Special session short, not sweet

By Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — The Legislature ended a five-hour special session without acting on anything Monday, with Republican leaders arguing they've simply run out of money to spend.

Democrats said Gov. Tom Vilsack likely will give lawmakers yet another chance to reach a budget compromise, but Republicans countered that another special session would have the same result.

"This is more about politics than policy," said Sen. Jeff Lamberti, R-Ankeny, a key legislative budget bargainer. "We've done all we can do."

"Sometimes we get so bogged down in the political process we forget what we were sent here to do," said House Democratic Leader Dick Myers of Coralville. "I believe we will be back again."

Vilsack summoned lawmakers back into special session to consider his $60 million com-

Legislature warned on budget cuts

By Eric Droze
The Daily Iowan

The presidents of the state's three public universities on Monday requested additional funding in an unsuccessful, last-minute plea to lawmakers, saying budget cuts will "harm public higher education, and in turn, hinder the state's ability to grow and prosper."

Hours later, the Legislature adjourned from its special session without taking any action to add money to the state's budget. Gov. Tom Vilsack had proposed adding $60 million to the $4.6 billion budget in a compromise, but Republicans say there's no money left to spend.

"Higher education has really taken it on the chin," said Rep. Mary Mascher, D-Iowa City, who predicted that Vilsack would veto the budget later and call lawmakers back for another special session. "I hope [lawmakers] realize that they can't keep cutting with-

While remaining tight-lipped Monday about an investigation of a fire at Etc., Iowa City Police Chief R.J. Winklehake said one of his officers was on his way to the club — not in the bar — when the fire that burned six UI students occurred.

"He was not in the bar when it happened," Winklehake said.

Winklehake's comment contradicts weekend reports and police records that indicate Officer Michael Smithey was in the bar checking for underage drinkers at the time of the fire.

But Winklehake said an internal investigation by his department showed that Smithey walked into the bar after the fire was out and began checking for underage drinkers. He was coming from Martinis, 127 E. College St., where he was also performing a bar check, he said.

Smithey was busy checking someone's identification when a patron alerted him of the situation, but he never saw the fire, Winklehake said.

UI freshman Mitchell Ridnour said a woman approached Smithey after he had checked a patron's ID and told him that UI junior Deanine Busche, 20, was on fire near the bar.

"There is no way he came into the bar and didn't see the flame," said Ridnour, who sustained several cuts to his arm in the incident.

Smithey, who was unavailable for comment Sunday and Monday, joined the force last year. On April 20, he told the Iowa City

Press-Citizen: "I went in, grabbed a girl's ID, and was looking at it when they called and told me ambulance and fire was on the way. It's a pretty small bar. I was right in the middle, probably six feet away."

Witnesses said either a bartender lit the bar on fire that later spread to the crowd when Busche spat a shot of hard liquor on the flame, or the bartender doused the flame with more alcohol to revive the fire.

The horror that became Jenin

By Laura King
Associated Press

JENIN REFUGEE CAMP, West Bank — The first column of Israeli tanks rumbled over the ridgeline in darkness, their heavy reverberations shaking the concrete foundations of the shantytown that lay below. Within moments, the crack of Palestinian gunfire rang out from the dank alleyways of the Jenin refugee camp.

In the gray dawn of April 3, tumult and tragedy were about to envelop nearly everyone within earshot of those first disordered sounds of combat.

A Palestinian gunman, a housewife, an Israeli soldier, a young doctor — all would be caught up in a confrontation whose means and methods would be almost as hotly contested as the battle now being joined for this jumble of ramshackle buildings that was home to some 14,000 Palestinians.

To Israel, the Jenin camp was a viper's nest, a haven for gunmen and weapons makers, a spawning ground for approximately 20 suicide bombings that killed or maimed scores of Israelis over 18 months. To Palestinian fighters, it was a stronghold in their struggle against an occupying power.

For the combatants, the battle lines could not have been more clearly drawn. To 1st Lt. Yoni Wolf, an Israeli military reservist who would take part in more than a week of fighting in the camp — the fiercest and costliest engagement of Israel's biggest military operation in two decades — this was the chance to strike a decisive blow at suicide bombers.

"We believe we are fighting so our families can go to our restaurants and feel at peace," said Wolf, a 26-year-old teacher who, like the bulk of Israeli troops who fought in the Jenin camp, was a part-time soldier.

Ziad Amer, a 35-year-old Palestinian and the camp's acknowledged military leader, was determined to teach the Israelis "a lesson they will never forget." Hours after Israeli tanks ringed the camp, Amer boasted that everyone was ready to fight to the death — even the children, he said, who had been given homemade hand grenades.

Others, though, felt only foreboding as Israeli helicopter gunships juddered overhead and Palestinian gunmen took up sniper posts. Haya Ghattash, a

Student link to regents to step down

By Vess Mitev

Ahrens regent

The only student representative on the state of Iowa Board of Regents is stepping down, leaving a slot that could possibly be filled by a UI student.

Iowa State University senior Lisa Ahrens, who was appointed to the board in 1997, will leave on July 1 with one year left on her six-year term, the board said Monday. Gov.

Tom Vilsack will name a replacement sometime in the coming weeks, said Vilsack spokesman Joe Shanahan.

Vilsack could appoint an ISU student for the remainder of the term and then choose a new representative from another school to fill the next six-year term, said Robert Barak, the regents' deputy executive director. The governor could also appoint a new regent to fill the remainder of this term and the next, he said, adding that because Ahrens' predecessor came from the University of Northern Iowa, the UI is slated to be next in line.

Steve Parrott, the UI director of University Relations, said there has been no indication that a UI student will be selected.

A replacement has to be nominated by the president of her or his university before being appointed by Vilsack, said Regent Clarkson Kelly.

Cost of Burge renovation, new J-School comparable

But officials say the developments have vastly different needs

By Grant Schulte
The Daily Iowan

Renovations to a UI residence-hall cafeteria will result in a larger area for students than the UI's new journalism building, a project university officials consider their largest priority.

The Burge cafeteria renovation's schematic design nets 60,000 square feet, while the journalism building's plans call for 49,000 net square feet — measurements that meet each project's needs, officials said.

The cafeteria renovations will cost $14.4 million, and the journalism-building estimate totals at $15 million. By standard construction measurements, the journalism building costs more at $351.49 per square foot; Burge costs $237.87.

But project officials said the building developments are like "apples and oranges" and have

CITY BRIEFS

Deadline lengthened for cell-phone plans

UI Purchasing Department officials extended the deadline to May for cell-phone vendors to submit proposals explaining the savings that could be offered to students and staff in a purchasing agreement with the university.

Tim Evans, UI telecommunications and network services business manager, said the deadline has been extended until 3 p.m. May 10 to give vendors more time to formulate and submit proposals. The deadline was originally set for Monday.

Officials said they hope to secure the agreement by the end of this school year so that students can consider a cell-phone plan over the summer. If a deal is approved, lower-priced cell phones may be available to students and faculty by fall, officials said.

After proposals are submitted, the Purchasing Department and representatives from Information Technology Services will review the offers. They will also look to student focus groups and surveys for input on proposals. The university will only enter into an agreement with a cell-phone company if it offers "special savings" on calling plans, officials said.

"If there are not better deals for people, there is no point in making the agreement," Evans said.

Purchasing agent Mark Long sent out requests to numerous cell-phone vendors March 22, requesting proposals for calling plans and deal possibilities.

Registered sex offender living in area

Iowa City police and the Iowa Department of Public Safety are informing the public that a sex offender is living in the area.

Gabriel Keith Usher, 24, who is registered with the Iowa Sex Offender Registry, is living at 1613 Brookwood Drive. Usher is a 5-9, 140-pound white male with brown hair and brown eyes.

Usher's registration stems from a non-Iowa conviction in October 2001 for indecent liberty with a minor. He is considered at moderate risk to re-offend.

Police say the notification is to serve only as a means for members of the community to protect themselves; any action taken against Usher or his family, including vandalism of property and oral and physical assault, can result in arrest and prosecution.

J-school selects new director

By Choyon Manjrekar
The Daily Iowan

The recently selected UI Journalism and Mass Communication director has a predominantly public-relations background, a characteristic that, journalism-school officials said, will be an asset to the growing number of students interested in the profession.

Pamela Creedon will also become the first woman to fill the position, officials said.

Creedon, Kent State's journalism-school director, was selected as the UI school's new head on Monday; she will fill the position officially Aug. 19.

The choice follows a year-long search. John Soloski vacated the UI position after becoming the dean of the Grady School of Journalism at the University of Georgia last year.

Creedon said the UI's interim journalism-school director, Venise Berry, encouraged her to apply.

"I could not come to Iowa at a more exciting time," Creedon said. "I am waiting to meet my new faculty, an extremely dedicated group of scholars and researchers, and come up with

STATE BRIEF

Vet warns of agricultural diseases

AMES (AP) — Agriculture and food industries in the United States are vulnerable to an outbreak of foreign animal diseases such as foot-and-mouth, an expert says.

Richard Ross, an Iowa State University veterinarian, said the U.S. Department of Agriculture needs more money to deal with several factors, including the fact that the industry is growing rapidly.

Ross served on a panel that assessed the Agriculture Department's preparedness for an animal-disease outbreak in livestock.

He said several diseases could easily be brought into the country on the shoes of tourists, by passengers carrying food, or through infected herds of pigs and cattle that enter and exit the country. The United States has more than 400 land, sea, and air ports of entry.

Ross spoke at the Council for Advancement and Support of Education Media Fellowship on Monday in Ames. He was a member of the National Association of State Departments of Agriculture, a nonprofit group made up of agriculture-industry officials and university researchers.

A colorful run for bar-owner Pohl

By Kellie Doyle
The Daily Iowan

In his 10 years as a downtown Iowa City bar owner, Herbert "Kip" Pohl has sustained multiple liquor-license suspensions and thousands of dollars in civil fines in connection with violations at his establishments.

Now, following the sale of two of his family's three bars and a recent incident in which patrons were burned at the third, Pohl has city officials and at least one bar owner believing that he might be on his way out of the bar scene all together.

At least six UI students were injured when a bartender ignited liquor at Etc., 118 S. Dubuque St., on April 17. All but one of the injured were underage; civil charges were filed against the bar last week by UI junior Amy Shah, who sustained second-degree burns to her forehead and right arm in the incident that has garnered national attention.

Pohl sold the Union Bar, 121 E. College St., earlier this month and Malone's Irish Pub, 121 Iowa Ave., in February.

Iowa City Mayor Ernie Lehman said Pohl is "obviously" making an effort to get out of the bar business.

Pohl did not return phone calls seeking comment Monday. However, in a recent interview with the DI, he said he attributed the sales to his interest in pursuing "other opportunities," likely in Iowa City. He did not say whether he had plans to sell Etc., which opened in June 2001, saying only: "Nothing's forever."

Meanwhile, local bar-owner

Mike Porter said he is interested in purchasing the bar, which first opened as a no-smoking, 21-only establishment before dropping the requirements just a few months after its debut.

"I haven't talked to him personally about it," said Porter, who owns The Summit, 10 S. Clinton St., and One-Eyed Jakes, 18-20 S. Clinton St. He added that Pohl might be more receptive about selling the business, and possibly for a lower price, because of last week's incident.

Various eyewitness accounts say UI junior Deanine Busche, 20, spat a shot into the lit bar, while others say a bartender attempted to re-ignite the fire by dousing it with liquor, causing flames to jump onto nearby patrons.

Long-time Pohl employee Ryan Rooney said he thinks the family has been held responsible for other people's mistakes.

"It wasn't Kip Pohl who set the fire," said Rooney, who has managed all three of the Pohl family bars at some point in a four-year period. "Certain things happen in the bars. It's not like [the Pohls] are bad people."

With the fire still under investigation, Iowa City city councilors said they have not discussed what action they might take against the bar, if any, although talks of raising the age requirement for all bars to 21 has arisen recently.

Some councilors say they're having a difficult time shaking Pohl's past.

"I think he encourages people to come into his bar and drink excessively," said Councilor Connie Champion.

Among the problems were bikini contests staged at the Union in February 2001 under the management of Pohl's son, Jim Pohl. Contestants exposed themselves, and underage patrons were served alcohol during the events, which Lehman referred to as the "most flagrant" violation by a downtown bar that he remembers in his eight years with the city. The bikini contests resulted in a 21-day liquor-license suspension and $2,000 fine for the club.

Suspensions and a total $2,750 in fines were also incurred by the bar in 1993, 1994, and 1997, when it served alcohol between 2 a.m. and 6 a.m., a violation of state law. As a result, the Union lost its liquor license for seven, five, and 14 days, respectively.

Other incidents connected to his establishments include a lawsuit by a UI student who accused a former Union bouncer of breaking his leg and an alleged assault on a Malone's patron by then-manager Rooney.

Rooney's legal history, which also includes disorderly house violations, was taken into consideration by the council last spring, when Kip Pohl requested a liquor license for Etc., saying Rooney would be general manager. The council denied the request — the first denial in more than 15 years — but it was later reversed by a state judge after Pohl appealed.

Rooney moved to Chicago approximately six months ago, wanting to get away from the Iowa City bar scene.

"I never had any problems working with them," he said.

Engineering curriculum changes OK'd

By Deidre Bello
The Daily Iowan

Mounting deadlines and late notice "rushed" some members of the Engineering Faculty Council to approve curriculum changes for the first time in 25 years, said some officials in the UI College of Engineering. Three members subsequently resigned from the council a month after the changes were approved in late February — the same month the chairman of the curriculum committee resigned for unspecified reasons.

The council toyed with possible changes to the curriculum for the past four years before adopting new core curriculum in February that has more flexibility in taking electives, allowing students to pursue a second major.

Officials in the school say the new curriculum will allow students to better understand how different math concepts relate to each other.

David Andersen, a professor of electrical-computer engineering, Soura Dasgupta, a professor of electrical-computer engineering, and Colby Swan, an associate professor of civil and environmental engineering, submitted their resignations to the council April 2 as further talks of changes to the calculus sequence continued. None would specify reasons for leaving.

However, minutes from the council's February meeting show members did not understand the prerequisite structure and were concerned about how to proceed with the sequence to not jeopardize relations with the UI mathematics department. There were also "potentially serious" issues regarding whether transfer and AP credits would be accepted in the new curriculum, minutes show.

"At a late time, a problem was noticed," said Swan, who, along with Andersen and Dasgupta, have since rejoined the council. "There were conflicts really about process, but an understanding has been reached."

Swan would not elaborate. Andersen, Dasgupta, and Steve Collins, the former chairman of the committee overseeing the courses' implementation, declined to comment about the resignations.

The calculus sequence was reduced from five courses to four and a new course was introduced. A substantive change was made to the courses' pace, content, and arrangement of topics, said Forrest Holly, the associate dean for academic programs, adding the council had to "rush" to meet deadlines.

Andersen professor

Dasgupta professor

Swan associate professor review in October by the Accreditation Board for Engineering and Technology, Holly said.

"I had people say, 'Don't open that can of worms,'" Holly said of the curriculum change.

Engineering faculty insist that the new curriculum is well-developed and a general consensus was reached to implement the changes, said Jasbir Arora, the council's chairman.

The new curriculum will condense current class sections into one lecture of 120 students who will meet three times a week for lecture and twice for a discussion section, said David Mandercheid, the chairman of the department of mathematics.

'Tough-guy' actor hit with real-life charge

By Linda Deutsch
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Tough-guy actor Robert Blake was charged Monday with "personally and intentionally" shooting his wife to death after a dinner outing last year in a case that could bring the death penalty.

Besides murder, Blake was charged with solicitation of murder, conspiracy, and the special circumstance of lying in wait. Under California law, a special circumstance gives prosecutors the option of seeking a death sentence — a decision they said has not been made in Blake's case.

Blake's bodyguard, Earle Caldwell, 46, was charged with conspiracy to commit murder what prosecutors said was a plot that began at least three months before the slaying. Among other things, Caldwell was accused of keeping a list of items needed for the hit, including duct tape, lye, and shovels.

Both men pleaded not guilty, saying nothing in court except when asked for their pleas.

Bonny Lee Bakley, 44, was shot to death last May as she sat in Blake's car outside a Los Angeles restaurant in which the couple had just dined.

Blake, who won an Emmy for his portrayal of a detective in the 1970s TV show "Baretta," has said his wife was shot after he returned to the restaurant to retrieve a gun he accidentally left behind.

He was carrying weapon, he said, to protect Bakley from threats she received. Prosecutors, however, said the 68-year-old actor fired the handgun that killed his wife.

They also say he planned the hit, asked two other people to kill Bakley, and considered having her body buried in the desert. Blake allegedly checked out two remote places to kill Bakley — a tiny town outside Sequoia National Park and an Arizona community — in the weeks before the slaying next to a construction site.

In a criminal complaint, prosecutors said Blake drove Bakley to dinner at Vitello's, parking his car behind a trash bin a block away from the restaurant.

When the couple returned to the car, Bakley sat in the passenger seat. Prosecutors say Blake "lowered the windows, got out of the car" holding the keys and shot his wife twice with a 9mm handgun he later tossed in a trash bin.

Before the slaying, Blake asked two people to kill his wife and showed them a gun, the complaint said. In one case, Blake allegedly said that Caldwell "would have already dug holes for burial."

Prosecutors said the bodyguard, at Blake's request, kept a list of items for use in the murder that read: "2 shovels, small sledge, crowbar, 25 auto, 'get blank gun ready,' old rugs, duct tape, Drano, pool acid, lye, plant."

Caldwell also allegedly accompanied Blake and Bakley on a trip in March 2001.

Court digs into death-penalty debate

By Anne Gearan
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court waded deeper into the death-penalty debate Monday with a case that could overturn 800 death sentences nationally and another case seeking extra appeals for the condemned.

Death sentences in nine states could be affected by the court's ruling in the case of Timothy Stuart Ring, convicted of killing an armored-car driver during a robbery eight years ago.

The court is expected to decide by summer whether a defendant's constitutional right to a jury trial means that only a jury can make the crucial determinations that result in a death sentence. Currently, although juries are responsible for deciding guilt or innocence, judges decide the sentence in Arizona and eight other states.

The case, said Ring's lawyer, Andrew Hurwitz, raises "the basic constitutional principle ... that before you're handed over to the state, for the state to impose whatever punishment it can, that a jury of your peers is afforded to you."

Ring's is the fourth death-penalty case the court has reviewed in the current term. None of the cases attacks the essential constitutionality of capital punishment, which is imposed in 38 states.

The court signaled its continued interest in the mechanics of the death penalty by agreeing to hear the appeal of Tennessee death-row inmate Abu-Ali Abdur'Rahman, whose case has been championed by activists.

The case, which the court will hear next fall, could have far-reaching effects if the justices decide to loosen the rules for when condemned inmates can get new evidence before a judge.

Justices had blocked Abdur'Rahman's execution earlier this month; they will now decide whether he can pursue appeals on new developments.

Other courts had ruled that it was too late for Abdur'Rahman to bring up new allegations that the state didn't turn over evidence as it should have, had made misleading statements, and had improperly prepared witnesses.

His case returns the court to a subject that has troubled some of the justices: whether poor people facing a possible death sentence are getting good legal help.

One of his government-provided trial lawyers admitted that he did little to prepare for the trial or the sentencing. It was the attorney's first capital case.

His lawyers also relied on information from prosecutors that blood was found on Abdur'Rahman's clothing. The spots were paint.

Last year, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor said it may be time to impose minimum standards for lawyers who handle death-penalty cases. Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg said that in all the eleventh-hour requests for Supreme Court reprieves, she had not seen one in which the inmate had been well-represented at trial.

The court partially addressed the question of ill-prepared death-penalty lawyers in a ruling last month that upheld a death sentence for a Virginia man whose lawyer had represented the victim in an unrelated case.

Living organ donors outpace dead donors for first time

WASHINGTON (AP) — Organ donations from the living reached a record high last year and, for the first time, outnumbered dead donors. With waiting lists growing, more than 6,400 people gave away a kidney or a piece of their liver.

For more than a decade, the numbers of organs donated by the living have been growing more quickly than those given after death as desperate patients have turned increasingly to families or friends.

In 2001, the number of living donors jumped by 13.4 percent, on top of a 16.5 percent increase a year earlier, the government said Monday. By contrast, donations from dead people inched up by just 1.6 percent.

Moussaoui says he prays for ruin of U.S.

By Larry Margasak
Associated Press

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Zacarias Moussaoui, the only man indicted as a Sept. 11 conspirator, politely raised his hand for attention, then declared in court on Monday that he was praying for destruction of the United States and wanted to fire the appointed lawyers, who, he said, could not be trusted.

For nearly an hour in federal court, Moussaoui alternated readings from the Koran with an attack on the U.S. criminal-justice system. In calm, accented but understandable English, the French citizen accused prosecutors, his lawyers, and the judge of working together to end the case quickly with his execution.

"What they've done is a sophisticated version of the kiss of death," Moussaoui said, facing U.S. District Judge Leonie Brinkema. "The U.S. commander in chief wants me over as quickly as possible."

In a hearing that swerved suddenly from the intended argument over Moussaoui's prison conditions, Brinkema warned that he would place himself at a great disadvantage by representing himself in the death-penalty case.

"The American legal system is complicated," she said, addressing the bearded, 33-year-old man in a green prison jumpsuit. "You come from a different culture."

Before she made those remarks, Moussaoui had told her, "I want to defend my life." He asked for a Muslim attorney of his choice to advise him.

Brinkema said trained lawyers — perhaps the three currently appointed by the court — would have to stay in the courtroom to represent Moussaoui's rights whether he cooperated or not.

The government has frozen Moussaoui's assets of more than $30,000, but that amount would hardly be enough to finance a defense privately in a case with potential witnesses from overseas and thousands of pages of documents.

Moussaoui also asked for a trial without a jury. Brinkema did not rule immediately on that.

Legal experts said Moussaoui is placing himself in a nearly impossible legal situation. Among them was Tom Hillier, the federal public defender in Seattle who represented Ahmed Ressaam, a man convicted last April in a terrorist bomb-smuggling conspiracy.

"It's just logistically impossible to put all this together from a jail where he's under incredibly strict conditions of confinement," Hillier said. "He needs a team of people."

Moussaoui, who is of Moroccan descent, promised he would not "make your day" by physically assaulting anyone in court and declared, "The United States will not have a trial without me. They only need me for the gas chamber."

Brinkema ordered a mental examination to ensure that Moussaoui would be able to represent himself. His chief lawyer, federal public defender Frank Dunham Jr., said he wasn't surprised at Moussaoui's demand to fire him. Nor, he said, could he assure the judge that Moussaoui was mentally fit given his near-total isolation in the Alexandria Detention Center. Moussaoui is locked up 22 hours a day.

Brinkema said the government had agreed to give Moussaoui a computer, turn off one of two 24-hour cell lights, and make other concessions. But Moussaoui said he let his lawyers challenge his conditions of confinement only to gain admission to the courtroom to address the judge.

"The only thing that was really annoying me was I have no window," he said.

Moussaoui told the judge, "I pray to Allah" for "the destruction of the United States of America," for "the destruction of the Jewish people and state," and for Muslims fighting in Chechnya, India, and elsewhere. He then moved into criticism of his lawyers and cited some cases, saying he was reading law books in jail.

Moussaoui said the government is "spending millions of their evil money to kill me." He told the judge she "is here as a field general entrusted to get this matter over quickly."

"I'm ready to fight ... even with both hands behind my back," he said.

Moussaoui said only a Muslim lawyer could understand how to defend him, adding that he mistrusted appointed lawyers "who have no understanding of terrorism, Muslims, and mujahideen. I never told them anything of substance so there was no trust ... between me and them."

When the attorneys tried to develop their tactics against his wishes, he said he told them, "This is my life."

Dunham suggested that a Muslim identified publicly only as John Doe — who sought to visit the defendant in jail — could have explained what the defense was trying to accomplish.

Prosecutors said "John Doe" had been denied visitation rights because he refused to undergo an FBI background check. However, Moussaoui said he has no intention of speaking to the man anyway.

WILMINGTON, N.Y. — After a muscle-burning walk through snowy Adirondack Mountain woods, President Bush defended his environmental record on Earth Day and dismissed a chorus of Democratic critics, including former rival Al Gore.

"Hadn't paid attention to him," Bush said of the former vice president.

His gray hair dampened by snowflakes, Bush shrugged his shoulders when asked about Gore criticizing his environmental record. "That's why I have not paid attention to him," he replied curtly.

Gore, dubbed the "Ozone Man" by Bush's father, is emerging from political hibernation to lead Democratic attacks on Bush's environmental stands. Speaking at Vanderbilt University in Tennessee shortly after Bush's remarks, he accused the White House of giving polluters undue influence.

Bush and his allies are "threatening to take us back to the days when America's rivers and lakes were dying, when the skylines were some days not visible because of the smog, and when toxic waste threatened so many communities around America," Gore said.

Though Bush refrained from confronting any of his critics, the presidential schedule here Monday reflected concern among advisers that he could be vulnerable on the environmental issue.

Before the cameras, Bush pounded nails into a tiny bridge spanning a creek, tested water from the churning gray Au Sable River, repaired a muddy trail, and staked out a camp site. His face red with exertion, Bush pounded a 10-inch nail into a log with the flat side of a splitting maul — the sharp edge swinging within a whisker of the presidential forehead.

Mission accomplished, he hoisted the maul above his head and heaved a heavy sigh.

"Get them moving," he said with a laugh, pointing the tool to journalists. "That way, I don't have to nail so many of these things."

Later, the president spoke to local residents who gathered at a Whiteface Mountain Lodge after White House aides moved the speech indoors because of chilly weather.

"For three decades, we've acted with clear purpose: to prevent needless and at times reckless disregard of the air, and the water, and the soil, and the wildlife. This commitment has yielded tremendous progress," Bush said.

He said the 1990 Clean Air Act, stemming from his father's tenure, was a good start. "Now we should do more."

Bush has asked Congress to impose mandatory limits on industry production of three kinds of pollutants and to let companies work out how to achieve them through a system of earning and trading credits.

His "clear skies" plan, which Congress has yet to consider, can "significantly reduce smog and mercury emissions as well as stop acid rain," Bush said.

Gore said the president was on the wrong track. "Instead of working to reduce air pollution, the Bush administration's so-called 'clean skies' initiative actually allows more toxic mercury, nitrogen oxide, and sulfur pollution than if we enforce the laws on the books today," he said.

Gates: Sanctions could kill Windows

By D. Ian Hopper
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — For the first time in Microsoft's four-year antitrust battle, Bill Gates took the witness stand Monday and personally chastised states for seeking penalties that, he said, would cripple the American software giant.

With a mix of computer slide shows and short, calm answers, Gates sought to rebut the arguments of nine states that have asked a court to further punish Microsoft for operating an illegal monopoly that hurt competitors and consumers.

Gates offered no apologies for his company's business practices. Instead, he portrayed Microsoft's flagship Windows software as the epicenter of innovation in America's computer revolution — a revolution that would be stifled by the states' proposed penalties, hurting consumers and the wider industry.

"The [remedies] would turn back the clock on Windows development and effectively freeze it there," Gates testified at one point, delivering in person the warnings that Microsoft has made for months in court documents.

He said the health of the personal computer "ecosystem depends in substantial part upon the continued health of and improvements to Windows."

At one point, he suggested Microsoft might need to lay off half of its 15,000 workers or pull Windows from the marketplace as fallout from the proposed penalties.

"The practical effect ... would be to cripple Microsoft as a technology company," Gates wrote in 150 pages of written testimony that was submitted along with his appearance.

Gates' performance Monday contrasted sharply from his 1998 videotaped testimony that became a key piece of evidence in the first phase of the antitrust trial. Gates was criticized for appearing fidgety, evasive, and combative in that tape.

On Monday, he spurned his customary casual attire for a traditional blue suit and purple tie and brought his wife to the courtroom.

Under intense questioning by states' lawyer Steven Kuney, the Microsoft chairman occasionally chuckled before taking issue with definitions or assumptions. He is to return today for more questioning.

Gates began his testimony with a computer-generated slide show. He demonstrated how, if the states successfully persuaded a court to force Microsoft to remove the Internet Explorer Web browser, essential components of Windows would stop working.

different needs.

"Price-wise, you can't compare them," said George Hollins, the director of Design and Construction Services. "The Burge project uses a lot of heavy mechanical and industrial utilities, such as additional heat it generates, which won't be necessary in the journalism building."

Lawmakers have approved a total of $13.4 million for the journalism building over the next three years. The rest of the money will come from private donations.

The building will sit between Becker Communications Studies Building and the CRANDIC Railway embankment. A second-level walkway will connect the school with Becker. The journalism school will receive 44 percent of the building's area, the rest of which was given to the DI, general-assignment classes, and the cinema and comparative literature department.

Building features will include 14 general-assignment classrooms, a broadcast studio, laboratories, offices, and meeting spaces.

Journalism students were moved from the Communications Center to Seashore Hall in 1998.

"Broadcast studios, newspaper offices, and cyber spaces are integrated in the design, in much the same way they're integrated in the profession," Hollins said. "We're always in need of classrooms on this campus, especially ones that are equipped with more recent technology, as these will be."

The Burge renovation project will reflect the Hillcrest dining marketplace design with additional entrances, large windows with a view of the T. Anne Cleary Walkway, and a developed bakery area. Slated for completion in November 2004, the cafeteria will also receive new plumbing, a sprinkler system, lighting, and power systems.

Police had questioned six witnesses by Monday — and need nine more for a complete investigation, Winkelhake said.

Following completion of the case, reports will be sent to Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White and the Iowa Alcoholic Beverages Division.

White will determine what, if any, criminal charges will be filed against the bar and owner Jim Pohl, who refused comment Monday. The state alcohol division could impose penalties ranging from a $1,000 fine to revoking the club's alcohol license.

"If they feel there's a violation, we'll review it," said Lynn Walding, the director of the alcohol division.

One victim has filed a lawsuit against the bar. Ridnour, one of the other five victims, said he would not take legal action.

UI junior Amy Shah filed civil charges against Etc.; she will be represented by local attorney Tom Riley. The 20-year-old suffered second-degree burns to her forehead and right arm.

"They hire young people that do things looked upon as stupid," Riley said of the bar stunt. "This was not the first time they did this."

Shah's father contacted UI administrators the day after the incident for an attorney recommendation, and he was referred to Riley, who filed the paperwork in Johnson County District Court on April 19.

The UI junior is seeking punitive and compensatory damages for pain and medical bills. Riley would not suggest an amount of damages to be awarded.

"Sometimes the jury will give you more than what you ask for," he said from his Cedar Rapids office.

If a settlement is not reached, the trial could begin as early as next fall, Riley said.

Riley said Busche could be sued for negligence if she did spit the shot on the fire, causing the fire to flare.

promise budget plan, a package Republicans had ruled out in advance.

The governor met privately with key lawmakers and with rank-and-file legislative Democrats. He argued that the budget lawmakers approved before ending this year's regular legislative session was inadequate, spending too little on health and education programs.

After lawmakers ended the special session, Vilsack issued a statement saying he was "disappointed" that they didn't accomplish more.

"I will continue to fight for a budget that puts the interests of Iowa families ahead of the special interests," the governor said. He did not elaborate on his next step.

Lawmakers ended the regular session by approving a $4.6 billion budget that approximately $135 million short of what the governor wanted.

Last week, Vilsack offered a compromise, saying he wanted lawmakers to shift roughly $60 million from the state's highway fund to finance health and education programs.

Republicans told the governor in advance they wouldn't do that, though the governor said he had held out hope.

"I believe reasonable people at the end of the day are going to reach a middle ground," the governor said.

JENIN

30-year-old Palestinian who lived near the camp's center with her husband and three children, believed it would be a fight to the finish — with families like hers caught in the middle.

By the time the guns were silenced, a zone beginning just across the street from her house would be a wasteland, an area the size of several city blocks filled with demolished buildings and strewn with the books, shoes, bedding and other possessions of those who once lived there. And Israel and the Palestinians — with the growing involvement of international bodies, including the United Nations — would be locked in a bitter dispute over how many had died on this debris-choked ground, and how.

Ghattash could not know the scale of the destruction, but what she could see was frightening enough. "It was a hell, coming toward us from the hills and from the sky," she said. "I called on God then to protect us."

As the battle began, doctors at Jenin's main hospital on the edge of the camp braced for a flood of casualties. They were right: the dead and wounded — some gunmen, some not — began arriving within hours.

A 27-year-old Palestinian named Fadwa Jammal was among the first to die, hit April 3 by what hospital officials said they believed was Israeli gunfire when she went to the roof to see what was going on. Amer, the militia leader, was killed shortly after the fighting began; witnesses said he fired at an Israeli tank and died in a volley of return fire.

Israel, too, was bloodied early on: a 29-year-old major named Moshe Gerstner fell in an ambush in a camp alleyway — the first of seven soldiers to die in the initial 48 hours of the Jenin offensive.

out dire consequences. There's long-term consequences with these cuts, and schools will never regain the dollars that they've lost."

In the joint statement mass e-mailed to UI students, the presidents iterated the arguments they have been sounding for more than a year: The quality of the universities is diminishing with reduced course offerings and larger class sizes; many jobs — now more than 700 — have been eliminated from the state's universities; students "are being forced to take on a significant" burden as their share of the cost has doubled during the last 20 years while state's has decreased by 25 percent.

The presidents again argued that higher education is "the proven pathway to greater economic prosperity" for individuals and the state, saying studies demonstrate that tax dollars given to universities help to create jobs and spending in the private sector.

They warned that future cuts would "unquestionably compromise the quality of our educational programs." The current budget would reduce funding for the state's universities and special schools by $82 million, the amount the University of Northern Iowa receives from the state in one year, they said.

"Our state universities cannot continue to endure cuts in state support and maintain first-class educational programs and statewide public services," the joint statement said.

The statement was signed by UI President Mary Sue Coleman, Iowa State University President Gregory Geoffroy, University of Northern Iowa President Robert Koob, and president of the State of Iowa Board of Regents Owen Newlin.

Officials said the idea of the joint statement was to educate the public about the cumulative effects of the budget situation.

"The more we are able to educate the public about the results of these budget cuts, the more successful we will be," said Mark Braun, the UI associate director of Governmental Relations.

"It would be great [if the UI were selected]," Parrott said. "But we're going to have to follow protocol and wait until the governor's decision."

Kelly said Ahrens' decision came as a complete surprise to regents.

"Besides her closest friends, I don't think anyone knew. The rest of us didn't know it until we saw it," he said.

Ahrens, who is moving with her fiancé and taking a job in North Dakota with Dow AgroSciences, said the hardest thing about the job is the steep learning curve.

"It takes a year to learn what the regents is about," she said. "It's a difficult balancing act — you are representing the students as well as the taxpayers."

Ahrens, who is an agronomy and agricultural-business major, was involved in numerous committees during her tenure. She was known for her opposition to tuition hikes and budget cuts.

"A lot of times, votes would come out 8-1 because of her," Kelly said. "She represented the students' voice and opinion."

Former UI Student Government President Nick Klenske said that despite recent budget cuts and a tuition hike, Ahrens lobbied hard for students.

"She was [the regents'] only link to the campus," he said. "I was impressed."

France wakes up with big Le Pen hangover

By Mort Rosenblum
Associated Press

PARIS — Much of France woke up stunned Monday, deeply troubled and at a loss to understand a far-right upset in what was supposed to be a ho-hum presidential primary — so ho-hum that many had ignored the election.

Incumbent Jacques Chirac was nearly outvoted by Jean-Marie Le Pen, a blustering, 73-year-old ex-industrialist who rails against immigrants and once dismissed the Holocaust as a detail of history.

"What a catastrophe, what a crushing shame for France," muttered Alain Parent, a Parisian doctor with two young teenagers. "This just shows how badly our political class has deteriorated and how we are losing our civic sense."

Most of the 14 losing candidates on Sunday's ballot are throwing their support to Chirac, virtually assuring him a second term when he faces Le Pen on May 6.

"We saw what happened in Germany in 1933," said Noël Mamère, a Green candidate. "We don't want to see that in France in 2002."

But in France's two-stage elections, voters use the first round to deliver a message to the eventual winner. This time, it was extremely loud and very clear.

Even voters with no sympathy for Le Pen reacted against what many described as business as usual by familiar old faces who seemed always to emerge with impunity from scandal.

During the campaign the constant issue was "l'insécurité," a code word for growing violence attributed largely to immigrant youths.

Le Pen's jubilant National Front supporters hurriedly rally the president. "Le Pen to the Elysée, Chirac to La Santé," they shouted at a victory rally. The Elysée is France's executive mansion. La Santé is a prison.

Reaction was widespread and energetic. Tens of thousands stormed streets in a dozen French cities to protest the results. Many chanted their own version of Le Pen's party initials, FN: "F for fascist, N for Nazi."

The upset eliminated Prime Minister Lionel Jospin, a Socialist, who was considered a shoo-in to face Chirac in a race that polls suggested would be nearly neck and neck.

Shock reverberated throughout Europe, which is dissolving borders and forging an economic union meant to counterbalance the United States.

Calling himself horrified and astounded, European Union Commissioner Neil Kinnock said the election result "throws a great dirty rock into the European political pool."

In Germany, where Chancellor Gerhard Schröder's Social Democrats were routed in a state election by the right-wing Christian Democrats, the French elections sounded an ominous note.

"We are counting on all sensible people in France to make sure that Le Pen is kept out so that we won't have even more extreme rightists in positions of power in Europe," party Secretary-General Franz Müntefering told reporters.

Italy's Northern League, a far-right member of Silvio

Berlusconi's coalition, praised the outcome.

"Le Pen's brilliant success rewards the courage and consistency of a leader who has denounced ... the very serious risks, in France and Europe, of the immigrant invasions," party leader Mario Borghesio said in several newspapers.

Spain's daily El Pais, in an editorial, attributed the vote to a decline in France, a loss of luster in its economy, its social model, its world influence, and the tone of its democracy.

"Nothing else can explain the rout of an honorable politician ... at the hand of a dangerous demagogue like Le Pen," it concluded.

The French daily Le Monde caught the black-humor mood in Paris with a front-page cartoon. It showed Le Pen as a grinning airplane headed into two flaming office towers marked "Chirac" and "Jospin."

Leaders of Muslim and Jewish organizations found little to laugh about, warning that minorities faced persecution if the National Front gained political power.

"Chirac will have to be responsive to some of this right-wing element, and this could mean a xenophobic tone to his new government," said Shimon Samuels, the head of the Simon Weisenthal Center in Paris.

In recent weeks, Samuels said, there was an average of more than 20 anti-Semitic incidents a day in France, including firebomb attacks on synagogues, a steady increase since Sept. 11.

Standoffs continue; Israel bulldozes cars

By Greg Myre
Associated Press

RAMALLAH, West Bank — While an Israeli army bulldozer crushed cars in the parking lot outside, Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat met with a U.S. envoy in his besieged office Monday to discuss the standoff there and at Bethlehem's Church of the Nativity.

The armed standoffs have persisted for three weeks, and neither appears close to a settlement. Until they are resolved, there is little hope for a cease-fire between the Israelis and Palestinians.

Israeli police said 10 international activists, nine from France and one from Brazil, had been arrested after they walked out of Arafat's headquarters in Ramallah on April 16.

The 10 were being held in an Israeli detention center; they would be expelled from the country Wednesday, police spokesman Gil Kleiman said. More than 20 activists remained inside.

Heavy gunfire exchanges were heard again Monday at the Church of the Nativity, where an Anglican envoy said the situation was worsening steadily. The shrine is built at the traditional site of Jesus' birth.

In new violence in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, six Palestinians and one Israeli soldier were killed Monday.

In the West Bank city of Hebron late Monday, Israeli helicopters fired missiles at a car and killed Marwan Zalloum, the commander of the Al Aqsa Martyrs Brigade militia in the city, residents said. Another man was also killed. The Israeli military confirmed that helicopters targeted a suspected Palestinian militant.

Israel's army said a unit came under fire between the northern West Bank villages of Talouza and Assira al-Shamaliya. A soldier and two Hamas militants were killed, the army said.

One of the militants was identified as Taher Nasser, 28, a leader of the Hamas military wing in the Nablus area. Israel says he was wanted for direct responsibility in attacks on Israelis, including the Dec. 12, 2001, ambush of a bus that killed 10 Israelis.

Less than a mile from Arafat's compound, masked gunmen pulled three suspected Palestinian informers for Israel out of their cars in a downtown square and shot them with automatic rifles. One man later died. The gunmen said they were from Al Aqsa Martyrs Brigade, a militia linked to Arafat's Fatah movement.

In 1½ years of fighting 1,542 people have been killed on the Palestinian side and 470 on the Israeli side. This number does not include Palestinians killed in the Jenin refugee camp during an Israeli offensive to root out what it called a terrorist infrastructure.

Israeli troops have left most Palestinian cities in the West Bank after an incursion lasting more than three weeks. In their wake, however, Palestinian Authority government ministries are in shambles, Palestinians said.

Israeli troops ripped out computer hard drives, seized documents, and trashed offices not related to Israel's search for militants, Palestinians said.

Israelis took the medical records of thousands of patients from the Health Ministry, the student database from a computer at the Education Ministry, and the car registration list from the Transportation Ministry, Palestinians said.

The troops also blew up a safe in the Education Ministry and took $8,000 from it, said Salah Soubani, the director of information at the Education Ministry.

"Our ministries were nearly completely destroyed," said Palestinian Information Minister Yasser Abed Rabbo. "This was not done as a mistake in one or two places. This was done in every single ministry."

Despite fire, bars still safe

On April 18, several UI students were burned in an accidental fire.

This incident is being used by some to support the idea that Iowa City bars should not allow entrance of individuals under the age of 21. This incident, however, does not support their cause. This is not an underage-drinking issue; it is a safety issue. The fire at Etc. does not reflect the level of safety at any other Iowa City drinking establishment.

Iowa City bars provide a safe atmosphere to facilitate drinking and socializing. There are bouncers located at the entrance of the bar who check IDs, and they do not allow anyone under the age of 19 (18 in some bars) to enter. They stamp everyone under the age of 21, and these people are not served alcohol. Bars do not have easily accessible private rooms and they do have well-lit, segregated restrooms, which prevent sexual assaults and illegal drug use. Bars have to pass building codes and are regularly inspected for safety standards, including capacity and exiting requirements.

Bars also have trained bartenders, who are educated on how to properly mix drinks and cut off overly intoxicated individuals. They have trained servers and bartenders who know how to handle disruptive customers. All of these employees are sober and able to handle any abnormal situation. All Iowa bars must stop serving alcohol at 2 a.m., and when people leave the bars downtown, they go out into well-lit streets patrolled by police officers. Individuals who may be a danger to themselves or others will be easily spotted and dealt with by the police. The central location of the bars provides a safe atmosphere for bar patrons to find transportation to their homes.

The system explained above is set up to protect the safety of Iowa City's downtown visitors. This system encompasses all aspects of downtown safety. If there are safety problems, we should not try to change this all-encompassing system; rather, we should work on strengthening each compo-ment. We must train our police officers to understand the laws and codes so they can properly enforce them. We must also increase transportation alternatives available to individuals seeking means to get home safely from the bars. We need to allow cars to be parked downtown so individuals are not encouraged to drive drunk.

In a college town, students should have the freedom to socialize with their peers in a safe environment. We must fight against any ordinances changing the entrance age to 21 and all other ordinances that take away students' freedom. One way to help limit ordinances is by attending the April 30 public forum presented by the Iowa City City Council. Students can also help by acting responsibly, whether it be working downtown or socializing downtown.

Even after the fire incident at Etc., I still feel that Iowa City bars are safe, and I will be going out this weekend.

'Donation' was a purchase, not a gift

My name is Eric L. Anderson, and I'm a graduate of the UI College of Medicine, class of 2000. I have been following with great interest the recent events concerning the generous donation of the Carver Foundation to the medical school.

I was only slightly surprised to learn that a stipulation of the most recent donation would be a change of the college's name to reflect the names of the esteemed Roy and Lucille Carver. However, I was greatly surprised and disappointed to hear that the governing board that makes such decisions capitulated to the sound of more than $60 million.

It is sadly obvious to me that the great name of the state of Iowa can be bought if the price is right. Perhaps when I, too, am a foundation, I can purchase the university itself and change its name to reflect my wishes or the wishes of my family. Hopefully, this idea sounds as ludicrous to you as it does to me.

Students do not apply and interview at Iowa to attend the "Carver" College of Medicine. They apply, travel for interviews, and wait with great anticipation for that acceptance letter from the UI College of Medicine. No titles, names, or add-ons are required to make our college one of the best in the country.

The Carver Foundation has been around for a long time, and it will, hopefully, continue in its good fortune. However, the former state capital and the university that occupies its grounds were formed by the people of the state of Iowa, not by the Carver Foundation. To change a public institution's name to reflect only two people is to make a mockery of every individual who has contributed, both past and present, to make the college what it is today. In essence, what is being said is the only worthwhile contribution is a monetary one. What a sad reflection of modern society if our hallowed traditions are only as important as the cash that flows behind them.

It is a fact that the UI Foundation will be flooded with letters of anger and threats to withdraw or withhold financial support. Perhaps more detrimental to the future of the medical school (and the university at large) will be the removal of pride in our college. I, for one, do not want to be an alumnus of the "Carver" College of Medicine. I did not attend such an institution. When people ask me where I went to medical school, it will be with shame that I admit my state medical school does not exist any longer — it was "purchased" by a foundation.

I implore you to reconsider even the slightest change of name to the outstanding College of Medicine to which I am a proud graduate. I would also ask the Carver Foundation to exercise restraint in its demands. Gifts usually have no stipulations; otherwise, they are no longer gifts, but purchases.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Still waiting for those Wise Men to finally show up

Remember the good old days when Bill the Thrill was still president, nobody knew how to spell Afghanistan, let alone what it might be, and King George was still a pretender to the throne?

Neither do I.

Sort of.

I do recall that, when he was campaigning, Dubya had a tendency to approach language and thought as if he were wrestling steers. ("OK, here comes a verb. Grab that sucker and throw it to the ground.") For instance, I think if you know what you believe, it makes it a lot easier to answer questions. I can't answer your question leaps to mind (Reynoldsburg, Ohio, Oct. 4, 2000). As does It is clear our nation is reliant upon big foreign oil. More and more of our imports come from overseas (Beaverton, Ore., Sept. 25, 2000) and Well, I think if you say you're going to do something and don't do it, that's trustworthiness (CNN online chat, Aug. 30, 2000).

There were so many hundreds more, each hilarious in its insipidity, and their cumulative effect was to lead people to wonder about his acumen. All jingle-jangle of spurs and no giddyup, as they might say in Dubya's country.

Or, a few Stetsons shy of a posse.

No worries, his handlers said back then. The Boy King will be surrounded by all these Wise Men from his daddy's administration, and they'll take care of the thinking.

Right. And so here we sit, like Mary and Joseph in the stable, waiting for the damn Wise Men to show up.

Conservatives used to complain that watching policy being made in the Clinton administration was like listening to a jazz combo — everything seemed improvised. Maybe so. But watching policy being made in the King George/Stealth President administration is like seeing a garage band get together for the first time: Nobody can decide on a song.

Beau Elliot

Hell, in this administration, nobody can decide on a key.

Oh, they did all right with the war in Afghanistan, I suppose as long as you don't mind all those dead civilians littering the landscape. And oops, they're really, really sorry about those Canadians.

That's the problem with smart bombs — they're never any smarter than your president.

The biggest problem in Afghanistan is that the one thing that the country needs most, outside of money — nation-building — is the one thing King George and his cohorts hate the most. King George, Stealth President Cheney, et al., would rather save the spotted owl than engage in nation-building.

The other big worry in Afghanistan is that the United States will dust off its flak jacket, look around, and say, Our work here is finished, and pull out. The Wise Men say that won't happen, but you have to remember: These are a lot of the same Wise Men who, when the Soviet Army bugged out, dropped Afghanistan like a rotting orange peel.

Then there's Israel and the Palestinians. Over 15 months of the intifada, this administration dithered around so much and sent so many conflicting signals that it's no wonder Ariel Sharon thought he had the green light to start World War III if necessary to smash Yasser Arafat.

It's also no wonder that when King George demanded that Israel halt the invasion of the West Bank and pull back, Sharon treated the notion with utter contempt.

And it's no wonder that Colin Powell's trip to the Mideast was an abject failure, such a flop that, at the end, Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak snubbed him, refusing to meet him when Powell went to Cairo.

It's quite a trick of genius policy-making when you can earn the disdain of the Israelis, the Palestinians, and the moderate Arabs at the same time.

And then there was the Venezuelan coup a little over a week ago, which left the United States looking like Bozo the Clown was in charge.

Every single member of the Organization of American States condemned the coup. Well, that is to say, every OAS member except one: the United States. The U.S. started to get all pally with the coup leader and then looked ludicrous when he was deposed the next day.

Of course, you have to remember that Dubya also got all warm and fuzzy after Gen. Pervez Musharraf took over Pakistan in a coup.

He probably feels a sense of brotherhood with guys who haven't been elected.

Oh, I know; King George and the Stealth President are the only leaders we've got, so we just have to live with them.

I can't help but wonder, though — when are the damn Wise Men going to show up?

Guns, roses, and a healthy appetite

By Dan Maloney
The Daily Iowan

In 1989, my music obsession took a new turn.

Upon entering the second grade, my after-school afternoons consisted of loafing on the couch and watching MTV, which my family just received in a cable upgrade. Instead of configuring multiplication tables or learning the fine art of cursive handwriting for its normal use, I honed these talents into scribbling band names neatly on folders and desks and calculating how much lunch money it would take until I could afford a new tape.

This era of music was dominated by rock 'n' roll bands full of guys who resembled girls — showered with glitter and mascara, hair exceeding the shoulder and placed high with hair spray, leather, motorcycles, and scantily clad women providing the visual in videos to taint my virgin eyes. My prior musical background was dominated by bands my father enjoyed, such as the Beatles and early Motown bands. However, the new revolution of music had me hooked. One such video on MTV, "Paradise City," by Guns N' Roses, caught my attention and persuaded me one day to purchase Appetite For Destruction, my first cassette tape, which I kept secretly in a drawer to escape the clasps of my disapproving mother.

Thirteen years later, I still have the original tape, which has remained intact after all the wear it has endured, but to prevent a sudden loss, I now have Appetite For Destruction on both CD and vinyl. Obsession? Yes. Appetite for Destruction was my first encounter with raunchy rock 'n' roll and was quite possibly, along with Nirvana's Nevermind, one of the greatest mainstream debuts by a rock group.

Guns N' Roses was, at the time, the undeniable bad ass of rock, and it used monster rock riffs, controversy, sex, and drugs to its excessive advantage. Every other day, a news brief would announce that lead singer Axl Rose was being incarcerated for assault or public disturbance or that one of the members was being busted for drugs. All the negative press, however, just added to the group's lore as being a band of reckless whiskey-drinking maniacs from the slums of Los Angeles.

All scandal aside, Guns N' Roses backed up its ego by providing a musical kick in the ass. The songs are all highly guitar-oriented, thanks to the virtuosity of guitarists Slash and Izzy Stradlin, and they are also distinguished by the distinctive wails of Rose, whose vocal whines were extremely innovative at the time.

The album opener and first single, "Welcome to the Jungle," sets the tone for the entire album, and it is defined by all the trademarks of a Guns N' Roses song — lyrics that portray life in LA as full of drug temptations, crushed starry-eyed dreams, and the unifying theme that Los Angeles is a jungle in which only the strong survive. "Welcome to the Jungle" musically uses all the rock clichés, such as blistering guitar solos, sing-a-long choruses, and a cow bell, but it is done so well that the band pulls it off. The song peaks beautifully with the crescendo where Axl questions, "Do you know where you are?/You're in the jungle baby/And you're going to die."

The album gets progressively better with tracks "It's So Easy," "NightTrain," "Out Ta Get Me," and "Mr. Brownstone," all songs that articulate the things that the group knows best — the theme of sex with "It's So Easy," booze with "NightTrain," paranoia and self-absorption with "Out Ta Get Me," and drug use with "Mr. Brownstone."

By the middle of the album, the rest of the hit singles kick in with the lighter-sparker "Paradise City" and the ode to a hard-living girl, "My Michelle." Both songs are extremely catchy — "Paradise City" with its arena-rock drum sound meshed with a Southern rock vibe, and "My Michelle" with its driving chorus.

"Sweet Child O' Mine" represents the peak of the album, with an opening guitar riff as distinctive as anything Led Zeppelin ever coined. The track was the first of Guns N' Roses' power ballads, (those softer songs defined by more guitar wanking), which heightened when the band released its opus power ballad, "November Rain."

Every song on Appetite for Destruction could have easily been marketed as a single, which is why it went on to sell more than 23 million copies. The influence of the band on rock is evident by the success of such groups as Kid Rock and BuckCherry, as well as the whole glam-rock scene in LA fronted by bands such as Mötley Crüe and Poison.

The influence of Guns N' Roses on other bands transcends music and moves into the use of image. Most bands are influenced by the way Guns N' Roses used scandal to its advantage, but the extremely original graphic artwork used for Appetite For Destruction — in which the female anatomy is exposed — also pushed the envelope of what was and wasn't appropriate.

Another influential Guns N' Roses trait was Axl's rebellious stage presence, defined by his signature outfit, the trademark gyrations of his hips, and the way in which he provoked the audience into violence.

Sadly, the group got progressively worse after Appetite for Destruction, and today, it teeters on the edge of being a Las Vegas novelty act.

However, no one can debate the sheer luster of Appetite for Destruction, an album that made a mark on rock 'n' roll and made me the rocker I am today. It's quite possible that if my parents had never opted to purchase cable, (which included the then-new technology of MTV), I would have never bought Appetite for Destruction, and I could be listening to commercial pop clones today.

An animated partnership

LOS ANGELES (AP) — They've done toys, bugs, and monsters. Now Pixar Animation and partner Disney are doing fish, cars, and suburban superheroes.

The underwater adventure Finding Nemo is next up for Pixar and Disney, which outlined their upcoming slate Sunday. Pixar and Disney previously teamed on the computer-animated Toy Story movies, A Bug's Life, and Monsters, Inc.

Featuring the voices of Albert Brooks, Ellen DeGeneres, Willem Dafoe, and Geoffrey Rush, Finding Nemo tells the tale of father and son fish that become separated in the Great Barrier Reef. It's due out in summer of 2003.

For late 2004, Pixar and Disney plan The Incredibles, a story of a family of undercover superheroes living in suburbia.

Cars, scheduled for release late in 2005, follows a group of automobiles hanging out on Route 66. John Lasseter, Pixar's creative mastermind whose directing credits include both Toy Story films and A Bug's Life, will direct.

With $504 million in global revenues, Monsters, Inc. has passed Disney's Aladdin to become the No. 2 top-grossing animated film worldwide, behind the studio's The Lion King at $768 million.

DreamWorks' Shrek is second behind The Lion King domestically, but Monsters, Inc. out-performed Shrek overseas.

Shoring up

SEASIDE HEIGHTS, N.J. (AP) — "MTV's Shore Thing" will broadcast all summer from a beach house on the boardwalk, just as it did in 1998.

Beginning April 29, MTV will take over a two-story house on the boardwalk, between Kearney and Fremont avenues, using it as backdrop for shows and specials, including "Total Request Live."

The house is occupied by the Seaside Heights Beach Patrol, which will move to a nearby bathhouse to make room for the cable network's production operations.

MTV will pay $45,000 to renovate the bathhouse and $44,000 in cash to the borough as compensation. But civic leaders say the value of the media exposure is worth much more.

"There's a tremendous amount of residuals that last for years," said Borough Administrator John Camera. "To be mentioned on a nationally broadcast channel like MTV daily throughout the whole summer — I can't even guess at the cost."

horoscopes

Tuesday, April 23, 2002 by Eugenia Last

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You'll be outgoing and determined to let everyone see how valuable you really are. Your creative abilities will shine, and recognition will be yours. If you put greater detail into your work, the more cutting-edge it will be.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The more socializing you do today, the better you'll feel and the more people you'll meet. Keep in mind that you can have a good time without spending too much. It's the company you keep that will be entertaining.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Don't be surprised if someone you know well isn't that easy to get along with. Don't become emotional or try to sort out why this person is reacting the way he or she is. Focus instead on making any changes at home that will help you feel more comfortable.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Get together with anyone who can help you get ahead. If you can show people what you have been working on or tell them your intentions, you will discover that help is just around the corner.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Opportunities are apparent today, so do whatever it takes to promote yourself and your work. Talk to someone you trust, and you will get an honest answer regarding your intentions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You may not know which end is up today at an emotional and personal level, but if you do not allow your personal life to interfere with your business responsibilities, you will make headway.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Work quietly behind the scenes, and you will accomplish a lot more today. Your creative talent can be put to good use if you channel it into detail and your present hobbies.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Put your talent to good use. You know how to make things happen and how to help the underdog. Your valuable knowledge will come in handy if you join an organization that you believe in.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may experience difficulties at work. Partnerships may be limiting if you have not been facing up to existing problems. You will damage your reputation if you become involved with clients.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Partnerships will develop if you socialize with people working in the same industry as yourself. You should be prepared to travel or attend a convention that will bring you fascinating information.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You can invest, but don't get involved in joint financial ventures or any form of gambling. Get involved in a hobby that will challenge you as well as take your mind off your worries.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Both business and emotional connections may be a little strained today. Try to take a lighter approach to life. Your ability to put others at ease should help you keep things running smoothly.

The Ledge

Dating Mistakes We Never Learn From

- Never date anyone at work.
- Bowling is not as romantic as we think.
- There is no way to avoid the "relationship" conversation successfully.
- Dating your roommate's sister, even if she looks exactly like Courtney Cox.
- Never, ever listen to your friends' advice.
- Girls are not impressed by your chugging skills.
- "Friends with Benefits" never works.
- Getting lucky on the first date pretty much ruins all chances for a lasting, meaningful relationship.
- But who really wants a lasting, meaningful relationship?
- If trying to hook up with someone you met at a bar, it helps to remember what he or she looks like.
- Showing up an hour and a half late bombed out of your skull usually doesn't win her over.
- Looks alone can only get you so far, eventually, you have to talk.

quote of the day

Now, a draft pick is going to have to go through somebody to make this team. In the past, that wasn't always the case. They just had to show up, have a pulse, and they had a pretty good chance of wearing our uniform.

— Bill Wetzel,
the first-year general manager of the San Francisco 49ers.

No Kidding around for New Jersey

By Tom Canavan
 Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The New Jersey Nets shook off the playoff jitters with a few things even more valuable in the postseason than a half-court offense — Jason Kidd, a great defense, and a big dose of self-assurance.

Kidd had 20 points, 10 rebounds, and nine assists, Kenyon Martin shut down Jermaine O'Neal and Indiana's inside game, and the cocky Nets beat the Pacers, 95-79, Monday night to even their best-of-five first-round series at a game apiece.

"Jason had that slight edge tonight, and I think everyone on our team knew this was a must-win," Nets coach Byron Scott said.

"I don't know if guys wanted to admit it, but we knew we had to win this game, and Jason came out with a different attitude. He was pressing at both ends of the court. Kenyon started it off, and everyone pretty much followed."

Now this series is a best-of-three, starting with Game 3 on Friday at Indiana's Conseco Fieldhouse. Game 4 is a week from Tuesday.

Blame the gap on television — at least that's what NBA Commissioner David Stern did before the game Monday night.

If a fifth game is necessary, it would be played on May 2.

"We understand that all the pressure is on us in Game 3 with the home-court advantage," said Reggie Miller, who led the Pacers with 26 points. "They did what they had to do to tie the series and shift all the pressure back to us. It's up to us to respond."

Heading into Game 2, the pressure was on the Nets after losing the home-court advantage with an 89-83 loss April 20.

However, the Nets had a lot of heroes in addition to Kidd. Playing with a sore right wrist, Martin was a big one.

Scott walked up to him early in the day and asked him if he wanted to guard O'Neal, who scored 30 points April 20.

Martin gladly accepted.

"I just didn't let him catch the ball in his sweet spot, in the right blocks," Martin said. "If he got it, I contested every shot. The shots he was making in the first game, he wasn't making tonight."

Alexis Maday performs on the uneven bars during last year's meet against Iowa State on Feb. 3, 2001 at the Field House.

Maday enters Iowa history

By Jeremy Shapiro
 The Daily Iowan

Alexis Maday's wild weekend concluded with a courageous fifth-place finish on the uneven bars at the NCAA championships, becoming Iowa's first-ever gymnast named as an NCAA first-team All-American.

Maday's accomplishments highlighted a landmark weekend in Iowa gymnastics and marked a rare occurrence: a sophomore advancing to two event finals.

A fall from the balance beam April 18 eliminated hopes of an all-around title for the sophomore, but the night was not lost. Maday quickly brushed off the setback and qualified for the April 20 event finals on bars and vault in Tuscaloosa, Ala. It marked the first time an Iowa gymnast had made it to the NCAA event finals, and it guaranteed that her name would be on the All-American team.

Also, she was the only individual qualifier to advance. The rest of the event finalists had their entire teams with them at the national meet.

"It was just unbelievable that as a sophomore that she not only hit at NCAA nationals, but she qualified for event finals," said Iowa coach Mike Lorenzen. "It's remarkable she was on the same floor with basically the U.S. Olympic and Canadian Olympic team. The vast majority of finalists were veterans with years of experience competing at nationals.

Maday first competed on vault, earning a 9.825. That score was good enough for seventh place out of the 10 gymnasts in the finals.

Jamie Dantascher of UCLA won the event with a 9.565.

After a break, Maday, using a new bars routine designed for the nationals, received a score of 9.863, putting her in a four-way tie for fifth place. Alabama's Andree Pickens won the event with a 9.925.

Because she earned top eight in both events, she earned the first team All-American status in both events — a fact made more noteworthy by her resilience after the fall off the balance beam, which cost her any shot at the All-Around title.

"It's extraordinary; she did miss an event and came back to earn the vault honors," Lorenzen said. "That showed her growth in leadership."

Both Maday and teammate Annie Rue earned invaluable experience in a championship setting. Lorenzen said that will only help them during next season. Plus, they will have a taste at what the grandest event in the sport is like. Should they or Iowa running back Ladell Betts darts past a group of Wisconsin defenders on Nov. 4, 2001 in Madison.

All Betts on

By Todd Brommelkamp
 The Daily Iowan

Ladell Betts has never been to the nation's capital, and he's never been hit by an NFL linebacker. For better or worse, both are matters the Washington Redskins' second-round draft pick will take care of in the coming weeks.

Betts, who twice rushed for more than 1,000 yards at Iowa, is the highest draft pick the school has produced since Tom Knight and Ross Verba were picked in the first round of the 1997 NFL draft.

He had unprecedented job security as a member of the Hawkeyes, serving as the team's top running back for his four years in Iowa City. That may change as he prepares to depart for Washington's training camp later this week, but for now the Blue Springs, Mo., product has a good idea of how he will go about making a positive impression on his new team.

Betts

"I just need to stay in shape and injury free — that's the name of the game," he said.

As long as Betts isn't hurt, he stands an excellent chance of making a positive impression on new Washington coach Steve Spurrier. The Redskins' roster has just two running backs, and only incumbent Stephen Davis has any considerable experience. Davis was the team's fourth-round pick five years ago.

Washington was one of Betts' top choices because of its dearth of running backs as well as the offensive emphasis Spurrier was known for as head coach at the University of Florida. The team had Betts listed on its chart of the 50-best available players, and when he was available at the 56th spot, the team did not hesitate in acquiring him.

"He has good explosiveness, great hands, and great lateral movement," Redskins' running-

NFL signs five Iowa players

By Todd Brommelkamp
 The Daily Iowan

Former Iowa defensive lineman Jerry Montgomery sat looking at the New Orleans Saints helmet in the center of his table with the look of a young man who just took one step closer to realizing his dream of playing professional football.

"It's a little different from black and gold," he said with a grin. "But it works for me."

Montgomery was one of five former Iowa football players who came to terms with NFL teams on non-drafted free-agent contracts shortly after the league concluded its seven-round draft on Sunday.

He is one of three players from Iowa's defensive line heading to the NFL, joining Aaron Kampman who was drafted in the fifth round by Green Bay, and fellow free agent Derrick Pickens, who signed with Oakland.

Other Hawkeyes who penned their signature on contracts Monday were quarterback Kyle McCann with the New York Jets; fullback Jeremy Allen with the Minnesota Vikings, and offensive lineman Alonzo Cunningham with defending NFC champion St. Louis.

"I'm confident all of them are going to make a great showing," Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz told the media Monday afternoon. "We're very appreciative of the contributions they have made to our program."

The five are bound for their respective mini-camps along with running back Ladell Betts, Kampman, and wide receiver Kahli Hill, who were drafted over the course of the weekend. The three represent the largest draft class Iowa has produced since four players were selected in the 1998 draft.

Ferentz was pleased with the crop of draft picks and signings, but he said two other players, linebackers R.J. Meyer and Mike Dolezal, may also wind up with NFL teams

Baseball team hopes to ride momentum

By Tyler Lechtenberg
The Daily Iowan

A struggling Western Illinois baseball team may have picked a bad time to come to Iowa City. After taking three of four from Purdue over the past weekend, the Iowa baseball team will attempt to ride the momentum from its first Big Ten series victory of the season into tonight's game with the Leathernecks. Play will begin today at 6 p.m. at Duane Banks Field. Against Purdue, Iowa coach Scott Broghamer saw his team pay plenty of attention to the details — and that conscientiousness resulted in one of the strongest team performances of the year for the 15-19 Hawkeys. "We scored some runs just on heads-up baserunning," Broghamer said. "We hustled, and we got some timely two-out hits — we went out and got the job done." Iowa will have to continue to pay heed to the small things to keep the Leathernecks, members of the Mid-Continent Conference, from tripping them up. Western Illinois stands at just 5-27 for the season, including 2-22 on the road, but, Broghamer said, the Hawkeys cannot afford to take the Leathernecks lightly. "They have played a number of very good schools," he said. "They're going to come in looking to play good baseball."

Western Illinois split a double-header with the Indiana-Purdue Ft. Wayne Mastadons on April 20, winning the second game behind a three-hit shutout from pitcher Ricky McCool. The Hawkeys got some strong pitching performances as well, surrendering just nine runs total in the weekend's four games. Sophomore pitcher Cory Hollenhorst pitched his first career shutout in the second game of the series, scattering six hits and striking out three in the win. "They have played a number of very good schools. They're going to come in looking to play good baseball."

But where Iowa may have gotten the biggest spark was from senior third baseman Ian Mattiace, who was inserted into the leadoff position for the first time in his career. Mattiace, who leads the team with a .365 batting average, scored three runs and hit .583 during the team's three weekend wins. Even with his team on an upswing, Broghamer still wasn't ready to start looking at standings; if the Hawkeys can continue to play as they did against Purdue, things will take care of themselves. "I think we won as a team — we had guys that swung the bats well, and we had good, solid performances from a lot of kids," he said. "We just have to keep taking care of our business."

Was the NFL draft overrated?

While watching the NFL draft this weekend, I tended to agree with Tyler: It's overblown. I think if I see Mel Kiper Jr.'s hair one more time, I'm going to take my razor and track him down. But in retrospect, the draft is perhaps the most important day of the year for most NFL teams. For clubs such as the expansion Houston Texans and the hapless Detroit Lions, the additions of David Carr and Joey Harrington respectively give them franchise players to build around. And no, we won't see either squad in the next Super Bowl, but we very well might in three years. Case in point — the Dallas Cowboys. America's Team was the laughing stock of the league in the late '80s, going 1-15 in 1989. Shrewd drafting brought them Michael Irvin, Troy Aikman, and Emmitt Smith, and the 'Boys won three Super Bowls in four years. More immediately, the draft can fill in the gaps for teams that are on the brink of cracking the ranks of the elite. The Tennessee Titans went 8-8 in 1998 and drafted defensive end Jevon Kearse out of Florida. Kearse set the rookie sacks record en route to winning defensive Rookie of the Year in 1999, and the Titans came within a yard of winning it all. Could the draft be shorter? Yes. Will Jimmy Johnson ever go away? Hopefully. Will the young men selected over the weekend significantly influence the NFL, both this season and beyond? Undoubtedly. — by Donovan Burba

I thought the day would never come when I would call for ESPN to broadcast "lumber sports" or the X-Games ahead of anything NFL-related. But my friend, Judgment Day has come — after the marathon coverage of this weekend's NFL draft, I'm calling for the Stihl saws, beer guts, and mullets. So I'll make a confession — I didn't watch the whole thing. I am human, which to me means I have more important issues to deal with than listening to every stomach-turning second of Chris Berman and Jimmy Johnson's overdramatization of whether the Seahawks should take Southern Mississippi's Jeff Kelly or Hampton's Scott Gregory. Never heard of those guys? Neither has the ESPN crew, but that's what they get paid for, so they might as well sound like they care. The melodramatic commentary wasn't even the worst part of the coverage — I couldn't even focus on the players' words. There were way too many flashing names, numbers, names, and all of those were put in a pop-up on the normal ticker ESPN usually runs across the bottom. Uff duh, I'm lucky I'm not epileptic. But by far the most mind-numbing aspect of the draft coverage was the time it took to get through it. Between draft picks, each team felt obligated to use up the entire 15-minute allotment to make a choice in the first round. Even the Houston Texans, who had all but signed quarterback David Carr, used up every last second. The first round itself lasted more than five hours, which is long enough for most people to run a marathon. I'd rather spend 10 minutes glancing through each round in the paper on Monday morning than five soul-sucking hours with a remote in my hand. But maybe that's just me. — by Tyler Lechtenberg

Baez masters Pale Hose

CLEVELAND (AP) — Danys Baez pitched 5 1/3 shutout innings in the cold, and Travis Fryman and Russell Branyan homered as the Cleveland Indians snapped a six-game losing streak Monday night, beating the Chicago White Sox, 4-2.

Finally home after an 0-6 trip to Chicago and Minnesota, the Indians improved to 7-0 at Jacobs Field this season and ended their longest losing skid in two years.

Fryman and Branyan each hit two-run homers off Mark Buehrle (4-1), who had gotten an average of nine runs of support in each of his first four starts.

But the White Sox did nothing against Baez (3-1), who has been moved into the starting rotation this season after pitching in relief a year ago.

Bob Wickman pitched the ninth for his sixth save.

Cleveland Indians' runner Omar Vizquel, right, is tagged out by Chicago White Sox catcher Sandy Alomar in the fourth inning Monday at Jacobs Field in Cleveland. The Indians snapped a six-game losing streak behind the pitching of Danys Baez.

City over Detroit, the only major-league team with fewer victories than the Royals.

Byrd (4-0), who has all but two of the Royals' wins, became the first Kansas City pitcher to win his first four decisions since Bret Saberhagen started 6-0 in 1987. The right-hander struck out four in his first shutout since Aug. 17, 2001, against Houston. In 28 1/3 innings, the former Philadelphia Phillies All-Star has not walked a single batter.

Carlos Beltran had a homer and a double for the Royals, who got four runs in the first off Mark Redman (0-3).

Marlins 8, Braves 3

ATLANTA — Preston Wilson and Derrek Lee each hit two-run homers in the fifth inning, and Cliff Floyd later had a three-run shot as the Florida Marlins avoided a sweep, beating the Atlanta Braves, 8-3, Monday night.

Florida snapped Atlanta's season-high four-game winning streak and also denied the Braves their first four-game series sweep in almost five years.

Brad Penny (2-1) pitched six-plus innings for the win, allowing eight hits and two earned runs.

Floyd, who missed the previous two games with tonsillitis, finished off the Braves in the ninth. He homered with two outs against Kerry Ligtenberg.

In another sign of baseball's attendance woes, the game drew only 21,461 — the smallest crowd in Turner Field's six-year history. Atlanta starter Kevin Millwood (2-2) was constantly behind in the count, throwing 26 pitches in the third inning alone. He was finally chased in the fifth.

San Francisco Giants slugger Barry Bonds and Chicago Cubs slugger Sammy Sosa share a laugh in the outfield prior to their game at HoHoKam Park in Mesa, Ariz., on Feb. 28. Bonds and the Giants head into Wrigley Field today.

Barry, Sammy ready to tee it up

By Nancy Armour
Associated Press

CHICAGO — The weather is crummy and cold, the Chicago Cubs are losing, and the San Francisco Giants don't rate anywhere near the St. Louis Cardinals or the crosstown White Sox on the list of hated rivals.

Yet there's an electricity surrounding this week's Giants-Cubs series, and it can be summed up in five short words: Barry Bonds vs. Sammy Sosa.

"Everything he's been doing for the last few years — myself, too, — it's going to be exciting," Sosa said. "People want to see that; people want to be there."

"It's entertainment, baby." Baseball's home-run kings meet only twice this season, and the three-game series beginning tonight is San Francisco's lone trip to Chicago. So the ballhawkers on Waveland and Sheffield avenues are standing by, and the bleacher bums have their gloves out, hoping the two will put on a long-ball show.

Bonds, who set baseball's single-season record with 73 homers last year, already has eight. Sosa, the only player to hit 60-plus homers in three seasons, is right behind him with six.

Bonds also leads the league in hitting (.432), slugging percentage (1.068), on-base percentage (.643), and walks (24).

"He's been unbelievable," Sosa said. "What else can you say about him? He's doing everything perfect. As a pitcher, there's nobody who can say, 'I'm going to get him.' He's the most dangerous hitter right now in the whole major leagues."

"If you make a mistake, it's not going to come back to the park."

What makes Bonds so dangerous is his patience, Sosa said. Bonds goes to the plate looking for a certain pitch to hit, and he won't swing at anything out of his strike zone. Along with his 73 homers last season, Bonds also set a major-league record with 177 walks.

With 575 career home runs, Bonds is sixth on the career list, nine short of passing Mark McGwire. Sosa is further back, with 456, but there are some who think he has the better chance of the two of reaching Hank Aaron's record of 755.

This, Bud, is for you: Twins, Expos in first place

By Dave Campbell
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — When Commissioner Bud Selig perused the standings Monday, he saw Minnesota leading the AL Central and Montreal heading the NL East.

The teams he tried to get rid of not only survived, they are among baseball's best three weeks into the season.

"People are going to have a heart attack if they see us and Montreal in the World Series," Minnesota first baseman Doug Mientkiewicz said.

Just two days after the World Series, owners voted to fold two teams, and their labor negotiators later told the players' association that the Twins and Expos were the targets. The contraction plan was stopped when a Minnesota judge issued an injunction forcing the Twins to honor their 2002 lease at the Metrodome, but Selig has vowed to eliminate two clubs by 2003.

Now there's a chance one — or both — could qualify for the playoffs and be eliminated a few weeks later.

"It's another ironic part of baseball, I suppose," Expos reliever Graeme Lloyd said.

With several rising stars returning from an 85-win, second-place finish last year, Minnesota's hot start is not a surprise. After a three-game sweep of the Indians over the weekend, the Twins (13-6) took over first place in the AL Central ahead of Chicago and Cleveland.

Contraction made players mad, but they insist they're not just responding to the attempt to eliminate their teams.

"This team is very focused on our own," Mientkiewicz said. "We don't need outside motivation."

Minnesota has perhaps the best defense in the majors and young hitters such as Jacque Jones and Torii Hunter, who is batting an AL-best .405. After a shaky beginning, Twins pitchers have bounced back with four-straight quality starts. And the bullpen, led by lefties J.C. Romero and Eddie Guardado, has made a big contribution.

"The commissioner is going to do what he's going to do — eliminate a couple teams," Jones said. "Maybe it's us, maybe it's not, but we can't worry about it."

Montreal, second in the NL in batting at .270, hasn't led its division this late since 1996 — when it held the top spot until May 18.

"You can't afford to waste any energy on trying to stick it to those who want contraction," first baseman Lee Stevens said. "But it would be very satisfying, obviously."

Led by All-Star outfielder Vladimir Guerrero, the Expos would've had several highly sought-after players in a dispersal draft. Even if there isn't contraction, it could be the team's last season in Montreal, with a move to Washington possible.

But the Expos (11-8) have become a team to be reckoned with. After they won the last three games of a four-game series against the Mets to take a one-game lead over New York and Atlanta, the back page of New York's Daily News blared, "CONTRACT 'EM NOW!" over a photo of Mets pitcher Pedro Astacio hanging his head on the mound Sunday.

Another headline read: "Mets fall again, wish Expos would just go away."

Competing with schoolwork and a few nights of unusually warm weather on their first homestand, the Twins have had 50,007 more people come through the gates in nine games — including a sellout opening night that was their first since 1992. Their average attendance is up to 22,934 — nearly as high as the 23,788 average of the Selig family's Milwaukee Brewers.

With Bledsoe, Bills may come due

By John Wawrow
Associated Press

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — By getting the quarterback they wanted in a trade with New England, the Buffalo Bills could become next season's version of the Patriots — a team that rises from the bottom of the NFL to the top.

The Bills got Bledsoe on Sunday, when they finally worked out a compromise to the impasse that had stalled the deal. Instead of giving up this year's first-round draft pick, No. 4 overall, Buffalo gave up next year's, which with Bledsoe on board figures to be considerably lower.

"Everybody's happy," six-time Pro Bowl guard Ruben Brown said. "In my opinion, which probably ain't even worth a nickel, just by adding Drew Bledsoe to the mix, we didn't have to pick up anyone in the draft. Adding him, that really makes us a formidable team."

Bledsoe, the first overall pick in 1993, lost his job after being hurt in the second game last season. When he was healthy, he couldn't get his job back from Tom Brady, who led New England from a 5-11 record in 2000 all the way to a Super Bowl championship. The Bills were 3-13 last season, but quick turnarounds are the norm these days — the last three teams to win the NFL title were a combined 17-31 the previous seasons.

In his first comments since the trade, Bledsoe said he had come to respect the Bills playing against them twice a year during his career.

"I could not be more enthusiastic about jumping into the next phase of my career and contributing to the success of the Buffalo Bills," he said in a statement released by the teams.

Bledsoe might be the Bills' most high-profile addition, but he's far from the only one.

Under general manager Tom Donahoe, the Bills have spent the past six weeks bolstering a young but promising lineup with eight free agents — including linebacker London Fletcher and offensive lineman Trey Teague — and 10 draft picks, led by offensive tackle Mike Williams, considered to be an instant starter.

Not since the mid- to late-1980s, when the Bills were drafting the likes of Jim Kelly, Bruce Smith, and Thurman Thomas as the core of team that won four-straight AFC titles, has there been such a sense of hope in western New York.

"I'm really excited about it," receiver Eric Moulds said. "I feel like we're a legit contender. Not just a contender to win a division. But we're looking for bigger things right now."

Moulds' assertion is not as farfetched as it might sound. Not only have teams come off losing years to reach the Super Bowl. Two other teams, New Orleans in 2000 and Indianapolis in 1999, made the playoffs a year after going 3-13. The Colts, in fact, improved to 13-3.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Butkus' nephew signs with Bears

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — The Chicago Bears have another Butkus. Luke Butkus, the nephew of NFL Hall of Fame linebacker Dick Butkus, signed with his uncle's former team Monday.

Butkus, a 6-3, 295-pounder, played at the same college as his uncle, Illinois, where he started every game at center the past three years. He was a third-team Associated Press All-American last season.

The Bears also signed one of Butkus' teammates, punter Steve Fitts. Chicago signed eight other undrafted college free agents Monday: guard Mike Collins of Wake Forest, defensive tackles Rod Jones of Alabama-Birmingham and Curry Dawson of Angelo State, running back Eric McCoo of Penn State, cornerback Tony Lukins of New Mexico State, wide receiver Edell Shepherd of San Jose State, safety Adrian Singleton of Alabama-Birmingham, and tackle Dave Volk of Nebraska.

Terms of the deals were not disclosed.

Purdue's Stratton blames Tiller for not being drafted

INDIANAPOLIS — Purdue's Tim Stratton, who won the Mackey Award as the nation's top tight end as a junior, blames his former coach for his being passed up in the NFL draft.

Stratton told the Indianapolis Star that Purdue coach Joe Tiller made derogatory comments about him to pro scouts. Stratton wasn't picked in this year's seven-round NFL draft, which ended Sunday.

"The Purdue coaches said I was high maintenance and I wasn't a favorite among my teammates," said Stratton, the Big Ten's third all-time leading receiver with 204 catches. "I don't think they tried to promote me, and that hurt."

Several draft observers figured Stratton's draft stock had been dropping because he has short arms, below-average speed for an NFL tight end, and is a below-average blocker.

"I'm [ticked] off," Stratton said. "I don't think [Tiller] showed any loyalty. I sacrificed 4 1/2 years. I busted my [tail] for these guys for 4 1/2 years."

Detroit purchases Santana, activates Jackson

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Detroit Tigers purchased the contract of righthander Julio Santana from Triple-A Toledo on Monday and activated infielder Damian Jackson from the disabled list.

In other moves Monday, the Tigers placed catcher Mitch Meluskey on the 15-day DL retroactive to Sunday with low back pain, designated lefthander Matt Perisho for assignment, optioned outfielder Craig Monroe to Toledo, and recalled catcher Brandon Inge from Toledo.

In seven games with the Mud Hens, Santana, 28, was 0-1 with a 2.13 ERA and one save. He struck out 12 and allowed three earned runs in 12 1/3 innings. Jackson was put on the DL on April 7 with a laceration to the right middle finger.

Meluskey was hitting .222 with one RBI in eight games this year. He missed the entire 2001 season after arthroscopic surgery on his right shoulder.

Spurs' Robinson misses Game 2 against Seattle

SAN ANTONIO — San Antonio Spurs center David Robinson missed Monday night's playoff game against the Seattle SuperSonics with a bad back.

Robinson aggravated the injury April 12 during a game against Detroit and missed the last three games of the regular season.

The 7-1 center started Game 1 of the best-of-five series against Seattle on April 20, but he left in the first quarter when his back tightened up. San Antonio won, 110-89.

The 36-year-old Robinson averaged 12.2 points and 8.3 rebounds during the regular season.

Robinson had an MRI exam April 20; he didn't practice Sunday.

The Spurs said he would be given an injection in his back Monday, and he will be re-evaluated Wednesday.

The teams will play Game 3 in Seattle on Saturday.

before all is said and done. Both have been contacted by teams and may sign with an organization before the end of the week.

For most of the players, signing contracts ends a hectic 72 hours that saw most of them glued to the television set, watching draft coverage, and more often than not, with a phone glued to their ears. Out of picks after the fifth round, the Jets called McCann with two rounds remaining offering him a contract if he went undrafted. Other players had similar stories.

Pickens was relieved not to hear his name called in the later rounds of the draft because he could then have his choice of teams to sign with. He had offer sheets from St. Louis, Indianapolis, and the Raiders.

"I always thought I was a good football player, but God has blessed me more than I can imagine," Pickens said. "To think that I'll be on the same field as Jerry Rice, Tim Brown, and all these legends is like a dream."

Montgomery was another player with more than one offer, including different dollar amounts. In the end he chose the Saints because the team has only three defensive tackles, including two with just one-year contracts. Looking at the roster, he knew his best shot at sticking with a team may lie in the Big Easy.

"I could have had more money elsewhere, but if I did that, it would be like cutting myself already," he said. "You have to find a perfect place for you to fit in, and this was the best possible situation."

Money is definitely an issue with both the players and their new NFL teams. Rosters are capped at 80 unless a team has players assigned to NFL Europe, a developmental league, and the league's franchises operate under strict salary-cap rules. A veteran player may be cut in favor of a rookie if a team feels the cheaper man can do the job. It's a situation Ferentz sees as only being beneficial to young players just entering the league.

"Unless you're a No. 1 pick, it's pretty much equal ground for everybody," said Ferentz, who spent six years as a coach in the NFL with Cleveland and Baltimore. "Young players are cheaper, and I can promise you that's on the mind of a lot of teams."

With most of the players still coming to grips with the fact that, at least momentarily, their dreams of playing in the NFL are about to come true, they will return to reality rather quickly. Teams open mini-camp this weekend, meaning most of the eight professional-bound players will have left Iowa City by Thursday morning.

even the whole team qualify next year, it will be a major edge with Maday and Rue having already experienced it.

"Annie was disappointed with her performance," Lorenzen said. "It was an unnerving experience for her. Still, I think not doing well might help her in the long run. We are very proud of both of them. This is a landmark point for our program.

Alabama won the team championship at home. It was its fourth NCAA championship in school history.

back coach Hue Jackson said. "He has some ability to extend out of the backfield and catch the football. So he has all the things you're looking for, including demonstrating a lot of toughness."

When Betts arrives in Washington's camp, he'll be greeted by former Iowa tight end Zeron Flemister. Flemister signed with the team as a free agent after going undrafted in 2000. Betts said he hasn't spoken to his former teammate since being selected, but he would likely do so before leaving for mini-camp.

Kampman gets his wish

Defensive end Aaron Kampman wanted to be a Green Bay Packer, and he got his wish when the Packers used their fifth-round pick to acquire him. Simple enough, right? Not exactly.

"You never know how the draft's going to turn out," he said about anxiously waiting to hear his name called Sunday.

Kampman had visited Green Bay and spoken with former Hawkeye Matt Bowen, a current Packer, about playing in the land of Lombardi. He felt it was the best fit for him as a football player as well as a person, yet the Packers did not call his name until pick No. 156. He watched as the team traded up in the first round, a deal that included its second-round selection. Green Bay filled needs on its offensive line with the third pick and at fullback with its fourth, leaving Kampman to wonder if his dreams of wearing green and gold would come true.

When the New York Giants called to tell him they would take him with pick No. 152, Kampman and his wife, Linde, decided it was time to resign themselves to fate. Then fate did a funny thing — the Giants took linebacker Nick Greisen of Wisconsin with their pick.

"For whatever reason, things fell through," he said. Four selections later, Green Bay got its man, and Kampman got his wish.

"In my heart, that's where I really wanted to go," he said. The Big Ten sack leader of a year ago later learned Buffalo had attempted to trade up in order to select him, but Green Bay was set on making sure it got Kampman.

That sort of devotion before ever donning the team's uniform may be a prelude to a lengthy stay in northern Wisconsin.

Hill follows in Dwight's footsteps

Wide receiver Kahlil Hill was a little surprised to fall all the way to the draft's next-to-last round, but attributes his fall to nagging injuries that slowed his performance at timing days and the draft combine. Hill's health didn't stop the Atlanta Falcons from selecting him with pick No. 184.

Uncertain of what role he will play for Dan Reeves' squad, whether he will serve as a wide receiver or on special teams, Hill doesn't have far to look for inspiration. All he needs to do is open an old City High yearbook or look at old Iowa media guides.

Since high school, Hill has followed in the footsteps of current San Diego Charger Tim Dwight. Both Dwight and Hill starred at City High before taking their talents across town to Kinnick Stadium. After four years at Iowa, each was drafted by Atlanta late in the draft, with Dwight going in the fourth round of the 1998 draft.

Dwight quickly found his niche with the Falcons as a jack-of-all-trades, scoring the team's only Super Bowl touchdown against the Denver Broncos during his rookie year. He was traded to San Diego prior to last season.

Expecting the same success from Hill may be a little premature, according to the 2001 winner of the Mosi Tatupu Special Teams Player of the Year — he still has to make the team.

"People tend to forget that," he said. "I'd be the water boy if I had to."

Hill may be the former Hawkeye most ready for what lies ahead; his father, J.D., was an All-Pro with Buffalo in the '70s.

Senators' testy defense pulls through

Associated Press

OTTAWA — The long wait is over for Radek Bonk. And with the way the Ottawa Senators are playing defense, his first career playoff goal was more than enough.

It took Bonk 27 games, but he made sure his first postseason score was very significant.

"It was worth waiting for," Bonk said of his power-play goal 2:04 into the third period, helping the Ottawa Senators to a 3-0 victory over the Philadelphia Flyers Monday night.

Patrick Lalime got his second-straight shutout, and Marian Hossa and Daniel Alfredsson scored empty-net goals as Ottawa took a 2-1 lead in the Eastern Conference playoff.

"They're playing as well as they have since they came into this league," Flyers center Jeremy Roenick said. "It's a credit to their coaches. We have to try to

Bonk, who assisted on Ottawa's first goal Saturday for his second point in 26 playoff games, fired a shot from the slot past goalie Roman Cechmanek and just inside the right post.

"I saw the puck go in, and it was a big relief," Bonk said. "It's always nice to score the goal that gives you the win."

Hossa scored into an empty net with 54.3 seconds remaining before a wild white towel-waving Corel Centre crowd of 18,239.

The towels were on display again at 19:50 as Alfredsson scored Ottawa's second empty-netter.

"I thought it was great to see the fans behind us," Lalime said. "They were pretty loud, especially when we scored that first goal. They were right behind us throughout the whole game."

Lalime made 26 saves in his second career playoff win and shutout; he stopped 33 shots in a 3-0 win in Game 2 as the teams split the first two games in Philadelphia.

He has allowed one goal on 83 shots in the series for a .988 save percentage.

Ruslan Fedotenko's overtime winner in Game 1 is Philadelphia's only goal of the series, and the Flyers have yet to beat Lalime in nine periods of regulation play.

"That's the reason why we're up 2-1," Bonk said. "If they don't score, they can't win. That's unbelievable."

Adam Oates assisted on Fedotenko's goal, and the Flyers have yet to get a point from their other big guns: Roenick, John LeClair, Keith Primeau, Simon Gagne, and Mark Recchi.

"We're frustrated and discouraged, for obvious reasons — we haven't scored a goal in regulation in three games, so there should be some frustration and
