College lowers hours needed to graduate

By Kellie Doyle
The Daily Iowan

UI students expecting to graduate with a degree from the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences as early as December shouldn't be fooled by their degree evaluations, which show they need to complete 124 semester hours.

Now they only need 120. The state of Iowa Board of Regents recently approved the proposal from the college to lower the requirement by four semester hours to save the UI money during a tight budget year. The approval comes after six months of discussion.

The requirement will go into effect starting with December 2002 graduates. It does not change individual major requirements, said Fred Antczak, the associate dean for academic programs in the college.

Information will not be displayed on ISIS until after Aug. 1 because officials didn't want to confuse spring and summer graduates into thinking they didn't need those extra four hours.

Antczak said he thinks students won't be disadvantaged if they are unaware of the change because they will be permitted to drop courses in the fall if they are enrolled in more courses than they need to graduate. Also, academic advisers have been informed of the change and can educate students about when it will be implemented, he said.

Health care in the time of budget cuts

By Chao Xiong
The Daily Iowan

Luigi Sandavol doesn't want to be here, at this clinic that serves needy and uninsured children.

He refuses to use his real name, only agreeing to speak with The Daily Iowan if he was identified as Luigi Sandavol. He is the father of 13-month-old Christian and a first-time visitor to the clinic.

"This is just to help me while I get back on my feet again," said Sandavol, 23. "I used to look [down] at the clinic, and look where I'm at."

Clients such as Sandavol are typical of the clinic's patrons: Hispanic, uninsured, and reliant on public health care. And like that constituency, he's being asked to seek private medical care elsewhere for his child if possible.

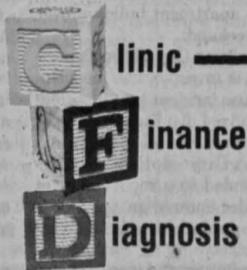

Citing a "change in philosophy," the Johnson County Well Child Clinic for Universal Children is encouraging all of its families to take their children to private doctors for all medical needs. Clinic officials say often Hispanic families can't afford the expenses, forcing their children to end up in the hospital when their health problems go untreated.

"They end up in the emergency room after the fact," said Nadine Fisher, the county's Women, Infants, and Children and Maternal and Child Health manager. "They don't receive routine medical care and they become ill."

As number of children surge, services diminish

Since January, 200 children have been turned away from the clinic, and health officials say no one knows how those who have been left to their own devices are

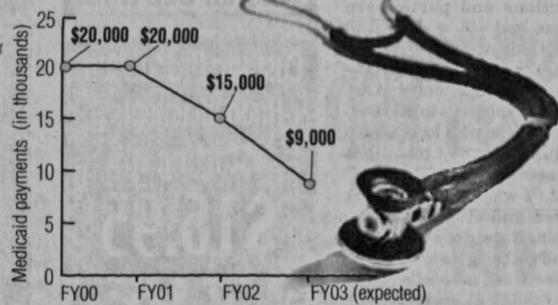

See CLINICS, Page 5A

The Johnson County Well Child Clinic for Universal Children will serve half the number of kids in 2002 as it did in 2001. It receives both state and federal funding, private fees, and donations. County taxpayers make up the difference between the clinic's expenditures and revenues.

The clinic is encouraging children on Medicaid to seek private treatment, meaning it will reap less profits from the government assistance, which pays for needy kids' medical care.

Mideast deal may set stage for peace

By Greg Myre

RAMALLAH, West Bank — Israel said Monday that a breakthrough agreement has set Yasser Arafat free after five months confined to his compound, but the Palestinian leader stayed put for fear Israeli forces would storm the building and seize wanted militants inside.

Still, if the agreement sticks, one of three tense confrontations should be resolved in the coming days.

But a U.N. fact-finding mission to the Jenin refugee camp is stalled. Israel is effectively keeping the team from arriving, saying it fears an anti-Israel bias that will produce a highly critical report on Israel's military operation in the camp. Palestinians called on the United Nations to send the team immediately, claiming Israel is trying to cover up the killings of

UI groups celebrate kilts and corsets

By Choyon Manjrekar

Whether they get their kicks from dressing up in medieval outfits or hitting the golf links, some little-known student groups provide an outlet for just about every whim or fantasy.

A total of 140 small student groups have blossomed at the UI in the last four years. The organizations, considered the lowest priority by UI Student Government, receive less than a thousand dollars a year in funding and their membership is highly specialized.

One group, Society for Creative Anachronism, re-enacts medieval culture with some members dressing in corsets and crowns. Members also participate in activities such as martial arts, crafts, and dances. Members garner awards such as "The Companion of the Torse" and "The

A new meditation on money in Iowa town

By David Pitt

VEDIC CITY, Iowa — If Walt Disney World can make Disney Dollars and Club Med can print its own currency, then this Iowa town founded by practitioners of Transcendental Meditation figured it, too, could make its own money.

The Raam Mudra, as the colorful notes are called, began circulating last month in this city incorporated last year by 125 followers of the Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, the Beatles' guru and founder of the TM movement.

The currency has achieved a little consciousness-raising about Vedic City. But it has not created the wider monetary harmony some had hoped for.

The idea in creating the money was to promote the city — a collection of onion-dome buildings set amid farmland about 100 miles from Des Moines — and its plans for a theme park devoted to world peace and the magic tricks of the late illusionist and TM practitioner Doug Henning.

The currency originally was intended to be used in Vedic City only, but thousands of meditators also live in Fairfield, a town of 8,700 people two miles away, and began to circulate the Raam. Vedic City Mayor Bob Wynne asked businesses throughout Jefferson County to consider using the new currency.

But only Maharishi Univer-

A peaceful, un-foolish merger

By Gian Sachdev
The Daily Iowan

A peaceful fool, arriving in haphazardly piled boxes, is returning to the Pedestrian Mall and moving in with an old acquaintance.

Following a five-month hiatus from clothing and accessories retail, the Peaceful Fool is returning to its roots on 110 E. College St. by as early as this weekend. There, it will become a co-occupant with College Street Oasis, a small convenience store.

While the two businesses will remain separate money-making entities, the atmosphere and merchandise of both stores appeal to the same age groups, said Michael Zeadow, College Street Oasis manager.

"This merger will help because both of these stores attract 15- to 30-year-olds," he said. "People who come in here to buy a pack of cigarettes and a candy bar will soon be able to also buy a dress."

The Peaceful Fool, once a staple of downtown Iowa City shopping, will once again sell original clothing and merchandise, including wool gloves, sun dresses, candles, cards, and incense. Many items will be crafted from earthy materials such as hemp.

Last summer, after nine years in business, the retail store closed its doors on Clinton Street because competition from the Coral Ridge Mall drove profits down, said owner Michael Perez.

"This venture will certainly be interesting," he said. "Michael [Zeadow] and I are long-time friends, and, with this hybrid, we'll be helping each other out."

Perez said he is anxious about the scheduled opening in five days. By Monday, piles of empty clothes racks, a ladder, and a lot of dust were the only indicators the store will exist again by Saturday.

Lisa Perez, co-owner of the store and Michael Perez's wife, said her duties as a mother and manager of One-Twenty-Six Bar and Grill, 126 Washington St., will limit her involvement in the venture.

Scott Morgan/The Daily Iowan

Hangers and miscellaneous racks for the Peaceful Fool sit in the back of College Street Oasis on Monday. The two businesses are merging as early as this weekend.

"I will leave most of this move to Michael, but I will try to help with the store's color coordinating and making the items appealing to customers."

In September 1992, the alternative-clothing and gift store opened as a small Hall Mall business before moving to the 110 E. College St. location in August 1995. Sales increases prompted the husband-and-wife team to relocate the business in April 1999 to 10 S. Clinton St., the space now occupied by The Summit.

STATE BRIEF

Teen charged with terrorism

VILLISCA, Iowa (AP) — A judge on Monday ordered a southwest Iowa teenager, accused of plotting to poison the punch at the Villisca High School prom, to remain in juvenile detention.

Robert David Dumler, 15, of Villisca is charged with terrorism. He was arrested April 26 after reports that he planned to spike the punch at the April 27 dance with a substance that would make people seriously ill or kill them, Police Chief Butch Rulla said.

Rulla said another teen turned over a plastic vial of an unknown liquid that belonged to Dumler. The liquid was being tested.

"He claimed it was just a joke," Rulla said.

Dumler is being held in the Southwest Iowa Juvenile Detention Center in Council Bluffs.

During a detention hearing on Monday, District Associate Judge Kathleen Kilnoski ordered Dumler to remain in custody.

Another court hearing was scheduled for June 18.

"He will receive an evaluation. The matter will be reviewed by at least June 18 but possibly prior to that," said Jayne Wilson, a juvenile court officer.

Students urged to voice their opinions

By Gian Sachdev
The Daily Iowan

Many UI students plan tonight to voice their disapproval of proposed city ordinances that could withhold diplomas for unpaid city fines, require permits for beer kegs and large gatherings, and impose a range of other restrictions aimed at improving neighborhood relations.

The Neighborhood Housing Relations Task Force, an 11-member group made up of area tenants, landlords, and others, will hold a public forum tonight on the 27 proposed solutions released last week. The proposals are the result of months of meetings after city leaders asked the group to take up the issues last fall.

"I think the committee was stacked against students from the beginning," said Mike Carberry, a task-force member who represents students and landlords.

For parties exceeding 30 individuals, the host would have to obtain a free permit from the city. The same process would apply for any party involving a keg of beer, regardless of size. Some task-force members say the permits would allow the city to crack down further on out-of-control parties.

The group also recommends that police issue citations to disorderly houses instead of giving warnings, the banning of indoor furniture from front porches to reduce neighborhood eyesores, and the increasing of police patrols in neighborhoods.

UI Student Government President Nick Herbold urged students to weigh in on the policies at the forum via a mass e-mail sent on Monday. The public forum will be held from 6-8 p.m. at the Civic Center, 410 E. Washington St.

"I'm going because I think a lot of the ordinances unfairly target students," Herbold said. "The student government is going to brainstorm new ways to deal with what [the task force] is trying to get accomplished."

Herbold said he and others will organize at the IMU today, handing out buttons about the forum and giving students the opportunity to write their opinions on a card that will be handed to task-force members tonight. During the UISG campaign, Herbold vowed to protest the ordinances, even staging a demonstration featuring a keg and couch on the Pentacrest.

Task-force members said the forum was created especially to hear this criticism.

"It's a public meeting, a place where everyone can voice their opinions," said task-force member Ann Freerks. "It would be my hope that people begin to look at the whole piece instead of only looking at specific aspects of the piece."

Following today's forum, the task force will meet May 8 to discuss the issues raised and make possible revisions. After that, it will likely submit final recommendations to the Iowa City City Council.

The ordinances aimed at couch restrictions and parties are ridiculous and will be difficult to enforce, Carberry said.

"Tenants and students have not been fairly represented. What [the task force] needs to acknowledge is that there's a lot of people misbehaving in this town that aren't necessarily UI students," he said. "I want students to get involved and step up and do something instead of just bending over and grabbing their ankles."

Area police are investigating similar sexual-abuse incidents

By Anwar Williams
The Daily Iowan

Area law-enforcement officers are investigating two separate claims of sexual abuse that allegedly occurred in the same apartment building over the weekend.

The Iowa City Police Department is investigating one sexual-abuse incident that reportedly occurred in a Dubuque Street apartment Sunday morning. Iowa City police officers responded to a report that an intruder entered an apartment and approached a female who was asleep in bed. The suspect allegedly engaged in sexual contact with the woman while she slept and left after she awoke and verbally confronted him, police records show. The apartment was most likely unlocked, according to police reports.

A "practically identical" incident allegedly occurred in a different apartment in the same building over the weekend, said Sgt. Bill Campbell. Police have less details in that alleged incident, which is still under investigation.

In addition to the weekend's two alleged incidents, a woman reported to UI Public Safety on April 26 that she had been sexually assaulted early on Oct. 7, 2001. The suspect in that case is an acquaintance of the alleged victim, Public Safety records show. That incident, which occurred at Hawkeye Apartments, is not believed to be related to this weekend's incidents.

Even though the incident occurred last semester, it will be investigated just as though it was a recent occurrence, and the victim will be treated likewise," said Chuck Green, the assistant vice president for Public Safety, who also serves as director of the department's Sex Crimes Unit.

No additional details are being made public because the case is under investigation, said Duane Papke, the director of Public Safety. Witnesses have been interviewed in connection with the assault, he said.

Fewer than 10 cases have been reported to Public Safety since the beginning of the 2001-2002 academic year.

It is not uncommon for victims to report sexual assaults long after the incident occurs, said Theresa Klingenberg, director of the Rape Victim Advocacy Program.

"People wait because they are afraid they won't be believed," she said. "It is probably the most humiliating thing that has ever happened to them."

RVAP receives over 1,000 phone calls a year, Klingenberg said, adding that half of the program's services go to assisting UI students.

9/11 security measures loosened

By Melanie Coffee
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Small planes can fly again over the nation's tallest building. Picnics are back along the Mississippi River. But visitors still must pass through metal detectors to reach Liberty Island, home of the Statue of Liberty.

Seven months after the nation tightened security in response to the terrorist attacks, some measures have been quietly dropped, while others have been woven into the fabric of a new, more cautious life in the United States.

Fewer soldiers are stationed at airports and state capitols, but the long lines of travelers, extra metal detectors, and bag searches remain. Parking restrictions have been lifted at some government buildings, but the temporary concrete barriers set up around them after Sept. 11 have been replaced by enormous, permanent planters.

The American public seems to have changed, too. People who initially bristled at the inconvenience and intrusiveness of personal searches now accept them as part of the daily routine as they enter their workplaces.

When Justin Stein, a security guard at the Chicago Mercantile Exchange Center, began searching bags and briefcases last fall, people expressed annoyance and some even left the building in protest.

But as the weeks went on, he said, "they started to acknowledge our efforts, and people started realizing it could easily have been us that were killed."

Across the country, many officials have refined their approaches to security since their initial, all-out response to the attacks.

"We now are moving from that kind of knee-jerk phase," said Daniel Goure, an intelligence and defense expert at the Lexington Institute in Washington. "This is a much more complex or subtle problem than the way we treated everything at first, which was just protect everything and put barriers around everything."

The FBI has eased off issuing "high alerts" for the nation, and it is now giving more specific information. Last week, the FBI warned of possible attacks on targets such as banks, shopping centers, and supermarkets.

At the federal courthouse on Worth Street in New York City, less than a mile from the site of the World Trade Center, federal marshals carrying shotguns no longer stand guard at curbside. But a tent has been installed outside the entrance to provide the first of two security checkpoints.

The Federal Aviation Administration has lifted various flight restrictions over Washington, New York City, and Boston. In Chicago, officials expressed concern earlier this month when the FAA ended the no-fly-zone for small aircraft that had been in place over the downtown area, including the Sears Tower, the nation's tallest building. The officials have not decided whether to ask the FAA to reconsider.

High Court: Seniority policies have seniority

By Anne Gearan
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Companies' seniority policies almost always trump the demands of disabled employees, the Supreme Court ruled Monday in a 5-4 decision that continued the justices' trend of limiting the reach of the landmark Americans With Disabilities Act.

When choice jobs go to those with the most seniority, employers do not have to upend that system to accommodate a disabled worker such as former US Airways baggage handler Robert Barnett, the divided court ruled.

Barnett wanted a mailroom job that did not aggravate his back injury, but employees with more years on the job had dibs on the position. He sued under the ADA, the 1990 law guaranteeing fair treatment for the disabled on the job and elsewhere.

"The statute does not require proof on a case-by-case basis that a seniority system should prevail," Justice Stephen Breyer wrote for the majority. Rather, the assumption is that seniority systems take precedence, the court said.

Anything else could compromise the expectations or job security of all employees covered by a seniority system, Breyer wrote.

"We can find nothing in the statute that suggests Congress intended to undermine seniority systems in this way," the court said.

The court has ruled for employers and against a disabled employee each time it has examined the scope of the ADA in the workplace. Monday's decision is no exception, although the court did not give employers everything they wanted.

The court left a little wiggle

— from the Supreme Court's majority opinion
US Airways v. Barnett

room, ruling that employees covered by seniority systems remain free to try to show that their case is special. The court said it is entirely up to the employee to prove they deserve a break — the employer gets the edge.

The court gave examples of situations where a disabled employee might have a shot at bucking the seniority system, such as an employer's previous history of bending the policy.

"It's not a slam dunk, since they said employees could show there's exceptions to it," said Stephen Bokart, senior vice president and general counsel of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Still, Bokart and lawyers who represent businesses said the ruling helps employers avoid situations where they might be sued by one employee for violating the ADA and by other employees for violating seniority rules on behalf of the disabled worker.

The ruling applies to any workplace with a seniority system, whether the system was devised by management or is the result of a contract with a labor union. Employment law experts gave differing assessments of the ruling's effect, but most agreed that it will have the greatest impact in non-union settings.

Seniority systems that are part of a union contract were already protected from most lawsuits like Barnett's and are governed by federal labor law. Monday's ruling helps make nonunion seniority policies similarly untouchable, lawyers said.

The US Airways policy at issue in this case was company policy, not part of a union contract. The Supreme Court threw out a lower court's decision in favor of Barnett and sent the case back for further review.

The Barnett case made for some unusual alliances among the nine justices. Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, and Justices John Paul Stevens, Sandra Day O'Connor, and Anthony M. Kennedy joined Breyer in the majority.

O'Connor wrote separately to say she would prefer to draw a clearer line making contractual seniority systems off limits to this kind of ADA challenge. She joined the other four because her vote was necessary to decide the case one way or the other, she wrote.

The two most conservative justices, Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas, dissented because they thought the court should take a harder line in favor of employers and seniority systems.

Two of the most liberal justices, David Souter and Ruth Bader Ginsburg, dissented because they felt the court went too far in the other direction.

"It is hard to see the seniority scheme here as any match for Barnett's ADA requests," Souter wrote.

The case is US Airways v. Barnett.

Census estimates are questioned

Associated Press

DES MOINES — State officials question whether the migration from Iowa's rural counties is as high as suggested in estimates released Monday by the U.S. Census Bureau.

The county estimates show that 71 of Iowa's 99 counties lost population between April 2000 and July 2001. Johnson County grew by 226 residents, or 0.2 percent, to a population of 111,230 during that time.

"The migration numbers just don't look right," said Beth Henning, Iowa's state government liaison to the Census Bureau.

The new set of numbers also shows that Iowa was one of only four states to lose population during the 15-month period. The other three were North Dakota, West Virginia, and Louisiana.

Iowa and Louisiana had declines of 0.1 percent, while West Virginia's population loss was 0.4 percent, according to figures. The biggest loser of population was North Dakota at 1.2 percent, the estimates say.

The report showed there were 3,145 fewer people in Iowa in July 2001 than in the April 2000 census figures, which showed the state with 2,926,324 residents.

The discrepancy between the actual census count and the estimates raises serious doubt among census experts.

Willis Goudy, coordinator of Iowa State University's Census Services, said the estimates should always be taken "with a huge grain of salt."

That's because they are devised by using mathematics applied to birth and death numbers in addition to figures provided to the Census Bureau by the Internal Revenue Service.

Using IRS records last year and comparing them to this year is not exact because not everyone immediately files tax forms, Goudy said. Also, changes made in the way the IRS gets the numbers to the Census Bureau could skew the figures.

"The way the data is shared by the agencies leaves the possibility that these figures might not be as accurate as some would like to see," Goudy said.

Demographers agree that many Iowa counties continue to lose population, as they have for decades. But they question the magnitude of the loss.

The report released Monday shows Iowa lost 16,609 people to other states between July 2000 and July 2001, significantly higher than estimates for previous years.

sity of Management, which operates in Fairfield with more than 700 students, and a few businesses run by meditators accept the bills. Local banks, county officials, and other merchants have balked at the prospect.

County supervisors passed a resolution requiring homeowners to pay their property taxes in dollars, just in case anyone got the idea of using Raam.

"We decided that we're not a bank — that the function of exchanging money should be at a bank," said County Supervisor Steve Burgmeier.

The First National Bank in Fairfield initially agreed to exchange Raam for dollars but pulled out after a few weeks. Bank President Steve Cracker said the First National was afraid it could get stuck holding worthless Raam.

Vedic City can legally make its own money, as long as it does not replicate U.S. currency, and people are free to use it. But Secret Service agent Chuck Hull warned: "Anybody that uses it, does it at their own risk."

The Raam Mudra is named for the ancient Indian prince whose image appears on the notes. The colorful bills also feature Sanskrit messages of peace and prosperity, a cow, and a wish-fulfilling tree.

One Raam is worth $10. The one-Raam note is green, the five-Raam note blue, and the 10-Raam bill, worth $100, orange-yellow. The notes are printed in the Netherlands by the company that makes the euro.

TM adherent Mark Welch, who runs the Radio Shack in Fairfield, accepts Raam. So does meditator Mel Sauerbeck, owner of a Fairfield photo studio. TM-connected stores exchange the bills among themselves in the course of business.

And the Vedic City Hall serves as an exchange service for those who want to change dollars to Raam.

Rogers Badgett, Vedic City mayor pro tem, said the colorful bills could prove to be collector's items.

"We're excited about the excitement it's creating," he said. "We've had calls from all across the country from people who want to buy it or see it."

The Maharishi first brought his followers to Iowa in 1974 and caused a stir among the farmers and business owners. The meditators bought the trim red brick campus of bankrupt Parsons College in Fairfield. Within months, hundreds of people were assembling on campus for twice-daily meditation sessions.

Last year, university officials began tearing down original campus buildings — some on the National Register of Historic Places — to make room for new buildings facing east, to improve health and mental well-being.

But the neighbors and the meditators have learned to coexist.

"There are some things we agree to disagree on," Burgmeier said.

Israel: Arafat's confinement is over large numbers of civilians, which Israel strongly denies.

U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan said Monday that it was "very urgent that we go in, find out what happened, and put all the rumors and the accusations behind us."

U.N. officials said the Israeli Cabinet was expected to make a decision today. Israel is seeking changes in the team's composition and mandate.

Meanwhile, at the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem, an Israeli sniper killed a Palestinian militiaman when he walked into a courtyard of the compound, the army said. Talks there were deadlocked Monday on the crisis at the church, where more than 200 Palestinians are holed up inside, many of them armed.

Israel had rejected a Palestinian offer that 30 gunmen in the church be sent to the Gaza Strip, and the Palestinians turned down an Israeli proposal that the men be tried in Israel or exiled abroad.

Late Monday, Palestinian negotiator Imad Natshe said the two sides would meet again today, and Secretary of State Colin Powell said in Washington that he thought the standoff could end soon.

"I think there is a solution," Powell said, providing no details. U.S. and Israeli officials said privately it probably would be based on Israel's proposal to offer the terror suspects holed up in the Church of the Nativity a choice of exile or trial in Israel. "I think it will be resolved in the near future," Powell said.

And in the latest Israeli military incursion, tanks and troops poured into Hebron in search of militants, leaving nine Palestinians dead in the West Bank town of Hebron.

In Ramallah, the crisis at Arafat's headquarters appeared near conclusion, but final details were still being worked out. Israeli tanks and armored personnel carriers remained parked inside Arafat's compound and sealed off city streets for several blocks in every direction.

Israel and the Palestinians both agreed Sunday to a U.S. proposal that restores Arafat's freedom of movement, and in exchange, six wanted men inside the compound will be imprisoned in a Palestinian jail, watched over by U.S. and British officials.

Under the plan, the six would be transferred to the West Bank town of Jericho, said Palestinian Information Minister Yasser Abed Rabbo. The minister said Monday the six would be moved within 48 hours.

A makeshift Palestinian court has convicted four of the men of killing Israeli Cabinet Minister Rehavam Zeevi last October. The fifth man is the leader of the political faction that claimed responsibility for the killing, and the sixth is an Arafat aide suspected of orchestrating a large arms smuggling operation.

Israel and the U.S. State Department both said Arafat was now free to go where he likes, including trips outside the Palestinian territory.

"Today, Arafat can go where he chooses," said Israeli Defense Minister Binyamin Ben-Eliezer. State Department spokesman Richard Boucher issued a similar statement: "He's free to go when and wherever he wants to go."

The Palestinians, however, said Arafat was not actually free and that if he tried to leave before the prisoners were transferred, Israel would seize the six men from the building.

The exact details of how the deal would work were sketchy. However, it appeared the first step would be to move the six wanted men to Jericho. Then, the Israeli troops are expected to withdraw, and finally, the Palestinian leader would emerge from his battered compound.

Israel clamped down on Arafat at the beginning of December 2001, barring him from leaving Ramallah until he handed over those accused of Zeevi's killing. Arafat made a couple brief trips out of his compound and into the city, but worked and slept at his office building.

Israel gave its consent to ending Arafat's confinement with the understanding that the United States, in turn, would stand by Israel's side in an increasingly tense showdown with the United Nations over the fact-finding team, government officials said.

Israel's deputy defense minister, Dalia Rabin-Pelossof, said she believed "some sort of agreement was reached, some sort of deal, according to which Prime Minister Ariel Sharon gave up on his insistence that Arafat be isolated in his headquarters ... and we win U.S. backing concerning our reservations on the issue of the U.N. committee."

Israel has said it fears the team harbors an anti-Israel bias and has effectively kept them from arriving from Switzerland. Israel wants the inquiry to concentrate on the Palestinian terror infrastructure in the Jenin camp and demands that team members have expertise on military issues and anti-terrorism.

Clinic urges private care for its patrons

CLINICS

faring. In all, the number of children treated will be cut in half.

The county scaled back the number of clinics it offers to once instead of twice weekly at the urging of a three year old national and state initiative aimed at asking families to see private doctors instead of public health care. Supporters say the idea will enable physicians to better treat patients because they will be more familiar with their health.

The measure is a collaborative effort among private doctors, including the American Academy of Pediatrics and federal programs such as the Maternal Child and Health Bureau, officials say.

Johnson County joined the effort this year when pressure from the state intensified, Fisher said. That translates to treating approximately 430 instead of 860 children annually.

Officials from the clinic said limiting services such as free immunizations and physical exams will affect a large number of Hispanic children, whose numbers have surged in recent years to comprise about 40 percent of the clinic's clientele.

Roadblocks to care

Sandavol's story is of a lost job and disappearing insurance. Unlike most of the Hispanics who frequent the clinic, he is a native of Iowa City. Yet he knows the struggles faced by his non-native counterparts, including his wife, Diana, who spoke in muted Spanish during their clinic visit.

His mostly Hispanic co-workers at Corrflex Display and Packaging, 2610 Independence Road, are "always talking" about the clinic and are not informed about the recent cut-back in services, Sandavol said. Cultural and language barriers keep many clouded about the situation, he added.

"Among Hispanic people, there are not a lot who go out and make a life without getting assistance from a clinic like this," Sandavol said, adding that his co-workers often worry about medical care for their children and let illnesses go untreated.

Hispanic children aren't the only clients being asked to depart from the 1105 Gilbert Court clinic, but many face additional challenges because of language barriers, financial situation, or illegal status, which leaves them ineligible for insurance or government assistance such as Medicaid.

Current statistics on the number of Hispanic children being treated by the county are hard to come by because the state dropped a requirement to track such trends two years ago, said Judy Grecian, a registered nurse who has overseen the clinic for more than 12 years.

The most recent figures show the clinic treated 103 Hispanics between October 1999 and September 2000. It served 55 in the same time span four years prior.

"It's increasing almost ridiculously," the clinic's clerk, Jan Springer, said of what she calls a weekly phenomenon.

The transition to private care

While the county refers all patients to private practitioners, many are unequipped to serve non-English-speaking patients who sometimes have reservations about the transition.

Spanish-speaking clients are referred to Pediatrics Associates of Iowa City and Coralville, 605 E. Jefferson St. and 25911 Holiday Road, Coralville — the only private practice known to employ on-site translators.

Fisher said some Hispanic families can barely pay for food and housing, much less medical expenses. They're the ones she worries might be "lost between the cracks" — children whose health problems go ignored until they reach the breaking point and are forced into the emergency room. They then become "burdens" to hospitals because their parents are unable to pay the bills, she said.

Local physicians say the struggle to serve the Hispanic community has grown with the population's 93 percent jump in Johnson County in the past 10 years, as reported by the 2000 census. Approximately 3,000 Hispanics reside in the county.

Pediatrics Associates, which serviced three Spanish-speaking families regularly in 1996, now serves more than 50 with the help of three on-staff translators.

The practice has yet to see an influx of clients since the start of the year, but administrator and translator Alex Galindo said it might feel the crunch come summer when most school children get their physical examinations.

"I think that's ridiculous," Galindo said of the county's cutback.

The transition into private care is guided by county staff. They offer to set doctor's appointments, provide free transportation to hospitals, make follow-up phone calls to families, and can legally ask a private physician about patients' records to ensure clients are seeking care.

The county, which began the check-up process this month, does not expect that those turned away earlier this year will require medical care for some months to come. That leaves their fate and the cutback's success a foggy picture for now.

"Quite frankly, we haven't been able to get a hold of a lot of the people," Fisher said of the follow-up process. "It's very difficult to say the people we used to see are doing fine. We just don't know."

'Who's going to pay for these kids?'

Fisher and Grecian maintain the cutback is a change in "philosophy" and not the direct result of a tight budget that has devastated state agencies this year.

The clinic, staffed by volunteer UI doctors and students, hasn't been spared from the shortfall in state revenue. The state legislature eliminated funding for private medical care for uninsured children last year because of the budget crunch, said Jane Borst, Family Services bureau chief for the Iowa Department of Public Health. Ten years ago, that fund contributed about $20,000 to Johnson County's clinic; it provided $6,200 in fiscal year 2001 and $1,800 this fiscal year.

"Who's going to pay for these kids?" Fisher asks.

It's a question few can answer at the moment, but what many say is certain is that Hispanic families without a safety net have virtually nowhere to turn.

"I don't think there's anything else out there" for them, Grecian said.

Sandavol is more optimistic. With a smile, he iterates that his dependence on the clinic is only temporary, a retreat from stormy times. Quivering against his father's chest, Christian is bracing for vaccinations against measles, mumps, rubella, and chicken pox. Two months from now, they will both be here for more vaccinations, accompanied by Diana and the couple's second child who is due any day now.

"Right now, we're on a tight budget. Right now, this second one will be all right," Sandavol said, eyes downcast on Diana's swollen belly.

For the Scottish Highlanders Club, kilt-clad members find their niche through promoting the Scottish arts of bag-piping, drumming, and dancing.

"We practice only once a week because it is really hard to get into our costumes," says Jeff Slauson, a UI senior and quarter-master of the club.

Both groups will perform at Riverfest on Saturday.

Students groups offer opportunities for students interested in water polo, rugby, and even bridge. One of the most successful groups, with 50 members, is the UI Hawkeye Ultimate Frisbee Club. Started in the early '90s, the club practices competitively and wins tournaments against other clubs from Big Ten schools.

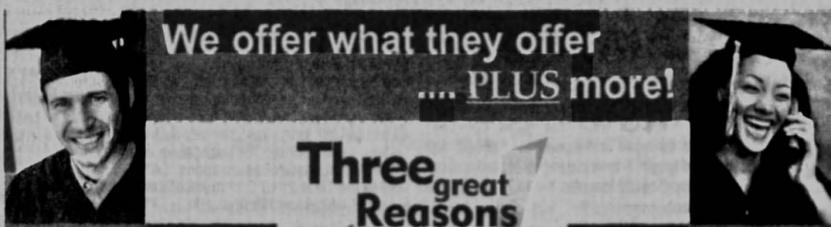

"This is the best way to meet people from diverse backgrounds who share a common interest," said Elijah Edwards, a UI senior and the club's president.

Student groups on campus are classified as priority one, two, or three according to their sizes and funding needs. Priority-one and priority-two groups are groups such as SCOPE, the UI's music-promotion group, and Dance Marathon.

To form a priority-three organization, applicants must obtain an information packet from the Office of Student Life, located in the IMU Room 145. To complete the submission, applicants then propose group goals and a constitution draft. UISG ultimately finalizes their status.

College lowers requirement

SEMESTER HOURS

UI senior Michael Lutes, a communications major, will graduate with exactly 124 semester hours after he completes an additional nine hours this summer.

"It's unfortunate they didn't do it earlier," said Lutes, who could have possibly graduated in May if the change was proposed and enforced sooner.

The UI has the largest semester-hour requirements in the Big Ten, but the deduction will bring it in line with the other universities except Indiana University, which requires 122 completed semester hours for a degree.

UI students within the past five years have graduated with an average of 131 semester hours — 7 more than the required 124. Antczak said this is because students are likely to take a 12-hour, full-time

I expect we're going to have a number of students added to the list to graduate early. We have lots of students who do that already.

Fred Antczak, associate dean for academic programs load in their final semesters to continue to be covered under parents' insurance plans or to retain scholarships, even though they might only need three or four hours to graduate.

The new system, however, will "compress" students and their schedules, Antczak said, so that the final semester could be eliminated altogether, and more students will graduate in four years. Students will also have a better chance of getting the courses they want, he said.

"I expect we're going to have a number of students added to the list to graduate early," he said. "We have lots of student who do that already."

The UI added the four hours in the early 1980s to include physical-education requirements in the general-education program. The requirement — not the additional four semester hours — was dropped in the mid-1990s after students approached officials with concern that the extensive general-education program was hampering their ability to complete their majors and sometimes double-majors within four years.

My time, my choice

Don't get me wrong, I love bowling and going to movies, but, for me, they aren't appealing alternatives to drinking. Both Nick Klenske's guest opinion (DI, April 25) and Wendy Stephenson's letter to the editor (DI, April 26) suggest that Iowa City provides a wide range of other activities, bowling and movies included, waiting to occupy our weekend nights. Yet Klenske and Stephenson are neglecting to see one major point: The problem is not a lack of things to do on a Saturday night. Some of us just like to drink — simple as that. I am in no way advocating drinking, but I do think the fact that some people simply enjoy drinking has been totally ignored.

Those of us enrolled at the UI are not five-year-olds. We have been well informed of the negative side of drinking and are aware that "safe" alternatives exist, but whether or not someone drinks is up to them. For those of us who do enjoy nights out on the town, nuggets of advice such as Stephenson's, "Don't wait until you're 30 or 40 to make up for lost time," don't necessarily apply. Sure, some people may have regrets, but when I climb into my 30s and 40s, I know I won't be looking back at my time spent in college in disgust. I have met so many awesome people, and I have had a great time — to me that isn't "lost" time. Actually, I consider it time well spent.

As for the need to spend time preparing for our entrance into the real world (I know, not MTV's "Real World"), there is a large chunk of students who are already living in it. Full-time school, part-time jobs, car payments, rent due at the first of the month — what's not real about that? All I am trying to say is that all people can decide for themselves how they spend their time, and whether or not drinking will occupy some of that time is a choice we can all make for ourselves.

Boycott Petland

As you may know, Petland is opening a new pet store in Iowa City, in which it plans to sell dogs. The problem I have with this is that many people don't know where these dogs come from. The truth is that these dogs come from puppy mills.

For those of you not familiar with puppy mills, they are basically puppy factories. As early as four to six weeks into their lives, several puppies are packed into a crate with little or no food, water, or ventilation. They are then transported via truck, tractor-trailer, or plane. Many arrive at Petland and other pet stores malnourished or ill, often carrying hidden genetic and behavioral problems, and some never make it at all. These animals are kept in cages that are too small to walk in, and the dogs are treated like machines, not living beings.

Not only does Petland get its dogs from puppy mills, but it is also a big business, which is something a lot of Iowa City residents don't support. I urge you to buy your pet supplies locally and to adopt instead of buying animals in stores. Only when people vow to adopt animals instead of buying them will we see an end to the puppy-mill industry and a reduction in the millions of companion animals tragically killed in our nations' shelters each year. Please join the Petland boycott; with your help as educated consumers, Petland won't be able to help keep this horrible industry up and running, and we can save the small pet stores here in Iowa City from going out of business.

Focus on prevention

Some of our elected officials, as well as the prohibitionists of our community, are using the unfortunate accident at Etc. as a reason to discuss more alcohol regulation. A young adult who was employed by Etc. used extremely poor judgment. What this person perceived as simple fun turned tragic when many people were severely burned.

To use this tragedy as a bully pulpit to expand the crusade against alcohol and suggest that if we had stronger alcohol ordinances, this wouldn't have happened is absurd. What the employee of Etc. engaged in was already illegal according to the Iowa City fire code. Whether the injured parties were 21 or 19 has no bearing on this fact. The person or persons who made this bad decision will be punished, as will the owners of the establishment.

Let's focus on prevention through work-place education to ensure that this doesn't happen again. Let's not make political hay or advance a personal agenda.

Editorial

New ability to collect due taxes should be utilized

Fiscal year 2001 was a hard one, with revenue shortfalls forcing many states to reduce spending in state programs. Iowa was just as vulnerable to the trend, with almost $200 million cut from the state budget.

For the UI, this meant approximately $38 million dollars less to work with than last year. The effects were felt across campus with holding freezes, layoffs, and tuition increases.

Many states made up for the budget deficits by reducing tax enforcement, allowing billions of dollars in taxes to go unpaid.

Lax tax enforcement primarily benefits cheaters with the highest incomes, especially investors in partnerships. Wages are reported by employers and checked by IRS computers against tax returns. Partnership income, known as K-1 income, has never been able to be matched to these returns. Such incomes are incomes like rent, royalties, dividends, capital gains, and foreign partnerships.

If the state of Iowa had some

The state of Iowa stands to gain slightly more than $35 million if tax collectors take advantage of new technologies.

way to make up for this shortfall, rational thought would agree that this action should be taken.

According to IRS officials, many states now have this ability, but are not taking advantage of new data that would help auditors and tax collectors catch wealthy tax cheaters.

Curnutt Consulting, an independent Texas income-tax firm specializing in partnership income, estimated that individuals in Iowa owe approximately $35.4 million to the state government in unpaid partnership taxes from 1996-2000.

Alone, $35 million isn't too important to a state budget of almost $5 billion, but factor it into a state budget shortfall of $200 million, and it generates a significant impact.

Until last year, states had no efficient way to identify those who incorrectly reported all their K-1 income, but last fall, the IRS gave the states detailed computer files on K-1 income, enabling states to now check these types of returns.

Many states, including Iowa, have simply ignored the data or are too swamped with work because of cut backs in tax enforcement. Busy or not, $35 million in unpaid taxes should be important enough for the state of Iowa to pursue to all ends.

When money becomes tight, as it did in fiscal year 2001, people scrape around for ways to make their budgets work. Iowa is no different, as unpopular budget cuts and savings-account withdrawals took place last year.

However, allowing money that is due and is collectable to go unattained is bad management, and the state of Iowa needs to get to work using what tools it has.

I can't put my finger on it, but there's something fishy about that Neighborhood Housing Relations Task Force.

Merrily taking us all to task

So I see that because we would not stop for fascism, fascism kindly stopped for us.

Sounds like death to me, Emily.

Of freedom, anyway. Ask not for whom the bell tolls, John, because it's all done. Stick a fork in it and get on with the barbecue.

Thus the United States toasts liberty in this not-so-new millennium.

In much the same way that Etc. toasts its customers.

The latest assault on freedom comes courtesy of a group of Dudley Do-Rights called the Neighborhood Housing Relations Task Force, though you'd be forgiven if you thought the organization was called the B.F. Skinner Behavior Modification Polizei.

This collection of Puritans Nouveaux, in all its grand wisdom, would like the city to enforce something called peaceful habitation in town.

Now, I'm all for peace, of course, and I'm in favor of habitation, even co-habitation. And I can see that there could be many benefits associated with peaceful habitation and even more in peaceful co-habitation.

Just trust me on this one; I've co-habited quite a bit, and it's way cooler, to use the current vernacular, when it's peaceful.

For one thing, you don't have to sleep on the couch on the porch.

It's the word "enforce" that's the rub.

And the manner in which the task force would prefer the city to enforce all this peace and habitation.

For instance, one brilliant notion the panel came up with is to require people to get a permit from the city in order to buy a keg of beer. (Or, presumably, a keg of wine or a keg of Wild Turkey or a keg of water — though anyone who would buy a keg of Iowa City water probably should undergo a sanity test.)

I'm over 21. If I want to buy a keg of beer, it's nobody's business but mine. That's because it's a perfectly legal transaction, and the powers that be have no right to know that I wish to buy a keg. This isn't East Germany or Stalinist Russia. Not yet, anyway.

What would be next? A permit to buy a bottle of whiskey? A permit to enter a bar? A permit to buy a pouch of tobacco? A permit to buy a computer because the words I write might offend somebody's delicate feelings?

Another thing the Puritans Nouveaux would like to regulate is gatherings of 30 people or more. Yes, the Constitution guarantees the right of assembly, but Puritans tend to ride roughshod over the Constitution when they're trying to legislate behavior.

One thing you have to wonder about this 30-person rule: Does this mean that church congregations must get a permit in order to, well, congregate?

Well, they are a party of people. And it's an absolute guarantee that they'll engage in some mighty loud singing, thus waking up the neighbors who devoutly believe (as I do) that God invented Sunday mornings for sleeping.

I mean, He did rest on the seventh day.

And then there's the matter of newspapers.

Apparently, one of the major problems this city faces is newspapers blowing about in the wind. I must admit, I didn't know. I thought the major problem this city faced was not enough money in the budget to fully fund the social safety net. Silly me.

Yes, the task force would like to regulate the manner in which newspaper boys and girls deliver the goods (and the bads and the uglies).

Talk about micro-managing things. We must haf order here. Zer will be no newspapers blowing in the wind.

No Bob Dylan, either.

And then there's the couch on the porch. Just step back, take a deep breath, and think for a moment.

These people on the task force are allegedly adults, though I admit, it's really hard to say that with a straight face. They're terribly worried about a couch on a porch.

Let's see. Ariel Sharon is engaged in destroying any sort of Palestinian infrastructure, eastern Afghanistan is melting down in warlord warfare, the economy is so-so, President Bush is preparing for a major war in Iraq, and the big problem the Puritans Nouveaux face is people who put couches on their porches instead of doing the American thing and buying cheap-shit plastic lawn furniture.

Many years ago, famed Des Moines Register columnist Donald Kaul wrote, "Pure drivels tends to drive out ordinary drivels."

He was writing about legislative debate, but his words perfectly describe what happens when a bunch of Puritans Nouveaux get together and form a task force.

Because we would not stop for fascism, fascism kindly stopped for us.

Ten years of un-funny

By Frazier Moore
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Let's discuss the "Tonight" show and Jay Leno without mentioning The Other Guy.

True, for more than a decade Jay and The Other Guy have been wed as the polarities of late night. They both were vying for NBC's "Tonight" show chair when Johnny Carson announced his retirement. Then, once the jilted Other Guy cast his lot with CBS, they have clashed weeknights at 10:35 CDT since Aug. 30, 1993.

Thus far it has been a good fight, much better than Leno's seven-year winning streak would suggest.

But let's forget the late-night war for a moment. Let's forget The Other Guy.

Now, as Leno nears a milestone many observers thought he would never reach — he began in wobbly fashion on May 25, 1992, and within a few months even his own network had second thoughts — let's assess his "Tonight" performance in its own right.

That's what NBC will be doing today at 9 p.m. CDT as it throws Jay a 10th anniversary bash. Tom Cruise, Cher, and Steven Tyler are the announced guests. Plus clips and surprises. (Taped Sunday, the show was unavailable for review.)

Bravo for Leno! He beat the odds! And there's no end in sight.

There's just one problem. "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno" is a wretched one-note nightly waste of time.

For the first couple of years, Leno tried mightily to summon the ghost of the departed Carson.

Then, to his credit, he claimed the show as his own and remade it in his own image — flat-out, over-obvious, and so completely lacking edge it might as well have been a safety razor minus the blade.

It was in this incarnation, originating from an intimate club-like setting with a yelping studio audience, that Leno and his "Tonight" show found their stride.

But still the galling question hangs in the air: Why does anybody tune in?

A halo effect from his predecessor's glorious NBC reign? Solid lead-ins from his ratings-robust network? The promotable parade of celebrity guests who gladly arrive knowing Jay will always kiss them up?

Mark J. Terrill/Associated Press

Maybe it's a simple matter of Leno's technical skill and indefatigable hustle. Plus the bedtime reassurance he confers on his viewers, who appreciate his ironclad consistency and apparently demand little else.

For guest and viewer alike, Jay never poses a challenge. He's the eager-beaver working stiff who overcame the challenges thrown in his path (especially the challenge of landing this great gig). Now, good guy to the end, he wants to make things easy for everyone else.

Easy?! Just consider the jokes from his monologue.

A wisecrack about the IRS getting tough on the cellar-dweller Detroit Tigers comes with the punch line: They "can no longer deduct bats and gloves as work-related items."

Then, as his band erupts and the audience howls, Leno hurls supplementary zingers:

"... If you don't use them, you can't deduct them..."

"... If you don't use it, you can't write it off..."

What, is this comedy for slow learners?

At Leno's service is band leader Kevin Eubanks, who has a never-fail chortle that makes Ed McMahon, Carson's chronically guffawing sidekick, seem like a wallflower.

Eubanks is particularly tickled by a Leno staple: his strain of schoolboy humor, which finds Jay returning night after night to topics like a nightclub that caters to plus-size women (when you pick up a girl there, Leno advises, "lift with your legs, not your back"). Or a published report that Sandra Bullock, Julia Roberts, and Meg Ryan all share the same gynecologist, to which Leno clucks, "Med school really paid off for THAT guy, huh?!"

It's Leno all over: big chin ... lowbrow.

Conversation with his guests reliably sinks to a similar level. On a recent appearance, Ben Affleck told of a weekend at a health spa, where he unwittingly submitted to a high-colonic irrigation.

Sure, the 4½-minute account seemed patently phony and, worse, implausible (are we to believe that Affleck is such a naïf?). Doesn't matter. On "Tonight," an enema is always good for a laugh.

And for easy laughs, let's not overlook the recurring Leno features, such as Jay Walking, his man-in-the-street Q-and-A meant to demonstrate how uninformed the public is.

During a recent segment, he asked one woman what product was associated with the slogan, "How about a nice Hawaiian Punch?" Her reply: Kool-Aid.

Trouble is, Leno doesn't lampoon these nitwits as much as embrace them: "They, at heart, are my people," Jay seems to be saying. After 10 years, his identity is clear: He's a star as indiscriminating as his fans.

Come out and say 'awesome'

By Richard Shirk
The Daily Iowan

Ultimate Fakebook is exactly what top-40 radio pop should be in some rock'n'roll utopia, and, if this world existed, every track on the band's new album Open Up and Say Awesome (Initial) would be a hit.

The trio from Manhattan, Kan., is comprised of ax-wielding vocalist Bill McShane, bassist Nick Colby, and drummer Erin Melin. The group will rock the Wheelroom tonight with enough live energy and power-riffed rock to make us forget finals and rock like it was the Budokan in '78.

Open Up and Say Awesome continues in the tradition of the band's 1999's release, This Will Be Laughing Week, which is overflowing with quick pop gems that mix punk energy, emo sensitivity, and pure rawk with a refreshing dose of playful exuberance.

Picked up briefly by Sony, the emo-pop classics on Laughing Week, such as "Downstairs/Arena Rock" and "She Don't Even Know My Name," earned McShane the right to wear his ironic indie-tees and black horn rims with pride. But like the protagonists in UFB's bratty and pouting "I didn't see you at the show, girl" tales, UFB, in the end, was dumped.

Although the band seems unfazed by the change to a smaller label, just the liners of Awesome might have you thinking that crying over girls into a pillow is a full-time occupation. (It takes precisely 13 seconds into track one for love to be mentioned.) Tunes such as "Girl, Here's Another Lie," "Valentines," and the pining ex-boyfriend shtick of "Forever, Forever," would even be depressing if it weren't for McShane's Buddy Holly-by-way-of-Elvis Costello delivery and the punchy and upbeat three chord guitar rock propping it up.

Unlike the stony and pale blood-donor stage presence of similarly pop-minded rockers, Weezer, UFB is a band with a sweat-soaked zeal for playing rock music and a mile-addled van to match (the band played 141 shows in 1999).

Even a particularly brutal ice storm last winter couldn't stop the band from bashing out a set to 29 people at Gabe's (15 of them the members of opening bands) like it was a capacity stadium of screaming fans.

With this arena-sized sound and an album with more pop than the cold drink section of a Kwik-E-Mart, Ultimate Fakebook should be one of the best things to happen to the Wheelroom since the Smoothie Shack opened.

UFB will rock the Wheelroom today at 8 p.m. Tickets are $7.50 and are available at the IMU box office. Guests include M-town punk stalwarts Ef-Seventy and Common Place.

Germany remembers victims of school shooting

By Vanessa Gera
Associated Press

ERFURT, Germany — Classrooms across Germany fell silent Monday to reflect on last week's school massacre that left 17 people dead, and Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder proposed tighter gun-control laws that include raising the legal age for ownership.

In Erfurt, students and teachers from the Johann Gutenberg Gymnasium began the day in front of their school, then headed to the nearby city hall for sessions with counselors and teachers. Younger children clutched their parents' hands and older students embraced tearfully before a sea of flowers cascading from the front steps of the school.

I was there and saw everything — a horrible sight. But I want to stay in this school!

— Denise Hoffman, Gutenberg student

"I was there and saw everything — a horrible sight," said a crying Denise Hoffman, 15. "But I want to stay in this school!"

On April 26, 19-year-old former student Robert Steinhäuser sneaked into the Gutenberg school with a 9 mm pistol, donned black clothes and a mask, and fatally shot 13 teachers, two teenage students, and a policeman before killing himself.

In Berlin, Schroeder called for tightening gun laws, including raising the legal age for owning weapons from 18 to 21 and preventing people from inheriting weapons they are not qualified to carry. Schroeder said he planned to meet state governors this week to discuss the topic.

On Monday at 11:05 a.m., the time Erfurt police received a call from the school janitor saying someone was shooting, Germans in classrooms and public buildings across the country paused in a moment of silence to honor the victims. Citizens of Erfurt huddled under umbrellas as the city came to a virtual halt.

Meanwhile, red-eyed students and pensioners clutching handkerchiefs stood in a driving rain and raw wind outside city hall, waiting to sign condolence books. Nine already have been filled.

A memorial service for the victims will be held Friday in Erfurt, while burials are expected to be private.

Officials said Steinhäuser — a gun-club member licensed to own weapons — was bent on killing teachers out of rage at being expelled a few weeks earlier, a humiliation that denied him a chance at university entrance exams. He was expelled after being accused of forging a doctor's note.

Erfurt Police Chief Rainer Grube said witnesses confirmed that Steinhäuser burst into some classrooms but left if he saw no teachers. The two teenage victims, a 14-year-old girl and a 15-year-old boy, were killed when Steinhäuser fired through a classroom door locked from the inside by terrified students.

Though a former teacher described the suspect as friendly and quiet, investigators painted a darker picture of an expert marksman who liked violent computer games.

Local authorities debated Monday how to handle seniors whose final exams were interrupted by the shooting and other students with two months of classes remaining until the summer break.

Seniors were taking their math finals when the shooting began.

Many Gutenberg seniors said being forced to retake that exam and take the remaining biology, English, and German exams would be psychologically impossible.

"We want to find a solution that will allow the affected seniors to have a fully valid diploma," said Michael Krapp, Thuringia state's top education official.

Authorities said they will decide at the end of this week when classes for grades five through 11 will continue.

Principal Christine Alt said Monday the school itself would reopen in the fall. Authorities are trying to find a building to be used as a school while the Gutenberg Gymnasium is being renovated.

Avalanche pumps Kings

By John Marshall
 Associated Press

DENVER — Patrick Roy made sure the Los Angeles Kings weren't able to rewrite the ending.

Roy stopped 23 shots, and Colorado scored three goals in the second period as the Avalanche beat the Kings 4-0 Monday night in a Game 7 rematch of last year.

Colorado reached the Western Conference semifinals for the fourth straight year and seventh time in eight seasons in Denver. The Avalanche will face San Jose in the second round beginning Wednesday night in Denver.

Roy again proved why he's considered the best big-game goalie in the NHL.

He won his third straight Game 7 and extended his record of playoff shutouts to 21. He stopped 11 shots in the second period, including a hard slap shot from Zigmund Palffy and one from close range by Jason Allison on a power play.

The crowd began chanting "Roy! Roy!" after a save on a power play midway through the third period, and Roy seemed to be soaking it in as he glanced around the arena.

The series was eerily similar to the conference semifinals a year ago.

The Kings rallied from a 3-1 deficit last year before losing handily in Game 7, just as they did this year.

The Avalanche struggled on offense in last year's series before coming alive in Game 7. The team scored three goals in four games before breaking through in the final game this year.

Anna Kournikova is in the news, again.

No, she didn't win her first-ever singles title — she is actually on a five-match losing streak, heading into this weekend's tournament in Bol, Croatia — but her face is plastered everywhere.

Rumors of her love affair with Latin pop-king Enrique Iglesias, her part in a controversial 10-page spread in Penthouse, and her recent withdrawal from tournaments in Hamburg and Berlin all grace the news.

However, her agent, David Schwab, denies that she has ever entered in the said tournaments, won't comment on Iglesias, and swears that the topless spread in Penthouse isn't even Kournikova and says that he plans to file a lawsuit against the magazine.

"The photographs are so dissimilar to Miss Kournikova that anyone who knows her, when they see the photos, will immediately know that the magazine did it on purpose to exploit her and make some additional money," Schwab told cnsi.com.

But that information probably won't stop people from rushing to buy the glossy spread today when it hits the stands. As they shell out the cash they'll be thinking what if, just what if, the pictures are really authentic?

The Russian-born Kournikova has never won a singles tournament championship. This fact is thrust into every article, television news brief, or column written about her. But neither have a lot of other people, we just don't know it. If she wasn't

Toronto scuffle

Raptors push to deciding game 5 without Carter

By Chris Sheridan
 Associated Press

TORONTO — The Toronto Raptors, a team that had every excuse to quit long ago, have pushed the Detroit Pistons to a deciding Game 5.

Avoiding an end to their season for the second time in three days, the Raptors found another way to win without Vince Carter.

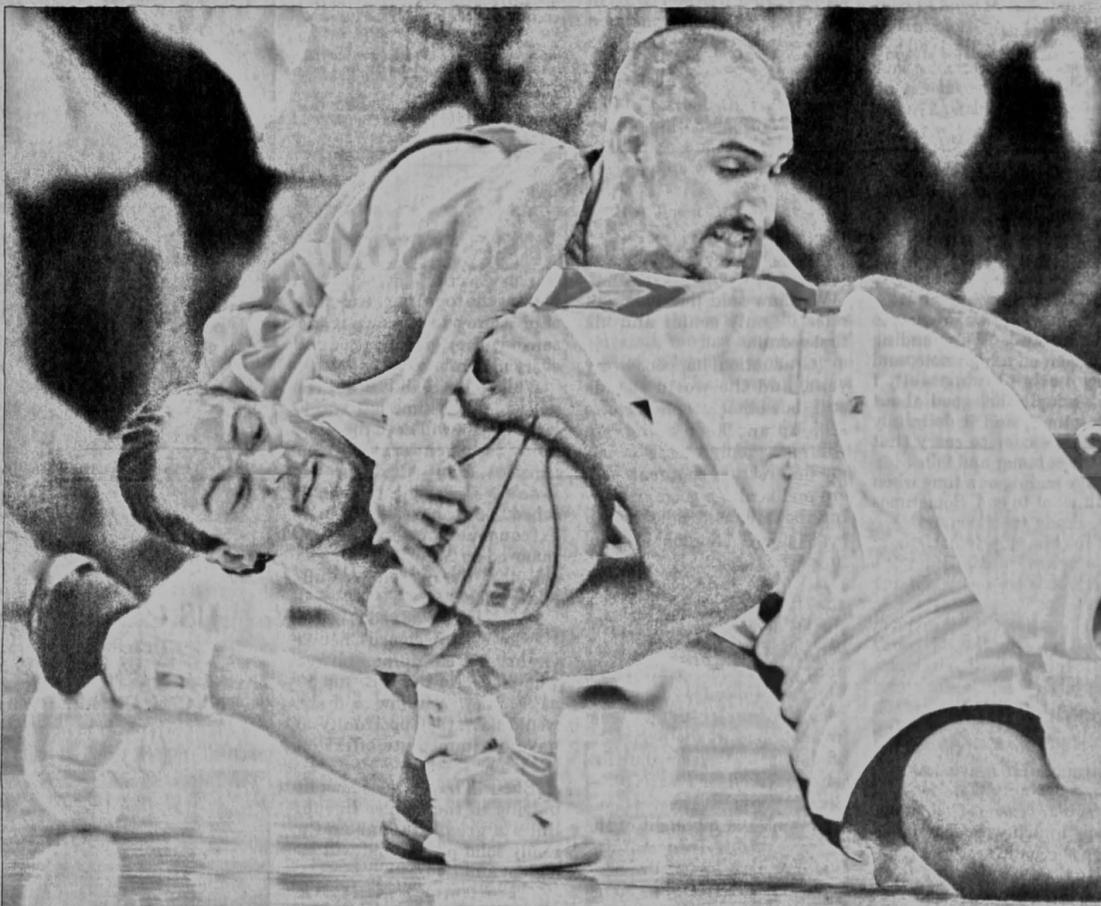

Keon Clark had 19 points and 16 rebounds, and Morris Peterson scored a career play-off-high 20 points as Toronto beat Detroit, 89-83, Monday night in Game 4 of their first-round series.

The Raptors dropped 13-straight games after the All-Star break, lost Carter to season-ending knee surgery, and then fell behind, 2-0, in this best-of-five series. But with April about to turn into May, they've managed to keep going.

"This team has shown a lot of heart. Even when we get down, we never say die. Even when other people give up on us, we keep fighting. That's what it's all about," Raptors forward Jerome Williams said.

The Raptors have shown the Pistons they're no pushovers despite the absence of their best player, and something about win-or-go-home games seems to bring out the best in them. Toronto is 5-1 when facing elimination over the past two seasons.

The Pistons failed to capitalize on Toronto's slow start, struggled for long stretches on offense, and got another sub-par game from Jerry Stackhouse. Now, they must go into an elimination game with a roster that lacks the playoff experience of Toronto's.

"Playoff experience is important, but I don't think it's essential," Pistons coach Rick Carlisle said. "I think our guys have learned a lot in the last four games, and this next game is what basketball is all about — it's a one-game season."

"We've got to play a whale of a game Thursday to beat those guys because they are an excellent team."

The Raptors, winning at home for the 10th-straight time, took the lead for good in the second quarter and held off every Detroit run.

The Pistons found a way to get the ball out of Antonio

Davis' hands after he hurt them so much in Game 3, but the Raptors had plenty of other options. Alvin Williams had 15 points and nine assists. Peterson shot 8-for-12, scoring eight points in the fourth quarter, while Clark had 15 points and 13 rebounds by halftime.

Detroit, meanwhile, looked to reserves Corliss Williamson and Jon Barry for points in the fourth quarter as Stackhouse shot 6-for-18 and scored 15 points.

"It's been a tough trip coming up here. This is a tough series. They definitely took care of their business at home now it's time to go back and hopefully

Is a seven-game NBA playoff series too long?

I can't believe how boring the NBA playoffs so far have been.

This year, the NBA stretched the timetable between games to cater to the almighty television networks. Now, instead of getting the chance to revive bad playoff fortunes, playoff teams are probably wondering what to do with their free time. I can just see Zen Master/Lakers coach Phil Jackson using his free time trying to discern the meaning of life.

The logic behind lengthening the playoffs confounds me. During the 82-game regular season, games are packed in tightly with plenty of back-to-back contests, probably to maintain interest in an already lengthy schedule. But once the postseason hits, the league decides to make like a three-toed sloth, which makes no sense to me.

Take this: Both the Lakers-Trailblazers series and Celtics-76ers series went from Sunday to Tuesday between their first two games. That's too long. A three-day layoff can play plenty of tricks with a team's momentum and psychology — tricks the team didn't have to deal with during the tightly scheduled regular season and don't need to deal with in the playoffs.

On top of the oddities with momentum, fans lose interest. The post-season is easily much more exciting than the regular season, but by drawing it out well into June, the NBA is shooting itself in the foot. When they should try to play on an increased fan base, the league decides to bow to the pockets of television executives. NBC and TNT are forking out the green, so they're the ones who get to call the shots.

Unfortunately, the playoff schedule isn't about the fans, it's about the money. God bless professional sports.

—Tyler Lechtenberg

Granted, the NBA regular season seems longer than a bad Kirstie Alley movie, but come playoff time I have no problems with two months of drama, game-winning shots, and plenty of images of Dirk Nowitzki shooting 3s.

Basically, basketball is the only exciting sport left at this time of the year. Few care about the NHL in these parts; there's plenty of time in the summer and fall to watch baseball. The Drake Relays aren't what they used to be, and it's not quite water-polo season yet. Yes, the Kentucky Derby is a blast, but it only lasts two minutes.

That leaves the NBA with its ton of intriguing match-ups and upstart teams to watch for. While critics say a best-of-five series shouldn't last two weeks, I believe it adds to the drama and intensity between the two teams. The fans of the Celtics and 76ers already don't like each other, and two weeks of hatred only adds to the rivalry.

Television dictates how long series are stretched out, but it also means every game will be shown. Viewers can follow their favorite teams, and fans can normally watch two games every night.

It also allows the fans plenty of time to cherish the playoffs. For instance, Minnesota Timberwolves' fans got a week of playoff excitement even though the team was swept by Dallas. If there were a game every other day, it hardly would have seemed like the Timberwolves were in the post-season.

Cut the regular season but leave the drama of the postseason intact. Those who get bored by it can rent Look Who's Talking Too.

SEASON ROUNDUPS

Neykova highlights successful season

By Roseanna Smith
The Daily Iowan

Even though the Iowa women's tennis team didn't win the conference championship it had dreamed about all season long, coach Paul Wardlaw is satisfied with his team's end result.

The Hawkeyes finished the regular season two weeks ago, posting an 8-12 overall spring season record. At the Big Ten Tournament, the Hawkeyes received a first-round bye, knocking off Illinois in the second round before losing in the semifinal game to three-time conference champion Northwestern. The Wildcats went on to dominate in the tournament, defeating Wisconsin in the final on Sunday.

Wardlaw said even though the Hawkeyes didn't capture the title, his team was playing the best tennis of the season at the right time. NCAA announcements are expected in individual and team selections on Thursday.

"I think where we are now is good," he said. "We're ending the season on a high note, and everyone is playing well. I think people feel good about their games, and it definitely makes it easier to carry that into the summer and fall."

"I like ending at a time when we all want to end. Sometimes we're ready for the summer to kick in, but this is not one of those years, and I think it's mostly because we're playing so well."

During the regular season, Iowa was led by the top court, composed of Toni Neykova, Steffi Hoch, and Cassie Haas. Neykova finished the season ranked with an 8-2 Big Ten record, and she had the chance at the Big Ten Tournament to avenge her only two losses of the regular season. Though her Illinois match was abandoned before she could secure a victory, Neykova did manage to defeat Northwestern's Marine Piriou in straight sets.

Wardlaw said the team will miss its only senior and his first recruit.

"[Graduation] happens every year, and the world stands still, but other people have to step up and keep going. We will miss [Toni] a lot. She was my first recruit, so it marks an era and is also a good measuring tool. We will miss her in both [singles and doubles] and in practice."

Hoch was the Hawkeyes' dark horse playing at No. 2 singles and was the only member out of the team's trio to go unranked through the season. She also ended with an 8-2 record. Haas returned from knee surgery at the beginning of the spring season, but finished ranked and with a 3-4 Big Ten record at No. 3.

"I think the highlight of the team was our front court," Wardlaw said. "Since I've been at Iowa, we've had good teams but never had the firepower we have at the top. There was a lot of pressure on them during the season; they had to produce every match."

While most of the Hawkeyes will enjoy the time off, Wardlaw said two will need the summer to recuperate from injuries. Deni Alexandrova, Iowa's No. 4 singles player, is scheduled to have a fractured extraneous bone in her foot removed on May 23, and Haas will need the rest on her still-ailing knee.

For next season, the Hawkeyes have signed Chelsea Glynn, a Des Moines native who played in the U.S. Top 50 as a junior. Wardlaw said she would have the opportunity to have an immediate effect on the team.

"She will have a good shot at playing in the singles lineup. She's a great student and a really solid person and will be a great addition."

Hawkeyes pass test of Cleveland-free season

By Roseanna Smith
The Daily Iowan

The biggest challenge of the season for the men's tennis team was standing without All-American Tyler Cleveland, one of the most highly acclaimed players in Iowa history.

And while the Hawkeyes were eliminated in the first round of the Big Ten Tournament and finished just short of the .500 mark on the season, coach Steve Houghton considers the season a success.

"The Big Ten Tournament was a disappointment, but that doesn't detract from a really good year," he said. "The unknown this year was moving people up in the lineup after Tyler was gone. Everyone had to play better, and a position higher, but we made a big step forward this year.

"I'd like to do better than to finish 4-6 in the Big Ten (12-9 overall), but the [conference] is so good right now, I feel like to come up with four wins is very good."

In Cleveland's vacancy from the No. 1 singles position, junior Stuart Waters posted a 6-4 conference record and was named to the All-Big Ten team. During the season, Waters was named Big Ten Player of the Week on April 3 after defeating Penn State's No. 68 Jamie Gresh and No. 20 Phil Metz of Ohio State. He also was ranked nationally for the first time in his career at No. 95.

Also taking strides on the team was junior Pete Rose, who posted a career-high 6-4 conference record to rank alongside Waters on the season. Hunter Skogman posted a team-leading 7-2 record and was one of Houghton's most improved players.

"We beat good nationally ranked teams this season, and came close to the top teams because of the improvement Stuart, Skogman, and Rose made. Compared to last year and last fall, we really took a big step and put it all together second semester. I couldn't be more pleased with the effort. They took as much out of the game as they could."

Freshman Justin Gaard will be the only other Iowa player returning to the lineup in the fall, after posting a 3-7 conference record at No. 6 singles. Houghton said Gaard, David Freijd, Matis Jasicek, and Tres Jones will have the opportunity to contribute more to the starting lineup because of the departures of seniors Jake Wilson and Petar Mandic.

"These guys have enough experience this year to be better off next year, but will have to take a big jump forward," Houghton said. "Even the guys returning [in the lineup] presumably will be having to do what they did last year to be successful. It's the same kind of challenge."

SPORTS BRIEFS

UI gymnasts honored

Stone appointed to U.S. National team
DES MOINES — Drake women's basketball coach Lisa Stone said no to Vanderbilt, but yes to USA Basketball.

Stone has been named an assistant coach for the U.S. team that will play in a qualifying tournament for the world championships for young women.

After accepting that post, Stone declined an invitation to interview at Vanderbilt, which is seeking a replacement for coach Jim Foster. Foster left earlier this month to become the coach at Ohio State.

"I was contacted by Vanderbilt, but I said, no, I'm staying at Drake," said Stone, who recently signed a contract extension. "It was very tempting. They were very, very persuasive, but now's not the right time."

Power, Eustachy claim no conspiracy
DES MOINES (AP) — Shane Power and coach Larry Eustachy insist there was nothing behind Power's decision to leave the Iowa State basketball team other than his desire to play somewhere else.

"I just want to say there's nothing sinister, nothing evil behind me or coach Eustachy in this decision," Power said Monday. "There's no conspiracy behind this decision."

Power would not say exactly why he left, however, and declined to comment when asked if a disagreement with Eustachy led to the decision. He also declined to comment when asked if basketball at Iowa State had stopped being fun.

"But he said he was leaving with no ill feelings."

"If there ever was a way to leave a program on a good note, I would say this would be as close to it as possible," Power said in an interview.

BASEBALL ROUNDUP

Suppan, Royals best Tigers

Associated Press

DETROIT — Jeff Suppan pitched a two-hitter and Kansas City broke a scoreless tie on Jeff Weaver's wild pitch in the eighth inning as the Royals beat the Detroit Tigers, 4-0, Monday night.

Suppan (2-3) and Weaver (1-4) were locked in a scoreless duel into the eighth inning.

Carlos Febles singled with one out in the eighth and went to third on Donnie Sadler's double. With a 1-1 count on Michael Tucker, Weaver threw a pitch in the dirt that got past Mike Rivera for a run-scoring wild pitch.

Weaver recovered to strike out Tucker and retire Carlos Beltran on a flyout. Kansas City then added three runs in the ninth on RBI singles by Joe Randa and Febles and a bases-loaded walk to Sadler.

Suppan walked one and struck out three in his third career shutout and 10th complete game. Suppan's previous low-hit game was a three-hitter, accomplished three times. It was his first shutout since beating Detroit, 3-0, on Sept. 27, 2000.

The Royals snapped a three-game losing streak and ended the Tigers' three-game winning streak.

Twins 3, Devil Rays 2

MINNEAPOLIS — Eric Milton rebounded from a rough start last time out with 7 1/3 strong innings and Denny Hocking drove in two runs Monday night, leading the Minnesota Twins to a 3-2 victory over the Tampa Bay Devil Rays.

Taking the first of a four-game series, the Twins momentarily ended their woes against the Devil Rays, who had won 12 of 15 against Minnesota since Aug. 8, 2000. The Twins followed an 8-1 homestand by losing five of six on the road last week — including two defeats in three games at Tampa Bay.

The Devil Rays lost their fourth in a row.

Orioles 5, Red Sox 3

BOSTON — Rodrigo Lopez shut Boston down for five innings, and Geronimo Gil and Melvin Mora homered to lead Baltimore past the Boston Red Sox, 5-3, on Monday night — the Orioles' eighth win in 10 games.

In the first game at Fenway Park since Derek Lowe's no-hitter, Lopez (3-0) allowed just one hit through five innings. A former reliever, like Lowe, Lopez ran into trouble in the sixth when Boston scored two runs on three hits and a walk.

Lopez, making his second start after five relief appearances this year, gave up two runs, four hits, and two walks in all, striking out one in 5 1/3 innings — his longest outing of the year.

Jorge Julio pitched the ninth for his fourth save.

Frank Castillo (1-2) gave up four runs and eight hits in six innings, striking out one.

Lowe held Tampa Bay hitless on April 27 — the first no-hitter at Fenway Park in 37 years. Sunday's game was rained out. On Monday, Lowe was named the AL player of the week.

Reds' Rijo renews success

By Joe Kay
Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Jose Rijo gets the sign, drops his head, twists his body, and goes into the same deliberate motion that he used when he was the 1990 World Series MVP.

Once the ball leaves his right hand, the similarities end.

"He has the same wind-up and the same arm speed, but different velocity," Giants manager Dusty Baker said.

That's not surprising. Five operations since 1995 have carved a prominent 4-inch scar on the side of his right elbow and dramatically affected what he can do with a baseball.

Remarkably, it hasn't changed what he can do with a hitter. Seven years after he was the Reds' best pitcher, Rijo is starting again and getting them out.

He pitched six impressive innings in the rain on April 27, beating San Francisco, 8-4, while getting one ovation after another from an enchanted crowd. He has made two starts in the last week and won both of them with a new repertoire and the same old flair.

"He topped out at 82 mph out there, but it was the same old Rijo," former teammate Reggie Sanders said.

Rijo can no longer throw the hissing fastball or the hard-breaking slider that was one of the best in the game. A few weeks from his 37th birthday, Rijo has to rely on a decent forkball, a fastball that leaves the radar gun bored, and a slider that has lost most of its snarl.

Using his wits, Rijo makes it work.

"He's not as dominant as he was back then, but he sure can pitch," shortstop Barry Larkin said. "It's great to see. He's a classic example of how you don't have to throw 99 mph to get guys out. You just hav' to pitch."

After a layoff so long that he got a Hall of Fame vote, Rijo has done something rare for a power pitcher. He has reinvented himself, getting by on guile and guts instead of a good fastball.

David Kohl/Associated Press

Cincinnati pitcher Jose Rijo acknowledges the crowd at the start of the Reds' game against the San Francisco on April 27 in Cincinnati.

"I'm just throwing strikes right now," Rijo said. "I'm not pitching too much — only when I have to, only when I get in trouble."

The 1.89 ERA underscores how seldom he's been in trouble. In his latest win, Rijo threw only 72 pitches — three-fourths of them for strikes — in six innings.

Most of the pitches were clocked at between 77 mph and 82 mph. His fastball hit 88 mph once.

Rijo makes it work by throwing different pitches at different speeds to the exact spot he wants. He had good control before the elbow went bad; that hasn't changed.

"When you change speeds like that, it's just like having eight pitches," catcher Corky Miller said. "You see those guys that throw 81-83 mph and hit their spots. Those are the toughest guys to hit. A lot of time, hitting 91 mph is way easier than hitting 75 mph."

How long can Rijo get away with it? Until hitters catch on, or the elbow gives out? There's no indication that either is about to happen.

When he returned to the game as a reliever late last season, Rijo put up a 2.12 ERA that was the best in Cincinnati's bullpen. Through four relief appearances and two starts this season, he has fooled 'em again.

"When you've got so many young players, that makes it easier for a veteran guy to out-think them," Rijo said. "You go out there and throw strikes, then you let them chase them. Until they show you they've learned how to hit a pitch, you never do anything else."

Strawberry gets 18 months

By Vickie Chachere
Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — Darryl Strawberry was sentenced to 18 months in prison Monday for violating his probation on a 1999 conviction on drug and solicitation of prostitution charges.

Dressed in an orange jail-issued uniform, the 40-year-old former major-league slugger said his "life is going in the right direction." He had been held at the Hillsborough County Jail since March awaiting sentencing.

"I would just like to get this behind me. I would like to do my 18 months and move on," Strawberry said. "I don't want to have this over my head."

He smiled slightly when retired Judge Ralph Steinberg said he hopes Strawberry will return to baseball one day.

Strawberry's wife, Charisse, was in court. She declined to comment after the sentencing.

Steinberg ordered Strawberry to serve prison time from the original 1999 sentence. Strawberry fought the state's previous attempts to imprison him and was sent to drug treatment instead, but he has violated his probation six times.

The latest violation involved breaking the rules of the drug-treatment center by smoking, having sex with a resident, and trading baseballs for cigarettes.

Again on Monday, Strawberry's lawyer suggested a treatment center. But Judge Florence Foster, who repeatedly opted for treatment instead of prison for Strawberry, is no longer presiding over his case. Steinberg, brought back into service to replace Foster while she is on medical leave, was firmly decided on prison.

Strawberry's lawyer, Darryl Rouson, said he expects his client will serve fewer than 13 months and will get credit for time already spent in jail — nearly two months in 2001 and more than a month this year.

Under Florida law, inmates must serve a minimum of 85 percent of their sentences before they are released.

Rouson wants Strawberry sent to Zephyrhills Correctional Institution near Tampa, which has programs for both drug-addicted and mentally ill inmates. Rouson said the Department of Corrections probably will decide within 10 days where Strawberry will serve his sentence.

Last year, Foster suspended Strawberry's 18-month prison sentence, provided he completed the program at the Ocala-area drug-treatment center.

Prosecutors had urged Foster to send Strawberry to prison after he violated house arrest at another drug-treatment center by escaping and going on a cross-state drug binge. However, Strawberry's lawyer said the eight-time All-Star needed medical care and mental-health services not available in Florida prisons.

Despite the ongoing criticism, Came Home keeps on winning

By Richard Rosenblatt
Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Too small. Won't go the distance. No chance to win the Kentucky Derby.

That's the take on Came Home, the hardworking colt who just keeps winning despite such supposed shortcomings.

"I can't do anything about what people are saying," Came Home's trainer Paco Gonzalez said, probably for the umpteenth time. "He's been doing great. He's done everything he's been asked to. Everything has been perfect so far."

With six wins in seven starts, including the Santa Anita Derby on April 6, Came Home will be one of the favorites for Saturday's $1 million Derby, along with Harlan's Holiday. But the dark-bay son of Gone West still has to prove he can win going long despite bloodlines that say he can't.

"Looking at his speed figures, his performance gets steadily worse with every additional furlong he runs," said Andrew Beyer, handicapper and racing columnist for the Washington Post.

Nonetheless, Came Home is still winning, even as the distance increases. He's 3-for-3 this year, taking the seven-furlong San Vicente by four lengths, the mile San Rafael by three lengths, and the 1 1/8 mile Santa Anita Derby by 2 1/4 lengths.

"He's won every race by daylight," co-owner John Toffan said Monday after watching his colt work five furlongs at Churchill Downs in a sharp 1:00:60 under jockey Chris McCarron.

"First he couldn't run seven furlongs. Then he couldn't run a mile, then he couldn't run a mile and an eighth. Now he can't run a mile and a quarter."

Can he?

"The way he's training, I don't think he's going to stop," Toffan said.

His only loss — in the Breeders' Cup Juvenile in October 2001 — could be a blessing, too.

Since the start of the Breeders' Cup in 1984, no BC Juvenile winner has won the Derby.

At 15.3 hands, Came Home is slightly on the short side, but Gonzalez said the horse looks even smaller because he's so muscular. His mother, Nice Assay, was a sprinter and thus the knock on Came Home's ability to win at longer distances.

"I'm confident he can get the distance," said McCarron, who has been with Came Home since the start.

Gonzalez, among the top California-based trainers, has heard all this before. The 57-year-old trainer had two other Derby starters, Mane Minister in 1991 and Free House in 1997.

"They said the same thing about Free House — couldn't get the distance," Gonzalez said. "He did OK."

Free House was third in the Derby, second by a nose in the Preakness, and third in the Belmont Stakes. Mane Minister was third in each of the '91 Triple Crown races.

use our home court as an advantage to us," Stackhouse said.

It became apparent early that this might not be Detroit's night. The Raptors made their first shot and then missed their next 12, but the Pistons could only go ahead by eight points. Toronto came back and regained the lead before the end of the quarter, then opened the second period with a 9-0 run for a 30-21 lead.

The Pistons went 6:42 between baskets, missing their first five shots of the quarter and committing four turnovers. Clark scored the final five points of the half on a three-point play and a corner jumper to give Toronto a 46-36 lead.

Clark's most unlikely sequence of shots came early in the third quarter when he backed down Ben Wallace, leaned back, and shot a layup with his back to the basket. He followed that with an 18-foot bank shot from the right side for a 52-41 lead.

Clark then leaped out of bounds to save his own missed shot, leading to a 3-pointer from the corner by Peterson. A turnover by Stackhouse led to a breakaway layup by Peterson for a 57-43 lead with 7:44 left in the third.

Detroit steadily worked its deficit down over the remainder of the quarter as Clark sat out the final 7:58 with four fouls, and a 3-pointer by Cliff Robinson made it 63-61 before Toronto closed the quarter with a 5-0 run.

Peterson and Hakeem Olajuwon scored the first baskets of the fourth to make it 70-61, and Stackhouse spent a long stretch on the bench before returning with 4:09 left and Detroit trailing, 76-71.

Barry scored eight-straight points to keep the Pistons within striking range. Stackhouse cut it to 80-78 on a long jumper, but Davis answered with a jumper.

Stackhouse was called for a charge and Williamson missed a shot, and the Pistons were forced to foul after Jerome Williams grabbed an offensive rebound with 55 seconds left.

Alvin Williams made two free throws for an 84-77 lead with 36 seconds left, then two more with 27 remaining for an eight-point lead.

"You can't give up no matter what is said or what the circumstances are. The season's not done until someone wins three games. That'll happen Thursday," Jerome Williams said.

Sex pays, tennis doesn't for Anna

beautiful, we probably wouldn't know her name either but since she is, she continually finds her play lambasted in the media, by people who couldn't return her serve with a 15-foot racket.

I used to be annoyed with the attention paid to Kournikova, but now I almost feel sorry for her. She is a pawn used to up the stakes in the culture of sex and sports.

The 20-year-old tennis player is an oozing example of how the line between sex and sports is continually being blurred. Beautiful women, especially, are used to market their sports using their sex appeal.

For example, Playboy.com holds periodic polls asking which WNBA, PGA, and soccer figures readers wish to see naked, then the winner is asked to do a spread. These women aren't asking to be included; they don't offer themselves up to be judged on sex appeal. Some find the results appalling, while others are flattered, referencing how they are women first and athletes second. In defense of those voting, it may be hard to deny the beauty of these athletes.

It doesn't only happen to women. Men like Derek Jeter, Alex Rodriguez, and Jason Sehorn periodically find themselves listed as sexiest athletes in magazines such as People. Women flock for autographs and plaster on make-up for a trip to the ball park. Their looks are talked about almost as often as their play, but not as much as Kournikova's looks are.

Unfortunately, Kournikova has become more of a model than a serious athlete. Her "mediocrity" is the laughing stock of the tennis circuit, and better players despise her for the marketing opportunities she gets just because she is beautiful. Women like Lindsay Davenport and Jennifer Capriati are overlooked for endorsements because they don't exude sexuality like Kournikova. So even as these women hammer home tournament wins, Kournikova makes bank by modeling jewelry for Omega.

I can't blame Kournikova. I just feel she is used, molded, and fitted into a role that society decides for her, just like her male counterparts. Yes, she goes along with it, rather than denying it, but what choice does she have? If her tennis game continues at its current pace, she's not going to make any money on the court. And, well, being a sexual icon pays.

Thousand wins Big Ten Player of the Week

Iowa sophomore centerfielder Kyle Thousand had a monster week, lifting Iowa to 7 wins in its past 8 games. On Monday, he was rewarded with Big Ten Player of the Week honors from the conference.

Thousand drove in 12 runs this week — more than doubling his season total. The Sioux City native hit his first homer of the season April 23 against Western Illinois. He hit two more homers the next night as Iowa defeated Northern Iowa. His two RBI singles in the bottom of the fifth Sunday ended up winning the game as Iowa downed Michigan State, 4-3.

Thousand leads the Big Ten in triples with 7. He is the second Hawkeyes to win the Big Ten award this season. Andy Jansen won it during the week ending March 18.

Two Grizzlies on NBA All-Rookie team

NEW YORK (AP) — Memphis Grizzlies teammates Pau Gasol and Shane Battier topped the voting for the NBA All-Rookie team on Monday.

They were joined by San Antonio's Tony Parker, Utah's Andrei Kirilenko, and Golden State's Jason Richardson on the squad selected by the NBA's 29 coaches, who weren't allowed to vote for their own players.

Gasol, a Spaniard who last week became the first foreigner to win Rookie of the Year, was a unanimous choice, getting 56 points. Battier received 54, Richardson 53, Parker 48, and Kirilenko 45.

Gasol led the Grizzlies and all rookies in scoring with 17.6 points per game, to go along with averages of 8.9 rebounds, 2.7 assists, 2.1 blocks, and 36.7 minutes. He played in 82 games, starting all but three, for the Grizzlies, who went 23-59.

Battier averaged 14.4 points, 5.4 rebounds, and 2.8 assists.

The second team was Indiana's Jamaal Tinsley, New Jersey's Richard Jefferson, Houston's Eddie Griffin, Detroit's Zeljko Rebraca, Seattle's Vladimir Radmanovic, and Phoenix's Joe Johnson.

A record five foreign players made the rookie teams, which started in 1963. In addition to Gasol, Parker is from France, Kirilenko from Russia, and Radmanovic and Rebraca from Yugoslavia.

Montreal ousts top seed Boston

Associated Press

MONTREAL — The Montreal Canadiens weren't content just to make the playoffs.

Yanic Perreault scored Montreal's second power-play goal of the game 39 seconds into the third period as the Canadiens beat the top-seeded Boston Bruins 2-1 Monday night to win their Eastern Conference quarterfinal series 4-2.

Montreal, which finished eighth in the East to make the playoffs for the first time in four years, moves on to the conference semifinals against third-seeded Carolina, which beat New Jersey in six games.

Jose Theodore stopped 34 shots, including a huge pad save off Glen Murray's backhand on a Boston power play with just over 14 minutes remaining. Theodore also caught a break when Martin Lapointe's shot hit the right post with less than 10 minutes to go.

The soldout Molson Centre crowd of 21,273 cheered throughout the final minutes of the period and erupted into a loud ovation as the final seconds ticked off the clock.

The game-winning goal was Perreault, who assisted on Donald Audette's tying goal in the first, put the Canadiens ahead when put

Hockey's dirty little secret

By Jim Litke

Associated Press

Vicious blindsides hits do not cause concussions.

Glass does.

At least that's what a few hockey analysts were saying the other night. They were watching replays of Toronto's Gary Roberts driving Kenny Jonsson's head into the glass, cracking the New York defenseman's helmet and knocking him out. And the problem they spotted wasn't Roberts, or his blatant attempt to face-plant Jonsson, or the run-up Roberts took from the blue line to make sure he had a head of steam going.

No. It was the seamless glass being used to enclose the NHL's newer rinks.

It is, the analysts said, too hard, too unforgiving.

Now you know why hockey, grand game that it is, seems doomed to remain a cult sport. Every time the discussion turns to the violence in the game, logic takes a beating. Enough of the players and some number of fans argue that some thuggery and fighting is necessary to keep more from breaking out. Even by that tortured thinking, the apologists had to admit last week was a bad one for the league.

Besides Jonsson, the Islanders lost captain Michael Peca to a torn anterior cruciate ligament because of a low-bridge hit from Darcy Tucker at the end of a long shift, well after Peca had unloaded the puck. In the Boston-Montreal series, Kyle McLaren leveled the Canadiens' Richard Zednik with a carefully calibrated swing of the elbow, causing a broken nose, a severe concussion, and a cut under the eye.

You wonder what NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue would do if he walked into his office Monday after a round of playoff games and found reports detailing three separate instances of frontier justice on his desk.

Here's what NHL commissioner Gary Bettman and his enforcers did: In the case of Roberts and Tucker, essentially nothing. Roberts was assessed a five-minute penalty at the time of the hit, and Tucker didn't get even that. In McLaren's case, a hearing by discipline chief Colin Campbell got him suspended for the remainder of the series.

Three down, 12 to go for L.A.

By John Nadel

LOS ANGELES — The Los Angeles Lakers figure they'll find a way to win.

That confidence has helped them accomplish an unprecedented feat in sports — 19 wins in 20 playoff games.

The Lakers' latest victory was perhaps the most improbable of the run that started with a 116-111 win over Indiana in the clinching Game 6 of the 2000 NBA Finals. It continued with a 15-1 postseason last spring and the 3-0 beginning to these playoffs.

And it came after they showed why many believe they're more vulnerable this time around as they shoot for their third-straight championship.

Vulnerable? Perhaps. Battle-tested and clutch? No doubt.

And that's how the Lakers became the first baseball, football, basketball, or hockey team ever to go 19-1 in a span of 20 postseason games.

"It took the pressure of the game-ending situation for them to step it up and play the way they should play," coach Phil Jackson said following Sunday's 92-91 victory over the Portland Trail Blazers, giving the Lakers a first-round sweep and a week off before they face San Antonio or Seattle in the second round.

Shane Young/Associated Press

Los Angeles Lakers' Kobe Bryant celebrates their 92-91 win for their first-round playoff series victory over the Portland Trail Blazers on Sunday in Portland, Ore.

After the Blazers took an 89-84 lead on Rasheed Wallace's rebound basket with 39 seconds remaining that left their bench delirious with joy, the Lakers systematically put Portland away with a game-finishing 8-2 run capped by Robert Horry's 3-pointer with 2.1 seconds left.

Horry, a member of four championship teams in his career, has played that act before, making a game-winning 3-pointer at Philadelphia in Game 3 of the NBA Finals last year along with several other clutch shots in the postseason.

He got the open shot this time compliments of a Kobe Bryant pass — a play Bryant hasn't always been willing or able to make.

"Last year Kobe wouldn't have made that pass," Horry said. "He believed in himself more than his team. But all this year, he's changed."

Bryant, who flicked the ball to a wide-open Horry in the right corner after being double-teamed as he dribbled toward the basket.

Horry's shot was clean. And after a Portland turnover, it was game over.

"This shows his maturity; it's been like this all year," veteran Lakers guard Brian Shaw said of Bryant. "He doesn't force things anymore. He trusts us now."

Actually, everything changed for Bryant before last year's playoffs, when he sat out nine games and most of a 10th because of a sprained ankle. That was on the heels of his well-publicized feud with Shaquille O'Neal — now just a distant memory.

When Bryant returned with four games left in the regular season, it was apparent he learned during his absence that he could benefit himself and his team more by reading the defense, not just always trying to make the winning play by himself.

When he was finally allowed inside, he found alcohol and marijuana.

"The marijuana was in a couple of places," said Tina Jauz, a Midland police spokeswoman.

A 20-year-old woman also was arrested on possession charges and a minor in possession of alcohol. Her name and further details were not immediately available.

French judge faces accusers in skating scandal hearing

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — The French judge at the center of the Olympic figure skating scandal faced her accusers Monday at a tension-filled hearing she called unfair and a "massacre."

The judge, Marie-Reine Le Gougne, and French federation chief Didier Gailhaguet say the International Skating Union has stacked the case against them to justify awarding duplicate gold medals at the Winter Games.

Le Gougne and Gailhaguet appeared before the ISU council on the first day of a two-day hearing to answer charges they manipulated the results of the pairs event to make sure the Russians won.

"It was very intense," said Max Miller, one of Le Gougne's American attorneys, in summing up the day's atmosphere inside a spacious hotel conference room with a view of Lake Geneva and the Alps.

Le Gougne and Gailhaguet appeared separately at a 3½-hour morning session to state their defense and answer questions from ISU investigators.

During a 5½-hour afternoon meeting, both were in the room as the council heard from eight witnesses, most of whom have made allegations against the French pair.

ISU president Ottavio Cinquanta, flanked by chief investigators Gerhard Bubnik and Gerhard Zimmerman, sat on one side of the room; Le Gougne, Gailhaguet, their lawyers, and the witnesses sat across from them.

Texas running back arrested on drug charges

MIDLAND, Texas (AP) — Texas running back Cedric Benson, the Big 12 freshman of the year last season, was arrested on misdemeanor drug and alcohol-possession charges over the weekend, police said.

Benson was charged with possession of marijuana and drug paraphernalia and being a minor in possession of alcohol at a Midland apartment about 2 a.m. on April 27 when police responded to a call about loud music.

Benson, 19, was taken to the Midland County Central Detention Center and was released after posting $1,365.

"We weren't targeting him or anything," Midland Police Sgt. Dale Seago told the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

"Nobody really knew who was who," until Benson was booked, he said.

Initially, the people inside resisted letting Officer Jeff Handley into the apartment.

horoscopes

Tuesday, April 30, 2002 by Eugenia Last

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You will be quick to respond to others today and should be able to accomplish whatever you start out to do. You will learn quickly and adjust to whatever changes are necessary.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You may not understand what is happening with regard to a legal or financial matter that is unfolding. Don't be afraid to ask questions. It's better to discover all you can firsthand.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21): Someone you care about may be going through a difficult time. If you are sensitive to everyone else's needs you will get the same sympathy in return.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You should be able to offer some great solutions to existing problems. You will be in the limelight even if you don't want to be. Relax, and enjoy the notoriety.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Sign up for interesting events that will allow you to show off your talent. You will handle any competition you face with ease, and your hard work and dedication will pay off.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't let someone you live with or know well get the better of you. Focus on what you know and what you do best. Offer to help an organization you believe in.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): This is your day to interact with friends and to make your point known. You will have the keen sense to take charge. Your ability to get things done will bring you great results.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Put your time and effort into your future. Money can be made, but risks must be avoided. Your forceful manner will be enticing to potential partners.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your high energy must be well distributed today. Take a step back and look at your situation. Nothing is as bad as it appears.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You may want to get involved in some secret activity today. Be careful not to reveal too much about yourself just yet. Listen and evaluate the situation first.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your humanitarian outlook will win you praise. Your strong convictions will lead you into interesting group encounters. Your creative sense and timing will help you accomplish what you set out to do.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Someone may be trying to make you look bad at work. If you feel betrayed, say something even if it means losing a friend.
