Sloths triumph again: Green wins

BY TINA STEIN AND KELLY O'BRIEN
THE DAILY IOWAN

Nate Green, a junior from Fort Dodge, claimed the UI Student Government presidency Tuesday night in an election that saw the highest voter turnout in recent years.

Green, a political-science and business major with no previous UISG experience, earned 39 percent of the votes from the 5,523 students who voted Monday and Tuesday in the elections on ISIS.

He and Giant Sloth running mate Mayrose Wegmann edged out Bryan Stacy and Maggie Moore, whose ticket received 32.5 percent of the vote.

"When I heard my name, I was happy to be elected, relieved it's all over, and anxious to start," said Green, 21. "I can't wait to finally get in office."

After regaining lost sleep, the eight-member ticket's attention will turn toward continuing several initiatives started by current UISG President Nick Herbold, including pitching a conditional-tuition plan to help stave off large tuition increases and fighting a 21-bar ordinance.

Green plans to work with Herbold and Vice President Matt Blizek to form a student-government task force that will examine the 21-bar ordinance and work with city councilors.

Herbold tapped Green, his fraternity brother at Sigma Phi Epsilon, to carry on the legacy of the Giant Sloth Party, which has been invincible in its first three years in student-government politics. When Nick Klenske started the party during his run for UISG president, it was a coalition of liberal-leaning groups. Following the election of Green, a Republican, it will almost certainly move in a more moderate direction, even though Klenske was elected on the ticket as a senator.

Green acknowledged that the Sloth Party, with its trademark gorilla costume and attention-grabbing antics, "helped us gain more attention."

"With four candidates you need to do something different to get your name recognized," he said.

Presidential candidate Tim Oldeen accused Green's ticket of using unfair tactics and filed several complaints with the Student Elections Board. Oldeen had first raised complaints last week during a debate with the candidates.

"The Green-Wegmann party has cheated all day long," said Oldeen, who received 7.5 percent of the vote. "It's disheartening."

UISG goes it nearly alone at Statehouse

BY AMIR EFRATI
THE DAILY IOWAN

Plagued by waning student interest, only a handful of UI Student Government representatives will travel to Des Moines today, determined to stave off another tuition hike as Iowa lawmakers prepare to set the state's budget.

Students from Iowa's three public universities will converge at the State Capitol to hold a third-annual rally and speak face-to-face with legislators, hoping to pressure them to halt the reduction in appropriations for higher education that has raised UI tuition by nearly 50 percent over the last three years.

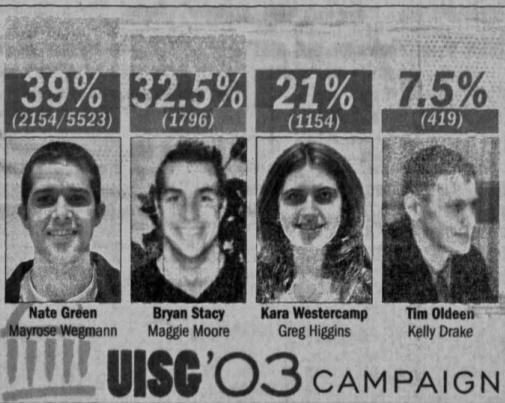

Weather permitting, the university will send a delegation of approximately 12 — mostly UISG representatives — to the last-minute plea expected to attract a combined 45 students from Iowa State University and the University of Northern Iowa.

"All we're asking is to stop the bleeding now," said UISG Vice President Matt Blizek, a co-organizer of the trip, which is open to all UI students. "If they maintain the level [of funding] where they are at now, we'll be happy."

Cuts to the state's public universities during the last and current fiscal year totaled $124 million — $2,780 per student, and in November 2002, the state Board of Regents approved a 17.6 percent tuition increase, marking the third-straight double-digit tuition increase to hit public university students in Iowa.

But even as the "lobbyists" board vans and head for the Capitol, some say they will reflect upon the lack of student participation in lowering the costs of higher education.

Iowa man, 20 others killed in Philippines

BY JOHN MOLSEED
THE DAILY IOWAN

An Iowa City woman said her brother, a Southern Baptist missionary who was killed by a bomb in the Philippines on Tuesday, never let danger keep him from doing what he thought was right.

While serving in Vietnam, Bill Hyde escaped unscathed when the mission he was at in Da Nang was attacked by Vietcong forces.

But a bomb hidden in a backpack on Monday claimed the Iowa man's life when it ripped through the Davao airport, killing 20 others and wounding 144.

"He sounds like Rambo," said Hyde's brother-in-law, Dick Brooker of Iowa City. "But that's not what he was like. He was just a jolly giant."

The sister of the 59-year-old UI alumnus, Barbara Brooker, spent Tuesday at her Iowa City home, talking to friends, family, and well-wishers.

"He loved it there," she said. "You have to love what you're doing and love the people, or you wouldn't go back and stay for 25 years."

She pulled out recent photos of her brother, who she remembers as fun-loving and caring, and between incoming phone calls spoke fondly and calmly about Hyde.

"In our beliefs, we believe if we do as the Lord

'Prank' fliers draw business' ire

UI, U.S. Bank, Englert featured on 'drug promotion'

BY JAMES BAETKE
THE DAILY IOWAN

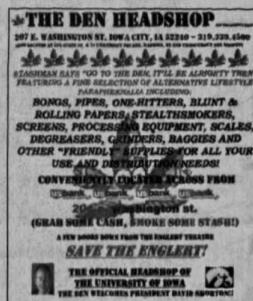

Fliers drawing attention to a local business' products associated with marijuana brewed anger among some business owners Tuesday after the names and logos of their establishments appeared on the signs, which were plastered around campus and downtown.

The fliers, promoting the headshop in the rear of the Den, 207 E. Washington St., prompted store manager Daniel Cope to call all off-duty employees and order them to tear down the leaflets.

"I'm really upset right now," he said.

He denied that the shop was involved with the incident, and he would not speculate about whether the fliers were an attempt to draw attention to the store's "tobacco shop."

The fliers read, "Stashman says, 'Go to the Den, it'll be alrighty then," and were complete with marijuana smiley faces and catch phrases.

The store's "tobacco shop," located in the rear of the establishment, was temporarily shut down after the fliers were posted, which declare the Den to be the UI's "official headshop" and welcome newly inaugurated UI President David Skorton. The venue, which sells glass pipes and bongs, reopened later in the afternoon.

The incident comes just a week after federal authorities charged nine people in four grand jury indictments brought in Iowa under "Operation Headhunter," part of a national crackdown on trafficking in products associated with illegal drug use, including bongs and marijuana pipes. Authorities said they seized more than $2 million worth of illegal drug paraphernalia in Iowa in the operation.

The Drug Enforcement Administration raided four Iowa businesses in Iowa City, Des Moines, and Ames in 2001 for selling products similar to those found at the Den, charging the then-owner of Iowa City's defunct Hemp Cat with knowingly and intentionally selling drug paraphernalia, including bongs and pipes.

The fliers, which made their way into UI residence halls, detail the Den's merchandise as "bongs, pipes, scales, and 'friendly' supplies for all your use and distribution needs." And although Cope admits the store does sell glass-blown pipes in its tobacco shop, the business "follows all the rules," he said.

Iowa law states that shops selling equipment or products intended to be used with drugs could face simple misdemeanor charges, said Johnson County

Study urges screening for cancer

BY CASEY WAGNER
THE DAILY IOWAN

Colorectal cancer can be easily detected and treated, yet many Iowans are not aware of the risk and are failing to get screened, UI researchers said in a report released Tuesday.

Colorectal cancer is projected to be diagnosed in 1,100 women and 1,000 men this year in Iowa, according to the annual report, "Cancer in Iowa: 2003."

Many Iowans are not aware of the risk of the cancer in the colon or rectum, which is expected to cause 740 deaths this year, said Kathleen McKeen, the director of the Iowa Cancer Registry.

"If you get the screen, you may be prolonging your life," she said. "We want to get the word out about [colorectal cancer] and that it is something you can detect and change."

Experts recommend that anyone over the age of 50 be screened for the disease every five to 10 years. Colorectal cancer testing can take many forms, including a fecal-blood test every year, a barium enema, which provides a radiological visualization of the large bowel, and a colonoscopy, which examines the large bowel.

Authored by the UI-based State Health Registry of Iowa and the Iowa Cancer Registry, the report shows that there were an average of 1,840 cases of colorectal cancer reported each year in the 1970s. That number rose by nearly 400 per year in the 1990s. Between 1973 and 2000, the disease claimed 23,527 lives.

However, because of advances in early detection, deaths due to colorectal cancer are down, but McKeen said many Iowans still do not know of the possible risks.

The report shows many more Iowans screen themselves for breast cancer than they do for colorectal cancer.

"Women are getting out and getting mammograms. Thus, we see a significant number of early stage breast cancers," said Charles Lynch, the director of the health directory and a UI professor of epidemiology. "However, for colorectal cancer, there seems to be less acceptance and understanding among both men and women of the screen procedures."

Overall, Iowa will see 14,700 new cancer cases and 6,400 deaths due to cancer in 2003, a slight increase from last year, the report said.

The report also projects leading cancer deaths among men will be due to lung, prostate, and colorectal cancers. For women, leading cancer deaths will be due to lung, breast, and colorectal cancers.

Lung cancer will account for one of every four cancer deaths in Iowa this year, the report shows.

In Johnson County, the report estimates there will be 340 cases and 135 deaths due to cancer this year.

All projections were based on data from the Iowa Department of Public Health and the cancer registry, and they reflect cancer rates seen nationally. McKeen said projected numbers in previous years have proven reliable when compared with the real numbers.

"As in years past, we are seeing stability in the number of newly diagnosed cases and deaths," Lynch said. "However, cancer remains the second-leading cause of death in Iowa."

McKeen said new cases and deaths due to cancer have remained steady since the cancer registry was created in 1973. The registry projected 6,300 deaths and 14,600 cancer cases for 2002.

"If you would compare one year with the next, there would be no great difference," she said.

Skorton reassures faculty about legislators

He says funds will not be tied directly to economic impact

BY JEFFREY PATCH
THE DAILY IOWAN

UI President David Skorton attempted to calm the Faculty Senate's concerns that state appropriations will be unofficially tied to the university's economic influence in the state, telling the body that the university's core missions remain education, research, and service.

Skorton stressed, however, that the school and its faculty must have a stronger presence in Des Moines to influence state legislators. He pledged that he will personally travel to Des Moines several times to lobby for the university.

"It's important to make our case about the special attributes about a research institution like ours," he said.

Faculty leaders and Skorton stressed that while economic development is important, the university should not be judged overall as an institution based on success in economic improvement.

At a Feb. 22 forum, local legislators urged the faculty to be more concerned with economic development in Iowa. Legislators expressed worry about the state's reeling economy and the low number of college-educated workers in Iowa.

Rep. Mary Mascher, D-Iowa City, challenged the UI to create more qualified workers and economic opportunities in Iowa's workforce. She warned that the state's economy cannot survive with college students leaving at the current rate.

Sen. Robert Dvorsky, D-Coralville, said the university needs to be concerned with economic development and prosperity throughout the state.

"It's the University of Iowa, not the University of Iowa City," Dvorsky said at the February forum.

Dvorsky and Mascher could not be reached for comment Tuesday.

Some faculty were taken aback when they watched the legislators' taped comments at Tuesday's Faculty Senate meeting.

"Some of these comments show a certain disconnect between what's been happening at the university and what's been happening in Des Moines," said Downing Thomas, the chairman of the Faculty Senate Governmental Relations Committee.

Katherine Tachau, a UI history professor and faculty senator, denounced the "punitive tone" of the comments.

"One could infer that we were being blamed for lackluster economic development," she said.

On the other hand, Skorton said, many new legislators expressed enthusiasm about listening to his ideas.

"I do think the mood at the Statehouse is more conciliatory and cooperative than in the past couple of years," he said.

The eight-member faculty Governmental Relations Committee tentatively plans to make multiple trips to Des Moines to lobby legislators. A luncheon meeting with area legislators will be held Friday to discuss those trips and other issues, including the university's "long-range welfare" and how to cultivate a relationship between the Legislature and the university, Downing said.

In other business, the Senate unanimously recommended that students receive a recess during the Monday and Tuesday before the Thanksgiving hiatus. The measure will be presented to the state Board of Regents at its March 11 and 12 meeting in Ames.

The faculty group also contentiously passed a peace resolution urging that "all available peaceful means be fully explored to resolve security issues with Iraq." The measure received significant opposition from some members, who thought the statement reeked of politics; however, it eventually passed, 16-9.

Enviro Safe denies fire responsibility

Attorneys for a South Dakota company that is being sued in connection with the 2001 Old Capitol dome blaze denied claims of negligence in Johnson County court Tuesday.

Enviro Safe Air refuted allegations that it acted negligently by allegedly using open flames to remove asbestos from the 163-year-old building in November 2001.

"We believe that further court proceedings will show that our allegations that other parties are responsible for the damages are true and correct," said Enviro Safe attorney Charles Miller.

Renaissance Restoration, the Galena-based contractor that filed the lawsuit last month, is seeking to recover $120,000 for scaffolding equipment that was lost in the blaze.

The UI had contracts with three companies to perform restoration work on the historic Iowa landmark when a fire destroyed the golden dome and cupola on Nov. 21, 2001.

UI General Counsel Mark Schantz, who has said the university will take action to recoup a portion of the $5.3 million in damages by the end of March, said the school has yet to file claims.

Schantz also said the university may pursue a lawsuit against Enviro Safe if arbitration fails.

Shive-Hattery Inc., an Iowa City company that is also named in the lawsuit, denied negligence claims last week.

Area man will be arraigned in Rienow burglary incident

A North Liberty man charged with deceiving several UI students to gain access to their dorm rooms will be arraigned March 20.

John Lamar Morales, 26, is charged with three counts of second-degree burglary and one count of impersonating a public official.

Morales allegedly used a business card belonging to Stacey Gates, a 6th District parole officer, to enter three dorm rooms in Rienow Residence Hall on Feb. 19.

Morales, who was charged with fourth-degree theft in Linn County on Feb. 10, allegedly told students he worked for the Drug Enforcement Administration and needed to conduct a drug search. Morales allegedly questioned tenants about possessing drugs and rifled through their belongings.

Court records show Morales did not remove any items, and UI police Capt. Lawrence Langley could not reveal the man's motives for entering the rooms.

Board wants traffic-stop guidelines

BY ANNIE SHUPPY
THE DAILY IOWAN

The Police Citizens Review Board is recommending that Iowa City police provide blanket guidelines for all officers in dealing with disobedient drivers during traffic stops.

The recommendation comes approximately two weeks after the city reached a $20,000 out-of-court settlement with Iowa City resident Robert Brooks. The UI Hospitals and Clinics emergency-room technician alleged that the police used excessive force during an Oct. 10, 2002, traffic stop in which he failed to comply with an officer's orders to get back into his vehicle. Brooks was hit twice with pepper spray and kned in the torso.

The videotaped incident, which was broadcast on local television, prompted the Iowa City City Council to charge the police watchdog group on Jan. 13 with reviewing the police department's policy. The city has denied any wrongdoing in the Brooks case.

Police-board Chairman John Stratton said the current traffic-stop policy is good, but he conceded that one deficiency is that it does not define what officers should do when people interfere with police acts or refuse to obey orders.

"It is left to the discretion of the individual officer," he said of current protocol.

At its Tuesday meeting, the board emphasized that officers know how to prevent escalation of routine traffic stops into more serious episodes, as well as de-escalating such incidents. The group's recommendation will be sent to City Manager Steve Atkins for consideration.

"There is still a lot of officer discretion, but we're emphasizing preventing escalation," said board member John Watson.

The new policy would provide officers with a set of choices for handling difficult situations rather than telling officers what to do, Stratton said.

Under current policy, officers use their own discretion in handling uncooperative drivers, including the use of force, Stratton told the board. He added that officer training for such situations may make "trial and error" less necessary.

"There are judgments that have to be made, and situations vary," he said. "A policy may be developed for this kind of situation."

There are some precautionary measures officers must take in instances where individuals get out of their cars, Watson said.

"There's a risk here; it is potentially dangerous to both sides," he said. "There should be more duty and responsibility to de-escalate these situations."

The board also called for expanded efforts to spread information to the community about the traffic-stop policy. Iowa City police currently distribute informative videos and brochures, which some board members said should be made more available to the public.

"We want the public to know what to expect and how to behave," Stratton said.

Gary Kenzer (right), the executive director of the Magen David Adom U.S.A. association, spoke about the functions and needs of the group at the Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity house on Tuesday night.

Israeli group on a mission to save

BY MATTHEW MOSS
THE DAILY IOWAN

The mission of the Magen David Adom is to save lives.

The group has been doing just this since it was organized by a group of volunteer doctors in the Tel Aviv, Israel, in 1930. Whether the situation is a terrorist attack, natural disaster, or a need for blood, the group's ambulances roll into action for those in need of medical attention. Aside from deploying ambulances, Magen David Adom functions as a blood bank for civilian use.

Gary Kenzer, the executive director of the U.S. branch of the Israel-based humanitarian-aid organization, drove this point home in a speech Tuesday night at the Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity house. The Jewish fraternity is assisting in a nationwide campaign to raise $100,000 to fund a new Magen David Adom trauma center.

While no location has been specified, the new center will be located where it "will serve the most diverse population it could possibly serve," Kenzer said. The mission statement of Magen David Adom is to assist anyone, regardless of ethnicity or religion.

"We believe to save a life is to save a world," Kenzer said. "It's absolutely the right thing to do."

The new trauma center will come at a time when the group needs it most.

"Whether we want it or not, it looks like it's going to happen," he said, referring to the impending U.S. war with Iraq. "Israel is going to be brought in on this conflict."

While Magen David Adom is making efforts to fortify itself against terrorist attacks, Kenzer said the psychological toll of terrorism is causing post-traumatic stress syndrome in the group's staff.

He also stressed the difficulties the group is having in finding acceptance within the International Red Cross community, adding that the lack of acceptance from the international community stems from reluctance to accept Israel as a nation.

Fortunately for Magen David Adom, the American Red Cross has been very supportive. The two organizations have pledged mutual support through blood donations and emergency personnel in case of an emergency.

"They're catching hell for it," Kenzer said while explaining that the agreement is unpopular among the international community.

He also brought attention to the aid distributed worldwide during times of crisis. In the last three years, such efforts have included sending paramedics to disaster victims in Congo and India, sending food and medical supplies to Ethiopia and Eritrea, and donating more than 6,000 units of blood to the United States after 9/11.

"When there's pain and suffering, we're not going to walk, we're going to run to it," Kenzer said of the group's global-aid efforts. "A life is a life."

County runs into opposition on corridor

BY BRANDON CAMPBELL
THE DAILY IOWAN

Johnson County engineers unsuccessfully proposed three options for surveying the county's rural area for future development as residents voiced concern that plans to upgrade and build new roads are unclear, possibly leading to more accidents while soiling the land's untouched beauty.

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors decided not to pursue suggestions from Alan Miller, an assistant county engineer, and engineer Mike Gardner regarding the North Corridor Roads Feasibility Study on land located north of Iowa City between Highway 1 and Highway 965. Supervisors said they wanted to gather more input from local property owners, who have said developing the area infringes on their rights.

Option one proposed ending all studies of the area's sewer system, roads, and resources. Option two proposed limiting the study to land between Newport and East Overlook roads. The third option called for studying the entire North Corridor and would have run up the highest tab, exceeding the project's $6 million budget.

Supervisors charged engineers to focus on examining future development on two parcels of largely agricultural land called Phase One and Phase Two, which could possibly be rezoned for heavier development.

Local residents expressed discontent at the supervisors' Tuesday work session about the North Corridor Roads Feasibility Study.

Paul Stedral, a Newport Township resident, said that realigning Newport Road will cause more accidents, because new roads with wider lanes only tempt people to drive faster than the speed limit.

"If more roads are built, you must lower the speed limit," said Stedral, who has lived in the area for more than 65 years. He suggested that the county use existing roads.

Iowa City resident Tom

Carsner said there is no clarity in the county's plans.

"It's frustrating that it wants to build roads before it has a comprehensible plan," he said. "The board should look more at the whole picture and not just focus on the roads."

Dennis Byrnes, a Newport Township resident, said he is concerned about developing on pristine landscape.

"It baffles me when I see the plan," he said. "The appreciation of the land is the beautiful areas."

Miller said the study should be completed by Oct. 1.

No more smoking at Micky's, Mondo's

BY CHRISTY B. LOGAN
THE DAILY IOWAN

Several Iowa City restaurants must remove the ashtrays from their establishments as a one-year exemption from the city's smoking ban runs out.

Upon its initial passage on March 1, 2002, at least 50 establishments were permitted to continue to allow smoking. The ordinance states that establishments collecting more than 50 percent of their revenue in food sales must be smoke-free.

Seventeen restaurants received one-year exemptions from the law to adjust their food and alcohol sales to meet city requirements.

Six of those establishments failed to meet city requirements and can no longer allow smoking: Mondo's Downtown, 212 S. Clinton St.; Micky's Irish Pub, 11 S. Dubuque St.; One Twenty Six, 126 E. Washington St.; Diamond Dave's, Old Capitol Town Center, Diamond Dave's Taco Co., 1604 Sycamore St.; and Morgan's Bar & Grill, 210 S. Dubuque St.

Eight of the restaurants — including the Mill Restaurant, 120 E. Burlington St., Malone's Irish Pub, 121 Iowa Ave., and First Avenue Club, 1550 First Ave. — filed paperwork with the city clerk by Monday, stating their alcohol sales account for more than 50 percent of revenues to remain exempt.

Three establishments — Buffalo Wild Wings Grill & Bar, Old Capitol Town Center, McInerney's, 161 Highway 1 West, and the Parthenon, 320 E. Burlington St. — are still temporarily exempt from the smoking ban because their exemptions started later than the others.

Phase two of the ordinance, which is scheduled to go into effect in March 2004, will require establishments to have alcohol sales of at least 65 percent in order to allow smoking.

Officials at Mondo's opted for the temporary lift from the ban to calculate the difference in sales between food and drinks, but they say neither of the sales were affected by the measure, said Susanne Kennedy, the restaurant's manager.

"It's not a fair playing ground," Kennedy said. "If you're going to do it, do it to everybody."

STATE

State to get tough on 'date rape' drug

DES MOINES (AP) — The House voted unanimously to significantly toughen penalties for selling a "date rape" drug that renders victims helpless.

"It is a particularly disgusting drug because of the way it is being abused," said Rep. George Eichhorn, R-Stratford, main backer of the measure. The House approved the measure on a 92-0 vote, sending it to the Senate where approval is likely.

The measure is aimed at the drug flunitrazepam, a colorless and tasteless drug, that knocks out those who take it and often wipes out their memory as well.

Predators sometimes slip the drug into the drinks of their targeted victims.

"It takes away their power to resist and remember," Eichhorn said.

Despite the potential for abusing the drug, the penalties for its use are relatively slight and are classified as a misdemeanor. Under the measure approved Tuesday, those convicted of making or selling the drug could get up to five years in prison, along with a $7,500 fine.

"We should show these predators we are serious about this crime," Eichhorn said.

Heather Priess, the coordinator of the Story County Sexual Assault Response Team, said she supports any effort to reduce sexual assaults but questions whether this bill will have much of an effect.

Priess said it's hard to determine if a sexual-assault victim was drugged because the drugs quickly pass through a person's system.

Story County has 50 to 60 sexual assault cases each year and has never confirmed the use of a date-rape drug, Priess said.

Green, Wegmann win UISG vote

The elections board will look into complaints filed against Green for illegally passing out fliers, sending out mass e-mails, and leaving posters behind in an Information Technology Center on Monday and Tuesday, restricted campaigning days. "A possible monetary fine will be given for such violations," said Nik Karpen, the elections-board chairman. Karpen said he is relieved the campaign is over and that voter turnout increased. Almost one-fifth of UI students voted, which might sound small but is double the number who voted in 2000. Candidates Bryan Stacy and Kara Westercamp were thankful for the opportunity to run in the elections, despite losing. "It's what the students decided. I back everything they say," said Westercamp, who received 21 percent of the vote. Stacy will now focus on opening a sports-supplements store and preparing for Spring Break in Acapulco.

"I am disappointed, and this is an unfortunate loss for the university," he said. Herbold encouraged Green to continue with programs that have already been established, such as dogears.net, a Web site that allows students to sell used textbooks to each other, and a campus community-cleanup project. "I am pleased with the past year and ready to turn it over to the next generation of Sloth leaders," Herbold said. While Green has no previous experience in UISG, running mate Wegmann has been involved in the organization this year as a senator and is its public-relations executive. A Democrat, she has also used her connections to work with local and state legislators. But she also received criticism for an e-mail she wrote to University Democrats in which she urged the group to help her defeat the "evil Republicans." She said the remark was a joke, but it sparked some tension during the campaign.

UISG notes apathy about tuition hikes

"A lot of students don't care or care enough to go down to talk with legislators, or [they] think it might not make a difference," said ISU student-government member Michael Banasiak, adding that three-successive tuition hikes have contributed to student torpor. Blizek said he was disappointed with the responses to last week's mass e-mail about the event sent to the UI's approximate 28,000 students. The UNI student government anticipates sending 30 to the rally, well below its goal of 55, said Ryan Hoffmann, the group's director of public relations. "I think students should be more angry at the way the state of Iowa has treated them the last few years," Blizek said, acknowledging that many barriers stand in the way of student participation, including the IMU Iraq teach-in, Ash Wednesday, and midterms. "I'd like to have 1,000 students there." Blizek said the universities' presence will send the message that cuts are affecting the entire state, damaging higher education — the state's economic engine — and killing Iowa's future economic development. At noon, UISG officials and other leaders will speak at a news conference demanding that the state fully fund higher education, reinstate a state-level work-study program, and — one of UISG President Nick Herbold's initiatives — push forward the date regents set tuition. Later, students will gather at the Capitol rotunda to rally and call out legislators from their offices. "The idea of students making their voices heard is extremely important," said newly inaugurated UI President David Skorton, warning that the rally might not be enough. "Legislators are dealing with real financial constraints now, and our voices, on behalf of the university, are one of many voices with needs." Former UISG President Nick Klenske, who frequented the State Capitol while in office and led a group of 25 UI students to an identical effort last year, echoed Skorton's sentiments, saying change won't happen overnight. After much deliberation, UI freshman Kyle Fitzgerald said he chose the trip to Des Moines over three classes and today's Iraq teach-in, but he feels helpless because more of his peers won't join him. "There aren't many students who are going, and I want to represent them," he said. "If they aren't worried about [tuition], what's going to get done?" Despite the expected low turnout, Blizek said any student trip to the Capitol has a positive effect. "We want to have a strong university presence at the Statehouse and let [lawmakers] know not to forget us," he said. "When they're cutting up the pie, make sure that we get a good piece."

left earlier today for Davao to oversee the police investigation. The explosion came as fighting between government troops and three rebel groups intensified in the country's southern region, particularly on the island of Mindanao. Davao is the largest city on the island and the second-largest in the country after Manila. In Washington, the White House said the blast appeared to be a terrorist attack. "The president condemns the bombing in the Philippines," spokesman Ari Fleischer said. "We are working closely with the Philippine government, which has fought valiantly in the war on terror." The bombings occurred approximately 200 miles east of the military base in Zamboanga City, where U.S. troops are training Philippine soldiers in anti-terrorism techniques. Some officials suggested that the attacks may have been carried out by the Moro Islamic Liberation Front, a large armed group seeking to create an Islamic state in the southern Philippines. For the last 1 1/2 years, the group and the government had observed a cease-fire, but the truce collapsed last month and the front declared that hostilities would resume. The guerrillas are accused of carrying out several attacks in recent days, including the bombings of a power station and transmission towers, which knocked out electricity in the region. Suspicion may also fall on Jemaah Islamiyah, the Southeast Asian Islamic terrorist network that is linked to Al Qaeda and is blamed for an Oct. 12, 2002, bombing on the Indonesian island of Bali that killed 202 people. Authorities say the network has links to the Moro Front. Hyde taught at the Faith Academy in Manila until his two sons, Steve and Tim, finished high school in the Pacific island nation. Hyde then moved to Mindanao, where he taught at a Baptist seminary. "They felt that was unsafe, and so they moved to Davao," Barbara said. For every four years of work, Hyde got a furlough for a year to return home. He most recently visited his family in Eastern Iowa from July 2001 until June 2002. Barbara Brooker takes comfort knowing she saw her brother last year, but she admits that his death probably hasn't fully sunk in. Hyde's sons are traveling to Davao to help their mother return to the United States. The younger son, Steve, is following in his father's footsteps, working as a missionary in Cambodia. The past year has dealt the Brookers more than their share of tragedies. Both Dick and Barbara Brooker's mothers died last March 1. Barbara Brooker is recovering from chemotherapy after a bout with breast cancer that spread to her spine. Despite these troubles and their recent tragedy, the couple remains upbeat. "Our faith gets us through these things," Barbara Brooker said, adding she takes comfort knowing her brother shared his with a piece of the world.

was dismayed by the flier and said his company was not involved. "We have not authorized our logo to be used," he said, adding that he is deciding what next to do and noting that he will not tolerate the logo's unauthorized use. The leaflet also reads that the Den is only "a few doors down from the Englert Theatre," and, in bold, red capital letters, exclaims, "SAVE THE ENGLERT." Englert Executive Director Justine Zimmer said the fliers were produced without her group's knowledge, adding that the Englert is linking into the incident. Zimmer said she will discuss the matter with the Englert Board of Directors and may contact the authorities. In addition, the fliers pictured Skorton and the UI Hawkeye trademark. "It's not something we like to see," said Steve Parrott, the director of University Relations. Parrott said Skorton saw the advertisement and dismissed it as a prank. The university has dropped the issue, Parrott said, adding that "we obviously do not have official headshops."

The Pianist is the film that Roman Polanski always said that he wanted to make.

The controversial and embattled director of such Hollywood classics as Chinatown and Rosemary's Baby, Polanski is a Holocaust survivor who, through sex scandals and Parisian banishment, has always maintained that he could make a Holocaust film. With stunning scenery and a remarkable actor in Adrien Brody, The Pianist is Polanski's dream realized.

The Pianist is based on Wladyslaw Szpilman's memoir, and it opens with Szpilman (Brody) playing the piano on Polish radio as the first German bombs begin to fall on Warsaw. An accomplished musician, Szpilman is thought to be the best piano player in Poland and perhaps the best pianist in the world.

Brody's Szpilman is an artistically aloof character who believes that, as the other countries in Europe begin to join the war against Germany, Nazi occupation of Poland will soon come to an end. Life for Polish Jews will return to normal, and

The Pianist has been nominated for seven Academy Awards.

Szpilman states that he will not be made to leave his home by the Nazi aggressors.

But the Nazi force becomes too strong for passive resisters such as Szpilman, and the film follows his family into the Warsaw Ghetto, uncompromisingly illustrating the wrath that the Nazis displayed toward the Jewish families. The black market is displayed in full, and we see children starve and grown men eat soup off of the cobblestone street to survive.

Unlike Steven Spielberg's Schindler's List, The Pianist does not focus on the concentration camps — Szpilman is placed in ghetto work-detail when the rest of Poland's Jews are loaded into boxcars and sent away to their deaths. Szpilman soon finds a way out of the ghetto and then into hiding with friends who move him around Warsaw from apartments to attics, including an apartment right across from a German hospital where Nazi soldiers from the Russian front are constantly being brought. From the windows of his different hiding places, Szpilman also becomes a firsthand witness to the Jewish and Polish uprising against the Nazis during the last years of the war.

The Pianist essentially becomes a story of survival. Brody is amazing in his turn as Szpilman, and he harks back to Hollywood actors during the silent era who had to say more with their eyes than they could with their mouths. Brody, especially during the film's final act, is given very little to say, but he makes up for this with superior acting that carries the film almost single-handedly. Of all the actors nominated this year for Best Actor, Brody's part as Szpilman is the most technically difficult to achieve because it relies so heavily on the actor's perfection of the craft. Brody accomplishes this feat perfectly; he is simply sensational.

The Pianist's simple title has behind it one of the most powerful films of the year. Although this is a movie made about one man, the film is nevertheless able to capture the personal strife of all Holocaust survivors. The Pianist marks a return to form for Polanski, whose energy and passion for his subject are more than evident in every scene.

Really singing the body electric

CHICAGO (AP) — It is a quest for 15 minutes of fame that can turn into a few humiliating moments of shame.

Still, a growing number of people are putting themselves out there — smiling or serious, sometimes scantily clad — asking strangers on the Internet and even celebrity judges on TV to rate their bodies and looks.

They post their photos on any number of Web sites, where Internet surfers can rate them on a scale of 1 to 10. And now a new TV show — ABC's "Are You Hot?" — is bringing the concept to prime time and taking the rating game to a new level.

Some people who've posted photos say the trend shouldn't be taken too seriously. That includes Desiree Koh, who posted photos of two male co-workers on a site called HotoNot.com, one of the first of many rating sites. "It was a form of affectionate ridicule," says Koh, a 25-year-old Chicagoan.

At least one of the co-workers, 28-year-old Heath Shackelford, was a little embarrassed at first but now thinks it's funny — "especially since the other guy got as low a rating as I did."

Many others post their own photos for all the World (Wide Web) to see.

"People do care what people think of them. Most say, 'I don't care.' But they do, inside. So this kind of gives them an idea," says a 29-year-old from south Florida named Dom, who'd only provide his first name. He said he doesn't want his friends to know he posted his photo on HowHotAmI.com and received a 5.0 rating out of 10.

"But I don't think I'm ugly, you know?" he says. "It's all in fun." Or is it?

Some experts believe the trend only further encourages negative body image and eating disorders that young people, in particular, already struggle with.

"We keep telling our kids, 'You're more than your bodies.' But that's not the message they're seeing on television and in magazines," says Jane Fleming, the executive director of the Renfrew Center Foundation, a national nonprofit that addresses the issue of eating disorders.

In one survey, for example, Brigham Young University researchers found that 80 percent of young women who read health and fitness magazines at least once a month forced themselves to vomit after meals to lose weight. That compares with 9 percent of the young women overall who said they did so.

Funding for U.S. national parks falls short under Bush's watch

The new budget proposed by the Bush administration fails to adequately fund the National Park Service, according to a national watchdog group. The National Parks Conservation Association said last month that the Bush budget fails to even come close to fulfilling the president's campaign promises for increased funding, thus driving the parks system deeper into crisis. To combat the fiscal crisis, some parks have turned to other sources of funding, which often create as many problems as they solve. Although matters of national security are certainly important, Bush also needs to protect our nation's national treasures from the perils of neglect.

When he was on the campaign trail, Bush promised the parks service $4.9 billion over five years to deal with the system's sizable backlog of maintenance needs, including bad roads, understaffing, and the preservation of historic structures. By the end of fiscal 2003, $1.8 billion will have been appropriated — and the backlog is still no closer to being eliminated. Part of the problem is that some of that money has to go to normal maintenance, in addition to dealing with the backlog. But mostly, parks just aren't getting enough funding to begin with. Great Smoky Mountain National Park, which has a $160 million backlog, received just $11 million each of the last two years to try to make a dent in that sizable figure.

A trivial problem? Hardly. In 2002 alone, the parks service reported more than 421 million visits, a stunning figure. Many of the nation's most popular and recognizable tourist attractions, from the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial to the Grand Canyon, are administered by the National Parks Service. Quite simply, the very things that epitomize America are going to waste because of governmental unwillingness to properly finance their upkeep.

Some parks have taken matters into their own hands in an attempt to generate revenue — and the results have been far from ideal. Yellowstone, the jewel of the parks system, briefly tried selling advertising banner space on its live Web feed of Old Faithful, in effect selling out one of nature's wonders to the highest corporate bidder. Mercifully, that plan ended before, say, Viagra could get on board.

A more popular method is to charge fees for anything and everything in a park: boat launches, picnic areas, campgrounds, etc. This practice, which exploded after the passage of the Recreational Fee Demonstration Program in 1996, has led to rampant fence-hopping.

America's national parks are valuable both because of their extreme popularity and natural/historical value. By underfunding the already desperate parks system, the current administration condemns this important resource to a slow, painful decay. There now exists the risk that no matter how many wars we win abroad, we won't have anything left at home worth fighting for.

Drinking is fun

In response to all the controversy and debate concerning the 21-ordinance, I think everybody is missing the most decisive point: Drinking is fun.

One of the most important rites of college is getting drunk and seeing how much you can handle. It's a time-honored tradition that will continue for as long as man walks this Earth.

Alcohol is the oldest drug known to mankind. This stuff has been around for tens of thousands of years, and you can bet people have been getting drunk for as long. To say a panel of community leaders can solve this millennia old "problem" through policy is arrogant.

Let's be honest. Debatably, the two most fun activities people can do in their lifetimes are drinking and sex. Most other pastimes fall miserably short. To say students will willingly give up drinking to take part in NiteGames, movie nights, pizza parties, or any other grade-school alternatives planned by officials is ludicrous.

The only alternative activity people would theoretically give up drinking for is sex. But until the university sponsors some sort of OrgyNite, drinking is here to stay. Thank God for that.

Thus, it's no surprise the commission's recommendations will serve to severely weaken Title IX.

The arguments against Title IX are illogical. It's a myth that women and girls inherently aren't as interested in sports as men and boys. Prior to Title IX, 1 in 27 high-school girls played varsity sports in 1972. Now it's 1 in 2.5. A 1997 study commissioned by the Illinois Gender Equity Commission found that when schools offer more sports for girls, girls request even further athletics opportunities. Thus, it's a matter of accessibility and opportunity, not inherent interest.

It's also a myth that Title IX harms men's sports programs. The number of boys and men participating in sports has grown as well since Title IX's inception. Approximately 2.8 million girls currently participate in high-school athletics compared with 3.9 million boys. In the years since Title IX was passed, the number of men's teams and the amount of men's budgets have increased. There's actually been a 23 percent increase in the number of male college varsity athletics. For every new dollar spent on women's sports since Title IX, $2 has been spent on men's sports. The General Accounting Office 2001 study documented that 72 percent of colleges and universities added women's teams without dropping men's teams. Men's sports such as gymnastics and wrestling declined in the 1980s, when Title IX wasn't being enforced by the Reagan and Bush Sr. administrations. The declines are a result of institutional budget priorities and shifts in interests.

Furthermore, contrary to claims, Title IX does not establish quotas. Proportionality guidelines are just that and are not required in order to be in compliance with Title IX. It is one way institutions can show continual progress in eliminating discrimination. Why is it that every time there's a Republican administration in power, women's equality takes a backward step?

Clinton-brand 'security'

I find it interesting that the University Lecture Committee would pay Bill Clinton $50,000 for a lecture on "Global Security."

Was it not during the Clinton administration that North Korea acquired nuclear weapons, Iraq ignored the will of the United Nations and developed weapons of mass destruction, absolutely nothing was done about Al Qaeda despite four attacks on American interests, an offer from Sudan for custody of Osama bin Laden was turned down, and the U.S. government (despite objections from the CIA and Pentagon) sold missiles to China capable of hitting the U.S. mainland (and then proceeded to tell the incoming Bush administration that Al Qaeda and China are the two biggest threats to U.S. security)?

For the committee's next lecture, I believe Ken Lay is available for a lecture on corporate responsibility.

Title IX, the law that bans sex discrimination in federally funded schools, is under attack by the Bush administration. Bush formed the Commission on Opportunity in Athletics and stacked it and the town meetings with Title IX opponents.

Still kids? A 21-ordinance and 593 letters later ...

The City Council is at it again. Whether the group ever stopped going after it, though, is debatable. You know what I'm talking about — the only issue in this community that can draw masses of students to action: alcohol.

Some people (especially a certain five city councilors) will say that this "Bloc for Beer" is motivated by a bunch of underagers who don't want to lose access to the bars, and subsequently, their "right" to drink. I respectfully disagree. I have passed the minimum legal drinking age, and I still throw my support behind the efforts to allow underage patrons into downtown establishments. Why? Because no college student should be treated like a child.

And yet that's exactly how the councilors treat us. Take, for example, the council's assertion that an abundance of e-mails from parents of UI students demonstrates sufficient support for a 21-ordinance. An interesting argument, for sure. But the last time I checked, very few college students still live with their parents. Many don't even receive financial support from their parents; they are paying their way with scholarships, loans, and work — some work as much as 40 hours a week.

And because a substantial number of the university's undergraduates hail from Chicagoland, it hardly seems reasonable that a bunch of suburban parents determine Iowa City ordinances. In fact, Councilor Steve Kanner has noted that some of the e-mails have come from as far as Ohio and Virginia.

Some parents have expressed concern that the university's nightlife seems to revolve around the bars. In an e-mail to the City Council, Margie Ebert, the mother of a UI student, wrote that she is uncomfortable that her son visits the bars. That's fine, Ms. Ebert. Talk to your son about it. Teach him about responsibility, and peer pressure, and alternative activities — all that good stuff. The rest of us should not have to bear your burden.

This parental-support logic that the City Council is pointing to for support of its 21-ordinance is flawed. To see a similar example, it need look no further than the university itself. This same logic has Dean Phillip Jones' office sending tattletale letters to the parents of students caught drinking underage.

That's right. Or did we all conveniently forget this practice was still taking place? In full force, too. Jones' office reports that as of mid-February, it had sent out 593 letters. That's 593 pieces of paper and 593 envelopes with 593 university-paid postage stamps. To 593 parents (or sets of parents) who may or may not care what their child is up to. That's 593 students that the university has played Big Brother to, sticking its nose where it doesn't belong.

UI students caught drinking underage are faced with legal repercussions that go by the name of PAULA (possession of alcohol under the legal age). Unless those students are at the university on publicly funded scholarships or their parents are paying all the tuition, the university really has no business in those students' legal affairs. And even then, whether parents should be notified is questionable. After all, college students are adults, no longer answerable to their parents' authority.

And that is what the City Council must keep in mind as it considers the 21-ordinance. It cannot point to parent support as a justification for this ordinance. If it has community support and if the council sees no better alternative (assuming it looks hard for one), then its decision will carry more authority.

But assume the council still prefers to treat us as our parents' children, ignoring concerns that raising the bar-entrance age to 21 will only push the drinking "problem" to other places (namely, house parties) and result in the proliferation of fake IDs, an increase in drunk driving, sexual violence, and residential disturbances. Assume councilors pass the ordinance this summer. (That's the icing on the cake, really: The drafted ordinance is set to make its first appearance before the council in April, which means the councilors can proceed unimpeded over the summer months — when most students are conveniently out of town.)

Assuming all this, the student "Bloc for Beer" will use its very adult rights to do one of two things: Petition to have the ordinance put on the ballot as a referendum (which the student population will undoubtedly vote down) or vote the councilors out of office.

Korea intercept surprises analysts

BY DOUG STRUCK AND JOOHEE CHO
WASHINGTON POST

TOKYO — The interception of an American reconnaissance plane by North Korean MiGs this weekend followed repeated alarms from North Korea that it expected to be attacked during the military exercises that U.S. and South Korean forces began Tuesday.

North Korea applied surprising force, sending out four aircraft, two of them modern versions of the MiG. The distances that U.S. officials say the jets flew and the closeness they maintained to the American plane suggested a performance difficult for the enfeebled North Korean air force, military analysts said.

Some experts here said the distances that the United States cited raised questions as to whether the spy plane was really well outside North Korean air space. But they agree the North Korean response was purposely forceful to show that its military will not just roll over in the event of conflict. And those experts predict further such incidents during the month-long U.S.-South Korean mock war games.

"If an encounter like this happens again, I think they will shoot down the U.S. plane," said a former North Korean general who defected to Seoul, South Korea. "North Koreans don't have any fear of war. All the people are trained to be prepared for it."

Asian governments on Tuesday studiously presented a low-key reaction to the event Sunday. The North Korean jets trailed a U.S. RC-135S for 22 minutes, at one point coming to within 50 feet of the aircraft, according to the Pentagon account.

China urged that "all sides keep calm and exercise restraint." South Korea's new government remained largely mum. Japan demurred over "unfavorable actions" by Pyongyang. Australia's foreign minister called the incident "part of a pattern of attention-seeking" by Pyongyang.

North Korea made no comment directly on the incident. But in recent days, its official media outlets have been at high pitch over the annual military exercise in which U.S. and South Korean forces are conducting mock battles, some of them near the Demilitarized Zone. A majority of North Korea's forces are poised just beyond the zone.

Although North Korea protests the exercises each year, analysts here say the United States may have underestimated how genuinely threatened North Korea feels by military maneuvers.

"They are very alarmed by 'Foal Eagle,' the code name for one of the two simultaneous exercises, said Pyon Jin Il, the managing editor of the Korea Report, a journal of critical analysis of North Korea published in Tokyo.

Annan appeals for peace

BY COLUM LYNCH
WASHINGTON POST

UNITED NATIONS — U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan Tuesday appealed to the United States and other Security Council members to exhaust all "possibilities of peaceful settlement" of the Iraq crisis before deciding to launch an invasion of Iraq.

Annan said Baghdad's destruction of 19 Al Samoud 2 missiles was a "positive development" that should be weighed by the 15-nation council before it decides to act. But he said he would not undertake a personal diplomatic mission to Iraq to head off a conflict.

"War is always a human catastrophe, and we should only consider it when all possibilities for peaceful settlement have been exhausted," Annan told reporters Tuesday. "So let's give the process time."

In Washington, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., echoed that sentiment, urging the Bush administration to hold off on military action.

"As long as inspectors are on the ground and making progress, we must give peace a chance, so that war with Iraq does not distract us from dealing as effectively as possible with the obvious and ongoing threat of terrorism by Al Qaeda and the crisis over North Korea's nuclear weapons," Kennedy said at a leadership conference of the United Methodist Church.

Kennedy also criticized President Bush's suggestion in a speech last week that U.S. removal of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein would help bring peace and democracy to the Middle East.

"He painted a simplistic picture of the brightest possible future — with democracy flourishing in Iraq, peace emerging among all nations in the Middle East, and the terrorists with no place of support there," he said. "We've all heard of rosy scenarios, but that was ridiculous."

The remarks came as the United States, Britain, and Spain faced opposition to adoption of their resolution concluding that Iraq has squandered its "final opportunity" to disarm, which would trigger a U.S.-led war.

Russian Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov, meeting with Britain Foreign Secretary Jack Straw in London, said Russia has not ruled out vetoing the resolution.

"If the situation so demands, Russia will, of course, use its right of veto — as an extreme measure," Ivanov said in a BBC interview. "Russia would not support any decision that would directly or indirectly lead to a war with Iraq." He added that Russia would not abstain.

Senior Bush administration officials said Russian officials have assured them in private that they would not veto the resolution. A senior U.S. official expressed confidence that "we'll have the nine votes, and the measure will pass."

Attorney General John Ashcroft (left), Homeland Security Secretary Tom Ridge (center), and FBI Director Robert Mueller testify on Tuesday before the Senate Judiciary Committee about terrorism.

U.S. lauds anti-terror coups

BY CURT ANDERSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — New terrorism indictments and a key Al Qaeda capture show the United States gaining ground in the global war on terrorism, three top Bush administration officials told Congress on Tuesday.

Facing a Senate Judiciary Committee that includes prominent administration critics, Attorney General John Ashcroft, Homeland Security Secretary Tom Ridge, and FBI Director Robert Mueller highlighted recent successes and stressed prevention efforts.

Lawmakers applauded the victories — but many questioned the government's tactics and the need to expand anti-terrorism laws that already raise constitutional questions.

Ashcroft said the weekend capture in Pakistan of Qaeda operations chief Khalid Shaikh Mohammed was "a severe blow" that could "destabilize their terrorist network worldwide" by providing a trove of intelligence that will prevent new attacks.

He also announced that a Yemeni cleric and an assistant were charged in New York with helping finance Al Qaeda. The cleric, Sheikh Mohammed Ali Hasan Al-Moayad, personally handed Osama bin Laden $20 million to finance the terrorist group, Ashcroft said.

To date, more than 200 criminal-terrorism charges have been brought since the 9/11 terror attacks, Ashcroft said, with 108 convictions or guilty pleas. Mueller added that "well in excess of 100" terrorism plots have been thwarted worldwide.

The recent successes muted growing criticism on Capitol Hill about the slow progress of the war on terrorism. The concerns reached a high point last month, when a new bin Laden audiotape surfaced and the nation was put on high alert for a possibly imminent terrorist attack.

The Judiciary Committee's senior Democrat, Vermont Sen. Patrick Leahy, noted that the hearing came at "an auspicious time" because of the arrest of Mohammed, described as the mastermind of the Sept. 11 attacks.

Added Sen. Saxby Chambliss, R-Ga.: "This is the kind of success that makes us all feel better."

Ashcroft said some of the successes were the result of anti-terrorism laws passed by Congress soon after Sept. 11 that expanded the powers of the Justice Department and FBI to spy on terror suspects and use intelligence information to bring criminal cases.

Some lawmakers say the current powers threaten civil liberties, and they have sharply criticized a leaked Justice Department draft proposal to augment the law. They are especially upset because there has been no consultation with Congress about possible changes.

Leahy accused an unidentified Ashcroft aide of lying to his staff about whether such a bill was in the works. "I think it shows a secretive process in developing this," Leahy said.

Today Sponge on comeback trail

BY LINDA A. JOHNSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALLENDALE, N.J. — The Today Sponge contraceptive is back on the market, eight years after it disappeared from U.S. drugstore shelves in an alarming turn famously depicted on a "Seinfeld" episode.

Allendale Pharmaceuticals, a start-up business in New Jersey, bought rights to the Today Sponge from the drug company that discontinued it. Allendale began selling it this month through two Canadian Web sites.

More sponges, priced at the U.S. equivalent of about $2.90 each, will hit the shelves at 4,000 pharmacies, Wal-Marts, and other stores across Canada, according to Allendale. The manufacturer is hoping for Food and Drug Administration approval within a year to sell them in U.S. stores.

"I think there's just thousands of people out there waiting for it," said Marisa Dawson, a nurse in Ocoee, Fla., who is awaiting a dozen sponges she paid for in advance last spring.

Roughly 250 million polyurethane Today Sponges were sold from 1983 to 1995.

Originally made by a pharmaceutical giant now called Wyeth, it was taken off the market in 1995 after problems were found at the company's Hammonton factory. The FDA said the sponge's safety and effectiveness were never questioned. Wyeth simply stopped selling it rather than pay to upgrade its plant.

In a 1995 "Seinfeld" episode, Elaine runs around New York seeking the sponge, her favorite method of birth control. She finally locates a whole case at a pharmacy and stretches the supply by deciding whether a boyfriend is "spongeworthy." She makes her boyfriend scrub his bathroom and pass other tests before she will have sex with him.

The episode was apparently more than a work of imagination: Plenty of real women ran store to store, buying up all they could. Dawson lived in New York City in 1995 and went hunting for sponges.

"I didn't do the 'spongeworthy' test, but I was hoarding them," she said. "You want to talk about art imitating life?"

Since the disappearance of the Today Sponge, two foreign brands have been available over the Internet but not in U.S. stores. Protectaid, made in Canada, lacks a withdrawal cord, and some women find it difficult to remove; Pharmatex, made in France, costs twice as much as the Today Sponge.

Alaska oil-drilling effects mount

BY JOHN HEILPRIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Oil drilling on Alaska's North Slope over 35 years has disturbed some endangered species and made whaling harder, but it has not caused significant oil spills or a large decline in caribou, a panel said Tuesday.

Oil from the North Slope, primarily around Prudhoe Bay, still accounts for 15 percent of the nation's total production despite reduced output in recent years.

The National Academy of Sciences panel said in a report requested by Congress that development of the reserve since 1968 has produced large social and economic effects — some positive, such as better schools and health care, and some negative, such as increased diabetes and alcoholism.

It said the environmental effects continue to grow despite efforts by the oil industry and regulators to minimize them, including new technologies that have reduced off-road travel and made drilling platforms smaller.

The report, an 18-month effort costing $1.5 million, offers the most comprehensive look so far at the cumulative environmental effects of oil drilling in Alaska. It is expected to provide ammunition to all sides in an ongoing debate over whether to expand drilling into areas where it is now banned, including the adjacent Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

"Continued expansion is certain to exacerbate some existing effects and to generate new ones — possibly calling for regulatory revisions," the report says. "Whether the benefits derived from the oil and gas activities justify acceptance of the inevitable accumulated undesirable effects that have accompanied and will accompany them is an issue for society as a whole to debate and judge."

The Bush administration welcomed the report. Christie Whitman, the administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, said it confirms drilling can be done safely. "It is important to note," Interior Secretary Gale Norton echoed, "that cutting-edge technologies would significantly reduce or eliminate a number of the effects cited by the academy."

The report says abandoned equipment and buildings are likely to mar the landscape for centuries because state, federal, and local overseers haven't decided how the landscape should be restored.

Trio talks about NFL draft, experience at camp

Hawkeye football players Brad Banks, Dallas Clark, and Bruce Nelson all participated in the NFL Scouting Combine Feb. 18-24 in Indianapolis in hopes of boosting their stock before the draft on April 26-27.

Banks earned AP Player of the Year honors in 2002, Clark won the Mackey Award honoring the top tight end in the nation, and all three were named first-team all-Big Ten.

The trio spoke with Daily Iowan sports writer Kelly Beaton recently and shared some of their thoughts on the combine and their final days as Hawkeyes.

DI: What were your overall thoughts on the NFL

Q&A with Banks, Clark and Nelson

Scouting Combine?

Clark: You hear a lot of different stories from people telling you how you did, but overall, I think I did a good job. I didn't run; I'm going to wait until pro day [March 10] to run. That was a personal choice. We had interviews and went through all the 15 teams that wanted to talk to me.

DI: Was there any talk of switching you to a different position?

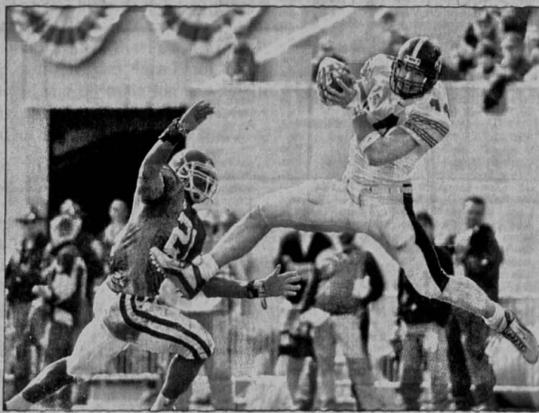

Banks: They didn't say anything to me about moving me to wide receiver or anything like that, I just threw and did quarterback stuff.

DI (To Banks): Do you think your draft status would have been helped significantly if you had won the Heisman?

Banks: I think the only thing that matters is what you see on film. If they see good things on film, that helps.

DI: What round does it sound like you'll be drafted?

Clark: I try not to listen to all of that, because even if someone has a good idea where you're

IOWA MEN'S BASKETBALL AT MICHIGAN STATE, 7:05 P.M.

A balancing act

Alford can't push starters Horner, Leslie, Reiner too hard before Tournament

BY TODD BROMMELKAMP
THE DAILY IOWAN

Steve Alford faces an interesting dilemma as Iowa prepares to face Michigan State this evening.

How hard does he push the hobbled trio of Jeff Horner, Chauncey Leslie, and Jared Reiner?

Alford undoubtedly needs all three players on the court for the Hawkeyes (14-11, 6-8) to stand a chance against a very competitive Michigan State (16-11, 8-6) team in the Breslin Center, but with the Big Ten Tournament just one week away, how hard does he work the talented trio?

After all, tonight's game in East Lansing is all but a meaningless meeting between two teams out of the conference title race, but the league tournament championship carries with it an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament — the only way the Hawkeyes would have a chance of participating in the Big Dance.

"Jeff and Chauncey will play as hard as they can on Wednesday," Alford said. "You're always careful with kids who are banged-up or not feeling well this time of year."

Both Horner and Leslie injured ankles in a practice session last week but fought through their collective discomfort to combine for 75 minutes of play and 24 points in Iowa's 91-88 overtime defeat at Indiana on March 1.

Neither will be close to fully healthy for tonight's game, Alford said.

Reiner appears to have emerged as the player many hoped and expected him to be when he joined the team in 2000, giving Iowa a solid presence in the post and plenty of scoring in its last two games.

He scored 25 points and grabbed 17 rebounds, both career highs, against Indiana while playing with two broken bones in his shooting hand and a brace on his right knee. But even if all three play tonight, the Hawkeyes will still face a battle from the Spartans, who have come on of late to overcome a slow start in league play by winning six of their last eight games.

The latest victory for coach Tom Izzo's team came March 1, when the Spartans failed to get a basket from scoring leader Chris Hill until the final 10 minutes of play and overcame a 10-minute scoring drought as a team to beat Purdue, 69-61, in East Lansing.

"It is encouraging to win a game like that," said Hill, who averages 14.9 points per game. "At the same time, we know we can't afford to play like that very often."

Especially not against the Hawkeyes, a team that handed Michigan State a 68-64 loss in Iowa City on Jan. 11. But that, just like Michigan State's troubles against Purdue last week, is in the past.

The Spartans are focused on the here and now, hoping a pair of victories in their final two league games with Iowa and Ohio State — as well as a good showing in Chicago — will help make the case for their inclusion in the NCAA's field of 65.

"This is another season for us right now, and we could have a great advantage — as other teams wear out, we get Another bucket for Jennie Lillis.

Lillis was one of three Iowa women's basketball players who received All-Big Ten honors on Tuesday.

Teammates Kristi Faulkner and freshman Johanna Solverson also received accolades.

Lillis was selected to the all-Big Ten first team by the media and the second team by the coaches. She ranks fourth in the Big Ten Conference in knows she's our inside player, everybody can concentrate on her, yet she still puts up impressive numbers," Iowa coach Lisa Bluder said. "That's what impresses me about Jennie, that she is still able to produce."

Faulkner was named to the all-Big Ten third team by both the media and the coaches.

Faulkner ranks second on the team in scoring (16.3 points per game) and assists (2.67 assists per game), first in free throws made (121), attempted (138) and percentage (.877), three-pointers made (40) and attempted (127), and third in rebounding (3.9 rebounds per game). The 5-7 guard ranks second in the league in free throw percentage and fifth in scoring.

Solverson was selected to the all-Big Ten Freshman team by the coaches.

The Lake Zurich, Ill., native and McDonald's All American ranks third on the team in scoring (8.4 points per game), second in steals (1.85 steals per game) and third in three-pointers made. She ranks fourth among conference freshman in scoring, second in steals and third in assists.

The No. 7 Hawkeyes play No. 10 Northwestern in the first round of the conference tournament, scheduled to begin Thursday in Indianapolis.

NBA players to face new spot drug tests

BY STEPHEN WILSON ASSOCIATED PRESS

COPENHAGEN, Denmark — NBA players on Olympic teams will face out-of-competition, random drug tests for the 2004 Athens Games starting July 1 as part of a global program that is expected to be approved today.

Under the system, which applies to athletes in all Olympic sports, drug testers can show up unannounced at a player's house at any time to ask for a sample.

This is the first time NBA stars will face such comprehensive, pre-Olympic testing, U.S. drug officials said.

"There will be no differentiation between a team handball athlete and an NBA professional," said Terry Madden, chief executive officer of the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency.

The NBA and other U.S. professional leagues are not formally covered by the World Anti-Doping code being completed at a three-day drug summit here. The code sets out uniform drug-testing rules and sanctions across all sports and countries.

Pro leagues are only "encouraged" to comply because they aren't under the jurisdiction of international sports federations or national governments. But pro athletes wishing to take part in the Olympics are subject to the same pre-game testing as other competitors.

Players on the U.S. roster or attending for spots on the Athens team will be part of a pool of athletes subject to testing.

The program is similar to what NHL players faced before the Salt Lake City Olympics. NBA players have been in the Olympics since the first Dream Team at the 1992 Barcelona Games.

"We've been through it before with the NHL players, and it worked well," Madden said. "I think they can relate to the NBA and tell them that everything is done properly."

The NBA players' union had no comment Tuesday except to say it was reviewing the new policy.

U.S. players had to take random drug tests at training sites in Hawaii and Australia before the 2000 Sydney Olympics.

Minnesota wild after first victory

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Willie Mitchell's deflected goal late in the third period Tuesday night lifted the Minnesota Wild to a victory over New Jersey, their first-ever win against the Devils, 3-2.

Mitchell's shot from the left point glanced off Devils defender Raymond Giroux and past goalie Martin Brodeur with 4:50 remaining to give Minnesota the lead back.

John Madden and Jeff Friesen, who extended his point streak to 10 games, scored goals for New Jersey.

Philadelphia 3, Vancouver 0

PHILADELPHIA — Michal Handzus and Donald Brashear scored less than three minutes in, and Roman Cechmanek had 41 saves.

Radovan Somik also scored for the Flyers.

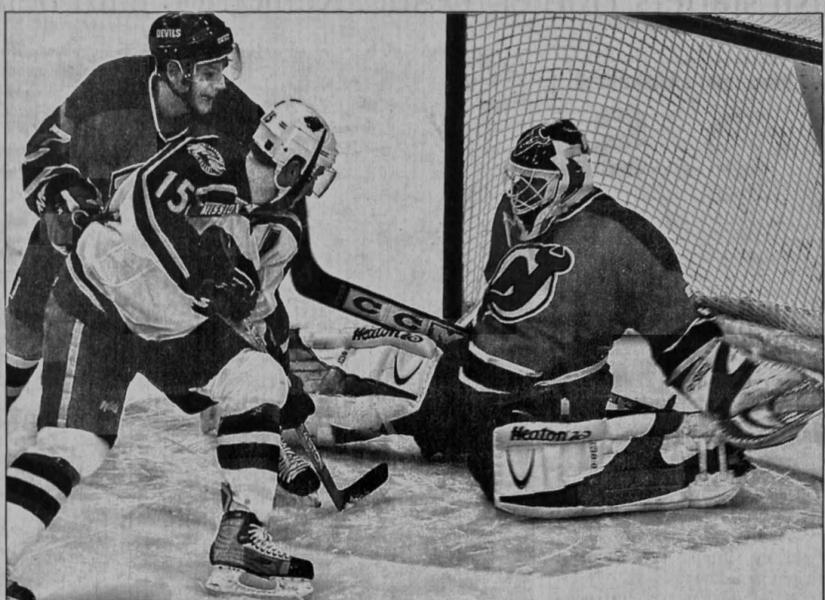

Handzus gave the Flyers a 1-0 lead just 37 seconds in with a wrap-around backhand that went between goaltender Peter Skudra's legs for his 18th goal.

Washington 2, Buffalo 1

BUFFALO, N.Y. — Jeff Halpern scored twice for the Capitals.

Olaf Kolzig stopped 35 shots to help the Capitals improve to a season-best seven games over .500 (32-25-7-4).

Halpern's second goal was nearly identical to his first when his weak shot from along the boards made it through Martin Biron's legs with less than a minute left in the opening period. On a power play late in the second, Halpern's shot from along the boards again went through Biron's legs.

Minnesota left wing Andrew Brunette slides the puck under New Jersey goalie Martin Brodeur for a goal as Devils defenseman Raymond Giroux tries to hold back Brunette in the first period.

Boston 4, Carolina 2

RALEIGH, N.C. — Brian Rolston had a goal and two assists as the Bruins snapped their season-worst nine-game winless streak.

Ron Francis scored 15 seconds into the third period to make it a one-goal game.

Boston was able to kill off two penalties after Francis' goal, and Rob Zamuner sealed it with a power-play goal with 2:11 remaining.

Tampa Bay 3, Islanders 1

UNIONDALE, N.Y. — Martin St. Louis scored his team-leading 30th goal as part of Tampa Bay's three-goal first period.

Brad Richards and Vincent Lecavalier also scored for Tampa Bay and Nikolai Khabibulin stopped 25 shots for his 24th win.

Phoenix 4, Pittsburgh 1

PITTSBURGH — Shane Doan scored Phoenix's first two goals to support another strong game in the net by Sean Burke.

Doan got the decisive goal early in the second period as the Coyotes, who began the night six points out of the final Western Conference playoff slot, improved to 7-2-1 in their last 10 games.

Ottawa 4, Toronto 1

OTTAWA — Radek Bonk, Mike Fisher, Karel Rachunek, and Wade Redden scored power-play goals as the Ottawa Senators took full advantage of Toronto's lack of discipline in a fight-filled victory.

Toronto's Darcy Tucker was given 42 minutes in penalties — including a double game misconduct — 7:30 into the third after setting off a melee involving players on the Ottawa bench.

Wizards playoff hopes dashed, Jordan hurt

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Wizards had their biggest lead of the game when Michael Jordan left with back spasms in the second quarter. Without him, the Wizards couldn't handle Toronto.

Voshon Lenard, 0-6 entering the fourth quarter, scored all 14 of his points in the final 12 minutes, and Vince Carter had 24, dealing yet another blow to Washington's playoff hopes with a 89-86 loss on Tuesday.

Jordan left with 4:34 remaining in the second quarter after scoring four points in 15 minutes. He will be evaluated Wednesday to determine whether he will play in that night's home game against the Los Angeles Clippers. Jordan hasn't missed a game this season.

Jerry Stackhouse scored 21 points for the Wizards, who entered the game tied with Milwaukee for the eighth and final Eastern Conference playoff spot. The Wizards won three straight last week to work themselves back into the top eight, but now they've lost back-to-back games to Miami and Toronto, both with losing records.

The Raptors won three of four from the Wizards this season, including 84-75 on Jan. 14, when three Toronto players were on 10-day contracts. Jordan was so upset after that loss he refused to talk to reporters.

Jordan appeared to hurt himself when he twisted his body just before making a pass near the free throw line in the second quarter. The pass was intercepted by Alvin Williams, and Jordan stumbled as he started to run downcourt. He left the game during the next stoppage.

New York 89, Cleveland 80

NEW YORK — Allan Houston scored 25 points and Latrell Sprewell hit a key 3-pointer late in the fourth quarter to lead the New York Knicks past the Cleveland Cavaliers on Tuesday night.

Houston scored eight of his points in the fourth quarter.

After the referees missed an 8-second backcourt violation on Houston, Sprewell hit a 3-pointer with 1:32 remaining for an 84-78 lead. Shandon Anderson then stole the ball from Darius Miles, leading to two free throws that ended Cleveland's threat.

Ricky Davis led Cleveland with 24 points. Davis shot 10-for-19.

Detroit 96, Houston 83

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — The Detroit Pistons broke a seven-game losing streak as Richard Hamilton scored 26 points and Chauncey Billups added 21 Tuesday night in a win over the Houston Rockets.

Jon Barry, who played only 14 minutes in the previous three, returned to the rotation with 13 points.

The Pistons had a comfortable 15-point lead until Detroit native Maurice Taylor hit a jumper at the buzzer to pull Houston within 74-61.

The Rockets, though, managed just one basket in the first four minutes of the fourth quarter. That allowed Detroit to move its advantage to 81-63 and Houston never got closer than nine points.

Atlanta 92, Denver 86

ATLANTA — Shareef Abdur-Rahim hit a hook before Glenn Robinson made a clinching 3-pointer in the final minute as the Atlanta Hawks beat Denver — the 13th-straight loss for the Nuggets.

Abdur-Rahim finished 30 points and 10 rebounds, and Robinson atoned for an atrocious shooting night to give the Hawks their second victory in six games. Robinson was 4-14 and missed all seven of his shots in the first half.

Milwaukee 100, Miami 91

MIAMI — Sam Cassell and Gary Payton are starting to click.

Cassell scored 25 points and Payton had seven of his 17 in the fourth quarter to lead the Bucks.

Milwaukee has won back-to-back games for the first time since acquiring Payton and Desmond Mason from Seattle at the trading deadline. Mason scored 17 points and made a very athletic play to tap home his own miss with 2:43 left, giving the Bucks a 92-84 lead.

Will the Big Ten Tournament boost the Iowa women?

No one goes to work without anticipating a paycheck. Does anyone go to school expecting to not receive an education?

Like everyday life, the women's basketball team didn't practice everyday, or play 27 games, without wanting a reward at the end.

Yes, I know the Hawkeyes only posted a 6-10 record in the Big Ten, and they will go into the tournament as the seventh seed, but why should that stop them? The odds may be stacked against the Hawks, with many sportswriters or experts saying they don't have a shot in the world to make it until March 10.

I don't know if they'll make it to then, but I will say they will have a strong showing at the tournament and will indeed make it past the first round, perhaps to the third.

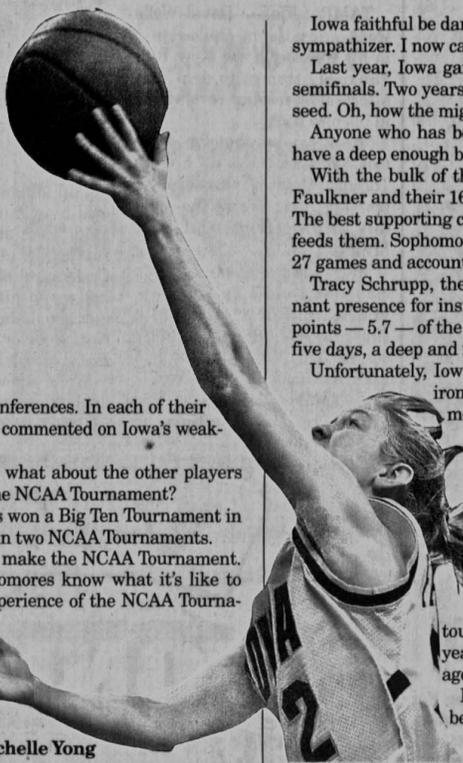

But the Hawkeyes are a young team, you say? I've sat through many games and post-game press conferences. In each of their home-game losses, the coaches of the opposing teams commented on Iowa's weakness of being a young team.

They may be young, and carry five freshmen, but what about the other players who have experience in the Big Ten Tournament or the NCAA Tournament?

In the two previous seasons, junior Jennie Lillis has won a Big Ten Tournament in 2001, reached the semi-finals last season, and played in two NCAA Tournaments.

Without a tournament win, the Hawkeyes will not make the NCAA Tournament. Iowa does have many underclassmen, but the sophomores know what it's like to have success at the Big Ten Tournament and the experience of the NCAA Tournament. Lillis said she wouldn't be satisfied without a trip to the dance.

And, we all know what this team is capable of when it is playing its best basketball; look at Iowa's 80-75 victory over No. 12 Penn State on Feb. 16.

— by Michelle Yong

Iowa faithful be damned. For too long, I have worn the mantle of a black-and-gold sympathizer. I now cast my gauntlet into the visage of the Hawkeyes' adversity.

Last year, Iowa garnered the No. 4 spot and lost to No. 5 Indiana in OT in the semifinals. Two years ago, Iowa took home the whole burrito after receiving a No. 2 seed. Oh, how the mighty have fallen.

Anyone who has been following Lisa Bluder's go-to girls knows that they don't have a deep enough bench or enough experience to run the bracket.

With the bulk of the workload being hauled by juniors Jennie Lillis and Kristi Faulkner and their 16.6 and 16.3 points per game, it leaves little room for off games. The best supporting cast member to this two-woman show has to be the person who feeds them. Sophomore April Calhoun is the only other athlete that has started all 27 games and accounts for the other starting guard position along with Faulkner.

Tracy Schrupp, the starting center, doesn't provide any intimidation or a dominant presence for inside-outside penetration. Schrupp tosses in the lowest average points — 5.7 — of the starters. During the long haul of four games over the course of five days, a deep and reliable bench is vital.

Unfortunately, Iowa isn't getting that relief. Of the six point-riders who see the iron rim the most, three of them are freshmen, two are sophomores, and one is a junior. The third guard is Jenna Armstrong, who has more turnovers than assists, and the center position doesn't improve over the starter. Iowa is going to fall to fatigue and unfamiliarity of Big Ten pressures.

Iowa's first opponent is the woeful Northwestern Wildcats, seeded No. 10. The Hawkeyes should win. But, just put some doubt in your mind, the 'Cats won against Illinois, and the Illini are perfect against Iowa.

The black and gold would meet a completely rested and No. 2 seeded Minnesota in round two. Well, that tournament sure was fun. Iowa hasn't beat the Gophers this year. In fact, 23 points is their two-game margin-of-victory average.

Iowa is a completely plain, middle-of-the-pack team right now because it relies on its stars and has little depth.

going, the draft is so random that if teams need someone and then all of a sudden someone else's available, they'll take that person, so it changes. I've been getting good comments from the coaches, so I think I just need to run well March 10 and see what happens. Around a 4.6 (in the 40-yard dash) would be good.

DI: What did you think of the Wonderlic IQ test the NFL gives players at the combine?

Clark: The Wonderlic is just to see how quick you can think, and some questions they ask are so simple you think you can't miss, but then there's always a catch. You just have to look at every question real closely. It may sound like they're asking for one thing when they're really asking for another. I think it just tests how you focus and handle pressure under a timed situation.

DI: What was the craziest question you saw on the test?

Nelson: Would you rather be a cat or a dog and why?

DI: Who was the biggest freak of nature physically that you saw at the combine?

Nelson: Ben Johnson did 38 reps [of 225-pounds on the bench press], so that's pretty awesome. I guess that counts as being a freak of nature. He played left tackle at Wisconsin.

DI: What team that you talked to impressed you the most?

Clark: I liked the Broncos a lot, and the Colts showed a lot of interest, and the Eagles also, so that was encouraging to see. From what I've heard from guys from the past, teams that they thought they were going to be drafted by, you know, all of a sudden some other team comes out and drafts them out of the blue, so you can't depend on one team.

DI: Thinking back on your career as a Hawkeye, what was your favorite all-time play?

Banks: Winning the game against Purdue. [Banks connected with Clark on a fourth-and-goal from the seven-yard line to help lead the Hawkeyes to a 31-28 come-from-behind victory October 5.]

DI: You helped rebuild the Iowa program from 1-10 in '99 to a BCS game this year. Where do you think the Hawkeye program goes from here?

Nelson: I don't see anything but good things happening from here on out. I think we have a lot of good kids coming up with a lot of names you haven't heard of, but that doesn't mean [you're] not going to see some great things from Iowa's football program. I see nothing but a good, consistent team that plays hard each and every week.

stronger," said Aloysius Anagnone, the team's leading rebounder. "We put ourselves in a hole and now we're ready to get ourselves out."

While the NCAA Tournament is still a possibility for Michigan State, the Hawkeyes face the more realistic possibility of being included in the National Invitation Tournament for the second-straight season.

The Hawkeyes are ensured of being eligible for an NIT bid at this point, and unless they win four games in as many days in Chicago next week, that will likely be their destination.

The team would like nothing more than to continue building momentum toward Chicago and possible postseason inclusion with wins over Michigan State and Northwestern, which will come to Iowa City on Saturday.

Alford feels victory in East Lansing is possible but concedes that the Spartans play well at home. He also knows Izzo's teams are as good as the coach's own reputation when it comes to preparing for opponents.

"They do a good job of taking away what you do well," Alford said, adding he hopes the team plays competitively with the Spartans and sticks to its own game plan of maximizing possessions and holding opponents on the defensive end of the floor.

COMMENTARY

Knee-jerk reactions in first two months

BY DOUG FERGUSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Three of the top-five-seeded players were knocked out in the first round of the Match Play Championship, and everyone started trying to figure out how to bring some stability to golf's most unpredictable event.

By the end of the week, it was Tiger Woods against David Toms in the final match, and no one had any problems with that.

"If the No. 1 player in the world has played four times and been in the finals twice, I don't see anything broken with it," PGA Tour commissioner Tim Finchem said.

"You've got to look at these things over time," he said. "There's a role for match play, and you have to accept it for what it is."

Indeed, the first two months of the golf season have been a case study in knee-jerk reactions — including the left knee of one particular player.

Exhibit A comes from the Mercedes Championships, where Ernie Els hit a tee shot on the 15th hole at Kapalua that traveled about 400 yards to the bottom of a hill. Equally alarming was his score, 31 under par, which shattered a PGA Tour record.

A week later at the Sony Open, Els reached the 501-yard ninth hole at Waialae Country with a driver and a wedge, and there were murmurs about the ball going too far.

Never mind there was virtually no wind on either island.

True, Finchem and the U.S. Golf Association are starting to look more closely at equipment issues, particularly the golf ball.

But a case can be made for waiting until the PGA Tour has gone to a variety of courses in a number of states under all kinds of weather conditions.

Woods was hitting 4-iron into some of the par 4s at Torrey Pines, which was soaked by rain that kept the fairways from rolling like linoleum. The pins were tucked at the Buick Invitational and Nissan Open, although Riviera's greens are so tough that no one has come close to the 72-hole record — 20-under 264 — that Lanny Wadkins set in 1985.

"Look at the conditions at Kapalua, Hawaii, Phoenix, Hope, and the AT&T," Jeff Sluman said. "Beautiful weather. Hard, fast fairways. I don't care what ball you were playing, it was going a long way."

All of the top 10 players in driving distance are averaging more than 300 yards off the tee, although Finchem says the data is "overblown a bit" at the beginning of the year.

USGA executive director David Fay also preaches patience.

"I'd like to reserve my comments until we hit the straightaway," he said. "And the straightaway is usually some time after Florida."

It will take a little longer to overcome the knee-jerk reaction that women are taking over the PGA Tour.

So far, Annika Sorenstam and Suzy Whaley are the only women who have entered PGA Tour events.

Sorenstam has brought the LPGA Tour more attention during its three-month break than when the tour is in season. There is enormous curiosity over whether she can contend, compete or keep up — and what the outcome will mean for women's golf.

Wild GM receives contract extension

ST. PAUL (AP) — Minnesota general manager Doug Risebrough, a chief architect of the franchise's rise from expansion team to playoff contender, signed a contract extension.

The team didn't disclose terms, but local newspapers reported Tuesday that Risebrough signed a four-year extension and would remain with the team through 2007. The reports said Risebrough signed the extension a month ago when head coach Jacques Lemaire and assistant coaches Mario Tremblay and Mike Ramsey locked in deals.

Risebrough didn't immediately return a phone call from the Associated Press on Tuesday. "I'm on board, and that's all I have to say about that," he told the St. Paul Pioneer Press on Monday.

Risebrough is one of the prime reasons for the Wild's success.

Colorado manager Clint Hurdle talks to umpires Larry Poncino, Ron Kulpa, Dan Iassogna, as Texas Rangers manager Buck Showalter looks on before the start of a Cactus League game March 1.

Showalter comes back to Texas as a proven winner

BY ROSS NEWHAN
LOS ANGELES TIMES

SURPRISE, Ariz. — Buck Showalter is returning from two years in the Elba of the ESPN analyst's booth to manage the Rangers, tantamount to being exiled in the American League West, baseball's toughest division.

He is returning as a proven winner, helping restore the Yankees' pride and presence and helping turn the Diamondbacks into the game's most successful expansion team.

If, in his return, "he is the best thing that could have happened to us," as Texas shortstop Alex Rodriguez put it, he also is returning with the albatross of a reputation. He was accused of sapping the life out of the clubhouse and organization with a smothering obsession to control everything from the color of the conference-room furniture to the clubhouse ketchup bottles, glass preferred over plastic.

Showalter was given a seven-year contract, hired two years before the first game, and seldom does a manager have that time and input into the preparation.

"Buck was involved in every aspect of the infrastructure — from the design of the uniforms, ballpark, and training complex to the scouting and selection of the players," Jerry Colangelo, managing general partner, said.

In the camp of the Rangers, it is a reputation thrown at him almost daily by visitors with notebooks and microphones. The intense Showalter says, "I have no reason to apologize. I'm very comfortable in my own skin. I think I have a good grasp of what it takes to win. I think my success with New York and Arizona verifies my gut feelings in regard to dealing with players and people."

It is the first week of March, the first season of his four-year contract with a team that won division titles in 1998 and '99 but has averaged 90 losses the last three years.

The Rangers are as hungry for proven and passionate leadership. And they are to be excused if experiencing something of a spring frenzy, feeding off the "energy, presence, and swagger we haven't seen here before," as Rodriguez said. "I mean, he's the most-prepared manager in baseball. His being here eliminates all those tired excuses that have come out of our clubhouse. It's going to be a tight ship."

Johnny Oates, who managed the Rangers to the two division titles and whom Showalter calls regularly, is battling a malignant brain tumor.

Showalter preaches caution, warning that reality tends to set in with the heat of summer. For now, as second baseman Michael Young said, "We may just sneak in under the radar" to prove that this "is more than a three-team division" of Anaheim, Seattle, and Oakland.

The Rangers are starting from the depths of a 70-92 finish last year.

The Yankees under Showalter were 14 games over .500 and second in the East in '93, when the players' strike ended the season in '94, and eliminated in their return to the playoffs as the AL wild card in '95.

In Arizona, the Diamondbacks won 100 games in the second season before slumping in the third, which contributed to the hiring of Bob Brenly, who has won a World Series and division title in his two years as Showalter's successor.

How much was he hurt by that firing and the accompanying accusations?

"I was disappointed more than anything, but I don't think any of it came from the players, so I take it with a grain of salt," Showalter said. "I still talk to many of the players."

"I'm not bitter. I have a sense of satisfaction that comes from knowing a lot of good people were still there in New York and Arizona to experience the satisfaction of winning, reaping rewards for what we had started."

Wells regrets publishing admissions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAMPA, Fla. — David Wells won't waive the no-trade clause in his contract if the New York Yankees attempt to deal him after embarrassing revelations in his new book.

"I can say yes, but I'm not a fool. I'm not waiving it," he said Tuesday at the Yankees' spring training camp before the team left to play Boston at Fort Myers.

Wells has a complete no-trade clause in the $7 million, two-year contract he agreed to with the Yankees before the 2002 season. The New York Post had reported Tuesday that Wells, after details of his book became known, had told the team he would waive the no-trade clause if the team wanted to get rid of him. The 39-year-old left-hander could be punished by the team for writing an autobiography that general manager Brian Cashman said "tarnishes the Yankees' image." Wells apologized to Cashman on March 1 and addressed his teammates Sunday about the book, Perfect I'm Not! Boomer on Beer, Brawls, Backaches & Baseball.

Wells wishes he would have kept the issue of steroids out of his book, scheduled for publication March 14. In galleys of the book distributed by publisher William Morrow, Wells said 25 to 40 percent of major leaguers used steroids. The figure in the actual book is 10 to 25 percent.

Also in the galleys, Wells claims he was "half-drunk" when he pitched a perfect game in 1998 and takes digs at teammates Roger Clemens and Mike Mussina.

"All I can do is apologize for the pain it caused to the organization, my teammates, and whoever," Wells said.

"It was probably the biggest mistake I ever did putting something in there. I wish I didn't, but I can't do anything about it. It was a bad choice putting it in there."

Women's Big Ten Tournament

GRAPHICS
BY CRAIG
KELCHEN

This weekend in Indianapolis, the quest for conference bragging rights begins. For others, the tournament is one last chance for an invite to the Big Dance. The Daily Iowan's Michelle Yong and Roseanna Smith break down each team by its most potent contributor.

PENN STATE
NITTANY LIONS

1 Kelly Mazzante
Height: 6-0
Hometown: Montoursville, Pa.
Year: Junior
• The guard paced the conference in both 2001 and 2002, with 19.7 and 25.1 averages.
• Mazzante ranks No. 5 on the Big Ten's all-time scoring list with 2,136 points.
• Named Big Ten first-team conference player; named conference player-of-the-week five times in 2002-03 season.
• Finalist for Naismith Player of the Year award and Wade Trophy.

INDIANAPOLIS 03

MINNESOTA
GOLDEN GOPHERS

2 Lindsay Whalen
Height: 5-8
Hometown: Hutchinson, Minn.
Year: Junior
• The guard helped the Gophers go undefeated in the non conference season and earn their best-ever tournament seed.
• Named to the Big Ten's first team by media and coaches.
• Third-leading scorer in the conference, averaging 18.9 points per game; second in assists, 5.88.
• 2002 Big Ten Player of the Year; helped Minnesota to best season finish under former coach Brenda Oldfield.

INDIANAPOLIS 03

BOILERMAKERS

3 Shereka Wright
Height: 5-10
Hometown: Copperas Cove, Texas
Year: Junior
• The forward is an All-America candidate and was named to the Big Ten's first team.
• Second in conference scoring, averaging 19.7 points per game.
• In 15 games, Wright shot 178 field goals, averages .506; No. 5 in blocked shots in the Big Ten.
• In 2002, Wright started all 30 games, averaging a team-high 19.0 points, led Purdue in blocks, and ranked second in rebounds. Averaged 18.0 points, 9.0 rebounds, and 2.5 blocks in the Big Ten Tournament.

INDIANAPOLIS 03

OHIO STATE
BUCKEYES

4 Courtney Coleman

Oakland wide receivers Tim Brown and Jerry Rice signed contract extensions on Tuesday.

Rice, Brown stay NFL's oldest receiving tandem

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALAMEDA, Calif. — Jerry Rice has signed a 6-year, $30 million contract extension to remain with the Oakland Raiders, a salary cap-friendly deal that theoretically could keep the star receiver playing until he's 46.

Tim Brown, the longest-tenured Raider with all 15 of his seasons in Oakland, also signed an extension — which means the NFL's oldest receiving tandem will stay together for now.

"[They] coupled with Jerry Porter were as productive as any receiver trio in recent memory," Raiders senior assistant Bruce Allen said Tuesday. "We're happy to have them back, and I'm sure Rich Gannon is as well."

The AFC champions were more than $30 million over the salary cap heading into the offseason, with some estimates as high as $50 million.

Rice received a signing bonus, and the deal is "back-end loaded," his agent, Jim Steiner said, meaning much of his salary would be paid out in those final years.

"We're happy with the deal," said Steiner, who has reworked Rice's contract almost every season. "Jerry's happy with the deal. They appreciate Jerry's contributions. Since he left the 49ers, it has worked out perfectly well."

The 40-year-old Rice joked during last season's playoffs that he might play until he's 45.

"It could happen," Steiner said. "He takes it year by year based on how he feels and how he's playing. Who knows?"

Rice had 92 catches for 1,211 yards and seven touchdowns in his 18th NFL season, a testament to his disciplined preparation and conditioning regimen. He joined the Raiders after the 2000 season.

In 2002, Rice became the first player in NFL history to score 200 touchdowns; he broke the record for most playoff yards in a career, and he tied a record for most career playoff TDs. He was selected for his 13th Pro Bowl, his first in four years.

Brown, 36, "signed a very similar deal" to Rice's, according to Steiner. Brown's agent, Marvin Demoff, did not immediately return calls for comment.

Brown reached his first Super Bowl last season, after finishing with 81 catches for 930 yards and two touchdowns to help the Raiders win their third-straight AFC West crown.

"Tim has been a great Raider for many years, and Jerry looks good in black, doesn't he?" Allen said. "They've been playing well for us, and there's no reason to expect anything else in the future."

The Raiders released six players, including three defensive starters, Feb. 27 to help solve their salary-cap problems. They also have restructured some other contracts.

quote of the day

If being a liberal is joining Canada and Britain and France and Germany and Japan and Italy and Israel in having universal health insurance for all of its citizens, then you may call me what you want.
— Former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean, a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination.

horoscopes

Wednesday, March 5, 2003 by Eugenia Last

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You will be high-strung today. Listen to an older, experienced individual who offers you advice even if you don't want to hear it.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An investment may pay off, or you could receive a tax rebate, insurance adjustment, or even a legal claim that has been pending. Any changes you want to make to your home will turn out as planned.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): This is the perfect day to do something you enjoy with friends or relatives. You'll impress the people you encounter, resulting in your receiving favors that you may ask for.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You won't get what you want if you are stubborn in your approach. Give a little and share. This time, it probably is your fault, so an apology is in order.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You will dazzle clients and friends with your big ideas and colorful way of presenting what you want to do. Everyone will want to share in your extravagance. Be thorough, and build your idea on solid ground.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You will be concerned with legal matters and what to do with your finances. You may want to consider expanding into an investment that can bring you a higher return.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be careful when it comes to your partnerships. You will find yourself in a bit of a bind if you have made a promise you can't keep. Focus on serving in your community.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You'll want to be a star today, especially where getting ahead is concerned. You will pull out all the stops to do the best and most impressive job. Interact with people in high positions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Make plans to do something that is fun as well as challenging. You will be spontaneous and imaginative. Your ability to work hard and have fun while doing so will impress anyone watching.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be careful not to annoy someone today. Put your time and effort into moneymaking ventures. This is not the day to start arguments or to disagree with someone in power.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Buckle down, do your thing, and you will find that everyone will want to help you along the way. Your unusual way of doing things will catch the eye of someone important to your future.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): This is a great day to strive for recognition. Use your imagination, and you will discover that you have some very unique contributions to make.

Excuses for not voting

- Vote? Vote for what?
- The snow kept you from traveling to your computer.
- Mike Brooks wasn't running.
- Nobody pledged to legalize marijuana.
- You only vote for important things, like "American Idol."
- You were too busy looking at Internet porn.
- You couldn't write-in Doogie Howser.
- You've been stuck on the Cambus for the last two days trying to get up Jefferson.
- You were going to vote, but you started to instant message your boyfriend, and then you had to go to class, and then you went to Quinton's, and then ...
- You refuse to vote until somebody actually lowers tuition.
