Scraping deer off the road isn't a glamorous job. Dean Schreiber can attest to that. "If they're splattered all over the place, we'll scoop them up," said Schreiber, a local equipment operator for the Iowa Department of Transportation. "Sometimes, all that's left is a hide." Johnson County drivers should be extra cautious October through December, when deer-related accidents are most likely to occur, said Travis Nitcher, a highway maintenance supervisor for the DOT's Oakdale Garage in Coralville. Deer are both more mobile and less cautious in November and December, the peak of rutting season, according to the Iowa Department of Natural Resources. From 1996-00, the month of November alone accounted for 8,129 animal-related accidents, slightly below the combined total of January through April during that time period. Nitcher is head of the state's local highway-maintenance division, where 26 full-time

1st candidate to visit UI a legal scholar, author

BY JOE NUGENT
THE DAILY IOWAN

Gregory H. Williams, a well-respected legal scholar and champion of diversity whose bestselling autobiography has won him national praise, will visit campus today after being named the first of six finalists for the UI president's job.

Williams, the president of the City College of New York, served in various roles during a UI career that lasted from 1977 to 1993.

"I'm really honored to be a finalist," he said when reached by phone at the Iowa House. "I spent 16 years here, and it's a special place for my family and me."

Williams, who is married with four children, will interview for the position and meet with faculty, staff, students, and community leaders. He will also participate in a public question-and-answer session at 4 p.m. today at the IMU.

Colleagues describe Williams as a talented man who is particularly interested in maintaining diversity and affordability in education.

He can also raise money, now a key responsibility for any university president. While dean of Ohio State's law school from 1993 to 2001, he led a major campaign that raised $57 million for the school to fund 50

Emergency workers 'surprised' at death of medical exec dean

Hospital's care questioned in Dr. Nelson's death

BY GRANT SCHULTE
THE DAILY IOWAN

CEDAR RAPIDS — Two firefighters who helped administer aid to a prominent medical-school dean after his wife allegedly stabbed him said Wednesday they were surprised to learn he had died four hours later.

Richard Nelson, the late executive dean of the UI medical school, appeared medically stable as police officers, firefighters, and paramedics fought to save his life, the men testified on the third day of a widely publicized trial. Nelson was transported via ambulance to St. Luke's Hospital, where he died approximately three and one-half hours later.

Their testimony marked the first round of defense witnesses in the trial of 55-year-old Phyllis Nelson, who was charged Dec. 12, 2001, with first-degree murder hours after she allegedly stabbed her husband once in the heart with a black-handled paring knife.

After a half-hour hearing, the trial was postponed until Dec. 16 so that defense attorney William Kutmus could present a number of witnesses from across the country who have not yet arrived.

"The case has gone faster than we thought," said Judge Thomas Horan, who is hearing the bench trial; Phyllis Nelson waived her right to a jury trial.

Kutmus continued his strategy to look critically at the emergency response to the early morning stabbing, raising questions about whether Richard Nelson could have been saved.

"Surprise is a fair term," said Brian Giachino, an 11-year firefighter and emergency medical technician in Cedar Rapids, about learning of the death. "Personally, I would consider [Richard Nelson's condition] stable."

Richard Halleran, a five-year firefighter who testified that he arrived five to seven minutes after hearing the emergency call from dispatchers, said he remembered the accomplished physician talking briefly.

"I just remember Mr. Nelson stating that he was a doctor," Halleran said, adding that he, too, was surprised to hear Richard Nelson had died.

On Tuesday, Kutmus questioned a St. Luke's Hospital doctor about surgeons' response time in treating Richard Nelson and asked why emergency personnel denied him a chest tube when he requested it. The chest tube would not have saved him, the doctor testified.

Kutmus also decided to delay the normally standard practice of filing a motion for a directed verdict — asking Judge Thomas Horan to find Kutmus' client not guilty on the grounds that the prosecution had not proven its case — until he has presented his side as well. Because Horan is hearing the case in lieu of a jury, letting him consider all evidence before filing the motion simplifies the process, said Linn County Attorney Harold Denton.

If convicted of first-degree murder, Phyllis Nelson faces life in prison.

Denton rested his case against Phyllis Nelson on Tuesday after presenting nearly 20 witnesses and 42 pieces of evidence. Some of the evidence sat in brown paper bags and boxes Wednesday in a corner of Denton's courthouse office.

Before the trial reconvened Wednesday morning, Phyllis Nelson thanked and embraced audience members who had come to support her. And together, in a tight circle, they prayed.

To her surprise, Kelley Foreman is part of a growing trend.

With a pipette in one hand and test tube in the other, the UI graduate student conducts genetic research on yeast, placing her among the scores of women contributing to a significant increase in the number of Ph.D.s awarded to female students — a phenomenon narrowing the gap between them and their male counterparts nationwide.

"There was never a question of whether or not to go further in attaining higher education," Foreman said. "I've wanted to be a scientist most of my life."

According to a 1999 study in the Chronicle for Higher Education, women earned 17,493 — 43 percent — of the 40,670 doctoral degrees awarded in the United States — the highest number ever for women.

Although female graduate students have made gains, the majority of their degrees were awarded in the humanities; women earned 64.9 percent of the Ph.D.s in education and 54.5 percent of the degrees in social sciences in 2000.

At the same time, women accounted for slightly less than a quarter of the 6,077 doctorates awarded in the physical sciences and accounted for only 15.7 percent of the engineering Ph.D.s.

Thief snares Uptown Bill's mascot

BY CATHY FLORY
THE DAILY IOWAN

Uptown Bill's Small Mall is offering a year's worth of free coffee for the recovery of its mascot, a statue that employees and volunteers call Percy.

Percy was stolen from the front of the store a little more than a week ago — the latest in a string of recent thefts that have hit the 401 S. Gilbert St. establishment. The 5-foot, 30-pound statue of a busboy had been displayed outside Uptown Bill's for approximately three weeks.

"I was in disbelief to see Percy missing," said Tom Walz, the mall's program director. "It's like losing a close friend."

Uptown Bill's is a compilation of stores owned and operated by persons with disabilities. The mall opened Sept. 8, 2001, as an extension of Wild Bill's coffee shop in North Hall to create employment opportunities for the disabled.

"Percy was very personal," Walz said. "It meant a lot to persons with disabilities. It was heartbreaking to have it stolen."

The statue was discovered missing mid-evening as the facility was closing and employees were going to bring Percy inside.

Walz bought the statue at a grocery-store auction more than a year ago for $100 and kept it inside until around three weeks ago.

Percy was originally placed outside Uptown Bill's to give direction to the entrance and to bring in business by catching the eyes of passersby. The statue held signs displaying deals offered each day.

"I can't afford to replace Percy, but if I could find another one inexpensively, maybe I would," said Walz, guessing that a new statue like Percy would cost around $300 to $400.

Among other items nabbed in the recent thefts were three guitars and a large blackboard, which was mysteriously returned two days ago. Vandalism also has been a problem at Uptown Bill's.

"If who ever stole Percy only knew the people inside and what it meant to them, they probably wouldn't have stolen it," Walz said. "We are hoping that with the holiday, maybe someone will feel guilty and return it."

Couple charged; girls chained in closet

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BLOOMFIELD, Iowa — A rural couple was charged with child endangerment after officials said they chained their two daughters in a closet and sent the girls to school with shaved heads.

Clinton and Kathryn Muldoon of Bloomfield were arrested Dec. 5 at their home approximately 20 miles south of Ottumwa. Each was charged with six counts of child endangerment.

The Muldoons pleaded not guilty on Dec. 6 before a magistrate, and bond was set at $45,000. A preliminary hearing was set for Dec. 16.

Clinton Muldoon was being held Wednesday in the Davis County jail. His wife was in the Wapello County jail, the Davis County sheriff's office said.

Magistrate Rex Steinkruger ordered the couple to undergo psychiatric evaluation.

The girls, ages 13 and 9, were placed in foster care, authorities said.

According to court records, from January 2000 through September, the Muldoons deprived the girls of food, shelter, and health care. The documents said a doctor diagnosed serious health problems caused by malnutrition.

The girls were chained all night in a closet to a hanger rod and were not allowed to sleep "as a form of punishment," court records said.

In each case, chains "caused the child to have problems breathing and the child was left unattended," the documents said.

Both girls were underweight and undersize for their ages, according to court records.

According to Dr. Peter Hetherington, a pediatrician at Blank Children's Hospital in Des Moines, growth measurements in the court record indicate that the girls were smaller than their peers.

If the girls were of normal size two years earlier, "that basically would be a situation where she hadn't grown at all in two years. That would probably mean she was deprived of food for growth," Hetherington said.

The Muldoons also created a substantial risk to the girls' emotional state by shaving their heads and sending them to school, authorities said.

One of the child-endangerment charges is a felony that carries a sentence of up to 10 years in prison and a fine of up to $10,000. The remaining counts are aggravated misdemeanors, which are punishable by two-years in prison and fines up to $5,000.

The sheriff's office on Wednesday declined to comment on the case.

State unveils its preliminary smallpox plan

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES — A small number of Iowa health-care workers and medical professionals will be vaccinated against smallpox under a preliminary plan released Wednesday.

Dr. Patricia Quinlisk, the state epidemiologist, said vaccinations will be given voluntarily to the people with the lowest risk of side effects.

The plan is designed to inoculate medical professionals and health-care workers before any possible outbreak of the smallpox virus in Iowa.

"While we acknowledge there is a low risk of a release in Iowa, if it were to happen, it would be a serious public-health emergency," Quinlisk said.

Hospitals and clinics will have the next couple of weeks to decide if they want to be a smallpox treatment center and which volunteers will be considered for vaccinations, she said.

"We don't want a hospital being a smallpox hospital, but they don't have an isolation room," she said. "There are certain criteria they need to have."

Six regional teams of medical professionals will be vaccinated.

While a plan exists for the vaccination of the general public in the event of a smallpox outbreak in Iowa, Kevin Teale, a spokesman for the state Department of Public Health, said there is no recommendation from the federal government on the use of the vaccine pre-emptively.

The disease was declared eradicated in 1980, but experts now fear it could be intentionally released by terrorists or a hostile nation. Sick patients cannot be cured; approximately 30 percent of those infected will die.

A task force drew up the state's plan with guidance from the Centers for Disease Control and input from medical professionals statewide.

The plan, submitted to the CDC on Monday, was outlined during a statewide meeting Wednesday with health-care professionals on the Iowa Communications Network.

Quinlisk said the plan is preliminary because it should be consistent with the federal government's plan, which isn't complete.

CITY BRIEF

UI moves ahead on résumé verification

A procedure to verify information listed on potential UI employees' résumés is in the final stages of approval, UI Human Resources Director Susan Buckley told the Staff Council on Wednesday.

The proposed credential check, which has received endorsements from the Faculty Senate, Student Government, and Staff Council, is awaiting approval from the university's vice presidents and deans.

"We're very interested in strengthening our role as a steward on this campus," Buckley said. She headed a committee to work out a certification policy after The Daily Iowan revealed that university employee Pat Palmer had lied on her résumé, demonstrating that the university had slack verification standards.

The new policy, which will be applied only to people who are offered positions at the university, will use the National Student Clearinghouse database to verify degrees.

If an applicant's degree is not registered with the service, the hiring department will call the institution that granted the degree or request to see the original diploma.

Former university employee Dr. Joseph Piven, who hired Palmer in 1991, failed to do a simple background check that would have revealed Palmer had lied about obtaining a doctorate degree, two master's degrees, a bachelor's degree, and the date of her high-school graduation.

Palmer worked on a federally funded psychology grant and then allegedly embezzled more than $53,000 over 10 years before resigning from the UI in 2001.

9/11 panel points to Saudis' terrorist links

BY DANA PRIEST AND
SUSAN SCHMIDT
WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — Leaders of the congressional panel ending an investigation of the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks on Wednesday accused the administration of refusing to declassify information about possible Saudi Arabian financial links to U.S.-based terrorists because the material would be embarrassing and would heighten political tensions with the desert kingdom.

At a news conference where the panel's final report on the intelligence agencies' performance before the attacks was released, Sen. Bob Graham, D-Fla., the chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, and Sen. Richard Shelby, R-Ala., the vice chairman, said the information on Saudi Arabia should be made public to inform the American public about a continued source of support for anti-American terror groups. Doing so also would put more pressure on the U.S. government to force the Saudis to sever their financial links to charities and individuals who support terrorism, they said.

Citing "their people and a lot of their leaders and probably even the royal family," Shelby said: "I believe [the Saudis] cannot support so-called charities that support terrorism on a big scale and then pretend that they're our friends or our allies."

"As we get into the money trail, it might be embarrassing, but the American people need to know, the victims and their families need to know," he added. Shelby and Graham said avoiding embarrassment and maintaining good relations with Saudi Arabia are not legitimate reasons to withhold information from the public.

"The question is," Graham said after the news conference, "will we get [the information declassified] in 30 years, when the archives are open, or will we get it in time, before the next attack?"

U.S. officials have been trying to cut off funds for terrorist groups, some of which, they say, flow from wealthy Saudi financiers through a network of Muslim charities. Senior administration officials, including President Bush, have publicly praised Saudi cooperation, although a number of authorities have privately criticized the Saudi effort as less than energetic. Last month, an interagency group working on the financing issue decided to recommend that the White House put more pressure on Riyadh, although the recommendation has not yet reached Bush's desk.

A CIA spokesman said the information Shelby and Graham cited is classified either because it involves an ongoing investigation or sources and methods that, if revealed, would harm future intelligence-gathering.

A spokesman for the Saudi Embassy said he did not know what information Graham and Shelby were referring to; he said Saudi officials have been aiding U.S. efforts to track terrorist financing. "We are going to cooperate fully with investigative authorities in this country," he said.

U.S. reverses tack, releases Scud ship

BY GLENN KESSLER AND
THOMAS E. RICKS
WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — The United States on Wednesday agreed to release a ship containing North Korean missiles bound for Yemen after strong protests by the Yemeni government suggested that Monday's seizure of the vessel by Spanish and U.S. forces would affect Yemen's cooperation in the war on terrorism.

The unflagged ship, carrying 15 Scud missiles along with conventional warheads and rocket propellant, had been tracked for weeks by the United States before it was intercepted in the Arabian Sea 600 miles southeast of Yemen. The delivery appeared to violate a commitment made by Yemen in July of last year, before the Sept. 11 attacks, not to purchase any more North Korean missile equipment in exchange for avoiding sanctions for previously suspected deals with North Korea.

But in a flurry of phone calls between Yemeni officials and Secretary of State Colin Powell and Vice President Dick Cheney, Yemen successfully argued that the ship was carrying equipment that predated that commitment. The vehement Yemeni response — which included summoning the U.S. ambassador to the foreign ministry in Sana'a, Yemen's capital — surprised U.S. officials, who had assumed Yemen could plausibly deny any knowledge of the shipment, insist it was living up to its previous agreement, and would not demand delivery of the missiles.

The sudden reversal by the administration, one day after it hailed the seizure as a successful example of halting the spread of dangerous weapons, underscored the tension between the twin U.S. goals of stemming weapons proliferation and existing allies in the fight against terrorism. It also illustrates the difficulty of executing a global policy of pre-emption against the spread of weapons of mass destruction, which the administration codified in a new national-security strategy that was released by the White House on Tuesday, the day the seizure was made public.

Since Sept. 11, 2001, Yemen, along with Afghanistan and Pakistan, has become a central partner in the war on terrorism, giving unprecedented access and intelligence to U.S. Special Forces tracking hundreds of Al Qaeda members in the tribal areas of Yemen along the border of Saudi Arabia. By deciding to meet Yemen's demands to allow the missile shipment to go through, the administration clearly signaled that the broader goal of containing an Al Qaeda foothold on the southern tip of the Arabian peninsula was of higher priority than deterring what it views as North Korea's efforts to sell weapons.

Similarly, the United States has soft-pedaled evidence of Pakistani involvement — as recently as July — in North Korea's secret nuclear-weapons program in exchange for missile parts, even as the United States has demanded that North Korea end its program.

GOP debate rages over Bush economic moves

BY MARTIN CRUTSINGER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush, who shook up his economic team in an effort to get better salesmen for new tax cuts, drew fire Wednesday from conservative Republicans upset that the new team may not have sufficient tax-cutting fervor.

The debate echoes a battle that has raged in the Republican Party since Ronald Reagan's days and highlights the political minefield Bush will have to navigate in selling Congress on his new stimulus proposals, which are expected to include as much as $300 billion in new tax cuts.

It is a battle between GOP supply-siders, who believe that tax cuts can actually spur government revenues by increasing incentives to work, and fiscal conservatives, who take the more traditional economic view that cutting taxes without matching cuts in government spending can lead to exploding budget deficits.

"Clearly, there is a struggle for the soul of the Republican Party," said Stephen Moore, a supply-side economist and the president of the Club for Growth.

The conservatives had expressed some concerns about past statements of Treasury Secretary nominee John Snow, who chaired an anti-deficit commission of business leaders in the mid-1990s. But they were mollified by Snow's endorsement of further tax cuts when Bush on Monday announced his selection to replace Paul O'Neill.

But the supply-side camp is still unhappy with Stephen Friedman, Bush's choice to replace Lawrence Lindsey as the head of the president's National Economic Council, and they are conducting a furious lobbying campaign to get the decision reversed.

So far, the administration says the president is sticking by Friedman. White House officials blame the delay in making the formal announcement on the time it is taking White House lawyers to review the extensive financial holdings of Friedman, who is the former co-chairman of investment banking giant Goldman Sachs.

But Friedman's opponents are hoping the delay means Bush is having second thoughts. In the eyes of the supply-siders, Friedman's views are entirely too close to those of his fellow co-chairman at Goldman Sachs, Robert Rubin.

As Bill Clinton's Treasury secretary, Rubin was a leading advocate for attacking the huge deficits of past Republican administrations with a combination of tax hikes and spending cuts, lowering the government's borrowing needs and freeing up capital for business investment.

The supply-siders point to Friedman's membership in the anti-deficit Concord Coalition as proof of where his inclinations lie.

"The Concord Coalition represents the Chicken Little deficit-reduction myopia that was once the rage in the Republican Party before someone by the name of Ronald Reagan came along and thankfully converted the GOP into a tax-cutting party," Moore wrote Wednesday on the Web site of the conservative National Review magazine.

Ex-UI official 1st candidate

WILLIAMS

in the university setting," said N. Williams Hines, the dean of the UI College of Law.

Williams' 1995 autobiography, Life on the Color Line: The True Story of a White Boy Who Found Out He Was Black won prominent awards and critical acclaim. The book outlines Williams' childhood as the son of a white mother and a black father, whom he and his brother believed was of Italian descent. When his parents separated, "Tony" Williams moved his two sons from Virginia to Muncie, Ind.

Gregory Williams and his brother discovered they were black as well, not white as they previously believed, and they were forced to face prejudice across both ethnic and cultural lines. Throughout his childhood, Williams endured abuse and poverty, yet managed to rise up against the odds to attend college and pursue a legal career.

His professional career began with a brief stint as a deputy sheriff. He earned his bachelor's degree in social sciences and Spanish in 1966 from Ball State, where he played on the basketball team. He was a public-school teacher in Virginia for four years, worked as a Senate aide, and later worked for George Washington University. He earned his law degree, his master's of philosophy, and a doctorate in political science there.

Williams is credited with helping increase minority enrollment in entering UI law classes from 2 percent to 20 percent during his time as the law school's admissions director from 1977 to 1983.

At City College, Williams has helped boost total enrollment by 15 percent and freshman enrollment by 40 percent, said Mary Lou Edmondson, the school's assistant vice president for communications.

He has also played an important part in a sometimes heated dispute over the school's open admission policy, Edmondson said. The policy guarantees admission for students who graduate from a New York City high school, but some politicians and administrators have objected to the amount of time and money that must be spent on students who lack certain skills, she said.

"President Williams has bridged the passions on both sides of the issue," Edmondson said. "He's committed to the idea of access regardless of the ability to pay, but he's also committed to high academic standards."

Williams has helped increase enrollment and maintain academic standards while retaining the school's diversity, she said, citing U.S. News & World Report's ranking of City College as the second-most diverse campus in the United States.

Jamal Manassah, City College's past Faculty Senate president, credited Williams with good public-relations work since he became president. Many politicians unfairly attacked the school's admission policy because they thought it lowered academic standards, he said, but Williams has been able to explain the issue better than his predecessors.

Williams' selection as a finalist came as somewhat of a surprise, given that many people had predicted that the UI's open search would not attract any sitting presidents.

Committee Chairman Jonathan Carlson said he hoped interviewing for the UI position wouldn't jeopardize Williams' standing at City College.

"I hope they will understand the affection he has for Iowa and the dedication he feels for City College at the same time," Carlson said.

He said Williams was persuaded to come to Iowa City for an interview after being recommended to the committee.

"We appealed to his history with us," Carlson said. "He has fond memories of Iowa, I'm glad he didn't say 'no.'"

Hines, who first hired Williams at the UI in 1977, described him as a multifaceted person who is not a typical administrator.

"Many people may not know he played basketball at Ball State and played on a faculty intramural team here at Iowa," Hines said. "He's got the sharpest elbows of anybody I've ever played against."

Probe of inspector Rehnquist expands

WASHINGTON (Post) — The General Accounting Office has expanded its investigation of Health and Human Services Inspector General Janet Rehnquist, the daughter of Chief Justice William Rehnquist, beyond its initial focus on widespread personnel changes in her office.

According to congressional investigators, the GAO is now also looking into allegations involving the delay in an audit of a Florida pension fund that could have benefitted Republican Gov. Jeb Bush, the unauthorized possession of a gun by Rehnquist, and the shredding of documents after the GAO inquiry began.

Ben St. John, a spokesman for Rehnquist, confirmed that these additional elements have become part of the GAO inquiry, which he said HHS officials do not consider an investigation but a "management review." The GAO is the investigative arm of Congress.

Rehnquist, a former assistant U.S. attorney in Alexandria, Va., who worked in the White House under then-President George Bush, supervises a staff of about 1,600, the largest Office of Inspector General at any federal agency.

Cleaning up roadkill falls to DOT workers

ROADKILL

DOT employees rotate the task of removing the animals from state roads. Aside from removing roadkill, DOT equipment operators are responsible for clearing debris and repairing road signs.

In 2001, 526 deer were taken to the Iowa City landfill by Oakdale Garage employees, where the DOT is charged $3 for any animal under 140 pounds and 50 cents for each 20-pound increment above that.

As of the first week of December, 400 had been brought in, said Nitcher, who estimated that during the later months, some 15 to 20 deer are collected daily.

"The deer are all over the county," Schreiber said. "It takes up a lot of hours every day."

Though employees mostly come across deer, the department also picks up cows, raccoons, and other animals, he said. Three months ago, Schreiber picked up a 600-pound hog with equipment normally used to plant road signs.

Schreiber has removed roadkill from the highways ever since the duty was transferred to the DOT from the DNR 20 years ago.

The Oakdale Garage's trucks are equipped with a hydraulic gate that lifts the deer into the pickup's bed. Wearing rubber gloves, employees drag the animal by its hooves to the back of the truck, where the gate picks it up.

Nitcher said that when an accident involving a deer is reported, law-enforcement agencies send his office a fax reporting the animal's whereabouts. He then assigns an equipment operator to pick it up. Unless it's in the middle of the road, he said, workers usually wait until the next business day to remove the deer.

Equipment operator Jim Prybil said he often finds a demolished car next to the deer. According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, the average cost of vehicle damage from an animal-related accident is $2,000.

The Iowa Highway Safety Management System encourages drivers to "not veer for deer." Hitting a deer generally carries less risk than veering or leaving the roadway to avoid a collision.

Aside from the dangers that deer pose to drivers, the actual removal of the animal from state highways is risky for the DOT employees.

"The biggest hazard is the traffic," Nitcher said. "It can be real difficult to maneuver the deer—that's the biggest concern."

The deer population has gone up 260 percent in Iowa over the last 20 years, while deer-related accidents have risen 160 percent, said Steve Gent, the DOT director of the Office for Traffic and Safety. In 1999, an estimated 11,366 deer-vehicle crashes occurred in Iowa. Johnson County saw approximately 230 deer-related auto accidents in 2000, including 83 injuries and 1 fatality.

Nitcher said the abundance of new development in rural areas is giving deer a smaller area to live, which is partly the reason why more and more are seen along state highways.

"Drivers need to be real aware," he said. "Watch the side of the road and pay attention to ditches."

Nation seeing more women Ph.D.s

"A lot of undergraduates, especially women, don't know what [graduate] opportunities are available to them or what graduate school is all about," Foreman said. "I think institutions should encourage women to follow their career aspirations."

UI women are attaining doctorates degrees at a rate commensurate with the national statistics. During the 2000-01 academic year, they earned 160 of the 325 Ph.D.s — 49 percent — that were awarded, the highest number in the past five years.

"It's associated with a societal trend. Women tend to feel more empowered in the workforce, advancing their own careers," said John Keller, the dean of the UI Graduate College. "There are a number of women faculty at the UI who are role models. We like to think we're making strides, but it takes time."

Increasing the number of women who pursue degrees in the sciences is an ongoing struggle for the university, he said. The arts and humanities offer a certain level of comfort to women, he said.

"The sciences tend to be highly competitive and 'cut-throat' kinds of professions, and women don't want that perspective," Keller said. "It's an extremely labor-intensive approach to life."

The humanities comprise disciplines that are in line with a woman's desire to raise a family and provide better balance for them, he said.

But in the biology department, Foreman said, the majority of her peers are women.

"It's a positive trend that bodes well for my career," she said.

NATION BRIEF

U.S.: Extremists got VX from Iraq

WASHINGTON (Post) — The Bush administration has received a credible report that Islamic extremists affiliated with Al Qaeda took possession of a chemical weapon in Iraq last month or late in October, said two officials with firsthand knowledge of the report and its source. They said government analysts suspect that the transaction involved the nerve agent VX and that a courier managed to smuggle it overland through Turkey.

If the report proves true, the transaction marks two significant milestones. It would be the first known acquisition of an unconventional weapon other than cyanide by Al Qaeda or a member of its network. It also would be the most concrete evidence to support the charge, aired for months by President Bush and his advisers, that Al Qaeda terrorists receive material assistance in Iraq. If advanced publicly by the White House, the report could be used to rebut Iraq's assertion in a 12,000-page declaration Dec. 7 that it had destroyed its entire stock of chemical weapons.

'ER' hospital turns out the lights

BY ERIC FIDLER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Cook County Hospital, the sprawling institution that inspired TV's "ER" and provided first-class care under Third World conditions for much of the last century, is shutting its doors.

At 7 a.m. today, patients started moving from the old building into a sleek new one nearby. While the distance between the two can be measured in yards, the difference is immeasurable.

"I've been waiting for this since the day I arrived," said Dr. John Barrett, the director of trauma services, waving at his pristine new trauma unit. "This is as good as it gets."

Dr. David Soglin pointed at an elevator in the new building and said: "You can actually push a button and go where you want, which is an incredible experience for us at County."

The public hospital has provided care to all, regardless of their ability to pay, since 1914. The centerpiece was a trauma unit — the nation's first — with a training program that attracted doctors from around the world.

Ask Chicago cops where they'd want to be taken if shot, and the answer will invariably be "County." In fact, 98 percent of patients who arrive alive at the trauma center survive.

"ER" was set at County General by its Chicago-born creator, Michael Crichton, who was a student at Harvard Medical School. The show debuted in September 1994 opposite another hour-long medical drama, "Chicago Hope," set in a ritzy hospital.

Although County's trauma center helped to inspire "ER," the show is not shot at the hospital, and it takes frequent liberties with Chicago's geography. Television doctors often step outside for a break and are shown on the city's lakefront, miles away from the real hospital, which is on the West Side.

Still, the show's producers interviewed the staff about the trauma center, Barrett said. "They get the medicine part right. I actually still watch it."

While many doctors and staff members admit to a sense of nostalgia for the old building, it's the kind of nostalgia World War I veterans might muster for trench warfare.

With its intermittently operating elevators, funky smells, shortage of bathrooms, lack of sunlight, vast distances between wards, and other nuisances, the building was declared too decrepit for modern surgery by the American College of Surgeons in the 1930s.

Yet its doctors pioneered the trauma center and the blood bank and made internationally recognized advances in prenatal care.

"I think we'll all miss that building at some ridiculous emotional level," said Soglin, the chairman of pediatrics. "There is a perverse pride in working under these conditions."

Not that he'd rather stay. "The moment we move in, the quality of care is going to improve," he said last week while walking through one of the sunlit hallways in the new pediatrics ward.

The John Stroger Jr. Hospital of Cook County, as the new building is called, is a half-billion dollar investment in public-health care at a time when cities around the country are closing public hospitals or cutting back services. It, too, will offer care to all county residents, regardless of their ability to pay.

Doctors say the new hospital will improve their efficiency, morale, and ability to take care of patients. More important, they say, is the effect the surroundings will have on patients.

In the old hospital, patients slept in open wards with little privacy, and no telephones and televisions. They walked to shared bathrooms. Nurses were as far as a block away, and there was no quick way to page one. Women gave birth in an open ward, separated from others in labor only by curtains.

In the new hospital, all rooms are private or semiprivate, with bathrooms, televisions, and telephones. There are private labor-delivery-recovery rooms with reclining chairs for visitors.

"Something as basic as this chair is saying, 'Family, come and share this,'" said Dr. Elwyn Grimes, the chairman of obstetrics and gynecology.

Grimes and Soglin are happy that pediatrics and obstetrics now share a floor, along with the neonatal and pediatrics intensive-care units.

Cross burning isn't speech, normally silent Thomas says

BY DAVID G. SAVAGE
LOS ANGELES TIME

WASHINGTON — Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas, who sits silently during most arguments, spoke up Wednesday to condemn cross burning as the "symbol of a reign of terror" that does not deserve the First Amendment's protection for free expression.

For nearly 100 years, the Ku Klux Klan used cross burning and lynchings to terrorize blacks and Jews throughout the South, he said.

A burning cross is "unlike any symbol in our society. There was no communication of a particular message. It was intended to cause fear and to terrorize the population," said Thomas, the only black justice.

His comments came midway through the oral argument in a Virginia cross-burning case and seemed to turn the tide against the free-speech claim.

Ten years ago, the Supreme Court unanimously struck down an anticross-burning ordinance in St. Paul, Minn., and ruled that this form of symbolic expression, just like flag burning, is protected by the First Amendment.

But prosecutors in Virginia and California continue to enforce anticross-burning laws, saying they are punishing threats and intimidation, not speech. Similar laws also forbid the display of a Nazi swastika; those measures also depend on the outcome in the Virginia case.

"Cross burning is a tool of intimidation. The message is a threat of bodily harm," Virginia State Solicitor William Hurd told the justices.

He was defending two prosecutions in 1998, one involving a Klan rally and the other involving a small cross burned outside the home of a black family in Virginia Beach, Va.

Klansman Barry Black led a cross-burning rally in a farm field. The 30-foot cross, blazing near a state highway, could be seen by passing motorists.

Black was arrested and fined $2,500. In the Virginia Beach case, two men also were fining $2,500 and given 90 days in jail.

But when they appealed, the state Supreme Court overturned the convictions and struck down the cross-burning law last year. "Under our system of government, people have a right to use symbols to communicate," even if their message is one of contempt for America or an "expression of bigotry," the state judges said.

Professor Rodney Smolla, a First Amendment expert at the University of Richmond law school, defended the state court ruling and urged the justices to uphold the principle that even obnoxious and loathsome expressions are protected by the First Amendment.

It is "at the core of our First Amendment tradition" that the government cannot "single out a symbol" for criminal punishment just because of the message it conveys," he said.

Why isn't "brandishing a cross like brandishing a gun?" asked Justice Antonin Scalia. It is illegal to brandish a gun.

Because the gun itself is dangerous, Smolla replied. The cross is not a danger in itself. It's the message that is seen as dangerous, he said.

"If we were here in 1820, I might agree with you," commented Justice David Souter. But the history of cross burning in America has given this act a particular power, he said, referring to Thomas' comments.

"Why can't the state regulate this as a particularly virulent form of intimidation?" added Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.

Cross burning originated in the Scottish Highlands as a means of sending signals from one clan to another. Although the Ku Klux Klan formed after the Civil War, the first reported cross burning in America took place at Stone Mountain, Ga., in 1915. It could be seen as far away as Atlanta, and the act was attributed to the mob that had recently taken Jewish merchant Leo Frank from his jail cell and lynched him.

Cross burning soon became a central feature of Klan rallies.

Bush administration lawyers, siding with Virginia, urged the court to rule that cross burning is conduct "intended to threaten or intimidate, not a regulation of speech."

Letter to the Editor

Avoid the nightmares

I am a recent graduate of the UI and am currently enrolled in the College of Education. As I retrieved my mail the other day, I noticed a letter asking me to join the Alumni Association. The group, for anyone unfamiliar with it, solicits money from graduates in the form of donations. When I consider the university's recent coddling of Pierre Pierce, this letter becomes infuriating.

As a future educator I will, by law, become a mandatory reporter. If I have a reasonable cause to believe that a child is being abused or neglected, it becomes my legally binding duty to report my suspicions. Yet, here is the university asking me to further support it despite its positive endorsement of an assailant. Not only will I not do this, I will encourage those I come into contact with to not make the same mistake I did by enrolling at this university.

As a teacher at the secondary level, I will be working on a daily basis with prospective college students. Unfortunately, I find that I can no longer, in good faith, suggest the UI. While I understand that violence occurs far more often than we would like it to, the fact that an admitted perpetrator of assault is not only allowed to return but is welcomed back with open arms to the university's warm embrace is something that is unacceptable and unforgivable.

In the future, I will have to suggest that students, parents, and educational faculty steer away from an institution that prizes and emphasizes athletic talent at the expense of its less important student's physical and mental well-being. I would also challenge others going into education, as well as anyone who cares about her or his family, friends, and loved ones, to do the same. Ask yourself whether you would be able to sleep at night if someone you influenced were assaulted only to be casually disregarded because the assailant was a better-than-average athlete. It would give me nightmares, and this is something I will not invite upon myself.

Johnson County officials must be more clear in plan to acquire land

Plans to create an administrative campus for Johnson County serve as another example of a seemingly good idea gone about in the wrong way.

The county is in the early stages of a plan to relocate several departments to the same area. Officials want to acquire land surrounding the administration building, 913 S. Dubuque St., which in the future could potentially serve as a location for a new jail and law-enforcement center, health and human-services center, and court-services building.

There are many merits to having such a centralized administrative area for the county. However, the methods used to move the plan forward thus far, as well as its fuzzy future, are questionable.

There are 12 landowners who could be forced to move because of the county's plan. Although county supervisors say they want to cooperate with the owners in acquiring the land, there has been little contact among the parties.

Meanwhile, the county's plans place an extra burden on the owners, making the land difficult to sell if they want to move before the county is ready to buy. Though in the end it may prove necessary for these people to be burdened for the benefit of the county, at least the supervisors should be open about plans and keep them informed of their options.

Johnson County's plans for expansion has thus far been unclear, and communication with current landowners has been minimal.

Perhaps the reason for this lack of communication is the great confusion there seems to be over the county's plans. Some have said the project will take five to 10 years, while others project it at 20 to 30 years.

Supervisor Patrick Harney has said the county is not actively pursuing the purchase of the properties, yet one building has already been acquired (the Fisher Building, 800 S. Dubuque St.), and there are negotiations to acquire a second (the National Guard Armory, located just south of the administration building).

Though most of the supervisors support beginning work on the project, they say they have not officially voted on a plan. One project leader, however, says they reached a formal agreement to try to acquire land for three new buildings last summer.

With this project projected to cost around $43 million, these discrepancies need to be cleared up before the county moves forward, and the supervisors need to be more open with those affected by the project, as well as with the public.

Increased speed limits lead to increased highway death rates

Should laws be changed simply because people break them?

Rep. Christopher Rants, R-Sioux City, plans to propose raising Iowa's speed limit to 70 or 75 mph during the upcoming legislative session.

The soon-to-be House speaker recently said, "Iowans obviously want a higher speed limit. It is only the Iowa Legislature and the governor who haven't figured that out yet."

If Rants wants to save himself from being laughed off the House floor, he needs to come up with a new argument for his idea. Students under 21 drink, so why aren't the legislators lowering the legal drinking age? People cheat on their taxes, so should punishments be lessened? If Rants sticks to his line of reasoning, it could be illogically applied to these situations or any others.

Laws are made in the best interest of the public, under the discretion of our elected leaders. Police are in place to punish and prevent people from breaking laws. Changing laws just because people break them is no solution.

A statewide study showed that 89 percent of Iowa's motorists defy the 65 mph speed limit on the state's freeways. Raising the speed limit will only encourage those people to drive faster, over a new speed limit. That opens the door for more highway deaths.

A law that is often broken does not necessarily mean it should be changed. Such is the case with Iowa's speed limit.

According to the Virginia-based Insurance Institute for Highway Safety, "People are looking at what the police-tolerance level is. The consequence of this extra mobility is more fatalities."

In neighboring states where limits have been raised, the tragedy has far outweighed the convenience of faster driving. When Nebraska raised its speed limit 10 mph in 1996, deaths escalated, with a record 50 people dying on rural interstate roads this year, a 58 percent increase compared with deaths before it raised the limit. Deaths also increased in Missouri, South Dakota, and Minnesota after limits were raised 5 to 10 mph.

Increasing speed limits sounds good, on the surface, to a public increasingly in a hurry. However, the increased death statistics in comparable states are a speeder's wake-up call. They should serve as a solid reason the Legislature should not waste its time on this issue during the upcoming legislative session.

Your only guide to finals

The end of the semester is approaching, and final exams are right around the corner. They are waiting there so they can beat you up and steal your lunch money. Ha, ha — I just thought I would start off my column with a little humor today. The truth is that your finals are not likely to inflict physical harm on you, at least not if you make sure that you are prepared for them.

I bring this up because I have received many e-mails this past week, and, while most of them were soliciting Internet porn or credit cards, one of them turned out to be a request from a loyal fan who wanted me to give some advice about finals. Now, I was intending to use my final column to write another one of my trademark hard-hitting exposés, but the e-mail convinced me that an advice column would be more helpful. And besides, who am I to disappoint my fan? That is why I, Geoff Roughton, self-proclaimed and self-certified finalologist, have decided to offer the following list of strategies to help you deal with finals week:

1. Study

Requirements: Books, paper, etc.
 This is one of the oldest and best-tested methods of preparing for finals. It's pretty straightforward: Just get out your textbooks, your notes, your colored pencils, your protractor, and everything else you need, spread out all your materials neatly on a table or desk, and then stare at them until it is time to take your test. (You may also want to add in sleep and bathroom breaks as needed.) If you find that this method doesn't work for you, it's probably because your stuff is not arranged correctly according to the principles of feng shui, which is the ancient Chinese art of staring at things. However, if you have a problem with your feng shui, it might be best if you just skipped ahead to the next option:

2. Panic

Requirements: Brown paper bag (optional).

Geoff Roughton

This is another classic method for dealing with finals. All you need to do for this one is work yourself into a frenzy about how you aren't ready for finals. Then you can pick up the phone and call your mom, or your grandma, or even just dial random numbers and ramble on about how callous your professors are and how hard your finals will be. You might want to fake hyperventilation every once in a while for dramatic effect, but if you are willing to go that far, your talents might be put to better use by employing

3. Ignore finals completely

Requirements: Severe detachment from reality.

This is takes a little more skill than options one and two. My recommendation for those of you who elect to try this method is that you concentrate and focus on a specific delusion. For example, you can pretend that finals are over and that you are already in Miami watching Iowa play in the Orange Bowl. If some nerd in one of your classes tries to talk to you about finals, you can just pretend that he is actually talking about football:

Nerd: The test is only going to cover what we learned after the second midterm, right?

You: Yeah, man, Iowa's secondary coverage looks real good.

Nerd: OK ... what about the stuff from discussion?

You: It's called a "huddle," dude.

Nerd: Thanks. The test is on Tuesday, right? What time do we have to be here?

You: Yeah, I could go for beer right now, too.

Nerd: Right ... uh, see you later ...

You: USC sucks! Go Hawks!

You get the idea. What you want to do is drive off anyone who tries to remind you that you still have tests to take or papers to write. However, you might want to avoid using this option around any licensed medical personnel who can have you committed. Or then again, it might be nice to take a long vacation.

Lott aided Bob Jones U.

BY JOHN SOLOMON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Senate Republican leader Trent Lott tried to help Bob Jones University keep its federal tax-exempt status despite the school's policy prohibiting interracial dating two decades before his recent comments stirred a racial controversy.

"Racial discrimination does not always violate public policy," Lott, then a congressman from Mississippi, wrote in a 1981 friend-of-the-court brief that unsuccessfully urged the U.S. Supreme Court to stop the Internal Revenue Service from stripping the university's tax exemption.

The old court filing surfaced on a day when Lott tried to quell criticism, fueled by Democrats, over remarks he made at a birthday party last week for 100-year-old Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C. Lott had suggested the country would have been better off if Thurmond, running for president on a pro-segregationist ticket in 1948, had won.

The Jackson Clarion-Ledger in Mississippi reported Wednesday that Lott made a very similar statement when he appeared with Thurmond at a rally in Jackson, Miss., on Nov. 2, 1980. After Thurmond spoke against federal pre-emption of state laws, Lott said, "You know, if we had elected this man 30 years ago, we wouldn't be in the mess we are today."

White House officials said President Bush found the remarks indefensible but said they expected Lott to weather the storm.

Making the rounds on television news shows, Lott said Wednesday his comments were a "mistake of the head and not of the heart" and added "the words were terrible, and I regret that."

Bob Jones University is a fundamentalist Christian school in Greenville, S.C., and its ban on interracial dating among students has long stirred controversy, from the judicial nominations of jurists who have been involved in the school's various legal fights to presidential candidates, including President Bush, who have been criticized for visiting the campus.

The Supreme Court ruled 8-1 to strip the school of its tax exemption around two years after Lott filed his brief.

"The government now advocates penalizing Bob Jones University for its uncontestedly genuine religious beliefs," Lott wrote in his brief. "... To hold that this religious institution is subject to tax because of its interracial-dating policies would clearly raise grave First Amendment questions."

Though the university was located in South Carolina and the case involved the ruling of an appeals court in Richmond, Va., Lott asked in 1981 that his views as a Mississippi congressman be heard as a "friend of the court" to protect Congress' interest and the interests of other religious institutions in his own state that might be affected.

In his filing, Lott compared the university's ban on interracial dating to other universities' affirmative-action policies that recruited blacks to make student populations more diverse.

"If racial discrimination in the interest of diversity does not violate public policy, then surely discrimination in the practices of religion is no violation," he argued.

The filing came to light as the controversy over his remarks on Thurmond's birthday continued Wednesday.

Democrats called for Lott's resignation as GOP Senate leader. "I simply do not believe the country can today afford to have someone who has made these statements again and again be the leader of the United States Senate," said Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., one of several potential 2004 presidential candidates to weigh in against Lott.

Sweet Sixteen. Elite Eight. Final Four. And now the Talented Twenty-Five. Will Kansas be at the center of this year's bracket? Read on for everything you ever wanted to know (but were afraid to ask) about college basketball.

1 WINTHROP

Okay, so they went 19-12 last year. And they are from the Big South Conference. But trust us, the Eagles can definitely hoop. Besides, these guys are made up of 4,500 polygons, just like any other team.

2 ARIZONA

What's the 411 on the 'Cats? Not only do they have all five of their starters returning, but they also have what most consider to be the best frontcourt in college basketball. Can you say Dynasty Mode?

3 KANSAS

Despite losing a key player to the NBA, look for the Jayhawks to return to the Final Four this year. We've seen what they have been doing in Practice Mode, and, trust us, we are thoroughly convinced.

4 OKLAHOMA

Another team we predict to be returning to the Final Four in 2003. Not only do they return with 70 new player models, they look good doing it, too.

5 TEXAS

They say everything is bigger in Texas, but what we notice on this team are the little guys. The backcourt is the cream of the crop. End of discussion. Obviously, somebody did their homework before this year's recruiting.

6 PITTSBURGH

Look for what could be the most exciting duo in college basketball to rate high in the on-screen player ratings.

7 DUKE

Add the slick job done in recruiting to the usual Blue Devil talent pool, and you get a team that is bound to make some noise. Get ready to hear Billy Packer and Eddie Doucette saying, "And the Blue Devils win again," a lot this season.

8 GEORGIA

The Dawgs' poll position could change in October, depending on their frontcourt production. If they produce, prepare for this team to move a little higher in the polls.

9 KENTUCKY

Should come down to the wire between them and Georgia for the SEC crown. Use the over 30 new dunks (including reverses, follow-ups and 360-degree jams) and this Wildcat team might overtake that other Wildcat team.

10 VIRGINIA

The Cavs are not happy with last season's late collapse that landed them out of the tournament. Don't let that fool you; they've got the talent. Not a pushover computer opponent. Not in the least.

11 UCLA

No, it's not the 1970s Bruins, but this team ain't bad, either. Besides, the digital cheerleaders are really easy on the eyes. Definitely easy on the eyes.

12 MICHIGAN STATE

This year their most famous alumnus will make it into the NBA Hall of Fame. That just might spark the Spartans to play at an elevated level.

13 XAVIER

"Who?" That's right, Xavier. Get used to seeing this school in the polls. The Musketeers are clearly the class of the A-10. How does a team go from unranked to number 13? Practice Mode. Practice Mode. Practice Mode.

14 ALABAMA

With the return of some key players, the Tide possesses one of the best inside-outside combos in the league. If you are attending a Tuscaloosa fish fry this year, expect to see some happy basketball fans.

15 MISS. STATE

The Bulldogs, coming off a Southeastern Conference tournament championship, have a tough schedule, playing both Xavier and Oklahoma this year. Said one player, "Hey, I'm all for just selecting Tournament Mode, and just get right to the tourney."

16 OREGON

Enjoying its first league championship in 63 years and one of the last eight teams standing in last year's tourney, Oregon's picked second by us in the Pac-10, behind No. 1 Arizona. Expect a long stay in the NCAA tournament this year for the Ducks.

17 VILLANOVA

The pressure is really on to produce and get the Wildcats back into the tournament after a three-year absence. In addition to all the new faces on the team, there will also be new duds for the 'Cats as Villanova debuts a new digital uniform.

18 FLORIDA

How about that SEC? Yet another entry from a very tough conference. Tough conference or not, the Gators hold their own against some of the NCAA's best.

19 UCONN

Expect the Huskies again to be strong in the backcourt. Use the right analog stick control to perform spin moves and drop-steps out of the post to put the solid backcourt to good use.

20 MARQUETTE

The Golden Eagles open against Villanova, marking the first time the two teams have met since the 1980 NCAA tournament. Can this young team hold its own in an upcoming Conference USA? We think so.

21 INDIANA

Can they get the support they need inside? If not, the Hoosiers could be off-balance even with what should be an extremely productive perimeter.

22 GONZAGA

Can the Bulldogs get the top scorer they need to emerge? Time spent in recruiting will be time well spent. Everything else is in place for another banner season on the left coast.

23 MARYLAND

We're considering these champs an outside shot at defending the title after losing four starters. Terps get a new arena this year. Unfortunately, they are also getting a mostly new team, as well.

24 MISSOURI

Mizzou's run to the Elite Eight last year was the Tigers' longest stint in the tourney in eight years. And this should be another promising year.

25 USC

A long shot to win the title. Let's face it, they are no Winthrop. But don't count them totally out, either.

AWARDS

Clark honored with John Mackey Award

Iowa tight end Dallas Clark won the John Mackey Award on Wednesday.

Clark, a junior All-Big Ten selection, was the Hawkeyes' second-leading receiver with 39 catches for 645 yards and four touchdowns.

His 95-yard TD catch against Purdue was Iowa's longest play of the year.

"I accept this honor on behalf of every single teammate at the UI because I would not be in a position for such an award without the hard work of every player in our program," Clark said.

The 6-4, 244-pounder won over Miami's Kellen Winslow Jr. and UCLA's Mike Seidman.

The Mackey Award began in 2000, with Purdue's Tim Stratton the winner. Colorado's Dan Graham was chosen last year.

Heisman race nears end, Banks gets invite

BY ANDREA SZULSZTEYN
 ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Top-ranked Miami's Ken Dorsey and Willis McGahee are Heisman Trophy finalists, the first time since 1994 that teammates were among the top five in the voting.

Iowa quarterback Brad Banks, Penn State running back Larry Johnson, and Southern California quarterback Carson Palmer also were invited Wednesday for the award's presentation.

The winner of one of the most wide-open Heisman races will be announced Saturday night at the Yale Club in New York.

The last time two players from the same school finished in the top five was eight years ago, when Penn State's Ki-Jana Carter was second and Kerry Collins fourth.

McGahee, a tailback who wasn't even supposed to start this season, would be the first sophomore to win the award given to college football's most outstanding player award.

Palmer is trying to become the first West Coast player to win since USC's Marcus Allen in 1981.

Of the five finalists, only Dorsey opened the season as a true Heisman hopeful; he finished third in the 2001 voting and led Miami to a title.

McGahee ended the 2001 season as Miami's starting fullback, but moved back to tailback because of injuries and broke several single-season records.

He shattered the school record with 27 touchdowns and also set school records for yards rushing (1,686), total yards (2,036), and 100-yard games (10). In the Dec. 7 56-45 win over Virginia Tech, McGahee ran 39 times for a career-high 205 yards and broke a 69-year-old school record with six touchdowns.

IOWA FOOTBALL

Taking Charge

Joanne White/The Daily Iowan

Iowa football player and student teacher Robert Gallery helps third grader Jacob Murphy with his journal. Gallery student-teaches at Hills Elementary School.

Gallery takes learning to the next level

BY BRIAN TRIPLETT
 THE DAILY IOWAN

The third- and fourth-graders of Hills Elementary School look up to Iowa football player Robert Gallery in more ways than one.

Not only does the 6-7, 307-pound first-team All-Big Ten offensive lineman tower over the students, he spends two hours in their classroom four days a week helping teach them.

While Gallery is learning the ropes of teaching as part of his UI elementary-education program, he has proven to be a positive role-model for the students. When asked to describe him in one word, some of the students' responses included "funny," "cool," "really nice," and "fabulous."

"They see him as a very successful athlete but also someone who takes school seriously," said John Bacon, the teacher under whom Gallery is doing his practicum. "When he's here, he's interested in what they're doing in school, and it makes them really want to try harder."

And while the students read in the newspapers about what their "biggest teacher ever" has been accomplishing on the football field, they have a great respect for Gallery and his teaching style in the classroom.

Ten-year old Dakota Scott, along with many of her classmates, thinks that Gallery would make a great teacher someday.

"He's a really good guy, and he likes to help out kids," she said. "From the way I've seen him around class, he really inspires the kids in their schoolwork."

The students always find time to sneak in a few conversations with Gallery about the Hawkeyes, though.

"We talk about what we think about the other teams and how we're hoping that Iowa wins like usual," fourth-grader Dakota said.

Gallery's tasks throughout the semester at Hills have included writing and teaching lesson plans mainly in math and social

New surface proved beneficial for Hawkeyes

BY JEROD LEUPOLD
 THE DAILY IOWAN

The opening event on the newly remodeled surface at the UI Recreation Building almost brought the house down.

Anchor of the 4x4 team A, Russell Peterson received the baton 25-meters behind the leading team C runner. Peterson began his assault from third-place and 10 meters from the finish line. Peterson made eye contact with current leader, smiled and surged in to win the race.

Peterson turned to the crowd with arms raised, grinning like a maniac, a fitting beginning to the men's and women's indoor track season.

Both teams competed in an intrasquad exhibition Wednesday night in front of friends and family, the smell of new rubber still permeating the air. "We had many pleasant performances tonight," women's coach James Grant said. "Tiffany Pedersen is starting the heptathlon this year and she cleared 5 feet 4 inches in the high jump, which is really good."

Wiecek

"This meet tells us exactly where we're at. It lets our kids know what they need to work on at home before coming back after break."

Grant praised Aisha Hume's one minute, 35 second finish in the 600-meter. Mile runner Michelle Lahann missed running a five minute mile by two seconds. Sarah Steffen and Latoya Stiffend ran under nine seconds, while Pedersen, Keely Huber, and Katie Herrmann finishes under ten seconds in the 60 meter hurdles.

Men's 60-meter striders Zach Digney and Robert Beach finished .01 second on either side of seven seconds. Digney edged out Beach for the win. Peterson again pulled from behind in the last five meters to win the 400 meter, beating Ryan Strang with a time of 49.63 seconds. Junior Ken Kemeny again leads Iowa this year in the shot. Kemeny won with a toss of 56 feet, 3 inches, a full eight feet ahead of second place Aaron Pollack.

Men's coach Larry Wiecek said his team's strengths this season will also come from his staff of assistant coaches.

"It's an all around a good team," Wiecek said. "I have great assistants. We've been together for seven years now. Pat McGhee runs the sprinters and Scott Cappos is the best throwers coach in the field."

Cappos wasn't in attendance, instead was at a clinic learning new techniques, proving students aren't the only ones studying this week.

Everyone involved with the event was glad to be back in the swing of things.

Hawkeyes ready to face 2-5 Pioneers

BY MICHELLE YONG
 THE DAILY IOWAN

The Hawkeyes will look to rebound from their first road loss tonight against Denver at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

After beating Iowa State on Dec. 4, the Hawkeyes lost to Creighton on Sunday, fighting an uphill battle throughout the contest.

"It's not hard to get their attention for Denver," coach Lisa Bluder said. "We had a tremendous practice on Monday, and I know they are going to come out and play their best."

Freshman forward Johanna Solverson got her first start against Creighton, replacing freshman Tiffany Reedy, who started the first five games.

Solverson is second on the team in scoring, steals, blocks, and 3-points baskets, and she leads the team in field-goal percentage. Bluder isn't starting Solverson only because Reedy has an aggravated groin injury — Bluder sees improvement in her play.

"Johanna has picked up the defensive intensity in practice," Bluder said. "We are trying to get her to work for the higher percentage shots. She has come a ways, but she still has a ways to go."

The Hawkeyes' contest against the Pioneers may be a big game for freshman Lindsay Richards. She will be reunited with teammate Nicky Eason from Barrington (Ill.) High School.

The Pioneers lost their first three games of the season, but they have gone 2-2 in their last four. Denver's latest loss came Monday against Arizona State, a game in which Eason came off the bench and scored 11 points.

Ashley Atkinson is Denver's leading scorer, averaging 11.9 points per game. She is just 111 points shy of hitting the 1,000 point mark.

Like Bluder, Denver coach Pam Tanner believes her team has the ability to be a threat at many different positions.

"We have great depth and versatility," she said. "We have four players who can play the point, six or seven who can play the post, and everybody but Kellie [Carwell] can play the wing. The versatility I expect to have will definitely be a strength for us, and it could change the scope of our offense."

Bluder and the Hawkeyes aren't looking past Denver to their next opponent, Drake.

"After the loss, it's easy to get focused," she said. "Denver is a tough nonconference team."

Tonight is Toys for Tots night at Carver-Hawkeye Arena. Any fan who brings in a new, unwrapped toy will given free admission. Tip off is at 7:05 p.m.

NBA Barry brings big fourth for win

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Brent Barry's big fourth quarter buried the Philadelphia 76ers. Barry scored 10 of his 18 points in the final period, including a go-ahead 3-pointer with 23 seconds left, as the SuperSonics handed the 76ers their first home loss, 92-88. Philadelphia became the last Eastern Conference team to lose at home, falling to 10-1. The 76ers wasted a 17-point lead in the second quarter and a 79-70 advantage with 8½ minutes to go. Derrick Coleman's free throw gave Philadelphia an 88-86 lead with 1:47 left, and Gary Payton missed a tying shot with 27 seconds to go for Seattle. Desmond Mason came up with the rebound and fed a wide-open Barry, who drilled his jumper for the lead. The 76ers curiously had the ball go to Greg Buckner on the next possession, and he was woefully short on a jumper. Payton's two free throws made it 91-88 with nine seconds to go. Allen Iverson fed Coleman for a contested 3-pointer from the corner that was off. Seattle's Ansu Sesay made 1-of-2 at the line for the final margin. Payton and Rashard Lewis each netted 20 points as Seattle avoided falling to the .500 mark for the first time. Payton added six assists and five rebounds.

Stoudemire on a drive to the basket and no foul was called. Pierce fell awkwardly to the FleetCenter floor and landed on his face, breaking two teeth. He finished with 16 points on 7-18 shooting. Antoine Walker matched a season high with 31 points for the Celtics, who had won eight of their previous 10 games and three straight at home. Cleveland 96, Toronto 83 — Rookie Dajuan Wagner scored nine of his season-high 33 points during a run to close the third quarter as the Cavaliers defeated the Raptors. Wagner made a pair of breakaway dunks to highlight Cleveland's 16-7 spurt over the final five minutes of the third quarter. The rally gave the Cavaliers a 74-67 lead that grew as big as 15 points in the final period. Earlier in the third, Wagner set up a highlight-reel play with a lob pass that Ricky Davis slammed home. Davis, who went scoreless in the first quarter, had 22 points. Toronto lost for the fourth time in five games and played without All-Star guard Vince Carter, who is expected to miss the next two weeks with a strained tendon in his knee. Voshon Lenard led the Raptors with a season-high 24 points, but he scored 16 of those in the first half. Jerome Williams added 17 points and eight rebounds for Toronto.

Philadelphia's Allen Iverson tries to drive to the basket past Seattle's Rashard Lewis in the second half.

Phoenix 103, Boston 94 — Shawn Marion tied a season high with 32 points, leading the Suns to a physical victory over the Celtics. Joe Johnson and rookie Amari Stoudemire added 19 points apiece for the Suns, who snapped a five-game road losing streak by outscoring the Celtics, 55-38, in the second half. Boston played most of the second half without its coach. Jim O'Brien was ejected with 9:08 left in the third quarter, after star forward Paul Pierce was knocked to the ground by

New Jersey 105, Portland 101 — EAST RUTHERFORD, New Jersey — Jason Kidd usually is the one handing out assists for the New Jersey Nets, but he got a big one from teammate Rodney Rogers. Kidd scored 27 points and dished out 12 assists but missed two crucial free throws before Rogers bailed him out with a steal in the final second of the Nets' victory. Portland trailed most of the way but managed to climb back from a 10-point deficit and pull within 103-101 on Rasheed Wallace's 3-pointer with 32 seconds left.

Kidd then missed a 3-pointer, followed by two free throws with 11 seconds left, but Rogers stole an inbound pass intended for Arvydas Sabonis, and New Jersey hung on for its sixth-straight home win and fourth in a row overall. Detroit 91, Atlanta 80 — AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — Richard Hamilton scored a season-high 32 points, and Cliff Robinson added a season-best 21. The Pistons, who avenged a Dec.

7 94-92 loss in Atlanta and ended a three-game losing streak, also got 16 points from Corliss Williamson and 18 rebounds from Ben Wallace. The Hawks, led by 21 points from Shareef Abdur-Rahim and 15 from Jason Terry, have lost five in a row on the road. They've won just two of 11 away from Atlanta this season. Detroit led 41-37 with two minutes left in the first half but scored the final eight points, including Hamilton's steal and lay-up with less than a second to go.

NFL Favre apologizes for fracas following game

BY ARNIE STAPLETON
 ASSOCIATED PRESS
 GREEN BAY, Wis. — Brett Favre apologized Wednesday for making an obscene gesture toward Chris Hovan after the Green Bay Packers' victory over the Minnesota Vikings. Also, the league said that the participants in the teams' postgame melee about 50 yards away from the Favre-Hovan exchange Sunday night could expect fines but not suspensions when punishment is meted out Thursday. "I wouldn't rule anything out, but I can say in the past if a player was suspended, it happened earlier in the week," league spokesman Michael Signora said Wednesday. The league usually lets teams know of suspensions right away so they can prepare replacements and aren't caught off guard after they've begun installing the game plan. There was concern in Green Bay that defensive tackle Cletidus Hunt might face a suspension for coming off the sideline before the final play was over and racing across the field to defend his teammates. And the Vikings were worried that tight end Jim Kleinsasser might face punishment for leaving the bench and shoving Marques Anderson during Darren Sharper's 66-yard interception return on the final play of Green Bay's 26-22 victory. Still, several players are bracing for fines for their roles in the fracas, although few wanted to talk about it.

"It's a dead issue," Hunt said. A league source said earlier this week that Favre and Hovan, who were fined $5,000 for actions during a game in Minneapolis last month, wouldn't be fined for their latest spat because it occurred after the game. In last month's incidents, Favre was penalized for hitting Vikings safety Jack Brewer out of bounds after he intercepted a pass, and Hovan was fined for yelling taunts in Favre's face after another interception. Favre said he was sorry for making an obscene hand gesture toward Hovan as the two crossed paths on their way to their respective tunnels. "I don't even remember doing that. If I did ... it may have been two kids out there acting like kids," Favre said. "But if I did that,

I apologize to people who saw that. "But like I said after the game, I mean it's a tough game, and tempers flare, and emotions fly, and sometimes things happen, and when you look back, you go, 'Aw, what a dumb you-know-what.'" Hovan appeared to return the gesture to Favre and then to the crowd but he insisted Monday that wasn't the case. "I was pointing my index finger. I was like, 'I'll see you next year,'" he said. Favre said at first he thought Hovan might have been looking to fight. "I heard the comments that he was coming to shake my hand," Favre said. "And with the fracas that was going on, I didn't know what to think, I really didn't. I said, 'Here we go again.'" much as Kenny or the other quarterbacks did," McGahee said recently. "I don't know what the Heisman means in their terms, but in my terms it means the best overall player who has been performing the best to help his school win and getting the job done."

Dorsey, a senior from Orinda, Calif., is 38-1 as a starter, and he led the Hurricanes to another unbeaten season at 12-0. Miami will play No. 2 Ohio State (13-0) in the Fiesta Bowl on Jan. 3.

Dorsey owns nearly every significant Miami passing record. This season, he completed 194 of 350 passes for 3,073 yards, 26 touchdowns, and 10 interceptions.

Banks, meanwhile, never started a Division I-A game until this season, but it never looked that way.

The senior from Belle Glade, Fla., led the nation in passing efficiency, going 155-258 for 2,369 yards, 25 touchdowns, and four interceptions. He also rushed for 387 yards and five TDs on 73 carries, and was the Associated Press College Player of the Year.

He helped No. 3 Iowa notch its first 11-win season, its first unbeaten Big Ten season since 1922, and a berth in the Orange Bowl.

Johnson emerged late in the season. He finished with 2,015 yards rushing, only the ninth Division I-A player to top 2,000 in a season.

His 341 yards receiving are the most ever by a Penn State running back, and his 2,575 all-purpose yards this year are a Penn State record and ninth best in NCAA history.

The senior from State College, Pa., set the school single-game rushing record with 327 yards against Indiana. No. 10 Penn State (9-2) will play in the Capital One Bowl against Auburn.

Palmer completed nearly 63 percent of his passes for 3,639 yards and 32 touchdowns with 10 interceptions this year, leading No. 5 USC (10-2) to the Orange Bowl against Iowa.

The senior from Laguna Niguel, Calif., particularly shined during the Trojans' final eight games, throwing for 2,676 yards and 27 touchdowns with seven interceptions.

He ended the season with 425 yards passing and four touchdowns in a 44-13 victory over Notre Dame. It was the most yards passing ever allowed by the Fighting Irish.

"It's been an amazing year," Palmer said this week. "As far as really thinking you're going to win it, you can't even fathom it. At the beginning of the season, I wanted to be at the Heisman ceremony. It's such a long shot; so many things have to go right."

This year's race should again be close. Last year, there was no clear favorite for the Heisman, and only four finalists were announced. Nebraska quarterback Eric Crouch ended up beating Florida quarterback Rex Grossman by 62 points, the fourth-closest vote in the 67-year history of the Heisman.

The closest Heisman vote was the 45-point victory by Auburn's Bo Jackson over Iowa's Chuck Long in 1985.

studies, providing one-on-one attention to students who are having trouble on a particular topic, and answering questions dealing with any possible subject that the crowd full of hand-raised youngsters may have on their minds.

"They're very energetic, and they keep you on your toes," Gallery said. "You never know what they're going to say or what kind of question they're going to ask, so that's one thing I've learned — you have to be ready for anything."

Not only have the children learned a lot from him, but they have taught him something as well.

"I learned that if you make it fun for the kids, they pick up on it a lot more, and they enjoy it," he said. "I try to make it fun and make it entertaining, yet educate them so they're going to remember."

The students do not fail to notice Gallery's teaching style, and agree that it does help them learn.

"He helps a lot," said 9-year-old Tianna Maclin. "He's got a good way of teaching."

Classmate Brittney Uhlrich nodded her head while Maclin expressed her thoughts.

"If you're just sitting there bored, he just comes over, and he helps you," Brittney said.

When asked if he was doing any possible recruiting while in the classroom, Gallery smiled.

"We've got some prospects," he said. "A lot of these kids do love their sports, so it's fun to listen to them talk about all the different sports they're in."

Although he could probably teach the kids a thing or two about football, he does a good job of not letting sports talk get in the way of the task at hand.

"Obviously, it's been very nice to have someone of that fame," said John Marshall, the Hills Elementary principal. "I think most of our kids don't see him as the Iowa football player; most of them just see him as the guy who works in our classroom."

Although 9-year old Tanner Stutsman is an Iowa State fan, he still appreciates what the Hawkeyes' star has done for him.

"He helps us when we can't figure a problem out, and he helps us with words if we don't know what they are," Tanner said. "He does it a different way from other people."

Gallery said that he and the young Cyclones fan have developed quite the rivalry.

"The first week I was here was the week after the Iowa State game, so he let me know that he was an Iowa State fan," Gallery recalled. "But ever since then, he's been a little more quiet about how Iowa State has been doing."

When Gallery's football career — which will most likely extend into the NFL — is over, he would like to teach at an elementary school and eventually coach high-school and college football.

His last day of helping teach at Hills is Friday. He has not taken his experience for granted, though. Not only has he learned about his potential future career and eagerly helped the students, but he has formed relationships with the children who are not quite a third his size.

"He's developed a wonderful rapport with the students," Bacon said. "He's gotten to know them really well and cares about them."

Spartans want Skins' Lewis

BY GREG SANDOVAL AND MARK MASKE
WASHINGTON POST

Michigan State University has intensified its pursuit of Washington Redskins defensive coordinator Marvin Lewis, pressing him to accept a $1.5 million-per-year deal to become the school's head football coach and giving indications that he would remain free to explore NFL head-coaching opportunities while with the Spartans.

Lewis said Tuesday night he had not made a decision. "I don't want to talk about that," Lewis said. "Monday and Tuesday aren't good days to worry about that stuff."

Lewis spoke to Michigan State Athletics Director Ron Mason early Tuesday and told Mason that he had not made up his mind, sources close to the situation said. School officials were encouraged by what they heard from Lewis and pleased that they had not been turned down, according to sources, and they planned to increase their efforts to hire him. Lewis spent the day at Redskins Park, working with other coaches into the night to prepare for the team's Dec. 15 game at Philadelphia.

Redskins officials were uncertain about what Lewis would do; they said a decision might not come until today, sources said. He told Redskins officials late on Monday after returning from a trip to East Lansing, Mich., that he was almost certain he would remain with the team but he had not made a final decision. Michigan State officials did not give up, however, and turned up their efforts to sell Lewis on the job beginning Monday night, according to sources. Spartans men's basketball coach Tom Izzo left several phone messages for Lewis.

Lewis told associates he wanted to move carefully and make the right decision, echoing the public comments he made on Monday.

Lewis's wife, Peggy, toured the East Lansing area during Monday's visit, scouting possible schools for their two children. Sources said Lewis also met with Izzo, who led Michigan State to the 2000 national championship. Lewis gave Michigan State representatives the impression that he liked what he saw, and school administrators were optimistic Lewis would be their next football coach.

They were surprised about reports later in the day that Lewis had told Redskins executives he was not planning to accept Michigan State's offer. Michigan State wants Lewis to commit to a five-year, $7.5 million contract that would include a buyout clause of approximately $1 million that Lewis would owe the school if he leaves for another job, said a source familiar with the terms of the contract. Former Spartans coach Nick Saban spent five seasons at Michigan State before leaving for Louisiana State University in 2000. His successor, Bobby Williams, was fired Nov. 4.

"We're not interested in tying him down," said the Michigan State source. "We want him to be successful and for others to pursue him. The buyout price is in there to prevent him from going to other colleges, but NFL owners could choose to write a check if they really wanted him."

Michigan State officials have said they did not extend a formal offer to Lewis, but sources said it has been clear throughout the deliberations that the job is Lewis' if he wants it.

Doug Williams said he was contacted by administrators recently. Williams confirmed he was a candidate at one time but said that a week ago was informed administrators would hire another candidate.

COMMENTARY

Rose belongs in Hall, not in dugout

BY JIM LITKE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

America forgave Richard Nixon, George Steinbrenner pardoned Billy Martin, and Marge Simpson let Homer back in the house at least a thousand times.

Second chances are second nature in sports. We're suckers for that kind of thing. So there's nothing unprecedented, unjust, or even unexpected in baseball boss Bud Selig dangling a carrot under Pete Rose's nose. So long as the commissioner doesn't go overboard.

Rose doesn't deserve another shot at managing, a possibility he raised as recently as last summer. Whether he comes clean about his gambling problem is almost beside the point. Every bad call would invite the kind of scrutiny Rose could never outrun.

But he does belong in the Hall of Fame. It should be enough that Rose is baseball's career hits leader and that he collected them all during one of the game's golden ages, but there's plenty more.

Just recall the fuss made in recent years when Cal Ripken, Tony Gwynn, Wade Boggs, Robin Yount, and George Brett crashed the 3,000-hit barrier near the end of sensational careers. Now consider that each would have needed another eight to 10 sensational seasons just to gain admission to Rose's neighborhood.

Of course, none of them bet on baseball. And while Rose continues to insist he didn't, either, while managing the Cincinnati

He used to set up a booth down the block from the Hall of Fame ... stage annual pity parties, slipping out of his sackcloth and ashes only long enough to ring up his customers' purchases.

Reds, that's been the sticking point ever since Selig's predecessor, the late Bart Giamatti, announced the lifetime ban 13 years ago. Nothing Rose has done since has been reason to lower the bar.

He went on TV the same night he was kicked out of the game and started selling autographed baseballs for $39 each. Rose is still selling everything he can get his hands on.

In that sense, the only thing that's changed is the number and influence of the people willing to trade on Rose's fame. It used to be that his strongest advocates were former teammates, such as Joe Morgan, asking for nothing more than a review. Now it's people such as Cincinnati Mayor Charlie Luken. He wants Rose not just to be reinstated but reinstated in time to make April's opening of the Great American Ball Park, the Reds' new home. How noble is that?

"Whatever the crime, time has been served," Luken wrote in one of two letters he sent Selig last month. "Whatever agreements were signed years ago are irrelevant today."

The sad truth is that fans have short memories. Major League Baseball has lined its own pockets and allowed Rose to set foot on a diamond twice during sanctioned events. Both times, he's received the loudest ovations. As Luken's letter suggested, if you've actually done the time, most fans won't remember the crime.

But the responsibilities of those in charge of baseball should extend further than that. Rose's remarks from the day the ban went into effect have been an uninterrupted series of half-truths calculated to blur the facts.

Rose admitted to a gambling problem when he wanted sympathy and denied it when victimhood made it easier to move product. He used to set up a booth down the block from the Hall of Fame around the week of induction ceremonies and stage annual pity parties, slipping out of his sackcloth and ashes only long enough to ring up his customers' purchases.

Fans, though, always focused on the hits Rose made and not the ones he took.

Judging by the past, when the fan polls being conducted over the next few days are finished, something close to 75 percent of the voters will want Rose reinstated. If Selig allows him back on the ballot, the same margin from baseball writers would get Rose elected to the Hall.

Breeders' Cup scandal ends early for prosecution

BY JIM FITZGERALD
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. — With one guilty plea Wednesday and another expected, the prosecution of three college buddies is ending less than two months after suspicions were raised by a $3 million payoff at the Breeders' Cup.

Glen DaSilva, a technology-management consultant from New York, admitted in federal court Wednesday that he had made approximately $200,000 through two conspiracies: one that used bet-processing computers to alter wagers and one that duplicated other horse players' winning tickets.

The three former fraternity brothers charged in the scheme were caught, DaSilva's lawyer said, because "these guys are amateurs. They're really not cut out for a life of crime."

Chris Harn of Newark, Del., described as the "inside man" at Autotote, which handles most of the nation's computerized horse-race betting, pleaded guilty last month to fraud and money-laundering conspiracies, as DaSilva did.

And Derrick Davis of Baltimore, who held the $3 million winning Pick Six tickets for the Oct. 26 Breeders' Cup, will admit to fraud conspiracy today, said his lawyer, Steven Allen.

The three men, all 29, met at Drexel University in the 1990s and were members of the Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity.

When they were charged, racing officials tried to reassure bettors. The National Thoroughbred Racing Association hired a consulting firm headed by former New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani to review the industry's electronic-wagering system.

Magistrate Judge Mark Fox allowed DaSilva to remain free on bail and scheduled sentencing for March 11. The maximum sentence is 25 years in prison, but prosecutors said they would seek a stretch of 21 to 27 months, a $4,000 fine, and $200,000 in restitution.

DaSilva "will take his medicine," said his lawyer, Edward Hayes. "My client's attitude is, 'What was I thinking of? It was a stupid thing to do.'"

DaSilva refused to comment after the court session.

The key to the scheme was the discovery by Harn that he could get access to Pick Four or Pick Six wagers — in which bettors try to select the winners of four or six consecutive horse races — after some of the races had been run. For the prestigious Breeders' Cup at Arlington Park in Illinois, Harn went into Davis' Off Track Betting account after four races had been run and altered the Pick Six bet to make it appear Davis had picked all four winners. By then covering every possible winner for the last two races, he guaranteed a win.

Because several long shots won that day, the jackpot was so big it immediately raised suspicions and was never paid.

DaSilva did not confess any direct knowledge of the Breeders' Cup win, but he said he and Harn used the same method on two earlier bets that netted DaSilva $108,000. DaSilva opened an account with Catskill Off-Track Betting in Pomona; Harn, using the Autotote computer, made Pick Four and Pick Six bets on the account and then altered them to guarantee wins.

Money laundering was also charged because DaSilva split his winnings with Harn by converting some of the cash to checks made out to Harn's creditors.

DaSilva also admitted taking part in a second scam with Harn: cashing bogus tickets at various tracks after Harn figured out how to print duplicates of winning tickets that had not been cashed. That gained DaSilva tens of thousands of dollars, prosecutors said.

Daze, Flury team up in for Garden victory

NEW YORK (AP) — Theo Fleury scored in his return to Madison Square Garden and Eric Daze added three goals in the Chicago Blackhawks' 4-3 victory over the New York Rangers on Wednesday night.

Chicago defenseman Nathan Dempsey had a career-high four assists as the Blackhawks won for the second straight night in New York. Daze had a goal and an assist Tuesday night in a 3-2 win over the Islanders.

Mikael Samuelsson, Petr Nedved, and Rico Fata scored for the Rangers, who lost their fourth-straight. Despite missing captain Mark Messier because of a stiff neck and losing defenseman Sylvain Lefebvre in the second period to a broken right index finger, New York mustered a season-best 49 shots at Jocelyn Thibault, including 20 in a frantic third period. Fleury has goals in three of his four games this season and points in every contest since returning from an NHL suspension that resulted from a violation of his substance-abuse aftercare program.

The diminutive right wing played three troubled years with the Rangers before signing with the Blackhawks in the off-season. He was greeted warmly by Rangers fans when he first took the ice 1:45 in.

There were more groans than cheers when he gave Chicago a 1-0 lead at 13:36 with his third goal. Fleury fired a rolling puck from the top of the right circle that beat goalie Dan Blackburn's outstretched right pad.

Fleury thrust his right arm up in celebration as he continued skating and then put his left in the air, too, as teammates rushed to congratulate him.

Fleury scored only 15 goals in a disappointing first season in New York, but responded with 30 in 2000-01 before missing the final 20 games because of a substance-abuse problem. He had 24 goals last season and played every game. The Rangers chose to let him go as a free agent.

Daze made it 2-0 at 17:02 of the first period and then completed his fifth-career hat trick at 11:59 of the third as Chicago took a 4-1 lead. He missed the first 15 games this season due to a herniated disk.

The Rangers rallied late to put pressure on the Blackhawks, unbeaten in 47-straight games when leading after two periods.

Thibault allowed only Samuelsson's sixth goal of the season through 40 minutes.

Morozov's wrist broken

Guilty of rock 'n' roll?

Curtis Lehmkuhl/The Daily Iowan

You have THE RIGHT TO REMAIN NOISY!

This is the preview for the second DI/KRUI Local Band Contest. The five bands listed to the right were chosen out of a pool of more than 40. They will each play a 30-minute set at Gabe's on Friday, and five judges will pick a winner. The winner will receive loads of cash, 10 hours of recording time in Minstrel Studios, publicity photos, a profile in 80 hours, an interview on KRUI, and a chance to talk with the vice president of A&R at Atlantic Records. The show starts between 8 and 9 p.m. It costs $4 to get in, $1 of which will go to benefit a local charity. Everyone in attendance will receive a ballot to vote for the People's Choice Award, the winner of which will also receive a nice hunk o' cash. Last year, more than 350 people came and supported local music. This year, Psychosomatic (last year's winner) will MC the contest. Be there!

THIRD SEX

The Third Sex is a relocated Portland group with a relocated Portland sound.

Although dormant since Trish Walsh and Peyton Marshall (who trade vocal/guitar/bass duties) left Portland for Iowa City to take part in the Writers' Workshop, the group is poised to pick up where 1999's Back to Go — the band's submission piece for the DI/KRUI Battle of the Bands — left off.

Armed with the backbeat of new drummer John Niekraz, the Third Sex is more than ready to battle it out with its three-piece, post-punk, riot-grrl strut.

SEE THIRD SEX, PAGE 2C

Roger Mexico

Bringing the spirit of the '60s British invasion back is Roger Mexico, composed of former/current members of the indie-pop oriented Burn Disco Burn, Psychosomatic, and the Subordinates. The band's sound is full of simple yet catchy rhythm-guitar parts backed by a beat that prompts the dance crazies of yore, you know man, the Mashpotata, the Bugaloo, or even some '60s go-go mod dancing.

Roger Mexico's three-song demo, however, sounds as if the members got drunk in a ramshackle garage with a two-track recorder after listening to Kinda Kinks by the Kinks and the Beatles' Revolver.

SEE ROGER MEXICO, PAGE 2C

Troubled Hubble

I haven't seen so much pogo-stick dancing at a show since my ska years.

Coming to Iowa City by way of Chicago, Troubled Hubble has brought bunny-hop dancing to an indie-rock setting, and the effect is mind-boggling — seas of college-age kids jump in unison to the sounds of Troubled Hubble's quirky mix of indie pop with quasisilly, yet thoughtful lyrics.

I can understand the loyalty of bouncing Troubled Hubble's fans (known as Hubbies) after listening to the band's recent full-length, Penturbia. The album shows the maturity that Troubled Hubble endured after its last couple of full-length releases.

SEE TROUBLED, PAGE 2C

THE SLATS

The Slats, which comes to Iowa City by way of Minneapolis, proves that cleanliness is not next to godliness — musically speaking.

The Slats' latest full-length, The Great Plains of San Francisco, is a kamikaze of discordant yet carefully executed pop music that registers like a joyful slop of ice cream caught on an infant's bib.

Relying on the most minimal of musical gear, the group rocks without dropping a grand on the Marshall half-stack. Brian Cox's fuzzy guitar parts and melodically cooing voice are reminiscent of the post-punk of the early '90s discord bands and Guided By Voices.

SEE THE SLATS, PAGE 2C

Lucky James

Luck has nothing to do with the music of this psychedelic troubadour. On UI junior Dave Strackany's DI/KRUI band-contest résumé piece the difference between the things you never forget and the things you always remember, skill or imagination seems to be more of an apt description.

Lucky James is the sound of pop music bent, disjointed, and glued together again under the auspices of the acid-saturated triumvirate of Syd Barrett, Donovan, and Neutral Milk Hotel's Jeff Mangum.

An abstract writer and deconstructivist painter, the Art Building regular gathers all of these facets of expression under one circus tent in his music.

Iowa City's most wanted take it to the stage in an all-out rock battle

Trish Walsh of Third Sex

Nathan Budde of Roger Mexico

Josh Miller of Troubled Hubble

Jon Hansen of the Slats

Dave Strackany — Lucky James

Even with this loud and angular slice of Pacific Northwest rock 'n' roll, the only aspect more insistent and grabbing than the jangle, momentum, and backbeat swagger of the Third Sex's music is the immediacy of the societal and personal issues hashed out through Marshall and Walsh's call-and-response vocals.

The duo's turn-on-a-dime precise dynamic is as cohesive and revealing as the workshop-grade lyrical voicings. If you thought Elvis Costello had the inside scoop with "Party Girl," "At Least I Got Some Cool Clothes" should revise your mix-tape hierarchy concerning rock-show superficiality.

Sexuality, frustration, and boredom are cooed over, pouted about, and shouted out in a guitar-string-snapping torrent that blasts catharsis through amps twisted to 11.

To Roger Mexico's credit, the lo-fi quality of the recording perfectly suits the sound the band is trying to achieve — during the British invasion, the dirty guitar tones and sludgy, blues-driven backbeats were what mattered, not slick studio sound.

All three songs contain a good amount of crunchy clean guitars, weaving solos, and a semi-steady backbeat that provides a good groove. But the vocals of Nathan Budde muddily filter in and get drowned out, leaving much to be desired.

Roger Mexico is a band that has not yet blossomed. If the members decided to practice the vocals more — possibly with some pop-oriented backing harmonies — I might give them priority over my cherished Kinks records.

TROUBLED HUBBLE

Chris Otepka sings with confidence, evoking comparisons with Issac Brock of Modest Mouse and Doug Martsch of Built to Spill. The music of Troubled Hubble is comparable with the aforementioned bands, but it also has its own sound, using tape loops and layered strings.

The Troubled Hubble indie-pop sound is undeniably catchy, with clean, intricate guitar playing, solid drumming, melodically complex song structures, and lyrics that wind in your head over and over.

Since the release of Penturbia, Troubled Hubble has become masters of self-promotion, with copies of the album shipped to almost every college radio station in the country. The result of the hard work landed Penturbia a slot on the College Music Journal's Top 100 most-played albums — a remarkable feat for any band.

THE SLATS

Filling out the lineup are Iowa City's own Jonathon Hansen, of hip-hop act Psychosomatic, and Mark Langgin of now-defunct Frodoe.

On Great Plains, the Slats provides a musical setting of jangled, noisy guitar rock with sing-a-long power-pop choruses and elements of surf rock. The first two tracks on the album, "The Weapon That I Used" and "A Payola Granola," are the two standouts. Both songs prove to be worthy enough of college-radio rotation.

The band members are serious road warriors, and they have already been on two national rock tours, the latest of which landed them a few dates in Canada while making their way along the East Coast.

The Slats' live show is sure to provoke some singing, dancing, and throwing of the rock sign.

What follows is a scrapbook of quixotic writing and Rube Goldberg-esque pop instrumentation. The pings of wine glasses stand in for keyboards, and banjo, accordion, and mariachi trumpets suffuse Lucky James' music to a point that (as with Neutral Milk) it would be equally proper piped over the PA of Willy Wonka's tour boat or through speakers of a modern-art museum somewhere deep, deep in the South.

However, with the sound of Lucky James suffusing the chocolate sweatshop, the ompahs would be found reposing in the Pillow Room all day with free love and opium pipes, and that art gallery would be in a continuous state of Timothy Leary melt and spin.

Singing the beloved freedom, freedom

BY KATHRYN ANDERSON
THE DAILY IOWAN

A rock-solid performance that is as sweet and warm as honey will wrap up Hancher Auditorium's fall season Saturday.

Sweet Honey in the Rock, a Grammy Award-winning female a cappella ensemble, will expose the deep roots of African-American music to an Iowa City audience and preach a message of love that is relevant just weeks before Christmas.

Charles Swanson, the executive director of Hancher, said the quintet's performance of spirituals, hymns, gospel, jazz, and blues promises to make for a memorable evening. The group's music, derived from the black church, is naturally steeped in history and spirituality, and the addition of hand-percussion instruments helps create a multi-layered blend of lyrics, movement, and narrative.

"It's a performance that everybody will truly enjoy," Swanson said.

The group's inherent biblical connection is reflected in its name, which is based on a religious parable that tells of a land so rich that when rocks are cracked open, honey flows from them. The image is fitting for the group's music, and the members believe that all black women are strong as a rock and sweet as honey.

Besides being known for its powerful vocal performances, Sweet Honey in the Rock has a long history of speaking out against social injustice. The group was founded by Bernice Johnson Reagon in 1973, following her membership in the original Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee Freedom Singers, the historic group that formed during the height of the civil-rights struggle in the 1960s. The tradition of the Freedom Singers calling for freedom and encouraging activism inevitably carried over into Reagon's new group, and it continues today.

"They send a message about a call for human caring in everyday life which is very timely right now," Swanson said. "These performers believe strongly in the message they send, and that comes across through their performance."

The last time Sweet Honey in the Rock performed at Hancher, Swanson said everybody — young and old — was moved by the performance. In an attempt to reach an even broader audience, the group travels with an American Sign Language interpreter, who adds a visual element to the music.

"[The interpreter] adds an enormous amount to the show," Swanson said. "There's a real beauty to it."

Unobstructed sunsets and irresponsibility

DREW BIXBY

After further reflection

My best friend told me once that she's always wanted to wake up one day, get on a bus, and just leave without telling anyone. With no destination in mind, she'd just go wherever the cheapest bus would take her.

When she first told me that, I thought she was crazy. How could someone be so irresponsible as to just get up and leave everything on a whim? But lately, the idea has sounded more and more appealing.

I think almost everyone has wanted to run away at some point in her or his life. As kids, we'd get so mad at mom and dad that we'd throw a change of clothes, our baseball-card collection, two peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, and the contents of our piggy bank into a backpack and sneak out of the house. But our Huffy bikes only got so far as the end of the block before we realized how many things we'd forgotten, how much we'd miss mom's fish sticks and tater tots, and how far away Canada really was.

Then our 16th birthdays arrived, and we were filled with a newfound sense of freedom. With a driver's license and a car, we could go anywhere. But the homecoming dance was next weekend, we had a test in chemistry the next morning, and boy, would mom be pissed if the car wasn't back by dark.

So the dream of running away became the dream of going away to college. It was the ultimate freedom — no parents, no curfew, no rules. But, what happens when you want to run away from college?

I'm glad you asked.

First, you need to establish what it is you're running away from. This could be your roommates, your boyfriend/girlfriend, a horrible job, or just the thought of growing up. Me, I'm running away from everyday life. With less than two weeks to go in my fifth semester as a college student, I want nothing more than to crawl in a hole and hibernate for the next six weeks. I've always been a stable person — levelheaded, responsible, and dependable. And although I don't think I've ever actually had a nervous breakdown, I feel like one is waiting to explode just below the surface. I'm too busy, too stressed out all the time, and too unmotivated to properly handle all of the responsibilities required of me.

Second, you need to figure out what you hope to accomplish so that you're not left wondering why you ran away in the first place. Personally, I just need life to be simple for a while. I want to lie in green grass with a T-shirt and headphones on and not have to worry about anything. I want to walk around in a place where absolutely nobody knows me, finding comfort in my solitude. I want to watch a sunset — unobstructed by buildings — from somewhere other than the Midwest.

Third, you need to make plausible plans for your departure. Will you be getting on a bus with a backpack or cramming your car full of everything you've accumulated in the last 20-something odd years? Do you even have enough money to get where you're going? I've been packing and repacking my 1989 white Ford Probe in my head for weeks now, deciding what I'd want with me, and what I could leave behind. Pictures, books, CDs, clothes, and guitars have all made the cut so far. I'm still mentally trying to make space for a grill, two pillows and a blanket, and my 13-month-old puppy-on-loan. At last check, my bank account had almost $900 in it that would normally be spent on groceries and bills but could be spent on gas and food. I also have $145 in my pocket from last month's paycheck that will be stored away and used only in the event of an emergency.

Fourth, you need to decide where you're going. If escaping is your main priority and not destination, then you at least need to pick a direction. I'm taking I-80 west to Des Moines, I-35 south through Kansas City and Oklahoma City, all the way to Dallas. Then I'm taking I-20 and I-10 west to Phoenix, I-5 north through California on my way to Seattle. After a quick jaunt in Canada, I'll take I-15 south to Salt Lake City, I-80 east to I-25 south through Denver, and then continue heading southeast. I won't be limiting myself to this schedule, however. Being open to anything is an important aspect of running away. Go where your heart takes you.

Fifth, you need to come to terms with the fact that life will go on without you. The university will hold your registration while you're running away, your roommates will find a way to make rent, your cellphone bill can be canceled or paid by check, your federal loans can be deferred, and your job will have no problem replacing you. I realize that this is a hard thing to swallow. But as potentially depressing as it might be, it's also very encouraging — you're not as tied down as you think you are. You are free to be free.

Sixth (and last), you need to decide when and if you're returning. This is important for a number of reasons: A) If this is just a short vacation, then you need to run away responsibly — already making plans for your triumphant return. B) If this is for an extended period of time, you need to find a place to store or sell everything that won't fit in your backpack or car. C) If this is a secret runaway mission — you're not telling anyone that you're leaving or where you're going — you need to decide on a top-secret form of one-way communication so that you can assure friends and family that you're alive and well. D) If this is for good (translation: You're permanently dropping out of college, breaking ties with your friends, and peacing Iowa City out forever), you need to make sure you're prepared for any repercussions that may result from your personal choice to be irresponsible.

I fall somewhere between option A) and C). I'm too deep in my student loans and have suffered far too many papers, exams, and sleepless nights in college to not eventually return to finish my degree.

Running away isn't the best option for everyone. Don't let one melodramatic (or pseudo-traumatic) event or night motivate you to run away. Don't run away from serious problems or situations, and certainly don't do anything rash while under the influence of any mind-altering substance. Running away is best for people who just need to get away for a while and do some thinking, spend some time alone, and/or discover something about themselves.

My advice, if you're thinking about running away but aren't sure if you want to go through with it: Take a piece of paper and write out the dates of the next seven days on it. Hide the paper some place where no one will find it. Then, every time during the next seven days that you feel like running away, write your reason next to the date. At the end of the seven days, go back and read everything you've written on the sheet of paper. If there are reasons that seem silly now or days when you didn't feel like running away at all, it might not be such a great idea. But if, at the end of the seven days, you're confident in your decision to escape, then do it.

Pack up your car (or your backpack), listen to your favorite music, read a few classic books, and enjoy as many unobstructed sunsets as you possibly can. Be irresponsible and love every minute of it. Good luck.

ARTS BRIEF

Improv for a cause

Improv comedy group Five Man Job hopes to raise more than laughs on Dec. 15 — the profits from its performance will go toward the Englert Theatre restoration.

The group will perform at 7:30 p.m. at the Iowa City Community Theatre, located on the Johnson County Fairgrounds. Five Man Job will perform long-form improv for 45 minutes, which involves several improvised scenes generated from audience suggestions. Afterwards, it will hold a 30-minute workshop for interested audience members who wish to learn the comedy style.

Nick Knudson, a former Iowa City resident, will appear with the group. Knudson, a 1998 graduate of Iowa City West and a temporary member of the group, wanted to do something beneficial for Iowa City.

Knudson hopes the workshop after the performance will generate increased interest and knowledge of improvisational comedy, besides what appears on television.

"Improv is a neat tool that no one really uses," he said. "It helps with so many life situations. It's really wonderful."

The benefits from the show will help the Englert reach its fund-raising goal to receive an $800,000 Vision Iowa grant. The theater group is facing a Jan. 15 deadline. "This is another situation in which a community member contacted us because they wanted to help out," said Mollie Schlue, the Englert communications director. Tickets are $15 and may be purchased at the Englert or by calling 688-2653.

Johnny Knoxville takes the concept of the MTV show "Jackass" and brings the dangerous and disturbing stunts to the movie screen — where Knoxville and his cohorts can get away with more than they could on television.

My Big Fat Greek Wedding
Campus 3

★★★ out of ★★★★★

A comedy of manners about a Greco-American daughter (Nia Vardalos) who falls in love with a non-Greek Midwesterner (John Corbett) and must get her family to accept the newcomer. When Corbett's parents meet up with the big fat Greek family, hilarious consequences ensue.

Punch-Drunk Love

Opens Friday

Originally intended as a documentary about the orphans of Uganda's destructive civil war, Iranian director Abbas Kiarostami (Taste of Cherry) expanded the scope of ABC AFRICA to include those stricken by Africa's massive AIDS epidemic and the people who work tirelessly to improve the conditions of their country. Kiarostami and his assistant, Seifollah Samadian, travel to Kampala, Uganda, at the request of the U.N. International Fund for Agricultural Development. For 10 days, their camera captures and caresses the faces of a thousand children whose parents have died of AIDS.
