moslem, standing in Jerusalem while the traveling merchants (of death) stand outside weeping and mourning over her because there is no one to buy their full stock (of weapons) anymore.

America, "blessed are the Peacemakers" (for they do the work of God).

Peace and Blessings; Shalom; Salaam, and Salem,

I'll be back, Terminator tells politics and movie fans

By David Germain
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The big guy from Austria likes the sound of California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger. Pumping political iron will have to wait awhile, though, while the actor revisits roles as the world's favorite cyborg from the future and a family man-superspy.

A Republican booster and organizer for inner-city youth programs, Schwarzenegger said he considered running for governor this year but put his political career on hold to shoot Terminator 3: The Rise of the Machines. He hopes to follow that up with a True Lies sequel.

"For the next few years, I will be busy with show business and movies, and then I can rethink the whole thing later on," Schwarzenegger said in an interview. "I don't like what I see in the leadership. I think I can do better than them in many cases. That's what gives me the enthusiasm to do something like that down the line, and it's a fun thing to shoot for."

Besides film commitments, Schwarzenegger said, he would rather wait to seek office till his four children with wife Maria Shriver are older.

Schwarzenegger, 54, has had to play some politics with Collateral Damage, fielding questions about the propriety of releasing another of his violent thrillers given the war on terrorism. In the film, Schwarzenegger plays a Los Angeles firefighter seeking vengeance against the Colombian terrorist whose bomb killed the hero's wife and son.

The movie had been scheduled for release in October 2001, but Warner Bros. postponed it after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. Schwarzenegger and the studio agreed the grieving nation did not need to see fictional terrorism so soon after the carnage at the World Trade Center and Pentagon.

Suitable time has passed to put Collateral Damage in theaters, Schwarzenegger said. The attacks and America's war against terrorists have not deflated the actor's — or the audience's — interest in explosive action films, he said.

"I don't see the Sept. 11 situation as, 'OK, now I should pull back on violence,'" Schwarzenegger said. "The world is the way it is. Part of the world is violence, and it always will be. There's a certain audience out there that enjoys this type of movie, and a certain audience that enjoys when they see me in these kinds of movies."

But if the audience isn't there for that kind of movie, he said, "I'm just as happy making a comedy such as Twins or Kindergarten Cop."

Heroic action roles have been his staple, but the former bodybuilding champ broadened his Terminator sequel.

The luster of the lone, invincible warrior dulled in the late '90s, as moviegoers embraced brooding, idea-driven thrillers such as The Matrix. Willis has moved to drama and comedy lately, while Stallone has been unable to pack theaters for years.

Schwarzenegger appears fit and ready for more action roles. He said he's almost fully recovered from a motorcycle accident in December 2001 that broke six ribs and put him in the hospital for four days.

Smoking a cigar during the interview, Schwarzenegger said he also he has been in good health after undergoing surgery to replace a heart valve in 1997.

Terminator 3 starts shooting in April, with Schwarzenegger again playing a cyborg that comes back in time to save the world from its future machine rulers. Jonathan Mostow (U-571) takes over as director from James Cameron, who made the first two Terminator films and True Lies.

Schwarzenegger remains politically active, pushing an initiative he hopes to have on the California ballot this fall to budget $550 million in state money for after-school programs.

A run for governor is at least four years away, though.

"That's the great thing about this country, that as a foreigner, 'Mr. Schwarzen-Schnitzel,'" he said with a laugh, "I can come here and say, 'Maybe some day I'm going to run this state.' It's a big state. Then we can buy Austria."

The roots of punk rock insurgency

By Richard Shirk
The Daily Iowan

When London Calling was released in the States in January 1980, the Clash was the last gang in town.

The implosion of the Sex Pistols left the Clash in the position of being the only band left that really mattered that had arisen from the punk insurgency of the late-70s. In contrast to the nihilism of the Pistols, the Clash existed on an assumption that the band could change society for the better through music. Referred to by frontmen Mick Jones and Joe Strummer as "creative violence," it was a bit half-baked, usually unfulfilled, but at least it was well-intentioned. This was constructive punk rock.

London Calling captures this time for the band in one hour and 19 tracks. Although the bite of earlier songs from the self-titled debut album, such as "White Riot," is still there, the familiar themes of defiance and constructive social protest benefited from the group's having stayed together long enough to actually learn how to play the instruments. No longer limited to three chords and a snarl, the issues of poverty, drug abuse, and love are expressed amid the band's own effort to grow into its musical style by experimenting with the styles of others.

With the restraints of punk aesthetic removed, the Clash wrote a fury of diverse songs over the course of summer 1979 in the Pimlico district of London, in an old garage turned into a rehearsal space.

This creative burst of energy yielded an eclectic collection of songs drawing on a wide range of musical styles including ska, reggae, and '50s American rock 'n' roll.

London Calling was recorded in roughly half of the time of the previous album, Give 'Em Enough Rope, and there is exponentially more vitality because the studio gloss of the previous album is abandoned for a direct, almost live feel.

The social critiques and perspectives found on London Calling can easily be seen as reflecting the state of the band. Embroiled in a tangled lawsuit with former management, and trapped in an exploitative contract with CBS Records, the protagonists of such songs as "Spanish Bombs" and "Guns of Brixton" seem to frequently signify the Clash's sense of being martyrs in hopeless scenarios.

The strife is an economic one in the "Guns of Brixton." Paul Simonon's first effort in songwriting. An urban portrait of the impoverished industrial north of England, there is again the pervasive sense of helplessness. The bleak desperation is also found in Simonon asking, "When they break down your front door/How you gonna come?/With your hands on your head?/Or on the trigger of your gun?"

In the worldview of the Clash, it seems not a question of whether the situation will arise in which the police will drag you away, but only a question of when.

However, the subject matter often differs as much as the style from song to song. "Hateful," a casual rocker about drug addiction, segues perfectly into the horns and ska of "Rudie Can't Fail," one of a handful of songs that finds the band paying homage to its shared affection for Caribbean ska. Also mixed in are a handful of great Jones songs such as "I'm Not Down" and "Train In Vain" that avoid the political aim of most of Strummer's songs and end up being some solidly written love songs.

As the first important album of the 1980s, and as an album that is still important and relevant, the strength of London Calling is in its differences. The synergistic mix of stylistically adventurous and vibrant songs captures a moment from the brief window of rock history when the Clash was the only band that mattered.

Former Hoosier Luke Recker returns to Assembly Hall for first time as a foe

Scott Morgan/The Daily Iowan

Iowa guard Luke Recker goes up for a shot during Iowa's 69-57 win over Wisconsin at Carver-Hawkeye Arena, Jan. 2.

Iowa faces daunting task

By Todd Brommelkamp The Daily Iowan

Luke Recker's soap opera-like story line aside, a basketball game remains to be played for the Iowa Hawkeyes this evening. "I would hope that he [Recker] can block all that out and just play the game, and as we've tried to do as a team, focus on what you can control," Iowa coach Steve Alford said. "What you can control is what's happening between the baselines."

Focusing on the game may be the best thing to do for the 15-8 Hawkeyes. Though Iowa defeated Penn State in its last outing, 81-64, the Hawkeyes are just 4-5 in Big Ten play, 15-8 overall, with the conference tournament one month away. But the underlying attention being paid to Recker's return will make that a hard task to accomplish.

By Tyler Lechtenberg The Daily Iowan

Homecomings are supposed to be special, but Luke Recker would rather his return to Indiana University go unnoticed.

"As soon as I get off the plane, I'm putting the bulletproof vest on, the sunglasses, the mustache," he said. "It's going to be brutal."

Welcome back, Luke.

While the Auburn, Ind., native may joke about how he'll handle the fans when he returns to Bloomington this evening as an Iowa Hawkeye, some of the things he's been through since leaving Hoosierland have been no laughing matter.

Such as death threats and anonymous, harassing letters.

Recker, Iowa's leading scorer this season, started 63 of 66 games as a freshman and sophomore for the Hoosiers from 1997-99 under former coach Bob Knight. He averaged 12.8

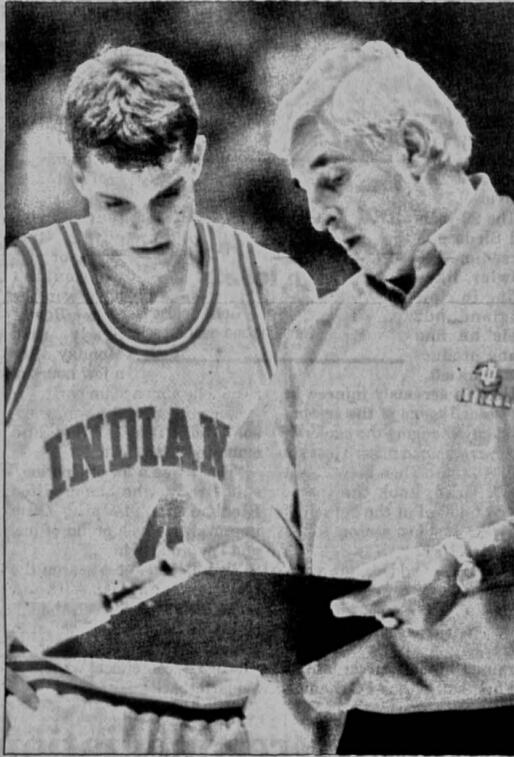

and 16.1 points his first two years, but he discovered that despite having grown up as a Hoosier, Indiana just wasn't the place for him. So he packed his bags and headed south to Arizona after the 1998-99 season.

For IU fans, watching the state's former Mr. Basketball walk away from the dream of thousands of young Indiana boys was a slap in the face. They took losing him so personally, Recker said, he received 250 e-mails the day he left

Patriots essence of NFL

By Dave Goldberg Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — The New England Patriots, the latest unlikely Super Bowl champions, are the perfect representatives of the modern NFL team — down last year, up this year and ... who knows about next season?

Free agency and the salary cap, which make it almost impossible to keep teams together for more than three or four seasons, have produced some unmistakable trends of late.

To wit: • The Patriots, who stunned the 14-point favorite St. Louis Rams, 20-17, Sunday night, are the third-consecutive Super Bowl victor who was mediocre or worse the season before it won. New England was 5-11 last season; Baltimore was 8-8 before it won the 2001 Super Bowl, and the Rams were 4-12 before winning the 2000 Super Bowl.

• How unforeseen was the success of those teams? Each of the past three Super Bowl champions made zero appearances on "Monday Night Football" during the season in which it won the title.

• Seven franchises have filled the eight slots in the last four Super Bowls — the Rams are the only team with two appearances in that span. By contrast, in the 17 seasons from 1981-97, just 14 franchises filled the 34 Super Bowl slots, and only eight teams won championships — led by San Francisco with five titles, and Dallas and Washington with three each.

• New England began the season with 50-1 odds to win the Super Bowl — and the odds

point/counterpoint

Should Mike Tyson be awarded a boxing license?

Lennox Lewis wants to fight Mike Tyson. Why else would the guy still be hanging around with chunks of flesh missing, popping antibiotics like sunflower seeds, waiting for his opponent to be licensed?

On one hand, Lewis said Tyson should check himself in for medical help before a bout. But on the other hand, who are we kidding? Tyson is about as admirable a public figure as Jack the Ripper, but he does have one thing going for him: He's insane. And it works.

Anyone else who's been brought up on so many counts of assault, misconduct, and rape would probably be in a white coat listening to chirping birds or in a double-fortified steel cage. But this is Mike Tyson. He is a cultural symbol of boxing, for better or worse.

His rap sheet rivals the phone book, but if controversy didn't surround the 34-year-old boxer, the world would probably cease to spin on its axis. In fact, there's almost a science to promoting his name, and only the most ludicrous and obscene will do: biting chunks out of a leg, gnawing an ear, tossing Christmas ornaments at the media, throwing TVs in prison, punching tassel dancers in the chest.

But it's effective, and those who don't respect him for his psychopathic behavior have to laud his achievements in the ring. Tyson owns a 17-year, 49-3-0-2 record with 43 knockouts. He was an WBA, WBC, and the undisputed heavyweight champion, and at age 20 was the youngest in history with a KO of Trevor Berbick in 1986.

Michigan's boxing commissioner said he'd license Tyson. Lewis wants to add Tyson's name to his résumé before he retires, and Tyson needs the money (a reported $20 million) as well as the credibility. Most other people just want to see him do what he does best — add a bizarre twist to the sport.

Let's just hope this time it doesn't involve molars.

— by Roseanna Smith

Mike Tyson does not deserve to fight.

It is not his fault, but he suffers from a chemical imbalance that makes him violent and irrational, which should trump him from participating until it is regulated.

I realize that Tyson is one of the best heavyweights to enter a ring, with record of 49-3-0-2, and 43 knockouts, but how many athletes will lose body parts before he is required to seek professional help for his mental illness?

According to a medical evaluation of Tyson by doctors at the Massachusetts General Hospital, he was diagnosed as manic depressive, but he quit taking the medication because it slowed him down too much. In my opinion, that is exactly what he needs before he steps foot into another boxing ring.

As evidence of this disease, he not only bit Evander Holyfield's ear during a fight on June 25, 1997, but bit through Lennox Lewis' pants, taking a chunk out of his leg, during a press conference in New York on Jan. 22.

Since 1997, Tyson has been charged with a combination of eight alleged sexual assaults and rapes, as well as eight alleged assaults or other acts of violence since 1988.

Boxing is a sport in the rawest form. It is supposed to be a battle of strength, speed, agility, and quickness, not a place for men to bite, chew, or attack their counterparts. The sport of boxing and its fans want to see the best fight, and yes, that may well be a bout between Lewis and Tyson. But, until Tyson can prove he is sane, which he has recently failed to do, fans will be disappointed by a third-round disqualification or a no-contest.

The Nevada Athletic Commission had the right idea when it denied him a boxing license in the state on Jan. 29. I just hope other states follow suit, or the sorry soul that decides to fight him just may lose a much-needed body part.

Brady's success may mean Bledsoe's exit

By Howard Ulman
 Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Tom Brady might as well rev up that luxury SUV he won as the Super Bowl's MVP and drive Drew Bledsoe out of town in style. Brady's latest success in football's biggest game left little doubt that Bledsoe, the best quarterback in New England Patriots history, will be playing elsewhere next season. Plenty of teams need quarterbacks, and the Patriots could use the salary cap space. Team owner Robert Kraft said he'd like to keep both QBs but would consider a blockbuster trade. Bledsoe is scheduled to make $5 million next season, the second of a 10-year, $103 million contract. He probably won't be on the team's unprotected list to be announced today, because the Patriots would get nothing in return. "I look forward to my future," Bledsoe said after Sunday night's 20-17 upset of the St. Louis Rams. "I still want to play, and I feel like I can play this game at a very high level." The 29-year-old Bledsoe, a three-time Pro Bowler, likes living in New England but feels he has many productive years left. He was seriously injured in the second game of the season, suddenly changing the career of a player who had missed just six of 128 games. Then he watched while Brady took the team, which finished at the bottom of the AFC East last season, to the top of the NFL. But Bledsoe added one accomplishment to a career in which he has broken almost all of the team's passing records. He came in after Brady sprained his left ankle late in the first half of the AFC championship game, threw a touchdown pass and led the Patriots to a 24-17 win in Pittsburgh. "I'm fortunate to be on a team with guys like Drew, or else we wouldn't have won the Super Bowl," Brady said Monday after a few hours of sleep following a team party. Moments after the win, Bledsoe and Brady smiled and embraced on the field. "There was a lot of emotion," said Brady, who has credited Bledsoe for helping him improve. "He was proud of me, and I'm proud of him." Bledsoe ended his season the way he spent it: with an unselfish attitude, even though he knows he could be headed to a team such as Washington or Chicago — contenders who need a quarterback.

"This whole season has been about playing as a team," he said. "I know my role and I do my part to support my team. I really do understand what my role has been." Bledsoe's departure wouldn't be the only change coach Bill Belichick will make because of salary cap issues and free agency. "I'd love to be able to keep the team the way it is, but realistically, I don't think that's totally possible," Belichick said Monday. Adam Vinatieri, whose 48-yard field goal as time expired won the Super Bowl, is a free agent. So is running back Antowain Smith. Several defensive players joined the team this season on one-year contracts. Brady is signed through next season, but the Patriots might give him an extension rather than let him become an unrestricted free agent. The sixth-round draft pick from Michigan in 2000 hardly seemed that valuable when he ended last season as the team's No. 4 quarterback.

Jordan, wife announce reconciliation efforts

By Nancy Armour
 Associated Press

CHICAGO — Michael and Juanita Jordan are giving their marriage another try. The Jordans, who announced last month they were divorcing after 12 years of marriage, said Monday they are attempting a reconciliation. Juanita Jordan also withdrew the divorce petition she filed Jan. 4 in Lake County Circuit Court. "We have decided to attempt a reconciliation, and our efforts to do so will be greatly enhanced if the privacy of our personal lives is respected," the couple said in a statement issued by Juanita Jordan's attorneys. Attorneys for both sides confirmed the statement, and said there will be no further comment. "Juanita's and Michael's joint statement says everything they have to say," said Frederick Sperling, an attorney for Michael Jordan. In her original divorce petition, Juanita Jordan said past attempts at reconciliation had failed and future ones "would be impractical and not in the best interests of the family." But when he was asked about the pending divorce last month, Michael Jordan expressed some hope of a reconciliation. "That's something probably we'll work on," he said then. "I don't think I want to sit here and go through that. We have kids, obviously, and we want to make sure that's the focus. Outside of that, when the time comes, you guys will hear about it." When Juanita Jordan filed for divorce, her petition sought custody of their three children; possession of their marital property; and a "fair and reasonable sum" for temporary and permanent maintenance. Under her petition, Michael Jordan would have been granted visitation rights with his children. Last September, Fortune Magazine estimated Jordan's wealth at $398 million. In his final two seasons with the Chicago Bulls in 1997 and 1998, his salary topped $60 million. When Jordan retired for the second time, he cited a desire to spend more time with his family, even joking that he would help with car pools. He maintained his home in the Chicago area even when he returned to basketball as a front-office executive with the Wizards last season. But his decision to make another comeback as a player at age 38 has kept him in Washington most of the time and on the road, away from Chicago. Michael and Juanita Jordan met at a Chicago restaurant during his second season with the Bulls and were married Sept. 2, 1989, in Las Vegas. Their children are Jeffrey, 13, Marcus, 11, and Jasmine, 9.

Russell charged in sexual assault
 ALAMEDA, Calif. (AP) — A lawyer for Darrell Russell said Monday the Oakland Raiders defensive back will plead innocent to charges he drugged, raped, and sexually assaulted a woman last week. Russell was charged Monday with 25 counts relating to the alleged attack, and he is being held in jail in lieu of $1.2 million bail. Russell appeared in court for the first time Monday and did not say anything as his lawyer, Anthony W.

Gibbs, waived arraignment. Gibbs said Russell will enter an innocent plea and seek bail reduction on Thursday. After the brief hearing, Gibbs told reporters he had spoken with Russell since his arrest Feb. 1, but had not seen evidence that prosecutors plan to present. "The truth or accuracy of the charges, I have absolutely no idea about," Gibbs said. Russell, along with two other men, is charged with eight counts of raping by use of drugs, six counts of oral copulation of an unconscious person, five counts of sexual penetration by foreign object, and six counts of sexual battery. Officials plead not guilty in records case

 DES MOINES — The president of Iowa Central Community College and three other officials from the school in Fort Dodge pleaded innocent Monday to charges that they falsified student records. Robert Paxton, college president, and Tom Beneke, Dennis Pilcher and Kevin Twait entered written pleas in Webster County District Court. A trial date will be set later this week, Webster County attorney Ron Robertson said. The four were charged in a nine-count indictment returned Jan. 17. They will be tried together unless they request separate proceedings, Robertson said. Beneke is vice president of enrollment management and student development at the Fort Dodge school, Pilcher is the athletics director, and Twait is the football coach. They are accused of falsifying transcripts so that three students would be eligible for athletics, including football player B.J. Van Briesen.

Strong start necessary for success

GAME STORY

"It's definitely a different situation," Alford said. "We just have to be able to handle it."

Handling Indiana has been a chore for most of the Big Ten, especially in Bloomington. The Hoosiers have climbed to second place in the Big Ten with a 7-2 mark, thanks in large part to a 4-0 conference showing at Assembly Hall. On Jan. 27, the Hoosiers dismantled preseason conference favorite Illinois, 88-57, at home.

The key to avenging Iowa's 77-66 loss at the hands of Indiana Jan. 13 will be a strong start, Alford said. With potent weapons such as the high-scoring Jared Jeffries at their disposal, holding the Hoosiers to a slow start could be the difference between winning and losing, Alford said.

"There's a lot going on in this game," he said. "It's important that the first four minutes, we set a good tone and stay in it for 40 minutes."

And what about Recker's return to Bloomington? Alford knows Indiana's fans and players will both be paying attention to Iowa's leading scorer in his return home — he just hopes Recker doesn't try too hard to prove himself.

"This isn't a game where Luke has to get 30 points," Alford said. "We just need a solid game out of Luke."

"If he does get 30, and that happens by playing a good solid game, that's fine. We definitely don't want him forcing the issue. As well as Ryan Hogan is playing, if those things happen, we can sit and rest Luke."

The attention paid to Recker's homecoming has helped deflect some of the attention Alford usually must deal with when returning to Bloomington. Alford, who led the Hoosiers to a national championship in 1987, said he understands what Recker is dealing with, but his situation is different from that of Recker's.

"I was coming back to a place where I was on the team for four years, won a national championship, and had very fond memories of," Alford said. "I think that's very different than coming back as a transfer."

Recker expects slew of hostile fans

HOMECOMING

Bloomington, and the correspondences haven't stopped since.

But the troubles didn't end there; the move was made more difficult the following summer when a car accident left Recker's former girlfriend paralyzed, which led him to decide that Arizona wasn't the right fit, either. So he came to Iowa City to be closer to friends and family; his father Clair lives in Washington, Iowa. He also came to play for coach Steve Alford, an Indiana native. In fact, it was Alford who talked Recker into staying at Indiana for his sophomore season after the guard wanted to transfer following the 1997-98 school year.

That in-conference move was a slug to the collective Hoosier gut. In previous trips to his home state to play Purdue, Indiana's archrival, even Boilermaker fans showered him with boos and taunts. Obviously, Recker doesn't expect to see many open arms around Assembly Hall tonight, and he's taking a hands-off approach when it comes to fan reaction to his return.

"When I played at Indiana, I think I was a player fans appreciated because I played hard and gave my best effort," Recker said. "Hopefully, they can appreciate the fact that I played hard for them for two years, but if they can't — tough, that's their problem."

Expecting the latter, Recker told his family not to come watch him as he will be "down the scope of the shotgun" for a good portion of the red-and-white-clad fans. Recker has made trips to Bloomington before, but never as an opposing player. While he has kept a small profile and lain low with friends, he couldn't resist doing one thing — going back into his former 17,257-seat home.

"Assembly Hall was different," he said. "I wanted to get back in there once before I played."

Tonight is Recker's big night, and despite the sideshow, he is doing his best to put the past behind him and block the fans from his thoughts.

"I'm going to try to look at it as another game — that's the way you have to look at it," he said. "I don't think I'll ever be able to experience anything like this again, so hopefully, I can play well. If not, hopefully, the team plays well, and life goes on. It's one night."

Whatever is thrown — perhaps literally — at Recker tonight, his coach said he has plenty of faith in the veteran. Perhaps rightly so, since he's been through a similar experience. Alford, a former All-American for the Hoosiers, made his own bittersweet return when he coached against his mentor, Knight, in January 2000. But Alford was still essentially the home-state hero, a distinction Recker could only wish for. Still, Iowa's coach likes Recker's chances against the hostile crowd.

"He's 23, he's been in this league for five years, and he's tough-minded," Alford said. "There's probably not anybody any tougher to handle those things."

Teams can go up as easily as down

might have been higher if the trend of dramatic one-season turnarounds wasn't already evident. Anyone attempting now to pick next season's champion might as well close his eyes and point at a team (eliminating only Arizona and Cincinnati, whose ownership makes winning difficult, and perhaps Houston, which will enter the league as an expansion franchise next year.)

Teams can go down as quickly as they can go up. Nobody's deep these days, and one injury, like the one that sidelined Baltimore running back Jamal Lewis for the season, can send a champion right back into the pack. The Ravens barely qualified for the playoffs this season and didn't get by the second round; the defending NFC champion New York Giants finished 7-9. Atlanta hasn't had a winning season since its surprising Super Bowl trip after the 1998 season.

"It's a fact of life these days," New England coach Bill Belichick said Monday. "Every team changes players from season to season. Every team is forced to lose players it doesn't want to lose. I'd be happy to start next season with this same team, but we all know that's not going to happen."

New England, though, seems in better shape than most.

It stands to pick up at least an extra first-round draft choice and will probably dump a huge salary-cap number by trading Drew Bledsoe, who was hurt in the second game of the season and lost his starting quarterback job to Tom Brady.

Brady wound up as the Super Bowl MVP by leading the drive that led to Adam Vinatieri's game-winning field goal as time expired.

Hawkeyes add two recruits, but lose Schiccatano

According to ESPN.com, Mike Elgin and Clinton Solomon orally committed Monday night to the Iowa football team.

Elgin is a 6-4, 215-pound line-backer/tight-end from West Dubuque High School in Epworth, Iowa, and Solomon is a 6-3, 190-pound quarterback from Fort Worth, Texas.

Runningback Nate Schiccatano, the top prospect for the Hawkeyes who rushed for 1458 yards and 29 touchdowns as a junior, orally committed to Notre Dame. Schiccatano also was being recruited by Michigan State, Penn State, and Oregon.

Elgin and Solomon are the newest recruits to commit before national signing day Wednesday. The Hawkeyes have already received oral commitments from 19 players.

MEN'S COLLEGE BASKETBALL

Blue Devils second on list of most frequent No. 1 rankings

By Jim O'Connell
Associated Press

Duke is No. 2 at being No. 1. The Blue Devils were the top-ranked team in the AP college basketball poll Monday, their 12th week this season leading the Top 25 and the 88th time in school history they have been No. 1.

Only UCLA, with 128 weeks, has spent more time on top of the rankings, which began in January 1949.

Duke (20-1), which beat rival North Carolina and Clemson last week, received all 71 first-place votes from the national media panel — its third-straight week and eighth overall this season as a unanimous pick — to break a tie with Kentucky for the second-most weeks at No. 1.

The Blue Devils started the season fourth on the list with 76 weeks on top. In December, they passed North Carolina, which has 81.

Kansas (19-2), which beat Missouri and Colorado last week, and Maryland (18-3), which defeated Virginia and North Carolina State, were second and third for the third-straight week.

Otherwise, there was quite a shake-up in the Top 25 — 21 teams shifted places after 15 ranked teams lost a total of 20 games during the past week. It was the fifth-straight week at least 14 ranked teams lost.

New No. 4 Oklahoma and No. 5 Alabama each moved up two spots, while Cincinnati, which had its 20-game winning streak snapped Feb. 3 by Marquette, dropped from fourth to No. 6.

Kentucky, Florida, Gonzaga, and Virginia rounded out the Top Ten.

It's the first Top Ten appearance in school history for Gonzaga (20-3), while Virginia (14-5) only fell two places despite losing to Maryland and Missouri.

Arizona beat California and Stanford to jump from 19th to 11th, and was followed by Miami, Oregon, Oklahoma State, UCLA, Ohio State, Georgia, Marquette, Wake Forest, and Stanford.

The last five ranked teams were Illinois, Missouri, Syracuse, Texas Tech, and Southern California.

Oregon and Marquette both returned to the rankings.

The Ducks (17-5), who beat UCLA and Southern California, moved in at No. 13 after being out for one week. Oregon had been ranked for two weeks before losing to Washington and falling out.

Marquette (19-3) had been ranked for six weeks, reaching as high as No. 14, before falling out when it lost three of four games. But the victory over Cincinnati moved the Golden Eagles in at No. 18 after not being ranked for four weeks.

Two Big East teams — Connecticut and Pittsburgh — fell out of the Top 25.

The Huskies (14-5) lost to Rutgers and Miami, dropping out from No. 17 after two weeks in the rankings.

Pittsburgh (19-4) lost to Notre Dame and beat Villanova, but the Panthers dropped out from 21st just one week after returning to the poll.

Oklahoma State, Illinois, and Syracuse joined Virginia and Connecticut as ranked teams losing two games last week.

Mary Ann Chastain/Associated Press
Duke's Jason Williams (22) shoots from the outside as Clemson's Edward Scott (10) tries to cover him on Saturday at Littlejohn Coliseum in Clemson, S.C.

Illinois, which fell to Ohio State and Michigan State, and Syracuse, which lost to Georgetown and Rutgers, both had the week's biggest drops, falling nine spots to 21st and 23rd, respectively.

The week's biggest climb was Ohio State's move from No. 25 to 16th after beating Illinois and Northwestern.
