Labor officials guilty of embezzlement

By Gigi Wood
Associated Press

DES MOINES — The business manager and vice president of a labor union pleaded guilty Thursday to federal charges that they embezzled more than $100,000 — the latest of three additional Iowa cases charging union officials with embezzlement during the past few years.

Fred Ted Risius, 54, pleaded guilty to one count of embezzling $100,060 from the Laborers AFL-CIO Local 177, between July 22, 1999, and Dec. 31, 2001, while he was business manager and secretary-treasurer for the union.

Henry Jannenga Sr., 50, pleaded guilty to one count of embezzling $20,460 between Feb. 17, 1999, and Oct. 26, 2001, while he was vice president of the union.

Both men are from Des Moines and have agreed to pay restitution. They were each released on a $10,000 unsecured bond. Federal Judge Robert Pratt set sentencing for Oct. 18.

They face up to five years in prison and fines of $250,000.

According to court documents, Risius and Jannenga wrote union checks to other union members and split the proceeds.

Jannenga, who was also the director of the Iowa State Laborer's Training Fund, used the training fund's credit card for personal use, documents said.

Risius wrote two checks, one for $9,000 and one for $7,500, to union member Craig Michael and additional checks to another union member and received 60 percent of the proceeds, documents say. He also wrote checks totaling more than $28,400 to Clyde Starkey and Starkey Construction and stole $41,685 from the union's strike fund by writing checks to nonexistent people.

The union hired Advance Floor Coverings to lay carpet in the apprenticeship building in Truro. Risius and Jannenga negotiated a $1,000 refund with the company and split the money, documents say.

Jannenga ordered nearly $660 worth of pens for his high-school reunion from Awards & T-Shirts Specialists Inc. in November 1999. He asked the owner, Debbie O'Donahue, to hide the charges, documents say.

In other recent embezzlement cases,

- Randy Kamp, the ex-president of Paper, Allied-Industrial, Chemical, and Energy Workers International Union in Waterloo, pleaded guilty to embezzling $4,773 between June and November 1999.
- Steven Lathrop, the secretary-treasurer for the same union, pleaded guilty to stealing more than $48,224 from the union between April 1999 and June 2000.
- Terry Baldrige, the former secretary of United Auto Workers Local 1349 in Cedar Rapids was fined $1,000 and placed on two years probation for embezzling $5,300 between 1996 and 2000.

Iowa DNR slims down to improve service

By Cori Drost
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Department of Natural Resources workers have spent the last six months implementing a reorganization plan that, officials say, will save money and provide better service.

Functions within the department have stayed the same, but divisions and bureaus that have similar functions have been combined to streamline management, said Ross Harrison, an agency spokesman.

"I think everybody seems to think it makes sense and that it will improve coordination," he said.

The restructuring cut the number of divisions in the agency from seven to three and the number of bureaus under the divisions from 21 to 16.

Gov. Tom Vilsack announced the restructuring last winter at the Iowa Associated Press annual legislative seminar for newspaper editors and broadcasters, saying the plan would increase customer service.

Harrison said the effort required no layoffs and will save $500,000 a year.

In the past, for example, workers from both the parks and preserves division and the fisheries and wildlife division would deal with issues at a state lake. Now, the parks bureau and fisheries bureau fall under the conservation and recreation division.

With one person leading the division, efficiency and communication should improve, Harrison said.

"We're trying to lump these things that make administrative, structural sense and improve our ability to provide customer service," he said.

Steve Pennington, recently named the head of the parks bureau, said his job hasn't changed much but the reorganization has worked "to remove layers of bureaucracy and get back to actually serving the public in the parks."

He said the parks bureau used to act as its own division with a division leader and two bureau chiefs.

"We know we'll be able to respond more comprehensively [to the public] than in the past," Harrison said, adding that the flow of information within the department will be freer.

A few bureaus still need to fill chief positions, but for the most part, the reorganization has taken place, Harrison said.

The department plans to update its Web site to reflect the new divisions and bureaus by Oct. 1.

In the next three to five years, the department also will move 130 positions from offices in Des Moines to field offices around the state, Harrison said.

It will "improve the contact our employees have with the communities they are working in," he said.

Vilsack returns fire on budget

By Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Gov. Tom Vilsack and Republican rival Doug Gross renewed their campaign battle over the state budget Thursday, with Gross contending that the state faces a $1.1 billion deficit.

Vilsack called that figure "bogus" and said Gross is making outrageous claims rather than offering realistic plans for the state.

"He has absolutely no plan for the next four years," said Vilsack spokesman Joe Householder.

Gross' assertion that the state has a huge budget deficit also puts him at odds with Republican legislative leaders. They are reluctant to publicly criticize a gubernatorial candidate of their own party, but they aren't happy that their own budget, which they forced Vilsack to accept, has come under fire.

"We feel pretty good about what we did," said Sen. Jeff Lamberti, R-Ankeny, the head of the Senate Appropriations Committee, which crafted the budget.

Gross' latest volley came at a Statehouse news conference.

"The size of this problem is so large it's probably going to take a couple of years to solve," he said, repeating similar claims made in attack ads aired on television over the past several weeks.

Gross said he would impose a pay freeze for state workers and restructure government and the Medicaid program offering health care for low-income residents. He put no price tag on those savings and said he did not have all the details of his budget package.

"I think what you should know about me is I'll face the problem directly," he said.

Householder pointed to a study released Wednesday by the National Conference of State Legislatures showing that Iowa led the nation in cutting spending to deal with last year's budget crunch. He said Gross' accusations are based on flawed assumptions and accounting tricks.

That's not surprising, Householder said, because Gross was chief of staff to former Gov. Terry Branstad during a time when the state ran up hundreds of millions of dollars in hidden deficits that eventually forced an increase in the state's sales tax.

"He was busted for cooking the books in the 1980s, when he was running the budget, saying there was a surplus when those numbers were bogus," Householder said. "Now, he's cooking the books when he looks at Gov. Vilsack's record. This guy has no credibility."

Vilsack and state lawmakers authorized a variety of steps to deal with the state's recent budget troubles, including dipping into a series of special-reserve funds. There is no legal requirement to repay that money, though many lawmakers say they want to.

Moussaoui reverses tack

By Tom Jackman
Washington Post

Zacarias Moussaoui reversed course again Thursday, stepping back from the precipice of admitting a role in the Sept. 11 attacks, rescinding his guilty plea, and contending that, although he is a member of Al Qaeda, he had no advance knowledge of the hijackings.

Moussaoui, acting as his own attorney, was set to plead guilty to four of the six charges against him but balked when U.S. District Judge Leonie Brinkema explained that he would have to admit he was part of the Sept. 11 conspiracy.

"By my obligation toward my creator, Allah, to save my life and to defend my life, I have to withdraw my guilty plea," Moussaoui said.

With that, the case of Moussaoui, the only person charged in the United States with a role in the Sept. 11 attacks, resumes its progress toward trial, with no more hearings scheduled before jury selection Sept. 30.

"I think he found out what the repercussions of a guilty plea are — what facts he had to swallow," said Federal Public Defender Frank Dunham Jr., the lead lawyer fired by Moussaoui last month who remains as standby counsel. "I don't think he understood that he had to admit 9/11 to plead guilty."

Thursday's hearing in Alexandria, Va., was necessary because at a routine arraignment last week, Moussaoui said he wanted to plead guilty "to save my life" from prosecutors seeking the death penalty. Moussaoui's logic, expressed again in court Thursday, was that he wanted to leap directly to the penalty phase of the trial and tell a jury what he had done.

"I want the people to hear what I have to say," Moussaoui said Thursday. "What are my responsibility, what I came to the United States for, what I did in the United States. And if 12 people of America find that I have to be killed for what I did — but only for what I did, not for what they claim — OK."

But first, Moussaoui had to demonstrate that he understood the charges against him. The 34-year-old French citizen could not make it past the very first count of the indictment.

When Brinkema tried to explain the charge — conspiracy to commit acts of terrorism — he said, "I can plead guilty on this, but it doesn't still put me on the plane ... You are pushing me to endorse the theory of the government ... It alleges that I provide guest house. That is possible for me to accept this. It is alleged that I provide training. It's possible to me to accept this. But certain of them are not possible."

Brinkema continued, saying that the essence of the first count was that he conspired with members of Al Qaeda to maim and kill people on Sept.

11. She asked if he understood. He responded, "Yes, I did provide guest house, but I did not know about Sept. 11."

The judge said: "If you're standing in court today and saying, 'I am a member of Al Qaeda and provided a guest house, but I never intended or I never agreed to kill or maim persons in the United States,' then you're not agreeing to this particular conspiracy ... I don't believe that you are prepared to enter guilty pleas to any of these counts, because you're not admitting to, or not prepared to admit, it seems to me, to the essence of the conspiracy."

Hollywood presses to use hacker powers on traders

By Ted Bridis
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hollywood escalated its fight against Internet trading of movies and music, successfully urging key lawmakers to consider letting the industry use hacker tactics to stop Americans' exchange of songs and films they didn't buy.

The broad new legal powers proposed by a congressman — and endorsed quickly by several others — would let record and movie studios hack into Americans' personal computers to find illegally shared music and movies. They could also try to disable or interfere with file-swapping programs.

It also would let industry use denial-of-service attacks — commonly launched by hackers to flood commercial Web sites — to knock personal computers offline so they can't trade copyrighted songs and films.

Rep. Howard Berman, D-Calif., who represents part of Hollywood and is the House's single largest recipient of political donations from the entertainment industry, said his legislation "allows copyright owners to use technology to deal with technological piracy."

Berman said his bill, introduced Thursday, would not let the industry spread viruses, destroy files, or hack into a consumer's personal data. Instead, he said, it would simply let it disable improperly traded films and songs. He likened it to a car dealer repossessing a vehicle for delinquent payments.

"There is no excuse or justification for this piracy," said Berman, the top Democrat on the House Judiciary subcommittee on courts, the Internet, and intellectual property. "Theft is theft, whether it is shoplifting a CD in a record store or illegally downloading a song."

His measure is aimed at disrupting the practice of downloading or offering copies of pirated music, movies, or software popularized in the late 1990s by Napster.

To date, the industry has fought illegal trading mainly by suing companies that operate file-sharing networks.

But technology has made it possible to decentralize those file-trading networks, allowing users to trade from computer to computer without a service such as Napster.

The industry currently must trace users individually and persuade the users' Internet providers to pull the plug on violators. It also has resorted to seeding networks with fake files to frustrate people looking for free music.

Recording Industry Association of America chief Hilary Rosen called the bill an "innovative approach to combating the serious problem of Internet piracy."

"It makes sense to clarify existing laws to ensure that copyright owners ... are at least able to defend their works from mass piracy," Rosen said.

The Motion Picture Association of America praised Berman's efforts, but it cautioned in a statement that "there are aspects of the bill we believe need changing."

The Business Software Alliance noted the high costs of pirated software but did not directly endorse the bill.

"Congressman Berman will further the critical debate over Internet piracy, and we look forward to this continued dialogue," spokeswoman Jera Clausing said.

A critic, Alan Davidson of the Center for Democracy and Technology, said the legislation "provides a hunting license for copyright holders to seek out legitimate users of the Internet."

The proposal would lift civil and criminal penalties against entertainment companies for "disabling, interfering with, blocking, diverting, or otherwise impairing" the online trading of pirated songs and movies.

An attack knocking an Internet user completely offline would not be permitted "except as may be reasonably necessary" to prevent a copyright violation, the bill states.

Under the bill, companies would not be required to warn users in advance of their actions. A user wrongly attacked could sue only if he or she suffered more than $250 in economic losses and obtained the U.S. attorney general's permission to file a lawsuit.

Berman received at least $186,891 from the entertainment industry during the 2001-02 election cycle, including $31,000 from the Walt Disney Co. and $28,050 from AOL Time Warner Inc.

Ohio State hires first female leader

By Andrew Welsh-Huggins
Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Ohio State University trustees voted unanimously Thursday to hire the school's first woman president, the latest in a string of appointments of female college presidents across the country.

The trustees appointed Karen Holbrook, the senior vice president for academic affairs and provost at the University of Georgia, to run the nation's second-largest campus.

"It would be very hard to be any more excited than I am right now," Holbrook, 59, said as she was introduced by board Chairman James Patterson.

Holbrook will begin Oct. 1 with a salary of $325,000. She will replace William Kirwan, who left the Ohio State job to become chancellor at the University of Maryland.

At least 20 other women have been selected since January to head American community colleges, four-year schools, and universities.

Among them are UI President Mary Sue Coleman, who will become the first female president at the University of Michigan on Aug. 1, Ann Weaver Hart at the University of New Hampshire, and Rebecca Chopp at Colgate University.

Women have steadily, if slowly, moved into academic management over the last 25 years, said Claire Van Ummersen, the vice president of the Office of Women in Higher Education at the American Council on Education.

They made up 5 percent of college presidents in 1975 — almost all at women's or religious schools. A survey last fall found women occupying approximately 22 percent of the top spots, Van Ummersen said.

The biggest breakthrough is that in the past couple of years women, such as Ruth Simmons at Brown University and Shirley Tilghman at Princeton University, have taken the presidency at Ivy League and major research schools, she said.

"The trend is upward," Van Ummersen said. "More women are prepared and ready to move into these positions than was the case 25 years ago, and that is because they have gained experience as senior faculty members, as deans, as presidents."

Holbrook was selected from a pool of more than 100 candidates, said Lee Tashjian, the Ohio State vice president for University Relations. He said Holbrook is a likable person who will also be a firm leader.

Ohio State, the state's largest public university, enrolls approximately 55,000 students, including roughly 48,000 in Columbus. Only the University of Texas, Austin, has a larger main campus.

Ohio State has a budget of approximately $2.5 billion, though lawmakers cut $28 million from the 2002 budget last fall.

Pro-life can't be pro-death

One view of the pro-life debate holds that liberals oppose the death penalty but fail on abortion.

Conversely, this view holds that conservatives are "pro-life" on abortion but fail on such issues as execution.

I think this view needs to be re-examined from a Christian perspective. Jesus said, "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit." (Matthew 7:18)

In other words, one view or philosophy can't have both good and bad fruit, i.e., be pro-life and against life simultaneously.

Considering war and weapons spending, liberals tend to be "pro-life," i.e., opposed to military violence and killing.

Protecting the environment is vitally important for humans, as well as every other life form God has created. Again, liberals tend to be pro-life.

Access to food and health care is the primary "pro-life" issue for poor people. Here, liberals are more supportive and compassionate.

The death penalty is straightforward. Every liberal I know opposes execution.

The conservative claim to pro-life rests on the government banning abortion. Where abortion is illegal, there are increases in the deaths of mothers. How can a stand be "pro-life" when it results in increased death?

Firebombing clinics and murdering doctors are not solutions, either. The way to reduce abortion is by reducing unplanned pregnancies. This is done teaching abstinence, or, for those who reject abstinence, providing birth control. Unfortunately, many conservatives oppose birth control. The result? More abortions. More death.

The liberal philosophy is consistently pro-life.

Last stand

I am thoroughly unhappy with the way our sports programs are stepping around the issues of personal activities and arrests of athletes. I was recently at the Hawkeye basketball camp, and in attendance was the athlete arrested for drug possession. Guilty or not, this should be a situation in which the athlete should be in a suspension mode until it is settled. How do you explain to kids that apparently it's OK to be in possession of illegal drugs, and you can still participate in university programs? Come on, Athletics Department and coaches ... take a stand!

Congress must punish and prevent credit card misuse

One of America's oldest and most successful institutions has been stricken with the epidemic of financial mismanagement that is plaguing the nation. The symptoms are familiar: individuals using company funds for personal purposes, managers neglecting to document financial records properly, and few of those involved receiving any punishment. The disease is common enough on Wall Street these days, but this patient is not a private corporation — it's the U.S. Army, and what it needs is a healthy dose of congressional oversight.

Last week, the General Accounting Office released the latest results of an ongoing examination of the Pentagon's extensive credit-card program. Among other things, the report revealed that approximately 200 Army personnel had used Pentagon-issued credit cards for "lap dancing and other forms of entertainment" at strip clubs and that $100,000 had been spent on fraudulent purchases of personal electronics. In addition, GAO auditors said that as many as 86 percent of monthly credit-card bills had not been properly reviewed by managers. The report also found "little evidence of disciplinary action against personnel who misused the card."

In some ways, these accounts of credit-card abuse within the Army are more disturbing than the financial scandals produced recently by corporate America. The Army is a government organization funded by U.S. taxpayers. When a private company such as Enron or WorldCom loses money and then covers it up, thousands of employees and stockholders end up paying for it. However, when irresponsible bookkeeping and non-existent disciplinary practices allow Army personnel to waste money, every single taxpayer in America takes a part of the loss. Both the Army and the American public can do without such headlines as "Pentagon charge cards used for strip clubs." Between guarding the United States against terrorist fanatics and preserving the peace all over the world, times are already difficult enough for America's armed forces. Such negative publicity further tarnishes the U.S. military's tenuous reputation abroad.

Furthermore, it is demoralizing to Americans who look to the Army for security and defense and to U.S. servicemen and -women, the vast majority of whom work hard and obey the rules.

The most effective means of keeping track of the Army's finances is through congressional oversight. The GAO deserves to be lauded for its admirable investigation into the military's credit-card program, as do the members of the House and Senate who supported the probe. A prominent member of this group was Iowa's own Charles Grassley, a longtime critic of frivolous government spending, whose testimony before a House subcommittee helped break the story.

It is up to Congress to ensure that U.S. tax dollars are spent in the best interest of the citizens who contributed them. Lawmakers must work to prevent future outbreaks of financial scandal within the Army by increasing their vigilance and holding guilty personnel responsible for their crimes. All Americans are investors in the Army, and all Americans deserve to have their investments protected.

The children's jihad

In the aftermath of recent military attacks by the U.S. and Israel that have resulted in the death of dozens of civilians, many of which have been children, I have just one thing to say: It's about time.

Finally, the United States has responded to the worldwide threat of children terrorists with appropriate action. Perhaps we will be able to sleep safely at night, now that these menacing toddlers are no longer a threat. Maybe the world is even — dare I say it — safe for democracy once again.

Some of you may have trouble believing that mere infants have the capability to orchestrate terrorist acts on an international scale, but believe me, you are only being naive. That someone still sucks on a pacifier doesn't necessarily make her or him a pacifist. And hey, they don't call it the "terrible 2's" for nothing.

For too long, our country has harbored the irrationally idealistic notion that children are somehow immune to maniacal tendencies. Of course, this puerile notion is fueled by our love for our own children and is not completely without merit. It is true that, even in these different cultures, children are their greatest resource. The industry in which they use this resource, however, is terrorism.

Now, I don't exactly have any proof that children have been committing terrorist acts. But I really don't think the United States would be killing these kids if they weren't involved in some sort of radical fundamentalist jihad against our country. Really, with the budget we give the military, it would be ridiculous if it were making mistakes as big as that.

Honestly, however, U.S. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld has said that he regrets the "collateral damage" (funny, I don't think that's how he referred to civilian casualties on Sept. 11), but I'm guessing that he's probably just being diplomatic. Under that political façade, you can tell that he's a man who loves giving children their come-uppance.

That someone still sucks on a pacifier doesn't necessarily make her or him a pacifist. And hey, they don't call it the "terrible 2's" for nothing.

Rumsfeld, of course, can't take full credit for the elimination of the prepubescent warlords. It was Israel, after all, who just last week killed at least nine Palestinian children in a raid on a highly populated area (unfortunately, several adults were also killed by accident). The United States, however, should share some of the praise for this act of global justice, considering that we have provided Israel with almost $100 billion in support since World War II (which, by the way, is almost enough to fully fund UI football coach Kirk Ferentz's new contract). But instead of using this money to — oh, let's say — fund higher education, we gave it to Israel so it could use it to kill children. Good job, USA!

Of course, the only patriotic thing to do in a time like this is to fully support the United States in its seemingly haphazard murder of countless children. It's obvious that much of America is indifferent toward them anyway, as long as they're from "somewhere in the back," (which is how Toby Keith references Afghanistan in his celebrated post-Sept. 11 anthem, "Courtesy of the Red, White, and Blue").

From this point onward, we must be more vigilant. We have eliminated part of the threat, but there are still thousands of children hiding out around the world. In fact, there may be a Palestinian woman giving birth at this very moment!

It's up to us, as Americans, to keep our children safe from, well, children. Start checking strollers for suspicious behavior. Take notice if the neighbor boy is showing a keener-than-usual interest in GI Joe. Steal candy from babies!

We must stop these children, no matter the cost. Jesus may love them, "red and yellow, black, and white," but we know better.

Dancers perform during a dress rehearsal for Duarte Dance Work's Ten on Wednesday. The first public performance will be today at 9 p.m. in the Space-Place Theatre, North Hall.

By Joanna Waggoner
The Daily Iowan

Once a work of art is performed, it no longer belongs to the artist — it becomes a part of the audience. For Armando Duarte, a UI associate professor of dance, it is important that the impact be profound.

Houston Ballet stars, professional guests, and UI students form the 12-member company that will help Duarte celebrate a decade of working at the university by performing in his work Ten. The performance will also mark the debut of Duarte Dance Works, a project to form a professional contemporary dance company.

The show will be performed today and Saturday at 9 p.m. in the Space-Place Theatre, North Hall.

The program includes the premiere of "Here, in this time," a solo created this summer for Houston Ballet soloist Fernando Moraga, and an ensemble piece "Baque" set to traditional Brazilian music. Other pieces are set to the music of a wide variety of artists.

"It's a good, diverse program that works with many different qualities of being spirits in the human body. It's also a good representation of [Duarte's] varied works," said Houston Ballet principal dancer Dominic Walsh.

No apparent theme runs through Ten. What ties the pieces together is Duarte's movement vocabulary, which is a choreographer's personal language of dance, much like a signature.

The project originated when he decided to take some of his choreographies from the past nine years and bring them to the level of professional dancers and also more actively involve the community beyond the UI.

Duarte toured the world for 14 years as a founding member of Cisne Negro (Black Swan) Dance Company in São Paulo, Brazil. Then, at the UI, he has choreographed more than 25 works and has received various awards and grants. Most recently, he received a grant for the "Dance and Music of the America's Project," created with dance department colleague Charlotte Adams and flutist Tadeu Coelho of the UI School of Music.

"We always look for not only things that inspire us but also look for challenges," Duarte said.

It was through a series of coincidences that Duarte came to work with the Houston Ballet. Moraga and Walsh had demonstrated interest in his work, and Duarte had gained the support and dedication of the dancers involved in the project, some of whom are taking time out of the eight-week vacation for the year to help launch the project.

"Doing something different helps to build your career and movement. It's always good to do different things," Moraga said.

Walsh, who also has a small company in Houston, saw Duarte's work on video and decided to help get the project off the ground by offering him the Houston Ballet name.

"It is important to support your own. [This helps] the city become more culturally rich," Walsh said.

The project includes UI dance alumna and São Paulo native Alessandra Herszkowicz and Chilean dancer Paola Georgudis, and UI students Nicole Wong, Meagan O'Connor, Erin Huisman, Kate Hirstein, and Rebecca Evans. Three students have professional credentials: Marina Fukushima, Emily Price, and Tamara Schreiber.

"It is important for the university that students have the opportunity to perform such works with wonderful dancers," Herszkowicz said. "They learn so much by watching."

Georgudis said she has been very impressed by the student dancers because they are so well-rounded and mature.

One of Duarte's goals is to help establish Iowa City as a viable location for professional dancers to live and work by exploring the feasibility of having an on-going professional company in the area. He also hopes to gain supporters who sympathize with what he is doing and what he will do.

The show will feature costumes by Margaret Wenk and Erin Howell-Gritsch and lighting by Gary Holmquist of the dance department staff.

Tickets for Duarte Dance Works are $12 ($6 for UI students) and may be purchased in advance from the University Box Office, 319-335-3041, or toll-free 1-800-346-4401. Any remaining tickets will be on sale at the door.

"I want the audience to have a positive experience, for [the show] to touch them," Duarte said. "I want them to leave with joy."

Porching toward swangdipity

I have, without a doubt, the most swankdabbity porch in the history of porches.

Built in 1820 by John C. Porch and winner of Town & Country Gardens' annual "Who Let the Porch Out?" contest in 1996, the faithful often flock from miles away to waft atop our swing or to loach on our couch. Because my porch is so swangdubbity, it came as no surprise when one such hopeful waffer sauntered up my porch-steps to sit on my porch-couch while I kept my solemn porch-vigil on my porch-swing.

The girl introduced herself as Miss Missyface; her hands were dry, and there were scabs on her toes. She added that Sir Paul was her most favorite Beatle, and with this in mind, the ensuing debate seemed like a foregone conclusion.

It's times like these that I wish music were a little more like electrical engineering. Beyond the functional ins and outs of a toaster oven, I don't know Jack from Jill about electrical engineering, and I wouldn't dream of telling an engineer what really mattered about his field. However, it never seems to matter whether a person is a jazz aficionado or a moon-walkin' bar hopper, the IALAC tag generation allots everyone equal credence in the what-matters-in-music debate.

"Good music for me," Missyface contended, "is something I can feel; that makes me need to get up and move, to dance. When music moves me, it moves me to dance." She conceded later that at her last concert outing she got so wrapped up in her rug cutting that she didn't remember much of anything about the music the band performed.

Dave Strackany

I, being a jaded musician and critic, appreciate and qualify music by ascertaining the sincerity of its message, the craft and consideration exercised in the delivery of that message, and last, how that music helps me to better understand the Human Condition. I look to be moved in a different way.

Missyface rebutted by convincing me that my knowledge had somehow skewed my apprehension of music. The Arts, she claimed, are governed, like subatomic particles, by a counterlogical Uncertainty Principle. The more you observe the mechanics of art, the less you understand its feeling and True intentions, and vice versa.

Or perhaps I just don't dig dancing. The doing of it, that is. The watching, however, is a porch of a different color.

If there's one event where I wouldn't have a moral conflict about being so wrapped up in dancing that the music's ignored, it'd be at the Space/Place Theatre this weekend watching dancers float lotically about the stage.

Also, I advise checking out a local arts calendar that's recently surfaced. The e-ice that annoys my aching fingers, the Little Village Calendar, regularly picks up where I and many others must inevitably leave off: www.little-village.com/calendar/.

A note to local musicians: The PATV Battle of the Bands deadline for submissions is today. Drop off a CD or tape with contact info at 206 Lafayette St.

In other words, I wish I was a little bit taller; I wish I was a baller; I wish I had a girl who looked good/I would call her.

In still other words, be safe, be kind, beautiful things happen sometimes.

Israel muffed peace chance, critics claim

By Greg Myre
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Just hours before an Israeli warplane struck a Gaza City neighborhood, a leading Palestinian militia had agreed to announce a unilateral cessation of attacks.

Israel was aware of the plans and ignored them, saying declarations in the past had proved meaningless. "It's all psychological warfare," said Raanan Gissin, a spokesman for Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon.

Not all Israelis were as dismissive as the government of the Palestinian overtures, however.

Alex Fishman, a military-affairs analyst for the Yediot Ahront newspaper, questioned why Israel had "wiped out a chance, however small, to calm the region."

"Was it a coincidence, or are we wedded to the conception that every Palestinian move is a conspiracy or a lie?" he wrote.

A Palestinian minister said he would try to keep Hamas from carrying out revenge attacks. But Palestinian and European officials bemoan what they view as a missed chance to ease almost two years of violence.

On the Palestinian street, there is widespread anger, and Hamas — whose military leader Salah Shehadeh was killed, along with a bodyguard and 13 civilians — warned that it would strike at Israeli civilians with more fury than ever.

New violence erupted Thursday with the fatal shooting of a Jewish settler in the West Bank, but there were also new efforts to revive the cease-fire declaration plan.

Palestinian Planning Minister Nabil Shaath told the Associated Press that he was planning to meet with Hamas leaders in the Gaza Strip soon to try to persuade them not to retaliate and instead join a new effort at a unilateral cease-fire.

On Monday night, the Tanzim militia, which is affiliated with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat's Fatah movement, had agreed to put out a statement calling on all other Palestinian groups "to immediately end such attacks without hesitation or preconditions."

Shaath said the statement was completed just hours before the Israeli air strike.

A Palestinian official, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said Hamas had agreed to issue its own separate statement at the urging of Saudi Arabia, which has been threatening to cut off vital funding to the Palestinian movement.

Ismail Abu Shanab, a leading Hamas official in Gaza, confirmed that the group held meetings recently with Palestinian officials and agreed that if Israel withdrew from West Bank towns it occupies, "we will stop these operations."

"I think that Sharon has wasted a golden opportunity, for with such an agreement we could have saved the lives of not just the Palestinians but also the Israelis," said Hatem Abdel Kader, a Palestinian legislator and Tanzim member involved in talks with Hamas.

The talks between the Palestinian factions were encouraged and closely followed by European officials.

European Union foreign-policy chief Javier Solana condemned the Gaza strike, noting it came at a time of "indications that a possible end to suicide bombings could be reached."

In addition, Solana noted, Israelis and Palestinians had met just last weekend and gone over proposals to restore security cooperation.

Palestinian officials have said they still stand by proposals handed to Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres on July 20, offering to enforce calm in exchange for an Israeli pullout from West Bank towns. Israel says the proposals do not guarantee a serious Palestinian crackdown on radical groups.

Israeli officials acknowledged they knew about the effort to reach a unilateral Palestinian cease-fire, but they did not believe it was meaningful.

"Of course we knew about it," said Gissin. "So what? It would have been one more declaration. Never have their declarations held, and it wouldn't have held this time either." He added that "not for a moment did warnings of attacks diminish" in recent days.

This week's events evoked comparisons with the killing of a prominent Tanzim militant in January, which reignited Palestinian attacks after a three-week lull that had followed a Dec. 16 cease-fire call by Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat.

Palestinians said this attack — and the one in January — were actually aimed at inflaming violence because Sharon's government is not serious about restarting a peace process.

Arafat aide Nabil Abu Rdeneh said Sharon knew agreement was near to stop attacks on Israeli civilians and sabotaged it because "his only solution is violence and more violence."

A senior Palestinian official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said the Palestinians still stood by a proposal for a cease-fire that was presented to Israeli officials in a meeting last weekend.

Pope John Paul II rides through the crowd on his way to the stage for the papal welcoming ceremony for World Youth Day in Toronto on Thursday. The 82-year-old pope spoke to tens of thousands of flag-waving young people gathered at a lakeside fairgrounds.

Pontiff uplifted in joyful 'Pope-stock'

By William Lobdell
Los Angeles Times

TORONTO — An invigorated Pope John Paul II, his frail body feeding on the energy of 400,000 young Catholics who came to see him, counseled the faithful in a strong voice Thursday that happiness can be found by discovering "the path of forgiveness and reconciliation in a world often laid waste by violence and terror."

From a 25-foot-high platform reminiscent of a rock-concert stage, John Paul delivered his prescription for a fulfilling life to the Catholic Church's next generation during the three-hour opening ceremony of World Youth Day, also dubbed "Pope-stock."

The ailing pope told his "dear young friends" that genuine satisfaction can be gained only by following the path walked by Jesus, who was "the poorest of the poor, the most gentle among the meek, the person with the purest and most merciful heart."

"I have heard your festive voices, your cries, your songs, and I have felt the deep longing that beats within your hearts: You want to be happy," said John Paul, who referred to himself as "the aged pope, full of years but still young at heart."

His words were interrupted often with screams, applause, and chants such as, "John Paul Two, we love you!" by Catholics who came from 170 countries, roughly ranging in age from 15 to 35.

"To believe in Jesus is to accept what he says, even when it runs contrary to what others are saying," said the pope, sitting in a large white-and-gold chair, his white hair ruffled by the warm summer breeze.

He used the venue on the shores of Lake Ontario to illustrate Jesus' "Sermon on the Mount," a radical treatise on how followers of God should live, which the Gospels say was delivered on a hillside overlooking the Sea of Tiberias.

"Blessed are you if, like Jesus, you are poor in spirit, good, and merciful," the pope said. Before taking the stage, the pontiff spent nearly 30 minutes waving to the crowd from the back of his Mercedes Popemobile, which slowly wove its way through the crowd with 10 bodyguards walking alongside.

As John Paul passed by, spectators snapped photos, cheered, and waved their nations' flags overhead.

"He's supposedly very fragile," said Maria Dimitriou, a 16-year-old from Whyalla, Australia. "But he has the power like no one else to reach inside us, grab our heart, and kiss it."

John Paul established the semi-annual World Youth Day in 1987 as a way to unite young Catholics, deepen their faith, and increase their evangelical zeal. He also has been the featured attraction each session, which have drawn as many as 4.5 million people. This year's program in Canada has attracted only a fraction of the usual number of participants, a fact organizers blame on post-Sept. 11 terrorism worries and doubts about whether the pope would be fit enough to travel.

The pontiff made but one mistake: Just before leaving, he looked to the crowd and said, "and the last day, the last World Youth Day was in Krakow." The event has never been held in that Polish city.

Maisto's house to warn him 10 days before he was arrested.

When a library book is two weeks overdue, a notice is sent to the person's house. If the item is still not returned after five weeks, a bill is then sent to the house, Loracson said.

Then, if the fine is still not paid three weeks after the bill is delivered, the library refers the patron to a collection agency, she said.

Maisto said he never received letters in the mail about the overdue books and simply "forgot" to return them after the officer's visit because he was busy moving into a new house.

Police said Maisto would not have been charged with theft if he had made arrangements to return the books at some time.

Maisto's preliminary hearing is set for Aug. 1, when, he said, he hopes to get the charges dropped. Fourth-degree theft is a serious misdemeanor punishable by a minimum $250 fine and a maximum of no more than one year in jail and a $1,500 fine. Had he returned the books to the library, Maisto would have faced a $6 fine for each item in his possession for a total of $120.

the jukeboxes, and the two split the profits, he said.

"All an artists have to do, whether they are with a local or major label, is sign a release for their music to be played," he said.

Every time a musician's song is played, they are paid 1 cent. Bergerud said some artists hold out because the agreement is not lucrative.

For musicians to have their songs included in the mainframe, they must sign a contract with Ecstasy. Some record labels, however, have prohibited their musicians from signing such agreements. Certain artists, such as the Beatles and Bruce Springsteen, do not have agreements with Ecstasy, said Rick Hills, the day manager at George's Buffet, 312 E. Market St.

"We brought one in at first because we thought we would have access to more songs," he said. "But a lot of the music is blocked out."

Hills said George's will return its Internet juke box to Regal within a week so the bar can go back to its traditional player, which holds 100 CDs. Although fewer songs will be available, he said, the bar will be able to con-

The Internet jukeboxes, which are manufactured by Rowe International, hold 300 CDs in their hard drive. They are hooked up to a DSL line, which in turn is connected to Ecstasy Inc., and its 6,000 CDs. For 41, an Iowa City customer can download a song from the California-based company.

Jim Bell, the owner of the Deadwood, 6 S. Dubuque St., 15 months ago became the first to install an Internet jukebox in Iowa City. Although he can't choose the mood of the music being played, the newer style is customer-driven, he said.

"I believe the customers have received it well," he said. "I've seen a lot of people laugh and giggle after playing a song from their childhood, which they were able to do by searching the Internet."

Vilsack, Harkin, Leach take Fair vote

"We're not in the business of predicting, but results of mock election in the past have been accurate," he said.

The mock election booth at the Johnson County Fair, sponsored by the County Auditor's Office, surveyed approximately 700 people in its fourth year. Voters also picked Jim Leach for U.S. representative and Tom Harkin for senator.

"We're there to educate people about the upcoming election and help them become familiar with the voting machinery and procedure," Deeth said.

The volunteer-operated stand showcased an actual voting booth equipped with ballots and a ballot reader. Kids and non-Johnson County voters were allowed to vote in order to practice participating in an election. Voter-registration forms were also available to residents.

Volunteers at the Johnson County Democrats booth encouraged visitors to vote in the mock election. "The more people that feel comfortable and vote, the better our country will be," said volunteer Karen Disbrow, 48.

Although Ross foresees a close gubernatorial race, Vilsack's victory in the mock election did not surprise him because he feels that Johnson County is one of the state's Democratic strongholds.

Over the past month, Vilsack and Gross have launched consistent accusations at each other on everything from Vilsack's handling of the state budget to Gross' wife's investment in a Dubuque project that could raise a conflict of interest. Iowa television ads have also set the stage for an aggressive, mudslinging campaign.

"This is the earliest in a gubernatorial race that I've seen these sort of attack campaigns used," Ross said.

And with fewer than four months to Election Day, neither candidate shows signs of letting up.

"It's going to be an interesting race. They're going to have a real horseshoe down to the last minute," Ross said.

Although Vilsack has enjoyed the advantage of a primarily Democratic community, Republican Leach has enjoyed success in past contests as well as in the mock election, this time around beating opponent Julie Thomas, a Cedar Rapids physician, by 43 votes. Ross found that interesting and said his success is tied to his moderate views.

"Leach will probably win," Ross said. "He'll do exceptionally well in Johnson County."

Bush threatens veto of homeland bill

By Bill Miller and Juliet Elperin
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The White House threatened Thursday to veto legislation to create a Department of Homeland Security if it does not include language limiting the workplace rights of the proposed agency's 170,000 employees.

Hours after the White House's warning, a Senate committee crafted a homeland security bill that rejected President Bush's request for unprecedented freedom to hire, fire, and discipline employees, setting the stage for a contentious vote in the full Senate next week.

The House, meanwhile, began debate on its version of homeland-security legislation, which contains most of the workforce provisions sought by the president. A vote on the bill is scheduled for today.

In the seven weeks since Bush proposed merging all or part of 22 agencies into a new Department of Homeland Security, Republicans and Democrats have largely supported the plan, which would be the largest reorganization of the federal bureaucracy in more than 50 years.

But there has been a great deal of disagreement about personnel issues, and Thursday's developments demonstrated how volatile that topic has become.

White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said Bush has "serious reservations" about the direction the homeland-security package took in the Senate, where the Democrat-led Governmental Affairs Committee moved to preserve employees' civil-service and union protections. The committee also moved to require that the job of the president's homeland-security adviser — Tom Ridge's post — become a Senate-confirmed position.

"The president remains hopeful and optimistic that these provisions can be fixed without a veto," Fleischer told reporters aboard Air Force One. "But he does feel strongly about it... He will receive a recommendation from his advisers to veto this if the president's concerns are not addressed."

Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., the Governmental Affairs Committee chairman, expressed surprise at Fleischer's remarks and predicted that Bush will back down. Both houses are racing to approve legislation by the one-year anniversary of the Sept. 11 terror attacks, and Fleischer's comments came at a critical point in the process.

Yale: Princeton hacked into admissions

By Pamela Ferdinand and Michael Barbaro
Washington Post

BOSTON — Yale University on Thursday complained to the FBI that admissions officers from Ivy League rival Princeton University broke into Yale's online admissions-notification system and snooped on student files.

Princeton issued an immediate apology and suspended its associate dean of admissions.

Yale accused Princeton of viewing confidential decisions regarding 11 candidates who had applied to both schools — in some cases, doing so before the students had learned whether they were accepted.

A security audit by Yale's Information Technology Services showed undergraduate admissions officers at Princeton used applicants' last names, birth dates, and Social Security numbers as passwords to repeatedly hack into the system in April. No motive for the alleged breach was offered officially by Princeton or Yale.

"We're in the process of assessing the situation to determine if there is a federal violation," said FBI spokeswoman Lisa Bull.

Princeton has embarked on an investigation and has placed Stephen LeMenager, who began at Princeton as an admissions officer in 1983, on administrative leave after he acknowledged making "an unauthorized transmission," spokeswoman Marilyn Marks said.

"The actions reported today by the Yale Daily News represent a serious lapse of judgment by at least one member of our admissions staff. We take this matter very seriously, and we are investigating it as quickly and as thoroughly as possible," Marks said.

LeMenager could not be reached for comment. In remarks to the Yale Daily News, however, he said Princeton chose a random sampling of students whose Social Security numbers appeared on their Princeton applications to test Yale's Web site's security. He said no harm was intended, and he did not know why certain records were accessed several times.

"It was really an innocent way for us to check out the security," LeMenager said.

quote of the day

[Doug Gross] was busted for cooking the books in the 1980s, when he was running the budget, saying there was a surplus when those numbers were bogus. Now, he's cooking the books when he looks at Gov. Vilsack's record. This guy has no credibility.
 — Joe Householder, the spokesman for Gov. Tom Vilsack, responding to Gross' allegation that the state has run up a $1 billion deficit during Vilsack's tenure.

Ferentz answers difficult questions

C. J. Jones and defensive back Bob Sanders have been charged with OWI, as has running back Siaka Massaquoi, who has since been dismissed from the team.

Earlier this month, defensive end Derreck Robinson was charged with possession of marijuana and linebacker Mike Foltz was cited for possession of alcohol under the legal age while in downtown Iowa City.

"If we're going to win on a consistent basis, how we conduct ourselves will be a big part of that," Ferentz said.

He did not indicate whether he had decided on an appropriate punishment for the offenders, but he did say the severity of the crimes would be taken into account.

"Anything involving DUI or OWI or quote unquote recreational drug use, I'm going to look at that more differently," Ferentz said.

He said he will consult with the team's leadership council when weighing his decisions, but he would reserve the right to have the final say in what punishments to hand out.

If and when he hands down judgment, it will most likely involve the loss of playing time as well as missed practice time and additional community service.

Brown was suspended for Iowa's final seven games last season, while Jones did not participate in Iowa's 19-16 Alamo Bowl victory over Texas Tech because of his offense in late December 2001.

While the recent string of bad press surrounding Iowa's major athletics programs, including similar problems with the men's basketball team, is inexcusable in Ferentz's mind, he was quick to point out similar instances occurred during his first tenure in Iowa City as Hayden Fry's offensive line coach from 1981-89, but times and society's view toward such behavior has changed considerably.

He also drew attention to the fact that the decision-making process of the offenders may have been skewed by their lack of maturity.

"This is not a good answer, but we've got to remember these guys are 18, 19, 20 years old," he said.

Iowa will begin the 2002 season against Akron on Aug. 31 at Kinnick Stadium.

Porous bullpen fails Cubs yet again

CHICAGO — Tomas Perez hit a bases-loaded triple and then made a daring dash home in the eighth inning, rallying the Philadelphia Phillies over the Chicago Cubs.

The Phillies won their third straight after losing the series opener at Wrigley Field. An error by left fielder Moises Alou helped Philadelphia come back in the eighth.

Tigers 5, Royals 2

DETROIT — Robert Fick hit a tiebreaking sacrifice fly in the sixth inning and added a two-run homer as Detroit beat Kansas City.

Fick also made a key defensive play in right field to preserve the Tigers' edge.

Canned responses all over at Big Ten media day

"Rudy" or at least make a passable attempt at becoming the next Bobby Boucher. In a stunning move, Indiana's Gerry DiNardo reversed this section of the speech with the shocking announcement that his team did indeed not have a player comparable with Antwaan Randle El.

"The anecdote" — Right before question-and-answer time, you'll get a story intended to either make you philosophize about the team or laugh about it — one of the two, anyway. Randy Walker profoundly compared Northwestern's embarrassing season a year ago to Tiger Woods' recent struggles. Tiller quipped about fly-fishing and nearly every player on his roster, and Alvarez, who is consistently in the running for the Mr. Congeniality award, told a story about listening to Walker talk about Woods and wondering if he was in the correct room.

"Q & A time" — Coaches have learned the longer they drag their opening remarks out, the fewer questions they must answer on Thursday morning. Usually one reporter will be working on a very specific angle to a seemingly dull story, and we'll be subjected to the same question of each coach. This year, the hot topic was adding a 12th team to the league and not last year's burning question of who was sexier, Britney Spears or Christina Aguilera. This time of the session is usually also noted by the ceremonial first Glen Mason blow-up of the season, in which the Minnesota head coach will undoubtedly take offense to someone somewhere over something.

So, there you have it straight from the Windy City. Michigan is the preseason favorite, Charles Rogers of Michigan State and Ohio State's Mike Doss are the best players on their sides of the ball, each team will go undefeated this year if all goes according to plan, and Joe Tiller would rather be somewhere else.

That makes two of us.

"I have very good reason to believe that has been used against us on the recruiting trail," said Ferentz, whose name surfaced for head-coaching vacancies at Notre Dame and with the Indianapolis Colts. "Hopefully, this will take some of that out of the mix."

Ferentz, who worked his entire first season at Iowa in 1999 without a signed contract, came to terms with the school on an extension that will keep him a Hawkeye until 2009. Among the terms of the extension was an increase in base pay from $310,000 to $510,000 which will make Ferentz the university's highest-paid employee.

He will be paid from Athletics Department revenue, which includes ticket sales, television contracts, and other sources. But the raise nonetheless drew criticism from some people on campus Thursday who wondered why education-related jobs were being eliminated at the same time. UI officials say having successful football program brings in revenue for the Ferentz spoke at the Big Ten's annual media day, where for the second-straight year he was quizzed not about his team's play on the field but its conduct away from it.

In August 2001, Ferentz found himself in the center of a growing controversy involving a dispute between former quarterback Jon Beutjer and offensive lineman Sam Aiello. On Thursday, Iowa's fourth-year coach dealt with questions surrounding alcohol and substance abuse.

Six of Ferentz's players have had run-ins with the law since the beginning of the 2001 season, including four players who were charged with operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated. Wide receivers Mo Brown and

A day in Clichéville

CHICAGO — Another Big Ten football media day has come, which means only one thing to the throng of overweight, chain-smoking, belly-aching scribes in attendance: It can't be over with soon enough.

For the masses who have never lowered themselves to the dredges of sports writing, the modern-day equivalent of colonial tax collectors on the occupational-level-of-respect chart, media day sounds like a dream come true. It's like a fantasy camp of sorts where for two days those in attendance can kibitz with the conference's coaches and selected players about the upcoming season. But for those who have attended these functions on numerous occasions, the whole process is far too much like the living hell Bill Murray's character goes through in the film Groundhog Day — except that Murray eventually gets Andie McDowell in the end and all we receive is a free gift (this year it was a set of binoculars). Otherwise, it is exactly the same premise.

Take, for instance, the following phrase: I can't tell you how much we're looking forward to this season. Those 12 words or some derivation of them were uttered by all 11 coaches at this morning's opening session, with the notable exception of Purdue's Joe Tiller, who made it a point to let the Big Ten and the media know we were both cutting into a week of his precious Wyoming fly-fishing time.

So, in an exercise of utter futility and because I had nothing better to do with my time in the car at 4 in the morning on the way here, I came up with a few generic phrases and descriptions I was sure to encounter before the day was over. Sure enough, I could have stood at the podium with each team's media guide in my hand and played one hell of a game of Mad Libs with what I like to call the generic media-day address to the masses. It goes something like this:

"The Warm Welcome" — Each coach will begin his remarks by saying how good it is to see all of us writers once again, which is a lie that will stand the test of time alongside the likes of "I am not a crook." Some, like Tiller, are more honest than others when it comes to this facet of the day. Wisconsin's Barry Alvarez and Grumpy Old Men castoff Joe Paterno are two others whose dislike for media day and, more specifically, the media themselves, is renowned.

"We're excited" — This is a general rundown of what can be expected from each team, which, if not taken with a giant grain of salt (which this event itself implies), means that all 11 teams will be undefeated or playing in the Rose Bowl.

"The question mark" — There will always be an area of weakness that will be pointed out again and again so as to plant the seed of doubt in the media's mind that each team shouldn't be favored to win a game this year unless there is improvement made. Special teams and quarterbacks were a favorite target this year, and not just by Kirk Ferentz.

"The next big thing" — You can usually count on this one, especially from a down-and-out team such as Indiana or Northwestern. It's the kid who will be the next

PRIME TIME PLAYOFFS

Boyd stays hot on road to finals

Scores 43 to lead team into title game with Worley, HawksNest

The Daily Iowan

Brody Boyd exploded with 43 points to lead Mike Gatens Real Estate/Highland Park Development over Liberty Motors/Iowa Realty, 113-102, in the Prime Time semifinals Thursday night.

Boyd excelled from downtown, hitting seven 3-point shots. Teammate Chauncey Leslie was also hot, scoring 26 and grabbing nine boards. Matt Schneiderman of UNI also contributed with 19 points and nine rebounds.

Mike Gatens had a shaky regular season, winning its first game and then losing six in a row. Leslie attributed the recent wins to good listening and good teamwork.

"We've been doing well because we listen to our coach," he said. "We had a bad season, and we wanted to come out here and play team ball."

Mike Gatens will face HawksNestOnline.com in the finals on July 29. Leslie sees a good chance for a third-straight championship win for coach Randy Larson.

"I definitely think we have a chance to win," he said. "Every team we've played, we've only lost by three or four points and if we play like we are now, we can beat any of the other teams."

Larson attributed his team's recent success to having a full roster.

"So much of win-loss records in PTL is affected by how many games your players miss," he said. "Leslie missed the first five games, and that kind of hurt us."

In this particular game, Larson praised the efforts of Boyd and Leslie's supporting cast.

"They decided, to their credit, that they had to play together to win," he said. "Our guys that aren't so heralded worked hard to allow Leslie and Boyd to shine."

Larson also pointed out that actually taking home the championship might be harder than it looks.

"The other team is a lot more physical, and it has a lot of big bodies," he said. "We only have one guy who works effectively defending the post. It's a question of whether they can goad us into taking bad shots and whether we can keep up with them physically."

Pierre Pierce scored 25 points and grabbed nine rebounds for Liberty Motors, while Peter Bullock netted 29 points and pulled down seven boards.

HawksNest 103, Lebeda 92

HawksNestOnline.com beat Lebeda Mattress Factory, 103-92, with three players posting double-doubles.

Glen Worley scored 22 points and grabbed 13 rebounds, and ex-Iowa player Kenyon Murray scored 23 and pulled down 10 boards. David Gruber of UNI also scored 23 points and grabbed an impressive 18 rebounds.

David Newman of Drake contributed offensively with a team-high 24 points. HawksNest was also very consistent at the line, hitting 25 of 30 free throws.

HawksNest coach James Moses attributed his team's win to good concentration.

He also praised the physical abilities of his players.

"We took advantage of some of their weaknesses," he said. "It also helped that Worley, Murray, and Newman hit some key shots at the end."

Greg Brunner scored a team-high 25 points for Lebeda in the losing effort.

The title game is scheduled for July 29 at 7:30 p.m.

being brought up. He held San Francisco's patchwork lineup to seven hits over six innings.

Astros 8, Pirates 0

HOUSTON — Rookie Kirk Saarloos pitched the Astros' first complete game of the season, and Jeff Bagwell drove in five runs as Houston beat Pittsburgh.

Saarloos (2-2) allowed six hits and no walks as he pitched the team's first shutout since Roy Oswalt did it against Milwaukee last Sept. 9.
