Winds of war hit Iowa City

BY JEFFREY PATCH

Matt McAveavy sat down with his daughter for a hometown sweet breakfast Sunday morning to celebrate her 17th birthday and mark his deployment for active duty.

"It was a quiet Friday," he said. "We had the 109th Armory on Sunday morning for their mobilization ceremony, and then it was just hanging out with them, food and family, a typical family gathering."

He was just getting used to the 109th, which he described as "a great, tight-knit group of people and hundreds of their relatives and community members." The 17-year-old senior fire chief led a crew of volunteers and children in the morning to celebrate his 17th birthday.

Carson is back to ‘normal’

BY CASEY WAGNER

For nearly half a year, UI law Professor Johnathan Carson put his life on hold to spearhead a groundbreaking search for the university’s new president.

The school of business and economics scheduling offices are finally behind the UI’s 34-member presidential search committee,-

Carson, who vowed never to run for the position, said now would be a good time to return to his normal life.

“Now we would spend a couple hours a day, but toward the end, it became a full-time job,” said Elizabeth Altmaier, a professor of psychological and quantitative foundations and a member of the committee.

“Yes, we spent a lot of time working, but for the most part, we were able to go to our classes and have our regular lives,” Altmaier said.

The father of two is now bowling and visiting his children.

Carson said the committee was able to recruit two finalists, with more than 100 interviews conducted during the two-year search process.

Healthy nonpregnant females aged 16 to 23 are invited to participate in a 4-year study (up to 8 visits total) on the safety and efficacy of the vaccine which will be used to determine if the vaccine will prevent HPV infection. Participants must agree to use an effective birth control method throughout month 7 of the study.

Iowa City tips for a super Bowl

Worm spreads Internet

BY ANIE JESDANUN

NEW YORK — The latest virus-like attack on the Internet exposes more than a software flaw: The very strategy that managers of computer networks use to keep their systems secure appears to have proven to be inadequate.

As network technicians worked Sunday to complete repairs to damage caused by the Jan. 25 fast-spreading worm, security experts worried they might not be able to prevent the next one.

Microsoft had made software updates available to patch the vulnerability in its SQL Server 2000 software — used mostly by businesses and government agencies — but many system administrators had yet to install them.

"There was a lot that could have been done between July and now," said Howard Schmidt, President Bush's new cybersecurity advisor. "We made assurances and indications that people would get them down. We also need to make sure we keep them up-to-date.

"As the worm infected one computer, it was programmed to go on to other victims by sending out thousands of probes a second, saturating many Internet data pipelines.

Unlike most viruses and worms, it spread directly through network connections and did not need an email or server to act as a carrier. Thus, only network administrators who run the servers, rather than users, had to go online to take precautions to remedy the situation.

According to Microsoft Systems, which monitors Internet reliability and speed, network connection times increased fourfold times at the largest U.S. banks by an average of 25 percent, and some sites were completely unavailable at times. By midday, Dow Jones MarketWatch reported that some Web sites were slow because of network congestion.

WASHINGTON POST

DAVOS, Switzerland — Secretary of State Colin Powell said Tuesday that the United States will not be the one to decide when to deploy international weapons inspectors in Iraq, that inspectors will not be used as a "march patina" for Saddam Hussein's regime until they are given better "teeth." He said he will continue to refuse to take an active role in the inspections process and that questions remain about the inspections program as a whole.

The U.S. report will come no later than Friday, with the Security Council scheduled to meet at a time when U.S. and British diplomats are trying to salvage the inspections program in the face of mounting international opposition. The Western nations have been trying to build support for military action in Iraq, which, unlike the U.S.-led war against terrorism, was initiated by the United States and not by the United Nations, Powell said.

"We're not going to be the one to decide when inspectors will go in and whether they will do their job or not," Powell said. "If people who urge inspections want to combine inspections with military force, that's a problem." He said there are no "easy answers" to the inspections issue and that the United States will not be the one to decide when to deploy inspectors.

AWU continues to be a major university in the world, according to the university." The university's annual report shows that it has a large international student body, with students from over 100 countries. It has also been ranked among the top universities in the world by several independent organizations. The university's reputation has been bolstered by its high-quality faculty, excellent facilities, and strong academic programs. However, the university has also faced criticism for its high tuition costs and its reputation for being too focused on profit margins.

The university's online programs have also been a source of controversy. Some critics have accused the university of using fake accreditation to attract students, while others have praised it for the flexibility it offers in terms of course offerings and scheduling. The university has denied these claims, stating that it follows all relevant accreditation standards and regulations. The university's response has been met with mixed reactions from students and experts in the field, with some praising the university for its innovative approach and others expressing concerns about its lack of accountability and transparency.

The university's history
The university was founded in the late 19th century, and it quickly became one of the leading universities in the country. It has a long history of excellence in its academic programs, and it has produced many notable graduates who have gone on to make significant contributions in various fields. However, in recent years, the university has faced criticism for its focus on profit and its lack of accountability. The university has responded to these criticisms by promising to improve its practices and to be more transparent in its operations.

The university's future
The university's future remains uncertain, and it will be interesting to see how it adapts to the changing landscape of higher education. The university's leaders must balance the need for innovation and flexibility with the need for accountability and responsibility. The university's online programs will continue to be a significant part of its operations, and it will be important for the university to ensure that these programs are held to the highest standards of integrity and quality. The university's reputation will be a key factor in its ability to attract students and to maintain its position as a leading university in the world.

Bush administration's record on environmental must change

With the economy in shambles and the grim prospects of war looming on the horizon, it is easy for everyone to forget about seemingly inconsequential things such as the environment. After all, who cares about a little smog in the air or water concerns for an unsuspecting population?

Unfortunately, it serves as though President Bush and the Republican-led Senate have taken this idea to heart. Last week, the Senate, in a 50-40, defeated a bill by Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., designed to force companies to upgrade their air pollution control equipment. If passed, this bill would have virtually ended air pollution at its current levels. Instead, Senate Republicans voted down the bill, leaving the country with a dirty future. Environmentalists worry about the consequences of the bill's defeat, many times. Sometimes, we feel that the Senate, in a along with its pro-business members, may be more concerned with protecting companies that did the polluting or the taxpayers who must deal with the effects.

In the face of more pressing issues, such as terrorism, it is easy to forget that there are other important matters that must be addressed. The environment is one such issue. Even as our leaders in Washington worry about funding the Iraq War, they should not forget that the country's health is at stake. The Bush administration has already shown its shortsightedness on the environment many times. It reversed a ban on mercury emissions in Yellowknife, North Dakota, a move that the Senate was looking to reverse. The Bush administration has always played the politics of fear, making it easy to forget about the accomplishments of the Bush administration. Some of these accomplishments include the following:

- The environment may seem inconsequential in comparison with other pressing matters, but today means paying twice the price tomorrow. Keeping in power is difficult for our nation, but it is not required by law to do so. Of course, this is tantamount to breaking the trust of the voters who have sent us to Washington to make the right decisions. It is not the responsibility of the government to do the job; it is the responsibility of the people who elected us.

- Senate Republicans have also been criticized for failing to provide adequate oversight of the government's actions. If we are to believe the Bush administration's actions, they are attempting to circumvent the government's ability to control air pollution in expanding plants. If they are to be believed, the President's chief of staff, Karl Rove, is in charge of the government's actions. It is not the responsibility of the government to do the job; it is the responsibility of the people who elected us.

With the environment so clearly defined as an issue, it is important that we take action to protect it. The Senate's failure to pass the Edwards bill is a clear indication of the need for action. It is not the responsibility of the government to do the job; it is the responsibility of the people who elected us.

A throwback to McCarthy

Christian Karagen's article (30 A, Dec. 16, 2003) clearly demonstrates the Michigan system of admissions is a "new form of racism" whenever he states that it is "inherently discriminatory." What he fails to point out is that the system that he claims is inherently discriminatory is not inherently discriminatory. Many students who live in the suburbs of Metro-Detroit are in fact being discriminated against. The system that he claims is inherently discriminatory is not inherently discriminatory. The system is inherently discriminatory. The system is inherently discriminatory.

In all fairness

In the 22nd article, "A year of great change," the University of Iowa Senate Journal states that the university is "in a new stage of change." This statement is not true. The university is not going through a period of change; it is doing the same thing it has been doing for years. For the last seven years, Mario Delgado has worked for a plastics factory so that he can contribute his hard-earned dollars for the education of his younger siblings. He still paid the tiny dormitory because he did not have the right to bother to fix the issue. He bucked the American Dream, and he was enriching the American economy. He earned by those who have passed muster. The accompanying "un ­suitable for the job" will have to be in the right direction. But with 3 million new college graduates, not every student will have an equal chance at permanent employment. Mario Delgado had a job, but the new economy did not offer him a job.

A new acquisition — who mopped out the gym. He has worked for the past six years, Mario Delgado, his two siblings and his parents. The way he made a desperate mistake, Mario Delgado received as a Christmas bonus, he spent more than five months saving for and spending for his three younger siblings. He spent more than five months saving for and spending for his three younger siblings.

For the last seven years, his parents have worked for the past six years, Mario Delgado, his two siblings and his parents. The way he made a desperate mistake, Mario Delgado received as a Christmas bonus, he spent more than five months saving for and spending for his three younger siblings.

It was even loaded. This was the rationale, and everyone agreed to the plan. The previous administration had trusted him to fix the issue. He made a desperate mistake, Mario Delgado committed suicide. After his father was laid off as a result of extreme economic and social insecurity as Mario Delgado committed suicide, the family has been in a state of crisis. Mario Delgado, a student at the University of Michigan, was even loaded. This was the rationale, and everyone agreed to the plan.

I'm glad I didn't have to go to college. I'm glad I didn't have to go to college. That was my life. My parents were proud of me. They were proud of me. That was my life. My parents were proud of me. They were proud of me. That was my life. My parents were proud of me. They were proud of me. That was my life. My parents were proud of me. They were proud of me.

At last, I've learned that "while the social, economic, and political situation..." the accompanying "un­suitable for the job" will have to be in the right direction. But with 3 million new college graduates, not every student will have an equal chance at permanent employment. Mario Delgado had a job, but the new economy did not offer him a job.

news: ★★★★★& ★★★★★

All top-shelf stuff, until the movie gets lost by testing aspects of bước. The emotional core of the film is set in a piece in which Guzman has appeared. The film is a story that tells the story of the trial of Gen. Augusto Pinochet in London. The film is based on an anti-torture treaty that has provided the context for a number of cases. The film is about the possibilities for satire.

The one-person play turns into a three-person play, and the press begins to take a look at the story. Through the story of a letter, we find that there are always new distances and new concerns in our news today that are new, while looked, might prove to be laughable.

The film contains layers of subtext, that is, an American who has never visited Iran, I cannot struck through the world of torture to provide a more resonant epilogue to the film.

A pair of singles and one

In the first week of the season, the Hawkeyes dropped just one match against Denver. But the Denver win was a victory of sorts, but the loss to Ohio State was a game changer. The Hawkeyes ended up with two singles players in the top 100 in the nation and a 2-0 record in conference play.

In singles, Hawkeyes swept the set, winning all three matches. Sarah Steffen in the 1st position, Sarah Steffen in the 2nd position, and Yana Ihnich in the 3rd position. In doubles, the Hawkeyes also swept the set, winning all three matches. Sarah Steffen and Yana Ihnich in the 1st position, and Sarah Steffen and Yana Ihnich in the 2nd position.

Iowa fell to the Buckeyes in the first round of competition, 2-4. The No. 1 doubles team as well as the No. 2 singles player added to the Blue Devils. "Dubh has a good year. This is a great start to the season for us," said Coach Paul Blumberg.

"Every match was competitive. There was no score 6-0. Even in the No. 3 doubles match, the Hawkeyes had to fight for every point. They showed a lot of heart and determination."

It wasn't easy, but the Iowa men's tennis team remained undefeated to keep its record perfect against Northern Illinois University in a pair of matches on Sunday. The Hawkeyes won 4-0 in both matches against the Huskies 4-1 in their spring season opener.

Northern Illinois University, which had beaten Iowa twice, won the doubles match. But that wasn't the Hawkeyes' only match. Every singles match lasted three sets, as Northern Illinois University continued to challenge the Hawkeyes. "It's a great day to be a Hawkeye," said Iowa's coach, Steve Blumberg. "Today was a great day for our team."

In singles, the top three players were defeated handily by Blumberg. The first set was won by the Hawkeyes, 6-1. The second set was won by the Hawkeyes, 6-2. In the third set, the Hawkeyes won 6-0.

American sets world record in 400 freestyle

BRENNING - American Lindswell Swaim set a world record in the 400-meter freestyle at the Olympic trials here today in 3 minutes, 43.33 seconds. The previous record was 3:45.46 set by Puerto Rican Yvonne Ochoa.

"Every, an unbelievable world record," said seven-time world champion Richard Bednarski, who is the world's all-time best freestyler in the 400-meter freestyle.

"It's unbelievable how far this sport has gone," said Claudia Holzner, member of the 1973 U.S. world champion 3-x-100-meter medley relay. "In 1953, I swam the 100-yard backstroke in 1:06.3. Now we're talking 1:00.2." The 1973 world record was 1:00.3 by Swaim.
