Former CIA Director Stansfield Turner speaks about his experiences in the Navy at Shambaugh Auditorium on Monday night.

Turner: Nation needs to revamp security agencies

By John Molseed
The Daily Iowan

The best protection against future terrorist attacks is the creation of a more centralized intelligence system, former CIA Director Stansfield Turner told two audiences Monday in Iowa City. "Sept. 11 was a security failure," the retired admiral said, adding that all intelligence branches need to be put under the control of the CIA director. A stronger director is necessary to ensure that the intelligence community is sharing information with other agencies so that officials can better identify and prevent future terrorist threats. Turner would like to see an investigation into the information available before the September attacks, he told to a few hundred UI students Monday night at Shambaugh Auditorium. Turner would like to discover whether the attacks could have been prevented if the various agencies had been communicating more effectively.

Ex-City High star plea-bargains case

By Grant Schulte
The Daily Iowan

A former Iowa City City High football star plea bargained on a sex-assault charge Monday, avoiding a trial and maintaining his college football scholarship. Hakim Hill, an 18-year-old Arizona State University freshman, filed a last-minute Alford Plea in Johnson County District Court, which means he does not admit guilt but acknowledges that prosecutors have enough evidence to convict him. The plea spares both sides a "difficult" trial, said Davis Foster, Hill's attorney. Hill, who now plays football for Arizona State, was sentenced to one year of unsupervised probation, 100 hours of community service, and 180 days in the Johnson County Jail, which was suspended.

It was a difficult decision for him [not to stand trial]. He wanted to have his day in court, but he didn't want the risk of a jury not believing him.

— Davis Foster, Hakim Hill's attorney

He sat silently, his fingers interlaced on his lap, as Judge L. Vern Robinson told him he would not spend a day in prison for allegedly raping a 15-year-old girl.

It's raining, Vilsack says

By Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Gov. Tom Vilsack said Monday he'll ask the Legislature to use $120 million from the state's cash-reserve fund to cover this year's budget shortfall.

The governor said the only other option was imposing spending cuts so draconian that they are unacceptable.

"We will create chaos in our schools if we impose a cut of this magnitude," Vilsack said. Republicans have been leery of dipping into the reserve, but Vilsack said that when lawmakers see the depth of the problem, "I believe in the end they will do the right thing."

Vilsack ordered a 4.3 percent across-the-board cut last year to compensate as the recession slowed state tax revenues, but he said tax collections are even lower than projected.

The state's budget analysts estimated that the state this year would collect approximately 1.5 percent more than last year, but it now appears the state will actually collect roughly 1 percent less than last year.

That means officials are $120 million short of being able to pay the bills, with barely three months remaining in the budget year to find the money. Spending cuts at this point would be as large as 10 percent and would devastate programs, the governor said.

"You're going to close nursing homes, and you're going to close schools," the governor said. "That's an absolutely wrong way for Iowa, and there is a better way."

The state has roughly $400 million in reserve funds, Vilsack said, and it doesn't make sense to drastically cut programs while sitting on that money.

"This is the most difficult fiscal situation the state has faced in 50 years," he said.

But there were immediate signs that the governor was going to have a problem in the Legislature.

"We're very skeptical of taking that money," said House Speaker

Alum files complaint about frat's Web site

By Gian Sachdev
The Daily Iowan

A UI alumnus filed a sexual-harassment complaint against the Phi Delta Theta fraternity Monday, alleging that the organization's Web site degrades women and sexually abused children.

Cedar Rapids resident Dennis Hill, 43, a former pledge of Phi Delta Theta, said some of the site's awards for its members, including "Slut of the Year" and "Pedophile of the Year," dehumanize women and mock child molestation. He is asking the university to shut down the Web site or work out the issue with fraternity members.

"Mocking crimes against children and demeaning women is just plain sick," Hill said. "This site shows the incredibly dangerous potential of these individuals."

He accessed the list of awards at the bottom of the fraternity's "Chapter Minutes" section of the site, which is linked to the official UI Web site.

Hill, who filed his complaint with the UI Office of Affirmative Action, said he was motivated to come forward after learning of the recent charges from former Phi Delta Theta member Elmer Vejar. On Dec. 5, 2001, the UI sophomore accused the fraternity of hazing rituals during Hell Week 2000, including the forced consumption of alcohol and demeaning simulated sexual activity.

The fraternity chapter's charter was revoked by the university last month.

Hill also approached the Rape Victim Advocacy Program, Women's Resource and Action Center, and UI Student Services with copies of the complaint in hopes of garnering university support. His complaint also names the Interfraternity Council as a responsible party.

The fraternity's Web site is humiliating to women and children, said Theresa Klingenberg, the RVAP director.

Innocent Afghanistan civilians died — but how many?

By Laura King
Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — The cemetery is little more than a scattering of stones across a dusty hillside. A few tattered green flags flutter in the winter wind, marking the resting place of casualties of war.

Such grave sites are haunting reminders of civilian deaths that have scarred the U.S. air war in Afghanistan.

Although estimates have placed the civilian dead in the thousands, a review by the Associated Press suggests that the toll may be in the hundreds, a figure reached by examining hospital records, visiting bomb sites, and interviewing eyewitnesses.

One factor contributing to inflated estimates was the distortion of casualty reports by the Taliban regime. Afghan journalists say Taliban officials systematically doctored reports of civilian deaths to push their estimate to 1,500 in the first three weeks of the war in an attempt to galvanize opposition to the bombing.

"Our chief was from the Taliban. His deputy from the Taliban. The information minister was from the Taliban," said one journalist, Mohammed Ismail. "We could not do our jobs. We could not tell the truth."

In the course of the air war, the U.S. military has several times owned up to errors that killed civilians, but the Pentagon has stressed repeatedly that they were never deliberately targeted and that the war on terrorism has been the most accurate war the U.S. has ever fought.

Errors resulting in civilian deaths have continued into recent weeks, although the air campaign has tapered off dramatically. It has been difficult to authenticate casualties, as the U.S. strikes have shifted to remote areas in support of U.S. Special Forces scouring the rugged countryside for Osama bin Laden.

In one operation on Jan. 23, in a village north of Kandahar, witnesses said U.S. Special Forces killed 19 people, most where they slept. The Americans were hunting for Al Qaeda and Taliban holdouts, but the Pentagon is now investigating the possibility that its team received bad information and killed the wrong people.

In the course of the air assault, every major Afghan city was targeted as well as large swaths of rugged countryside where bin Laden and his lieutenants might have been hiding.

AP reporters visited these areas during the course of the war and gathered data on civilian casualties. Their reporting and other reliable counts — by no means complete — in the months since then suggest a civilian death toll ranging from 500 to 600.

In some of Afghanistan's main cities, where the bombing ceased months ago, the toll may be nearly final. In Kabul, the capital, an independent aid group put the total at 67; AP's count was 70.

One of those who lost family members to U.S. bombs was a 34-year-old man named Saydamin. On the night of Nov. 7, 2001, he woke to the roar of aircraft over his northwest Kabul neighborhood; he heard a crash, and the house filled with smoke and dust.

Civilian casualties

The Associated Press' count of civilian casualties in Afghanistan since bombing began last October is based on hospital interviews, visits to bomb sites, and eyewitness accounts from families and neighbors. The AP's death toll to date is between 500 and 600.

Pepper, a dwarf rabbit, cuddled in retiree Helen Hughes' lap as she gently stroked its soft, gray fur.

Approximately a dozen other retired women gathered around her in the basement recreation room of Walden Place retirement home Monday night, watching as the wide-eyed rabbit tried to climb up to Hughes' shoulders.

"I've never had rabbits," said Hughes, showing off a picture of her and Pepper during the rabbit's last visit. "I've had cats."

Pepper and her owner, Noelle Nyren, are members of a 6-month-old volunteer group called Paws for Caring, which makes monthly visits to Walden Place, 2423 Walden Road, Oaknoll Retirement Residence, 701 Oaknoll Drive, and the Youth Emergency Shelter to practice animal therapy.

Delta Society, a national promoter of animal therapy, defines the practice as a treatment process that helps lead to improvement in human physical, social, emotional, and/or cognitive functioning. The society reports that pet owners have lower blood pressure, cope better with stress in their lives, and have fewer minor health problems.

Paws for Caring was founded by Roberta Vander Zwaag as a ministry of the church she attends, New Life Community Church in Coralville, which also helps to fund the program. Zwaag came up with the idea after learning of a similar organization, and she decided to approach her minister with the plan.

"I've always wanted to do something with animals," said Zwaag, who runs a daycare. "I always wanted to do it as a career."

Roughly once a month, the 20 volunteers and their pets make hour-long visits at the homes and shelter. The organization is based on principles of the Delta Society, but Paws for Caring is more laid-back, Zwaag said.

Although members have not been certified by Delta Society, Zwaag said, she hopes they will have enough funds to pursue the professional training someday.

Group members are of all ages and do not have to belong to the church, although some do, Zwaag said. They simply have to prove they can handle the pets — including dogs, cats, a rabbit, and a chinchilla — during the animals' training. Zwaag said Paws for Caring tries to bring at least two animals during each visit, but it sometimes brings up to eight.

Each animal must pass a temper test with volunteer Donna Manchester, who owns The Hounds Tooth, 1100 Fifth St., Coralville. A veterinarian also must sign a form stating there is no reason for the animal to not be in the program before it can participate.

Zwaag said there haven't been any negative experiences with the animals.

"Animals give us a way to sit down and talk to someone," said Zwaag, whose collie-mix puppy and Persian cat are in the program.

Greens caucus for first time in Iowa

By Gigi Wood
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa Green Party participated in its first Iowa caucus Monday night.

"It's a historic night," said Myra Emerson, a co-coordinator of the Johnson County Greens.

The Green Party, which emphasizes ecological wisdom and grassroots democracy, has 275 registered voters in Johnson County, 800 statewide.

The Iowa caucuses allowed voters to gather according to precinct and political party and set party platforms for the state primaries in June. Precinct delegates and central committee members were also elected.

Slowing urban development and raising wages are two of the issues most Greens are interested in, said David Reed, a co-coordinator for the Johnson County party.

"We're pushing for $10 an hour in wages to support families so they can live above the poverty line," he said.

The Green Party has petitions for three candidates for Iowa governor: Don Arenz, Holly Hart, and Jay Robinson. Arenz and Hart are residents of Johnson County, the county with the largest Green participation in the state.

Campaign-finance reform was one of the major issues discussed at the Republican caucus. Margaret McDonald, a co-chairwoman of Precinct 23, said those who run the Republican Party in Iowa should not take money from candidates who are running for office to ensure they remain unbiased.

"We're not supposed to be taking money to do the job," she said.

Turnout for the Republican caucus was low, McDonald said, because this isn't a presidential election year. The Iowa Republican Party will be up against Gov. Tom Vilsack in the race for governor and Sen. Tom Harkin in the Senate race. Republican candidates for governor are Rep. Steve Sukup of Dougherty, Bob Vander Plaats, a Sioux City businessman, and Doug Gross, a Des Moines lawyer.

"The governor and Senate races are very important," said Laura Kiminski, the head of the UI College Republicans.

"Out of the five Senate races in the country that decide which party controls the Senate, Iowa is one of them," she said.

Most who attended the caucuses said they were happy to meet their neighbors and discuss political issues.

"We just appreciate the opportunity for discussion," said John Deeth, the membership chairman for the Johnson County Democratic Party.

Democratic caucuses discussed improvements in health care and civil rights, such as restricting the number of hours health-care workers can be forced to work and adding sexual orientation to the protected classes in the Iowa Civil Rights Code.

Democrats don't see the Green Party's presence in Iowa politics as a threat to the Democratic Party, said David Leshtz, the Democrat chairman of Precinct 18.

"The more people participating in grassroots democracy, the better," he said.

Burge pipe-bomb hearing rescheduled

A hearing to determine whether the pipe bombs three former UI freshman allegedly made fall under Iowa Code as offensive weapons has been rescheduled for March 7.

The original date had been Feb. 7.

The ruling will determine if charges against Adam Fisher, 19, Nathaniel Krotz, 20, and Andrew Richie, 19, will stand or be altered. Each faces a charge of unauthorized possession of offensive weapons in connection with a March 22, 2001, incident in which pipe bombs were allegedly discovered in Fisher's Burge Residence Hall room.

Fisher's attorney, Leon Spies, filed a motion Jan. 14 to adjudicate the law to clarify the definition of offensive weapons, contending that a jury could not define the devices found in Fisher's room as such weapons.

The three are scheduled to stand trial on April 22.

Peter Odgaard, 21, of Coralville was charged with second-degree theft Monday. Police alleged that Odgaard admitted to stealing $1,061.17 from Staples, 911 Highway 1 W., between Dec. 28, 2001, and Feb. 5. Odgaard stole cash and also used bogus refund transactions to obtain the money, police alleged.

Lisa Stuelke, 37, 1102 Hollywood Blvd. Apt. 1, was charged with second-degree theft Monday. Police alleged that Stuelke stole $3,224.65 from Roe Heating and Refrigeration, 2115 S. Riverside Drive, between July and November 2001, when she worked for the company. Stuelke obtained the money by cashing checks paid to the company and filing false cash-box receipt forms, police alleged.

A local real-estate attorney for an Iowa City City Council member now wants to pay its legal bill for it for other losses, delay, its attorney said Monday.

Tom Gelman, an attorney for Southgate Development Co., 75 Mormon Treas Blvd., said he recently filed a claim with the city seeking the damages, the amount of which he declined to reveal. Any additional damages of litigation would add to the city's $19,000 bill in the legal dispute.

"As a result of action, Southgate about one year ago and incurred losses," said. "If the city in the request, it client's prerogative to seek further legal action."

The battle started in April 2001 when Southgate rejected a rezoning made by Southgate. It has allowed the construct three buildings with rooms on four acres of the Harlocke-Wood hood. The vote was for rezoning, but needed a super-majority of favorable votes request.

Survey finds use of Ecstasy rising

WASHINGTON (AP) — A survey of teenagers found that drug use remained steady last year with one glaring exception — a rise in use of Ecstasy — an anti-drug organization said Monday.

The Partnership For a Drug-Free America said teen Ecstasy use rose 20 percent last year; it has increased 71 percent since 1999.

The group, a coalition of communications professionals, unveiled an advertising campaign to warn teens and parents of the dangers of drug use. Many of the ads feature the parents of Danielle Heird, a 21-year-old Las Vegas woman who died after taking Ecstasy in 2000.

"Don't play Russian roulette with your most precious gift — your life," her mother, Elsa Heird, said at a news conference.

John Walters, who directs the White House drug-policy office, said anti-drug officials are trying to counter an impression among teens that Ecstasy is harmless. Ecstasy is believed to cause brain damage.

"This is about heading off a problem before it gets out of control," he said.

Ecstasy is a synthetic drug considered to be part hallucinogen and part amphetamine. It became popular over the past decade at dance parties known as raves.

But Stephen Pasierb, the president of the anti-drug group, said Ecstasy appears to be expanding beyond clubs.

"Ecstasy has moved out of the rave scene and into the mainstream," he said.

The survey of 6,937 teenagers found that 12 percent of 12- to 18-year-olds had used Ecstasy at some point in their lives. That compares with 10 percent in 2000. The survey had a margin of error of plus or minus 1.8 percentage points.

French captive blabs away on Al Qaeda

By Pierre-Antoine Souchard
Associated Press

PARIS — A Frenchman who claims to have crossed paths in Afghanistan with key figures tied to the Sept. 11 attacks, a thwarted plot on the Los Angeles airport, and other threats on American citizens is providing French authorities with a treasure-trove of information on Al Qaeda, officials revealed Monday.

Yacine Akhnoche, 27, was arrested on Feb. 4 outside Paris with two others suspected of involvement in a 2-year-old plan to bomb a cathedral in Strasbourg, France, judicial officials and anti-terrorism investigators told the Associated Press on the condition of anonymity.

Speaking freely during sessions with investigators, Akhnoche apparently offered details on the training camps he went to during three trips to Afghanistan and the Islamic militants he met there.

"He talked a lot," said one investigating judge. "Akhnoche confirmed a certain number of things that we already knew or supposed."

Investigators told AP they were taking Akhnoche's testimony seriously and following up on his leads.

Akhnoche, a Frenchman of Algerian origin, visited training camps in Afghanistan in 1997, 1998, and 2000, investigators said. While there in 2000, he met Zacarias Moussaoui, the only person charged in the United States in connection with the Sept. 11 terror attacks. Moussaoui, a French citizen, could face the death penalty if convicted.

During that same trip, Akhnoche said he also met Richard Reid, who was arrested on Dec. 22, 2001, after allegedly trying to ignite explosives in his sneakers on a Paris-Miami flight. French officials have said Reid told U.S. investigators that he never went to Afghanistan.

Reid, a British citizen, was indicted in federal court in Boston on eight charges, including the attempted murder of 197 passengers and crew members aboard American Airlines Flight 63. He has pleaded innocent.

On a trip to Afghanistan in 1998, Akhnoche said he met Ahmed Ressay, an Algerian later convicted in the plot on the Los Angeles airport, in the days before Jan. 1, 2000. Ressay had been trained in terrorist camps financed by Osama bin Laden, U.S. investigators have alleged.

Iranians lash back at Bush in rally

By Ali Akbar Dareini
Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran — Angered by the United States' labeling of Iran as part of an "axis of evil," hundreds of thousands of Iranians chanted "Death to America" on Monday during demonstrations to mark the 23rd anniversary of the Islamic Revolution.

The gathering was much larger than last year's commemorations, as Iranians used the occasion to show their anger with President Bush's condemnation of their country in his State of the Union address. Many Iranians who said they rarely join such celebrations spoke of taking to the streets to show solidarity.

Men, women, and children poured into Tehran's Freedom Square carrying anti-U.S. banners and burning effigies of Uncle Sam.

"This year, despite insults to the great Iranian nation and the trumped-up charges against it, the Iranian nation has commemorated the anniversary of its revolt on a greater scale than before," President Mohammad Khatami said.

State television reported that millions of people took part in rallies in all major Iranian cities.

Khatami said the United States should understand the message of Iran's revolution: independence, freedom, and an Islamic Republic.

His speech was repeatedly interrupted by chants of "Death to America" — a phrase dating to the days of the 1979 revolution that lost its edge in recent years as the idea of a gradual rapprochement with the United States gained a following among Khatami's reform-minded supporters.

In Washington, the Bush administration said Monday it would talk to and work with Iranian government officials despite the demonstrations and a suggestion by Khatami blaming U.S. policies for the Sept. 11 attacks. But it demanded that Iran stop sponsoring terror and trying to develop weapons of mass destruction.

"If Iran wants to set a clear course toward the modern world, we're happy to talk to it, work with it," State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said.

Early in the U.S. war on terrorism, American officials spoke of better cooperation with Iran after it tacitly approved their campaign to topple the Taliban rulers of Afghanistan. But recently, U.S. officials have accused Tehran of trying to undermine Afghanistan's new government and of smuggling weapons to the Palestinians. Iran denies the charges.

Last month, Bush said in his State of the Union address that Iran was part of an "axis of evil" — along with Iraq and North Korea — because it seeks weapons of mass destruction, an allegation that Iran denies.

Bush also said Iran "exports terror, while an unelected few repress the Iranian people's hope for freedom."

Bush's words have drawn strong condemnation across Iran's political spectrum. They have pushed the nation's domestic political troubles — a long-standing power struggle between moderate and conservative clerics — into the background, at least for now, as people pull together against what was perceived as an unwarranted insult.

Iranians stand above a portrait of Iran's supreme leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, during a rally at Azadi Square in Tehran on Monday. Hundreds of thousands of Iranians staged a mass demonstration that both condemned President Bush's criticism of their country and celebrated the 23rd anniversary of the Islamic Revolution.

Brent Siegrist, R-Council Bluffs. "We would hope that he would show a little more initiative and actually propose some cuts."

Siegrist conceded that the state faces deep budget troubles and refused to rule anything out.

"We'll continue to talk to him," Siegrist said.

Underscoring the depth of the problem, Vilsack said 1,239 state workers have left their jobs, either through layoffs or early retirement. Another 583 jobs are open, and they will stay that way, leaving the state work-force down approximately 7.5 percent.

To get a handle on the precise size of the problem, Vilsack moved up the next meeting of analysts who set the state's revenue projections.

The Revenue Estimating Conference was to meet March 7, but the governor summoned its members to a meeting next week. The governor and legislators are required by law to use that panel's projections as the base for the state's budget.

The state has built its budget surplus because of a state law requiring that lawmakers spend only 99 percent of what the state collects in taxes, with the extra 1 percent to be put in reserve.

Vilsack said part of his proposal called for tightening that law to allow spending of only 98 percent of what's collected in taxes. That would have the effect of speeding the repayment of money in reserve used to bail out this year's budget.

The governor warned that lawmakers must make a decision relatively quickly, probably by March 1.

TURNER

He also told his audiences that the United States could lose its war on terrorism — but not at the hands of terrorists.

"We could lose by winning," said Turner, who served in the CIA during the Carter administration. "If we turn our country into a police state, we've lost."

He said the effort against terrorism needs to balance the freedoms of a democracy.

The United States needs to include more than just overseas military action to be successful in the war against terrorism, he told an audience at the Congregational Church, 30 N. Clinton St., earlier Monday.

Turner stressed the importance of building cooperative coalitions with other nations to help identify and eliminate terrorist cells within nations as those cells develop, adding that President Bush's identification of North Korea, Iran, and Iraq as an "axis of evil" isn't sufficient action.

"We can't do it by force alone; we're going to have to use persuasion," he said. "One of the key lessons of 9/11 is that we have to have the cooperation of other nations."

When asked about his views on Bush's missile-defense proposal, Turner questioned whether its cost and capability make such a system necessary.

"The idea we will be secure behind a bastion of arms is a canard," he said.

Turner has come under fire from Bush administration officials who imply that CIA policies he established during the Carter administration weakened intelligence operations that could have predicted the Sept. 11 attacks.

"It seems strange to me that 24 years later and six new directors couldn't correct what I did," he said.

Turner told his audiences he hopes they stay involved and informed on the war on terrorism at a time when interest is waning.

"The result of [the war on terrorism] will affect the lives of our children and our grandchildren," he said.

Ex-City High football star accepts plea bargain

"It was a difficult decision for him [not to stand trial]," Foster said of his client, whose trial had been set for Monday. "He wanted to have his day in court, but he didn't want the risk of a jury not believing him."

The plea reduced his third-degree sexual-abuse charge, a Class C felony punishable by up to 10 years in prison, to assault causing injury, a serious misdemeanor. When Robinson asked if Hill understood the nature of his charges, he nodded and said, "Yes, sir."

Hill, the brother of UI football player Kahlil Hill, must also pay a $250 fine — the minimum required by law — in addition to court costs and attend a special program on handling relationships.

He allegedly fondled a high-school girl and forced her to perform oral sex on him in April 2001. Hill then began to have intercourse with the girl in an empty City High classroom, and when she screamed, he told her to be quiet, according to court records. The girl allegedly continued screaming until Hill released her.

Hill, formerly of 1147 Hampton Court, will have to serve his sentence before Arizona State considers allowing him to play. Sun Devils head coach Dirk Koetter said in a statement. Hill is suspended from football competition but is allowed to practice.

Hill was suspended for 11 games while charges were pending. School officials said the Arizona State Student Athlete Code of Conduct states that an athlete convicted of a misdemeanor must only miss two games.

"A complete season suspension speaks for itself," said Mark Brand, the Arizona State assistant athletics director of media relations.

"While reasserting my belief in my innocence, I wish to emphasize my regret at having placed myself, my family, and my university in a position to be defended," Hill said in a statement prepared by Arizona State.

Assistant Johnson County Attorney Anne Lahey said she offered the plea to bring the victim a measure of closure and protect her from a potentially painful trial and media scrutiny — a measure often taken with sex-abuse cases.

this and on behalf of all other victims," she said. "Jokes about pedophiles and child abusers are wrong in any light."

Phi Delta Theta chapter adviser Steve Snyder said he agrees that the Web site is in "bad taste" and "stupid," but, he said, he is upset with Hill for remaining angry for 22 years. Hill was voted out of the fraternity in the '70s, Snyder said.

"I barely even know this guy, and I'd say that it's time to grow up," he said. "If you don't fit into a fraternity, I say just go and join another one."

Snyder said that after Vejar's allegations of hazing instigated a university, police, and internal investigation into the fraternity, Hill sent letters to the national and international Phi Delta Theta chapters supporting the claims and implementing Snyder as a supporter of the acts.

Phi Delta Theta President Paul Sabatino refused to comment on the matter; national chapter representatives were unavailable for comment.

The affirmative-action office investigates all complaints of alleged sexual harassment, said compliance officer Jan Waterhouse, adding that she could not comment on Hill's complaints.

Civilian deaths scar U.S. war on terrorism steep hill on whose peak stood Taliban military radar and anti-aircraft batteries.

On the night of Oct. 28, 2001, in what might have been a strike aimed at that installation, their mud-brick house was destroyed. The only survivor was a 14-year-old named Jawad, who woke up in the hospital alone. It was weeks before he learned that his parents, five sisters, and a stepbrother were all dead.

"I miss my mother. I miss my sisters. I cannot believe they are gone from my life for always," Jawad, a tall, skinny boy, said in the ruins of what had been his home.

While an agony for the families involved, deaths in Kabul were fewer than might have been feared in five weeks of fierce and concerted air strikes. By contrast, the Red Cross has said that during ferocious factional fighting in 1992-96, an estimated 50,000 civilians died in Kabul alone.

In a province south of Kabul, at least 27 civilians died in the December bombing of a convoy and roadside villages. In later air strikes in and around a nearby village, local officials put the civilian toll at several dozen, and at least 18 of those were confirmed by an Afghan non-governmental group called AREA. The AP saw 35 destroyed houses in the area, but some of those living in them had already fled.

Earlier in the war, in villages near what had been the Taliban frontlines north of Kabul, nine civilians were reported killed.

During the U.S. bombardment, the Taliban waged an energetic public-relations war, in which accounts of civilian suffering were the principal weapon. The Taliban ambassador to Pakistan, Abdul Salam Zaeef — who is now in U.S. custody — repeatedly accused the United States of genocide. It was Zaeef who, three weeks into the war, claimed civilians deaths had already topped 1,500.

Afghan journalists for the official Bakhtar news agency, whose reports were used as a basis for Taliban claims, now say their dispatches were freely doctored. Mohammed Ismail, a Bakhtar reporter, said in one instance, he went to the scene of an air strike in Kabul on Oct. 20, 2001, and saw eight bodies.

"It was changed in our dispatch to 20," he said. When he heard the report on Taliban radio, it had gone up to 30.

Bakhtar journalists also said they were ordered to report military deaths as civilian ones. Reporter Younis Mihireen recalled a hit on a Taliban and Al Qaeda housing complex in October, in which approximately 60 fighters were killed.

"I saw it with my own eyes — there were no civilians anywhere nearby, and I reported this," he said. "But the dispatch said all the dead people were civilians, not fighters."

In Kabul, the agency's reporters would bicycle around their own neighborhoods on the way to work to see new damage and deaths for themselves. But reports of deaths elsewhere came from Taliban military officials.

"So I don't even want to guess what the real casualty numbers were out in the provinces," said Ismail. "I know this: They weren't what our agency reported."

Zaeef himself sometimes called the Taliban's Information Ministry for details on locations of air strikes that killed or injured civilians, but he always inflated the number when he gave them to the world press, journalists said.

International news organizations reported fast-mounting Taliban casualty claims, always with the caveat that Afghanistan was virtually closed to the outside world and the figures could not be verified.

Even so, various death tolls took on a life of their own once they were electronically indexed and archived. In some cases they served as the basis for academic research.

A University of New Hampshire economist, Marc Herold, in December 2001 cited news reports in arriving at a total of between 3,000 and 5,000 civilian dead. He said last week he believed the range of deaths was between 3,100 and 3,800 but conceded that his findings rely on secondhand data.

Other counts were lower. The Cambridge, Mass.-based Project on Defense Alternatives estimates the number to the end of December 2001 at 1,000 to 1,300, based on selected Western media reports.

At the height of the bombing campaign, even firsthand reporting could not always yield a precise count.

'Child-status' classification for fetus an unneeded ploy

Recently, President Bush declared an expansion of prenatal health-care availability for low-income women, and by doing so, also expanded the national abortion debate.

Few were fooled by Bush's latest declaration of "child status" for a fetus; among them was Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson, who wondered "how anybody [could] turn this into a pro-choice or pro-life argument; I can't understand it." However, both anti-abortion and pro-choice advocates immediately understood what the new terminology could mean in either aiding or hindering their causes.

So why didn't the president just say what he meant? It is almost insulting for Bush to try to contend that he is doing anything other than strengthening his anti-abortion stance, a position he has already made it unmistakably clear. Just last year, he supported the Unborn Victims of Violence Act, which made it a federal crime to harm an unborn individual. According to Marie Greenberger of the National Women's Law Center, Bush's new definition could give legal status to a fetus immediately upon conception. And one of the strongest threats to a woman's right to legal abortion is using the backdoor of the "legal status" to attempt to weaken Roe v. Wade.

The Bush administration asserts that it only wants to extend prenatal care to pregnant women who can't afford it. Such an explanation, however, is weakened by several points.

First, the Bush administration says it is only targeting low-income women and families so they can be eligible for prenatal care under the State Children's Health Insurance Program. But prenatal care is already available to pregnant women through the program. The individual state simply has to apply for and receive a federal waiver allowing the extension, the granting of which is generally easily achieved. In fact, with the present administration's love for life, it should be safe to assume that Bush or a representative would practically deliver the waiver in person. That would definitely demonstrate the administration's concern for healthy women and their babies.

Second, if the Bush administration is that concerned with finding a way to grant care to low-income women, why not just address women's needs instead of uselessly redefining a status? Was it impossible to create a plan that would cover a woman even during pregnancy?

Bush's change is unnecessary, because the children's health-insurance program can extend its coverage without the "child status" classification. The president's plan doesn't even address women who are not eligible for the program but lack other insurance that would provide them with prenatal care. The plan only addresses linguistic duplicity, something our president seems to be getting the hang of.

Letters to the Editor

The case against Alford

The honeymoon is over, and Steve Alford is no longer the toast of the Iowa Athletics Department. Perhaps by promising too much too soon, Alford has put himself and Athletics Director Bob Bowlsby in a very difficult position. Nobody wants to say it, but the question is out there: Can you really fire your prodigy coach, or should you wait to see if he'll come around?

All the hype about amazing recruiting classes have shown how all-important the coach is in college basketball. Alford's inability to put together game plans and offenses, coupled with his failure to get anything out of All-American caliber players, have put this team where it is today. Watching recent games, I seriously wonder whether these players are benefiting at all from team practices. Pick-up games at the UI Field House show more continuity than this team.

There was no talk this year about a rebuilding year; rather, the talk was of a Big Ten championship. Indeed, when asked about his team's Top-10 ranking in November, Alford speculated that the Hawks might even be better than that. Usually in down years, college programs offer the possibility of "next year," but realistic Iowa fans have to be aware that the talent isn't likely going to be better than it is this year.

Imagine even if the talent was going to be better. I don't think it changes much. Even Duke's players this year would have a tough time succeeding in a system where the only way to score is to beat their man one-on-one. That is what Alford's system produces. One person takes the ball, and the other four stand and watch. It's questionable when Luke Recker is the man with the ball. It is laughable when Sean Sonderleiter is trying to break his man down.

Alford apologists come up with a lot of excuses for this year's team, but the beauty of college basketball is that each coach has total control over his team. The buck stops with Alford. Does Iowa owe some loyalty to Alford? Do we owe him a chance to become a better coach? The answer lies in the way that Alford handled the coaching vacancy at Indiana last year.

John Reeder
Iowa City resident

Give Luke a chance

On Feb. 7, the DI ran a Letter to the Editor about Indiana saying good riddance to Luke Recker. First of all, the Hoosiers had to say good riddance to Recker a long time ago. He has been gone for more than two years. And obviously he hasn't been off the minds of Indiana fans for too long. After hearing the cheers and seeing the "creative" signs they made, it looks like they have been planning for his return for some time now.

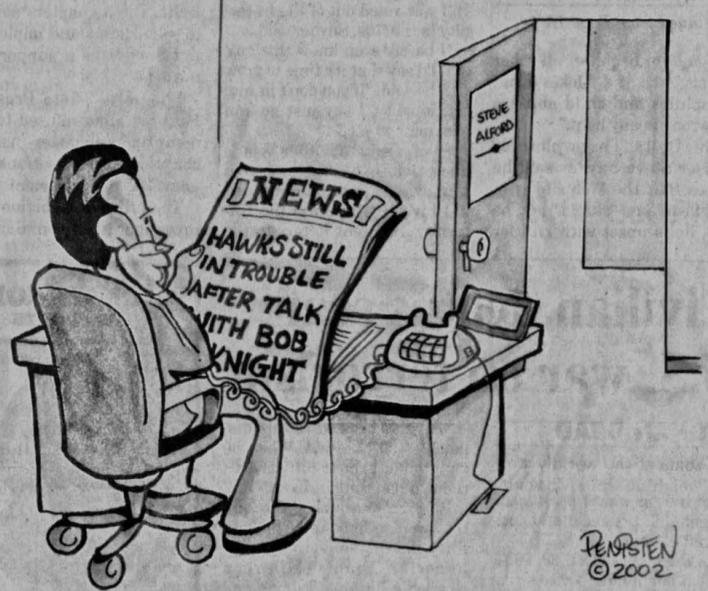

Second, yes, it may be true that Recker may come off as a bit of a "hot-to-trot" personality, but realistically, what athlete with such a public profile wouldn't have to be to gain and/or keep a little respect. Luke is in the limelight, and it was not self-invoked. He has had a lot of pressure put on him, and expectations are high. If he misses a shot, it's front-page news. Because of this lifestyle, he must keep his guard up. And if that means giving off an arrogant attitude, then that's what needs to be done.

I met Luke this summer while he was assisting at a boy's basketball camp at the UI. He signed every piece of paper, every shirt, every basketball that was handed to him by those kids. He stopped for pictures, and before the awards ceremony, he even shot a few baskets with some of the boys. To some, these actions may seem like publicity stunts, but to an observer, it was a guy living his life to the fullest by fulfilling his childhood dream, by just playing the game that he loves.

And finally, a personal note to Mr. Rodewald: I'm sorry that you feel that you need to use the word hate against someone that you probably never knew as a person. Did you talk to him about the accident? Did you ask him how he feels when he wakes up at that scar every morning of his life? Do you know how hard he worked to get his life back to "normal"? Ignorance is such a bad excuse for discrimination.

Andrea Walz
UI student

Hello, may I please speak with Dr. Tom Davis?

The proper way to say hello to the NIT

So things seem to be getting a bit testy in Hawkeye nation these days. From all the rumbling and grumbling, bitching and moaning, you'd think that something really important was going on, like war or baseball.

Nah. It's just basketball. Or rather, it's not basketball. Which seems to be the problem.

You see, there's this entity called the Iowa men's basketball team, which is supposed to keep the folks entertained during those dreary months in which the Canadians ship their weather here by the trainload. But a couple of things went wrong.

First, the Canadians stopped sending their weather here. What? They don't like us anymore? We didn't write often enough? Canadians are so sensitive.

The second thing is what the male Hawkeye basketball players are doing.

And what might that be? you ask.

Well, not playing basketball, for one. The guys look like they might be pretty good at playing shuffleboard, though. Maybe we could send them on a long boat cruise.

A long boat cruise, like maybe through the depths of the Caribbean, is where a lot of Hawkeye fans would like to see their basketball team right now. What the hell, it's fitting. The team went South some time ago.

It's easy to understand Hawkeye fans' disgust. Seven weeks ago, at Christmas, they were looking under the tree and drooling, dreaming of the Hawks duking it out for first place in the Big Ten, swirling through the first two rounds of the NCAA Tournament, possibly making the Elite Eight, maybe even, gasp, a berth in the Final Four.

Turns out the Hawkeye fans got coal for Christmas, and now, their basketball team is duking it out with archrival Penn State for last place. The only final four the Hawks will see is the bottom quartet of the Big Ten.

Beau Elliot

What went wrong? Hawk fans are wondering. Overrated players? Bad coaching? Too much meat and not enough vegetables?

I don't pretend to have the answers. But maybe the men could attend some Hawkeye women's practices and learn how passing the ball, oddly enough, creates offensive opportunities.

Just the other day, for instance, the women had 20-some assists. In just one game.

Imagine, as John Lennon once sang.

The men have been playing Big Ten ball for six weeks now (OK, so I took some literary license there), and I don't think they have 20 total assists yet.

Of course, I realize that passing the rock, as opposed to clanking the rock, is about as foreign as French verb conjugations to a lot of these guys (though some of them are apparently fairly familiar with the conjugation of yeast, water, and malt).

But still. These are post-modern times; men can learn from women. Even jocks.

And, in the same vein (though maybe that should be vain), perhaps men's coach Steve Alford needn't travel all the damn way down to Texas to get some coaching tips. Maybe he could just journey up one floor in Carver-Hawkeye to consult with Hawkeye women's coach Lisa Bluder.

It would save on mileage. In the meantime, though, there's not much for the Hawkeye sports fan to do but watch the Olympics.

Which, I admit, is a whole lot like watching your laundry dry.

Take speed skating, for instance. You see one heat of the 3,000-meters, you've seen them all.

(And why do they call them "heats" when they're skating on ice?)

And another thing. Wouldn't Olympic downhill skiing be a lot more interesting if all the contestants shot off down the mountain at the same moment? Imagine the fights for position at the gates — which, of course, are not truly gates, they're flags. Skiers are one of the few species on this planet who are actually dumber than their reputation; they can't even tell the difference between a gate and a flag (Hint: One keeps the cows home).

In the Einstein department, skiers are right up there with Hawks Nest denizens and right-wing Christians (motto: Jesus never laughs. Saving is a grave business.).

Which explains why the Austrians dominate skiing. Of course, the last time an Austrian dominated anything, his name was Hitler, and the sport he dominated was called Europe.

But just think: If all the skiers were to zap down the mountainside at the same time — as my friend Chango says, at least they'd have some use for those sticks they carry around with them.

And then the Winter Olympics might be interesting. Well, of course, there'd still be figure skating, which is pretty much ballet without dance.

All in all, I have to admit, things look pretty dismal on the sporting scene. But I have a modest proposal.

We have all these Taliban prisoners (not POWs, dammit) that we don't know what to do with, right? And we have all these empty football stadiums.

So we marry the two. We fill the stadiums with raucous, cheering fans, and we trot the Taliban out to fight the lions. What the hey, everybody accuses us of acting like the Roman Empire. So let's act like Romans.

Besides, it'd keep us entertained until baseball starts. Or the next war.

Beau Elliot is a DI columnist.

At play in the fields of the soul

By Jen Brown
The Daily Iowan

The literary world has learned a couple things from Manil Suri.

One: It is possible to write about spirituality and be both arresting and playful. These qualities are helpful, in fact, when attempting to reach a large audience.

Two: People from other areas of study can write, too.

That said, The Death of Vishnu was quite a debut. The critics were right. When the book was published last year, they took notice of this quite impressive first book for Suri, an Indian-born mathematics instructor at the University of Maryland. Suri's fiction had been published only one other place — the Bulgarian-language journal Orpheus in 1995.

But The Death of Vishnu is not simply a brilliant first work; it is a brilliant work, period. That it is a debut and that the author is surprising simply add to its sparkle.

The book centers on the character Vishnu, an odd-job man of sorts, who lies dying on the stairway he inhabits in an apartment building in Bombay. As his soul climbs the staircase, we see into the lives of those who live in the building: squabbling housewives on the first floor, lusty adolescents on the second floor, and the endlessly grieving widower on the top floor of the building. Their stories are related to us by an omniscient narrator who offers us insight into some of the worldly worries weighing on their souls. Intertwined in this narration is the account of Vishnu's own life, and soul, as it searches for its place in the scheme of life and death.

It is a book based highly on symbolism and spirituality, and it makes no secret of the wisdom it implies. But Suri writes with humor and playfulness, making the insights of the book highly digestible.

When The Death of Vishnu was released, it was commonly praised for its masterful prose, which is surely the case. The images are handpicked to be both vivid and realistic. But what is more masterful than the careful imagery is the ease with which the narrator speaks. It is difficult to skim over pages of the book — one is quickly drawn in by a sensual image or delectable phrase and then rapidly engulfed by the seeming effortlessness of it all. You instantly feel at home with the narrator; his world is yours, and though many things seem foreign at first — words such as “bhang” and “chapatti” — you don't mind what you don't know and rather enjoy sitting back to learn.

To evoke an appetite for knowledge in a reading audience takes skill indeed. How refreshing it is that should come in such an unexpected package as a mathematics professor. Suri will read at Prairie Lights Books, 15 S. Dubuque St., today at 8 p.m.

Here's looking at you, kids

By David Bauder
Associated Press

NEW YORK — You've come a long way on television news, baby. Or have you?

While admittedly amusing, all the attention paid recently to Greta Van Susteren's eyes and Paula Zahn's sex appeal is a depressing reminder of how often journalism comes second to appearance on television news.

Fox News Channel personality Van Susteren couldn't stop talking last week about the cosmetic eye surgery that rendered her almost unrecognizable. Last month, Zahn was featured in a CNN promotion that described her as “just a little bit sexy.”

Veteran “60 Minutes” correspondent Lesley Stahl remembers being depressed when she would break a story and get five letters from viewers in response complaining that her skirt was too short — or a call from her mother saying she needed a haircut.

Now she just accepts it. “It's the way it's always been,” Stahl said. “The one big difference since I've been around — and I was hired by CBS in 1972 — is that whatever the women have to put up with, the men do, too.”

Anyone who thinks otherwise probably believes Bill Hemmer is a weekday anchor on CNN strictly on his journalistic credentials.

“The men feel just as much pressure as the women to keep up,” Stahl said. “We may even be a little luckier. The stigma for a woman to wear a lot of make-up and get her hair done three times a day doesn't exist. For a man, it's still a little embarrassing. But they're doing it.”

Geraldo Rivera — to no one's great surprise — was a pioneer in public cosmetic surgery for men. Twice he went under the knife on his syndicated talk show. In 1992, he had fat removed from his buttocks and injected into his forehead. Four years later, he got an eye job.

Television consultant Al Primo, the creator of the local “Eyewitness News” format, remembers his shock in the early 1960s when the male anchor at a local station where he worked got an eye job.

Now he wouldn't turn his head. “Our whole industry has become a part of show business,” he said. “We are an industry that uses the same tools they use to make a movie or a comedy show — lights, cameras, an actor, and a script.”

It isn't exactly a secret that sex appeal is considered a winning trait for a news anchor. Why else would there be a popular Web site that features attractive actors reading the news while they methodically undress until totally nude?

Zahn's “sexy” ad ran briefly one weekend on CNN before it was yanked by embarrassed executives. It drew plenty of knowing chuckles in newsrooms across the country.

“The focus on appearance has always been part of the talk behind the scenes of journalism,” said Kathleen Hall Jamieson, the dean of the Annenberg School for Communication at the University of Pennsylvania. “What happened to Paula Zahn is, it leaked to the public.”

CNN's new “star power” strategy has left it vulnerable to criticism. Last year, CNN Headline News hired former “NYPD Blue” actress Andrea Thompson as a newsreader, despite limited experience, then kept a stiff upper lip when nude pictures of her turned up on the Internet.

MSNBC's Ashleigh Banfield has drawn more public attention for her hairstyles and eye-wear than her journalism. She's expressed frustration about it, but the distinctive look has helped send her on a fast path to stardom.

Zahn, 45, expressed horror at the CNN promotion and has tried to put the story behind her ever since. Van Susteren, 47, hasn't shied away from the attention.

Her eye job became a story because the first post-surgery pictures of her that appeared on Fox showed such a dramatic change and because the brainy lawyer had always seemed a refreshing counterpoint to the obsession with looks.

“Did you know that I'm the only one who's ever had this done?” she said sarcastically to Comedy Central's Jon Stewart, part of a media tour that included “Good Morning America,” “The O'Reilly Factor,” and a People magazine cover.

“It was either the eye surgery or get picked up for shoplifting to get PR for the show,” she said to Stewart.

Guess what? It worked. An estimated 1.6 million viewers watched her premiere on Fox, nearly double the crowd tuning in to CNN at the time and also approximately twice what Fox averaged in the time slot in January.

There are some positive signs lost in the lip gloss and unlined skin. There's a far greater range of looks and ages among women on the air than in 1983, when 36-year-old Christine Craft sued a Kansas City station for firing her as a news anchor because she was “too old” and “too ugly.”

Suggest that she tart herself up, and CNN's Christiane Amanpour is likely to smack you.

“It's become irrelevant,” said Susan Zirinsky, the executive producer of “48 Hours” on CBS. “It feels silly. Those of us of a certain age, we don't want to look like Greta Van Susteren. It took a long time to get these road miles on my face. I'm proud of them.”

Zirinsky, it should be noted, works behind the camera. Not in front of it.

Americans make history in halfpipe

By Eddie Pells
 Associated Press

PARK CITY, Utah — Amid deafening chants of "USA, USA, USA," Ross Powers, Danny Kass and J.J. Thomas made history on the halfpipe Monday, giving the United States its first medals sweep in the Winter Olympics in 46 years.

Soaring 10 and 15 feet above the hollowed-out snow chute on a gorgeous, sun-kissed day, the Americans won all three medals in a winter event for the first time since the 1956 men's figure skating team in Cortina, Italy.

It was only the second Winter Games sweep ever for the United States, and it was topped by Powers the day after his 23rd birthday.

"I couldn't ask for anything more," he said. "It's the best birthday present ever. These guys beside me is also huge. Today was just the perfect day."

The sweep bumped the United States up to six medals, including the halfpipe gold won Sunday by Kelly Clark, who was on hand to watch her countrymen sweep.

An estimated 30,000 fans — many of whom arrived after the women's downhill was postponed because of high winds — waved their flags, clanged their cowbells and soaked in the hippest Olympic sport.

MEN'S HOOPS Alford searches psyche

By Tyler Lechtenberg
 The Daily Iowan

When Iowa coach Steve Alford was a freshman at Indiana, he took a psychology class. At the time, the 400-person lecture wasn't the most important thing in the world to the first-year basketball player.

Now, it's a different story. "I wish I would have really paid attention and wrote down everything the [professor] had to say," Alford said Monday. "I feel like a lot of times we are conducting Psych 101 right now, trying to find the right buttons to push."

Alford has reached for just about every button within arm's length to try to get his team back on track as Iowa continues to skid through the Big Ten. The Hawkeyes fell to 4-7 in the conference following their most recent loss, to Minnesota on Feb. 9.

Though Iowa has struggled in conference play, packing up shop and focusing on next year is the last thing on any of the Hawkeyes' minds — they've still got five regular-season games, plus the Big Ten Tournament left on the schedule.

With his team sitting at a disappointing 15-10 overall, Alford said he learned from last season's run to the Big Ten Tournament championship that now is not the time to start thinking about next season.

"We're not playing very well right now," he said. "This time last year, when we were riddled with injuries, we weren't

 The Daily Iowan

In her 15 years as head softball coach at Iowa, Gayle Blevins has made a living from building teams around pitching and defense. This season will be no different.

On the heels of Iowa's fourth Women's College World Series berth, Blevins and her squad are anxious to build on the success of last season's 49-14 squad. At the same time, this is a different team with different goals, the coach said.

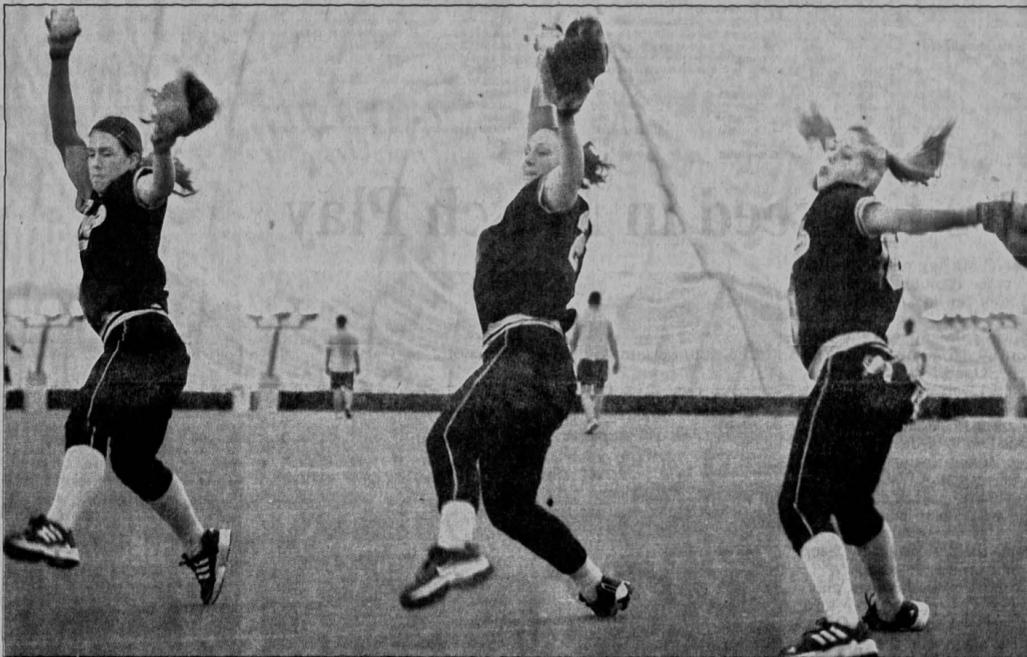

Blevins Enters 15th season

"What last year does it give you great drive and incentive to want to experience a very successful season," Blevins said. "But everyone knows that'll get you a cup of coffee, and that's about it. We're starting over at this point with our first trip [to Arizona State, Friday through Feb. 17]."

Iowa begins the season ranked No. 6 in the nation, thanks in large part to the number of experienced players from last season returning. While the Hawkeyes lost six players to graduation, including catcher Katy Jendrzejewski and third baseman Lisa Rasche, this season's starting lineup features just one freshman.

be a hallmark of Iowa's success this season. The Hawkeyes have the luxury of returning both their top pitchers from 2001, Kristi Hanks and Sarah Thomson, while adding highly touted freshman Lisa Birocci.

"This is a good staff," Blevins said. "They can be a real good complement to one another."

Hanks posted a 39-8 record with a stingy 0.75 ERA for the Hawkeyes during her junior year, including 27 complete games. Thomson finished at 8-3 with an equally stellar 1.29 ERA and eight complete games.

Birocci is Blevins' first pitching recruit from the state of Iowa in her 15 seasons at Iowa. The freshman was the 2001 Gatorade Softball Player of the Year in 2001 while leading Des Moines Lincoln to a state title.

"Pitching is a big strength, but it's our defense that is awesome," Hanks said. "We turn just about every play in the infield, and the outfield is looking better and better every day."

Playing behind the hurlers will be a solid defense that looks very similar to last year's. Jessica Bashor returns to call pitches behind the plate along with freshman Elisha Huse.

Iowa career home-run leader Alicia Gerlach will once again hold down first base for Iowa. Second baseman Christina Schmalz and shortstop Kristin Johnson return to fill the middle of the infield, while center-fielder Katie Boney moves to third in order to fill the gap left by Rasche's departure. Boney led the team with 29 stolen bases last year, and she looks forward to the challenge of tackling a new position.

"Obviously, following Lisa will be hard; she was a great third baseman," Boney said.

Is U.S. nationalism too prevelant at the Olympics?

Since the attacks of 9/11, I have longed to watch a sporting event as it was meant to be viewed — as a leisure activity. I was hoping the Olympics would provide me with that opportunity. I should have known better. I am, after all, an American.

The last time I checked, the Olympics were supposed to be a worldwide event, a celebration of sports on Earth. Unfortunately, you wouldn't notice this from American media coverage surrounding the Winter Games in Salt Lake City.

From profiling U.S. athletes with no chance of gold to dragging out the flag that flew over the World Trade Center, the United States succeeded in Americanizing the Olympic games, just as we have Americanized just about everything else we can get our hands on.

Making the Olympics a sort of macabre memorial to the events of 9/11 is egocentric. Forget our stories about athletes from across the globe who trained and fought to win the games; these games are about us. It's pure nationalism at its worst, and it's what the rest of the world isn't too fond of the United States. Quite frankly, it's why terrorists attacked the U.S. in the first place.

When a U.S. skater fails to win an event, I see no need to focus on him when the winning athlete gets ignored. Focusing on the Stars and Stripes as it is hoisted to the rafters in second or third place while cropping out the flag of the winning nation is about as good of irony as one can find.

NBC shouldn't have to tell me how great the United States is; the final medal count will speak for itself. Until then, leave the games alone. Let athletes be athletes and let the Olympics display the world's talent; don't make them a showcase for U.S. nationalism.

—Todd Brommelkamp

I want the athletes wearing red, white, and blue to win whatever event is taking place at the Olympics. I would rather know how U.S. speed skater Shani Davis, a long-shot for an Olympic medal, does in the qualifying rounds more than Norway's gold-winning moguls skier.

Patriotism is the glue that holds the Olympic Games together. If the fight for medals were simply about the best athlete, not the nation sponsoring that athlete, then athletes would not wear their nations' colors and fly their nations' flag at the opening ceremonies. NBC would not flash the athletes' home countries each time they stepped up to compete.

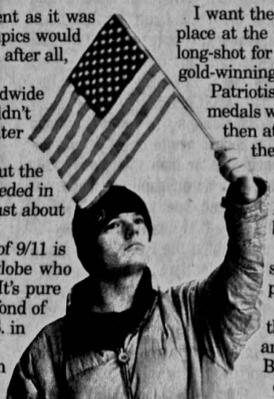

As Americans, we are entitled to think that our athletes are superior. Having confidence and pride in our athletes is just another aspect in the broad scope of patriotism that we feel for our nation in the wake of 9/11. Hosting the Olympics in U.S. soil is therapeutic for forlorn Americans seeking rejuvenation from the attacks, and it gives us a reason to be proud of the United States.

The terrorist attacks that took place last September stretched further than simply America; they were attacks on a worldwide business center, and they killed thousands of citizens from countries all over the world. By flying the flag recovered from the World Trade Center at the opening ceremonies, we acknowledged the attacks that have caused ripples throughout the world and accepted that we will move up and on.

Todd may argue that brandishing America's problems for all the world's concern is just another way the Olympics have become Americanized and suited on the narrow minds of U.S. citizens.

At last count, America was tied for second place with three medals. When I turn on the television, I want to see how my U.S.A. team is faring, and I want the red, white, and blue to end up on top of the podium.

Woods draws top seed in Match Play

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

The player who nearly derailed Tiger Woods' historic sweep of the majors could get another crack at him next week in the opening round of the Match Play Championship.

Bob May is not in the field yet, but his chances improved Monday when Jose Coceres of Argentina had to withdraw because of a broken arm. Thomas Bjorn of Denmark previously withdrew to rest an ailing shoulder.

The original 64-man field was determined by the world rankings published Monday.

Woods, who has been No. 1 since winning the 1999 PGA Championship at Medinah, will be seeded first for the World Golf Championship event, which starts Feb. 20 at La Costa Resort in Carlsbad, Calif.

May is No. 67 in the rankings, and would get the 64th seed — and a first-round match against Woods — if Colin Montgomerie of Scotland pulls out.

Montgomerie hurt his back three weeks ago in Australia, an injury that he originally feared might keep him out of the Masters.

A spokeswoman for IMG in London said Monday that Montgomerie has not decided whether to make the 10-hour flight for a tournament that could last only one round. Montgomerie has not made it past the second round in two previous tries.

If Montgomerie does enter Match Play, Woods will face

Peter O'Malley of Australia. Otherwise, it could be a rematch of one of the most captivating duels in Woods' career.

Having already won the U.S. Open by 15 strokes and the British Open by eight strokes, Woods got an unexpected fight from an unlikely contender at the 2000 PGA Championship. Woods had to birdie the last two holes in regulation to force a playoff with May. Woods won the three-hole playoff by one shot.

He went on to win the Masters eight months later to become the first player to sweep the four professional majors.

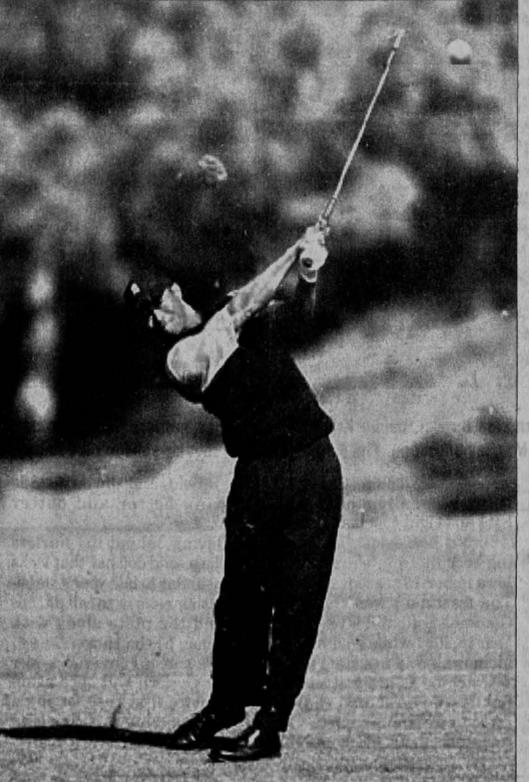

Coceres broke his arm playing soccer. He planned to return this week at the Nissan Open, but his agent said the arm was not healing quickly enough.

"It's not worth coming out here and hurting himself," Robert Gutierrez said. He said Coceres, a two-time winner on the PGA Tour last year, likely would return at Bay Hill.

Woods is skipping the Nissan Open at Riviera, saying he has been sick for a couple of weeks and wants to get rested for the Match Play Championship.

It is the only PGA Tour-sanctioned event using this format, and one of Woods' favorite events that isn't a major.

"It's a fun week," he said. "It brings back what you used to do in junior golf and amateur golf, and we as pros miss that. You get a chance to play one-on-one. There's only select time when we play match play, in the Ryder Cup and President's Cup."

Skins land Lewis

ASHBURN, Va. (AP) — Marvin Lewis won't be a head coach, but he'll be getting head-coach money.

A month after he set a new — and very high — standard for head coach's pay with the hiring of Steve Spurrier, Washington Redskins owner Dan Snyder on Monday made Lewis the best paid assistant in the NFL.

Lewis signed a three-year deal worth about $850,000 per year — more than $1 million per year with incentives — to be the defensive coordinator. That's a salary comparable with what some NFL head coaches make and is at least twice what the average assistant is thought to make.

Asked to explain himself to owners who now have good reason to be concerned about escalating coaching salaries, Snyder was unapologetic.

"I don't think I've done anything out of character with what we're trying to build with the Redskins," Snyder said. "You're talking about one of the finest coaches in the game. We're all after one thing, that's victories."

Spurrier, who last month signed a five-year, $25 million contract, played the rationalization game a bit better.

"Do you know what the salary cap is this next year?" Spurrier said. "Seventy-one million. Now don't you think the best defensive coordinator in the country is worth one-70th of what you're paying the team? The defensive coordinator is one of the most valuable players on your team."

Lewis' arrival ended a confusing week about the future of the man who made the Baltimore Ravens defense one of the best in the league, if not ever. Lewis seemed on the verge of becoming Tampa Bay's head coach until a Feb. 7 meeting with the sons of Buc's owner Malcolm Glazer left Lewis with the distinct impression that he wasn't wanted.

"It was a meeting that was already set one way," said Lewis, adding that he felt the Glazers interviewed him as nothing much more than a courtesy to their general manager, Rich McKay.

Aerodynamic rule dispute gets heated

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — An extra quarter-inch off the top hardly seems enough to worry about. But NASCAR's decision to give Fords a shorter rear spoiler has others up in arms.

"I thought it was supposed to snow on Christmas," car owner Richard Childress said, gazing into the sunny sky on Monday.

Asked what he meant, the owner who fields three Chevrolet's was blunt. "I thought it was Christmas after the present the Fords just got."

NASCAR will allow the Fords to reduce their spoilers — the winglike metal device at the rear of the trunklid — to 6 inches beginning today. The move is being taken because the Tauruses haven't been competitive at Daytona International Speedway.

The Fords have been slow in practice, had just two cars in the top 20 after the first round of time trials and brought up the rear in the Budweiser Shootout. Dale Jarrett was the highest Ford finisher, coming in sixth, but almost four seconds behind race winner Tony Stewart in a Pontiac.

NBA

Kobe's Lakers prepare for second half of season

By Chris Sheridan
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Now that he has left town, Kobe Bryant won't be booed again for at least six weeks.

No, he's not returning to Philly. But he does have an upcoming trip to Sacramento.

The NBA's best players departed the City of Brotherly Love (or No Love, in Kobe's case) on Monday to get ready for the unofficial second half of the season.

For Bryant, that meant a cross-country flight with the All-Star MVP trophy in his luggage as he returned to Los Angeles for the Lakers' game against Michael Jordan and the Washington Wizards.

The two-time defending champions are 2.5 games behind the Sacramento Kings in the Pacific Division, and their remaining schedule includes a five-game Eastern road trip later this month and a four-game swing to the East in early April.

"Every game is a home game for us," Shaquille O'Neal said. "Except Sacramento."

The Lakers don't have to travel to the frenzied bandbox known as Arco Arena until March 24. The teams will meet one more time after that — on the final night of the season, April 17.

Those dates loom large because the Kings, who have owned the league's best record for the better part of a month, are widely considered the team with the best chance to knock off the Lakers in a seven-game series — but only if they finish the season with a better record than Los Angeles and gain the homecourt advantage.

The next big date on the NBA calendar is Feb. 21, the trading deadline.

A total of four deals involving 22 players went down on deadline day last year, including the blockbuster that sent Dikembe Mutombo from Atlanta to Philadelphia and helped propel the 76ers to the NBA Finals.

There aren't a lot of 7-foot-2 centers to be had this time around, although there is one center — Denver's Raef LaFrentz — who is atop the Most Likely To Be Dealt list.

The Nuggets have been shopping LaFrentz and point guard Nick Van Exel around the league, and the Portland Trail

Blazers have emerged as the leading contender to acquire the two of them, according to a Western Conference executive who spoke to the Associated Press on the condition of anonymity.

Portland is willing to send Damon Stoudamire and Bonzi Wells to the Nuggets for LaFrentz and Van Exel, but the Nuggets want a big man back in return and will likely press for Dale Davis to be included in the swap. Denver would toss Tariq Abdul-Wahad into the deal to make it work under salary-cap rules.

The Indiana Pacers, along with at least three other teams, are also chasing LaFrentz.

In the Eastern Conference, the New York Knicks have been trying the hardest to pull off a deal, but team President Scott Layden has been learning that there is very little interest in anyone on his roster other than Latrell Sprewell and Othella Harrington.

The Knicks are coming out of the All-Star break nine games under .500, desperate to do something to ensure that they do not miss the playoffs for the first time since 1987. They are in the unfamiliar and uncomfortable role of playing second fiddle in the metropolitan area to the upstart New Jersey Nets, the biggest surprise in the league thus far.

Nets point guard Jason Kidd said the teams he worries about most in the East are the Wizards and the 76ers.

"I'm just happy to be on the same level as the Sixers in terms of someone worrying about us," Jordan said. "I'm pretty sure everyone's nervous in terms of what we're capable of achieving, and that's good. I like that."

"I like when they've got to look over their backs. And if that's the case, they're going to be hearing footsteps," said Jordan, whose team comes out of the All-Star break with the league's longest current winning streak — five games.

The West has five teams — the Lakers, Kings, Timberwolves, Spurs, and Mavericks — trying to finish in the top four to ensure homecourt advantage in the first round. Beneath them, there are five teams — Phoenix, Utah, Seattle, the Los Angeles Clippers, and Portland — competing for the final three postseason berths.

"I've never played third base, so it's kind of scary, but we've got a lot of experience in the infield."

In the outfield, seniors Liz Dennis and Amber Morrow will bookend freshman Lindsey Bashor, Jessica Bashor's younger sister, in center field. Dennis hit .245 for the Hawkeyes in 53 games, while Morrow swiped 11 bases, the third-highest total among returning players.

With the lineup pretty much solidified, Blevins said she hopes to answer other questions about this year's squad when it begins action later this week. Among her concerns is whether the team will be as vocal as her previous group.

"We'll see what type of leadership we get out of our returning players because we graduated a fair number who gave us good leadership last year," Blevins said. "We also need to see how people who are new to those positions settle in to those positions and play for us."

Less than a year removed from their appearance in the college World Series, the Hawkeyes aren't making a return trip to Oklahoma City a priority just yet. Blevins said that in a sport such as softball, with an extended schedule, that viewpoint won't get a team very far. Her players agree with her, choosing to focus on finer points of the game before looking at the big picture.

"Right now, we've forgotten about last year," Gerlach said. "We need to get better every game, grow as a team, and work on those things."

playing very well, either, yet we made a good push at the end of the season."

Alford said two major aspects helped last year's 23-12 squad make the run to the tournament title: strong defense and a post-oriented offense. Re-igniting the team will only happen if the team gets back to those basics, he said.

"If one or both of those things aren't present, then we're still going to be a roller-coaster team here throughout the last half of the season," he said. "We can really make a good run here, but both of those things have to be there."

Those factors will be quickly solved, Alford said, if Iowa gets back to playing a strong mentally.

"After watching the tape several times over, we're not that far off physically — we really aren't," Alford said. "All of our problems are mental problems."

To combat those troubles, Alford said, he was going to focus on concentration coming out of the locker room and time outs this week. Focus is at a premium these days — everyone in the Hawkeye camp agreed that now is the time for Iowa to make a move at evening out its Big Ten record.

"Unfortunately, we've gone in the wrong direction," Alford said. "But there are still three weeks of the regular season left, and that's what we have to point towards. This is a big grind for us where we're really got to try to do something."

IOWA BRIEFS

Lillis awarded Big Ten Player of the Week

The Iowa women's basketball team not only returned home from University Park, Pa., with a win, but sophomore Jennie Lillis had the best statistical showing of her career.

Lillis' career- and game-high 32 points helped lead the Hawkeyes to a 96-81 victory. Her efforts gathered notice from Big Ten officials as well and garnered her Big Ten Player of the Week accolades for the first time in her career on Monday.

Lillis was 12-of-15 from the field and 8-8 from the free-throw line. She also collected seven rebounds and two assists in 33 minutes.

She also scored a game-high 18 points in Iowa's 76-64 victory over Wisconsin Feb. 7. In the two games she averaged 25 points and shot 74 percent from the field (20-of-27) and 100 percent from the line (10-of-10).

Basketball All-Century team announced

In conjunction with the celebration surrounding Iowa's 100th season of men's basketball, the university announced an All-Century team Monday. Fans had the opportunity to cast ballots for players they believed should be included on the squad. From the initial list of 36 names, 20 players were chosen.

Members of the All-Century team will be introduced at halftime of Saturday's game with Ohio State and take part in several activities that have been planned in their honor.

Players chosen by the fans are listed in chronological order.

Sweep quiets critics about 'lifestyle sports'

Powers set the winning mark of 46.1 early. He was the fourth rider to hit the snow, and his very first push above the rim of the pipe was stunning — his body flying 15 feet in the air, parallel to the ground, with the sun overhead making for a picturesque silhouette.

Kass, the 19-year-old future of the sport, had two chances to top the 1998 bronze medalist. He was incredible in his own way, but his corkscrew turn and his famed "Kasserole spin" — two upside-down twists while grabbing the board — weren't enough to win gold. He scored a 42.5.

The 20-year-old Thomas won the bronze on his second ride with an equally impressive run, pulling a 2 1/2-revolution spin and soaring almost as high as Powers.

Sixth-place finisher Tommy Czeschin was the only American left out of the party. His first run put him in third place, but after Thomas overtook him, Czeschin needed to go higher. He thought he did, but when his score was posted, he looked on in disbelief, and the crowd booed.

But, really, it was hard to call any American a loser on this day.

Snowboarding is a distinctly American sport, created on a lark by a man in Michigan, Sherman Poppen, who in 1965 braced a pair of skis together and tied them with a rope so he could give his daughters something to do during the winter.

He called the contraption a Snurfer, combining the words snow and surfer. A few years later, entrepreneur Jake Burton Carpenter improved the snowboard and started the wave that continues to this day.

When the International Olympic Committee added snowboarding in 1998, many questioned whether the so-called "lifestyle sport" really belonged in the Olympics — too stodgy for the halfpipe, the critics said.

A lot of those doubts are bound to die down, and this American sweep will surely play a big role.

"This is completely different than anything I've ever seen or done," Thomas said before the finals. "It sets the standards for snowboarding. I'm having a blast."

Nobody had more fun than Powers, a "veteran" of the sport compared with Kass, if only because he has previous Olympic experience and a gold medal from the 2000 Goodwill Games.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

Kansas outlasts Texas in overtime, 110-103

By Jim Vertuno
Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas — Drew Gooden scored 28 points, and Jeff Boschee hit two 3-pointers in overtime as No. 2 Kansas survived a furious upset bid by Texas with a 110-103 victory Monday night.

Kansas (22-2, 11-0) kept alive its bid to win its first Big 12 regular-season title since 1998 and be the league's first team to go undefeated in conference play.

The Longhorns, who matched Kansas' vaunted transition game nearly basket for basket, gave up 100 points for the first time since a 102-72 defeat to the Jayhawks in 1997-98.

Brandon Mouton had 25 points for Texas (16-8, 7-4), which dropped to 53-1 when scoring 100 points at home.

The game was played at a lightning-quick pace as the teams played within three points of each other for most of the second half.

Gooden did most his damage in the second half after shooting just 2-of-9 and picking up three fouls in the opening 20 minutes.

Texas tied it at 96 with 31 seconds left in regulation on Royal Ivey's driving lay-up. Kansas set up for a final play, but Craig Hinrich got tied up in the lane and took a wild shot. Several players made a stab at the rebound before Kansas' Aaron Miles missed a wide-open 15 footer at the buzzer.

Texas scored the first basket of overtime when James Thomas drove the baseline for a layup. Boschee, who hit two 3-pointers in the game's opening minutes, hit his first two attempts in overtime to give the Jayhawks the lead for good, and they went on to their ninth straight win.

Boschee finished with 21 points for the Jayhawks, while Wayne Simien had 17, Nick Collison 15, and Hinrich 14.

Brian Boddicker had 19 points for Texas, which also got 16 each from T.J. Ford, Ivey, and Thomas.

Kansas came out running its transition game to perfection, and the Jayhawks took the biggest lead of the game at 26-17 when Simien converted a three-point play on a fastbreak dunk and followed that with a tip-in.

Texas was 5-of-8 from 3-point range in the first half and rallied with a 15-5 run that made it 32-32 on Boddicker's 3 from the right corner.

Gooden picked up his third foul with 3:12 left in the half and Mouton's two foul shots gave Texas its first lead at 40-39. Kansas led, 48-44, at halftime.

Gooden found his touch in the second half, jamming home a two-handed dunk and scoring Kansas' first eight points.

Kansas seemed ready to take control when Boschee and Miles each hit 3-pointers, but Texas answered with 3's from Boddicker and Sydmill Harris to keep it close.

Top three teams stay put; Indiana returns to Top 25

By Jim O'Connell
Associated Press

Duke, Kansas, and Maryland were the top three teams in the AP college basketball poll Monday, the fourth-straight week they have held those spots.

For the sixth-straight week there were plenty of changes throughout the rest of the Top 25, though, including two teams that had been ranked in the Top Ten during the season falling out.

Duke (22-1) was a unanimous No. 1 for the fourth-straight week and the ninth time this season. The Blue Devils, who beat Florida State — the only team to beat them this season — and Georgia Tech last week, received all 71 first-place votes from the national media panel.

Kansas (21-2) beat Kansas State and Texas Tech to hold on to second, while No. 3 Maryland (19-3) beat North Carolina in its only game last week.

Duke is at Maryland Feb. 17 in a rematch of the Blue Devils' 99-78 victory in January. Duke and Maryland played four times last season with the Blue Devils winning three, including the national semifinal game, as they went on to the national championship.

Fourteen ranked teams lost a total of 17 games last week, the sixth-consecutive week at least 14 members of the Top 25 lost at least once.

This week's newcomers were Pittsburgh, Indiana, and North Carolina State, while Missouri, Syracuse, and Texas Tech dropped out.

Missouri was ranked as high as No. 2 this season, while Syracuse reached eighth earlier in the year. Three other teams that cracked the Top Ten this season — Saint Joseph's, Boston College, and Iowa — have also fallen out of the rankings.

Missouri became the third team since the poll expanded to 25 teams in 1989-90 to fall out of the poll after reaching No. 2. The others both happened in 1999-2000 when North Carolina and Auburn did it, although Auburn did return to the rankings for the final poll of the season.

Oklahoma was fourth for a second-straight week and was followed in the Top Ten by Cincinnati, Florida, Alabama, Gonzaga, Arizona, and Kentucky.

Marquette, which beat East Carolina and Southern Mississippi last week, jumped from 18th to No. 11, a move bettered this week only by Stanford, which moved from No. 20 to 12th after wins over Oregon and Oregon State.

Miami was 13th and was followed by Pittsburgh, Virginia, Oklahoma State, Oregon, Illinois, Wake Forest, and UCLA.

The last five ranked teams were Georgia, Indiana, Ohio State, North Carolina State, and Southern California.

Pittsburgh (21-4) was ranked for two weeks earlier in the season and returned after winning six of seven games, including a victory at Syracuse on Sunday.

Indiana (16-7) also returned after having been ranked for three weeks earlier in the season. The Hoosiers, who lead the Big Ten, beat Iowa and Louisville last week to extend their home winning streak to 10 games.

North Carolina State was last ranked in the 1999-2000 season, cracking the Top 25 for two weeks. The Wolfpack (18-6) beat Virginia and Florida State on the road last week and have seven wins in the Atlantic Coast Conference, two more than last season.

Missouri (17-7), which was No. 2 for two weeks in December, dropped out from 22nd following the Feb. 9 loss to Baylor.

Syracuse (18-7) was 23rd last week but the loss to Pittsburgh was the Orange-men's fifth in seven games.

Texas Tech (18-6) was ranked for two weeks but fell from 24th after losing to Oklahoma State and Kansas last week.

Oregon and Ohio State were the other ranked teams to lose two games last week. The Ducks (17-7) lost to Stanford in overtime and California in double overtime, both on the road, and dropped from 13th to No. 17.

Ohio State (17-5) also lost two road games, in overtime to Wisconsin and Michigan State. The Buckeyes' fall from 16th to No. 23 was the week's biggest drop.

The addition of North Carolina State gives the ACC five teams in the Top 25 (Duke, Maryland, Virginia, and Wake Forest), tying it with the Pac-10 (Arizona, Stanford, Oregon, UCLA, and Southern California) for the most from one conference.
