Mystery of Deep Throat lingers

On the 30th anniversary of the Watergate break-in, some questions are still unanswered

By Howard Kurtz
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Three decades after the Watergate break-in, the mystery — who was that chain-smoking man in the parking garage? — somehow endures. Richard Nixon, H.R. Haldeman, John Ehrlichman, John Mitchell, and Katharine Graham are all dead. An entire generation has come of age since the June 17, 1972, burglary that ultimately brought down a president. Much about the crisis that transfixed the nation has been reduced to trivia questions.

But not the identity of Deep Throat. Trying to guess Bob Woodward's secret source, the shadowy figure portrayed by Hal Holbrook in All the President's Men, remains a cottage industry. John Dean, who helped expose the Watergate cover-up, narrows the circle to four suspects. In an e-book published on Salon.com, the former White House counsel says he believes the source may be Pat Buchanan, the "Crossfire" veteran and three-time presidential candidate. Or former Nixon speechwriter Ray Price or Nixon assistant Steve Bull. Or ex-spokesman Ron

UI student to be regent

Neala Arnold, an education major, will be student member of board

By Sara Faiwell
The Daily Iowan

Gov. Tom Vilsack has appointed a UI senior to fill the student slot on the state of Iowa Board of Regents, making her the first student representative from the UI in a decade.

Neala Arnold, an elementary education major, will join the nine-member board that governs the state's universities on July 1. She will serve the remaining nine months of Iowa State University senior Lisa Ahrens' term, which will end in April 2003 but could be extended.

"This is an unexpected surprise, but I'm eager to get things going," said Arnold, who applied for the position earlier this month. "I am just excited to have a way to be involved with the university."

Arnold, 21, said she wants to learn more about the administrative perspective of a state school, as well as to understand more about the budget.

She said she is aware that keeping education affordable will be a challenge for the regents in the upcoming year. The board will discuss tuition/fee increases this fall.

"I know that tuition increases do hurt students," Arnold said. "But we must make sure the quality of our education is maintained."

The Bettendorf native says she knows she has a lot to learn about how the university system runs. Her first meeting as a regent will be July 17-18 at the University of Northern Iowa.

"Neala will be a great representative," said Renita Schmidt, a UI graduate student who has taught and has kept in contact with Arnold. "She will take the position seriously and will listen to all points of view."

Arnold said she begins student-teaching and an honors project in the fall, but she will still make enough time for to be an active regent. She also

Two days early, but just in time

A local man says he got the perfect Father's Day present this weekend

By Karen Heinselman
The Daily Iowan

Born two days before her due date, Elizabeth Ayers delivered the only present her father wanted for Father's Day.

In the words of Michael Ayers, Elizabeth came into the world just under the wire, born two days before her mother's birthday, June 17, and less than 24 hours before Father's Day.

"I'm a father for Father's Day," Michael said. "We all got a present."

A first-time father, Michael prepared himself for the possibility of spending Father's Day in the UI Hospitals and Clinics. He didn't mind because Elizabeth is the very reason he had something to celebrate on Sunday. He told his wife, Rachael, to forget about buying him a present.

Little Elizabeth, born 9:30 a.m. June 15, lay flat on her back on the hospital bed, diapered and bare-chested. Michael knelt at the foot of the bed, struggling to tug a doll-sized, yellow outfit over her head, before scooping her up in his arms. As he sat on the side of the bed, securely cradling little Elizabeth in his arms, he couldn't stop smiling. Elizabeth, who weighed in at 7 pounds, 6 ounces, and 19½ inches long, rested quietly, keeping her eyes tightly shut and nestling her red face in her father's shirt.

New mother Rachael perched on the corner of the bed, looking over her husband's shoulder. In a soft voice, almost a whisper, she noted that Elizabeth was such a quiet baby. The other babies at the hospital seem to be crying a lot, Rachael observed, but Elizabeth didn't make a sound.

As long as she's being held, Michael quickly added. The couple spent their first night passing Elizabeth back and forth, sleeping in one-hour shifts to keep her from crying. At this point, sleep deprivation is the only anxiety for new parents, although both are still adjusting to the reality of Elizabeth's arrival.

Beginning around midnight June 14, the labor lasted nine hours. Michael was the first to see Elizabeth, cutting the umbilical cord himself.

"I ended up watching more than I said I would," Michael said. "I don't know what I expected ... it was surreal. It is still hard to put everything together."

Michael gently touched his daughter's head, which was covered in a mass of dark hair. He tenderly held her tiny hand. Her fingernails are long for one so small.

According to the new parents, Elizabeth is the best baby in the hospital, even though she was only one of a handful of newborns at UIHC.

With a slew of relatives traveling from as far away as New York to welcome Elizabeth to the family, the newborn can expect plenty of attention. Not only is she the Ayers' first child, but she is the first grandchild.

Shepard award-winner stays true to his heart

Scott Spilger has no qualms about revealing the true passions of his heart.

On most weekends, he can be found sipping a cup of French roast coffee while sifting through pages of his favorite magazine, The Economist, and writing about "random significant events in his life."

Similarly, the national merit scholar and former debate-team champion is open about his homosexuality.

Spilger, who graduated from City High School this month, was chosen as one of four recipients of the Matthew Shepard Scholarship, an honor awarded annually to openly gay Iowa high-school students.

"The characteristics that Matthew Shepard exhibited not only as a gay person, but as an individual, were really inspiring to me," Spilger said. "He was a very kind individual, and it is an incredible honor to know that I'm attending college because of him."

He said it would have been difficult to attend the UI without the scholarship, which was unveiled in March 2000 by Gov. Tom Vilsack and Judy Shepard, the mother of Matthew Shepard, a former student at the University of Wyoming who was tortured and murdered in 1998 for being gay.

Judy Shepard, who regularly speaks on U.S. campuses on behalf of the Matthew Shepard Foundation, presented the award to Spilger and three other Iowa high-school seniors in Des Moines last week.

Gunman breaks in on residents in Coralville home

By Grant Schulte
The Daily Iowan

UI senior Damon Shelton was eating dinner with his girlfriend at his Coralville duplex on the night of June 15 when he heard his front-door handle jiggle.

A white man in a white tank top, blue jeans, black baseball cap, and sunglasses entered and raised his shirt. Without making any demand, he pointed a handgun at the couple, who quickly fled.

Local authorities surrounded the duplex on South Ridge Drive with shotguns and a SWAT team for three hours before determining the armed man had fled the scene. They were still looking for the suspect Sunday.

While no shots were fired, Shelton recalled being frightened as he recounted the incident at the table where the attack occurred.

"You can't imagine it until it happens to you," said Shelton, whose family has lived in the house with his mother about five years. "My girlfriend and I both looked at each other and were like, 'Who is this guy?'"

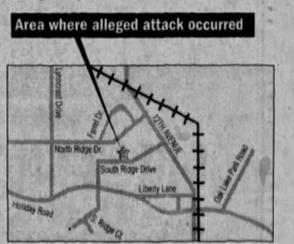

Shelton and his girlfriend simultaneously sprinted from the table, with Shelton running through the family laundry room and garage. His girlfriend, a Kirkwood student, fled to an upstairs bedroom with the family's three dogs to call police.

The man pursued Shelton, who tore his meniscus after leaping over clutter in the garage. The man stopped pursuing Shelton after he ran to a neighbor's back door and called the police.

Dems line up behind plan to topple Saddam

By Pete Yost
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Prominent Democrats in Congress called Sunday for removing Saddam Hussein from power, endorsing a classified Bush administration plan that gives the CIA broader power to take action against the Iraqi leader.

The administration "is trying to bring about a change in regime ... I think it is an appropriate action to take," said House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., appearing on ABC's "This Week." Gephardt and other members of Congress — both Democrats and Republicans — cited Saddam's alleged pursuit of weapons of mass destruction and violations of U.N. resolutions and international law as justification for such a move.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle said he is satisfied with the degree of consultation so far between the administration and Congress on the plan.

"There is broad support for a regime change in Iraq," and "we want to work with the administration and try to find the best way and the best time to do this," said Daschle, D-S.D., who appeared on "Fox News Sunday."

An outline of the administration plan leaked Sunday in a Washington Post story that said President Bush early this year directed the CIA to increase support to Iraqi opposition groups and expand intelligence-collection efforts within the Iraqi government. The Post also said the plan calls for possible use of CIA and U.S. Special Forces teams to capture Hussein and to kill him if the teams are acting in self-defense.

"If Saddam Hussein's around five years from now, we've failed," said Sen. Joseph R. Biden, D-Del., the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, appearing on CBS's "Face the Nation."

Asked if the plan to give the CIA broader authority had given him any pause, Biden said, "Only if it doesn't work."

Like Daschle and Gephardt, Biden is a possible Democratic presidential candidate in 2004.

Congressional Republicans, too, offered support.

"We need a regime change in Iraq. If we can do it on the cheap," short of a war with U.S. troops, "that's fine," said Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz.

Several government officials declined to discuss the plan.

"We don't comment on intelligence matters," said White House spokeswoman Jeanne Mamo.

On other terrorism-related issues:

- House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, said Congress may be able to pass legislation to create a homeland-security department by the first anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks. "This is a big deal. It's a big job. And we will have to work together," said Armey, who chairs a select committee to oversee the legislation.

- Alleged dirty-bomb suspect Jose Padilla wasn't located by U.S. officials until less than 48 hours before his May 8 arrest, Newsweek reported. U.S. officials found him after a search of itineraries of thousands of passengers traveling toward the United States.

- Padilla allegedly gave Osama bin Laden's operations chief, Abu Zubaydah, a proposal to build a full-fledged nuclear device, Time reported. Zubaydah apparently cautioned Padilla to think smaller, resulting in the alleged plan for a dirty bomb, it said. Zubaydah was captured in Pakistan in March; he is now in U.S. custody.

Duncan testimony aided in Andersen conviction

By Mark Babineck
Associated Press

HOUSTON — The testimony of former Enron auditor David Duncan helped a jury to convict Arthur Andersen of obstruction of justice, but the same jury said it didn't believe in Duncan's guilt, even though he entered a guilty plea earlier this year.

On the witness stand, Duncan denied any overt efforts to destroy documents related to now-bankrupt energy-trader Enron, shed little light on Enron's accounting, and defended his maligned work checking Enron's books.

"We couldn't have paid him to be a better witness," lead Andersen attorney Rusty Hardin said after Duncan finished testifying last month.

Yet a small segment of Duncan's testimony, which had little to do with his own actions, swayed the jury toward a verdict of guilty June 15.

The conviction means Andersen — which must soon cease auditing public companies — faces probation and fines of at least $500,000 when the sentence is delivered Oct. 11.

According to jurors, the knockout blow came May 14, when Duncan testified that in-house attorney Nancy Temple told him to remove a sentence and her name from a memo regarding Andersen's take on Enron's Oct. 16 earnings release, which was rife with bad news.

"I believed it was misleading from a personal standpoint," Duncan said.

The same day, the first of four full days he spent on the witness stand during the six-week trial, Duncan recounted how he ordered employees on Oct. 23 to comply with the firm's document retention policy, which calls for organization of important documents and destruction of extraneous material.

Duncan said he knew compliance would mean items that might be of interest to a budding Securities and Exchange Commission investigation into Enron would be eliminated.

He pleaded guilty to obstruction of justice April 9 and agreed to cooperate with the government in exchange for immunity for other possible crimes and the recommendation of a light sentence.

But if this jury had tried him, panelist Jack Gallo said, Duncan wouldn't have been convicted.

"We had five [names] up there and crossed them through with a line as we got down to one," Gallo said.

One of the names crossed out was Duncan's, despite his own admission and a guilty plea that was spelled out painstakingly for jurors.

Jury foreman Oscar Criner, who was the last holdout before the panel delivered the verdict after 10 days of deliberations, called all the evidence regarding mass shredding and e-mail deletion "largely superficial and largely circumstantial."

Instead, the jury focused on the suggestion that Temple, based at Andersen's headquarters in Chicago, gave Duncan regarding a memo he was writing about a conversation he had with Enron chief accounting officer Rick Causey.

Temple asked Duncan to remove a sentence and to eliminate her as an addressee because it might increase "the chances that I might be a witness, which I prefer to avoid," according to testimony and court documents. She also suggested Duncan delete "language that might suggest we have concluded the [Enron earnings] release was misleading."

Her attorney, Mark Hansen, said Sunday that Temple had only been doing her job.

"It appears that the jury agreed to convict only because it came up with its own theory of liability that wasn't even argued by the government," Hansen said. "Ms. Temple's edits to the memo were to make it accurate and preserve attorney-client privilege and couldn't possibly be construed as obstruction of justice, and the government didn't argue it was."

Temple still works for Andersen and has not been charged with a crime.

Duncan is to be sentenced Aug. 26.

Forestry worker arrested in fire

By Jennifer Hamilton
Associated Press

CASTLE ROCK, Colo. — A U.S. Forest Service employee set the fire that scorched more than 100,000 acres in Colorado and forced thousands to evacuate by burning a letter from her estranged husband in the Pike National Forest, authorities said Sunday.

Forestry technician Terry Barton, 38, admitted starting the fire while patrolling the forest to enforce a fire ban, said assistant U.S. Attorney Bill Leone.

She was charged with setting fire to timber in the national forest, damaging federal property, and making false statements to investigators, Leone said.

Barton said she started burning the letter from her estranged husband within a designated campfire ring, where fires normally would be allowed, then tried to put out the blaze.

"She attempted to suppress the fire, but it grew," Leone said.

Barton initially told authorities she discovered an illegal campfire and had tried to put it out by throwing dirt on it, but she was too late. An investigation led the Forest Service to doubt her story, Leone said.

If convicted, Barton could be sentenced to up to 10 years in prison and fines of up to $250,000. She was arrested Sunday morning; it was not immediately clear whether she had an attorney.

She was scheduled to make an initial court appearance in federal court today.

"I want to begin by saying, this is one of the hardest announcements I've had to make in my career," said Rick Cables, a regional forester for the Rocky Mountain Region for the U.S. Forest Service.

"I'm shocked and, with a lot of other people, in a state of disbelief," he said. "I'm saddened to say that one of our employees has admitted to starting the Hayman fire."

Jody Penny, 45, out of her Florissant Heights home since June 11 because of the fire, said she was sickened to learn the person suspected of starting it is from the area.

"We all wanted to believe it was some fool from somewhere else. You can understand that," she said. "That it's one of ours makes it real sad."

Firefighters gained ground Sunday on the blaze, which has burned within 40 miles of the Denver city limits since it was started June 8, threatening southwestern suburbs and destroying at least 22 homes.

With the blaze about 35 percent contained, approximately 5,400 people remained out of their homes. It was one of seven fires burning in the state Sunday.

"Hopefully, this fire is going to now stay essentially where it is," said Bobby Kitchens, a fire information officer. "We don't expect to see any more significant acreage gains."

Sheriff's deputies escorted some residents to retrieve belongings and assess damage, but they didn't allow them to stay. Frustrated residents waited at the command post, trying to learn when they'll be able to return for good.

"It started to get to be a long period because one of the big things is I don't like eating out. I miss cooking at home," said Bob James, 46, who has been out of his home north of Lake George since June 11.

Another blaze flared in southwestern Colorado and forced the evacuation of more than 330 homes. The latest fire had burned more than 20,000 acres in the San Juan National Forest by Sunday morning.

In addition to the evacuations, residents of 450 homes were told to be ready to leave. One cabin was destroyed, and fire managers were trying to determine whether others had burned.

More than 900 firefighters battled the blaze approximately 10 miles north of Durango.

In California, 200 residents and campers returned home after fleeing a fire that burned 3,500 acres and destroyed five homes on June 15 approximately 30 miles northeast of Bakersfield.

Higher humidity and slightly cooler temperatures also helped crews battling fires in northern New Mexico. The state's largest blaze, which has blackened 92,500 acres on the Philmont Scout Ranch, was 75 percent contained; full containment is expected Wednesday.

FBI terrorism cases up 6-fold

By David Pace
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The FBI has been seeking prosecution of international terrorism cases at six times the rate it did before Sept. 11, but more than half of those cases considered by federal prosecutors never made it to court, Justice Department records show.

In the year before the attacks on New York and Washington, FBI agents sent 10 international terrorism cases a month to U.S. attorneys for prosecution, according to the records obtained by Syracuse University's Transactional Records Access Clearinghouse. In the first six months after the attacks, they sent 59 a month.

The records reflect the intense FBI focus on anti-terrorism investigations after Sept. 11, but they also show prosecutors declined to file charges in 60 of the 98 FBI anti-terrorism cases they considered from October 2001 through March. The prosecutors did not reach a decision during the period on all of the more than 350 cases referred to them.

In half the cases not prosecuted, U.S. attorneys said there was a "lack of evidence of criminal intent" or no evidence a federal crime had been committed.

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., and Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, say they are troubled by both the high rate of declined prosecutions and the reasons prosecutors cite for not pursuing the cases.

The lawmakers asked Attorney General John Ashcroft and FBI Director Robert Mueller in a letter on June 14 to explain why so many FBI terrorism referrals are not being prosecuted.

FBI officials say the referral of a case to a U.S. attorney is not the equivalent of an FBI recommendation for prosecution. In anti-terrorism cases in particular, the officials said, much of the effort to prevent terrorist attacks does not result in prosecutions.

FBI spokesman Bill Carter said the exhaustive investigative effort to unravel the Sept. 11 plot may have contributed to the large number of international terrorism referrals that federal prosecutors chose not to pursue.

"Did we open cases that went down blind holes? Probably," Carter said in an interview. "But I don't have any direct knowledge of that."

The Sept. 11 investigation caused the overall number of crimes referred for prosecution by the FBI to drop by 23 percent during the first three months after the attacks. But by the end of March, the number of FBI referrals had climbed back to pre-Sept. 11 levels.

Despite assertions by Ashcroft and Mueller that the FBI was focusing more on terrorism prevention, the records show that bank robberies, drug violations, and bank frauds accounted for more than a third of all FBI referrals in the first six months after Sept. 11. That's roughly the same level as in the previous five years.

Leahy and Grassley said in their letter that the FBI's continuing focus on bank robberies, drug violations, and bank fraud raises "troubling questions about whether the FBI and Department of Justice are devoting sufficient resources to counterterrorism efforts."

They asked the FBI and Justice Department to provide a detailed breakdown of their bank robbery and drug-enforcement cases since Sept. 11.

"Director Mueller has to put more agents on the trail of Al Qaeda and other terrorists and leave the Bonnie-and-Clyde investigations to local authorities," Grassley said in a separate statement.

Carter said the bureau never stopped working other criminal investigations even as it began focusing more on terrorism prevention. He said many recent referrals for bank robberies and other crimes resulted from investigations that began long before Sept. 11.

"Cases don't just happen overnight," he said. "Many are long term and very complex investigations ... The cases referred by us to U.S. attorneys are usually not those opened the day before."

The Syracuse clearinghouse obtained the records after winning a two-court battle with the Justice Department over the Freedom of Information Act. The records come from internal administrative data that the department maintains on all criminal and civil cases.

Asbestos cases fill the courtrooms

By Leigh Strope
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An avalanche of asbestos lawsuits — many filed by people who are not extremely sick — is overwhelming courts and threatening companies even though the cancer-causing substance has not been widely used in the United States for almost 30 years.

More than 60 companies have sought bankruptcy protection since 2000 as a result of mounting exposure claims and hefty settlements over asbestos, a fibrous mineral commonly used until the mid-1970s in insulation and fireproofing material. They include Kaiser Aluminum, Bethlehem Steel, Owens Corning, and Armstrong World Industries.

"It's a growing problem when a lot of people thought it was a diminishing problem," said Mike Baroody, a lobbyist with the National Association of Manufacturers. His group has joined with the American Insurance Association to lead an alliance that is pressing Congress for relief.

Inhaling asbestos fibers can cause lung cancer and other deadly respiratory ailments, sometimes decades later.

An estimated 200,000 claims are pending in courts, with more than 90,000 filed just last year.

As more companies seek bankruptcy protection, new lawsuits target those that have only remote ties to asbestos.

"Claims are being put to anybody that's got money to pay," said David Bernick, a Chicago lawyer who represents two companies in bankruptcy — W.R. Grace, a supplier of construction chemicals and building materials, and Babcock and Wilcox, an engineering company.

His clients also include automakers Ford, General Motors, and Daimler Chrysler, which are fighting suits over asbestos once used in brakes.

W.R. Grace did not make asbestos but used it in fireproofing material. The company filed for bankruptcy in April 2001 after seeing an 81 percent increase in asbestos claims the year before.

Only about 10 percent of the claims involve people working in the construction business, Bernick said. Most are from people who at one time were inside a building containing asbestos fireproofing material.

Some lawyers representing very sick people fear that compensation for their clients is becoming more remote as more companies seek bankruptcy protection. Several of those attorneys have joined the business alliance alongside companies and insurers — once their traditional opponents on the issue — to lobby Congress.

"The only way, ironically, that people who are sick can get the compensation they need is to work with these companies," said Steve Kazan, a San Diego lawyer.

The alliance is seeking legislation that would give priority to the claims of the most seriously ill while preserving the rights of others to sue if they should become very sick.

It also wants to restrict where asbestos suits can be filed, arguing that lawyers are targeting courts where sympathetic juries have awarded big settlements to plaintiffs, including Mississippi, West Virginia, and east Texas.

However, Congress has never passed asbestos-related legislation over the past three decades, and Fred Baron, a Dallas lawyer who represents people exposed to asbestos, said he doubts whether it ever will because there is no national crisis.

Symptoms from asbestos-caused cancer and lung disease usually do not appear until 20 to 40 years after exposure. Many people are just now learning they are sick, while others who are not showing severe symptoms fear statutes of limitations will run out if they do not file now.

"It's the claims of people who are not sick that are overwhelming the system, adding to this burden of liability in ways a lot of people didn't foresee," Baroody said.

Approximately 10 percent of claimants in the past decade had some form of cancer, and roughly a third had developed the lung disease asbestosis, said Stephen Carroll, an economist at the Rand Institute for Civil Justice who has studied asbestos litigation.

Baron and other lawyers who represent workers not severely disabled say their clients still have been harmed and deserve to be compensated.

Rowley's actions a model for other federal agents

FBI agent Colleen Rowley, putting her career at risk, came forward recently to expose specific failures in the FBI regarding the terrorist attacks on Sept. 11. Her letter, addressed to FBI Director Robert Mueller and delivered to many members of Congress, addressed her dissatisfaction in the handling of the Zacarias Moussaoui case by the FBI headquarters. Rowley asserted that after arresting Moussaoui on immigration charges, FBI headquarters obstinately hampered the investigation.

Of course, exposing deficiencies in your employer is not always a career-building move. Traditionally, whistleblowers have been treated as pariahs after coming forward. In Rowley's case, when Attorney General John Ashcroft was asked about any possible backlash against Rowley, he replied only, "She won't lose her job." Apparently, Ashcroft refuses to recognize the great courage and dedication that Rowley has displayed. Not only should she be protected from any childish retribution, she should be held up as a role model for other federal agents.

Apparently, the possible threat of backlash was serious enough that members of Congress felt they had to personally intercede on Rowley's behalf. Sen. Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, and Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., co-wrote a letter to Ashcroft requesting his personal assurance that "there will be no retaliation of any type" against Rowley. In their letter, Leahy and Grassley also noted that past FBI whistleblowers had, in fact, suffered negative consequences from their participation in congressional investigations. Ashcroft's terse promise that Rowley will not be fired is definitely not enough. There are other forms of retaliation besides outright dismissal.

Rowley has displayed the kind of courage and conviction that should be a prerequisite for becoming a federal agent. While other people were either pointing fingers at other agencies or throwing up their hands in despair, Rowley was busy writing a letter to expose specific deficiencies in her own agency. In addition, rather than simply passing the letter up the chain of command where it probably would have quietly died, she instead delivered it to members of the Senate Intelligence Committee. What is her reward for bravery and initiative? A shady promise that she will not be fired.

Before we can repair the weaknesses of our intelligence agencies, we need to identify the problems they are facing. Only the field agents who are actively involved in investigations can truly say where the agencies need improvement. Therefore, it is imperative they feel encouraged to bring problems to the attention of their superiors. Rowley's example of specific, unflinching internal criticism should be held up as an example for all federal agents throughout our country. Unfortunately, however, it seems as though her superiors, especially the attorney general, are more interested in insulating themselves from blame rather than insulating our country from further terrorist attacks.

Free or "drug-free"?

In his thoughtful June 13 column, James Eaves-Johnson asks why some drugs require the creation of a punitive Nanny State, while other dangerous drugs are legal. Simply put, nontraditional drugs represent the counterculture to reactionaries in Congress intent on forcibly imposing their version of morality. Make no mistake, the war on some drugs is an intergenerational culture war, not a public-health campaign.

Diet is the No. 1 determinant of health outcomes. Do we really want the government monitoring everything that goes into our bodies? And if it is the proper role of government to punish citizens for unhealthy choices, why target drugs such as marijuana? Unlike alcohol, pot has never been shown to cause an overdose death, nor does it share the addictive properties of nicotine.

This country cannot afford to continue subsidizing the prejudices of hateful culture warriors. The drug war threatens the integrity of a country founded on the concept of limited government. The United States now has the highest incarceration rate in the world, due in large part to the war on some drugs.

It's not possible to wage a moralistic war against consensual vices unless privacy is completely eliminated, along with the Constitution. America can either be a free country or a "drug-free" country, but not both. Students who want to help make a difference should contact Students for Sensible Drug Policy at <http://www.ssdp.org>.

The results of a comparative study of European and U.S. rates of drug use can be found at: http://www.monitoringthefuture.org/pubs/espap\_pr.pdf.

Prohibition doesn't work

Major kudos to James Eaves-Johnson for his outstanding column "Put the DEA thugs out of business" (DI, June 13). Almost 100 percent of our so-called "drug-related" crime is caused by drug prohibition, not drugs.

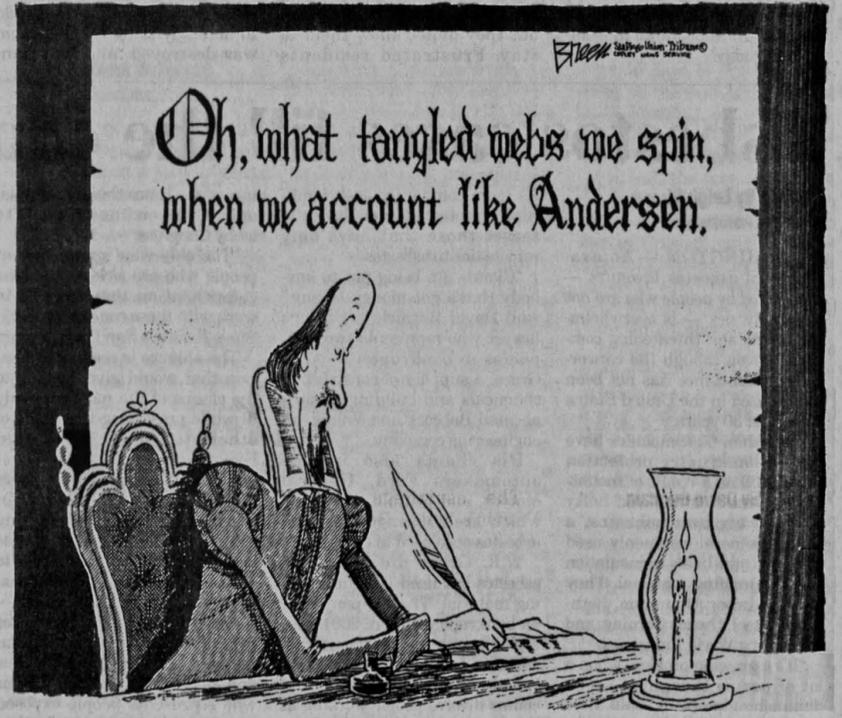

Today's meth labs are very similar to the illegal distilleries of the era known as the "Noble Experiment." During our alcohol-prohibition era, thousands died and thousands went blind and were crippled for life from what was then known as "bathtub gin."

Like the meth of today, the "bathtub gin" was easily made from household and industrial products. Like the meth of today, the "bathtub gin" was a product created by prohibition. Like the meth of today, illegal alcohol could be manufactured just about anywhere. Like the meth of today, Prohibition-era alcohol was of unknown quality, potency, and purity.

When Prohibition ended in 1933, almost 100 percent of the "bathtub gin" producers went out of business for economic reasons and stayed out of the business for economic reasons.

If prohibition worked, tobacco should be the first product prohibited and alcohol the second. But prohibition doesn't work, except to provide full employment for those doing the prohibiting.

Multitasking the way toward mediocrity

I'm confused. I was under the impression that the reason it is so important to go to college is so you can specialize in one thing, do it really well, and get paid a lot of money to do it for the rest of your working years.

As they say, "Do it well or not at all." But out the door with everything we thought we knew, apparently.

By the rest of the world's standards, it's OK to do a lot of things and do them sort of well, as long as the money keeps rolling in.

Did anyone know that Subway now serves breakfast? I know it touts itself as a healthy alternative to McDonald's and Burger King, but it isn't necessary to cover all three meals of the day. And even if it were, Subway can't be gaining that much profit from it. The market is already pretty saturated (McD's and BK, Hardees, not to mention real breakfast food such as cereal, yogurt, and fruit). But the real point is, nobody cares if Subway does breakfast, and nobody cares if it just does sandwiches — as long as it does them well.

Godfather's Pizza has also started serving chicken. Do you see Donutland serving steak? I'm sure people don't get overwhelming, body-quaking urges for Godfather's chicken. If it can't do it spectacularly, it shouldn't do it at all. The crossover isn't mandatory; it's a pizza joint. It should stick to what it does best: pizza.

Jennifer Lopez: multitasking at its finest. She sings, she acts, she designs clothes,

Amanda Mittlstedt

she owns a restaurant, and she's happily married.

But wait ... the marriage, as recently announced, has fallen apart. She's not winning any Grammys for her albums, nor has she been awarded any Oscars for her film performances (I just don't get it; what's not to love about The Cell?). Her clothing line is nothing more than sweats and T-shirts emblazoned with the "J. Lo" logo. So why not pick one talent and turn it into something that can be truly revered? Why would you want no time to breathe, to enjoy what you're doing?

When speaking of mediocrity, let us not forget the Iowa Legislature, which has already forgotten us and which is bringing the rest of the state along for the ride into Mediocre-ville.

The Republicans have designed a budget for the next fiscal year that shortchanges everyone. And faced with the end of this fiscal year and the possibility of a government shutdown with his veto of the budget, Gov. Tom Vilsack was forced to sign it. As a result, all are left with less than they deserve. The entire state gets an unworkable budget, schools get funds cut, students get an abysmal education, government programs can't do everything they need to, and we all are looking to jump ship (kudos to Mary Sue for having the guts to do it).

The resolution has never been, "Instead of making everything just so-so, let's cut some stuff. Completely. When the budget recovers, we'll decide if we liked it better the old way and maybe bring some programs back. Let's be fiscally responsible." For instance, the engineering program at the UI is great, but it's not especially necessary with a bigger, better one just two hours away at ISU. For the time being, we could merge the programs. In exchange, all the business students at ISU could come here. Who knows? Maybe we'd come up with a few really solid, specialized schools.

As for the rest of the state, I'm sure the government could stand to merge or eliminate a few programs. In the end, we may end up with a stronger governing body that can manage its money and avoid these kinds of problems in the future.

Doing everything doesn't make you better; it spreads you too thin to do anything well.

Damon goes bad will hunting

Film: The Bourne Identity
Director: Doug Liman
Writers: Robert Ludlum (novel), Tony Gilroy, and William Blake Herron (Screenplay)
Starring: Matt Damon and Franka Potente
Length: 118 minutes

Matt Damon is no Harrison Ford.

Quite a bit has been made recently of the two co-stars from Good Will Hunting, Matt Damon and Ben Affleck, taking roles as action heroes in movies airing this summer. David Ansen wrote a column in Newsweek about how the face of action stars is changing from Stallone to something cuddlier, and other critics have hinted about the change as well. What they're really asking is, Are any of these guys the new Harrison Ford? — an action hero who can generate money at the box office with charisma rather than machismo.

While Damon may not be Ford-like in The Bourne Identity, he does do a decent job of emoting. But the lack of dialogue leaves his character absent of the likable vulnerability that Ford's characters have always had.

The movie opens with Jason Bourne (Damon) floating unconsciously in the Mediterranean Sea off the coast of France. Bourne has nothing but a wet-suit, two bullet holes in his back, and a laser chip with a bank-account number implanted in his hip. He has amnesia, so he doesn't know any more about his situation than the audience at this point. As Bourne starts to retrace his steps, his predicament rapidly starts to reveal itself, and before long, we are well into the traditional espionage-genre story arc.

Bourne turns out to be a CIA-trained killer who failed on his last mission. As a result, someone tried to kill him. Though he has amnesia, survival skills come back to memory as needed — use of foreign language, ability to race cars through busy streets, and lethal martial-arts attacks.

The acting, if you want to call it that, is actually decent for an action movie. The dialogue is sparse, so Damon's role is mainly physical. He's bulked up since his Good Will Hunting days. But I'm not sure the total effect is what director Doug Liman had in mind. The jujitsu moves of Bourne are combined with quick-cut editing that's just as fast, and it left the audience in the crowded theater, well, laughing. I had suspected that Damon would ease into action roles with more of the thinking-man parts Al Pacino has mastered over the years, but I was wrong.

The supporting cast is loaded with talent. Franka Potente (Run Lola Run) as Marie, the hesitant partner in crime/love interest, does a fine job with what little material she is given. A lot of her role is reacting to what happens with Bourne, but you can see her progress from scared to intrigued to besotted with love.

Chris Cooper (American Beauty) as Bourne's CIA higher-up and Brian Cox (Manhunter, L.I.E.) as Cooper's CIA higher-up are both convincing. Clive Owen (Croupier) is an underrated actor whose grim mien suits his role as a CIA Treadstone assassin, the same function Bourne used to serve. Owen only has two lines in the movie. All are great actors, but all have throwaway roles.

The salaries must have been big on this movie because there are a lot of experienced actors without much to do. Julia Stiles also makes an appearance and gives the same disaffected performance she has in every movie she's ever done.

Having said that, one of the movie's virtues is its quick pacing. There are very few scenes that don't advance or heighten the drama surrounding Bourne's character. And when there are, Liman always knows to return immediately with a throbbing beat to remind viewers this is an action thriller. Liman, whose previous films could be termed relationship comedies (Swingers, Go), goes in a completely different direction here but not without stylistic achievements.

The look of the film is very dark and gray, casting a sense of foreboding and distance from the viewer. The action seems to take place farther away than the Czech Republic, where much of the movie was filmed.

It's not a bad movie, especially compared with the other choices in Iowa City. But if Damon wants to make more commercially successful films, in which the audience doesn't laugh during his scenes, he needs to focus on characters that use more brain than brawn. Or, I hear sequels are big these days — maybe Good Will Hunting II: Hunting Season has legs after all.

Scooby scoops the competition

By David Germain
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Scooby-Doo, where are you? Well, on top of the weekend box office.

The big-screen update of the Hanna-Barbera cartoon, starring Matthew Lillard, Freddie Prinze Jr., Sarah Michelle Gellar, Linda Cardellini, and a computer-animated Great Dane, took in $56.4 million to debut as the No. 1 film, according to industry estimates Sunday.

"The weekend really went to the dogs," said Paul Dergarabedian, the president of box-office tracker Exhibitor Relations. "In these trying times, what could be more escapist than Scooby-Doo, which is so fun and light-hearted?"

Matt Damon's The Bourne Identity, a spy thriller about a deadly amnesiac agent, opened in second place with $27.5 million.

Windtalkers, starring Nicolas Cage and Adam Beach in a drama about Navajo Indian code-talkers in World War II, premiered a weak third with $14.5 million.

The espionage tale of Damon's buddy Ben Affleck, The Sum of All Fears, slipped to fourth place after two weekends as the top film, taking in $13.5 million and pushing its 17-day total to $84.5 million.

The industry continued its upward trend, with the top 12 movies grossing $160 million, nearly 25 percent higher than the same weekend a year ago. Revenues for 2002 are running approximately 22 percent ahead of the record $8.4 billion last year.

Scooby-Doo was one of Hollywood's few successes in adapting a TV cartoon to the big screen. The Flintstones did well, but the prequel The Flintstones in Viva Rock Vegas was a commercial dud.

Other recent cartoon adaptations flopped, including Josie and the Pussycats and The Adventures of Rocky and Bullwinkle.

"Scooby-Doo is a character that obviously reaches a much wider audience than most cartoons," said Dan Fellman, the head of distribution for Warner Bros., which released Scooby-Doo. "The audience was Scooby fans from 8 to 80. We had kids, we had adults. We had everybody."

Playing in 3,447 theaters, Scooby-Doo averaged an impressive $16,368 a cinema. The Bourne Identity averaged a healthy $10,425 in 2,638 theaters, and Windtalkers did a so-so $5,003 in 2,898 locations.

Adapted from Robert Ludlum's best seller, The Bourne Identity established Damon as a legitimate action leading man. The actor has tended toward making straight drama or ensemble films.

Action films usually have stronger male appeal, but distributor Universal said the audience for The Bourne Identity was evenly split between men and women.

Many were drawn to the film "because of the story. It's a popular book," said Nikki Rocco, the head of distribution for Universal. Rocco said the appeal for women was more straightforward: "I think it's Matt Damon."

Windtalkers was the latest commercial misfire for MGM, whose recent flops include Hart's War and Rollerball.

"Did they choose to take their kids to Scooby-Doo and will get to Windtalkers later? From the people who did go to Windtalkers, we got good word of mouth, so that's our hope," said MGM head of distribution Robert Levin.

In limited release, a new three-hour cut of the Italian favorite Cinema Paradiso took in $27,000 at three theaters in New York City and Los Angeles. The longer cut expands to more cities over the next two weekends.

Estimated ticket sales for June 14 through Sunday at North American theaters, according to Exhibitor Relations Co. Inc. Final figures will be released today.

1. Scooby-Doo, $56.4 million.
2. The Bourne Identity, $27.5 million.
3. Windtalkers, $14.5 million.
4. The Sum of All Fears, $13.5 million.
5. Divine Secrets of the Ya-Ya Sisterhood, $9.8 million.
6. Star Wars: Episode II: Attack of the Clones, $9.2 million.
7. Spider-Man, $7.4 million.
8. Bad Company, $6.1 million.
9. Spirit: Stallion of the Cimarron, $5.5 million.
10. Undercover Brother, $4.6 million.

At the Bijou Oscar nominated shorts offer mélange of styles

By Shawn Sebastian
The Daily Iowan

The cinematic equivalent of a short-story anthology, the Bijou is offering the rare chance to see the 2002 Oscar-nominated short films until Wednesday. The five live action and four animated shorts offer the unique experience of being amazed visually by incredible animation, moved emotionally by subtle acting and potent writing, and laughing hysterically at outrageous characters and situations.

The Oscar-winning live short "The Accountant" tells the story of a "good of boy" who analyzes and manipulates numbers to help struggling farmers in an effort to preserve the Southern way of life. Ray McKinnon writes, directs, and stars as the accountant who chugs beer while adding up the books, advises farmers to sacrifice arms, legs, and even their dogs in order to collect insurance money, and is convinced that multi-national corporations and media conglomerates are conspiring to keep the Southern man down. Such an eccentric character could easily be reduced to one of the media stereotypes that he condemns, but MacKinnon imbues his character with such fevered intensity that his claims that everyone from Boston Market to "The Beverly Hillbillies" is killing the Southern way of life are at once hilarious and oddly chilling.

"A Man Thing" is a much more serious film about child abuse and poverty in Poland. The film unsentimentally portrays scenes of tremendous emotional freight, such as when the boy's soccer coach forces him to take off his shirt to put on his uniform, revealing deep scars from his father's frequent beatings. The empathy of the audience is won without the luxury of two hours of character development but with subtle and realistic portrayals of the characters. The boy's tears of shame and the coach's paralyzed horror is an image of remarkable honesty and gravity.

"For the Birds" won the Oscar for best animated short, and although the plot, along with the other animated films, is extremely thin, the precision and expressiveness of the computer animation make it engaging. "Birds," like many of the other animated shorts, does not have any dialogue; it relies on the creativity of its visual style and the physicality of its humor. The animated shorts combine traditional and computer animation, and each provide a unique visual experience and moments of levity between some of the heavier films.

The short films cover a variety of topics, emotions, and tones and offer a rich and unique cinematic experience. It is rare when viewers are allowed to indulge their cinematic palette with such a variety of flavors, and the opportunity should not be missed.

Rasputina in wonderland

By Richard Shirk
The Daily Iowan

Remember that bad dream? That dead crow in your yard no one will touch? The underlined passages in that Aleister Crowley book? So does Rasputina, and it displays it on the band's latest, Cabin Fever! (Instinct), an album filled with the disturbing, strange, and melancholic happenings of everyday life.

Rasputina will appear tonight at Gabe's, 330 E. Washington St.

A departure from traditional rock arrangement, the fairy-tale compositions of Rasputina's music are built over an undercurrent of interwoven cello and programmed drums — a dynamic that makes the forlorn Siouxsie Sioux swoon-songs that much more moody and macabre.

Founded 11 years ago by Melora Creaeger, the only consistent member through Rasputina's three albums (this outing with fellow cellist K. Cowperwithe and drummer Jon TeBeest), the band's filmic music and anachronistic stage garb of corsets and bloomers has garnered attention from high places. Although best known for Creaeger's cello support for Nirvana on the band's final tour, Rasputina has also shared stage and studio credits with the likes of Belle and Sebastian, Porno for Pyros, and the Goo Goo Dolls along with having the distinction of having Marilyn Manson churn out a remix EP ('97's Transylvanian Regurgitations).

With Cabin Fever!, it's soon clear that the music of Rasputina can span the miles-wide gap between Belle and Sebastian and Mr. Manson. With the distant strains of a music box, lead-off track "Gingerbread Coffin" begins a sustained mood that doesn't relent for the 15 tracks of the disc — with the sawing and buzzing overtures tugging and pulling the Grimm's Fairy Tales imagery along like a drowning victim in a murky lake.

Throughout much of the album, tracks such as "Thimble Island," "Clipped," "Sweet Water Kill (The Ocean Song)," and "A Quitter" rely on the deep vibrato and fullness of the cello to get the point across with only minimal drum and cello-tone tinkering. The apex of the effect culminates with three gut-wrenching minutes of "The Remnants of Percy Bass" — a tale of wasting away and dying alone with "newspapers glued to the wall" and "skeleton closets down the hall" as morbidly intriguing as snuff film video art.

One of the most interesting aspects of Cabin Fever!, and Rasputina as a band in general, is found on the instrumental disparity of the rest of the album, with tracks such as "Rats," "My Orphanage," and "AntiqueHigh-HeelRedDollShoes" that distort the cello enough to provoke head-scratching perusal of the small print bits of the liners in search of Kevin Shield's guitar credits. Along with the rumbled up drum-machine track and apparent drop-D tuner cranking, these replace the resounding and undistorted effect of the instruments' timbre with somewhat crass cello metal-riffing that falls to the Manson side of the goth dichotomy.

Even though it can be frustrating, this duality could be the most intriguing aspect of Rasputina. In the charm of Creaeger's soprano voice with the lurid content and in the contrast of the elegant and malicious use of cello, the Victorian fantasy land of Cabin Fever! is both simultaneously dark and beautiful.

Rasputina will be joined at Gabe's tonight by the Ashtray Heats.

Michael kept his classes updated throughout the entire pregnancy, bringing in Elizabeth's ultrasounds and candy to celebrate. He plans on doing plenty of bragging this fall.

Michael held Elizabeth close as Rachael looked on.

"This is our baby," he marveled.

Bush spends holiday fishing, speaking with world leaders

CRAWFORD, Texas (AP) — President Bush, like many an American father, spent Sunday working in the yard and doing a little fishing.

Unlike the others, he worked in a couple of telephone chats with world leaders.

White House spokesman Scott McClellan said Bush telephoned Mexican President Vicente Fox to wish Mexico luck in today's World Cup soccer match with the United States in South Korea. He said the call lasted approximately five minutes.

Bush received a call earlier from Saudi Crown Prince Abdullah, McClellan said. He said it was part of the two leaders' "ongoing consultation on the Middle East" but declined to discuss the 10- to 15-minute conversation further, characterizing it as private.

"May the best team win," Bush told Fox, according to a press statement from Fox's office. Fox also wished the U.S. squad luck, the statement said.

For Father's Day, the president had his twin daughters, Jenna and Barbara, 20, with him on the family's remote Texas ranch. But, citing the girls' privacy, White House aides refused to discuss whatever holiday treats they had for their dad.

Bush treated himself to a three-mile run on his 1,600 acres, soaked by a ferocious overnight thunderstorm, and a walk with Laura Bush. He also chipped away at the never-ending chore of any rancher in these parts — clearing cedar from his favorite woods and canyons — before settling down to some afternoon fishing in the man-made lake a stone's throw from his home's patio.

Shepard award-winner heading for UI

"Being gay was so much of who I was, I could not keep it inside. It's interwoven in everything I do," Spilger said. "Being confident about that part of my life has made me more confident over all."

He said that since coming out, he has encountered a few problems, such as being taunted by classmates, but he refuses to allow any of that to control his daily life.

Of those who have been most supportive of his decision, Spilger gives much of the credit to his mother — whom, he said, has always been closest to him and his No. 1 fan.

"She would carry my cross," he said.

Spilger will attend the UI this fall; he has decided to follow a pre-law track to pursue a career in environmental law because of his heart-felt passion for earth science and environmental issues. He also looks forward to gaining a position as a writer with the campus newspaper and returning to France through study abroad.

Jeff Morris, the adviser for City High's Little Hawk newspaper, on which Spilger worked as both an executive news editor and a monthly columnist, said he remembers Spilger as both an excellent writer and an all-around great guy.

"He deserved to get the scholarship," Morris said. "Academically, he was excellent and was always there to help out other students."

The scholarship serves to promote anti-homophobia and human rights; it is based on academic aptitude, community service, and financial need. The award covers tuition, fees, and books for four years at Iowa State University, the University of Northern Iowa, or the UI.

"These scholarships show that people from diverse backgrounds can live in harmony, said Harry Scott, the chairman of the scholarship committee. "Most young people who win are leaders in their high schools. We anticipate that they are future leaders of the state of Iowa in gender rights, human rights, and in their career field."

Currently, there are six UI students who are recipients of the scholarship.

"He [Spilger] is well-qualified to receive the scholarship and is highly spoken of," Scott said. "He went well above meeting the criteria."

The best-kept secret in Washington, D.C.: the identity of Woodward's Deep Throat

WATERGATE

Ziegler, despite the fact that Ziegler attacked the Washington Post's reporting on a "third-rate burglary."

For much of the book, Dean builds a case that Deep Throat is Washington lawyer Jonathan Rose, a former Army intelligence officer who, like Woodward, went to Yale before becoming a Nixon aide. Dean even had Mike Wallace call Rose for a potential "60 Minutes" exposé.

But Dean backed off after Rose threatened to sue, and he writes that he's convinced Rose is the wrong man. Still, he was puzzled by the legal threat.

"I happen to think Deep Throat acted with great courage," Dean said in an interview. "I don't have a negative thing to say about Throat."

Dean says it would be "unfair" to finger one of his four suspects because he's still "parsing the clues," but he plans to continue the detective work. "I know more than I've written," he said.

This isn't Dean's first entry in the Deep Throat sweepstakes. He has suggested that Deep Throat might be former Watergate prosecutor Earl Silbert and, later, former Secretary of State Al Haig. Both denied it, and Woodward publicly ruled out Haig.

Ex-White House lawyer Leonard Garment said in a book last year that his candidate was former Nixon aide John Sears, who denied it.

Others have long speculated about a former top FBI official,

Mark Felt. The Hartford Courant once reported that the son of Woodward's former Washington Post partner, Carl Bernstein, had told a summer camp friend that Felt was the source.

In today's tell-all culture, perhaps it is amazing that Throat hasn't written his own book, set up a Web site, and made a bee-line for Larry King.

Woodward has said for years that Deep Throat is a man and is still alive and that he would spill the beans only with the source's permission or after the source's death. They remain in touch.

Why does anyone still care? "People generally don't think secrets can be kept," Woodward says. "From a historical point of view, it's a legitimate question." He told NBC in 1997 that Deep Throat was staying in the closet because he had not been truthful with colleagues and family members about his Watergate role.

Historian Michael Beschloss says that, as with lingering questions over the Kennedy assassination, people remain curious about such matters as: "Why did the Nixon people take the risk of sending in the burglars, knowing they might be caught? What made Nixon so insecure in June of '72, when he knew [George] McGovern would lose to him in a landslide?"

As for Deep Throat's hidden role, "on one hand, we honor this person because he helped bring down someone, Nixon, who deserved to be brought down. But you'd also have awfully interesting contradictions in his character. It's also a story of betrayal."

Alex Wong, "Meet the Press"/Associated Press
Writers Bob Woodward, left, and Carl Bernstein talk about their coverage of the Watergate story 30 years ago on NBC's "Meet the Press" on Sunday in Washington.

Revealing Deep Throat would obviously shed some light on long-forgotten bureaucratic rivalries from that era. But there is a sense, particularly in Washington, that every secret must be unearthed, that the man who told Robert Redford — er, Woodward — to "follow the money" must, in the interests of literary closure, be outed.

Dean went so far as to obtain the original Woodward-Bernstein manuscript for the book All the President's Men and study phrases that were edited out.

"I guess it's just a good mystery story," Dean said. "I'm messing with the best-kept secret in Washington in modern history."

In another echo of that time, the Discovery Civilization Channel is airing the 1977

David Frost interviews with Nixon, including some never-before-seen material.

"Richard Nixon was the most enigmatic, interesting, strange president we've ever had," Frost said. "And there's been no one who's been quite that fascinating."

For those who remember the players and the phrases of that tortured time — Howard Hunt, Richard Kleindienst, Egil Krogh, Gordon Strachan, Rose Mary Woods, the Huston plan, hush money, the 18½-minute gap, the modified limited-hang-out route — the Watergate period is indelibly etched in memory. Six presidents later, only one journalistic puzzle remains to be solved.

Rabbi suspends armed patrols

NEW YORK (AP) — A right-wing rabbi suspended plans Sunday to organize armed civilian patrols in heavily Jewish neighborhoods that were considered terror targets after angry residents and lawmakers complained.

"The response was so overwhelmingly negative, but God forbid anything should happen and then I'll have to say, 'I told you so,'" said the rabbi, Yakove Lloyd.

"This is not forever; it may be just for a week or so." Lloyd, the president of the right-wing Jewish Defense Group, had called a press conference to explain details on his armed patrols with groups carrying shotguns, baseball bats, pipes, cellular phones, and walkie-talkies. The patrols had been scheduled to begin Sunday night in Borough Park and Flatbush.

He promised a crowd of 100 supporters but showed up alone.

"You are here to take advantage of our community. Go back home.

We will fight against you," state Assemblyman Dov Hikind said Sunday. His district includes Borough Park, one of the Brooklyn neighborhoods that would be patrolled by the armed groups. Lloyd is from Queens.

Lloyd was shouted at by Hikind, Brooklyn Councilor Simcha Felder, and a few dozen members of the shomrim, a community group that patrols neighborhoods with cellular phones.

"When you get people like Lloyd in the community ... it gives us all a bad name, and it gives someone who wants to attack the community an open hand," said Abe Weinreb, a shomrim member.

Lloyd said the armed patrols were conceived in response to comments that fugitive Abdul Rahman Yasin made during an interview on CBS' "60 Minutes" on June 2.

"We're not here to hurt anybody," he said Sunday. "I ... heard Yasin say the original [trade center] targets were Jews in Brooklyn, so I was concerned, and I was nervous for my people."

In Kashmir, peace looks a lot like war

By Laura King
Associated Press

SRINAGAR, India — During a week that saw nuclear-armed India and Pakistan step back from the brink of all-out battle, it was difficult to detect any real drop in the fear and violence that are hallmarks of daily life in this divided Himalayan territory.

Artillery fire still thundered back and forth across the frontier, killing and maiming scores of civilians in their homes and fields. Soldiers and insurgents alike died in gunbattles in lush forests and on steep mountainsides.

Ordinary Kashmiris were forced, as always, to cope with the trappings of life in a military state: checkpoints and searchlights, random spot checks, nighttime knocks on the door. Politicians took their lives in their hands when they dared to appear in public.

Despite the apparent success of high-level, high-profile diplomatic efforts to defuse the latest crisis between India and Pakistan, all the same combustible fundamentals remain in place in Kashmir: a million troops facing off across a tense border, an unrelenting insurgency for which the two sides blame one other, an abiding mutual mistrust, and a society broken in crucial ways by years of bloodshed.

People on both sides of the Kashmir border are killed every day in the conflict, including civilians, militants, soldiers, and police. According to Indian military officials, the number of deaths in the conflict doesn't appear to be wavering, even after the two sides began climbing down from their war footing: Pakistan promising to halt cross-border infiltration by insurgents, India reopening its airspace to Pakistani overflights, both sides pulling back combat vessels from strike positions.

"On the ground here, nothing has changed," said Col. Mukhtiyar Singh, the Indian army spokesman in Srinagar, the summer capital of Indian Kashmir, whose rustic wood-shuttered buildings and sumptuous lakeside Mughal gardens stand in sharp contrast to patrolling troops in body armor and sandbagged emplacements at every turn.

While a round of U.S.-led diplomacy managed to pressure India and Pakistan into a grudging accommodation of sorts, few observers in Kashmir believe the lull will last for long.

"In two or three months, we will find ourselves again in exactly the same situation — again the tension, again the threat of war," said Nour Ahmed Baba, the head of the political-science department at the University of Kashmir.

Although Kashmir would likely find itself a prime battleground in any war between India and Pakistan, many Kashmiris followed the diplomatic dramas of recent weeks and months with a sense of weary indifference.

"Our hardships are not going to end because the two of them

Puran Devi, right, her sister Leelu Devi, second from right, and Jamel Singh, on bed, who were injured in an attack on June 15 by suspected Islamic militants, recuperate Sunday at a government hospital in Jammu, the winter capital of India's Jammu-Kashmir state. Puran Devi's parents and two sisters died in the attack.

decided not to fight this time," said baker Ghulam Waza, shaking his head as he stacked warm rounds of Kashmiri bread fresh from his oven.

Kashmiris feel caught between what most consider to be heavy-handed Indian security forces and the Muslim insurgents who have waged a violent campaign to either win Kashmir's independence or wed it, with its Muslim majority, to Islamic Pakistan. India insists neither of those will come to pass.

"We will never, ever stop our struggle," said a Kashmiri insurgent who goes by the name of Commander Massood. He has been largely on the sidelines since a beating by security forces last year left him semi-incapacitated — "They broke me everywhere," he said, grimacing — but vowed to remain involved with the cause as long as he lives.

India says what was once an indigenous pro-autonomy movement by Kashmiris has essentially been hijacked by Pakistan-based militant groups. Some Kashmiri members within the ranks of Pakistan-based organizations also acknowledge this. However, Pakistan insists the campaign is homegrown.

Rancor disrupts Afghan council

By Ted Anthony
Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — The grand council fashioning Afghanistan's new government erupted in argument and accusations Sunday over what kind of legislature should represent a fragmented population with competing interests jockeying desperately to be heard.

With a deadline today for ending deliberations, delegates assigned to cobble together a lawmaking body to work with newly elected President Hamid Karzai were choosing between an assembly based entirely on geography and one based on population — roughly equivalent to picking between the Senate and House of Representatives in the United States.

But that basic choice tapped into a variety of fears from groups wary of leaving the loya jirga, or grand council, without the levels of representation they demand. The ensuing brouhaha lasted most of Sunday and prevented little but squabbling from being accomplished.

"This whole process of appointing a Parliament is a mess. No one has any control," said Mohammed Hashim, a Pashtun delegate from Paktia province in eastern Afghanistan.

"If the grand council leadership says, 'We have appointed our own Parliament,' then all of this loya jirga — even the election of Karzai — will mean nothing. It will be illegitimate," he said on the floor of the enormous tent where the council is being held.

The loya jirga, based on Afghan tradition, convened

June 11 under a U.N.-guided blueprint to chart the country's immediate future. It drew more than 1,600 Afghan delegates from around the country and abroad in a two-step selection process that critics said was rife with intimidation and harassment.

But Afghans and the nations that have poured millions into the country's reconstruction have seen only one major task accomplished — choosing a president, which was done June 13.

Still unresolved are the shape of the executive Cabinet and the form of the legislature — a task the loya jirga technically is not required to undertake under the agreement struck in Germany in December 2001 dictating the grand council's mandate.

How the issues of the legislature, and especially the Cabinet, makeups are resolved will demonstrate how much power Karzai's new mandate has given him.

"At the moment, Karzai is president of Kabul. If he wants to be president of Afghanistan, there's a lot of work to do in the provinces," said Alexander Thier, Kabul representative for the International Crisis Group, a nongovernmental organization.

On Sunday, initial attempts to resolve the legislature question degenerated into shouting and finger-pointing after loya jirga Chairman Ismail Qasim Yar offered delegates a choice of ways to select it — either two representatives for each of 32 provinces, the initial idea endorsed by the loya jirga commission, or one representative for every 10 of the more than 1,600 delegates.

Israel begins work on controversial fence

By Yoav Appel
Associated Press

SALEM JUNCTION, Israel — Israeli bulldozers flattened ground Sunday for an electronic fence that the country plans to eventually run the entire length of the West Bank — a disputed project aimed at protecting Israelis from Palestinian suicide bombers.

Those backing the barrier say it does not, in any way, stake out a final border between the Israelis and Palestinians.

Also Sunday, Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon rejected the idea of provisional Palestinian statehood that was aired by U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell and said to be under consideration by the Bush administration. Palestinians also are cool to the idea for different reasons.

Palestinian and right-wing Israeli politicians strongly oppose the fence, meant to replace a hodgepodge of barriers and fences erected over the past year, which have proved ineffectual.

The first length of fence will be built over eight months along a 75-mile strip from Salem Junction in northern Israel south to a point northeast of Tel Aviv.

Palestinians maintain the fence will take West Bank land they want for a state. Right-wing Israelis fear that what is being billed as a temporary "security fence" will evolve into a permanent border with a future Palestinian state. If that happened, many of the 200,000 Jewish settlers in the West Bank would be left on the Palestinian side.

Defense Minister Binyamin Ben-Eliezer said a consensus is building among Israeli politicians in support of the barrier, which he has called necessary and temporary. Ben-Eliezer, who visited the construction site at Salem Junction on Sunday, said the fence isn't intended to be a political barrier.

"It has one and only one clear aim — to defend the lives of Israeli citizens," he said. "Every extra day that passes without the fence being built could cost us more victims."

At a meeting of Sharon's Cabinet Sunday, several ministers raised objections.

Work on the fence, which is to be part of a system of defensive measures to stop or curb suicide bombers from launching attacks against Israelis from Palestinian areas, will go ahead for now, but the smaller security Cabinet was expected to take up the issue Wednesday.

Sharon, an ardent supporter of Israeli settlement expansion for decades, opposes the barrier for ideological reasons. He reluctantly gave his approval this month.

Of the nearly 70 suicide bombings in Israel over the past 20 months, all have been launched from the West Bank, which has no barrier separating it from Israel.

Groups that have carried out many of the bombings, Hamas and Islamic Jihad, are strongest in the Gaza Strip. But no suicide bombers have come from Gaza, which is fenced in.

Ben-Eliezer said the fence eventually will stretch 215 miles, which is the full length of the "Green Line" — the Israeli border before Israel captured the West Bank in the 1967 Mideast war.

It largely is to follow that line, but parts of it will veer into the West Bank to bring some settlements close to the border onto the Israeli side. Ben-Eliezer said that in some areas the fence will run on the Israeli side of the Green Line.

Maj. Gen. Yitzhak Eitan, the commander of Israeli troops in the West Bank, said surveillance outposts were part of the defensive plan and that the fence would be patrolled on both sides by soldiers and Israeli border police. Sensors on the fence would detect attempts to cut or climb it, said Amos Yaron, the director general of the Defense Ministry.

Yaron said the cost would be close to $2 million per mile.

Nixon felt hampered by the checks and balances our Founding Fathers didn't feel hampered by, and he tried systematically to eliminate the other factors: Congress, the press, the courts, the bureaucracy.

— Richard Reeves,

Richard Nixon's biographer, speaking on CBS' "Face the Nation." Today is the 30th anniversary of the Watergate break-in.

Woods halfway to golf's grand slam

at 3-under 277.
Perhaps when the New Yorkers get their course back next week and pay $39 greens fees on the weekend, they'll have an even greater appreciation of how good this guy is.
"It's awesome, winning your national title and, on top of that, on a public course in front of these fans," Woods said.
He has played only 22 majors as a pro, and five of those eight victories have come by at least three strokes.

Mickelson and Garcia each got to within two strokes at times, but not for long.
Woods simply gave them no chance. He missed only two fairways in the final round and putted for birdie on 17 out of 18 holes.
Mickelson showed plenty of heart, but it wasn't enough — not with Woods in the lead and on top of his game.
Lefty closed to within two strokes of the lead with a two-putt birdie from the fringe on the par-5 13th to reach 2-under par.
Woods answered. He reached the 13th green with a 2-iron from 263 yards and narrowly missed the eagle putt. Still, his three-stroke lead was restored, and Mickelson made it easier for him with bogeys on the 16th and 17th holes.

It was Mickelson's seventh top-3 finish in a major, tying him with Harry "Lighthorse" Cooper with the most among players who have never won one.
Jeff Maggert had a 72 and finished third at 282, although he was never a factor.
Garcia was the only other player to make a run at Woods.
He got to within two strokes after Woods three-putted the first two balls, and stayed on his heels until the 22-year-old Spaniard made the kind of mistakes that a U.S. Open won't allow. Three times he overshot the green, wound up in deep grass, and couldn't save par. Garcia had a 74 to finish fourth.

His only consolation was that Woods finally spoke to him — but only after the Open had been decided. Earlier in the round, Garcia tried to be his pal, even retrieving a divot for Woods on the fourth hole.
Woods never looked at him. This was Sunday in a major championship, and Woods had only one thing on his mind.

inning, and Dustan Mohr, Denny Hocking, and Corey Koskie hit solo home runs, leading Minnesota over Milwaukee.
Koskie's home run in the seventh inning off Nelson Figueroa (1-5) broke a 6-all tie and gave reliever Tony Fiore (5-1) the win.
Expos 6, Blue Jays 5
MONTREAL — Mike Mordecai hit a game-winning RBI single with one out in the ninth inning to give Montreal its fifth-straight win.
Devil Rays 4, Marlins 1
MIAMI (AP) — Luis Castillo extended his hitting streak to 31 games, matching the longest in the major leagues since 1987, but Tampa Bay scored four times in the final two innings to beat Florida.
Castillo singled leading off the first inning to tie for the fifth-longest streak in the National League since 1900.
Indians 5, Rockies 4
DENVER — Bartolo Colon won for the fourth time in five starts, and John McDonald drove in two runs to lead Cleveland over Colorado.
McDonald put the Indians up 4-1 in the seventh inning with a two-run double off Colorado starter Denny Neagle (4-4).

He also scored on a single by Jobert Cabrera in the third after tripling with one out.
Astros 7, Rangers 6
HOUSTON — Craig Biggio hit an RBI single off John Rocker in the ninth to give Houston the victory over Texas.
Julio Lugo hit two home runs for the Astros, who gave up a two-run lead in the ninth when Billy Wagner blew his second save of the season.
It was another rough outing for Rocker (1-2), who was called up from the minors a week ago.
Athletics 2, Giants 1
SAN FRANCISCO — Barry Zito pitched into the seventh inning for his eighth-straight victory, and Adam Platt drove in the go-ahead run as Oakland won the Bay Bridge series, beating San Francisco.
Oakland took two of three on the weekend from its cross-bay rival with another outstanding performance from Zito (9-2), who gave up four hits and struck out five in 6½ innings.
Mets 3, Yankees 2
NEW YORK — Mo Vaughn hit a three-run homer in the eighth inning to give him 1,001 RBIs and lift the Mets to a 3-2 victory over the Yankees on Sunday night.
The Mets took two of three from their crosstown rivals, only the second time they've won a series against the Bronx Bombers in nine tries since interleague play began in 1997.

Diamondbacks 11, Tigers 2
PHOENIX — Mark Grace drove in three runs with a homer and his 500th career double as Arizona beat Detroit.
Rick Helling scattered six hits in eight innings. Helling (7-5) didn't allow a run after he gave up Craig Paquette's opposite-field home run in the first inning, and he improved to 3-0 in his last four starts.

Padres 5, Mariners 3
SAN DIEGO — Wiki Gonzalez hit a three-run homer and 20-year-old left-hander Oliver Perez won his major-league debut as the Padres beat the Mariners on Sunday.
The Padres won two of three games against the AL West-leading Mariners, who came into Sunday's game tied with Arizona for the third-best record in baseball.

The teams combined for 26 hits and used 11 pitchers in the game, which lasted nearly four hours and went back-and-forth until the final inning.
Daniel Bruce, Jeff Blevins, and Jed Morris each homered for Nebraska, which tied it in the bottom of the eighth and had two outs and two strikes on Peters in the ninth but could not hold back the Gamecocks slugger.
Becker (2-2) walked Drew

Meyer with one out in the ninth and struck out Justin Harris before Peters hit his 29th homer of the season.
The shot to right-center stunned the Omaha crowd, which had come back to life after Morris' homer into the top half of the right-field bleachers tied it at 8 in the eighth.
"I finally got something to hit," Peters said. "He made a mistake, and I took advantage of it."
Clemson 9, Georgia Tech 7
OMAHA, Neb. — Jeff Baker hit a bases-loaded double, and Michael Johnson homered as Clemson held off Georgia Tech, 9-7, in the College World Series on Sunday night.

The Tigers improved to 3-2 this season against their Atlantic Coast Conference rivals and moved within one win of playing in the series championship game Saturday.
It's the first time in 10 trips to Omaha that Clemson (54-15) has opened the series 2-0.
Johnson was 3-3 with two RBIs, and reliever Jeff Hahn (3-0) was credited with the win after coming on in the fourth inning.
Jason Perry homered and had two RBIs, and Philip Perry had a strong relief outing that gave Tech (52-15) a chance at coming back after falling behind 8-0 in the second.

Clemson chased Tech starter Chris Goodman (8-2) after just 1½ innings. Goodman, charged with seven runs on five hits, was replaced by Aaron Walker, who lasted just two hitters.
Philip Perry relieved Walker and went 6½ innings, striking out six while holding Clemson to one run on two hits. Clemson had four doubles in the second as the Tigers scored eight runs on seven hits in 13 at-bats.
Baker, who hit a game-winning single June 14 in Clemson's win over Nebraska, doubled the bases loaded.

Tiger captures second Open

Mickelson makes a late charge, but falls off pace

By Doug Ferguson
 Associated Press

FARMINGDALE, N.Y. — A runaway winner again in the U.S. Open, Tiger Woods is halfway home to the Grand Slam and still miles ahead of anyone trying to stop him.

Challenged only briefly by two of his biggest rivals, Woods became the first player since Jack Nicklaus in 1972 to capture the first two major championships of the year with a three-stroke victory Sunday at Bethpage Black.

Next stop on his incredible ride: the British Open in Muirfield, five weeks away.

"I just want to celebrate this one," Woods said. "None of them are easy, but this one was real tough."

He made it harder with three-putt bogeys on his first two holes that quickly cut his lead to two shots. But Woods was rock-solid the rest of the way and simply couldn't be stopped — not by Phil Mickelson, Sergio Garcia, or even a 49-minute rain delay that threatened to put off the inevitable until today.

The only sour note — bogeys on two of his final three holes for a 2-over 72, the first time he has won a major with a final round over par.

He finished three strokes ahead of Mickelson, who is now 0-40 in the majors but hardly felt like a loser.

"It's certainly a difficult challenge, five back to the best player in the world," Mickelson said after closing with a 70.

Woods already has won his own version of the slam. A year ago, he became the first player to win four-straight professional majors, although purists have argued it must be done in a calendar year.

Don't bet against him. "I would like to win the slam," he said. "I've done it before. Hopefully, I can do it again."

The question remains: Can anyone stop him?

His greatest asset, as always, is his mental toughness, a lesson his father taught him long ago.

"I told him, 'I promise you one thing: You'll never meet another person as tough as you,'" Earl Woods said during a telephone interview from his hotel room near the course. "He hasn't. And he won't."

At 26, Woods won his eighth major championship and now has claimed seven of the last 11 — unprecedented in golf's four biggest events.

It was the first time the U.S. Open was played on a truly public golf course, but the Black Course at Bethpage State Park certainly held its own. Woods was the only player to break par over 72 holes, finishing Starting today, basketball fans will once again pour into the North Liberty Community Center.

The Prime Time League will begin its annual play today at 4:30 p.m. The men's summer basketball league is in its 16th year of play.

The league is a good opportunity for fans to see incoming freshmen, said Randy Larson, the league's organizer.

"All Iowa's incoming freshmen will be playing: Jeff Horner, [Greg] Brunner, and [Doug] Thomas," he said.

Larson said league also gives Hawk fans an opportunity to see redshirt freshmen Marcellus Sommerville and Ereik Hansen.

Golden State Warrior Dean Oliver will join the list of ex-Hawkeye players. Oliver is on the Iowa City Ready Mix/Deli-Mart roster.

Oliver's availability is still up in the air, Larson said, but he guaranteed the point guard's presence for a few games.

Larson advised fans to go early in the summer session to catch Oliver in action.

Other Iowa alum include Duez Henderson, Darryl Moore, Kenyon Murray, and Greg Helmers. Former Hawkeyes, plus players from other area colleges, including UNI's David Gruber, "really add to the talent," said Larson.

Eight teams will play four games every Monday and Thursday beginning at 4:30 p.m.

Larson's team, Mike Gatens Real Estate, has won the league championship the last two years and has returning members of last year's championship team filling the team's roster again.

Larson invites all Iowa basketball fans to check out this Hawkeye-dominated league. He can't imagine a better way to spend an evening than free, competitive basketball in an air-conditioned gym.

Hawksnestonline.com, featuring Glen Worley and Murray, will take on Horner, Sean Sonderleiter, and Goodfellow Printing-Imprinted Sportswear in the opener.

At 6 p.m., Lebeda Mattress Factory, with Jeff Rhodes and Brunner, will face Sommerville, Jared Reiner, and Iowa City Ready Mix/Deli-Mart.

At 7:30, Fitzpatrick's, featuring Hansen and Henderson, will face Mike Gatens Real Estate with Chauncey Leslie and Brody Boyd.

Finally, in the nightcap at 9 p.m., Moore and Goodfellow-Press Box will tip off against Pierre Pierce and Liberty Motors-First Realty.

South Carolina first baseman Yaron Peters launches a ninth-inning two-run home run to rally the Gamecocks past the Huskers.

Gamecocks oust Cornhuskers

By Doug Alden
 Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — Yaron Peters extended his arms and South Carolina's season with one big swing.

Peters hit a tiebreaking two-run homer as the Gamecocks eliminated Nebraska from the College World Series with a 10-8 win Sunday.

"All day long, I didn't get much to hit. I didn't get a chance to get extended on anything," said Peters, who drove a two-strike pitch from Jeremy Becker out to right-center. "My eyes just blew up when I saw something over the middle of the plate. If I was going to go, I was going to go hacking."

The Gamecocks (54-17) rallied from a 4-0 deficit for its first series win in three appearances. South Carolina, which had just six hits while being shut out by Georgia Tech in the opening round, had 15 hits off six Nebraska pitchers.

"We certainly wanted to come out and have a character performance today, and we certainly did. Being down 4-0, it didn't look too good," South Carolina coach Ray Tanner said. "Today, it was a heavyweight fight, and we were fortunate to come out on top."

John Wesley (2-0) got the win when Brandon Eymann flew out to the warning track in right. Wesley, South Carolina's fifth pitcher, pitched 3½ innings and held the Huskers to one run on two hits.

Nebraska (47-21) went 0-2 in the series for the second-straight year despite scoring 18 runs in two games. The Huskers left nine runners on base and struggled out of the bullpen for the second time in three days.

"We've been telling our kids since we got here that we need to punch in runs here and there," Nebraska coach Dave Van Horn said.

BASEBALL ROUNDUP

Lee lifts Sox over rival Cubs

CHICAGO (AP) — Carlos Lee spoiled Kerry Wood's birthday and the Cubs' hopes for their first sweep of the season.

Lee drove in a career-high seven runs with a grand slam and a three-run homer Sunday, leading the White Sox to a 10-7 victory and avoiding a sweep by their crosstown rivals.

It was only the sixth win in the last 20 games for the White Sox, who trail Minnesota in the AL Central by five games.

And it came with a lineup missing Magglio Ordonez (sore hand), Kenny Lofton (sore hamstring), Frank Thomas, and Royce Clayton.

Red Sox 6, Braves 1

ATLANTA — Derek Lowe out-pitched Tom Glavine and became the first AL pitcher to win 11 games, helping the Boston Red Sox beat the Atlanta Braves, 6-1, Sunday.

Jason Varitek and Trot Nixon homered for the Red Sox.

It was just the second loss in 12 games for the Braves.

Orioles 4, Phillies 2

PHILADELPHIA — Travis Driskill, a 30-year-old rookie, won his fourth-straight decision as Baltimore beat Philadelphia.

Driskill (4-0) pitched 6½ innings, allowing two runs on five hits. He walked two and struck out five. Jorge Julio pitched the ninth for his 13th save in 17 chances.

Cardinals 5, Royals 1

ST. LOUIS — Woody Williams pitched a five-hitter and helped himself at the plate with a double and an RBI as St. Louis completed a three-game sweep of Kansas City.

Dodgers 5, Angels 4

LOS ANGELES — Eric Karros and Marquis Grissom hit back-to-back homers in the sixth inning, and Mark Grudzielanek hit a tiebreaking single in the seventh as Los Angeles beat Anaheim Angels to win the Freeway Series.

After Grudzielanek's hit off Al Levine (3-2) broke a 4-all tie, Dennis Cook came in and hit Shawn Green with a pitch in the ribs, causing the benches to clear.
