Boyd sets off with wry gusto

By Amir Efrati
The Daily Iowan

UI interim President Willard "Sandy" Boyd sees humor in the timing of both his recent appointment to the university's top position and the beginning of his first term 33 years ago.

"The first time, I was too young for this job. The second time, I'm too old," said Boyd, 75, who was president from 1969-81.

The easy-going law professor is already back in the head position, returning his old furniture to the president's Jessup Hall office. A giant stack of dusty, yellowed memo pads he salvaged from his first presidency sit poised for action on his conference table. Despite using relics from the past, Boyd maintains clear intentions for the university's immediate future. He said he will promote sustainable economic development within the university — primarily in health-related fields — to aid both the school and state in the wake of last year's $37.9 million in budget cuts.

"The worries of Iowa have to be our worries as well," he said during an interview with the DI last week before leaving for his annual family vacation on Lake Superior's Madeline Island.

Boyd said he couldn't refuse when university administrators asked him in June to temporarily replace Mary Sue Coleman, who

Blast rips Hebrew U. cafeteria

By Tracy Wilkinson
Los Angeles Times

JERUSALEM — A powerful bomb ripped apart a crowded cafeteria at Jerusalem's Hebrew University on Wednesday, killing seven people and wounding nearly 100 others as they were sitting down to lunch. Israeli Jews and Arabs, as well as Americans, were among the casualties.

The military wing of Hamas, a radical Islamic group, claimed responsibility for the attack at Israel's oldest and most prestigious institution of higher education. The bombing, inside a student center named for Frank Sinatra, was to avenge Israel's killing last week of the top Hamas military commander and 14 other Palestinians, most of them children, a Hamas spokesman said.

Israeli police said the nail-studded bomb appeared to have been hidden in a bag and planted under or on top of cafeteria tables, then detonated by an assailant who escaped — a departure from the suicide bombings that have terrorized Israel for months.

State Department officials said three of the dead were Americans. One was a 36-year-old woman who had just arrived in Israel on a study program, Israeli officials said. None of the Americans were immediately identified.

But one was identified by a family spokesman as 36-year-old Janis Ruth Coulter, an assistant director of graduate studies based at Hebrew University's New York office.

Coulter had been escorting American students in Israel when the attack occurred, said Harry King.

"Janis Ruth was a wonderful, loving, caring person," King said from Boston, where Coulter's family lives. "Her faith, to which she converted, was at the core of her being."

The attack shattered a sense — an illusion, perhaps — that the university was an oasis, a sanctuary from daily violence. The sprawling Mount Scopus campus on the eastern outskirts of Jerusalem was a place of higher learning for Jews and Arabs as well as foreign students. It had remained relatively free of the strife engulfing the world just outside its metal gates.

Israel's Security Cabinet, meeting after the blast, decided Israel would retaliate within hours, Israel Radio said. The report could not be independently confirmed.

In the cafeteria, where the bomb wreaked devastation, students of many nationalities and ethnic backgrounds had mixed casual — a rarity in a land polarized by hatred and

Life under siege harsh for both sides

LIVING IN CONFLICT

UI graduate student Osama Saba's mother is scared, and his brother can't go to work because they are civilians living in a territory occupied by Israeli forces. But a spokesman for those forces insists that "terrorists" hiding among people such as Saba's family must be rooted out. Taken together, the two stories show the hostilities between a uniformed army looking for militants and the civilians who are in the way.

UI graduate student Osama Saba can hear the rumbling of Israeli tanks through his family's West Bank city, Ramallah, when he speaks to them on the phone.

The Israeli military is in the middle of its second major operation in the West Bank as retaliation for suicide attacks within Israel. At least 1,500

Palestinians and nearly 600 Israelis have died, and thousands more have been wounded since September 2000.

"You can't justify torturing [Palestinians] through this siege because they don't have the right leadership," said Saba, referring to the current operation, "Determined Path."

The 32-year-old from Ramallah, who came to Iowa City in 1996 to study biomedical engineering, said that each day, he fears for the life of his mother, brother, and sister back home.

Israeli official says forces try to avoid civilian casualties

By Amir Efrati
The Daily Iowan

JERUSALEM — In describing the ongoing conflict against Palestinian militants, a spokesman for the Israeli military expressed the frustration at fighting an enemy without a face.

In an interview, Capt. Jacob Dallal said, "The terrorists have the advantage. They look like civilians, operate within civilian populations, and use them for camouflage."

As civilian casualties in Palestinian cities continue to mount, so does the criticism of the Israeli military by the international community and liberal Israeli groups.

"Mistakes are inevitable when we are forced to operate in a civilian population," Dallal said. "We are trying to act in a pinpoint fashion to arrest terrorists while causing the minimum amount of damage to the civilian population and their property."

Israel estimates that civilians compose 10 percent of the total Palestinian death count — roughly 160 — a figure that Dallal sees as commendable considering the circumstances.

Conversely, he points out, the majority of Israeli deaths, approximately 70 percent, have been of innocent civilians.

"It is more dangerous for an Israeli citizen to walk down Jaffa Street in Jerusalem [the site of six suicide attacks in the past year and a half] than it is for a soldier to walk down a street in the West Bank," Dallal said.

Aya Segal, 19, an Israeli private in the intelligence division stationed in the Gaza Strip, said she understands how errors in the West Bank towns can be made.

From West Nile Virus to anthrax

By Amy Jennings
The Daily Iowan

From influenza to anthrax to West Nile, it's been a busy year for experts at the UI Hygienic Laboratory, who study everything and anything that can make one sick.

Approximately 120 dead crows from across the state have recently been delivered to the lab in plastic and on ice to test for West Nile Virus. The facility successfully identified the virus in seven Iowa counties.

Lab experts track the virus by extracting tissue samples from the brains of dead crows, UI microbiologist Jeffrey Benfer said. RNA strains taken from the brain tissue indicate whether the crow is infected.

"Test results from crows allow us to track the virus and alert people of a threat they wouldn't otherwise know about," said lab Director Mary Gilchrist.

The lab, the state's lone anthrax-testing site, had previously gained national attention and $2.5 million in federal funding for dealing with bioterrorism threats following the Sept. 11 attacks. The FBI and other federal agencies relied on results from 70 anthrax samples tested in Oakdale to advance their investigations.

"Our lab is at an advantage being located in a small town because people tend to be more thoughtful and non-reactive," Gilchrist said.

Twelve National Guardsmen kept a watchful eye as experts used inactive chains of anthrax to determine that all suspicious powders and electrical equipment sent to the lab were harmless.

"We test powders by growing organisms on special agar plates," said UI microbiologist Mary DeMartino, displaying the palm-sized, shallow plastic dishes.

Since 1904, the lab has kept vigilance on communicable diseases such as the West Nile Virus. It has expanded since to provide environmental data to the Environmental Protection Agency and the U.S. Geological Survey.

In addition, the lab has also become the official HIV-testing site for the state. Microbiologist Jackie Hanrahan tests 27,000 samples for HIV each year.

"There is a 0.8 percent positivity rate for the tests, which is low," she said.

After state funds were slashed in January, the facility was forced to begin charging clinics for conducting the tests in order to keep the program alive, Hanrahan said.

The federal funding that resulted from bioterrorism publicity will be used to hire staff, purchase equipment, and install new computer and security systems, Gilchrist said.

Plans to move from the 85-year-old building and construct a $20 million facility are also in the works, she said.

"We're not asking for a palace, but we would like a place that is very efficient, clean, and aesthetically pleasing," Gilchrist said.

Ganske says he's gearing up to run

By Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Rep. Greg Ganske, R-Iowa, announced a monthlong campaign tour to demonstrate there's "room to grow" in his poll standings against Sen. Tom Harkin.

With Congress in its summer recess, Ganske said he's going to step up the pace of his campaign in a Senate race widely viewed as one of the most competitive in the country.

"We are within single digits," Ganske said in a conference call with reporters. "With a lower name ID, that is very significant."

Ganske said he planned a series of town-hall meetings across the state focusing on health care and prescription-drug issues, along with touting trade legislation the House has passed.

"There's been a lot that's gone on in Congress here just before the recess," he said.

Harkin aides welcomed Ganske to the campaign trail, noting that Harkin has been stumping hard for nearly two years.

"He's going to campaign? That's a novel idea," said Harkin campaign manager Jeff Link. "How come he hasn't campaigned the last 14 months he's been an announced candidate?"

Most polls have shown Harkin with a lead in the race but hovering around 50 percent, a danger level for incumbents.

"My name ID is over 80 percent in the state, and we do have room to grow," said Ganske. He said he plans to use the month of August to build a foundation for the fall campaign.

Link said Harkin began his campaign with the assumption the race would be very close and has spent the last two years tirelessly campaigning in his bid for a fourth term in office.

"We never said we were going to win 65-35," Link said. "We've been preparing for over a year for a very close race."

With the Senate narrowly divided, the Harkin-Ganske battle is widely viewed as one of a handful that will decide control of the body after this year's midterm elections. Democrats have a 50-49 edge with one independent who generally votes with Democrats.

Schools form E. European pool

By Christy B. Logan
The Daily Iowan

A lack of student demand and a shortage of faculty have galvanized professors at Iowa's three public universities to form a partnership to preserve Eastern European language and culture courses.

The pilot program, which will begin this fall, is funded by a three-year, $320,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Education; it will offer courses on a two-year cycle in Polish, Czech, and Serbo-Croatian.

As part of the consortium among the UI, Iowa State University, and the University of Northern Iowa, each institution has agreed to pool its resources, lending technical equipment, staff instruction, and classroom space and bringing the program's total resources to $650,000.

Through an Internet-based video-conferencing system, students will view courses on monitors generating images from cameras logged on to a central server. Officials say they have virtually reached the maximum enrollment of 10 students per class on each campus.

The Eastern European languages are less popular than other European languages because of the common fear that they are difficult to learn and students' limited knowledge about the cultures, said Russell Valentino, the program's director and a UI associate professor of Russian.

"The main idea is that the programs would be stronger if we put the program together," he said. "We've been talking about how to work together to increase classes and pool resources in terms of faculty expertise."

This year, the program plans to offer only five courses in Polish, Czech, and Yugoslavian culture because of limited funding, but officials say they hope to expand their selection to approximately 12-15 new classes over the next three years to include political science and literature.

"We wanted the program, but no one campus has the resources to do it on its own," said Maria Basom, the UNI chairwoman of modern languages. "My concern is where we will be in three years. We're afraid to lose more faculty."

One goal of the program, incorporating study abroad as an option for students, will take time to develop, officials said.

The program is "extremely valuable because students have been limited in where they can go for study abroad by language proficiency," said Janis Perkins, the director of the UI's study-abroad program. "It's a very exciting opportunity."

Officials said they are confident about the video-monitoring system's level of instruction despite concerns that teachers wouldn't be in the classroom. Instructors will meet their students at least twice during the semester for face-to-face interaction.

"We would like to see this become a standing, long-term program and a regular part of the curriculum," Basom said.

ICLU backs clinic on pregnancy tests

DES MOINES (AP) — The Iowa Civil Liberties Union will file a "friend of the court" brief in support of Planned Parenthood's plans to appeal a judge's ruling that orders the agency to turn over pregnancy-test records.

"This case is not only about reproductive privacy, it is also about the fundamental question of whether government agents can pry into the private lives of anyone they choose when investigating a crime, or whether they must restrict their intrusions to people they can show may have been involved in the crime," said Ben Stone, the director of the Iowa Civil Liberties Union.

Buena Vista County officials are seeking pregnancy-test records from Planned Parenthood's Storm Lake clinic in the investigation of a dead baby boy found at a recycling center in May.

Planned Parenthood officials in Iowa have refused a court order to provide names and addresses of women whose pregnancy tests at the clinic were positive, citing doctor-patient confidentiality.

Judge Frank Nelson ordered the records be turned over by Aug. 17. Planned Parenthood will appeal to the Iowa Supreme Court.

Ex-vice squad chief denies taking funds

By Todd Dvorak
Associated Press

DAVENPORT — The former head of Davenport's vice squad denied that he took any money seized in a 1997 gambling raid, instead blaming federal agents for using an inferior system for counting and tagging evidence.

Greg Collins, a former sergeant and 22-year department veteran, testified Wednesday in U.S. District Court in the third day of his trial.

Federal prosecutors accuse Collins of stealing $3,987 from nearly $32,000 taken from the home of a man suspected of running an illegal gambling and bookmaking operation.

Much of Collins' testimony centered on the different procedures used by the vice squad and federal agents for counting money seized during criminal searches.

IRS agents testified earlier that they had counted $32,064 in cash found in cigar boxes and stashed in the safe at the home of Walter Skovronski during the March 22 raid. Skovronski later pleaded guilty to illegal gambling and was sentenced to 21 months in federal prison.

Agents also seized two personal checks worth $4,000 from the safe but under department policy did not include the checks in the inventory of cash. The cash and checks were then placed in a single bag, tagged, and turned over to Collins, who had agreed to store all property seized in the raid.

Collins, 47, told the jury he had a reputation among his officers as a "stickler" for accuracy in recording evidence and that he routinely double-counted large sums of cash, often alone in his office.

Senate ditches drug bill

By Janet Hook
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — A much-heralded drive to provide the elderly with prescription-drug coverage died in the Senate Wednesday, likely putting the legislation on hold until the fall elections determine whether either party can gain the upper hand in shaping policy after 2002.

Once-high hopes that Congress would enact a prescription-drug benefit this year were dashed when the Senate voted, 50-49, against a last-ditch compromise. The Democratic leaders who control the Senate then pulled the plug on debate, which had stretched over more than two weeks.

Some proponents clung to hope that the push for prescription-drug coverage could be revisited soon if enough senior citizens rise up and lambaste senators for their inaction.

"It's never too late to do the right thing," said Bill Novelli, the head of the American Association of Retired Persons, the group that plans to continue its heavy lobbying to end the Senate stalemate. But others predicted that Wednesday's vote was likely the Senate's last word on the issue this year.

"This is probably our last, best chance to pass a prescription-drug benefit in [this] Congress," Sen. Gordon Smith, R-Ore., said of the compromise plan he helped author.

Having shelved several alternatives for providing drug coverage in recent votes, the Senate went on to pass a more modest but important measure to help curb the cost of medicine: It voted, 78-21, Wednesday for a bill to make it harder for brand-name drug companies to block the marketing of cheaper generic versions.

Although the Senate's debate on drug coverage was inconclusive, it might not be for naught. Some people believe a path to future compromises has been opened because both parties took major steps away from their traditional positions.

Democrats for the first time significantly scaled back their most ambitious plans for universal drug coverage. Republicans embraced a bigger expansion of a government entitlement program than the party traditionally has supported. The two parties even seemed to reach consensus on the price: By the debate's end, both Republicans and Democrats were backing alternatives that would cost roughly $400 billion through 2012.

Justice Dept. opens AOL probe

By Alec Klein
and Dan Eggen
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Justice Department has opened a criminal investigation into the accounting practices of AOL Time Warner Inc., focusing on the business deals of its Dulles Va.-based online division, officials familiar with the matter said.

The investigation coincides with a civil probe of the world's largest media company by the Securities and Exchange Commission, which was disclosed last week by the company's chief executive, Richard Parsons.

The Bush administration, seeking to restore investor confidence after a string of business scandals, recently formed a corporate-fraud task force to pursue criminal and civil cases against several high-profile companies and their executives.

"In the current environment, when anyone raises a question about accounting, it's not surprising that the relevant government agencies will want to look into the facts," AOL Time Warner said in a prepared statement Wednesday. "As we said last week, we are cooperating 100 percent with the SEC, and we will cooperate with the Department of Justice as well."

The New York-based company said its accounting conforms to generally accepted accounting principles, which it confirmed with its outside auditor, Ernst & Young LLP.

The company declined to comment beyond its written statement. The Justice Department and SEC also declined to comment.

It was not known which AOL executives might be subjects of the Justice Department's investigation. Prosecutors have "not ruled out anybody," including top AOL executives, a source said.

Sources familiar with the investigation said the Justice Department is focusing on transactions cited in a recent Washington Post report that examined how America Online recorded revenue through a series of unconventional transactions from 2000 to 2002.

The Justice Department investigation was first reported by USA Today.

The U.S. attorney's office for the Eastern District of Virginia in Alexandria is handling the case, the sources said. The main Justice Department office in Washington also is involved, and people in its New York division may assist in gathering evidence, the sources said.

The U.S. attorney's office for the Southern District of New York issued a subpoena to AOL initially, but it withdrew it when the case was transferred to Virginia, where AOL is based, sources said. There is no current subpoena of AOL.

U.S. Attorney Paul McNulty in Virginia did not return calls.

Paul Cappuccio, AOL Time Warner's general counsel, is spearheading AOL's legal response to the Justice Department and SEC, sources said. Myer Berlow, a former AOL advertising executive who now is a company consultant, has retained counsel in connection with SEC investigations of companies that did business with AOL, sources said. So has David Colburn, the executive vice president and president of business affairs and development for AOL Time Warner's subscription services and advertising and commerce businesses, the sources said. The company declined to make Berlow or Colburn available for comment.

The deals examined by the Post included a transaction in which AOL inherited an arbitration award from a British entertainment company and settled the case by accepting an advertising deal instead.

Letters to the Editor

Animal cruelty

I was both deeply saddened and greatly angered by a recent act of intentional animal cruelty that took place in our community. Darren Hertzler locked a 5-month-old beagle puppy in his car with the windows rolled down an inch or two on a 90-degree day. Hertzler basically cooked the puppy to death, bursting every blood vessel in its body and causing a horrible, excruciating death. Why would he do such a thing? Because the puppy, named Wilson, urinated in his apartment.

As a former Animal Shelter employee who has seen her share of abuse cases, I must say this case illustrates a disturbing disregard for the welfare of some of society's most innocent and defenseless creatures — companion animals. I cannot imagine what it must have been like for that puppy to die, locked in a plastic crate with no way out, no access to water, in a sweltering car with the windows barely open. Hertzler's malicious disregard for this animal's life is appalling and indefensible, as is the deliberate and calculated way he ensured Wilson's painful demise. Hertzler could have crated the puppy and left him in his apartment or simply rolled down the car's windows; he could have cleaned up the mess and left Wilson alone. He chose not to. Hertzler chose to punish Wilson, and his punishment went too far.

Unfortunately, Iowa's anemic animal-cruelty laws lack the statutory provisions to charge Hertzler with felony animal cruelty; he has been charged with a serious misdemeanor. I hope that the people in this community will contact the Johnson County Attorney's Office at (319) 339-6100 and ask that Hertzler be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law, including jail time and the maximum fine allowable by law. Furthermore, Hertzler should be required to undergo psychological testing at his own expense and be prohibited from owning a companion animal in the future.

while offering nothing in return. In addition, it is astonishing how America has treated many African countries by offering them almost nothing in the way of aid to save lives from a disease that many call the most horrific tragedy of the 21st century, but we will give the Israeli government billions to murder children. God bless America.

Budget cuts and raises

Recently, I read that Iowa led the nation in budget cuts during this past fiscal year. This translates into steep tuition increases, less availability of classes, and the Main Library closing two hours earlier each night. Yet, amid all of these cutbacks, somehow the university can afford to pay its football coach $910,000 a year. Correct me if I'm wrong, but I thought that this university was losing money. Doling out hundreds of thousands of dollars to the football coach of a mediocre team sends a horrible message to Iowans. I can think of a lot of better ways to spend $910,000 than to fund an also-ran football program. Perhaps we can continue to keep the library open for students or guaranteed that classes will be available so that students can graduate in four years. To me, this seems a lot more important than football, but I forgot, it's football that brings in the big money to this university. How could I have been so foolish?

America's idea of aid

The author of the letter, "Blood is on U.S." (DI, July 29), touched upon a number of points that never seem to be discussed critically in this country regarding aid to Israel. Much of the aid given to Israel over the last 12 months has gone to violating the human rights of the Palestinians. Under the current administration of the White House, Ariel Sharon has been given a free hand to kill and murder, all in the name of protecting Israel.

Furthermore, it is so amazing how America has so quickly forgotten Sharon's bloody past, which is filled with Palestinian bodies, and how he rose to power by starting much of the unrest that has cost Israelis and Palestinians so many lives. But our country continues to give Sharon's government billions of dollars yearly without asking for any peace plan or respect for human rights.

It is incredible that America could stand up in the U.N. General Assembly each year and call for respect of human rights by China

Boyd's presence offers comfort, experience, and dedication to UI

While the search goes on for the next UI president to fill the absence left by Mary Sue Coleman, there certainly is someone capable at the wheel. Willard "Sandy" Boyd has been chosen by the Board of Regents as the interim president for the time being. While many students may not have heard his name before, he is no stranger to the university.

During a time when the university might normally feel vulnerable without a leader, it instead must feel relief at the name that has been chosen. Boyd has been with the school for nearly 50 years, and he knows the school inside out, from all sorts of various angles. Not only was he president during the turbulent late-60s and early '70s, he was also vice president for Academic Affairs, dean of the faculties, first chairman of the Human Rights Committee, faculty adviser to the Iowa Law Review, and founder of the Iowa Nonprofit Resource Center.

Willard "Sandy" Boyd returns to the forefront of the UI with a history of dedication to the university and a comforting presence in a financial crisis.

In addition to such a long list of leadership positions, Boyd is formerly a professor at the UI College of Law. A range such as this ensures his comfort and knowledge of many offices and establishments in the university. Boyd has other feathers in his hat, however — he graduated in the top 10 percent of the Minnesota law school, and he has enjoyed the title of president at another worthy institution: Chicago's Field Museum.

Boyd will have a calming effect at the university. Like having a question about a new appliance and being able to consult the manufacturer, who better to face budget cuts and money shortages than the man who founded the UI Foundation, which will begin a record fund-raising campaign this fall? Boyd's skills accumulated over his 75 years allow the university to relax while it looks for a president, instead of worrying about the mistakes that the interim president might make in the meantime. His presence is almost like that of a familiar grandfather.

Another positive aspect of choosing Boyd is that the university can rest assured that he has no need to make his interim presidency a personal résumé builder or a media pulpit. He believes that the job of an interim president is to stay out of the media's eye and to lie low. There is no question of Boyd's genuine concern and care for the school, and his short presence at its forefront could prove tremendous for its future.

Becoming bolder, better in the thick of Kentucky

FIVE ROUNDS RAPID

I didn't feel safe until the plane lifted off from Louisville and the drink cart began rolling down the aisle. For the past few weeks, I had been doing light military training (ROTC basic camp) at Fort Knox, Ky., and I was beyond tired and desperate to return home from the stifling, windless valley.

All afternoon, I kept seeing drill sergeants out of the corner of my eye while I waited to board my plane at a Louisville airport bar. I was certain someone — something — was going to snatch me back to the military base just as I was on the cusp of civilization. After the unorganized debacle of "out-processing" and less than three hours of sleep the night before, I was beginning to become paranoid that the Fort Knox Army officials didn't want any of us to leave.

"Who I am just became better than who I was." This phrase is emblazoned on the back of a metal "coin" R.O.T.C. cadets receive after completing the Leader's Training Course. I spent a lot of time at the airport thinking about that phrase. It's simplistic, but something about it still rang slightly inspirational.

I left unsure what to expect and even more uncertain what I'd be like when I got home. Despite that clever slogan, I returned to Iowa unable to lift a Volkswagen above my head, and my tolerance for whiskey had now become embarrassingly low. I had learned new, life-saving skills during the training, fired hundreds of rounds of ammunition and got in trouble with authorities for being cheeky, but I can't think of any good weekends at home when all of this doesn't happen.

Soon after returning, however, I realized I came back with some very special assets — war stories (OK, training stories).

The stories are the best part of basic camp after returning home. Everyone likes to hear them, they get better with each telling, and the only people who know what really happened are scattered across the country.

As one officer told our company after we completed training, the beginning is the most important part of telling a good "war" story.

So there I was ... armed only with our wits, our platoon was doing an escape-and-evasion exercise. The enemy was everywhere. Some of our instructors and officers had donned black uniforms, commandeered our bus, and corralled us into a wire cage.

My squad escaped quickly, and another "soldier" in a gray uniform, sympathetic to our simulated cause, gave us a map and coordinates for "friendly" points.

The jungle was thick. Well, the Kentucky forest was thick. We heard some noises and realized we were not alone (dramatic pause).

Another escaped squad was marching through the forest behind us, making more noise than a herd of elephants. We got down on our bellies and waited for them to go past. Buskirk suggested we let those sloppy soldiers bring the enemy out. As soon as he said that ...

"Stop, Americans!" the "enemy" soldiers shouted.

We waited patiently as the squad was marched back to captivity. Yes, we were technically on the same side, but the rules were move and remain unseen — we were in "enemy" territory.

We made it to our first point, but no one was there, and it was out in an open field. We stayed in the cover of the woods, planning how to get our food and water with minimal visibility when an "enemy" Hummer rolled up. We sat still and weren't seen — until an "enemy" had to relieve himself in the wood-line.

Our second point came after another trek through the woods. It was at the top of a hill off of a nearby road. After my battle buddy and I made contact with the "friendly," we retrieved the rest of the squad waiting in the woods. Just as we marched up to the road (another dramatic pause), an "enemy" Hummer rolled up.

Two "enemy" soldiers emerged from the vehicle and took our friendly contact prisoner and threatened to "kill" him if we didn't surrender.

Still unarmed, we had to think and act quickly. There was an unguarded Hummer sitting on the road ...

Imagine two sergeants suddenly jerked back to reality during a simulated exercise when a couple cheeky cadets sneak through the woods quietly getting behind them.

Picture the horror on their faces as they see their careers flash before their eyes as their means of transportation disappears down the hill.

Did I become better than I was? I don't know. I'd like to think, perhaps, I got a little bolder.

Letting it all riff out on the riverbank

By Jessica Adams
The Daily Iowan

Spurred by the lack of local music festivals showcasing lesser-known musicians, UI graduate student J.P. Claussen decided to take matters into his own hands and organize the Mudriver Music Festival, featuring Iowa City talent exclusively.

Mudriver will begin Saturday morning at the Izaak Walton League; organizers intend for it to be the kickoff for a music cooperative whose goals include helping local musicians by building a support network within the community.

"We're trying to make it easier for them to make a living without trying to be a rock star," Claussen said. "These are talented artists who are doing music for the music. They are writing stuff, with substance, that they care about. It is real music about real life."

One of the cooperative's biggest missions is to support the families of the musicians. With many gigs reduced to late-night shows in smoke-filled bars, the environment has never catered to the needs of musicians and fans with children.

"We are really striving to provide a family friendly environment," Claussen said.

With a full lineup planned that includes Jennifer Danielson, the Mike and Amy Finders Band, and Ben Schmidt, among many others, Mudriver has already proven itself to be a successful idea among local musicians.

"[The artists] were really into the idea," Claussen said. "They like what it is about, and they believe it is a worthwhile cause."

The festivities will kick off at 10 a.m., and attendees can expect a relaxing atmosphere. While the music remains the focus, a man-made sand beach will be set up for children. Such activities as face painting will run throughout the day. Vendors will set up booths, and patrons are allowed to bring coolers.

Actors Julia Roberts and Blair Underwood appear in a scene from Steven Soderbergh's new movie, Full Frontal. Soderbergh shot most of the film on a cheap digital-video equipment with available light for a $2 million budget.

Shooting down to the cinematic bone

By David Germain
Associated Press

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Julia Roberts almost got lost on the way to work, was left behind when she fell asleep on the set, and had a breakdown while being interrogated about her character.

Catherine Keener turned her car into a dressing room, then suffered the unease of seeing a pair of her own pajamas in the movie's poster.

David Hyde Pierce had to discuss his thinning hair with an unseen actor whose echoing voice floated out of a men's room stall.

It was all part of a few days' work with Steven Soderbergh on Full Frontal, the director's return to austere filmmaking after such projects as Ocean's Eleven, Erin Brockovich, and Traffic, which earned him the best-director Academy Award.

Soderbergh shot most of Full Frontal on a cheap digital-video camera, using existing light and real locations, providing no trailers for his actors and requiring them to drive themselves to work and handle their own wardrobe, makeup, and hair style.

Roberts, Keener, Pierce and co-stars Blair Underwood, David Duchovny, Mary McCormack, Enrico Colantoni, and Nicky Katt worked for bottom-level actors' union wages, with back-end deals that mean more money depending on how well the film does at theaters.

The result was a big-name picture shot in 18 days, a breakneck pace by Hollywood standards, and costing a bit less than $2 million, compared with $80 million for Ocean's Eleven.

"A lot of it was just a reaction to coming off Ocean's Eleven and wanting to have a very different experience," Soderbergh said during an interview, accompanied by Roberts, Keener, and other co-stars at the L'Ermitage Hotel, where much of Full Frontal was shot. "Because that was such a physically large undertaking, I just wanted to go and do something small."

Soderbergh's first film, sex, lies and videotape, was made on a tiny budget, and his absurdist comedy Schizopolis was shot for a few hundred thousand dollars.

The images in Full Frontal often are grainy, dark in some scenes and overexposed in others. Dialogue and background noise is presented as it was captured during shooting, with no post-production sound work.

But shooting on a small digital camera without elaborate film-set trappings, Soderbergh was free to experiment with locations and angles. He shot scenes in their entirety, as opposed to the short bursts in a more traditional film shoot, bringing greater spontaneity as the actors experimented and improvised.

"There's something rejuvenating about it that focuses you on the things that I think are the most important, which are the characters and performances," Soderbergh said. "This was an experiment for me to take this notion of giving responsibility to the actors as far as you could possibly take it and see what happens."

Full Frontal traces a day in the lives of a group of oddballs in Los Angeles. When he sent the screenplay by Coleman Hough to prospective actors, Soderbergh attached a cover memo laying out his rules about wardrobe, transportation, and other matters.

The spirit of the rules was akin to the Dogma 95 "vow of chastity" developed by Danish directors, requiring real locations, natural sound and lighting, and other minimalist measures.

Soderbergh's mandates also required actors to submit to unscripted "interviews" about their characters, material woven into the finished film as voice-overs.

For Roberts, the interview by close pal Soderbergh — who directed her to an Oscar in Erin Brockovich — led to a momentary identity crisis. Roberts has dual roles in Full Frontal, an actress named Francesca and the character Francesca plays in a movie (that movie-within-the-movie was the only part of Full Frontal shot on traditional film with special lighting).

At the interview, Soderbergh sprang this question on Roberts: "Francesca, since winning the Oscar, do you find that other actors behave differently around you?"

Roberts said she lost her bearings.

"I felt as though I was playing an actor who, though a kind, kind woman, perhaps was not terribly talented, and when he said that, I thought, 'It's impossible that Francesca won an Oscar,'" Roberts said. "And I said ... well, what did I say?"

"You just stopped," Soderbergh said. "You just looked like your head was going to split open. You went, 'I don't know who I am right now.'"

Roberts continued: "I just remember saying what seemed like an awful lot of times, 'Who am I?' Because I'm playing two different women in this movie, and I'm about five different people at dinner with Steven on a regular basis. Shameful or not, I had just won an Oscar. So I was like, wow, what's going on? It was one of the more terrifying moments of my career."

Mob beats 2 to death

By Maura Kelly
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Police pleaded for help Wednesday in finding members of a mob that pulled two men out of a van after an accident and beat them to death with bricks, stones, and their bare hands.

"This is a simple, senseless double homicide committed by a bunch of cowardly thugs," Police Superintendent Terry Hillard said. "These are murderers. They killed two innocent people."

One person was being held for questioning, but police said they had made no arrests.

Autopsies showed that Anthony Stuckey, 49, and Jack Moore, 62, died from multiple injuries and blunt trauma, Cook County medical officials said. Both deaths were ruled homicides.

The accident happened Tuesday evening in the middle-income Oakland neighborhood on Chicago's South Side after the victims' rental van veered over a curb and crashed into a stoop filled with people, injuring three women, one critically.

Detective Phil Cline said the men were using the van to move furniture; authorities didn't know what caused the van to swerve.

The group beat the two men with their hands, feet, bricks, and stones, police said. The size of the group wasn't immediately known.

Both men lived in the area.

"They hit them with bricks that came off the side of the building," Taquita Mixon told the Chicago Tribune. "They didn't have a chance. It was a brutal beat-down."

Julia Mitchell, 29, who lives across the street from the accident scene, said she arrived and made eye contact with one of the two men, lying on the ground.

"His eyes were big, and he was scared. He looked at me, blinked once and exhaled, and I knew that he had died," she said.

Virginia Stuckey said her son was helping Moore move some items from an apartment and would not have been driving because he did not have a driver's license. She said her son was an unemployed day laborer and factory worker who had lived with her since January.

"I really can't believe that anyone would kill someone like that," said Stuckey, 72. "I hope they send them to prison."

Toni Preckwinkle, a city alderman who represents the area, said the neighborhood has been improving over the past several years.

"It has struggled for decades with demolition and abandonment, gang and drug activity," Preckwinkle said. "In the last five or six years, there's been a lot of change, new construction and renovation."

A 26-year-old woman who was struck by the van was in critical condition Wednesday. The others — 17-year-old and 18-year-old women — were in fair condition.

WBBM-TV/Associated Press
A television video frame shows a van in the front lawn of a house where three pedestrians were struck on Tuesday on Chicago's South Side. Anthony Stuckey and friend Jack Moore were in the van, which jumped the curb; they were pulled from their vehicle by an angry mob and beat to death.

Alleged maker of 9/11 fake IDs flees

By Wayne Parry
Associated Press

PATERSON, N.J. — A man who allegedly sold fake IDs to two of the Sept. 11 hijackers apparently fled the country for Egypt just before authorities came to arrest him in a raid on his home and businesses Wednesday, investigators said.

Interpol was notified to be on the lookout for Egyptian immigrant Mohamed El-Atriss, who faces charges of manufacturing and distributing fraudulent documents and conspiracy.

El-Atriss, 43, allegedly sold a fake ID card to Khalid Almihdhar, who was on the airliner that crashed into the Pentagon, and one to Abdul Aziz Alomari, who was aboard one of the planes that destroyed the World Trade Center, Sheriff Jerry Speziale said. FBI spokeswoman Sandra Carroll said investigators questioned El-Atriss after the Sept. 11 attacks and found no evidence he knew of the hijackers' plans.

El-Atriss, a naturalized U.S. citizen, operated businesses in Paterson and Elizabeth, where he sold the identification cards, Speziale said. Authorities raided his home and business Wednesday afternoon and were told El-Atriss had taken a flight from Newark to Egypt, the sheriff said.

Inside the Paterson office, investigators found large rolls of plastic laminating sheets and backings used to make driver's licenses for several states. A sign outside the building identified it as a provider of international driver's licenses and ID cards, notary public, fax and passport services, and a money-transfer station.

Authorities said investigators have gathered 75 fake IDs that El-Atriss generated and sold for as much as $800 each. Authorities said they believe he sold as many as 18 fake IDs per day and that his office also made counterfeit New Jersey license plates and auto-title certificates.

Three employees at El-Atriss' stores — Clara Ortubia, 28, Yanelis Fabian, 32, and Elizabeth Valeria Pollero, 30 — were arrested during the raids on the same charges El-Atriss faces.

Five minutes before the raid, El-Atriss called the Paterson store and told employees he was in Egypt and would return to the United States in a few days, Speziale said.

Investigators were unsure whether the flight he took left on Tuesday or Wednesday. Authorities last saw El-Atriss in New Jersey on Monday, investigators said.

In Cairo, Egyptian government officials refused to comment.

Wednesday's raids followed a four-month investigation by sheriffs in northern New Jersey, the Paterson police, and the FBI, Speziale said. El-Atriss had not been under round-the-clock surveillance, sheriff's Lt. Robert Weston said.

The investigation, dubbed Operation Paper Trail, began after police in northern New Jersey started finding similar fake IDs, Speziale said.

Authorities were tipped to El-Atriss by a St. Paul, Minn., company after he contacted it about paying cash for a high-speed copier capable of embossing seals.

Critics howl over Bush retreat on whistleblowers

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bipartisan chorus of critics on Wednesday questioned the extent of President Bush's support for protecting corporate whistleblowers who expose cooked books.

"This bothers me," said Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, who helped write new whistleblower protections into a corporate accountability law Bush signed Tuesday. "We need people who know about wrongdoing to come forward. If they don't, corporate crooks will get away with their crimes."

The flap arose as the White House, hours after Bush affixed his signature to the measure cracking down on boardroom fraud and making corporate financial reporting more transparent, issued its interpretation of a provision shielding whistleblowers from employer retaliation when they present Congress with information about wrongdoing.

The Bush administration, through a statement quietly released Tuesday evening and explanations from aides, said it viewed the new law as protecting informants only if they help a congressional committee conducting an investigation. Protections would not apply when evidence is provided to individual lawmakers or aides outside such proceedings, the White House said.

At least one lobbyist representing a trade group opposed to the whistleblower provisions was present at the White House bill-signing ceremony, even as Bush aides made it known that company CEOs had been excluded from it.

White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said whistleblowers' conversations with individual lawmakers could still be protected, but only if Congress changes its rules and gives lone members the authority to conduct congressionally sanctioned investigations. "This is up to Congress," he said.

7 die at university after bombing

BOMBING

revenge. Despite the summer break, the university was busy. Hundreds of students were present to take year-end exams. Summer Hebrew-language courses popular with foreigners had just begun.

"No one would have expected this to happen here," Alastair Goldrein, a British national taking Jewish studies at the school, told reporters at the scene. He had just approached the cafeteria when the explosion shook the ground. "Why would someone target this university? This is what was best about Israel."

Dazed, blood-spattered students staggered from the building in the minutes following the blast. Rescue workers rushed up the narrow streets to the cafeteria, located at the heart of the university campus.

The interior of the cafeteria area was etched in panic. Upraised chairs were scattered on the bloodied floor and abandoned water bottles littered the tables. The force of the blast blew windows and glass facades to bits and tore panels from the ceiling. The stench of smoke and burnt flesh wafted through the air.

"Never in my life have I heard such an explosion, and all the glass was shattered, and I fell on the floor," said another eyewitness, who only gave her first name, Ilana. "There was darkness and silence, total darkness."

The Israeli government branded the bombing "a despicable act so horrendous it defies words." The government said it makes no distinction among Hamas and other Palestinian factions, including the Fatah movement of Palestinian Authority President Yasser Arafat, on whom Israeli officials said the ultimate blame rests.

"No cause, no sense of deprivation, no argument can possibly justify killing innocent teenagers in a discotheque, in a coffee shop or, today, in the cafeteria of Hebrew University," said Dore Gold, an adviser to Prime Minister Ariel Sharon.

The Palestinian Authority condemned the bombing but said Sharon and his "policies of destruction and collective punishment" bore the ultimate blame.

In Washington, President Bush condemned the bombing. "There are clearly killers who hate the thought of peace and, therefore, are willing to take their hatred to all kinds of places, including a university," he said. The bombing "won't stop us from rallying the world to fight their kind of terror; nor will they stop us from having a vision of peace."

U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan also condemned the attack and again urged Israelis and Palestinians "to end the cycle of violence, revenge and retaliation."

Wednesday's attack was the second bombing in two days. On Tuesday, a 17-year-old Palestinian blew himself up at a popular falafel stand in central Jerusalem, wounding five people but killing no one else. That was the first bombing in Jerusalem in more than a month.

Hamas is threatening a long campaign of revenge attacks. Even before Wednesday's bombing, Israel's top internal-security official, Avi Dichter, told a parliamentary committee that intelligence services believed at least 60 attacks are being planned.

"If they are going to attack our children, then they will have to expect to drink from the same poison," Hamas official Ismail Haniyeh said Wednesday in Gaza City, where hundreds of Hamas supporters poured into the streets late Wednesday to celebrate the university bombing and vow more attacks.

At Hebrew University, officials said they had redoubled security in recent months but added that an open campus cannot be hermetically sealed — not, said university Vice President Moshe Vigdor, "if you want to maintain a living, breathing campus visited by 20,000 people a year."

Guards are posted at perimeter gates and at the entrances to main buildings, where they routinely search book bags, backpacks and purses. But in the spirit of educational freedom, police are not stationed throughout the campus.

Of an estimated 23,000 students at Hebrew University, approximately 20 percent are Arab and roughly 1,500 are foreigners.

Curfews and shootings dog Palestinians

PALESTINE

Born in Jerusalem in 1970, Saba plans to return to Ramallah after he earns his degree.

Since April's Israeli operation, "Defense Shield," ended, Saba said, he has had more contact with his family, and their safety has improved. But conditions are far from auspicious.

Because they live in constant physical danger, Saba's family cannot "think about their future but only about the next five minutes of their life," said the head of the UI General Union of Palestine Students.

The current Israeli siege on Ramallah, which began in June, has devastated the city, he said, taking a serious psychological toll on his "very scared" mother, Nadia.

Saba disputed Israeli assertions that only buildings suspected of housing terrorists were targeted. The building across the street from Saba's family was shelled, and the apartments below them also took fire.

"Being any Palestinian makes you a suspect to them," he said.

Saba's brother, Tariq, has even had to close his insurance business for the last 40 days. He only opens it when the Israelis lift the curfew.

"They don't have any option but to adjust," Saba said of his family.

When people in Ramallah occasionally hear the Israeli force has lifted the curfew and they return to the streets, they are shot at by Israeli soldiers. "There are no warning shots," Saba said.

He contends that more than 70 percent of Palestinians in the West Bank live below the poverty line, compared with 20 percent before the Palestinian intifadah, or uprising, began. The suffering is an unjustifiable occupation that thrives on terror, he said.

Last week's missile attack in Gaza that killed 15 Palestinians, which targeted Hamas leader Salah Shehadeh, horrified Saba's family. Saba felt anger, saying Israel had no respect for human rights.

"They knew there would be civilian casualties," he said. "That's terrorism."

But Palestinian suicide bombings, like the Israeli attacks, also cannot be justified, he said.

"No one has the right to take anyone's life," he said, calling the cycle of violence between Israelis and Palestinians pointless. "Nobody is going to win this way."

But he warned that so long as his family and others live under siege, "don't expect them to forget."

Army spokesman defends military action

the field are placed in extremely difficult situations and cannot always make the right decisions," she said.

Aya, who was drafted into the army eight months ago, said it is often impossible to distinguish between terrorists and civilians, presenting a problem for Israeli forces when ambushed by snipers.

In April, U.N. envoy members called the scene at Jenin a "civilian massacre" perpetrated by Israeli forces following a battle with Palestinian militants. Dallal considers the Jenin battle, an intense clash in which 23 Israeli soldiers and 52 Palestinians were killed, as an example of Israeli humanity rather than brutality.

"The only reason 23 of our soldiers were killed is because every extra measure was taken to limit the civilian casualties on the Palestinian side," Dallal said. One of these measures included a complicated house-by-house search for suspects that resulted in Israeli deaths because of mines and other booby traps, he said.

In a conflict that Israel estimates will last at least another year or two, Dallal sees military action as a short-term option.

"There is no military solution to the situation," he said. "It's a good temporary measure to deal a blow to terrorists and their ability to act."

Boyd says he will raise funds, lobby state

BOYD

today assumes the presidency at the University of Michigan after seven years as chief Hawk-eye.

"This university has done so much for me," Boyd said. "Whenever it calls, I can't say no."

Still, he initially felt hesitant to retake the university's reins, fearing that the job would interrupt his work at the Iowa Non-profit Resource Center.

Those concerns faded, however, when he returned to the president's desk and realized "nothing has changed" — except, of course, for the addition of computers.

Boyd said he will focus on soliciting federal funding for health research and utilizing the UIHC to help the state recruit more health businesses. He also plans to strengthen current university outreach programs that interact with local government, such as the Non-profit Resource Center and the Institute of Public Affairs, to increase their visibility in the state.

The new leader also said he will work to encourage more volunteering in the university, developing programs that give students credit for volunteer and nonprofit functions.

"It is important that when you go to school, you're not only career-minded but have a sense of community service," he said.

In June, Boyd enlisted former UI Student Government Vice President Dan Rossi to write a report that would help university administrators enact new volunteer programs. The 25-page report, "Service Learning and Volunteering," shows Boyd maintains a "strong commitment to volunteerism," Rossi said.

Fund raising will also play a center role during Boyd's presidency, as it did when he was first in office. Boyd, who set up the UI Foundation in 1955, said he will have little trouble advancing the foundation's goals.

"I know all the donors to this university," he said.

In September, Boyd said, he expects to see an increase in university tuition and fees, but he vowed to press his concerns on lawmakers.

"Other states are in severe economic difficulty like us; we're not unique," he said. "But I will communicate to lawmakers that the university needs its fair share of state appropriations money."

Boyd said he expects to fight those battles and others for at least a semester, and he doesn't mind a prolonged stay, adding: "You don't want to rush finding a full-time president."

Ron Gant and Ryan Klesko also homered for the Padres. Brandon Villafuerte (1-0) escaped a first-and-second, one-outs jam in the 10th, getting pinch-hitter Todd Hundley to strike out.

Mets 10, Astros 0

NEW YORK — Slumping Jeremy Burnitz hit a three-run homer in New York's seven-run first inning, helping Shawn Estes (4-8) snap a seven-start winless streak.

Hours after bolstering their pitching staff with a pair of deals at the trade deadline, the Mets broke through for their biggest first inning since also scoring seven on June 8, 1995, against San Francisco.

Orioles 12, D-Rays 2

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Rodrigo Lopez became the first Baltimore pitcher in 23 years to win six-straight decisions in a single month as the Orioles beat Tampa Bay. Lopez (12-3) gave up one run and six hits over six innings.

D'backs 5, Expos 1

MONTREAL — Randy Johnson struck out 15 batters in he pitched his third complete game of the season for Arizona.

Johnson (15-4) raised his season total to 215, moving ahead of teammate Curt Schilling for the major league lead. It was Johnson's first complete game since April 21. Luis Gonzalez homered off Masato Yoshii (2-4) and drove in two.

Phillies 8, Giants 6

PHILADELPHIA — Barry Bonds returned to San Francisco's lineup and hit his 596th career homer and two doubles, but the Phillies won.

Bonds had missed 10-straight starts because of a strained right hamstring. He doubled in his first at-bat and later hit his 29th home run. He finished 3-4 with a strikeout and intentional walk.

Bonds was intentionally walked with two outs in the ninth inning to load the bases, and he left for pinch-runner Shawn Dunston.

Pirates 7, Rockies 6

PITTSBURGH — Brian Giles put Pittsburgh ahead with a two-run double off Kent Mercker in the reliever's first appearance in nearly two months, and the Pirates ran Colorado's losing streak to eight.

Rob Mackowiak added a two-run shot for the Pirates, and he and Giles drove in three runs apiece. Brian Boehringer (3-3) beat Rick White (1-2).

Athletics 6, Indians 4

OAKLAND, Calif. — Mark Ellis singled home Terrence Long with the go-ahead run in the eighth inning as Oakland avoided a sweep.

Mark Mulder (12-6) recovered from a rocky second inning to win for the 10th time in 13 starts as the A's salvaged one victory against Cleveland following two narrow losses.

Marlins 8, Cardinals 5

MIAMI — Mike Redmond doubled home three runs in the first inning, and Josh Beckett struggled through six innings to help Florida beat St. Louis.

The Marlins, who had been outscored 95-52 in the first inning this season, bucked the trend by taking a 4-0 lead in the first against Travis Smith (4-2).

Braves 9, Brewers 1

ATLANTA — Matt Franco hit three doubles and drove in three runs, and Chipper Jones homered as Kevin Millwood pitched another strong game.

Millwood (10-6) allowed one run and five hits and struck out seven in 6½ innings. The right-hander is 8-1 in his last 14 starts.

Blue Jays 9, Royals 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Eric Hinske hit a two-run homer, and Dewayne Wise drove in three runs for Toronto.

Hinske hit his 18th homer after Shannon Stewart led off the game with a single off Shawn Sedlacek.

play, not only because you love the game, but it's about winning."

"We're much better. How much? I don't know. I'll let you know in about a month," Boston manager Grady Little said. "Nothing can be said about the deals until you see some results."

The New York Mets made two trades, both for pitchers. They sent Payton, pitcher Mark Corey, and minor-league outfielder Robert Stratton to the Colorado Rockies for Thomson (7-8, 4.88 ERA) and outfielder Mark Little.

"I'm surprised we got a starter," Mets general manager Steve Phillips said. "I wasn't very confident we would. Thomson is one of the guys we had identified that if the price was right we thought he would help us. But we weren't sure the price would be right."

The Mets also traded left-hander Bobby M. Jones and minor leaguers Josh Reynolds and Jay Bay to the San Diego Padres for right-hander Reed (2-4, 1.98 ERA) and pitcher Jason Middlebrook (1-3, 5.09 ERA).

"We've addressed our pitching needs," Phillips said.

"Steve Reed is not the sexiest name out there among relief corps, but he's probably the guy pitching the best."

The Anaheim Angels, solidly

in the AL West and wild-card races, got Ochoa and catcher Sal Fasano from Milwaukee for catcher Jorge Fabregas and two players to be named.

The Rockies also traded Todd Hollandsworth and pitcher Dennis Reyes to Texas for outfielder Gabe Kapler and infielder-outfielder Jason Romano.

In a swap of outfielders, Pittsburgh sent Chad Hermansen to the Chicago Cubs for Darren Lewis.

eration, Didier Gailhaguet. Neither returned telephone messages seeking comment, but Le Gougne's Salt Lake City-based lawyer, Erik Christiansen, said she "has no involvement and no knowledge of this person or these allegations."

A week after the pairs competition, the ice-dancing team of Marina Anissina and Gwendal Peizerat won France's first gold in figure skating since 1932 by a 5-4 split of the judges.

Anissina was born in Russia. Irina Lobacheva and Ilia Averbukh of Russia took the silver, but the placement of the top two teams did not cause a stir at the time.

When asked about the charges, Peizerat told the Associated Press: "I have never heard of this man."

Tokhtakhounov was arrested at his resort in Forte dei Marmi in northern Italy.

He was charged with conspiracy to commit wire fraud and conspiracy to commit bribery relating to sporting contests. He faces up to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine on each count.

The criminal complaint identified Tokhtakhounov as a "major figure in international Eurasian organized crime."

According to the complaint, Tokhtakhounov "has been involved in drug distribution, illegal arms sales, and trafficking in stolen vehicles." A confidential source told the FBI that he also had fixed beauty pageants in Moscow in the early 1990s.

The complaint alleges he used his influence with members of the Russian and French skating federations "in order to fix the outcome of the pairs and ice-dancing competitions at the 2002 Olympics."

The court papers also contend he worked with "unnamed co-conspirators."

Federal investigators said they obtained recorded telephone conversations between Tokhtakhounov and a French ice dancer in which he brags about being able to influence the outcome of competitions, a senior law-enforcement official said, on condition of anonymity.

The complaint made it clear the case was based on confidential informants and wiretaps. At one point, it said wiretaps caught the defendant talking to a female ice dancer's mother, telling her, "We are going to make your daughter an Olympic champion — even if she falls, we will make sure she is No. 1."

After the Olympics, the female ice dancer herself called Tokhtakhounov to discuss the outcome, the papers said.

She told him she could have won without his help, saying, the Russians "did not put us in first place," the papers said.

While Anissina was the ice dancer who won the gold, the papers didn't identify her as the woman on the phone.

Skating officials were stunned by the allegations.

Lloyd Ward, the head of the U.S. Olympic Committee, said the organization was "deeply concerned."

"American athletes and the competitors from all nations must be assured that they compete on a level playing field," he said.

Giselle Davies, a spokeswoman for the International Olympic Committee, said: "This kind of alleged activity has no place in the Olympic movement."

Pam Coburn, the head of Skate Canada, added, "The severity of these allegations is shocking."

Like the pairs competition, ice dancing was a point of controversy at the games.

Lithuanians Margarita Drobiazko and Povilas Vanagas, who finished fifth, filed a protest questioning the voting that placed the couple lower than the Italian and Canadian couples who fell during the free dance, the final phase of the competition. The skating federation rejected the protest, saying it believed the judging was fair.

The Lithuanians said they didn't expect to win their appeal but came forward to generate publicity and expose judging inconsistencies.

who's in charge of contract negotiations with the former Michigan State running back. "We're at an impasse. I can't even speculate on when we'll have additional discussions."

Duckett was the 18th overall selection in the NFL draft. Joel Segal, his agent, did not immediately return telephone messages left at his home and office.

The sides still are far apart on the amount of guaranteed money Duckett would receive.

Duckett is recovering from minor injuries received in a fight about a week ago after a Nelly concert in Ionia, Mich.

Gruden ponders use of Sapp on offense

Tampa Bay coach John Gruden is so impressed with the athleticism of defensive tackle Warren Sapp that he plans to use the All-Pro on offense in some situations this season.

The coach declined to discuss specifics, but Sapp said there's a chance he could be used at several positions on offense. As a rookie in 1995, he lined up as a blocking back for Errict Rhett five times, and Tampa Bay scored three touchdowns.

"It was just something he kind of asked me, and I was like: 'No problem,'" Sapp said. "It was fun after I looked at a couple of those routes and blocking assignments."

Redskins depart for game in Osaka, Japan

The Redskins departed for this weekend's American Bowl game in Osaka, Japan, against San Francisco with a laundry list of suggestions from the training staff for the flight.

They have been told to drink to avoid dehydration, walk down the aisles a lot, remove contact lenses, and don't be afraid to put on a pair of compression hose to keep the blood flowing in the legs.

Trainer Dean Kleinschmidt said one NFL player came back from a game in Japan two years ago with leg problems because he sat still the whole flight — and he missed most of the season.

"I want them up and walking around," Kleinschmidt said.

But offensive tackle Chris Samuels, who traveled to Osaka earlier this year to promote the game, thinks the trainer's warnings are a bit too cautious.

"He's saying that, but I don't think I'm going to be able to do that because I'm going to be asleep most of the time," Samuels said.

Miller excited to join the Clip Show

By John Nadel
 Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The Los Angeles Clippers and the rest of the NBA saw what point guard Jason Kidd did for the New Jersey Nets last season.

The Clippers believe Andre Miller will have the same kind of effect on their team next season.

That was the thinking when they acquired Miller and Bryant Stith from the Cleveland Cavaliers on Tuesday for Darius Miles and Harold Jamison.

"Andre is a player we desperately wanted to get," Elgin Baylor, the Clippers' vice president of basketball operations, said at a Staples Center news conference called to introduce the 26-year-old Miller, who grew up in nearby Watts. "We knew we had to give up something to get a player of Andre's quality."

"We didn't want to give up Darius, but we've gotten one of the top point guards in the league. This is a proven player. Darius was a reserve. We gave up a reserve for a player of this stature. I just feel this is a tremendous deal for us."

That's how it turned out for the Nets last year, when they acquired Kidd from Phoenix for Stephon Marbury.

The Clippers are loaded up front, with the likes of veterans Elton Brand, Michael Olowokandi, Lamar Odom, and Corey Maggette and rookie first-round draft picks Chris Wilcox and Melvin Ely.

Now, they believe they've

SPORTS BRIEFS

Leslie's dunk raises WNBA expectations

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Lisa Leslie raised her friends' expectations after becoming the first woman to dunk in a professional game.

"They're saying now I've got to reverse it, and the tomahawk is next," Leslie said after Wednesday's practice at Staples Center.

Leslie received a pass from Latasha Byars, took two dribbles, and dunked with 4:44 left in the half of the Los Angeles Sparks' 82-73 loss to the Miami Sol in a WNBA game Tuesday night at Staples Center.

The 6-5 Leslie said she received many congratulatory telephone calls and pages from friends, and she also has a new nickname — Dunkin' — given by her younger sister, Tiffany Sanoguet.

"The hardcore fan will say, 'We don't like women's basketball because they can't dunk,'" Sparks coach Michael Cooper said. "She's proved that wrong, so now they have to re-evaluate the game. It's going to make people come out to the arenas to see, because you never know who can do it and when it's going to happen."

Defending champion Hewitt heads men's field at U.S. Open

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. — Lleyton Hewitt and Marat Safin, winners of the last two U.S. Opens, head the men's field for the season's final Grand Slam tournament.

Hewitt of Australia and Safin of Russia both won their Open finals against Pete Sampras, who has not won a tournament since Wimbledon in 2000, when he captured his record 13th Grand Slam title.

Sampras, a four-time winner at the Open, is ranked No. 16, behind fellow Americans Andre Agassi (No. 6), who won the Open in 1994 and 1999, and Andy Roddick (No. 12).

The U.S. Open will be held Aug. 26-Sept. 8 at the National Tennis Center in Flushing, N.Y.

Two players won't face charges in drinking arrests

NORMAN, Okla. — Two of three Oklahoma reserve football players arrested on alcohol-related complaints last week will not face charges, authorities said.

Brent Rawls, 20, and Dusty Dvoracek, 19, who were arrested on public-intoxication complaints, will not be charged, said Norman City Attorney Jeff Raley.

"We did a review of the situation, and it was determined there was insufficient evidence to file charges," he said.

Jacob Hager, 20, has been charged with a misdemeanor of driving under the influence of alcohol, said Cleveland County District Attorney Tim Kuykendall.

Officers saw the group get into a pickup truck and believed they were intoxicated. Another officer stopped the truck for going 30 mph in a 25 mph zone.

Oklahoma coach Bob Stoops said he would deal with the arrests internally.

"We now know more about the situation," he said. "We'll handle it internally in a way we feel is most appropriate."

Dodger bats wake up to top Reds

CINCINNATI (AP) — Adrian Beltre led the Los Angeles Dodgers out of their homer slump.

Beltre homered twice, and Paul Lo Duca and Shawn Green hit solo shots Wednesday night as the Dodgers pulled away to a victory over the Reds.

The four-homer outburst was out of character for the Dodgers, who hadn't hit one since July 23. Their 97 homers are third-fewest in the NL.

Lo Duca and Beltre each had three hits and drove in three runs in a 15-hit attack that hinted the Dodgers might be emerging from their three-week funk.

"If we just put it all together and do the little things like we did today, we're going to be fine," Beltre said.

Twins 2, ChiSox 1

MINNEAPOLIS — David Ortiz hit an RBI single in the bottom of the 10th inning to give Minnesota the victory.

Ortiz's hit came after Antonio Osuna (5-2) intentionally walked Corey Koskie to load the bases with one out.

Rangers 17, Yankees 6

ARLINGTON, Texas — Alex Rodriguez hit a two-run homer, his major league-best 36th, and rookie Kevin Mench had four hits as the Texas set season highs for hits and runs in support of Rob Bell (4-3).

Every Rangers starter but Carl Everett had at least a hit and an RBI as Texas banged out 21 hits.

Padres 8, Cubs 6

CHICAGO — Mark Kotsay and Phil Nevin hit 11th-inning home runs off Kyle Farnsworth (3-3) — Nevin's second of the game — to lead the Padres over the Cubs.

Trading deadline ends with whimper

By Ben Walker
 Associated Press

Pitchers Bobby Howry, Steve Reed, and John Thomson moved Wednesday as playoff contenders tinkered with their rosters before the non-waiver trading deadline.

There were a half-dozen trades — outfielders Jay Payton, Todd Hollandsworth, and Alex Ochoa were involved — but none of them were blockbuster.

"It doesn't seem like many deals were done today," Tigers President Dave Dombrowski said. "I think it's because a lot of deals, with some big names, have already been made. Clubs didn't wait for the deadline to make moves."

The big deals, and there were plenty, came before the 3 p.m. CDT cutoff. Cliff Floyd was traded twice, eventually ending up with Boston on Tuesday night, and Scott Rolen, Raul Mondesi, Jeff Weaver, Steve Finley, Kenny Lofton, Ray Durham, and Ryan Dempster also moved in July.

All those trades came despite the possibility of a players' strike before the season ends. In 1994, there was only one deal on deadline day — Milt Thompson went from Philadelphia to Houston — and just a handful in July as a strike approached.

Teams can still make trades this season, but now players have to clear waivers before they can be shipped.

A day after getting Floyd from Montreal, the Red Sox bolstered their bullpen by getting Howry from the Chicago White Sox for a pair of minor league pitchers.

The right-handed Howry is 2-2 with a 3.91 ERA.

"I'm going to a contending team," he said. "That's why you

NFL TRAINING CAMP ROUNDUP

Bears' Brown breaks bone in hand

BOURBONNAIS, Ill. — (AP) Safety Mike Brown could miss the first two exhibition games with a broken bone in his right hand.

Brown, who was hurt Tuesday, is expected to return to the practice field next week, but he probably won't play until at least the third preseason game.

"I think he will be fine," Bears coach Dick Jauron said Wednesday. "We'll see how it goes. It will have a lot to do with the callousing over the break and all those things. Nobody will know how that goes."

Larry Whigham is expected to move into Brown's spot.

"We'll just rotate guys in and out and go about our business," Jauron said.

Chiefs' Tait with stitches after scrimmage fight

Offensive tackle John Tait will miss two weeks of the Kansas City Chiefs' training camp after a fight with a rookie teammate left him with cuts that needed 17 stitches to close.

Tait, the starting right tackle, also broke his nose in the fight Tuesday with defensive lineman Eddie Freeman.

"He had my helmet and hit me with it. It wasn't his fist," Tait said Wednesday. "It's common knowledge he had my helmet in his hand, and he swung it back and hit me with it."

Freeman, a second-round draft pick from Alabama-Birmingham, has been involved in several fights since the Chiefs opened practice July 26. He was subdued Wednesday.

"I'm the young new guy on the block. It was just in the heat of battle," said the 310-pound Freeman. "I'm going to talk to him today."

Coach Dick Vermeil said he had not talked with Freeman, whom he called "a hothead." He said neither Tait nor the rookie would be disciplined.

"But I talked with the team about it," Vermeil said. "Fights happen in football. You never know who threw the first punch."

Falcons: Talks with Duckett broken down

Talks with first-round pick T.J. Duckett have broken down.

"There's nothing to report," said Falcons Vice President Ray Anderson,

Suspect nabbed in skating fix

By Tom Hays

NEW YORK — A reputed Russian crime boss was arrested Wednesday on charges he fixed two figure-skating events at the Salt Lake City Games by arranging a vote-swapping deal, yet another bizarre twist in a scandal that has tainted the sport.

Alimzan Tokhtakhounov, picked up in Italy on U.S. charges, is accused of scheming to get a French judge to vote for the Russian pairs team, which won the gold medal. In exchange, he arranged for the Russian judge to vote for the winning French ice-dancing team, according to a criminal complaint filed in Manhattan federal court.

The judging controversy, the biggest in Olympic history, resulted in a duplicate set of gold medals being awarded to the Canadian pairs team.

Wiretaps used in a mob investigation captured a series of telephone calls between Tokhtakhounov in Italy and unnamed conspirators during the games that "lay out a pattern of conduct that connects those two events," U.S. Attorney James Comey told a news conference.

The suspect "arranged a classic quid pro quo: 'You'll line up support for the Russian pair, we'll line up support for the French pair, and everybody will go away with the gold, and perhaps there'll be a little gold for me,'" Comey said.

Prosecutors said that Tokhtakhounov hoped he would be rewarded with a visa to return to France, where he once lived.

Elena Berezhnaya and Anton Sikharulidze won the gold medal by the slimmest of margins in pairs figure skating, defeating Canadians Jamie Sale and David Pelletier. But French judge Marie-Reine Le Gougne said the next day she'd been pressured to vote for the Russians, who slipped during their routine while the Canadians were virtually flawless.

Witnesses at an International Skating Union hearing during the games testified that Le Gougne said she was pressured as part of a vote-swapping plot involving French and Russians in pairs and ice dancing.

Le Gougne later recanted but was still suspended, as was the head of the French skating fed-
