Police refuse to help TA get gun

By Sara Faiwell
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City police are labeling a local woman's request to obtain a handgun through the mail "unreasonable," and they vow that the force will not co-operate with her.

Jeni McAnally, a UI graduate assistant in the College of Education and the English department, is attempting to get her 9-mm handgun shipped from Las Vegas to Iowa City. The Los Angeles native said she is accustomed to having a gun in her home as a protective measure.

"It's my gun, and I want it," McAnally said.

But she is running into difficulty with tighter security in post offices and airports after Sept. 11. McAnally, 30, said her family has shipped guns in the past by alerting the post office ahead of time. The gun being sent always had to be disassembled into three boxes, which were mailed individually, she said.

The only way to send a handgun through the mail now is to use police officers or licensed dealers, officials at the U.S. Postal Inspection Service in Des Moines said.

Guns can be shipped if the barrel is separated, which makes the weapon inoperable, said Mike Gabriel, the Williamsburg police chief who runs Gabe's Gun Shop there. He said he was unaware of any new regulations after Sept. 11.

When McAnally approached the Iowa City police early last week, officers said they would not help transport the handgun Gunny the clown makes a balloon animal for a child at the cochlear-implant picnic on Sunday.

Thanks to UI, they're all ears

'It was awesome hearing again,' UIHC patient says

By Bridget Stratton
The Daily Iowan

Seated at a picnic table amid the noise of children running and laughing with brightly colored balloon hats, Eugene Tjarks smiled. Six years ago, he couldn't have heard the laughter.

The 72-year-old stood in front of a crowd of 250 patients and their family members during a picnic at the UI Hospitals and Clinics on Sunday, telling them how it felt to hear again.

For 25 years, Tjarks could not hear his family's stories or hold conversations with friends without his wife interpreting for him, until his doctors gave him bilateral cochlear implants at the UI Cochlear Implant Clinical Research Center in 1998. The implants, which sit in Tjarks' inner ear, send electrical pulses to his auditory nerve, allowing him to decipher words despite his condition.

"It was awesome hearing again," he said. "My wife and I got our life back."

Tjarks' speech was given during a reunion picnic for patients with cochlear implants, sponsored by the UI Department of Otolaryngology.

Growing up, Tjarks said, he had a normal hearing range until his 30s, when his hearing loss began. Although he wore hearing aids, his hearing eventually deteriorated to where he could no longer make out what people were saying.

"It was very isolating. I didn't want to go to group gatherings because people were talking," he said. "Now, I enjoy being in a group and going to social events."

A pastor in a South Dakota Lutheran church, Tjarks went to the UI for the implants at his doctor's recommendation.

The UIHC was one of the first hospitals to perform the implant surgery, and it is consistently ranked among the top three hospitals nationally in performing the procedure, said Shelley Witt, an audiologist and member of the cochlear-implant team since 1992. More than 500 patients have received the implants at the UI, with many traveling from as far away as Texas, she said.

The picnic is held every two years for patients who have both received implants and volunteered for departmental research. It gives patients and hospital staff time to visit, Witt said.

Video shows fiery stunt

By Grant Schulte
The Daily Iowan

An alleged videotape showing Etc. bartenders performing a fiery trick three weeks before a similar stunt went awry and burned nine patrons could prove in court that the downtown bar acted negligently, UI law professors said Sunday.

Tom Riley, the attorney for three burn victims suing the bar, would first have to persuade a judge that the tape is relevant evidence, the professors said.

"The plaintiff would have to show the bar had acted carelessly around the fire," said law professor Herbert Hovenkamp.

"The video might be used to show that the existence of the 55-second amateur tape dated March 28 surfaced last week, when the most severely burned victim joined the bandwagon of lawsuits against Etc."

UI junior Deanne Busche's lawsuit is the third brought against Etc., 118 S. Dubuque St., in less than three months. Her suit, filed July 11 in Johnson County District Court, seeks punitive damages in response to an

Jury declares Lemus is not guilty of rape

After a 90-minute deliberation, jury frees father of two

By Peter Rugg
The Daily Iowan

It took a jury on July 12 only an hour and a half, including lunch break, to find Alexander Lemus not guilty of kidnapping and sexual abuse, setting the El Salvadoran free after a three-year investigation.

The verdict ended a four-day trial that was postponed six times since Lemus' arrest in March 2000. Lemus, 32, was charged with third-degree sexual abuse and first-degree kidnapping after he allegedly forced a 16-year-old McDonald's co-worker into a car and drove her to City Carton, where, police alleged, he raped her.

Lemus, a father of two who had remained in good spirits throughout the trial, smiled and shook his attorney's hand after the verdict was read.

Jurors on the 10-man, two-woman panel said inconsistencies in both the prosecution and defense were responsible for the acquittal.

Jeffrey Dill said he and fellow jurors came to their conclusion shortly after the defense rested.

"I'm sure no one made up her or his mind early in the trial, but there were a lot of inconsistencies throughout the trial," he said. "I think everyone had a not-guilty verdict early in deliberation."

Defense attorney Davis Foster said Lemus was greatly relieved by the verdict.

"He's been dealing with this for three years," Foster said. "For him, it's a chance to start his life again."

A cornerstone of the defense throughout the trial was that Lemus, then 31 and married, was having a consensual affair with the victim. On July 11, the defense brought forth several former co-workers as witnesses who asserted that they had seen the two in romantic situations both in and out of work. While on the stand, the woman denied the allegations.

Lemus took the stand himself July 11 and admitted that he was with the girl on the night of the alleged rape; but, he testified, their contact had been consensual.

Authorities arrested Lemus after matching his DNA to semen found on the girl's underwear.

There were questions from the start of the trial, such as the girl's original description of her attacker as a white male, taller than her, without facial hair, driving a compact car.

Embattled SEC head says he will not resign

By Richard Simon
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Amid accusations that the White House has failed to act aggressively enough to clean up corporate accounting abuses, the chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, Harvey Pitt, on Sunday defended the administration's performance and said he would not resign.

For their part, Democrats called for President Bush to "restore integrity to the White House" by releasing information on his 1990 sale of stock in a Texas oil company prior to the company's announcement of a significant decline in earnings.

On the eve of Monday's Senate vote on a far-reaching accounting reform bill, Pitt took aim at his critics, denouncing their "politically crass sound bites."

"I have absolutely no intention of stepping down," the nation's top securities regulator told CBS' "Face the Nation." "I believe I enjoy the confidence of the president, and I'm certain if I don't, he'll let me know."

But Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., renewed his call for Pitt's resignation, contending that the SEC chairman's past work as a lawyer for the accounting industry makes him unsuitable for the job.

"We have now a crisis of confidence on the part of the American investor," McCain told NBC's "Meet the Press." "That confidence can only be restored by individuals whose records are completely untainted by any charge or allegation of conflict of interest."

The jousting comes in the aftermath of the worst week for the stock market since the Sept. 11 terror attacks — a decline precipitated in part by ongoing reports of financial irregularities in some of America's largest corporations.

Those revelations continued Sunday with the disclosure that WorldCom Inc. apparently had begun fraudulent accounting practices in 2000, earlier than suspected last month when nearly $4 billion in accounting regularities led the SEC to file fraud charges against the communications giant. (See story, Page 3.)

SEC Chairman Harvey Pitt said on "Face the Nation" on Sunday that he won't quit his job despite criticism he has been a lax regulator. "I'm the right person for the job," said Pitt, who represented Wall Street's big players as a private securities lawyer.

"This is way beyond aggressive accounting. This is Fraud 101," Rep. W.J. "Billy" Tauzin, R-La., the chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, told ABC's "This Week."

Pitt defended his response to the accounting scandals, which have caused economic and political

Slinging the mud early and often

By Mike Glover

NEWS ANALYSIS

DES MOINES — House Speaker Brent Siegrist took some time off after a narrow GOP congressional primary loss, and he was stunned when he returned and turned on his television.

"I couldn't believe my eyes," said Siegrist. "This is July."

You wouldn't know what day it is by watching political ads on television, which flash constantly on television with an intensity and saturation level worthy of late October.

Gov. Tom Vilsack and GOP challenger Doug Gross are hurling insults at each other. Sen. Tom Harkin and Republican Rep. Greg Ganske have quieted down their mudslinging for a while, but both have left no doubt whether there will be a single charge left unanswered.

The intensity signals that elections are competitive, featuring candidates who apparently have concluded that shyness is not a characteristic that helps one in the political process.

There are some dangers and unintended consequences of what they're doing. The folks involved are professionals, so they understand those risks and have clearly decided that it's worth taking the chance.

Forget about complaining and being blitzed with 1,000 or so rating points of attack television and accept the unpleasant reality: It works.

Voters like nothing more than complaining about how much they hate attack television, but they'll promptly go out and vote for the candidate with the most creative attack campaign.

Slash-and-burn campaigns have other consequences, though. It's long been accepted that one of the consequences of negative campaigns is low voter turnout. A certain spectrum of the electorate simply is turned off by those who are taking part in a rough-and-tumble campaign, and they make the decision to stay home.

There are a lot of theories that attribute the decline in voter participation to the increase in attack television. Politicians who undertake such campaigns, in fact, generally have low voter turnout as one of their goals.

It's far easier to control the outcome of an election when you lower the size of the universe of voters who are participating. But it could cut both ways in this year's midterm election.

Republicans turn to attack television because their voters have a stronger record of voter participation. It's one of the political truisms that Republican voters tend to have a better understanding of what they have to gain by voting than do Democratic voters, and they turn out in slightly greater percentages than Democrats.

On the other hand, Democrats have put far more effort this year into assembling a voter-turnout operation than Republicans. They also have the backing of many groups, such as the unions and teachers, that are experienced and adept at helping to deliver voters to the polls in November.

Increasing voter turnout isn't rocket science. It includes such things as phoning residents, door-canvassing, and putting together car pools to pick up voters who need a ride.

It's labor-intensive and time-consuming, but it can mean a few points at the polls in November. The smaller the turnout, the bigger difference a field organization can make.

While candidates are spending all of their time bashing each other, there will have to be a subtle change a couple of months down the road.

After demonizing their rivals, the major candidates will have to find some way to appear warm and fuzzy by the time fall arrives to give voters a reason to vote.

It's too bad the governor's race has gotten so nasty so early because both of the rivals have a story to tell.

Vilsack is a kid who was adopted in Pittsburgh and grew up in a troubled family, meeting a small-town Iowa girl in college and coming home to build a life in Main Street Iowa.

Gross grew up in a small town and spent much of his adult life toiling in state government before getting a law degree and becoming a success at one of the state's largest law firms.

Although both are appealing, all you hear about is how the clients Gross used to gain success are evil and how Vilsack threw away the state's budget.

The balance is going to get even trickier when the Senate race fires up again. Harkin has flirted with running a positive campaign and ended up locked in a very competitive race.

He won't make that mistake again. Ganske has little choice but to attack because he knows he's behind and has to put some dents in Harkin's armor to get back into the race.

Look for the Senate race to escalate just before Labor Day. It's going to be a very long fall campaign.

Illinois man charged in I.C. stabbing

An Illinois man was charged Sunday with willful injury causing bodily injury after he allegedly stabbed a man at the Press Box, 1920 Keokuk St.

LeBaron L. Harris, 23, of Hoffman Estates allegedly stabbed a 21-year-old male in the side with a broken bottle at 1:32 a.m., according to police reports.

The victim was transported to UI Hospitals and Clinics, where he was treated and released.

Witnesses at the scene allegedly identified Harris as the person responsible for the stabbing. Police found him in a parking lot near the business and arrested him.

Harris was also charged with public intoxication. He was treated and released from Mercy Hospital for a head injury and taken to the Johnson County Jail.

Willful injury causing bodily injury is a Class D felony punishable by up to five years in prison and/or a fine of up to $7,500.

Lab-school parents want tuition hike

CEDAR FALLS (AP) — A group of parents and teachers from Malcolm Price Laboratory School plan to ask the state of Iowa Board of Regents to approve a $100 hike in student fees.

The group wants the annual student fee set at $340 for fiscal year 2003. In April, the regents approved increasing that fee from $200 to $240.

The group decided to ask for the increase after the University of Northern Iowa cut the school's $4.5 million budget by $800,000. Malcolm Price is part of the university's College of Education.

Kathleen McKenna, the group's president, said it was making the recommendation in an attempt to keep the school open.

Northern Iowa Provost Aaron Podolefsky said the group told the university administration it expects to raise approximately $54,000 with the increase.

In late February, university administrators announced that 10th through 12th grades would no longer be taught at Malcolm Price after the 2002-03 school year.

Budget restrictions and inadequate revenues contributed to the closure, university President Robert Koob has said.

The regents will meet Wednesday and Thursday at Northern Iowa.

Kitchen fire causes $25,000 damage

A July 13 fire caused $25,000 in damage to a kitchen in an Iowa City house, fire officials said.

The Iowa City Fire Department spent 20 minutes extinguishing the fire at 3 Dunaggon Court after the house was searched for occupants. No one was at home at the time of the fire, and there were no injuries.

POLICE LOGS

Miguel Angel Crowder, 24, address unknown, was charged Sunday with third-degree sexual abuse in connection with an alleged incident on June 1, 1998.

Carmen Marcel Trammell, 31, of 3359 Tulane Ave., was charged Sunday with possession of cocaine, child endangerment, and possession of marijuana.

State won't cut back on ride inspections

By Gigi Wood
Associated Press

DES MOINES — State inspectors were relieved last week when they learned the safety of carnival rides at county fairs would not be compromised by state budget cuts.

Kathleen Uehling, the deputy labor commissioner of the Iowa Workforce Development's Labor Services Division, had expected to lay off workers who inspect carnival rides when the current fiscal year began July 1.

The division is working with a $500,000 shortfall. Department managers decided to reduce budgets in other areas in order to keep all of their inspectors, she said.

The Iowa Amusement Parks/Rides Inspection division has six inspectors who travel the state each summer to monitor the assembly of carnival rides at county fairs. During the winter, they spend most of their time inspecting elevators, escalators, and other hoists.

Uehling had said she was concerned that not every ride in the state would be inspected because of the layoffs.

"We found the money, so there won't be any layoffs," she said. "It looks like we'll get to every one."

The Iowa Amusement Parks/Rides Inspection division of Iowa Workforce Development issues permits to carnival-ride operators at all 107 of the state's county fairs and at the Iowa State Fair in August.

Uehling said every amusement-park-ride operator must have a permit and must be inspected at least once while operating rides in Iowa. She said many companies travel from fair to fair across the state and only need to be inspected once a year. Her department, however, prefers to watch the rides being put back together at each fair.

She said it's the state inspectors' job to check the stability of rides and watch them as they're being installed. Inspectors make sure all the pins and bolts are reattached and look for signs of metal fatigue, rust, and cracks.

They also check to make sure the rides have seat belts when needed and there are measures in place for crowd control, she said.

"Ride safety is our biggest priority," Uehling said. "The effect on the public is so noticeable and immediate."

So far this year, there have been no injuries on carnival rides reported to the department, Uehling said. Carnival-ride operators are required by law to report any injury to the state.

According to Iowa Workforce Development's 2001 annual report, 26 people have been injured on amusement-park rides in Iowa since 1995.

Tom Barnes, the executive vice president of the Association of Iowa Fairs, said there haven't been any problems at fairs this summer.

"So far, we're doing really well," he said.

The Outdoor Amusement Business Association is a trade-industry organization out of Winter Park, Fla., for traveling carnivals across the country. Bob Johnson, the president of the group, said he's familiar with many of the inspectors in Iowa, which has some of the strictest laws in the country regarding carnival rides.

He said insurance companies also inspect rides for policies that operators are required to have. Insurance companies want to make sure those rides are safe, he said, and so do the carnival companies.

"These are family people, not corporations, with kids and grandkids to protect," Johnson said. "They run the risk of losing their insurance and permits if something were to go wrong."

In fiscal year 2001, the Iowa Amusement Parks/Rides Inspection division gave out 124 permits and completed 1,257 inspections. It collected $2,840 in permit fees and $66,440 in inspection fees.

"Inspectors are bringing in more money than the costs to send them out there," Uehling said.

Scandals taking bite out of state revenues, governors say

By Pauline Arrillaga
Associated Press

BOISE, Idaho — Governors meeting at a national conference say the corporate scandals shaking Wall Street have also hit Main Street USA — from plunging revenues that are prompting program cuts to declines in pension funds and layoffs.

"The greatest anxiety, the greatest fear, the greatest frustration we see on peoples' faces is when they get pink slips," said Mississippi Gov. Ronnie Musgrove, whose state is home to embattled corporate giant WorldCom.

The Clinton, Miss.-based telecommunications company is on the verge of bankruptcy after disclosing it disguised $3.9 billion of expenses as capital expenditures to appear more profitable. Last month, WorldCom began laying off 17,000 workers, and more job cuts are expected.

The corporate crisis was among the topics of debate Sunday as the governors heard from the chiefs of the technology firms Cisco Systems and Micron.

Alaska Gov. Tony Knowles expressed concern that the states can't get past their economic woes "without addressing the crisis with confidence we have in the ethical leadership of corporate America."

West Virginia was among a handful of states that weathered a stormy economy to end the last fiscal year in the black. This year, that surplus is gone, thanks largely to a plummeting stock market that has decreased investment returns.

Now, state leaders are worried about the pension fund that serves teachers, judges, and troopers. And like any individual whose 401(k) has hit the skids, they are looking for someone to blame.

"You have a package that you've been investing in; it declines. The question in many peoples' minds is how much of that is attributed to some of the corporate irregularities that have been reported — the Enrons of the world," said West Virginia Gov. Bob Wise.

"It has effects far greater than simply: Their stock is down. There's a ripple-through effect that takes awhile for everyone to appreciate."

While governors are grappling with billions in budget shortfalls, the same corporate crises that have sent the stock market reeling are hindering an already desperate economic situation.

Tax refunds are rising while revenues are falling because of the market instability. Investors are subject to capital-gains taxes when they sell a stock that has risen in value. But if the stock declines, losses can be used to reduce their taxes or even get a refund.

A recent nationwide survey found the number of state refunds was up 6.4 percent, and the average individual refund was up 8.9 percent, further draining state coffers.

State retirement funds also have taken a hit.

In Michigan, where the pension fund is worth approximately $45 billion, officials reported a loss of $116 million on WorldCom.

Speaking of bad bookkeeping ...

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Lost in all the outrage over the corporate accounting scandals is one fact politicians do not like to acknowledge: The auditing problems at American companies cannot rival the bookkeeping shambles of the world's largest enterprise — the U.S. government.

Exaggerated earnings, disguised liabilities, off-budget shenanigans — they are all there in the government's ledgers on a scale even the biggest companies could not dream of matching.

WorldCom Inc. executives brought America's second-largest long-distance phone company to the brink of bankruptcy after using improper accounting to pad earnings by $3.8 billion.

Last year, when Congress was faced with a similar need to bolster the bottom line, lawmakers simply voted to shift the date by which corporations had to make a quarterly tax payment. The result: $33 billion in revenue badly needed to cover the costs of President Bush's big tax cut.

While Republicans pushed that particular budget sleight of hand, both parties over the years have engaged in similar maneuvers to cover shortfalls.

"If you look at the books of the corporate world, even the fraudulent ones, they are less subject to manipulation than the federal budget is," said former Minnesota Rep. Bill Frenzel, who watched the process up close as the top Republican on the House Budget Committee.

"Members of Congress get re-elected by bringing home roads, and armories, and university grants, and heaven knows what else," Frenzel said. "Every American wants more frugality, but only after they get their road or bridge."

With such a dynamic, it is no wonder that there has been no outcry over government accounting scandals to match the congressional outrage being expressed over misleading financial reports by U.S. companies.

On July 12, Bush's Office of Management and Budget offered its own restatement of earnings and expenses. The federal deficit for the current budget year, which ends in September, is now projected to be $165 billion, not the $106 billion deficit the administration projected in February.

The White House also once again cut the projected surplus for the next decade to $827 billion. That is a far cry from the $5 trillion surplus projection Bush made when he took office, before a recession, a war on terrorism, and his $1.35 trillion 10-year tax cut saw $4 trillion of that amount evaporate.

"The persistent inability of the government to make correct projections is the budget's most visible problem," said Stanley Colander, a budget expert at the Fleishman-Hillard consulting firm. "It's pretty easy for the public to become cynical."

A deficit for this year would mark a return to red ink after four-straight years of surpluses, including a $127 billion surplus a year ago.

That achievement was proudly hailed by the Bush administration in October 2001. By March, however, the administration released a little-noticed document that showed by another accounting method last year's surplus would actually turn into a deficit of $514.8 billion.

The reason for the difference: Under the accrual method of accounting that companies are required to use, expenses are booked when they are incurred, not when the payments are made.

The March deficit figure reflected a $389 billion boost in military retirees' health benefits that Congress approved last year and other future-year expenses that were added to the deficit side of the ledger.

The very existence of the alternative accounting document, which the government started producing in 1998, represents a milestone in the country's history. It's the first time Washington has tried to reconcile its books using real-world accounting standards.

Unfortunately, the General Accounting Office has not been able to sign off on any of the five annual documents so far, contending that the bookkeeping is still too shoddy to get an auditor's seal of approval.

The 2001 report featured $17.3 billion in what was described as "unreconciled transactions" — money that simply could not be accounted for.

GAO Comptroller General David Walter said this discrepancy does not mean the money was stolen, just that the antiquated accounting systems in use at many government agencies lost track of it.

WorldCom workers questioned accounting

By Christopher Stern
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — As far back as 2000, WorldCom Inc. employees challenged the company's accounting and in at least one case raised those concerns with auditor Arthur Andersen LLP, according to internal documents released Sunday.

The documents, released by House Energy and Committee Chairman Billy Tauzin, R-La., showed that WorldCom employees in the United States and Europe believed as early as March 2000 that the company was moving money around on its internal books in an effort to make the company look more profitable than it was.

The documents also show that WorldCom's senior financial managers, including former controller David Myers and former Chief Financial Officer Scott Sullivan, had ordered lower-level employees to record transactions on its books that the workers viewed as improper.

WorldCom, based in Clinton, Miss., is expected to file for bankruptcy protection, and it is struggling to find financing to remain operational. The company has been on the edge of financial crisis since late June, when it announced it had improperly claimed $3.9 billion in regular expenses as capital investments during 2002 and 2001. The documents now show that the practice, which made the company appear profitable when it was not, extended back to at least the spring of 2000.

The Securities and Exchange Commission has charged the company with defrauding investors. WorldCom is the subject of a federal criminal investigation, and it has been targeted by congressional investigators as well.

Tauzin, who is leading his own investigation, said Sunday on ABC-TV's "This Week," that other documents showed that Myers, who resigned last month, acknowledged WorldCom resorted to improper accounting to save itself from collapse.

In one of the documents, according to Tauzin, "[Myers] said, 'If we don't do this, we close our doors; we can't operate. We have to keep hiding these losses, or our business fails.'"

WorldCom declined to comment Sunday on the memos. "We are fully cooperating with all external investigations," WorldCom spokesman Brad Burns said. "We want any wrongdoers brought to justice and our business to move forward."

Pitt has been criticized, particularly by Democrats, for his close ties to the accounting industry, which he represented in his private law practice.

The documents released Sunday show that on June 26, the day after WorldCom announced that it claimed $3.9 billion in regular expenses as capital costs, Steven Brabbs, a London-based employee, wrote WorldCom auditors that he had been required to record $33.6 million in expenses, which he believed were unjustified in March 2000.

At the time he was ordered to make the entry, Brabbs held the title of director, international finance and control. Brabbs found that WorldCom had issued financial statements in the United States that made his divisions appear more profitable than he knew them to be. Brabbs became concerned and began to ask how WorldCom had come up for such a profitable figure for its overseas operations.

"After phone calls and e-mails to the U.S., we were told that the entry had been made on the basis of a directive from Scott Sullivan," Brabbs said in the memo.

Sullivan was fired by the company June 25, the same day WorldCom told the SEC about the improper accounting.

"Despite repeated requests, we were given no support or explanation for the theory," Brabbs said in the memo.

Seat belts saving teen lives, new study says

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Seat belts saved the lives of 4,305 teenage drivers involved in fatal accidents from 1995 to 2000, an advocacy group estimated in a report Sunday.

The group found that seat belts were used by 36 percent of all fatally injured teenage drivers and 23 percent of all fatally injured teenage passengers.

If belt use had been 80 percent among the teen drivers — a long-standing federal target for all drivers — an estimated 6,812 teen drivers who were killed would have survived, the study estimated.

The study also found that 47 percent of 16 to 19 year-old victims were wearing seat belts in crashes that occurred in states with so-called primary laws, under which police can pull over drivers for not being buckled up. Only 30 percent of victims wore belts in states where police can ticket drivers only if they are pulled over for a separate violation.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration observed in autumn 2000 that overall seat-belt use in primary states was 77 percent, compared with 64 percent in other states. The agency's study did not break down statistics by age or estimate belt use among teen drivers.

Traffic crashes are responsible for 38 percent of deaths for 15- to 19-year-olds. Teen drivers have a higher crash risk than any other age group in the United States, whether measured by miles driven or population.

In 2000, the latest year of complete federal statistics, 4,698 teens aged 16 to 19 died in traffic crashes. Eleven percent of drivers and 16 percent of passengers killed that year were teenagers.

Letters to the Editor

Power of writing

I would like to add my voice to that of Michael Chesnik, who, in his letter (DI, July 10), expressed concern about the content of a DI Opinions piece. Chesnik referred to the July 5 column of Deanna Olsen, in which invective was directed against a volunteer who chose to devote time to helping the local police. As she admitted, Olsen has "issues" with regard to the police, but her diatribe against the volunteer was, as far as I could tell, wholly inappropriate.

I urge the editors of the DI to take greater responsibility in informing contributors of both the power and the responsibility of their writing. Columnists should be cautioned against the ills of venting personal gripes — particularly when done at the expense of others. I suspect readers would prefer to read informed and inspiring opinions that challenge us to do better than to read self-oriented pieces that, ironically, do not even serve the writers' own interests all that well.

grace is more honest than having a person yell at you, "One must buy into the idea of God or face the almighty wrath of God." I will never condone one mortal telling another mortal he or she is condemned to burn forever because they disagree.

The phrase "under God" was a 1954 congressional attempt to root out communism. I always thought the American Inquisition died with Joseph McCarthy's political career. We now face the religious ghost of those paranoid years. Conservative arguments are flawed in this matter. The always-conservative Kenneth Star commented on Fox News, "The court did not consider the historical grounding and importance of God in American life." In this country prior to 1860, the same "too much history" argument was made about slavery. Historically, slavery was too important to the Southern way of life to outlaw. We got rid of slavery. In an age of nuclear weapons, nothing is worse to disagree about than God and religion because sooner or later a "godly" believer will use power only a deity should possess.

My religious beliefs are very personal to me. My moral beliefs are not because God and mortality are not mutually exclusive. It is possible to believe in God and commit immoral acts, and it is possible to be an atheist and be very moral. Buddhism is an example of a non-deity religion. Our society has more problems with mono-theocratic religious believers who call themselves Christian than we do with atheists. I never heard of an atheist suicide bomber.

In a pluralist world, state-sponsored mono-theocracy cannot, in principle, coexist with the idea of freedom. If I have to believe in God the same way others do, I will lose my faith in the church and in the belief of a higher power. The power of grace, for me, is finding God in my own time and in a way I can accept. If I and others cannot be allowed to believe or disbelieve in God as I do, I will gladly forfeit my life and my freedom forever.

Funding the Furniture Project

As a recipient of Community Development Block Grants funds, the Furniture Project would like to thank the Community Development Commission for its continued support. The Furniture Project is a recycling program that distributes good used furniture to formally homeless and near homeless families and individuals to help them re-establish homes of their own. The funds we receive from the grant allow us to continue to serve the growing need of the Johnson County community. The Furniture Project has served more than 500 individuals since July 2001.

More than 1,200 people spend the night in Iowa City emergency shelters each year. When families are able to regain permanent housing, they frequently lack the basic furnishings necessary to transform their new places into homes. The Furniture Project has good useable furniture for people to choose from and take to their new homes at no charge. The project helps fire and flood victims as well.

The funds we receive from the community grants support project staffing, as well as the maintenance and fuel for the Furniture Project moving van. Because the project falls through the cracks and is not eligible for most grants, the continued support of community grants, as well as the Iowa City landfill, are necessary to keep the project operational. Again, thank you for supporting the Furniture Project so we can continue to serve the needs of families in Iowa City and Johnson County.

U.S., world would benefit from compliance with court

The Bush administration scored a big victory for its unilateralist foreign policy last week. On July 12, the U.N. Security Council passed a resolution temporarily exempting American peacekeepers from possible prosecution by the International Criminal Court for one full year. The Bush administration had threatened to veto any future U.N. peacekeeping missions unless America's demands for immunity were met.

Established by the Treaty of Rome in 1998, the court is designed to be a permanent international tribunal for trying war criminals. President Bush and many Americans are skeptical of U.S. involvement in the court.

Some think that the United States will lose its judicial sovereignty. Others are afraid that states with grudges against the United States will use the court to impede the world's only superpower from achieving its foreign-policy goals. The truth, however, is that both the United States and the world will be better off if America supports and complies with the court.

The court is extremely unlikely to ever supersede the U.S. Constitution. The Treaty of Rome forbids the court from prosecuting anyone who has already been investigated in good faith and (if necessary) prosecuted by her or his own country. In this case, the United States has nothing to fear because it already investigates and prosecutes its own suspected war criminals.

It is also nearly impossible that any rogue nation could ever bring unwarranted charges against Americans. Any overzealous, Kenneth Starr-style prosecutor can be removed by a majority vote of the governments that are members of the court, and any unfair judge can be removed by a two-thirds vote.

Furthermore, the court's definitions of "war crimes" and "genocide" and "crimes against humanity" are far from vague and would not easily lend themselves to politicized prosecution. In fact, these definitions have been taken from treaties and conventions that the United States has already signed and ratified and are very similar to the Pentagon's own definitions.

The court would make the world a better place. The concept of "universal jurisdiction," upon which the court is based, has been employed many times with great success. The most notable example is the Nuremberg tribunal that brought Nazi leaders to justice and helped the global healing process after World War II.

The most recent instances of successful international tribunals are those established in The Hague for former Yugoslavia and in Arusha, Tanzania, for Rwanda. To date, these ad hoc tribunals have convicted dozens for their actions; they have never brought charges against any American.

By ratifying the Treaty of Rome and supporting the court, the United States would give credibility to the court and enhance its own reputation abroad. The United States would also gain a forum for prosecuting criminals in the war against terror.

Most nations would be much more willing to surrender suspected terrorists to a legitimate, international body than to a hostile U.S. judicial system. Any country that is as dedicated to upholding justice as the United States claims to be should be willing to play by the rules of the court.

Losing my religion

The Ninth District court decision on the Pledge of Allegiance has cost me friends. I believe the court made a principle-based decision. I have the right to agree with the court.

Justice Oliver W. Holmes said, "The Constitution is made for people of fundamental differing views." I believe in God, and I am Christian. There are those in my faith who vehemently opposed the court's ruling. I cannot force other people to swallow the idea that there is a God or believe in anything else that I do. In my view, finding God or a higher state of being through

Planned Parenthood and the importance of trust

Almost two months ago — on May 31 — a baby was found, abandoned and dead, at a Buena Vista County recycling facility. Not only was the baby obviously unwanted, but the body also made it through the facility's shredder before anyone even noticed it. A sad story, indeed, and the woman who was capable of doing such an awful thing should be punished.

With good intentions, that is what the prosecutor in this case is trying to do. With the approval of the Buena Vista County sheriff, county attorney, and a judge, he has requested the records of every woman who tested pregnant at any Storm Lake clinic between August 2001 and this May.

Some of the area's clinics have already succumbed to the demands of the prosecutor, but Planned Parenthood has refused to divulge its clients' private information. As a result, Buena Vista County Attorney Phil Havens has threatened to file contempt of court charges against the custodian of the clinic's records.

What all of these men have failed to realize, however, is that even with every record of every woman in the state, they may never find who was responsible for this baby's tragic death.

While many women seek prenatal care at clinics such as Planned Parenthood, many others see ob-gyn doctors or other family-care physicians. If a woman receives care from a doctor, her records and information are kept private because of the doctor-patient privilege protected under Iowa law.

Amanda Mittlestadt

MIDDLE GROUND

Law-enforcement authorities in this case have argued that pregnancy and other medical information held by clinics such as Planned Parenthood are not privileged because the tests are not performed by doctors. Regardless, women who go there still have a right to privacy, and without so much as a suspect, the prosecution should not be able to request any medical records, especially those of hundreds of innocent women.

So even if the authorities could obtain the medical records of women from Planned Parenthood, they still could not access those of women who tested at hospitals and other medical clinics. Furthermore, they have no way of knowing if the woman they are looking for even took a pregnancy test in a clinic.

There are very accurate home pregnancy tests available over the counter, and there is no way to track all the women who tested themselves over the past year. Moreover, it is unlikely that the woman who abandoned her baby at the recycling center ever received any care during her pregnancy.

Similar cases in the past have shown that such women usually conceal their pregnancy or are in denial about it, give birth discreetly at home, panic, and then desert the newborn. Women who care enough to seek out prenatal care rarely act in such a manner.

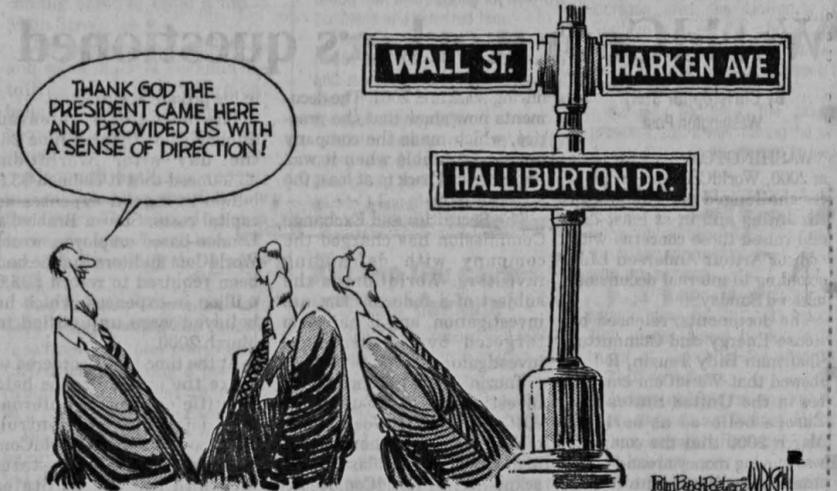

Finally, there is no way of knowing whether the woman responsible lives in Buena Vista County or even in Iowa. Perhaps the woman was driving through the state when she went into labor. Perhaps she was from southern Iowa and took the baby to Buena Vista County to avoid becoming a suspect.

There are countless things that the prosecution has failed to consider.

Ultimately, this case should be an opportunity to promote women's health clinics, not exploit them. As this situation proves, there are still women who feel unsafe or uncomfortable seeking out care for unwanted pregnancies. There are still women who feel that leaving a baby for dead after delivery is a better alternative than aborting it before birth. These women need information; they need someone they can trust. Planned Parenthood has proved that it is unwilling to betray the trust of its clients and should continue to stand its ground. Because when authorities threaten to betray the confidence women have in such clinics, the only result will be more cases like the one in Storm Lake.

Oh, the non-horror, the non-horror

Film: Halloween: Resurrection
Director: Rick Rosenthal
Writers: Larry Brand and Sean Hood
Starring: Busta Rhymes, Bianca Kajlich, and Jamie Lee Curtis
Length: 94 minutes
Rated: R

It's not often that I am tempted to give away every single surprise in a film just to warn people away from it. However, one of those rare moments has come up, and it's because of the eighth entry in a little series that won't die — Halloween.

Yes, Michael Myers, the silent, rubber-masked serial killer introduced in 1978 by horror maestro John Carpenter has returned for another banal sequel. Yet again, the marketing geniuses try to tell us that everything has changed — and yet again, nothing really has.

The "plot" (wherein the writers try to get together as many warm, massacre-ready bodies as possible) has money-driven promoter Busta Rhymes locking six all-too-willing college students into the dilapidated childhood home of Myers for a night of (and I quote) "Danger-tainment." The escapades of these voluntary prisoners are captured on cameras and broadcast over the Internet. What nobody counted on (except, of course, the audience) is that the house is still occupied (cue the familiar synthesized notes of the Halloween theme).

The screenwriters try halfheartedly to add a few new elements to freshen up the franchise. Of course, they do this by way of copying from Scream (a trend in horror films that is, like, sooooo five years ago). When Resurrection isn't depicting scenes of mayhem and murder, it's riffing on pop culture, specifically the reality-television phenomena that propagated such series as "Survivor" and MTV's "Fear."

Probably the most intriguing bit of commentary occurs when a group of teens watching the Webcast start acting like typical horror film fans ("Don't go in there!" "He's right behind you!"). It's an eerie reflection and probably the best part of the film.

Otherwise, the structure is exactly the same as any number of other slasher films. Usually, I start such a movie guessing who will live and who will die — and I get one wrong, at least. I had 100 percent accuracy in Resurrection, and I was nearly as accurate about the order of each character's demise.

All the classic bits are here — investigating the strange noise, the heroine discovering the bodies of every single one of her friends (you can never miss a good corpse), and the Final Girl scenario, in which the last surviving female, out of sheer desperation, gets some gumption and kicks a reasonable amount of butt. I'm not spoiling anything here, folks. If you've seen one Halloween film, you've seen them all (with the exception of No. 3, which hasn't a thing to do with the rest of the series).

Director Rick Rosenthal (who had the helm for the first sequel, Halloween II: The Nightmare Isn't Over!) does terribly terrifying work here. There's very little zip, zing, vim, or vigor to the proceedings. The murders are all telegraphed, and although one or two border on slightly disturbing, they're mostly yawn-worthy. I counted exactly one good knock to the ol' nervous system, and that was at the very end.

 Bianca Kajlich and Busta Rhymes star in Halloween: Resurrection. Rhymes' character locks six college students into the childhood home of Mike Myers and airs video footage of them on the Internet.

What's worse is that Rosenthal seems to be on an homage binge, throwing in direct quotes from several different entries in the series. I counted four nods to the original Halloween, one to its first sequel, and one to the most recent entry Halloween: H2O. Not only that, but there's blatant borrowing from Michael Powell's classic thriller Peeping Tom and a shocking moment that's taken directly from 1951's The Thing (from Another World). Now, I can understand one or two cute little references, but eight shots framed exactly like other films? That's cinematic larceny.

If I may rant for a moment, horror is not a genre to be taken lightly, despite what popular opinion might say. It's very important to the landscape of film, as it is often more reflective of current social mores than other genres. The subtext of a well-done horror movie can say more about its era than any number of dramas or comedies. However, when directors such as Rosenthal try to push horror off as cheap, mind-rotting crap for idiots, that gives it a bad name and doesn't allow this type of film the respect it deserves. From a purely ideological standpoint, movies such as Resurrection are offensive to those who understand the nuance of terror.

If you need a slasher fix, go rent the original Halloween. Even the first Friday the 13th film (a movie that I really dislike) would do you a better service. The producers of this garbage would do well to burn all of the prints. The only horror in Halloween: Resurrection is that it was ever made.

ALBUM REVIEW

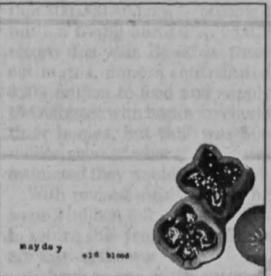

No need to call for help

By Dan Maloney
 The Daily Iowan

Omaha, Neb., seems like an unlikely spot to be a hot bed for a thriving music scene. The town in every sense is small and old-fashioned, with cracked red-brick roads, snug independent shops in the downtown area, and people who have a general kindness for strangers.

The town does not express the type of arrogance that most music scenes are associated with, and it is from this humble honesty that the music of the Omaha scene draws from. As noted in Time, Omaha bands such as Bright Eyes and the Faint are creating a huge industry buzz similar to what happened in Seattle and now also in New York. The harbor of these bands is local label Saddle Creek Records, which puts records out by all these bands along with other Omaha favorites such as Cursive, Desparcidos, and Lullaby for the Working Class.

One of the more recent releases from Saddle Creek is Mayday and its album Old Blood. Mayday is the brainchild of Ted Stevens, who used to be in Lullaby for the Working Class and now shares the spotlight in Cursive. In true Omaha fashion, Stevens assembled a cast of players featuring Mike and A.J. Mogis from Lullaby,

Mayday
Old Blood

Conor Oberst from Bright Eyes, Tim Casher and Gretta Cohn of Cursive, and Orenda Fink and Maria Taylor from Azure Ray.

On Old Blood, Steven's returns to the slow and solemn sounds he once produced with Lullaby. The first track, "cinquefoils" gracefully moves with fingerpicked guitars, percussive shakers, ambient piano, and Stevens' hushed vocal style.

The next track, "Come Home," is also reassuringly serene and is complemented by the lush female vocals of Azure Ray.

Continuing the slow, moving trend, "Lullaby for the Sleeping Elephant" captures a sense of superfluous space, with sporadically timed ride-cymbal hits and never-ending open guitar chords, which is similar to bands such as Low and Godspeed You Black Emperor. In the end, "Lullaby for the Sleeping Elephant" picks up and gradually gets louder, with Stevens' voice gaining more confidence.

Stevens tackles a traditional spiritual song in "I Know a Moonlight," which is done beautifully with the women of Azure Ray providing a rich vocal accompaniment.

On "Confession," Stevens hands the vocals to Kasher. The tune has a snake-charming Calypsonian style, with mariachi-style guitar licks that provoke a two-step.

The album closes with "temple/temporary/extempore/tempo," which begins with a two-minute string collision that segues into a fingerpicked guitar lick and Steven's vocals that are slightly louder than before but still quiet like a scandalous whisper in the ear. The song gains momentum with well-orchestrated string arrangements and ambient ebow. The song clocks out at 10 minutes with an electronica freakout to end the story.

Like most bands from Omaha, Mayday deserves the attention of your music-hungry ears. Let the group accompany your mid-day nap, and you'll wake up pleasantly rested.

ARTS BRIEF

Teaching Hollywood to just say no

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The people waging the war on drugs have gone Hollywood.

Officials with the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration briefed producers, directors, and writers on the connection between drug trafficking and terrorism and offered to consult on movies and television programs.

Approximately 40 people, including film directors Michael Mann and Arthur Hiller and people behind such TV series as "Third Watch" and "E.R.," gathered at the Beverly Hills Hotel on July 10 to hear DEA Director Asa Hutchinson, as well as the agency's intelligence chief and a former undercover agent.

"I was stunned," said Anne Sweeney, the president of ABC Cable Networks Group, a unit of The Walt Disney Co. "It helped deepen people's understanding of the challenges our country faces in the war on drugs."

The meeting was organized by the Entertainment Industries Council, a nonprofit group that helps writers and producers depict social and health issues including AIDS, alcohol abuse, and gun violence.

"The DEA knows more about terrorism and drugs than anybody," said Brian Dyak, the entertainment group's president and chief executive. "If it's willing to open its doors a little and the information becomes a part of story lines, it's a service to the public."

A DEA spokesman said the agency is trying to emerge from its often-necessary shroud of secrecy to offer technical help the same way the Pentagon and the CIA consult on movies such as the recent blockbuster The Sum of All Fears.

"We don't expect to try to directly shape what some screenwriter is going to write," DEA spokesman Chris Battle said. "Our goal was simply to provide a more realistic and accurate version of the drug war and what kind of challenges, what kind of threats our agents face every day."

ARTS BRIEFS

Springing to the worst of the worst

NEW YORK (AP) — The worst TV shows ever are pretty bad — but "The Jerry Springer Show" tops TV Guide's list.

"Awful television shows are a storied part of our society," TV Guide Editor-in-Chief Steven Reddcliffe said July 12. "Some of them actually are very successful and are great guilty pleasures. And no one has turned guilty-pleasure TV into more of an art form than Jerry Springer."

The list is in the July 20 issue of the magazine, on newsstands today.

"The Jerry Springer Show," a syndicated daytime talk-show hit since 1991, was first on a list of 50 worst shows only two months after "Seinfeld" was No. 1 on a TV Guide list of the best 50 shows.

Second worst on the new list was NBC's "My Mother the Car," 1965-66, followed by NBC, UPN, and TNN's "XFL," 2001; ABC's "The Brady Bunch Hour" (1977); and CBS' "Hogan's Heroes" (1965-71).

Rounding out the top 10 were "Celebrity Boxing" (Fox, 2002-present); "AfterMASH" (CBS, 1983-84); "Cop Rock" (ABC, 1990); "You're in the Picture" (CBS, 1961); and "Haw Honeys" (syndicated, 1978-79).

We Were Soldiers wasn't history

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — Veterans are attacking the Hollywood movie We Were Soldiers, saying it distorts history and taints the image of Vietnamese soldiers during the Vietnam War.

The accusations came during a government-organized symposium on the movie July 11, which veterans, writers, and movie critics attended, the Quan Doi Nhan Dan (People's Army) newspaper said.

"Regrettably, the movie does not accurately reflect history, intentionally distorts the truth ... while praising U.S. soldiers," the newspaper said July 12.

The movie, starring Mel Gibson, depicts the first major clash between regular Vietnamese communist troops and American forces in the war. On Nov. 14, 1965, some 400 U.S. soldiers landed by helicopter in the Ia Drang Valley in Vietnam's Central Highlands and found themselves ill-prepared and surrounded by 2,000 North Vietnamese soldiers.

U.S. troops, who were overrun and suffered heavy casualties, are portrayed as courageous and self-sacrificing in caring for each other.

Lemus innocent, jury announces

Lemus is from El Salvador and stands five inches shorter than his accuser. He has had a mustache for years and drives a pickup truck.

During Foster's closing arguments, he attempted to explain why the victim would claim someone other than Lemus raped her on that night in June 1999.

"She's arrived home late from what may have been her first sexual experience," he said. "She has to come up with an explanation that keeps her from getting into trouble, yet points away from Alex Lemus."

Had Lemus been convicted, he would have faced a mandatory sentence of life in prison without parole.

"He's very happy he'll be able to return home and move on with his life with his wife and sons," Foster said.

Video reportedly shows fire at Etc.

ETC.

April 18 incident in which nine people were burned.

Police allege that the bar's general manager, 26-year-old Troy Kline, poured Everclear into the bar's well and set it aflame. Kline added more alcohol when the flame began to die, sparking a fireball, court records say. Kline, who has pleaded not guilty, faces a reckless-use-of-fire charge.

Riley said the cameraman, who gave his law firm the tape on the condition of anonymity, recorded a line of flames burning through the well at a constant height and intensity.

"I wouldn't say we've had it from day one, but we received it soon after the incident," Riley said, describing the bar shown in the video as "less than crowded."

The camera initially shows a side-angle shot of two bartenders mixing drinks behind the flames, then pans briefly to a group of dancing patrons before returning to the bar, Riley said. The bartenders, whom family, friends, or co-workers could probably identify, never fueled the fire while the camera was rolling, he added.

Riley's firm sent a copy of the tape to Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White on July 12; it will likely be used as evidence against Kline.

Busche, the most severely injured of the bar customers, has burns on 11 percent of her body, including her mouth and throat. She suffered second- and third-degree burns on her face, chest, and arms, and in the chaos that night she broke her nose, requiring surgery, court records said.

"She's still recuperating," Riley said. "Burns take a long time to heal. I can't imagine what it must be like for her."

The other two lawsuits were filed by UI junior Amy Shah, 20, of Palatine, Ill., and UI senior Chris Freed, 23, of West Des Moines. Trial dates for the civil cases have not been set.

Kline's trial is scheduled for Aug. 14.

Former Etc. owner Herbert "Kip" Pohl surrendered his liquor license after a 14-day suspension in June. He sold the bar to George Etre, 26, the owner of the Fit Zone, 201 S. Clinton St.

to Iowa City, even though McAnally has a police officer in Las Vegas ready to ship the gun to them. Iowa City police refused to accept the shipment, saying, "We don't do that type of thing."

"If she wants it so badly, she can buy it locally," said Iowa City police Lt. Sidney Jackson. "It's unreasonable to assume we would do something like this."

Gabriel, a member of the National Rifle Association, said it is not a police station's responsibility to help ship and receive firearms.

"I haven't known any police officer who would do this," he said.

McAnally said shipping the handgun in this fashion is her last resort — she has called UPS, Federal Express, and investigated sending the gun via licensed dealers, which would cost $80.

"I don't understand why a law-abiding and taxpaying citizen doesn't get her rights," she said. "It's absurd and offensive to think I have the class and financial status to go out and buy a new gun and something like this happens — I already own a gun."

Last week, when McAnally approached Iowa City police, officers suggested she drive halfway to Las Vegas, meeting someone to retrieve the handgun.

McAnally said she will likely now approach the Johnson County Sheriff's Office, Johnson County attorney, and state officials, if necessary.

Said McAnally: "It's not like I want to go shoot off my gun in the street."

Pitt fires back at critics calling for ouster

jitters from Wall Street to Washington, saying the SEC is investigating a record and "staggering" number of corporations.

Referring to one high-profile case, Pitt vowed that the SEC would "follow the trail wherever it leads" in its probe of accounting practices at Halliburton Co., a Texas-based oil services business that Vice President Dick Cheney once led.

"No one gets a pass," he said. House Minority Leader Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo., however, suggested that Pitt remove himself from any involvement in the Halliburton probe.

Pitt called renewed scrutiny of Bush's 1990 sale of stock in a company of which Bush was a director "ancient history." Then-businessman Bush sold the Harken Energy Corp. stock shortly before the company reported a sizable loss.

Pitt said on NBC's "Meet the Press" that the matter had been thoroughly investigated and is now closed. But he said he would make public the SEC file if the president requested it.

Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., urged Bush to do just that.

"This president ran on the idea that he was going to restore integrity to the White House, that he would be forthright with the American people," Edwards told CNN's "Late Edition." "He has an opportunity now to prove that."

Sen. Joseph I. Lieberman, D-Conn., agreed. "I don't know that anything illegal happened, but there are a lot of things you can do that are legal but very wrong," he told ABC's "This Week." "It is critically important that the president of the United States, in following through on the strong language that he spoke on Wall Street earlier in the week, open up the files and let the American people see what was there."

Commerce Secretary Donald Evans defended Bush, dismissing continuing talk about the stock sale as "nothing but political garbage that the American people are sick and tired of."

Pitt did not specify how many cases of corporate wrongdoing are under investigation. But he said the agency would get a better gauge of problems "lurking out there" after an Aug. 14 deadline for the heads of the largest public companies to certify the accuracy of their financial statements.

Pitt said at this point he believes the problems are because of a "few rotten apples." But he also pledged that the SEC "is going to go after these people, and people who do hard crime will do hard time."

But Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., who drafted the Senate accounting bill, said, "It's not just a few bad apples who need to be severely punished ... The system is not working right." And he called on the president to get behind the legislation in "a very strong way."

Sarbanes' bill would establish an independent accounting oversight board to replace the accounting industry's self-policing approach to discipline. It would also establish new penalties for corporate fraud and new financial-disclosure requirements for public companies.

While agreeing with many of the goals of Sarbanes' bill, the White House has expressed concern that it could create a turf war between the new board and SEC.

A bipartisan group of senators today plans to try to strengthen the bill further.

McCain and Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., have pushed to require companies to deduct from earnings the value of stock options awarded to executives. They hope to get a vote on an amendment that would refer the politically hot issue to the Financial Accounting Standards Board, which writes rules for the accounting profession. But they face stiff opposition from business groups, which fear such a move could slashed bottom-line earnings across the corporate landscape as well as jeopardize one of corporate America's most popular forms of compensation.

"The problem, in my opinion, is not stock options but the way in which a small group of greedy and unethical corporate executives used stock options," Lieberman said.

Judge convicts 4 in slaying of reporter

Associated Press

HYDERABAD, Pakistan — Four Islamic militants were convicted earlier today in the kidnap-slaying of Wall Street Journal reporter Daniel Pearl, and chief defendant Ahmed Omar Saeed Sheikh was sentenced to death, a defense lawyer said. The three others were sentenced to 25 years imprisonment.

The verdict was handed down by Judge Ali Ashraf Shah in the heavily guarded jail where the trial was held, deputy defense lawyer Mohsin Imam said.

The defense said the verdict will be appealed.

Reporters were not allowed in the courtroom; they were to be briefed afterward.

The trial has fanned the anger of Islamic militants against Pakistan's government, which many militants feel betrayed them by abandoning the Afghan Taliban and supporting the United States after Sept. 11.

"The government will impose the decision at the behest of the United States," said Sheikh Aslam, the brother of defendant Sheikh Adil, as he arrived for Monday's session. "All executive decisions in Pakistan are being imposed by the United States."

Western diplomats and some Pakistani observers fear the kidnap-slaying of the 38-year-old journalist was the first shot in a war between Islamic extremists and this country's Western-backed government.

Pakistani newspapers on July 13 received an Urdu-language e-mail purportedly from Asif Ramzi, one of those sought in the Pearl case, threatening more attacks against foreigners.

Pearl disappeared in Karachi on Jan. 23 while researching Pakistani's Islamic extremist movement, including possible links to Richard C. Reid, who was arrested in December 2001 on a flight between Paris and Miami with explosives in his shoes.

Gunman thwarted in attempt to kill Chirac

By Sebastian Rotella
Los Angeles Times

PARIS — A gunman described as a Neo-Nazi attempted to assassinate French President Jacques Chirac during a Bastille Day parade Sunday, but spectators and police subdued the suspect after he fired a single errant shot with a rifle.

No one was injured, and the parade continued uninterrupted, authorities said.

Police said the suspect was a 25-year-old student affiliated with Neo-Nazi and skinhead movements. He allegedly admitted to the assassination attempt during an interrogation and was placed in a psychiatric jail ward because of apparent mental problems, authorities said. Police did not identify him, but media reports gave his name as Maxime Brunerie.

The incident took place about 9:55 a.m. as Chirac's open military jeep passed the Arc de Triomphe and approached the Champs-Élysées, the French capital's showcase boulevard. The faint crack of the .22-caliber rifle was audible in the circular plaza, which was lined with tanks, soldiers, and uniformed and plainclothes police for the parade celebrating France's national holiday.

It was not clear how close the bullet came to the president. Chirac, the general with whom he was riding, and soldiers standing at attention for presidential review did not visibly react to the shot fired, which was approximately 100 yards away.

Television footage showed riot police pinning a man with closed-cropped hair to the cement and then rushing him into a police van. Plainclothes police carried away the guitar case he allegedly used to conceal the rifle, which authorities said was purchased last week and was loaded with five bullets.

A man carrying a rifle is arrested Sunday by a riot police officer during the Bastille Day parade on the Champs-Élysées. The man, identified only as a Neo-Nazi, allegedly tried to assassinate French President Jacques Chirac.

Chirac made no comment about the incident. But his wife, Bernardette, later told reporters that there was no doubt whether the gunman wanted to kill the president.

An Interior Ministry official described the incident as the act of an apparently deranged extremist who tried to take his own life as he was being captured.

"It was an assassination attempt," said Patrick Devedjian of the Interior Ministry. "He fired a first shot... Then he was overcome and tried to turn the weapon against himself."

Spectators were the first to grab the gunman after he produced the rifle from the guitar case and took aim, according to witnesses.

Ex-Dominican leader dies

By Mark Fineman
Los Angeles Times

Joaquin Balaguer, the diminutive poet, president, and patriarch who towered over the Dominican Republic through nearly a half-century of turmoil, U.S. occupation, and enduring poverty, died Sunday. He was 95.

A father figure and kingmaker to the end for his Caribbean nation of 8 million, Balaguer died of heart failure after days on a respirator in a Santo Domingo hospital.

"The doctors tried to save him until 4:30 [a.m.], when he died fighting," Rafael Bello Andino, Balaguer's closest aide, told reporters.

It was an apt epitaph for the seven-term president, who was last seen in public a year ago. His final presidential term ended early in 1996 under a cloud of election fraud. But the blind and frail Balaguer continued to manipulate Dominican politics as counselor, peacemaker, and benefactor.

Despite his array of infirmities, Balaguer again ran in the most recent presidential polls two years ago, his grandfatherly face and ever-present black fedora plastering the streets on posters under the slogans: "President through two centuries" and "No one needs while Balaguer breathes."

He and his Social Christian Reform Party came in third in that election — only the second time in his long political career that he lost.

Balaguer's death also ends the life of one of Latin America's last great "caudillos," the strongmen rulers who blended paternal beneficence with an authoritarian omnipresence to build a rock-solid power base largely with the poor.

Born Sept. 1, 1906, in the northern Dominican town of Navarette, Balaguer's father was a merchant who had migrated from Puerto Rico.

Balaguer wrote his first book at the age of 14, a collection of poetry called Pagan Psalms. He graduated from law school in Santo Domingo and earned his doctorate of law at the Sorbonne in Paris.

Beginning in the '30s, Balaguer served in several Cabinet and diplomatic posts through three decades under the country's brutal dictator Rafael Leonides Trujillo, who installed Balaguer as vice president and then as president during the final years before Trujillo's assassination in 1961.

Balaguer fled to exile in New York City after Trujillo's death, which unleashed a bloody, years-long battle between loyalist Dominican generals and leftists inspired by Fidel Castro's Cuba. And he returned only after President Lyndon B. Johnson sent some 20,000 U.S. Marines to the island nation to put down a leftist mutiny within the army in April 1965.

The following year, in U.S.-controlled elections, Balaguer was elected president — at a time when 60 percent of the nation was unemployed, two-thirds of its population was illiterate, and its streets and towns were in ruin.

Author Mario Vargas Llosa, in his recent fiction-based-on-fact account of Trujillo's life, titled The Feast of the Goat, describes Balaguer as a man who "transformed himself from a puppet president into a nonentity into an authentic head of state."

Balaguer did so through massive public-works projects and frequent trips to the impoverished countryside. His largesse doled out dolls for the girls, bikes for boys, and jobs for entire villages and towns. He micromanaged the economy, getting nightly briefings on the exact balance in the government's accounts. And to the end, he was a faithful U.S. ally.

At the same time, the police and army brutally purged the ranks of the nation's political left. Balaguer called the oppressors "uncontrollable elements."

Major Afghanistan refugee crisis looms

By Dusan Stojanovic
Associated Press

PULI SOFIAN, Afghanistan — After seven years in exile, Ghan Mir couldn't wait to get back to his home in the lush Shomali Valley, set among olive trees and grape vineyards.

But when Mir unloaded his wife and seven children from a bus that drove him from Pakistan two weeks ago, he couldn't believe his eyes: The sprawling walled compound he once owned is now a bombed-out shell standing in a pale dusty desert — in the middle of a minefield.

"Look at my hair," Mir, who puts his age between 55 and 60, said. "It has gone white when I saw it. I don't know what to do. How to live? How to feed my family?"

In what seems like a humanitarian disaster in the making, 1.2 million Afghan refugees streamed back to their homes from Pakistan and other neighboring countries after Taliban rule collapsed in November 2001.

It is the fastest voluntary refugee influx in human history, U.N. officials said. The speed and scope caught international relief agencies by surprise.

Original U.N. estimates were that 800,000 Afghans — of some 4 million living abroad — would return this year. Based on those estimates, donors contributed $205 million to feed and supply the refugees with basics to rebuild their homes, but that was $66 million short of what the agencies estimated they would need.

With revised estimates saying some 2 million refugees are likely to return this year, U.N. officials are fearing the worst.

"I have to say, if the international community does not get its act together faster, we are on a threshold of a major humanitarian crisis," said Ragnmilla Ek, a spokeswoman for the U.N. High Commission for Refugees.

"If further donors' support is not forthcoming, this could turn into a very difficult situation," she said. "The incredible influx of the refugees is stretching everybody beyond their resources. It's a very dramatic situation."

The transitional Afghan government cannot help either. It has barely enough money to pay salaries for state employees until August since international donors have delivered only $300 million of the $1.8 billion they pledged after the Taliban collapsed.

Sergei Grits/Associated Press
An Afghan child refugee on Sunday receives a measles shot from a doctor in a refugee center in Puli Charkhi, 18 miles east of Kabul, Afghanistan. There are some 1.2 million Afghan refugees who have returned home since the fall of the Taliban in November 2001, the fastest refugee influx ever in human history.

With so many refugees returning, and with no jobs or food to offer, "there could be serious social problems that could destabilize the government," said

Yusuf Nuristani, a minister in President Hamid Karzai's government. "It could plunge Afghanistan back to war and misery."

Israel pulls sharp U-turn on 'Jews-only' law

By Henry Chu
Los Angeles Times

JERUSALEM — Backtracking on an emotional issue, the Israeli Cabinet on Sunday set aside a bill it had endorsed just last week that would have allowed Arab citizens of Israel to be barred from buying homes or land in many Jewish communities.

The proposal sparked a firestorm of criticism after Prime Minister Ariel Sharon's government voted to back it during a closed session a week ago. Critics accused Sharon and his allies of railroading the measure through the Cabinet while most ministers from the center-left Labor Party were absent. Others blasted the bill as state-sponsored racism that would legalize the existence of "Jews-only" towns.

In the Gaza Strip, meanwhile, Israel deployed fighter jets and fired missiles at a building, destroying it and injuring approximately 10 Palestinians, witnesses and hospital officials said.

In the pandemonium that ensued, a Palestinian man on trial for allegedly collaborating with Israel to kill Palestinians was shot and killed by militants, a judge said.

Apparently in response to the flood of criticism it had received, the Cabinet on Sunday revisited the "Jews-only" issue, with Labor members present, and voted 22-2 to send the bill to committee — an action that analysts say in effect kills its chances of becoming law.

The U-turn spares Sharon a bitter public confrontation with his Foreign minister, Shimon Peres, a senior Labor figure who threatened to quit the government if necessary to fight its "racist decision" to endorse the legislation.

Raanan Gissin, a spokesman for Sharon, said Sunday's vote reflected the Israeli leader's view that the bill needed further examination to determine whether it was the right way for Israel to go about maintaining its sometimes-contradictory status as both a Jewish and democratic state.

"It would be improper at this stage to send it" to the Knesset, Israel's Parliament, Gissin said, particularly because the proposal "has implications on the very delicate fabric of relations between Jews and Arabs and among Jews themselves."

But he signaled that the sticking point for Sharon lies more in procedure than aim.

"We don't in any way discard the idea that Jewish settlement in Israel is a critical component in the realization of the Zionist vision," Gissin said. "That's what we came back [to Israel] for."

The proposed law would have granted Jewish Israelis the right to bar the country's 1 million Arab citizens — who make up about 20 percent of the population — from purchasing homes or living on state-owned property.

This translates into most of Israel, because the state controls the vast majority of land, most of which has been allocated for Jewish use through the quasi-governmental Jewish Agency.

 connecting for a tiebreaking home run in the seventh as Toronto beat Boston for the third-straight time.

Hinske homered off Tim Wakefield in the seventh, and hit his 16th homer on closer Ugueth Urbina's (0-4) first pitch in the ninth.

Expos 10, Braves 3
 MONTREAL — Wil Cordero hit his third career grand slam and had five RBIs to lead the Expos to a 10-3 win over the Braves on Sunday before the third-largest Olympic Stadium crowd of the season.

With 25,109 on hand — only Montreal's third crowd over 20,000 this season — for a Tim Lincecum bobblehead promotion, the second-place Expos split the four-game series to draw to within 9½ games of Atlanta in the NL East.

Rockies 5, Giants 3
 SAN FRANCISCO — Shawn Chacon pitched seven innings of dominant two-hit ball, allowing only an unearned run, as Colorado snapped a four-game losing streak.

Chacon (4-6) got his first victory since May 8 by overpowering the Giants, whose five-game winning streak was snapped.

Reds 8, Astros 3
 HOUSTON — Knuckleballer Jared Fernandez pitched seven strong innings for his first major-league win as Cincinnati snapped a four-game losing streak with a victory over Houston. Aaron Boone was 3-5 with two doubles to help stop the Astros' five-game winning streak.

Mets 4, Phillies 2
 NEW YORK — Pedro Astacio pitched seven sharp innings, and Roberto Alomar hit a two-run double to lead New York over Philadelphia.

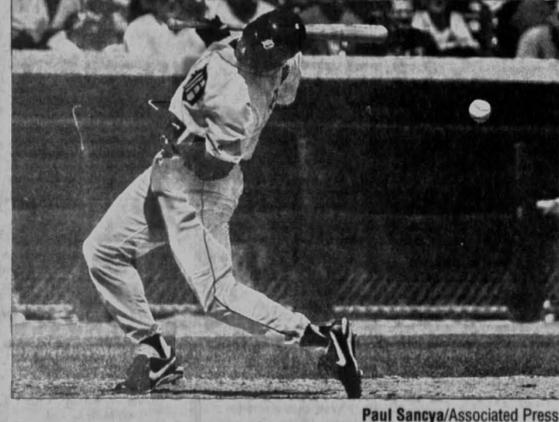

Cardinals 4, Padres 1
 SAN DIEGO — Bud Smith got his first win of the year, against the team he no-hit in September, and drove in a run as the St. Louis Cardinals beat the San Diego Padres Sunday.

Smith (1-5) had struggled so badly that he was scratched from a start just before the All-Star break. He had no problem against the punchless Padres, holding them to three hits in seven scoreless innings, his longest outing this year.

Brewers 5, Pirates 3
 MILWAUKEE — Jose Hernandez hit two home runs and drove in four runs as Milwaukee finally beat Pittsburgh at Miller Park.

Ruben Quevedo (5-6) gave up three runs in five innings, and four relievers combined to allow one hit over the final four innings for the Brewers.

Mariners 7, D-Rays 6
 ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Ruben Sierra hit a tiebreaking home run in the eighth inning to lead Seattle past

Tampa Bay. Bret Boone also hit a solo homer for the Mariners, who gave right-hander Freddy Garcia an early five-run lead that the All-Star pitcher couldn't protect.

Orioles 6, Athletics 3
 BALTIMORE — Jay Gibbons hit two home runs and had a career-high five RBIs as Baltimore ended its scoring drought to avert a four-game sweep.

After scoring only one run in the first three games of the series, the Orioles feasted on Oakland starter Cory Lidle (2-8), who yielded six runs in 5½ innings.

Royals 12, Angels 3
 KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Raul Ibanez hit a grand slam in the first inning and a three-run shot in the second to tie the club record with seven RBIs to lead Kansas City past Anaheim.

Dodgers 2, D'backs 1
 LOS ANGELES — Kazuhisa Ishii held Arizona to two hits over 7½ innings, and Los Angeles edged ahead of the Diamondbacks in the NL West. Taking the fourth game of their series to avoid being swept, the Dodgers regained the division lead by a half-game over the Diamondbacks.

Solverson, Schrock dominate the glass in win

ing her game to the next level, and Becca McCann is really stepping it up," said the Hawkeye forward.

"[Having good] chemistry is a big team goal for me and also for [the Hawkeyes]," Lillis said.

The Game Time League is an opportunity for Lillis not only to showcase her skills but also to build her leadership qualities. "I want to be a leader this season, on and off the court. I'm working on being a better leader and staying positive," she said.

Tierney poured in 25 points and dominated the glass with 16 rebounds, while Miller finished the game with 23 points and six rebounds.

Coralville Hy-Vee 92, Union Planters 73

Hawkeye Johanna Solverson put in 22 points as Hy-Vee beat Union Planters. Solverson and Kirkwood's Vanessa Schrock each grabbed nine rebounds and Hy-Vee dominated the battle of the boards, 60-37.

Four other Hawkeyes saw double digits in scoring. Hy-Vee's Morgan Kasperek shot 8-12 from the floor to post 17 points in the win. In a losing effort, Tiffany Reedy scored 18 points, Kristi Faulkner had 15, and Jenna Armstrong notched 12.

Imprinted Sportswear 69, Westport 67

University of Missouri-Kansas City player Kim Hansen poured in 21 points as Imprinted Sportswear/Goodfellow Printing edged out Westport Touchless Autowash/Bob's Your Uncle Pizza Cafe. Imprinted Sportswear held off a Westport offensive attack in the second half. Iowa State teammates Lisa Kriener and Megan McCracken led the attack with 16 and 13 second half points. Kriener finished the game with 22, and McCracken ended with 20 points.

Hansen got help from teammates Holly Borderwyk (15 points) and Crystal Smith (seven points, five assists) in the win. Smith is part of the Hawkeyes' incoming freshman class.

Armstrong remains in eighth place overall

PLOUAY, France (AP) — Karsten Kroon led a Dutch sweep of the top three spots in the eighth stage of the Tour de France on Sunday, and three-time champion Lance Armstrong remained in eighth place in the overall standings.

Stewart Ginn wins final major of year

DEARBORN, Mich. — Stewart Ginn shot a 6-under 66 Sunday to win the Senior Players Championship, the fourth and final major of the year.

Ginn finished at 14 under to win by one stroke and capture his first victory on the Senior PGA Tour.

Jim Thorpe had the best day with a 65 and closed at 13 under along with Hubert Green and third-round leader Mike McCullough, who began the day one stroke ahead of Green and four ahead of Ginn. Green shot a 70, and McCullough had a 71 during the final round.

Teske triumphs with back-nine surge

SYLVANIA, Ohio — Rachel Teske pulled away from rookie Beth Bauer with four birdies in a six-hole span Sunday to win the Jamie Farr Kroger Classic by two strokes.

Her closest call came before the tournament even began. She almost missed her tee time in Wednesday's pro-am because of airline problems, arriving at the course 45 minutes before she was scheduled to tee off.

On the LPGA Tour, players who do not play in the pro-am are disqualified from the tournament.

Teske's sixth victory in as many years on the LPGA Tour and second of the year, was worth $150,000. She also won the Ping tournament to start the 2002 season.

Washington, WNBA hype All-Star game

WASHINGTON — Michael Cooper knows exactly what he wants to see in the WNBA All-Star game: a lot of scoring.

Western Conference All-Stars coach said Sunday. "I'm going to tell the players, 'Let's move it up,' because I think it's great entertainment value for the league."

Cooper, the coach of the Los Angeles Sparks — the WNBA's best team last season — will be trying to put on a show tonight for the league's most supportive fans last season.

The Washington Mystics, consistent losers until this season, drew an average of 15,280 fans last season — well over the league average of 8,416.

"I enjoy coming to Washington, even though I know they'll be rooting against us, just because of the atmosphere," said Charlotte coach Anne Donovan, the coach of the East All-Stars. "You just don't expect that Washington and New York, with all the entertainment options in those cities, would be the top spots for supporting women's basketball ... I don't know what it is that they're doing, but it's working."

CyberRays 2, Spirit 2
SAN DIEGO (AP) — Katia scored on a penalty kick in the 69th minute to help the San Jose CyberRays tie the San Diego Spirit 2-2.

San Diego Defender Shannon Boxx received a red card for a handball in the goal mouth to force the penalty. San Jose (6-5-4) took an early lead on a 5th-minute goal by Pretinha, but the Spirit

(3-8-4) scored twice to regain the lead. Shannon MacMillan tied it two minutes later, and San Diego took the lead in the 59th minute, when Julie Fleeting scored her first career goal.

Lillis' season begins in GTL

Iowa junior already focused on year ahead

By Kavitha Thimmaiah
 The Daily Iowan

Jennie Lillis is passionate about Big Ten basketball — so passionate she can't wait for the year to begin.

"I'm so excited for this season — I want it to happen now," said the 6-1 junior.

Lillis is satisfying her thirst for basketball by lighting up the Game Time League this summer. Sunday, in her latest scoring outburst, Lillis posted 21 points to lead Cullen Painting/Steve's Typewriter and Office Furniture Inc. to a 87-75 win over HawksNestOnline.com.

"We came out with more confidence offensively, and our shots began to fall, that was the key," Lillis said.

Cullen Painting struggled to shut down the hot hands of UNI's Katie Miller and ex-Kirkwood player Meg Tierney in the first half. Miller and Tierney scored 17 and 15 first half points respectively.

Cullen's woes continued in the first five minutes of the second half, but a three-pointer from Bemidji State's Shawne Koch keyed an offensive charge for HawksNest.

However, the play of Lillis and Hawk-eye teammate April Calhoun proved to be too much for HawksNest, as Calhoun put in 15 points and added seven assists in the win. Lillis also grabbed eight boards.

Lillis recognizes the league as a place to work on skills, acclimate newcomers, and improve teamwork heading into the season.

"The league is a good place for incoming freshmen to build their confidence. Everyone's stepping up. Tracy Schrupp is rais-

Sluman runs away with GMO

By Arnie Stapleton
 Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Jeff Sluman held it together this time on the final day of the Greater Milwaukee Open.

Sluman fired a 3-under-par 68 Sunday for a four-stroke victory over Tim Herron (66) and Steve Lowery (70) and his second Milwaukee title.

His 23-under 261 total was one stroke shy of Loren Roberts' 72-hole record set two years ago.

Sluman also led the Milwaukee field heading into the final day last year. But his erratic play caught up to him, and he faltered to a 10th-place finish at Brown Deer Park.

"I had a lot of friends and family up from Chicago to cheer me on, and after feeling last year like I disappointed them, I was certainly glad to get it done this year," Sluman said.

After bogeying the second hole, he made four-straight birdies, then played it safe for his sixth PGA Tour victory and the biggest paycheck of his career — $558,000 of the $3.1 million purse.

After birdies on Nos. 3-6, Sluman, who also won the Milwaukee Open in 1998, wasn't nearly the aggressor he'd been all weekend.

"It's funny how your mind kind of goes, because nobody had really made a huge run, and I had a four- and five-shot lead at various times," he said. "And I just didn't want to make a mistake."

So, he quit attacking the pins as he had in carding a record 64-66-63 through three rounds.

"I felt if I could do that, and if I missed anything, it was on the left side, where I had a little bit of room to work with to get to the flag that I'd be in pretty good shape," Sluman said. "And obviously, it worked out pretty well."

Kenny Perry (65) took fourth, one stroke ahead of Joey Sindelar (65), Greg Chalmers (69), and Wisconsin native J.P. Hayes (67), who finished six strokes back.

Prior propels Cubs to sweep

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago's Mark Prior won for the first time in five weeks, getting support from Sammy Sosa, who hit one of four homers for the Cubs, who completed a sweep of the Florida Marlins with 10-3 victory Sunday.

Prior (3-2) allowed two runs and five hits over six innings. He struck out five and walked three. Prior also hit a two-run double.

The rookie right-hander came in with 65 strikeouts in 52 innings but had a 4.86 ERA in June and hadn't won in six starts. Prior felt he turned a corner in his last start against Atlanta on July 4.

"Right now, I'm pitching. If that means giving up some strikeouts, that's OK," Prior said. "It's not about ERA, strikeouts or walks. For a starting pitcher, it's about quality starts."

Sosa hit his 29th homer, a two-run shot in the seventh off Vladimir Nunez, to tie Houston's Lance Berkman for the major league lead. Corey Patterson, Alex Gonzalez and Bill Mueller homered in the eighth off Oswaldo Mairesna.

Juan Encarnacion hit his first home run for Florida since being acquired Thursday in a trade from the Reds.

Michael Tejera (5-2) lost for the first time in seven starts for the Marlins, who were swept for the first time on the road this season.

Indians 10, Yankees 7

CLEVELAND — Bill Selby's grand slam capped Cleveland's six-run ninth inning against Mariano Rivera as the Indians rallied from seven runs down to stun the Yankees Sunday.

Trailing 7-0 after four innings, the Indians cut it to a three-run game heading into the ninth against Rivera (1-4), who blew his second save of the series after converting 17-straight chances.

White Sox 6, Tigers 4

DETROIT — Carlos Lee went 4-5 with two homers, and Chicago took advantage of a pair of throwing errors to snap a three-game slide.

Lee hit solo shots in the third and fifth innings off Adam Bernero (2-5) to give the White Sox a 3-1 lead. His third multihomer game this season gave him 15 homers.

Twins 5, Rangers 4

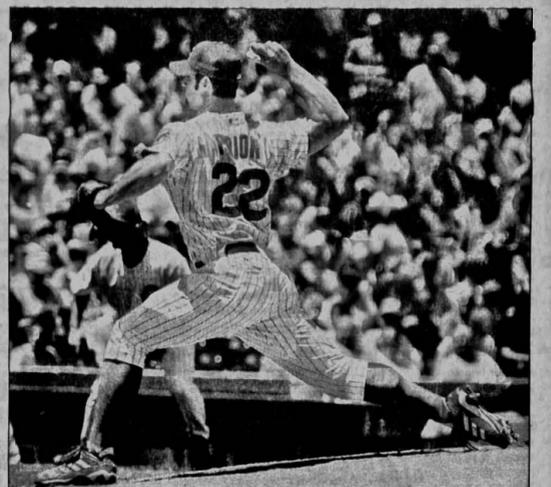

MINNEAPOLIS — David Ortiz and Torii Hunter homered in the bottom of the eighth inning as Minnesota overcame two home runs by Alex Rodriguez to beat Texas.

Trailing 4-3, Hunter led off the eighth with a shot to right-center off Colby Lewis (1-2). Then Ortiz hit his homer to straight away center, giving the Twins the lead for good.

Iverson hosts pre-arrest bash

By Maryclaire Dale

PHILADELPHIA — As he awaited arrest on assault charges, Allen Iverson played host to an all-night party at his mansion in which guests swam and played basketball in the rain.

The $2.4 million house in Gladwyne had been quiet since the charges were filed July 11.

But the party that started July 13 lasted through the night, and photographs taken by the Associated Press show Iverson in a heated discussion with an unidentified older woman on the front step just before 5 a.m., as the party was breaking up.

Police, who have ordered Iverson to remain at home until his expected arrest Tuesday, kept tabs on the situation from outside the gate.

Philadelphia police filed warrants for Iverson's arrest the same day they searched the suburban mansion and towed off a Cadillac SUV, in which they found broken glass, rocks, and blood. The search of the home and vehicle did not turn up a weapon, a police source has said.

The warrants charge that Iverson — armed and accompanied by his uncle, Gregory Iverson — went looking for his wife July 3 after a dispute and threatened two Philadelphia men at his cousin's apartment.

Police have said that Tawanna Iverson, 26, checked into a hotel on July 1 and that the NBA star went looking for her, asking security guards if they had seen a car with smashed windows. He left without finding it, authorities said.

Police have ordered the 76ers' guard to remain at home until Tuesday, when he is scheduled to turn himself in after his lawyer returns from a vacation.

"If Iverson is seen on the street or out partying, we will arrest him," Police Commissioner Sylvester Johnson said July 11.

Anonymous sources told the New York Times in Sunday's editions that Iverson's contract with the Sixers wouldn't be guaranteed if he were convicted of a felony. Iverson has $40.5 million and three years left on a $70.8 million extension signed in January 1999.

Sixers spokeswoman Karen Frascogna refused to confirm the report when contacted Sunday. Frascogna said the team would have no comment while the police investigation continues.
