Mandated move upsets KRUI

By Vess Mitev
The Daily Iowan

KRUI officials say they will have to make do with a "disappointing surprise" and move the student-run radio station into a new home on Melrose Avenue after having been led to believe the station would be relocated elsewhere.

The station will move from 129 Grand Avenue Court to a two-story, wood-frame house at 605 Melrose Ave., said station general manager Jennifer Guyan. KRUI officials got the news Wednesday night during a meeting with Phillip Jones, the UI vice president for Student Services.

"I'm pretty disappointed," Guyan said, adding that the house on Melrose had not been discussed in detail as a possible relocation site.

University officials said the move is necessary because the current house is old, poorly equipped, and too expensive to maintain. Construction on a new athletics learning center is scheduled to begin at the site in July or August.

KRUI officials were hopeful the station would be relocated to an abandoned building at the intersection of Madison and Burlington streets. Several other locations were also considered.

"I was told we had no choice but to go there," Guyan said about the house on Melrose. "If we wanted another location, we would have to buy it ourselves... and we don't have the resources."

The new home is a temporary location, Jones said, who admitted

Bethlehem standoff finally ends

By Ibrahim Hazboun
Associated Press

BETHLEHEM, West Bank — Suspected Palestinian militants wanted by Israel began leaving the Church of the Nativity shortly after daybreak today, marking the end of a 5½-week standoff over the traditional birthplace of Jesus.

Under the deal, the first people emerging were 13 gunmen to be deported to Cyprus and then to European countries, officials said. They were to be followed by 26 who are to be taken to Gaza and about 85 civilians, who are to be freed.

The first person to leave the church was Abdullah Daoud, the head of Palestinian intelligence in Bethlehem, one of the 13 who are to be deported. He emerged just before 7 a.m. (11 p.m. Thursday CDT).

He was stopped several times at an Israeli metal detector and had to take off his jacket before being cleared through.

Wearing a black and white checked Arab scarf around his neck and accompanied by two priests, he approached two Israeli soldiers, who talked to him briefly before directing him to a red and white Israeli bus.

The second man coming out was identified as Khaled Abu Nijme, also on the list of deportees.

The crisis began April 2, when more than 200 people fled into the church, one of Christianity's holiest shrines, ahead of Israeli troops invading the biblical town. At first, Israel insisted that the gunmen among them must surrender, but it dropped that demand when the Palestinians agreed that 13 of the senior militants would be deported and others sent to Gaza.

Arduous negotiations and several near-deals characterized the effort to defuse the standoff until a breakthrough came Thursday with a complex deal to scatter the 13 Palestinian militants among several countries.

The arrangement reached with European negotiators clears the way for Israeli forces to withdraw from the last West Bank city they occupy, it but does not spell an end to Palestinian-Israeli bloodshed. Even as the evacuation took place Friday morning, Israeli tanks stood poised outside the Gaza Strip, in a run-up to an expected retaliatory attack for a suicide bombing that killed 15 Israelis.

Israel's siege over Christ's reputed birthplace was one of the focal points of its West Bank invasion, and ending it became an international cliffhanger of on-again, off-again breakthroughs.

On Thursday, a senior Palestinian official confirmed a new deal had been reached.

With Israel linking the 13 men to terrorism, finding a country willing to take them has been a major obstacle to ending the siege at one of the holiest sites in the Christian world.

Shortfalls leave gaps in smiles

By Lauren Smiley
The Daily Iowan

State budget shortfalls are leaving a gap in the smiles of adult patients who can't pay for teeth-saving procedures such as root canals or gum surgeries because they have been cut out of Medicaid funding.

Instead of receiving a root canal, the procedure that removes infected nerve tissue, those dentists will pull teeth — a cheaper procedure — but one that leaves patients with the social stigma, dentists said.

"If you have a toothache you have two choices — you pull the tooth, or you remove the nerve tissue which allows you to keep the tooth," said dentist David Hansen, 1039 Arthur St. "[Low-income residents] will end up losing their teeth. They're not going to have any easier of a time getting a job if they are running around with front teeth missing."

On May 12, Vilsack will either sign or veto a state budget bill that would add coverage for front-teeth root canals. State dental coverage was cut on March 1 to make up for budget shortfalls.

The decreased coverage will save more than $700,000 in the remainder of this fiscal year, and $2.2 million for next fiscal year if it is continued.

Many local dentists said they refuse to see Medicaid patients because of low Medicaid reimbursements, but most said the funding shortfall for dental coverage limits patients' options.

"I think everyone is willing to pitch in for charity and basically work for free, but a large percentage of your practice cannot be made up of [Medicaid] patients, or you can't pay the bills," Hansen said.

The Medicaid budget amendment was designed to repair the financial short-sightedness of the current bill, which is the first Medicaid coverage cut in Iowa history, said Robert Harpster, the director of the Iowa Dental Association.

Creating a fake tooth is more expensive than the root canal, which will end up placing a greater strain on the Medicaid budget in the long run, he said.

Department of Human Services officials will likely urge the governor to veto the

Time running out for law graduate in plagiarism case

By Anwar Williams
The Daily Iowan

Time is running out for a 2001 graduate of the UI law school to appeal accusations of plagiarism that could cost him his degree and possibly his law license.

Sung J. Lim, now a Michigan lawyer, copied sections of three papers, one of which was printed in the UI's Journal of Corporation Law, according to the Panel for Academic Misconduct at the College of Law. The committee handed down its proposed sanctions on April 26, among them recommending taking away his degree and giving him a failing grade.

He has until May 26 to appeal the sanctions to the state Board of Regents.

Observers said it was an extraordinarily rare case that has sparked talk of implementing an honor code for law students.

"We have never dealt with a case like this in the 29 years I have been here," said Robert Barak, the regents' deputy executive director. "It can be expected that we will take it very seriously should he make an appeal."

Lim practices law at the firm Dickson Wright in Lansing, Mich. Representatives of the firm on Wednesday declined to put a reporter in touch with Lim. UI officials did not release specifically what they accused Lim of plagiarizing.

Such cases show that an honor code is needed for law students, who can be under tremendous pressure to succeed in a competitive environment, some said.

A group of students who work on the Iowa Law Review, one of the UI's four law journals, have been interested in an honor code since last fall, said Kary Klismet, a law student and former editor of the journal.

"We have not taken any formal action to the administration, but we hope other students will recognize the need for pushing it," he said.

An honor code would command students who know of others cheating to report the incident or face severe punishment. Several schools, including Duke, Emory, and the University of North Carolina, have adopted such a code.

"If ever there is one needed, it is in this field," said Evan Seamone, the editor of the Iowa Law Review, who predicted that a code would prevent some incidents of plagiarism in the future.

Seamone said he supports tough action against those who cheat by the UI College of Law, including Lim's case.

"The real problem is this can affect justice for all society if this is not stopped in the law school," Seamone said. "It started here, and it must stop here, or else there will be an incentive to others that this is OK."

Currently, the school has an academic-misconduct policy that governs such matters, said Linda McGuire, the law

UI Associate Professors Teresa Mangum and Corey Creekmur prepare pumpkin bread for the Faculty Senate bake sale Saturday in Hubbard Park.

Faculty sale will come fully baked

By Tony Robinson
The Daily Iowan

UI Associate Professors Teresa Mangum and Corey Creekmur say they have too much to do, but the husband-and-wife team won't let that get in the way of a late-night baking session to help combat millions of dollars in budget cuts.

With tin sifter at hand, the duo spent Thursday night preparing pumpkin bread into the midnight hour for a bake sale predicted to draw hundreds of faculty participants, who have set a goal of raising $40 million. Mangum and Creekmur will don aprons at the event in Hubbard Park Saturday morning instead of correcting papers and catching up on schoolwork. The event is a Faculty Senate-initiated bake sale aimed at alleviating UI budget woes.

"We know it might only be a drop in the bucket, but it's a symbolic gesture that the faculty cares about the quality of higher education and is doing something about it," Mangum said.

High-speed crash damages complex

By Vess Mitev
The Daily Iowan

Anxious onlookers crowded around an Iowa City apartment complex after a man driving at high speed crashed through a brick wall and into a laundry area Thursday evening.

The male motorist drove his Oldsmobile onto the sidewalk, up a grassy knoll, through a 5-foot-high brick wall, and into the offices and laundry of the Cedar Wood Apartment complex, 2110 Broadway, causing an estimated $30,000 to $35,000 damage to the building, police said.

Eyewitnesses said that the vehicle was moving approximately 80 to 90 mph when the forest-green sedan rammed through the building about 5:50 p.m. The building was empty at the time, police said.

Iowa City resident Oy Haskins, who was visiting a friend in the complex, said he saw the driver make a deliberate attempt to aim for the small brick building.

"I saw the car go through the stop sign and through the laundry," Haskins said. "He made no effort to stop."

"I am humiliated and embarrassed," said the unidentified motorist as he nervously lit a cigarette. He refused to comment on his motive, saying he didn't feel comfortable talking to the press. He repeatedly said he was sorry for what he had done.

A field test showed the driver was sober at the time, meaning he won't face OWI charges, police said. He is liable for civil penalties and could see jail time if charged, police said.

The motorist, who sustained injuries to his head and neck, including lacerations and a swollen eye, said his brakes stopped working. Police had not issued a report on the incident as of press deadline.

"I saw him coming, going real fast, then bam, he slammed into the side of the building over there," said Shante Jones, who lives down the street.

Jones was outside when he said he heard tires squealing, followed by a "sick" crash as the Oldsmobile slammed into the side of the building.

The Iowa City Fire Department shut off water and electricity to the complex after the incident.

"There was nothing unusual about this, except for the car parked inside the building," said police Lt. Tom Lacina.

The driver refused to be transported to the hospital, Lacina said. No other injuries were reported. The vehicle was totaled, but the estimated damage is unknown police said.

New charges for DeWitts

Coralville police on Thursday added new felony charges for each member of the DeWitt family, a day after defense attorneys discussed plea-bargain arrangements for three of their clients in a Johnson County court.

Mark, Ruby, Timothy, Robert Jr., Esther, and Robert Sr. DeWitt, who have been indicted in a $100,000 multi-state forgery ring, now face criminal-conduct charges accusing them of using the Ramada Inn, 1895 27th Ave. in Coralville, as a base for out-of-state operations.

Court records show the family allegedly traveled from Coralville to Kmart stores in Nebraska and Minnesota, using false or forged checks to purchase items later returned to other stores for cash.

The DeWitts have pleaded not guilty to all charges.

Richmond said John Eighmey, the head of the Greenlee School of Journalism and Mass Communication, and Joel Geske, the associate chairman, allowed a contentious atmosphere to exist that led to racial tension.

Eighmey and Geske were removed from administrative duties May 3. They remain on the faculty and could be reinstated, Richmond said.

Telephone messages left with Eighmey and Geske were not returned Wednesday and Thursday.

Richmond learned last week from Eighmey that Linus Abraham, Osei Appiah, and Spiro Kiouisis were leaving. In conversations with the three, they reported that a senior faculty member had made racial remarks.

Out with the paper, in with the e-mail

By Choyon Manjrekar
The Daily Iowan

In a move to boost e-mail use on campus, UI President Mary Sue Coleman will, by next week, start communicating all important policy and emergency messages through e-mail instead of through paper memos.

The initiative is part of an Information Technology Services project that would make it mandatory for faculty, staff, and students to have an e-mail address registered with the university in an effort to smooth out campus communication. The system will eventually do away with mailing of paper memos over time, and it is projected to cut a large amount of expenses by way of saved mailing and paper costs.

Dubbed the "Electronic communication project," the system was conceived at the beginning of the last fall, when Coleman gave David Dobbins, the assistant vice president for ITS, the task of assigning an e-mail address to everyone at the UI.

The primary aim of this project is to ensure e-mail use among faculty members and staff, said Les Neu, an ITS program associate. Savings were not meant to be the final goal of the project, he said. No official figures are out yet for the project.

"The system did not require any extra cost to be set up," said Neu, who headed the 30-member ITS team that was responsible for setting up the system. "We just improvised on existing facilities."

A Hawk ID, which enables users access to the Internet among other services, will not be required for UI employees to check e-mail.

Included in the project will be a new directory setup that will ensure that every staff member has an address registered, Dobbins said. Special workstations that can be used to check e-mail without the Hawk ID will be installed in all Instructional Technology Centers. At present, there are 25 machines of this type, and more will be placed around campus at such places as the IMU, the Papajohn Business Building, and the Dental Science Building.

The new system was seen as viable because e-mail is one of the most popular communication tools on campus, Neu said. The messages are easy to distribute to a mass number of recipients, and with numerous ITCs available on campus, communication is guaranteed, he said.

It is up to the individual departments within the respective colleges to encourage employees to frequently check their e-mail, Dobbins said.

To help the employees adjust to the new system, workstations close to employees' places of work will also be set up, Dobbins said. The Admissions Office will participate in the effort by encouraging students to register their e-mail addresses by putting information cards into their admission packs.

Local courthouse workers renew plea for security

By Jessica Brady
The Daily Iowan

Nearly 20 Johnson County courthouse employees attended a Board of Supervisors public hearing Thursday to once again request funding for full-time security at the courthouse.

The board decided to delay the bidding processes for stair repair, estimated to cost $75,000, following public outcry over prioritizing construction over security. Courthouse employees told supervisors about almost monthly courthouse violence that puts them in danger.

On April 25, Assistant County Attorney Iris Frost presented the board with a petition signed by more than 100 people requesting courthouse security. Since then, supervisors have discussed budget alternatives in order to afford both repairs and security.

"We can live with the steps," Frost said at Thursday's meeting. "But we cannot live without security."

Leroy Nida, a court clerk, described several instances of violence that have occurred in the courthouse — all without the presence of security officers to handle the situation. Those times, he was the one who had to act as a guard, he said.

A former correctional officer, Nida said there is a security issue at the courthouse on a daily basis, with a physical altercation occurring almost monthly.

"If anyone gets hurt because of a lack of security, this board will be looking at a major lawsuit that will cost much more than a security officer," said Nida, whose primary responsibility is scheduling cases.

He also pointed out that because of budget cuts, there are now two clerks instead of five. Because of the limited staff, he said he's often too busy scheduling to be an attentive security figure.

"What we have are many acute crisis situations that accumulate in the courthouse," Assistant County Attorney Jo McCarty said. "People become unpredictable in stressful situations."

Nida said the steps are worn, but the entire courthouse has aged and requires renovation.

"Doesn't the board think we've outlived our time at the courthouse?" he said.

Linn, Scott, and Polk counties all have a full-time security staff, Nida said. Johnson County's lack of security is because it is smaller.

Helder wanted to create a smile of bombs

By Scott Sonner
Associated Press

RENO, Nev. — The 21-year-old college art student accused of putting pipe bombs in mailboxes in five states told authorities he was trying to make a "smiley face" pattern on the map, a sheriff said Thursday.

The first 16 bombs were arranged in two circles, one in Illinois and Iowa and the other in Nebraska. On a map, the circles could resemble the eyes of the popular 1970s happiness symbol. The final two bombs, found in Colorado and Texas, form an arc that could be the beginning of a smile.

"There was a comment made to one of my officers about his hope to make a smiley face when he was all finished," Pershing County Sheriff Ron Skinner said.

Skinner said Luke Helder made the comments to an undercover county officer shortly after his arrest outside Reno on Tuesday.

"His demeanor was very jovial. He didn't seem to be taking anything seriously at the time," the sheriff said.

An FBI official would not comment on the sheriff's report.

Meanwhile, Helder's parents, Cameron and Pamela Helder, met with their son at the county jail in Reno for a half-hour. They were separated by glass and spoke by telephone.

"We are here to see our son in his hour of need," Cameron Helder told reporters afterward. "We told him we love him. I feel a lot better after speaking to him."

Helder faces federal charges in Illinois, Nebraska, and Iowa, where he will be taken today for an initial court appearance. U.S. Magistrate Robert McQuaid Jr. denied a request Wednesday to release Helder to the custody of his parents.

"It's apparent to me that he suffers from some apparent mental health problems," McQuaid said.

If convicted, Helder could be sent to prison for life. Cameron Helder said he expects the legal proceedings to be a long process.

"It's already been very hard on us," he said. "Our heart goes out to the families of the victims."

The FBI said Helder placed 18 pipe bombs in mailboxes in Iowa, Illinois, Nebraska, Colorado, and Texas, along with anti-government notes. Six of the bombs exploded May 3, injuring four letter carriers and two residents.

The eight bombs in Iowa and

Andy Barron/Associated Press

Cameron Helder gives a statement to reporters Thursday after he and his wife, Pamela, visited their son, Lucas John Helder, who is being held at the Washoe County Jail in Reno, Nev., on charges for pipe bomb attacks that left six people injured.

Illinois were found in rural locations that form an uneven ring about 70 miles in diameter. The Nebraska bomb sites — about 350 miles away — form a ring about 90 miles across.

The other bombs were found hundreds of miles away — one in Salida, Colo., the other in Amarillo, Texas.

The FBI issued an alert for Helder after his father called police Monday night about letters from his son that included references to death, anti-government comments and the phrase "Mailboxes are exploding." The same phrase was in the notes found with the bombs.

Iowa City's top officers to get raises

By Mike McWilliams
The Daily Iowan

Some Iowa City city councilors said the city manager, city attorney, and city clerk will receive a salary raise based on a closed-session council evaluation Thursday, but they declined to say how much.

Each year, the council assesses the performance of City Manager Steve Atkins, City Attorney Eleanor Dilkes, and City Clerk Marian Karr in May. Mayor Ernie Lehman has said the raises have typically been in line with increases in the cost of living. Last year, the three received at least a 3.25 percent raise.

"We're very fortunate to have these three employees, and I'm not against paying people what they're worth," said Councilor Mike O'Donnell.

Atkins — the highest-paid city employee — makes $129,064, Dilkes earns $52,041, and Karr receives $67,100.

As a result of last year's evaluations, Atkins received a $4,808, the cash value of 80 hours of accrued vacation time, paid directly to his pension plan. Dilkes received a 3.25 percent increase on her fiscal year 2001 salary, $1,638, paid directly to her pension plan along with her share of full-time health premiums. Karr received the cash value of 80 hours vacation time, more than $2,000 directly added to her pension plan.

The city manager, city attorney, and city clerk all answer directly to the council and can therefore be fired if the council is not satisfied with their performance. The three were evaluated based on communication skills, effectiveness, helpfulness, ability to supervise, fiscal responsibility, professionalism, and leadership.

Councilor Connie Champion said because the City Council relies heavily on the three employees for guidance because the councilors are not considered to be professional administrators. "I have total respect for all three people who, at times, work under difficult circumstances," she said "I think they do a good job steering us in the right direction."

Because the talks were held in executive session and not open to the public, all councilors reached by phone declined to comment specifically on the evaluations or raises at this time. The council must pass a resolution at a formal meeting for the raises to take effect.

Lehman said the revised contracts of the three employees should be on the council's May 21 formal meeting agenda for a vote.

How much would the Flash need to eat in order to run around the globe in 80 seconds?

The man to ask is University of Minnesota physics Professor Jim Kakalios.

Kakalios, who has taught physics at the school since 1988, is entering his second semester teaching an elective course for freshmen called Science in Comic Books. Or, as he calls it in his syllabus, "Everything I Know of Science I Learned From Reading Comic Books."

He says using comic books to teach the fundamentals of physics is a great way to stimulate his students. "It seems by the time they left the class, they were looking at the world with a more critical and more scientific eye," he says.

The fun lies in pointing out where the comic book writers got the science right and where they got it wrong, he says.

Kakalios, a comic-book lover whose office is filled with action figures, came up with the idea for his class after applying physics to a 1973 Spider-Man comic in which Peter Parker's girlfriend, Gwen Stacy, dies.

Gwen is knocked from a bridge by the evil Green Goblin, but Spider-Man catches her with his webbing an instant before she hits the water. When Spider-Man pulls her up, he discovers to his horror that she is dead.

While Spidey was shocked, Kakalios was not.

"The professor estimated Gwen's falling velocity, applied Newton's Second Law of Motion, and calculated the G-forces exerted when she went from 95 mph to a standstill in an instant. "It's not surprising her neck broke," Kakalios says.

Kakalios made Gwen's death an exam problem during the course's first semester last fall.

The explosion of Krypton, part of Superman lore, is one of those cases where the comic-book writers got the physics right, Kakalios says.

In the early Superman comics, the explanation for his superpowers was that he came from a planet whose gravity was much greater than Earth's, Kakalios says. Thus a hero so strong that on Earth, he could leap a tall building in a single bound.

Kakalios calculated Krypton's gravity by working backward from the force required to leap a building on Earth. From there, Kakalios concluded that Superman's planet must have had a core of superdense — and dangerously unstable — material. "Then you realize why Krypton exploded," he says.

House poised to boost military spending

By Jennifer Loven
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — House Republicans pushed for approval of the biggest increase in military spending in a generation on Thursday, including money for a new mobile artillery cannon the Pentagon doesn't want.

Lawmakers moved toward a vote even as Democrats fumed about provisions in the $383 billion measure outlining 2003 Defense spending that would exempt the military from major environmental laws.

Also, the White House Budget Office said President Bush's advisers would recommend a veto if the spending bill tells him not to cancel the $11 billion self-loading Crusader cannon now in development.

The House's Republican leaders beat back a Democratic attempt to force votes on the environmental provisions and on various other proposals concerning U.S. nuclear-weapons policy, base closures, and missile defense.

While lamenting the lack of wider discussion, Democrats mindful of the war on terror were eager to show support for the overall bill's increased military spending.

"This legislation will allow us to wage war effectively in the year ahead," said House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., but "this is symptomatic of a pattern we have seen in the last few months, with a majority that wants to close down debate on issues that are critical to the American people."

Republicans argued the rules for debate were fair, and the measure answered the nation's military needs in time of war. House Armed Services Chairman Bob Stump, R-Ariz., said the bill provides the largest real increase in Pentagon spending, in inflation-adjusted dollars, since 1966.

"We are starting to dig out of the budget hole we created after 13 years of budget cuts," Stump said.

Debate was expected on proposals to take money away from sea- and space-based national missile defense programs in favor of land-based interceptors and to prohibit the use of nuclear bombs to demolish deeply buried military facilities.

Democrats also planned to offer an amendment that would allow female troops posted overseas to undergo privately paid abortions at military hospitals.

The blueprint for military spending by the Defense and Energy departments roughly matches President Bush's request to Congress, minus a $10 billion reserve fund proposed by the White House for future war costs contained in separate legislation. Taken together, the two bills would provide an increase of approximately $50 billion, or 15 percent, over what Congress authorized for 2002.

Governor shelves executions

By Tom Stuckey
Associated Press

Matt Houston/Associated Press

Maryland Gov. Parris Glendening announces a moratorium on all executions for the remainder of his term Thursday.

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — Following the example set by Illinois two years ago, Gov. Parris Glendening on Thursday suspended all executions in Maryland while a study is done on whether the death penalty is meted out in a racially discriminatory way.

Glendening, a Democrat who is barred from seeking a third term this fall, blocked next week's lethal injection of 44-year-old Wesley Baker and said he would stay any other executions that come before him in his eight months left in office.

The governor repeated his support for the death penalty for especially heinous crimes but said "reasonable questions have been raised in Maryland and across the country about the application of the death penalty."

"It is imperative that I, as well as our citizens, have complete confidence that the legal process involved in capital cases is fair and impartial," he said.

Illinois is the only other death penalty state to impose a moratorium on executions.

The study is expected to be completed in September; it will then be reviewed by state lawmakers. Glendening said he expects the moratorium to remain in place for about a year. However, the next governor is free to resume executions upon taking office in January 2003.

Nine of the 13 men on Maryland's death row are black, and many of the victims were white. Glendening also noted that nine of the men on death row were convicted in suburban Baltimore County, and said: "Use of the death penalty ought not to be a lottery of geography."

The governor's office said five men, including Baker, could have faced execution before Glendening's term ends.

Democratic Lt. Gov. Kathleen Kennedy Townsend, who is running for governor and supports the death penalty in some cases, had asked Glendening to impose the moratorium. The governor said Townsend's request was not a significant factor in his decision.

Approximately 3,700 crimes are on death row for crimes committed in the 38 states with the death penalty. Critics contend that the death penalty is more likely to be imposed if the defendant is black and the victim white.

Ex-warlord dodges CIA missile

By Pauline Jelinek
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A former Afghan prime minister is believed to have escaped a CIA missile strike in the first known attempt to kill a factional leader suspected of plotting against the U.S.-backed government.

Though not known to be part of the Taliban or Al Qaeda, Islamic leader Gulbuddin Hekmatyar was considered a fair target because he was threatening American troops and had offered rewards for their deaths, officials said Thursday.

"I can assure you when we go after individuals in the theater of war, it is because they intend to do some harm to America," President Bush said.

The CIA fired a missile from an unmanned Predator spy plane Monday near the capital, Kabul, in hopes of killing Hekmatyar, U.S. Defense officials said on the condition of anonymity.

The Hellfire missile didn't get him but U.S. officials believe it killed some of his followers. Hekmatyar's whereabouts could not be learned Thursday.

"Hekmatyar is somewhere in Afghanistan, but we don't know in which area he is living," said Qutbuddin Hilal, a senior member of his hard-line Hezb-e-Islami party living in Peshawar, Pakistan.

Hilal denied that the group was plotting an attack on Afghanistan's government, saying Hekmatyar supports interim leader Hamid Karzai.

But Pentagon officials said there was intelligence that Hekmatyar had been making plans to strike the Afghan government, perhaps Karzai himself, and American troops in Afghanistan.

In the shifting politics of Afghanistan, Hekmatyar is a former warlord, one-time prime minister, former recipient of American military aid, and current leader of a hard-line Islamic group. He is thought to maintain close ties with elements of Pakistani intelligence operating without the sanction of President Pervez Musharraf.

Hekmatyar was a major recipient of U.S. weapons and support during the war against Soviet occupiers in Afghanistan in the 1980s. And he is now described as virulently opposed to the U.S. role in Afghanistan — or to the presence of any foreign army.

Hekmatyar has claimed he still has U.S.-made Stinger missiles and controls a loyal militia in his homeland that would be ready to follow him.

The CIA has played a major role in the Afghan campaign, gathering intelligence and sending in its paramilitary to work with local tribal leaders who have mounted their armies against the Taliban and Al Qaeda.

Bomb kills 36 at Russian parade

By Arsen Mollayev
Associated Press

KASPIISK, Russia — A remote-controlled bomb shattered a holiday parade Thursday in a Russian town near Chechnya, killing at least 36 people, including children and members of a marching band that had just struck up the tune "Victory Day."

Streams of blood trickled down the tree-lined road after the blast, which injured approximately 150. A mangled drum heaped with flowers lay next to a pile of abandoned horns and an empty boot.

No one claimed responsibility, but regional officials blamed Islamic militants who have organized previous attacks in the restive region, Dagestan. A 1996 blast in a Kaspiisk building that housed 68 people. Officials never determined who was responsible.

On Thursday, a marine band had just started playing the namesake song of Victory Day, which honors the anniversary of the Allied defeat of the Nazis in World War II. Children ran in front, cheered on by veterans, as the musicians and other servicemen headed to the cemetery in the Caspian Sea port of Kaspiisk for a wreath-laying ceremony.

Then the bomb — an antisonnel mine, packed with metal fragments, according to witnesses — blew up.

"When I got there, I saw a mound of bodies, people in panic," said Magomad Akhmedov, a 35-year-old teacher. "Someone began giving first aid, some started to bind people's wounds and stop the blood with whatever they could find."

Aminat Kuliyeva's children were playing on the street during the celebration.

"When I heard the blast I ran out to search for them, and I froze," Kuliyeva said. "All around were the dead, lots of blood, people screaming."

Eighteen servicemen — most of them musicians — 13 children, and five adult bystanders were killed in the Kaspiisk blast, said a duty officer in the Dagestan department of the Emergency Situations Ministry.

NTV television showed footage shot minutes after the explosion. Soldiers in camouflage uniforms lay sprawled in the middle of the street, blood streaming from their wounds. Men carried limp children to waiting ambulances, as policemen shooed away shocked bystanders still clutching flowers they had planned to lay at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. Screams filled the air.

1,000s flee rebel attack in Liberia

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — Panicked, wounded civilians struggled Thursday to flee one of the bloodiest outbreaks of fighting of a 3-year-old insurrection in Liberia, as government forces battled what they said was a rebel attack on Gbarnga, President Charles Taylor's central stronghold.

Whole towns and refugee camps were emptying. Thousands fled into the bush or to the west and hoped for safety in Monrovia, capital of the West African nation.

"This is no time to bluff — life is what counts!" fleeing 27-year-old

James Tenay said, scrambling into the trunk of a crowded taxi to escape Gbarnga.

He said Wednesday he was headed toward Monrovia, 150 miles away, "to let my family know that I am still alive."

The attack on Taylor's base in the heart of the nation marked a dramatic increase in hostilities between government forces and the shadowy rebels fighting them.

At a Lutheran-run hospital on the outskirts of Gbarnga, medical workers desperately sought vehicles to evacuate the injured. Many were women and children suffering gunshot wounds.

The army pulled its wounded out of the hospital Wednesday. Many hospital workers abandoned their posts soon after.

"For fear of their lives," explained Mary Teah, a nurse.

Around her, doctors struggled to treat a wailing 4-year-old boy. His flesh hung in strips from an infected gunshot wound to the shoulder.

Dozens of women screamed in other wards. Some were in agony from what hospital workers said were bullet wounds in the abdomen.

Rebels had been advancing on Gbarnga from at least two fronts late Wednesday.

On Thursday, Taylor announced that the rebels had attacked the town at sunrise. Fighting was continuing, he said.

KRUI is 'disappointed'

KRUI

that the new location fell short of what students wanted.

"It's the best the university can do with the financial resources we currently have," he said. "However, sometimes temporary can mean years." Jones said that although he worked closely with station directors, financial restrictions choked off any possibility that KRUI could obtain a state-of-the-art facility, an option down the road. The new location is similar in size and structure to the current 2,000-square-foot house, which falls 1,000-square-feet short of what station directors had desired.

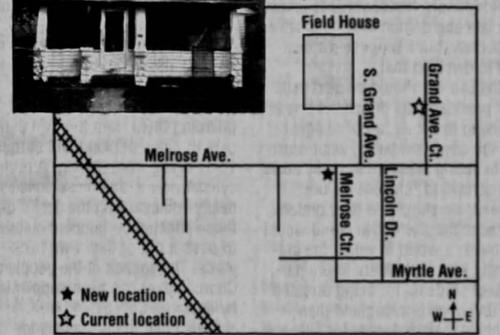

A permanent home for KRUI is still a priority, Jones said, adding that he is working on a separate plan to relocate the station. Jones refused to comment on when that would take place or where.

UI sophomore Ben High, the KRUI music director, said that station directors don't know what to expect of the new house because no one has been inside.

Station relocation

Campus station KRUI has to relocate to a house on Melrose Avenue as soon as July 1. Station directors say they are disappointed with the decision made by Phillip Jones UI vice president for Student Services.

Source: DI Research

NF/DI

Student radio began at the UI in 1952. The station, then known as KWAD, only served the Quadrangle Residence Hall, where it was located. After changing the call letters to KRUI in 1976, funds went dry, and the station shut down. In 1980, a struggling KRUI re-emerged, gaining funding from the UI Student Government and the Associated Residence Halls.

Cuts slice into dental care

MEDICAID

amendment, he said, explaining that even though it would allow dentists to gather reimbursements for performing the procedure, the overall fund would not receive any more state money.

Vilsack spokesman Joe Shanahan said the governor had not mentioned the dental Medicaid coverage while reviewing the budget bill.

"We've talked about many issues, but I have yet to hear about root canals," he said. "That's what we think the fiscal year feels like."

A total of 27 states choose not to fund low-income adult dental services, said Cathy Coppes, the human services medicare-policy specialist for the dental program. Iowa funds 27 out of the 34 optional coverage groups, which includes hearing aids, podiatry, and psychologists. Coppes said cutting root canal and gum procedures is unwise since dental health affects all health.

"I don't know anyone that ever died from not having an eye checkup, but you can die from a dental infection if it is left untreated," she said. "That would be the extreme."

Many patients choose to pay for the $360-$556 root canal out of their own pocket to retain their teeth, at the UI Dental School said Richard Walton, a UI professor of endodontics, adding that the percentage of Medicaid patients has dropped from 25 percent to 15 percent in his department since the bill's passage.

Faculty raising some dough by really raising some dough

BAKE SALE

Proceeds will go towards the first-ever "Faculty Bake Sale Scholarship Fund," benefiting undergraduates. Engineering Professor Wilfrid Nixon, the event's organizer, said the number of scholarships offered and the amounts will depend on the sale's success, which could prompt more in the future. The UI Faculty Council will outline the criteria for scholarship candidates, who could receive money as early as next fall.

"Many things are going to suffer at the university because of cuts, but we want to create a scholarship fund because students are suffering the most," Nixon said.

The goal is to reduce the negative effect on students because tuition hikes caused by budget cuts will provide students with fewer services for more money, he said.

When the Faculty Senate passed the measure April 2, faculty members set the bake sale's goal at $40 million to compensate for the UI's budget shortfall this fiscal year.

Although achieving the goal is highly unlikely, the event will serve as a publicity stunt and alert everyone to how the university is being damaged by cuts, Nixon said.

Thousands of faculty members were invited to participate via e-mail, and organizers predict hundreds will show up to sell baked goods under a large tent decked out in black and gold.

Iowa legislators predict yet another budget cut this fiscal year because of higher-than-expected tax refunds.

"It's better to bake a brownie than curse the cuts," Nixon said. "We are getting more cuts, so we have to make more brownies."

school's associate dean for student affairs. It sets guidelines for the academic-misconduct panel to handle those accused of plagiarism, but it does not punish students who fail to report incidents of cheating.

McGuire said she's interested in considering an honor code. As the rise of the Internet has made it easier for students to illegally copy material, it has also become easier for faculty and staff to detect forms of plagiarism, said Lola Lopes, the UI associate provost for undergraduate education, who ran a workshop this winter on how to detect and prevent cheating.

She pointed to a program called www.turnitin.com, which spots whether a student has copied materials from other places if a teacher sends a questionable paper to it.

"It is becoming increasingly common for there to be plagiarism in not only the academic world but also the professional world," Lopes said.

The sanctions against Lim would also prohibit him from returning to finish his law degree at the UI or be able to transfer credits from here to another university.

Kudos to Coleman

Bravo to President Coleman for speaking out against the Neighborhood Housing Relations Task Force's recommendations this week.

Admittedly, her comments come too late and demonstrate laughable hypocrisy, but I suppose it's best not to dwell on that.

Instead we should be glad that our president has drawn the line at refusing to act as "a police agent for the city," combating what must be tempting pressure to really apply the screws to "student culture." Indeed, we should be truly grateful, because the alternative world would be bleak: a world in which the university first sent letters to the parents of students for being arrested for underage drinking and then withheld their diplomas for failing to pay the resulting fine, a world in which students are told they can't have a party without a permit versus one in which they can't have a party on campus if it doesn't conform to the moral compass of university leadership.

The truth is that we're witnessing the layering of one reactionary policy on top of another. The push to purge alcohol on campus and dry out the Greek system in response to the tragic death of a student has led to the fraternization of houses off campus to fill the gap. Pressure from the city to enforce underage drinking in local bars adds fuel to the fire, encouraging more students to drink elsewhere. And as the demand for forums to host these activities exceeds supply, parties have grown larger, louder, and more intolerable to the few non-collegiate occupants who can afford houses in the close vicinity of campus.

The next wave of regulation will undoubtedly create a new set of problems, as students relocate parties to Coralville, or in rural areas outside the city limits, and begin to drive when they would previously have walked or taken public transportation. OWI arrests will increase as will injuries and fatalities associated with drunk driving.

The irony of all of these rules and regulations is that they are pretextually justified as protecting the health and safety of students, guarding them from the twin dangers of binge drinking and burning sofas falling from the sky. A more cynical view is that these policies neatly coincide with the desire of those affected by "student culture" to push it out of their own backyards. The agenda of the people on Church street has been supplanted by those on College.

I wish that the prognosis for opening the forum of which President Coleman spoke was more positive; it would be nice to think that someone would listen to student views at conversational decibels. But given the chasm that separates those who make rules from those who must follow them, it seems inevitable that these words will fall on deaf ears.

Aslan and the Absurd

It appears that I am becoming quite a thorn in the side of UI Visiting Professor of Islamic Studies Reza Aslan. As I exposed the absurdity of his (mis)characterization of the Sept. 11 attacks on America by Islamic terrorists, I now expose the absurdity of his attacks on President Bush and the Bush administration's policy towards Israel (DI, May 9).

Aslan makes it clear in his guest opinion that "U.S. foreign policy in the Middle East tips substantially towards Israel" and that the administration's policy is "simplistic and absolutist." To support these claims, Aslan refers us to another opinion column. Next, Aslan attacks President Bush's characterization of Ariel Sharon (based on current standpoint, rather than a backward-looking perspective) as "a man of peace," and that "Bush has repeatedly shown that he is unwilling to mediate in the conflict..." Finally, Aslan asserts that "the president's unabashed partiality toward Israel is now so evident that it is unlikely the Palestinians will ever trust him again."

To Aslan I offer the following remarks. First, the United States has indeed been a strong ally and friend to Israel, a country completely surrounded by Arab nations hostile to it. That Aslan treats this fact as some sort of revelation will strike any rational person as curious, regardless of "which side" you're on. Second, Aslan's remarks about the current administration show only that Aslan is eager to criticize U.S. policies from an arrogant, biased, emotionally riddled perspective. Third, the accusation that Bush unwilling to mediate the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is simply false, and humorously so. To hold such a position (let alone publish it) only discredits Aslan further. Finally, Aslan's concern for the status of Palestinian trust so one sided that Aslan transcends the realm of the obscure and enters that of the bizarre. Why isn't this obligation of trust reciprocal for all peoples and all nations? Ask not just how Palestinians can trust Bush, Aslan, but also how Bush can trust Yasser Arafat.

Sending letters home is not the university's responsibility

Perhaps as early as the fall 2002 semester, UI students are under the age of 21 may have one additional cross to bear — explaining their recent alcohol-possession arrests to their parents.

According to Phillip Jones, the vice president for Student Services, for reasons of public health and safety, the university may send letters to students' parents every time their minor child is arrested for possession of alcohol. And although the recent fire at Etc. is not the reason for the letters, Jones has said, the calls from parents to his office after the incident helped to impel him to make the decision.

Therefore, if a student happens to get arrested for public intoxication and decides not to share that with her or his parent for whatever reason, the choice will no longer be hers or his to make. And although arrests are on public record, it may not be the UI's place to share this information.

In this process, the university will obviously spend money that could be better spent in other areas (maybe even in areas of education, for example). If the estimate of 500-600 letters a year are correct (up from the 40-50 letters that go out currently for serious destructive behavior such as attempted suicide), then that would be 10 times the resources just to tell Mom and Dad what their kid did Friday night.

Eighteen may not be legal for drinking (although it is legal for voting, smoking, being drafted, and the death penalty) it should at least be old enough to decide on when and what to communicate back home. How will a minor or young student learn to be responsible if responsibilities are constantly being taken out of the student's hand?

Jones also said he hopes the letters will actually offer encouragement for communication between parents and students. But by the university communicating to parents for the students, it is easy to imagine that the communicative gap will increase. Why would students tell anything to their parents if the university can and will do it for them?

This decision also implies that students do not communicate with their parents. Some may not, but others do. Some students may decide not to tell their parents because they may want to take full responsibility for their own actions and deal with the matter without any help or input from their parents. And for students who choose not to tell their parents, it should be their prerogative to do so. The university should not step up to the duty.

In certain cases of public health and safety (such as life and death situations), the UI probably has the responsibility and liability to get involved, but it does that now. It isn't necessary to expand that policy to anything and everything else a

Brains and spunk: discovering the ease of Mandarin Chinese

Imagine a foreign language with no irregular verbs, no pluperfect or subjunctive or other elusive tenses, no mutating adjectives whose endings must change according to the gender or number or status of the nouns they modify. A language with no bizarre spellings, in which writing is inherently an art and even primitive handwriting looks beautiful, especially when inscribed with a brush. A language so elegant and parsimonious that it takes but a few lines to convey a thought or image that in other languages could require a page.

Millions of little children speak this language — and you could, too, if you set your mind to it before your brain fossilizes. It's Mandarin Chinese, and it's the main language of the most populous country on Earth, a land of infinite wonders where ancient marvels blend with modern global constructs. Should you visit China, knowledge of even a few words of Chinese will inspire delight and open welcoming doors, while conversational facility will open up an entire new world.

That's true about any language, of course, but when something is a college requirement, its virtues often get overlooked. Moreover, if you started with Spanish or German or French in high school, you're unlikely to even entertain the idea of trying one of the less-studied foreign languages — which, in the case of Chinese, is also the most-spoken. One-fifth of the people on the planet are Chinese, and while dialects are myriad, Mandarin is the "common language" of the mainland and is replacing Cantonese as a common connective tissue among far-flung emigrant communities.

Here's something else: If you already completed your Iowa foreign-language requirement, a special provision just approved by the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences will give you extra credit for getting decent grades in a semester of a second foreign language — up to a maximum of four extra semester hours for two semesters of coursework. Plus you could even start Chinese this summer: The Department of Asian Languages and Literature is offering intensive first-year Chinese, two semesters compressed into eight weeks. It will be hard work, but also a blast. Last week I heard veterans of this year's first-year class rap in Chinese, and they were good.

Judy Polumbaum

A VIEW FROM THE SIXTH FLOOR

If you think Chinese must be incredibly hard, you're wrong. Chinese is far more sensible than English and in many respects easier than your Romance challenges. Irregularities are among the greatest cause of suffering of students of French and Spanish. Chinese has virtually no irregularities: It truly follows its own rules. Verb declensions are the bane of students of German. Chinese verbs have one form, period. Chinese sentence constructions are ridiculously logical: subject, verb, object, that sort of thing. So how do you know when something happened? Simple as well: from context and other clues. "I return home" is refined by "I tomorrow return home" or "I yesterday return home," the past tense often accentuated by a final participle that indicates "This already happened."

Granted, you do have to learn to deliver sounds in a new way: Chinese is a tonal language, and the same syllable with different intonations can mean different things. But you'd be surprised at how the sing-song aspect comes if you relax. And remind yourself about those millions of little kids who can do this.

I got interested in Mandarin Chinese when I was 8. My dad, a photographer, had hired a tutor from Taiwan, hoping that he would be able to travel to China. It was the depths of the Cold War and Sino-U.S. animosity made travel impossible; the advent of Ping Pong diplomacy, which led to Nixon's visit and the eventual normalization of relations, was a decade off. He ended up turning his lenses on India instead. But I never forgot that the word for "book" in Mandarin sounded something like "shoe," which I found both hilarious and appealing. I figured Chinese must be great fun to learn if every word could be remembered through such a mnemonic device.

That's not so, of course. But the appeal endured, plus I did get interested in China for more serious reasons. So I left behind French and Spanish to study Chinese in college. The grounding I began to acquire as a freshman did not make me fluent by graduation, but it laid the foundation that's enabled me to grow fluent over the years, and to live and work and travel in China with great psychological ease (if not always physical comfort). I try to get back to China every couple of years, and now, when I land in Beijing and hop on a public bus and hear local guys speaking the wonderful twangy Beijing street version of Mandarin, I feel like I've come home. Learning to communicate and navigate in another culture is one of the best things I ever did.

By the way, this is my last column. If I come up with one brilliant idea per decade, I consider my time on Earth for that period a smashing success; and coming up with one even vaguely interesting idea every other week has proven entirely too stressful. I've enjoyed the experience and might do it again someday if someone hurries up and invents a procedure for neuron replenishment. For the time being, however, my brain is bucking the ordeal of final grading and pleading for a shutdown.

My parting advice: Start that Chinese soon, while that brain of yours is still sparking. It won't be that spunky forever.

Days in the life of the soap factory

By Richard Shirk
The Daily Iowan

When Bryan Datillo, one of the stars of the soap opera "Days of Our Lives," made a two-day stop in Iowa City last week, the DI got to hop in the back of his limo and ask the star a few questions about the ever-challenging roles of playing bad-guy Lucas Roberts, his aspiration to play Spider-Man, and what it feels like to be a sexual object for women twice his age.

DI: OK. So, you play Lucas Roberts on "Days of Our Lives."

Datillo: That I do.
DI: Do you ever feel really self-conscious about 45-year-old housewives viewing you as a sexual object?

Datillo: That's what gets me through, man. That's what keeps me going. The fact that I can still turn the lights on of a 45-year-old, you know? That, that I have no problem with. I like 80-year-old women coming up to me, kissing me on the cheek, throwing slobber all on me, and telling me that they love me. It doesn't matter the age to me.

DI: Do you ever feel that soap operas are used as stepping stones to bigger careers? How do you feel about your position right now? Are you happy with where you are at?

Datillo: I'm happy where I'm at, but I know that there is more for me. I always said I would be on a show, a soap opera, no more than 10 years, and that's next year, so I'll be taking a few chances in the next years. Maybe stand-up comedy or music. However, nighttime television or movies — ideally as an actor. You want to progress from a soap to a nighttime show, then from that nighttime show they might give you a TV movie. If you get a good enough reading on that, they might give you a big movie. It's like a baseball player wants to make it to the major leagues, but if he's still getting paid in the minor-league level and he is doing fine and supporting his family, it's hard to walk away from that.

DI: So you consider yourself a serious, dramatic actor?

Datillo: Uh, yeah.
DI: Do you ever feel that the kind of labyrinthine and ridiculous plots of soap operas are a major challenge for you?

Datillo: Every day it's a challenge. You are selling something that is unsalable. It's hard to make that stuff work, and if you can, they usually keep you.

DI: You were recently in a coma on the show. Was that a challenge for you, playing a coma for however many weeks?

Datillo: It was horrid because I am so fidgety and high energy anyway, that to just lie there and to be in scenes lying there and having people talk about you, over you, and you not listen, totally tune out, is hard. When you listen you make expressions, you frown, you go to who's talking a little. You can't do that when you are in a coma.

DI: More questions about what's going on in the show right now. I've been asked to ask you what is happening with the baby?

Datillo: Uh, well, that's not my story line. That's Bo and Hope's story line. And when I get a script, I rip out all the other parts but mine, and I study my parts, and I throw the rest away. HA-HA! Because, let's face it, the show starts when I show up, so, HA-HA! Just kidding to all you viewers out there and listeners and uh, readers. Kidding. Um, it's ... I don't know, you know. What was the question?

DI: Let's move on. What is the biggest stretch of the story line that you have had to put up with in your last 10 years on soap operas?

Datillo: There are just so many. It's such a loaded question. Probably when Sami was being executed by lethal injection, and I had to come in and save her grimy butt from death. I came in tears, crying, telling the whole room of, the whole cast basically, that I was the one who committed all these murders, and I was the one who did it. Well, when I came in to do it, I fell on my entry and ever since then, I couldn't keep a straight face because I had to jump over this one little chair to get to the spot and say "I did it, I killed Franco."

DI: Your character went through a period of being nice, and now you are in a period of bad. Is that correct?

Datillo: Well, I was faking being nice to fool Sami to tell me what I wanted to know so I could record her and bust her.

DI: Which side of your character do you think your fans prefer?

Datillo: They definitely like the old Lucas, the one who is a little bit edgy, a little bit selfish, a little bit manipulative but with a heart. The trick to being a bad guy is that you have to make the fans like you, too. If you walk that fine line, you can really bring them in. You bring them in close because you are nice and then you push them away because you're bad.

DI: Moving on. Do you ever feel that the twisted plots and the drama that goes on within the soap opera is reflected in the backstage behavior of the actors? Is there a lot of competition? Is there a lot of backstabbing?

Datillo: The competition is about who gets air time — who can steal the scene. There's a competition among the characters to win out in the scene and come out on top, and it doesn't leave a lot of room for a good supporting actor because a good supporting actor will allow a person to look better than he looks. I think I got caught in a supporting actor role for several years, and now I'm just coming to a point where you almost have to be a little vindictive and a little edgy yourself about it and claim your own respectability on your character. A lot of people won't sacrifice their character for the sake of the scene, and they will try to steal the scene. That's the competition, and it gets ugly sometimes. If you stay out of that, you get run over so you kind of have to have one foot in and one foot out of that, and I've learned that.

DI: You are currently engaged in some sort of press junket where you will later meet a dream date through Sprint PCS. Are you excited about that?

Datillo: I'm not really expecting to meet my soul-mate through these dates. That's really not why I'm here — to meet a future Mrs. Datillo. If that happens, great, more icing on the cake, but I'm more here to interact with the fans and, you know, kind of give them, not me, but give them that opportunity to kind of break down my character persona and get to know me as a person so when I do get off the show maybe they will follow me to the next show I'm on.

DI: What are some activities you plan on doing with your dream date? Are you going to take her to a movie? Burger King?

Datillo: We are going for dinner.

DI: Are you bringing flowers?

Datillo: Am I bringing flowers? I don't know. Am I bringing flowers? You'll have to wait, I don't know. You're going to make me look bad if I don't now.

DI: You have been acting on a soap opera for 10 years. When were you first attending drama courses, did you feel that this is where you would be in life at this time?

Datillo: I think I'm behind my expectations. Not that I'm not happy where I am. If I were on the show until the day I die, it would be a blessing, it really would. Three percent of the actors listed at SAG work, and if you are the 3 percent of working actors and not the 97 percent of non-working, you are doing well. But I won't lie, I am a little behind schedule. I thought I would be in Spider-Man by now. That is the movie role that I wanted. Stan Lee is crazy for not hiring me for that. I actually got in and read for it, and the casting director said "Bryan, we love you on 'Days.' We think you just had a great reading, but we cannot hire you for this role. They want Tobey Maguire or else they're not doing it." So, there's only a certain amount of things you can do.

You have to wait your turn, and I'm willing to wait.

DI: Great. More about the press tour. Do you feel that getting in touch with your fans is important?

Datillo: It's a perk of the job. Anytime you can meet people who love you and want nothing but good things for you and want to tell you how wonderful you are can only give you more confidence. Soap actors only have awards once a year. This is kind of my way of being rewarded.

DI: As a person who is looked at as a sex object or the pretty boy, do you ever feel that there are any negative things about that? Are there stalkers?

Datillo: Who are we talking about? Oh me, HA-HA! I can never get used to that, never get used to the fact that I am looked at like that. I don't worry about stalkers. I think the more available you make yourself to the fans, the more they will appreciate it and not try to stalk you.

DI: Theoretically, if your character is still on the show in 10 or 20 years, where would you like the Lucas Roberts character to be?

Datillo: I would like to be the main bad guy, like the Stefano. The main bad dude.

Pakistan arrests 100s after bombing

By Nadeem Afzal
Associated Press

KARACHI, Pakistan — In a sweep against Islamic militants Thursday, Pakistani authorities rounded up nearly 300 suspects while U.S. and French investigators searched for links between Al Qaeda terrorists and a suicide bombing that killed 14 people, including 11 French engineers.

French Defense Minister Michele Alliot-Marie went to the site of Wednesday's blast and then visited a dozen French citizens wounded in the attack.

President Pervez Musharraf has called the bombing an attempt to destabilize Pakistan and "weaken its resolve" in the fight against terrorism.

Alliot-Marie praised Musharraf for his "brave choice" in joining the U.S.-led war on terrorism. She said the attack on the Frenchmen, who were in Pakistan to build a submarine, had only strengthened French resolve.

"We have to fight terrorism until it's eliminated," she said.

In Paris, the government spokesman said the bombing was aimed at harming a member of the anti-terrorism coalition such as France because of its support for the fight against Osama bin Laden's Al Qaeda terror network and Afghanistan's ousted Taliban regime.

Before the Sept. 11 terror attacks, Musharraf and Pakistan had deep ties to the Taliban, but — under U.S. pressure — switched sides. Musharraf later banned five militant Islamic groups, some of which had close ties to Al Qaeda and the Taliban.

No group claimed responsibility for Wednesday's bombing, the third deadly attack this year on foreigners in Pakistan.

Information Minister Nisar Memon, who met with Alliot-Marie, insisted that Pakistan would not be deterred by the bombing, and it had taken "more measures to combat terrorism."

A top Interior Ministry official, Tasneem Noorani, said a number of activists belonging to the outlawed radical groups had been arrested.

Interior Ministry officials, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said at least 298 suspected members of Jaish-e-Mohammed, Sipah-e-Sahaba, Lashkar-e-Tayyaba, and other groups were arrested in the crackdown, which was expected to last several more days.

In Karachi, three FBI agents spent 90 minutes going over the twisted, charred skeleton of the Pakistan navy shuttle bus that was incinerated in the bombing. Authorities believe the bomb was in a car that pulled alongside the bus outside the Sheraton Hotel as the engineers were waiting to be taken to the Arabian Sea port where the submarine was under construction.

Israel poised to attack Gaza

By Ravi Nessman
Associated Press

This story was submitted to the Israeli army censor, who ordered significant deletions.

JERUSALEM — Tanks were poised outside Gaza, and Israel called up military reservists Thursday in the run-up to an expected retaliatory attack for Palestinian suicide bombings.

Palestinians arrested 16 members of Hamas, the Islamic militant group that claimed it carried out a deadly suicide attack earlier this week, a first sign that Yasser Arafat was taking action against terror groups.

Tanks were parked off Gaza, the home base of the Hamas militant group, and Israeli forces around the strip were being beefed up Thursday night.

But Hamas leaders in Gaza — a sliver of Mediterranean coastline, two-thirds of which is under Palestinian autonomy — said they were going about life as usual.

Hamas founder Sheik Ahmed Yassin went ahead with the afternoon wedding reception for one of his seven daughters, his son Mohammed said. A Yassin deputy, university lecturer Mahmoud Zahar, said he was staying at home to prepare exams, and a Hamas spokesman, Abdel Aziz Rantisi, said his schedule was filled with TV interviews.

Mohammed Dahlan, Yasser Arafat's security chief in Gaza, said the Palestinians were expecting an attack.

"Everyone is prepared, and our people know how to confront the occupation," said Dahlan, who has been in the West Bank town of Ramallah for months. "We said this before, and we mean it now — if the occupation forces carry out an aggression, we will face this aggression."

On Thursday, the Israeli Cabinet approved unspecified reprisals in response to Tuesday's bombing in a pool hall in a Tel Aviv suburb. Fifteen Israelis were killed in the attack, the deadliest since Israel launched its West Bank military offensive March 29 in response to a wave of suicide bombings.

The reserve call-up was smaller than the one that preceded

Gadi Kabalo/Associated Press
Israeli soldiers and tanks are shown near the Gaza Strip on Thursday.

that operation, during which troops occupied six of the eight main Palestinian towns in the West Bank for periods of up to several weeks and fought running battles with Palestinian gunmen.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres hinted that Israel might have a more limited operation in mind this time, "striking at centers from which the suicide attackers come."

Military commentators also said they expected the Gaza operation to be more limited than the West Bank offensive. Fighting in densely populated Gaza would be much more complicated and could expose troops to greater risks.

Charlotte wins Game 3 at home

By Jenna Fryer
 Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — David Wesley had a big red knot on his forehead and a splitting headache. He had ice packs on both knees and his right elbow, while both of his feet soaked in water.

As long as the Charlotte Hornets won, it was all worth it.

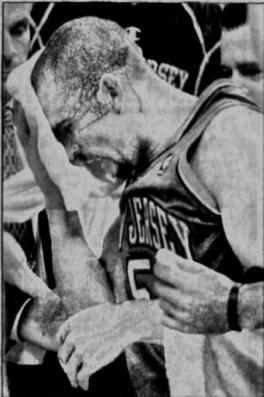

Wesley shook off a head-to-head collision with Jason Kidd, then lifted Charlotte back into the Eastern Conference semifinals by scoring 22 points and providing an emotional spark in the Hornets' 115-97 victory over the New Jersey Nets on Thursday night.

"I've got a headache and I'm feeling kind of numb," he said. "But I knew I could continue to play, and with the season on the line, there was no way I wouldn't."

Baron Davis scored 26 points, Jamaal Magloire added 16 points and six blocked shots, and George Lynch had 12 points and 12 rebounds for the Hornets, who trail the Nets 2-1 in the best-of-seven series. Game 4 is Sunday in Charlotte.

Kidd, who needed stitches to close a gash over his right eye following the collision with Wesley late in the first half, scored just 13 points. He played just five minutes and scored four points after smacking his head.

New Jersey's trainers said "they lost count" of how many stitches Kidd needed, and the guard did not answer questions after the game. He was escorted out of the locker room and walked with his head down straight to the bus.

"Jason's injury did have an impact on the game and it was a negative one," said Kenyon Martin, who also scored 13 points. "When your leader goes down, it's kind of hard to swallow."

Richard Jefferson led the Nets with 16 points, while Keith Van Horn had 12 and Kerry Kittles 11.

 Molly Gable, daughter of Dan Gable, poses on the blocks at the UI Field House on Thursday.

Gable legacy

By Ali Noller
 The Daily Iowan

At first sight, it's obvious Molly Gable has traits similar to most Division I athletes. A tenacious worker, her summers are spent waking at dawn for a jog, followed by a bike ride to City High to get in a morning workout in the pool, then returning to the swimming pool in the afternoon.

Her life is encompassed by fitness and nutrition, and her dedication has carried over to the college career that she began in the fall of 2001 at Iowa.

But when you pay closer attention to her last name, you realize that she's not just another athlete — she's a Gable.

Her father is one of the most recognizable athletes in the state and easily one of the grandest ambassadors for wrestling today.

The same Dan Gable who won two NCAA titles and every one of his college matches except for a lone loss that has grown to become the most famous match in the history of college wrestling.

The Dan Gable who captured Olympic Gold and who became even more formidable and dominating after his collegiate years as a coach.

An oppressive opponent on the mat and an equally alarming force on the sidelines.

Yes, the same Dan Gable who led his Hawkeye squads to 15 NCAA championships, 21-consecutive Big Ten championships, and crowned 45 national champions in his 21 years as the ringleader of Iowa wrestling.

Huge footsteps to follow in.

When Molly Gable became the first of his four daughters to pursue sports at the collegiate level, she did it with the Iowa swimming team.

"Molly definitely has the traits my dad has," Annie Gable, Molly's older sister, said. "She's like him physically and emotionally, and she has an unbelievable work ethic, just like my dad."

Molly Gable said she runs after practice if she hasn't had a good workout, and she tries to squeeze in a few extra workouts on top of her rigorous training schedule each week.

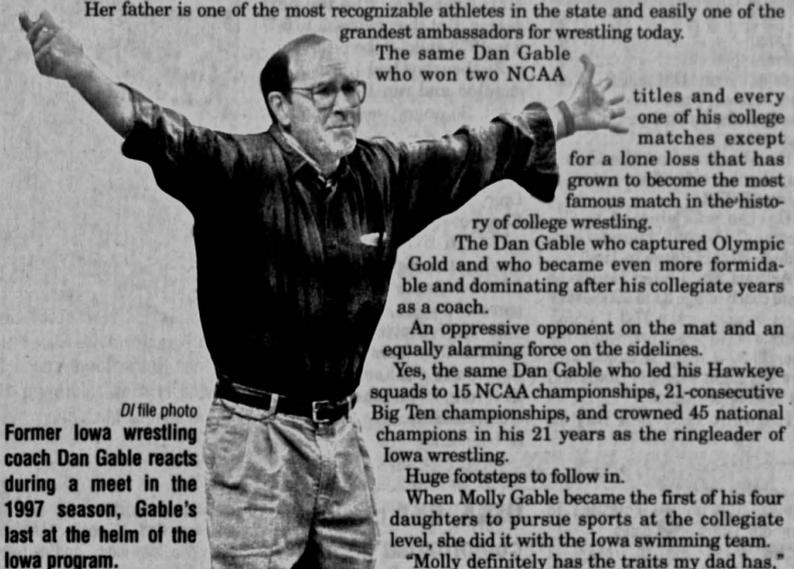

"I don't feel good if I don't get a good workout in every day," she said.

Iowa swimming coach Garland O'Keefe echoed that Dan Gable's daughter's work ethic will allow her to be successful in coming years.

"Molly is a really hard worker — she definitely has it in her," O'Keefe said. "She's adding depth in the sprint freestyle events, and she has an amazingly positive attitude."

While Annie Gable and eldest daughter Jenni Gable were in dance classes from the start, Molly's life shadowed her father's in terms of athletic prowess.

SOFTBALL

Illinois shocks Iowa

By Todd Brommelkamp
 The Daily Iowan

The Iowa softball team will have to take an unfamiliar path if it wishes to reach its goal of a second-consecutive Big Ten Tournament title — through the loser's bracket.

Illinois, the last team to make the field of six teams, stunned the third-seeded Hawkeyes Thursday morning in Ann Arbor, Mich., riding a pair of back-to-back home runs to a 3-2 victory.

Because the tournament utilizes a double elimination format, the upset does not end Iowa's hopes of a tournament title, but it does make the road to the championship match much more arduous. Another loss, and Iowa's tournament run will end well short of its goal of playing on Saturday afternoon.

Iowa will face Penn State at 11 a.m. today. A win would pit the Hawkeyes against the loser of this morning's game featuring the Illini and Wisconsin. A loss would send the 35-17 Hawkeyes on an eight-hour bus ride back to Iowa City.

"We just didn't play particularly well today," Iowa coach Gayle Blevins said. "It made me think back to the way we played last weekend at Northwestern, where we allowed them to come out and jump on us early."

After a scoreless first inning, both teams put their only runs of the game on the board in the second inning. Erin Montgomery hit a two-run home run off Iowa starter Kristi Hanks (19-12), who promptly surrendered a solo shot to Katie O'Connell in the very next at bat.

Blevins brought in freshman Lisa Birocci to quell the uprising, inducing a pair of fly outs to end the inning. Birocci held the Illini scoreless during her six innings of relief while allowing just one hit, but the damage had been done.

"Once they hit that second home run, I thought we just

Hornets get an empty feeling

By Jenna Fryer
 Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — NASCAR drivers John Andretti and Dale Jarrett were there. So was NFL running back Marshall Faulk and John Fox, the new coach of the Carolina Panthers.

Just about everyone else in Charlotte stayed home, though.

Even though the NBA's days in Charlotte are numbered and the season is on the line, fans didn't change their mind about the Hornets in Thursday night's Game 3 of the Eastern Conference semifinals against the New Jersey Nets.

Approximately 7,000 fans were in their seats at tipoff, creating cavernous sections in The Hive that have been a symbol of the Hornets all season.

"It's so disheartening that it has come to this," said Paul Silas, in his fourth season as Charlotte's coach. "When I first came here, it was sort of going down a little bit, but it was still an exciting place to be ... To see it fall off the end of the Earth, it leaves you feeling empty."

Just like the Charlotte Coliseum.

It was the Hornets' bad luck to have a must-win game — they trailed the Nets 2-0 in the best-of-seven series — fall the day before the NBA's owners scheduled vote on Charlotte's relocation request. The vote is expected to be a formality, and the moving vans could head to New Orleans as soon as the season officially ends.

The finality of it all did little to bring out the masses. The regulars — including the guy who has waved a brick under the basket during free throws in each of the Hornets' 14 seasons — were here.

And Andretti and Jarrett, enjoying a rare week off from racing, came out to see one last game. Faulk, well, no one knew why he came. But when he called for tickets, the Hornets could hardly say no.

But judging by the crowd at tipoff, they were the only new faces.

For seven years, the Hornets led the league in attendance.

Red Wings take definitive victory over Blues

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Dominik Hasek rebounded from a lopsided loss as Detroit took command of its second-round Western Conference playoff series with a victory over St. Louis.

The Red Wings, who have a 3-1 series lead, can wrap the series up Saturday in Detroit.

The Blues' chances for the game — and now, the series — took a devastating hit when defenseman and captain Chris Pronger suffered an apparent leg injury midway through the first period after a collision with Detroit's Steve Yzerman.

Pronger, who has been averaging more than 30 minutes a game, did not return and his status is in question for Game 5.

The Blues outshot the Red Wings 10-0 in the first five minutes and went up 1-0 on a power-play goal by Scott Young.

But after that — until a frantic finish — it was all Red Wings.

Brendan Shanahan, Jiri Fischer, and Sergei Fedorov each scored their first goal of the series for

The Blues threw in a late scare with goals by Scott Mellanby and Pavol Demitra in the final 2:54, both with the goalie pulled.

Hurricanes 4, Canadiens 3
 MONTREAL — Niclas Wallin scored on a slap shot through a screen 3:14 into overtime Thursday night to give the Carolina Hurricanes a stunning 4-3 comeback victory over the Montreal Canadiens.

The Hurricanes scored four unanswered goals to even the series 2-2.

Rookie Erik Cole sent the game into overtime, getting control of a rebound in the crease and flipping it past Montreal goalie Jose Theodore with 40.8 seconds left. It was his fourth goal of the playoffs.

Game 5 will be May 12 at Carolina, with Game 6 in Montreal on May 13.

Early on, it seemed like the Canadiens' night. Andreas Dackell, Yanic Perreault, and Sergei Berezin staked Montreal to a 3-0 lead by the midpoint of the second period.

Devine leaves coaching, personal legacy at 77

By Bob Baum
 Associated Press

PHOENIX — Dan Devine groomed Joe Montana for greatness and won a national championship at Notre Dame.

A master motivator and stickler for details, he sometimes angered his players but usually brought out their best.

When he died at his home in Tempe, Ariz., on Thursday at age 77 after a long illness, he left the legacy of a winner.

"Dan Devine was a leader of men," said Arizona Cardinals assistant coach Johnny Roland, who played for Devine and later coached with him. "All the programs he undertook were better for it. He was my mentor. He recruited me to play at Missouri, and he recruited me into the coaching profession.

"He had a way with people of making them believe in themselves."

Devine went 172-57-9 (a .742 winning percentage) over 22 seasons at Notre Dame, Missouri, and Arizona State. As a college head coach, he had just one losing season.

He also coached the Green Bay Packers for four seasons, going 25-27-4.

Devine was elected to the National Football Foundation's college Hall of Fame in 1985.

Arizona State hired Devine as head coach at age 31 in 1955. After three seasons and a 27-3-1 record, he moved to Missouri, where he was 93-37-7 in 13 seasons, with two Big Eight championships and six bowl appearances.

He went to Green Bay in 1971. After going 4-8-2 in his first season, the Packers won the NFC Central at 10-4 the next season. But they fell back to 5-7-2 in 1973 and 6-8 the next year.

By then fans had grown disenchanted and ran Devine out of town. So angry were some that Devine's dog was shot to death.

His final and greatest coaching tenure occurred at Notre Dame, where he replaced Hall of Fame coach Ara Parseghian in 1975. In five seasons under Devine, the Fighting Irish were 53-16-1 and won three bowl games.

In 1977, Notre Dame, quarterbacked by Montana and with Bob Golic anchoring a tough defense, won the national championship.

Saints fire Randy Mueller; owner takes over as GM
 NEW ORLEANS (AP) — New Orleans Saints owner Tom Benson unexpectedly fired general manager Randy Mueller and took over the job himself Thursday, citing differences in management style.

Mueller earned NFL Executive of the Year honors in 2000 for a rebuilding job that helped the team gain its first playoff victory.

"This was totally a bolt from the blue. I'm in shock," Mueller said.

He met Thursday morning with Benson, a day after returning from a two-day trip around Louisiana to promote Saints ticket sales.

"He asked me to resign. I refused," Mueller said. "I didn't want to leave here. I had hoped to make New Orleans my home for the rest of my career. When I refused, he fired me."

Benson did not rule out eventually hiring another GM.

He said events leading to Mueller's release had been building because of communications problems.

"I'm more of a hands-on owner," Benson said. "In some cases, decisions were made without me."

He said he was not told that running back Ricky Williams was going to be traded to the Miami Dolphins in March.

USGA, R&A reach compromise on drivers
 IRVING, Texas — A four-year debate between golf's two governing bodies ended in a compromise Thursday that will hold touring pros worldwide to the same equipment standards for drivers and temporarily create separate rules for recreational players.

Under the agreement announced by the Royal & Ancient Golf Club and the U.S. Golf Association, the amount of trampoline effect from thin-faced drivers will be allowed to increase during a five-year period that will start Jan. 1, 2001.

That means recreational players can use drivers, such as the ERC from Callaway Golf, in posting scores for their handicap index, and perhaps in their club championships.

However, the R&A and USGA recommend that tours around the world apply the stricter limit of springlike effect — known as the coefficient of restitution (COR) — for the "highly skilled players" in tournament golf.

Previously, players could use thin-faced drivers at the British Open and World Golf Championship held overseas, but not at PGA Tour events or the three American majors.

"It's a great step to make the rules uniform on both sides of the Atlantic," Thomas Bjorn of Denmark said. "There is no doubt they had to be."

Sacramento downs Mavericks

Associated Press

DALLAS — Thousands of cowbells and a couple of ankle injuries weren't enough to slow down the Sacramento Kings.

Mike Bibby scored 29 points, and Doug Christie returned from a sprained ankle to score 14 of his 20 points in the fourth quarter as Sacramento beat the Dallas Mavericks, 125-119, Thursday night.

The Kings, who lost second-leading scorer Peja Stojakovic to a sprained ankle in the third quarter, took a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven Western Conference semifinals.

Game 4 will be Saturday in Dallas.

Chris Webber had 31 points and 15 rebounds, and Vlade Divac added 19 points and 13 rebounds, helping the Kings add a little muscle to the matchup of the league's two highest-scoring teams.

Michael Finley had 35 points for Dallas, and Raef LaFrentz added 24 points and 13 rebounds.

The Kings rode Bibby's hot-shooting hand to a 15-point lead in the first quarter, then leaned on Christie, who provided several key baskets and solid defense during a 14-4 run midway through the fourth quarter that gave Sacramento a 105-97 lead.

Bibby and Christie continually silenced the capacity crowd of 20,265 in the American Airlines Center, many of whom came armed with cowbells, kazooes, and various plastic noisemakers distributed by the team.

Mavericks owner Mark Cuban encouraged fans to bring all sorts of noisemakers in response to Sacramento fans clanging cowbells behind Dallas' bench during the first two games of the series.

Just before Thursday's game, approximately 500 cowbells were distributed by a local company to people sitting in the seats behind the Kings' bench. With the big ones, he also gave out a drumstick so they could be banged to maximum volume. Minority owner Linda Carter brought an industrial strength sized one to her courtside seat.

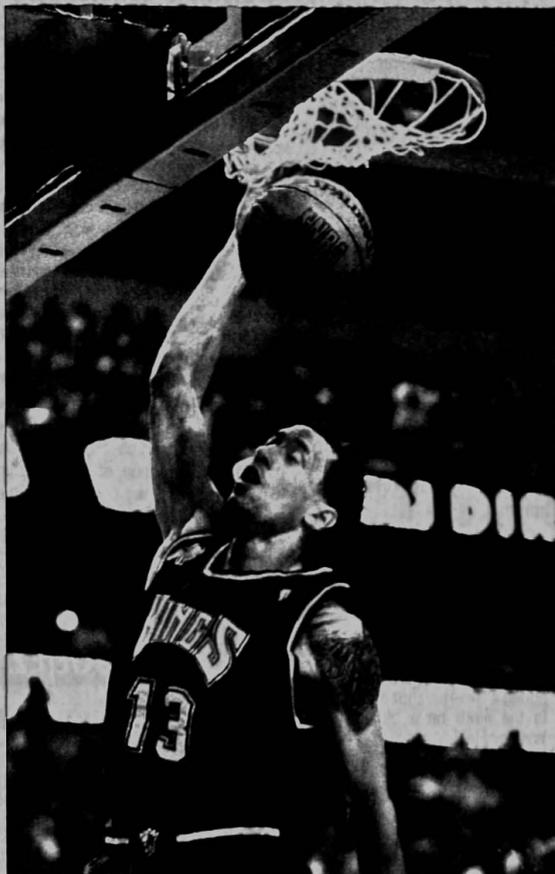

The cacophony began about an hour before tipoff and continued throughout the game.

It didn't seem to bother the Kings much.

They were more worried about Christie, their top defensive player, who sprained his right ankle in the second quarter and had to be carried to the locker room. The team said he would not return to the game, but when Stojakovic was injured with 5:09 left in the third quarter and also had to be carried off the court, Christie returned with less than a minute left in the quarter.

Stojakovic didn't return but Christie took over.

Christie didn't miss a shot, going 6-6 from both the field and the free-throw line. His biggest 3-pointer followed one by Dallas' Steve Nash that had pulled the Mavericks within 111-107.

Shaq expresses

annoyance with coach

EL SEGUNDO, Calif. (AP) — Add another ailment to Shaquille O'Neal's injury list — a sprained left ankle.

And when asked about it Thursday, the Los Angeles Lakers' big man took a shot at coach Phil Jackson.

"Ask Phil, he knows everything," an obviously annoyed O'Neal told the Associated Press when asked at what point during Game 2 the injury occurred.

O'Neal spoke as he entered the passenger side of a vehicle taking him to the airport for the Lakers' trip to San Antonio.

Jackson had said a day earlier he had a "heated discussion with Shaq about getting actively involved in chasing the ball down."

Hampered for months by a painful arthritic big right toe that twice landed him on the injury list, O'Neal required three stitches in his right index finger to close a cut he sustained during the Lakers' 86-80 victory in Game 1 of the Western Conference semifinal series with the Spurs.

That injury required re-stitching after the second game Tuesday night because it reopened, and seven stitches were applied.

"His finger looks terrible," teammate Kobe Bryant said.

O'Neal didn't practice Thursday before the team left for San Antonio, and when asked about his condition, Lakers spokesman John Black said it was unchanged but added that O'Neal had tweaked his left ankle during San Antonio's 88-85 victory in Game 2.

Iverson still wants it his way after 6 years

By Rob Maaddi

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — After six years with the Philadelphia 76ers and five tumultuous seasons with coach Larry Brown, Allen Iverson still wants to do things his way.

Sure, he's won an MVP award, been to three All-Star games, captured three scoring titles, and reached the NBA Finals. But Iverson doesn't realize he could be an even better player and make his teammates better by improving his practice habits.

In a bizarre 35-minute news conference Tuesday, Iverson lashed out against those who question his work ethic, scoffed at the notion that lifting weights can help his game, and couldn't believe that practice had become such an issue.

"I'm supposed to be the franchise player, and we're in here talking about practice. I mean, listen, we're talking about practice," Iverson said, becoming more incredulous each time he repeated the word. "Not a game. Not a game. Not a game. We're talking about practice. Not a game. Not the game that I go out there and die for and play every game like it's my last. Not the game. We're talking about practice, man. I mean how silly is that? And we're talking about practice."

Practice is an issue because Iverson doesn't take it seriously enough. Although the 76ers won't say how many practices Iverson missed or was late for, he's been known to offer flimsy excuses.

If Michael Jordan had the same attitude, he might not have won those six championships. The same could be said for Magic Johnson, Larry Bird, and other star players who believed they should be the first to arrive at practice and the last to leave.

"He knows that every great player in this league who has continued to improve has worked on his game, and he knows every great player that's been on a winning team has set an example in a positive way for his teammates," Brown said.

Iverson's scoring average has increased three-straight years. But his shooting percentage has gone down each of those seasons, dropping to a career-low 39.8 percent this year. And his turnover ratio has gone up the last three seasons.

A few extra jumpers in practice probably couldn't hurt. Neither would spending a few more minutes with his teammates, learning their strengths and weaknesses, getting more familiar with where they'll be on the court so he doesn't have to throw blind passes when he drives to the basket and finds three defenders in his face.

MVP accolades swing in favor of Duncan

By T.A. Badger

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — San Antonio Spurs forward Tim Duncan edged New Jersey Nets guard Jason Kidd for NBA MVP honors Thursday in the award's fifth-closest finish since the media began voting in 1981.

Duncan received 57 first-place votes and 954 points from a panel of 126 sports writers and broadcasters, while Kidd drew 45 first-place votes and 897 points.

Shaquille O'Neal was third with 696 points.

After word of Duncan's selection got out Monday, Nets coach Byron Scott and O'Neal protested that the wrong player won.

Kidd himself was more gracious, saying he was happy for Duncan.

Duncan, who finished second to Philadelphia's Allen Iverson in last year's MVP voting, acknowledged that a number of players had exceptional seasons.

"I'm not going to give it back," he said after receiving the Maurice Podoloff Trophy from Commissioner David Stern in a windowless meeting room at the Alamodome, "but if someone else won it, I wouldn't dispute it."

The 7-foot forward, dressed in a red T-shirt, denim shorts and sandals, said he started the 2001-02 season wanting to have the best season of his career.

The MVP award "was kind of a goal I had in mind," he acknowledged. "It puts a top on the season that we had."

The 57-point gap between Duncan and Kidd was the smallest since Karl Malone beat Alonzo Mourning by 54 after the 1998-99 season.

The closest margin was in 1989-90, when Magic Johnson edged Charles Barkley by 22 points, even though Barkley had more No. 1 votes.

Duncan, in his fifth pro season, set personal bests in scoring average (25.5 points) and rebounding average (12.7) while leading the Spurs to the Midwest Division title and a tie for the league's second-best record (58-24).

He earlier was voted to the All-NBA first team for the fifth time and to the All-Defensive first team for the fourth straight year.

The Spurs play O'Neal's Los Angeles Lakers in Game 3 of their Western Conference semifinal series on Friday in San Antonio.

"We're thrilled for Tim," Spurs coach Gregg Popovich said after the team's practice Thursday. "All the candidates were fantastic this season, so Tim really feels humbled by it."

Duncan ranked fifth in the league in scoring, second in rebounding, and third in blocked shots (2.48 average). His 67 double-doubles led the league.

Molder finishes at top in Nelson Classic

By Doug Ferguson

Associated Press

IRVING, Texas — Coming off his first top-10 finish of the year on the PGA Tour, Bryce Molder had plenty of confidence Thursday and posted a 7-under 63 for a share of the lead in the Byron Nelson Classic.

Coming off a three-week break after winning the Masters, Tiger Woods had plenty of rust and was nowhere near the lead.

"I kept it under 80," Woods said when asked if he could take anything positive out of a blustery day that magnified his mistakes, leading to bogeys on two of the final four holes for a 1-over 71 on the easier Cottonwood Valley course.

Molder has no such concerns.

After a tie for ninth last week in New Orleans, which made him eligible for the strong field in the Verizon Nelson Classic, Molder birdied five of six holes down the back nine of the TPC at Las Colinas and finished tied with Joe Durant.

David J. Phillip/Associated Press

Tiger Woods tees off on the 11th hole during the first round of the Byron Nelson Classic on Thursday.

necessarily take my very best golf to have a chance to win."

Durant, a two-time winner on tour last year, had his 63 on Cottonwood Valley.

Despite 20 mph gusts typical of Texas this time of the year, scores were typically low.

Nick Price, who contended at the Nelson last year, Lee Janzen, Frank Lickliter, David Gossett, and Esteban Toledo shot 64s, while Steve Flesch was among those at 65.

David Duval, who had an MRI exam on his right shoulder on Wednesday and found nothing but tendinitis, turned in a 66 and began to wonder whether his fortunes might finally turn around this week.

Two months ago, Duval described his season as a "train wreck," with no top 10s this year. Since then, he has missed the cut in the Masters, and the shoulder injury from landing on his face while snowboarding hasn't gone away.

Red Sox on 9-game streak

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Jose Offerman and Shea Hillenbrand homered to lead the Boston Red Sox to their ninth-straight win and a three-game sweep of the Oakland Athletics with a 5-1 victory Thursday.

Derek Lowe (5-1), two games removed from pitching a no-hitter, won his fourth-straight decision, allowing one run and six hits in eight innings.

Jermaine Dye drove in the only run for the A's, who have lost seven of nine. Tim Hudson (3-4) lost for the fourth time in five decisions.

The Red Sox (24-7), who have the best record in baseball, are off to their best start since going 25-6 in 1946. Their nine-game winning streak is the longest since a 12-game streak in August 1995.

Rangers 4, White Sox 1

ARLINGTON, Texas — Fill-in starter Joaquin Benoit pitched six innings for his first career win, and Hector Ortiz homered for the first time in Texas' victory.

Benoit (1-0), replacing an injured Ismael Valdes, allowed one run and four hits, with three strikeouts and three walks. He retired the last 10 batters he faced. Hideki Irabu got his eighth save.

Giants 4, Mets 3

No Byung-Hyun Schiraldi here

By Bob Baum
Associated Press

PHOENIX — The image millions of baseball fans have of Byung-Hyun Kim is a sad one — the stocky young South Korean bent over in emotional agony, consoled by teammate Mark Grace after two dreadful World Series appearances in Yankee Stadium.

Many wondered if they had witnessed the end of his career.

Six months later, with a flamboyant new leg-kick and a baffling array of sidearm pitches, Kim has answered all doubts. As he said so often in spring training, "I'm fine."

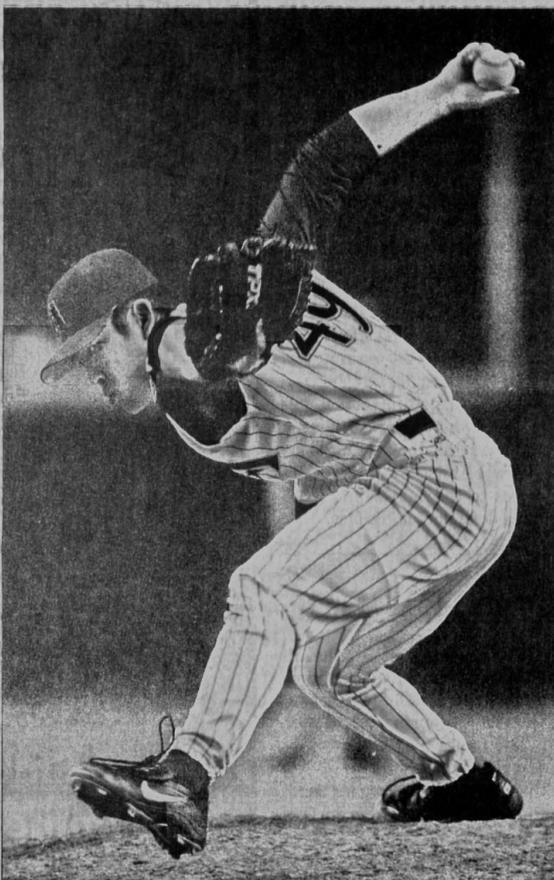

Kim has appeared in 16 of Arizona's 34 games and allowed one run in 19 innings — an ERA of 0.47. He has struck out 34, walked five, and converted all 10 save opportunities.

"He's been the most dominating pitcher in baseball to this point and one of the best stories I've ever been around," said teammate Curt Schilling. "After everything he endured last year, and reading story after story of, 'Was he going to survive?' He's been phenomenal. It's awesome to watch."

Kim has allowed one hit over his last 9½ innings. In the Diamondbacks' just-completed nine-game homestand, Kim made seven appearances.

He struck out eight in a row before his ninth-inning appearance on Wednesday night in a 4-3 Arizona victory over Pittsburgh. Perhaps a bit weary, he walked two but began a crucial double play when he fielded a bunt and whirled to throw to second. Then, with the tying run on third, he struck out Aramis Ramirez to end the game.

"It's hard to keep him out of there," manager Bob Brenly said. "It's so tempting because he's such a great weapon to use."

Roy Dabner/Associated Press

Arizona's Byung-Hyun Kim throws to Pittsburgh Pirates Adrian Brown, during the ninth inning on May 7 in Phoenix.

Kim has not forgotten the World Series. He relives the two-out, game-tying home run he gave up to Tino Martinez in the ninth inning of Game 4, the game-winning homer he allowed to Derek Jeter moments later, and the game-tying, two-out ninth inning shot by Scott Brosius in Game 5. "I knew that I did a mistake, and I don't want to repeat that mistake again," Kim said through an interpreter. "That thinking is in my heart always. That was the hardest time I've ever faced in my life."

Coleman, Poots to prepare for Big Tens

Two members of the Iowa men's track and field team, Juan Coleman and Justin Poots, will travel to Minneapolis this weekend to prepare for the Big Ten championships. The two will compete in the Last Chance Meet at the University of Minnesota's Bierman Field beginning at 4 p.m. Saturday.

Coleman and Poots have both had nagging hamstring injuries during the outdoor season, which diminished their ability to compete. Coleman ran in only the 1,600-meter relay at last weekend's Iowa Musco Twilight Invitational, while Poots fell during the preliminaries of the 110-meter hurdles. Iowa coach Larry Wiczorek said this weekend's competition will focus on tuning up for the Big Ten meet and getting back into the full swing of competition for the two sprinters.

The rest of the team will stay home to practice in preparation for the Big Ten championships, May 17-19 in Madison.

Hawkeyes attempt to end 23-game streak

This weekend: Iowa will try to end a nasty 23-game losing streak to the Minnesota Gophers when the Hawkeyes travel to Minneapolis for a critical four-game series. The first pitch will be at 6:30 p.m. today. A Saturday double-header will begin at 4 p.m., and the finale will be May 12 at 1 p.m. All games will be broadcast on KXIC.

Double trouble: The Hawkeyes fell to Wisconsin-Milwaukee on Tuesday in both ends of a double-header. Iowa fell behind early in both games and couldn't stage late rallies, losing, 8-6 and 7-3. The Hawkeyes dropped to 21-24, but it did not harm them in the conference race, and the team could use the losses as a motivation to get an early win against the Gophers.

On Minnesota: The Gophers lead the Big Ten with a 14-6 record. They hold a slim half-game lead over Ohio State for the top spot. They are third in the league in batting but actually rank below Iowa in terms of staff ERA. They have won 11 in a row, including a spanking of Purdue in four-straight games in West Lafayette last weekend.

The streak: Minnesota has won a gaudy 23-straight against Iowa dating back to 1996. Iowa really never came close to the Gophers them last season, but this year's squad has a real chance to win a couple. While the Gophers are playing superbly right now, the Hawkeyes have proved they can hang with anyone in the conference if they bring their A game.

Fighting for No. 6: Iowa enters the weekend one game out of the final Big Ten Tournament slot. While it's perhaps unreasonable to think the Hawks will win this series, if they can take one or two, they will be in position next week when Illinois comes to town to beat the Illini and make the tournament.

Olympic bobsledders to travel to Iowa

The men's Olympic bobsled team, composed of five-time Olympian Brian Shimer, Travis Bell, and Dan and Darrin Steele, will travel to Iowa to show their appreciation of and support for the state in their victories at the 2002 Olympics in Salt Lake City. The men's bobsled team captured silver and bronze medals.

The team, which is traveling with their sled and their medals, will meet with students, business leaders, and the public in Cedar Rapids and Davenport today at the Kenworth trucking dealerships.

Iowa businessman Rod French, the president of Kenworth Mid-Iowa, played a major role by providing the runners on the bobsled. The runners are the foundation of the sled and proved to be a key component in the team's Olympic wins. The bobsled featured a special decal entitled the "Spirit of Iowa" to show the team's appreciation to French's contribution.

"The trucking industry is built upon pride and a consistency to strive for excellence that parallels the success behind this bobsled team," French said. "This is an opportunity for the trucking industry to partner with an event that draws attention to a very positive aspect of the American spirit."

Meder tears ACL in WNBA camp

Former Iowa women's basketball standout Lindsey Meder suffered a torn anterior cruciate ligament in her right knee at WNBA preseason practice with Minnesota on Wednesday. Meder was drafted by the Lynx on April 21 in the fourth round.

Meder plans to stay in Minneapolis to rehabilitate her knee, but she will miss the entire WNBA season, which will run from June until the end of August.

The Solon, Iowa, native finished her career on top of the Big Ten and Iowa in 3-point field goals made and in 3-point field-goal percentage. She helped lead the Hawkeyes to back-to-back second-round NCAA appearances in 2001 and 2002.

Meder is one of two Hawkeyes drafted in the 2002 WNBA draft. Jerica Watson was drafted by the Miami Sol in the fifth round. Watson also tore her ACL in January of her sophomore year at Iowa.

Die-hard fans remain

CROWD

Through the leanest of times, when the Hornets almost never won, The Hive was always alive.

The fans gave the team a standing ovation following a 40-point loss in their first-ever game and a parade through the city at the end of that long season.

But fans grew weary of owner George Shinn allowing top players to leave via free agency, and when he was sued in a civil trial on a sexual-assault charge, they tuned out permanently.

In financial trouble, he sold a share of the team to Atlanta businessman Ray Woodruff, a man who quickly rubbed the remaining fans the wrong way with his demands for a new arena and refusal to use any team money to build it.

City leaders refused to help with a new arena without letting the voters decide. The citizens of Charlotte adamantly refused in June 2001, and the wheels were put in motion for a move to another city.

Still, the die-hards remained. They pasted cardboard over the "Go Hornets Go" sign to change it to "Stay Hornets Stay!" before Game 3.

They made T-shirts blasting ownership and waved signs imploring the team to stay. But there weren't enough, and everyone knew it.

"I want the Hornets to stay. I've been coming to games since I was 1 year old," said 11-year-old Jessica Crenshaw of Rock Hill, S.C.

"But no one comes to the games, no one loves basketball here. So I guess they'll go even though I don't want them to."

Doug Potenski arrived at 4:30, more than two hours before tipoff, so he could stand near the players' entrance and ask the Hornets to sign some of his memorabilia.

By his estimate, he attends only 12 games a year. But he's got two young sons at home, and when they're older, Potenski wants them to have something to remember the old Charlotte Hornets by.

"I don't think it's fair to the fans who have been loyal through all this," he said. "This is a political thing between the mayor and the owners of this team, and it's the basketball fans of Charlotte who will suffer come the end of the season."

Gable: Four daughters are something special

"Jenni and I never really had the competitiveness in us — it skipped us and went straight to Molly and my little sister Mackenzie," Annie said. "My dad likes to tell the story that T-ball was the extent of [Jenni and my] athletic ability — I would do cartwheels in the outfield and draw pictures in the sand."

But Dan Gable, the self-described family-man, said despite having won "nearly all the matches I coached and wrestled," winning wasn't the only thing he emphasized in his family.

"I've always told [my daughters] that it's not whether you win or lose," Dan Gable said. "Like on the wrestling mat, every time someone walks off the mat, they're both winners. One just gets their hand raised a little higher. It's about giving it all you've got."

The former Iowa coach said having all daughters was "something special" — something that allowed him to be a successful coach, which would have been harder to achieve with sons.

"I needed to be able to come home from wrestling," he said. "Things like taking a son to the bathroom — little things — that would have been distractions, plus the pressure. I never had to deal with that [with daughters]."

Having daughters at home meant the former Iowa coach continued to coach once he came home — but not in his usual role.

"We used to have cheerleading competitions in the house, and my dad would join in sometimes," Molly Gable said.

It also meant calming down from a rough practice and dealing with the input of his four daughters and his wife, Kathy.

"There were times when I came home, and I was a little upset about something because I couldn't leave it on the mat or in the wrestling room, and I brought it home with me," the 1970 Iowa State graduate said. "But my daughters and wife usually knew when to stay away and when enough was enough. The best way for me to settle down was to get in a good workout myself."

Molly Gable said that she and her sisters grew up following Iowa athletics — often donning cheerleading outfits at wrestling meets as children — but she did not make the decision to follow her two older sisters to Iowa until she visited Iowa State. Only after carefully discussing it with her parents did the 19-year-old freshman decide to don the black and gold.

"I think the program here at Iowa sold [Molly]," Dan Gable said. "She only looked at Iowa State and Iowa, but I think the difference was that she fit in a little better with the athletes here, and she liked both coaches. It was a team that would be more appropriate for her and her nature. Iowa State would have been OK, too — that's my alma mater — but she just seemed to fit in better with her visit here."

Molly Gable said that adjusting to competition at the college level was a dramatic change from her swimming days at City High, but the transitions were eased by a closely knit team of swimmers and a tip or two along the way from dad.

"He [Gable] tried get me prepared for the mental aspect," she said with a smile. "But sometimes, when he would try to coach me on how to swim, I wouldn't always listen."

Not listening to an icon who cannot attend an athletics event without being mobbed by hordes of over-eager, autograph-seeking fans?

"If there's something that's so obvious that hits me right in the face, why should I keep it in me?" the 1972 Olympic Gold Medalist said. "All my life I've been a coach, or an athlete, and if there's something there ... In reality, I want her coach to coach her. But if there's something that sticks out, I'll question it — I'll question input, which doesn't always go across that well."

Dan Gable insists he is like any other parent — he will dispense advice, whether it falls on deaf ears or not.

"Don't think you're wasting your time by giving input," he said knowingly, as if speaking to a crowd of thousands of eager parents. "Because they'll act like they don't hear, but they hear. But since you do give some input, they'll know you care. And they hear."

But he also knows his level of expertise on the mat may not extend to success on the water.

"I'm not the swimming coach, so maybe if I am saying something that's inappropriate, maybe she shouldn't hear," he said as he tried to conceal a smile.

O'Keefe said that while the 53-year-old father of four is very interested in Molly Gable's success, he has by no means overstepped his bounds as a parent, partly, she said, because he doesn't know that much about swimming.

And while the winningest coach in the history of Iowa athletics will never see his success repeated on the mat by one of his kin, his third daughter just may make Gable-esque waves in the water.

TENNIS BRIEF

Agassi marches on in Rome

ROME (AP) — Thirteen years and seven Grand Slam wins later, Andre Agassi still remembers squandering a championship here against Argentina's Alberto Mancini.

On Thursday, the American moved one step closer to winning one of the few significant titles to elude him, beating another Argentine to move into the quarterfinals of the Italian Open.

"It would mean a lot to win here," the 32-year-old Agassi said after defeating Agustin Calleri (7-6 [4], 7-5). "Just to be here in the thick of it, competing and having the chance to win is all I can ask for."

The match against Calleri had all the makings of a classic clay-court encounter. The two players slugged away from the baseline for more than two hours, approaching the net only to run down an occasional drop shot. There were even a few calls overturned when the chair umpire ventured down to inspect the ball marks left on the red clay.

"I thought it was a very high-quality match," Agassi said. "It boiled down to a just a few points each set. It was a good test for me."

Agassi closed out the win by breaking Calleri in the 11th game of the second set when the Argentine double faulted after seven deuces. Agassi then served out the match.

Against Mancini, the then-19-year-old Agassi could not serve out the match and wound up losing in five sets.

"I ended up just hitting a forehand rally shot just straight into the net," Agassi said. "But that was 13 years ago, so I'm trying to forget."

Agassi will next play Spain's Albert Costa, a (7-6 [5], 6-3) winner over countryman Albert Montanes.

Two other Americans joined Agassi in the quarters.

Andy Roddick defeated South Africa's Wayne Ferreira (3-6, 6-4, 6-2). Roddick's Davis Cup teammate, James Blake, also came back from a set down to defeat Chilean Fernando Gonzalez (4-6, 6-3, 6-3).

SOFTBALL

really deflated," Blevins said.

Iowa countered with a pair of runs in the bottom of the inning, getting on the board when Liz Dennis doubled home Christina Schmaltz. The two bagger moved Dennis' record for doubles in a season to 20. Birocci sacrificed pinch-runner Laura Chipman to third base before Kristin Johnson lashed an RBI single to left.

While the second inning proved to be the only time the Hawkeyes would score, it was not the only opportunity the team had. Iowa stranded runners in scoring position in the third, sixth, and seventh innings.

"We definitely struggled with getting quality at bats with runners in scoring position," Blevins said. "I felt good about the people we had at the plate during those times, and we out-hit them on the day, but our hits were scattered."

Iowa finished the day with eight hits to just three for the victorious Illini.

Illinois starter Sherri Taylor (19-17) allowed eight hits and recorded five strikeouts to send the Illini in to a second meeting with second-seeded Ohio State. The Buckeyes shutout the upstart Illini, 5-0, sending them in to a meeting with Wisconsin today. The loser of that game faces the possibility of seeing Iowa later in the day should the Hawkeyes defeat Penn State, which lost to top-seed Michigan 4-3 on Thursday.

If Iowa and Illinois both advance today, it would set up a rematch at 4 p.m. today. But the Hawkeyes must defeat Penn State in order to earn an opportunity to play another game. The Hawkeyes posted back-to-back shutouts of the Nittany Lions with 5-0 and 2-0 victories on April 14 in Iowa City. Blevins said she expects a very tough game from 29-23 Penn State, which performed well enough at the end of the season to play its way into the tournament.

quote of the day

You can boo some more if it makes you feel better.

— Metropolitan Opera general manager Joseph Volpe, to the opera-house crowd, which booed him loudly when he walked onstage to announce that famed tenor Luciano Pavarotti had the flu and was canceling his next-to-last scheduled performance at the Met.
