U.S. forces blast past defenses

BY RAJIV CHANDRASEKARAN AND PETER BAKER
WASHINGTON POST

KUWAIT CITY — U.S. ground troops overran Baghdad's outer defenses Wednesday in a swift attack along two fronts that drew only patchy resistance from Iraqi defenders and catapulted the American invasion force to within striking distance of President Saddam Hussein's nucleus of power.

Lead elements of the Army's 3rd Infantry Division approached from the southwest, sweeping around the city of Karbala, crossing the Euphrates River, and charging up a four-lane highway with M1 Abrams tanks and M2 Bradley Fighting Vehicles to within 30 miles of the capital. A regiment from the 1st Marine Expeditionary Force surged from the southeast, meanwhile, passing by the city of Kut, traversing the Tigris River, and pushing to within 60 miles of Baghdad.

The proximity of the parallel advances and the apparent fade of Republican Guard divisions assigned to defend it set the stage for what U.S. military leaders have described as the climactic battle — and the most dangerous — in the two-week-old war aimed at destroying Saddam's three-decade-old Baath Party government.

"The dagger is clearly pointed at the heart of the regime right now," said Army Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks, a spokesman for U.S. Central Command regional headquarters in Doha, Qatar.

Senior U.S. commanders expressed confidence that their troops have crushed one of the six Republican Guard divisions ringing Baghdad, severely damaged two others, and effectively cut off the capital from the southern and eastern sections of the country. They also reported signs that Saddam's control over his forces appeared to be weakening in the face of relentless U.S. bombing.

But the same commanders also voiced fear that, with U.S. troops pulling so close to Baghdad, Iraqi generals might now order a chemical-weapons attack against the American frontline units, a concern exacerbated by wind-pattern forecasts and unconfirmed intelligence reports. U.S. Marines, already wearing chemical protection suits, were ordered to use protective boots as well and to keep their gloves and masks ready.

The relative ease with which Army and Marine units pushed toward Baghdad surprised U.S. commanders, who had expected a tougher fight from the Republican Guard divisions, which are considered to be the bulwark of Saddam's defense — better trained and equipped than the regular army units that U.S. forces encountered in the south. Although some small Guard units of 100 or 200 men opened fire with assault rifles and mortars before running away or being killed, American troops rolled through most Iraqi defensive positions unchallenged and found little but abandoned equipment,

Coop accepts bargain in death

BY AMY JENNINGS
THE DAILY IOWAN

A Keokuk man accused of strangling a prominent Coralville realtor in July 2001 will face up to 15 years in prison after accepting a plea agreement in District Court on Wednesday.

Daniel Coop, 45, sidestepped standing trial on a first-degree murder charge in the death of Donald James Hebert, 76, by pleading guilty to conspiracy to commit first-degree robbery, a Class C felony that carries a maximum prison sentence of 10 years, and forgery, a Class D felony punishable by five years in prison.

For 10 months, Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White had alleged Coop helped a second man, Bradley Hylton, 27, suffocate Hebert in his River Realty office and use his credit cards to charge $1,367.12 in ATM withdrawals and purchases at Wal-Mart and Coral Ridge Mall.

Hylton pleaded guilty to the first-degree murder of Hebert in a dramatic courtroom statement in June 2002.

White told Judge Thomas Good on Wednesday that a combination of March 10 deposition statements by Hylton that he acted alone and the absence of physical evidence connecting Coop to the crime scene prompted him to offer the plea bargain to defense attorneys Tuesday.

"[Hylton's] testimony was that although Coop and he planned it together, Coop did not partake in the robbery or murder," said White, adding that Hylton said Coop was in his apartment across the street from the office in which the crimes were committed.

"The evidence indicated that these charges were the appropriate ones for Coop," White said.

Hebert's business partner found the 76-year-old man dead of suffocation and strangulation at his 2747 Second St. office, Coralville, on July 20, 2001. Hebert's arms and legs were tied with rope, and his mouth and nose were covered with tape.

Although samples of Hylton's perspiration and blood matched specimens retrieved from the crime scene, White said there was no physical evidence that implicated Coop.

Not exactly playing 'The Dating Game'

Saba Rasheed had to weed through 10 duds to find her Prince Charming.

But in an Indian-American twist on the classic fairy tale, each candidate for the petite, wavy-haired extrovert was pre-selected by the same people who had once chosen her baby formula and set her teenage curfew: her parents.

In an American culture enamored with the fantasy of love at first sight and fixated on "The Bachelor" — the ultimate monument to free will and comparative shopping in choosing a fiancée — the practice of arranged marriage may seem like an outdated tradition only practiced in developing

But many 20-somethings in Iowa City whose parents hail from the Indian subcontinent or Southeast Asia assume that their parents will find them a suitable bride or groom.

And in a college town in which nonwhite faces are scarce, some say if their parents dole them the ultimatum, "Find a fiancé or we'll find one for you," they expect they will have to choose the latter.

Rasheed didn't grow up in Iowa City but in equally white Beckley, W.Va., where she was the eldest girl of the rural town's 10 Muslim families and thus the second-generation guinea pig of how an Indian cultural tradition would play out on American soil.

By most people's estimation, she wasn't being horribly over-picky: The first guy was 10 years older and believed women should be home every night by 9 p.m. Saba was 16, more interested in Madonna than marriage, and when she said no, the man said she was "too Americanized and needed to be reined in."

Iowa wants high court to revisit breath-test ruling

BY PAULA MAVROUDIS
THE DAILY IOWAN

The Iowa Attorney General's Office is requesting that the Iowa Supreme Court review a judge's decision to replace breath tests with urine samples in suspected drunk-driving cases.

The office has 30 days from the judge's March 28 ruling to file an appeal, said Mary Tabor, the office's director of the Criminal Appeals Division. Should the court deem the office's request legitimate and pursue its own evaluation, it could then consider hearing an appeal.

The attorney general's discretionary review of the ruling disagrees with District Associate Judge Stephen Gerard's decision, finding that evidence from the breath-testing instrument, the CDM DataMaster, should be admissible in court, Tabor said.

After deeming breath-testing results from the DataMaster as "highly questionable," Gerard ruled that local law-enforcement officials must conduct urine tests on drunken-driving suspects. Breath tests are still permitted in the arrest of a suspect, but the results will be inadmissible in court as evidence.

Gerard's ruling states that results from breath tests are incomplete because law-enforcement officials sometimes misuse the equipment by pushing a button used to retrieve results from uncooperative suspects who refuse to blow into the device. The judge found a "nearly 100 percent certainty" that using the button yields a lower blood-alcohol level than is actually present in the subject. Generally, subjects are required to blow into the DataMaster for at least eight seconds for the most accurate results.

The ruling also states that standards for using the instrument have not been approved by the commissioner of Public Safety, resulting in inconsistent readings.

"I am not surprised by the possibility of an appeal," said defense attorney J. Dean Keegan. "If I had lost, I would have appealed, too."

Keegan, who has a pending motion in Iowa County regarding the suspension of evidence and pending OWI cases in 12 to 15 counties, said he could not predict whether an appeal would be successful. Gerard's ruling could mean lesser penalties and deferred judgments for some clients.

"There was nothing radical about [Gerard's] decision," Keegan said. "It was based on nearly three decades of case law on obtaining breath tests."

Prosecuting attorney Adam Pollack said the Supreme Court will likely hear the case because it involves a serious public issue.

"There are so many pending drunk-driving cases that can be affected by this," he said, adding that the cases are too numerous to estimate.

John Fusco, the president and CEO of the National Patent Analytical Systems Inc., which produces the DataMaster, said he expects an appeal of Gerard's ruling.

"This was not a well-thought-through decision," he said. "It just didn't seem to make a tremendous amount of sense to me."

Mandatory urine sampling has posed little difficulties for Iowa City police thus far, but officials except the civil and criminal processes will likely lengthen, said Lt. Sid Jackson. The department will wait to file OWI charges until urine test results have been returned from a Des Moines-based lab, which may take months.

UIHC M.D. to head surgery group

BY LAURA JENSEN
THE DAILY IOWAN

Weinstein professor

In 2005, Professor Stuart Weinstein will become the third physician from the UI Hospitals and Clinics to become the president of the American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons.

He was elected as the group's second vice president of the board of directors at its meeting in New Orleans on Feb. 7.

According to the group's administrative tradition, he will become vice president next year and president the following year.

"I am tremendously honored to have been selected, and I am excited about the opportunities and challenges ahead," said

Weinstein, who has been part of the 26,000-member group since 1976. "I think that this is wonderful for the university and my department, and it adds to the many honors the hospital has received."

Reginald Cooper, a professor of orthopaedic surgery who has worked with Weinstein throughout his career, was the second UIHC doctor to become the group's president, 1987-88. He said the position is hard work, but he enjoyed it. "This is a well-deserved honor," Cooper said, adding that it would bring national and international attention to the UIHC. "[Weinstein has] worked hard for the academy and other organizations and has been particularly active in working on international relations."

Weinstein is one of the 10 highest-paid employees at the UI, with an annual salary of $400,279, and he says he works more than 100 hours each week. He is in surgery two days per week and sees around 75 to 80 patients weekly.

Weinstein has been a leader in several professional organizations, published more than 120 articles, and received several awards for his work. He has resigned from all of his outside activities to take on his new position, but he will continue to practice and teach medicine and conduct research.

As vice president, Weinstein's responsibilities will include strategic planning for the organization and participating in the development of the academy's activities. "My goal is to increase the value of being a member," he said.

When he becomes president, he will take on the additional responsibilities of testifying before Congress in Washington, meeting with state associations, and setting the advocacy agenda.

Religious lecturer describes political Jesus

BY JAMES BAETKE
THE DAILY IOWAN

The gospels of the New Testament portray a "political Jesus," not just the person Christians believe was the Messiah, said Dr. N.T. Wright in a lecture Wednesday night.

The lecture, "Politics and the Cross: Meanings of the 21st Century," centered on Wright's notion that the journey of Jesus to the cross was not only in the name of sacrifice but was also a political statement. He told the 150-member audience in Buchanan Auditorium that Jesus died for political reasons, not just for sinners.

Wright, an internationally known Biblical scholar and lecturer, is a Canon Theologian at Westminster Abbey in Oxford, England.

"In the gospels as a whole, we find a story of political intrigue," said Wright, insisting that many of the stories told in the gospels are politically based and that from there one can obtain "nuggets of theology."

Politics concerning Jesus are evident throughout all the gospels, Wright said. For example, he believes the Last Supper had large political meaning, as well as the fact that Jesus initially kept his leadership and appointment as the Messiah concealed. The moment Jesus was crucified, Wright said, was also the moment in which religion and politics came to an intersection.

Wright also argues that Jesus died first for the nation of Israel, then for the "children of God across the world."

Wright said the Christian cross was once a symbol of death, explaining that the cross was first a symbol used by the Romans. Roman slaves and political leaders were left to die upon the cross to serve as an example, he said.

Jesus died on the cross in Roman tradition as a fallen political leader, he said. "The cross has been so sanitized within the church, but people forget how shameful it is," he said.

"The cross becomes the new temple — a place where Israel and the world are invited to meet their strange creator of the world," Wright said.

He has published many religious books, many on the redefinition of the historical Jesus.

His full-scale work, Jesus and the Victory of God, addresses the historical Jesus and the political and social setting of the first century. Jesus has been described as the Jewish apocalyptic prophet in Wright's book.

Legislature approves wind-energy measure

DES MOINES (AP) — The Legislature approved a bill Wednesday that would allow a public utility to own wind-energy production facilities.

The House passed the bill 98-1 and the Senate approved it 49-0.

MidAmerican Energy Holdings Co., which announced plans last month to build up to 200 wind turbines in northern Iowa, requested the legislation. The proposed $323 million farm would generate 310 megawatts of electricity, enough to power 85,000 homes, the company said.

The measure will ensure that the company receives renewable energy credits for building and owning its wind turbines. Current law gives the credits only to companies that buy renewable energy from other sources.

Under the bill, MidAmerican would not have a rate increase in three years. The company agreed with state regulators not to raise rates to build the turbines.

An amendment that would have required utilities to enter into power purchase agreements with small wind generators, such as farmers and small businesses, to purchase their excess power failed in the Senate.

Sen. Mary Lundby, R-Marion, who proposed the amendment, said it was a way to ensure a place for small energy producers.

Court rejects claims by Shelby's mother

DES MOINES (AP) — The Iowa Supreme Court on Wednesday rejected a claim by a Spirit Lake woman that new evidence showed her former boyfriend killed her 2-year-old daughter.

In addition, the high court rejected Heidi Watkins' claim that abuse she had suffered as a child left her unable to recognize what was happening in her own home.

In a 17-page opinion detailing the short and brutal life of Shelby Duis, the court rejected Watkins' effort to shift blame to a former boyfriend, who was acquitted in the toddler's death.

"We believe the District Court's conclusion that the defendant herself inflicted these injuries is supported by substantial evidence," the court said.

Even if Watkins' former boyfriend had inflicted some of the injuries, she "would be guilty of knowingly permitting this continuing physical abuse of Shelby."

The child was found dead in her Spirit Lake home on Jan. 4, 2000, in a case that raised questions about the state's ability to protect children and prompted an intense review of the state's child-welfare system.

Iowa mother has 2 sons in Gulf

Sharon Donahoe, with four sons in the Army, gets by with the help of her faith

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAWARDEN, Iowa — Sharon Donahoe has four times the worry with four of her five sons in the Army, two of them already in the Middle East as part of the war with Iraq, but says she gets by with "a very strong faith."

She said she has not spoken with sons Brendan and Damian since they were deployed, but she knows they want "photos from home, letters from home, and maybe some homemade cookies."

Maj. Brendan Donahoe, 37, a judge advocate general at Medical Command in Germany, is deployed to an unspecified role.

Maj. Damian Donahoe, 36, is the ground liaison for the 434th Support Troop from Boone, with the Middle East duty of coordinating land-force actions with fighter pilots.

Brendan Donahoe has been in harm's way before, serving as a 2nd lieutenant in Saudi Arabia during the 1991 Gulf War, his mother said.

"We got through Desert Storm by just praying and picturing guardian angels surrounding [Brendan], and that is what I have done ever since both of them have been over there," Sharon Donahoe said.

"I will go to my prayer group tonight, and we will pray for them. Then I let go, and let God take over."

Sharon Donahoe, a teacher at West Sioux of Hawarden, has two other sons in the Army.

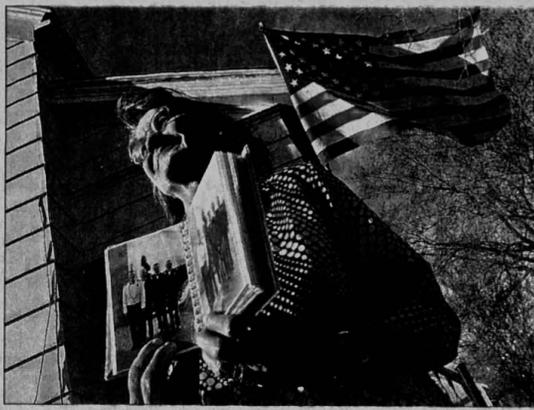

Capt. Adrian Donahoe, 32, is in the Special Operations Low-Intensity Conflict master's program at the Naval Postgraduate College in Monterey, Calif.

Maj. Sean Donahoe, the oldest of the four at 40, is the distributed-learning branch chief at the National Guard Bureau in Arlington, Va., working with National Guard units across the nation.

Either of them also could be called up if the war continues, she said.

"You never know," she said. "They all have been trained. They could be sent over if it turns into more than we are hoping it will be."

Sharon Donahoe said all four of her military sons entered the National Guard while still in high school and joined ROTC programs in college.

Sharon Donahoe holds photos of her four sons on Monday while standing outside her home in Hawarden, Iowa.

She said her late husband, Jim Donahoe, was in the reserves with a Sioux City unit, but no one pushed the boys to follow in their father's footsteps.

"When they started looking at National Guard while in high school, Jim said, 'Are you sure you want to do that?' But they did ... It was just something they seemed to enjoy," she said.

Sharon Donahoe said she wanted to tie yellow ribbons to her apple tree to show support for their efforts and the rest of the U.S. troops, but it presented a problem.

"I had started to put some out last weekend, but I thought, 'Well, do I put out two, do I put out four, do I cover the tree with it?'"

She said she sees fewer ribbons around trees these days.

"I think there is less support for our troops now than there was then," she said of Desert Storm. "Everywhere, you saw yellow ribbons on trees, and everybody was flying flags."

High court backs opening up HMOs

BY EDWARD WALSH
WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — In a blow to the managed health-care industry, the Supreme Court ruled unanimously Wednesday that states have a right to force HMOs and other health-care networks to open themselves to all doctors, hospitals, and other providers who agree to abide by their terms.

The ruling upholding Kentucky's so-called any-willing-provider law struck directly at the economic linchpin of HMOs, which attempt to hold down health-care costs by creating limited networks of providers who are willing to accept lower fees in return for a higher volume of business generated by the HMO.

But there was disagreement over the practical effect it would have on the health-care system. Some experts said it would have little immediate effect, in part because of changes in the managed-care industry since the Kentucky law was enacted in 1994.

The legal issue in the case, Kentucky Association of Health Care Plans Inc. v. Miller, was whether the Kentucky law was pre-empted by the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974. That federal law pre-empted all state laws that "relate to any employee-benefit plan" but grants an exemption to state laws that "regulate insurance, banking, or securities."

In the unanimous opinion written by Justice Antonin Scalia, the Supreme Court said the Kentucky statute regulates insurance in the state and therefore qualifies under the insurance exemption.

Rachel Morgan, a senior policy analyst with the National Conference of State Legislatures, said Kentucky and six other states have any-willing-provider laws that apply to doctors and other health-care providers. An additional 16 states have similar laws that apply to pharmacies.

Morgan said that in recent years, state legislatures have shown little interest in enacting any-willing-provider laws, in part because HMO networks have needed more doctors as they've expanded.

"The situation has been that if providers want to participate in a [health-care] plan and meet the criteria, they can participate," she said. "It's been a buyer's market. Generally, there has been very little of the rejection that may have occurred in the past, so it's not been such a big deal."

Joy Johnson Wilson, the health-policy director for the legislature group, said it was unclear how Wednesday's ruling will affect state lawmakers' willingness to consider any-willing-provider laws. She said some legislatures may have been unwilling to take up the subject until the Supreme Court ruled.

"It will depend on if there are providers who feel they have been shut out," she said. "If they feel they are not getting fair representation, they might push for this kind of protection. But it's very hard to predict because it's very market-driven."

Health-care organizations split over the significance of the ruling. The American Medical Association, representing physicians, called the decision a "major victory" and said it reinforced its contention that "health insurers must comply with the legitimate regulatory authority of the states."

Donald Young, the president of the Health Insurance Association of America, a trade association of health insurers, predicted that the ruling will lead to higher health-insurance premiums and "the real possibility of diminished quality of care" if health-care networks are forced to accept any doctors in their geographic areas who seek to participate.

BY JOHN MOLSEED
THE DAILY IOWAN

A bill under consideration by the Iowa Legislature would curtail a person's right to due process and may be unconstitutional, Iowa Civil Liberties Union officials say.

The legislation amends emergency procedures for the temporary detention and treatment of persons who are impaired either from substance abuse or mental health problems.

The bill strikes out a section of the Iowa Code requiring a magistrate to make immediate contact with law-enforcement and medical officials who wish to detain individuals deemed to be a danger to themselves or others.

The section also states that the magistrate must immediately notify a lawyer on that person's behalf.

"This doesn't sit well with people who like freedom," said ICLU Executive Director Ben Stone.

The bill passed in the Senate 47-0 on March 20.

Sen. Bob Dvorsky, D-Coralville, said the Senate Judiciary Committee gave him no indication the bill affected due process before he voted for the measure.

On April 1, the House Judiciary Committee recommended that the House pass Senate File 361, which will be voted on at a later date. Committee chairman Rep. Gene Maddox, R-Clive, said the bill helps ease a burdened justice system.

"There's statewide concern about police or judges' ability to travel to the places where this needs to get done," he said, adding that the bill is a timely solution while the state looks at overhauling the court system to more evenly distribute legal resources between rural and urban areas.

Under the proposed law, a magistrate has until the end of the next business day to file an order with the court and medical facility that an incapacitated person should be held or released.

Johnson County Magistrate Bruce Goddard called the current system "frustrating and difficult." Each state judicial district once had a judicial hospital referee that handled such emergency cases, but the position was cut because of budgetary constraints.

Goddard is now one of three magistrates on a weekly rotation with six judges in the district who handles such calls. Goddard, who said he dealt with five cases the last week he was on the rotation, receives no extra pay for the calls, which often rouse him in the middle of the night.

However, Stone said the Legislature's proposal curtails due process for the wrong reasons.

"What they're trying to do is make it so everyone in the process can sit back and be lazy," he said.

He contends that a judge should have direct contact with a person who is being committed.

Maddox agreed but said immediate changes need to be made to ease an overworked judiciary system.

"There's no sign we're going to be adding new judges to address these detentions," he said.

Goddard said he doesn't always have direct contact with potential detainees under current law, anyway. He often makes his decisions based on law enforcement, medical information, and the person's background.

Iowa City police Sgt. Brian Krei said if police suspect people may be a danger to themselves or others, officers attempt to get them to voluntarily agree to see medical officials. Often times, law-enforcement agents have to wait until people do something that they can specify in a report, either written or orally, to the observing magistrate.

Without clear evidence of people's threat to public or personal safety, officers can't force their detention, he said.

"You don't want to violate a person's rights," Krei said.

ICLU officials plan to speak with legislators to change the bill. If it passes, they plan to petition Gov. Tom Vilsack to veto the measure.

Removed under Senate File 361:

Iowa Code Section 125.91 subsection 3

- Upon arrival at the facility, the magistrate shall at once review the validity of the detention.
- The magistrate shall immediately notify counsel of the respondent's emergency detention.
- Counsel shall be afforded an opportunity to visit the respondent and to make appropriate preparations before or after the magistrate's order is issued.

Arranged marriages not thing of the past

MARRIAGE

she was in her mid-20s, grew wary of the cultural impasse between their standards and those of their daughter, who describes herself as a "pretty strong feminist."

"They didn't quite get it," said Rasheed, now 32. "They were coming from one culture, and I was growing up in another one. They think marriage isn't about romance. Whether you're attracted to him and have a lot in common aren't really the issues."

"Marriage is held up as the ultimate climax of your life," she said of her culture. "My parents wanted me married, the earlier the better. If that happened when I was 18, great, but not at the expense of my education. They were respectful of my decisions."

Practical and traditional, her Indian father and Pakistani mother had concrete requirements for their daughter's suitors: They must come from a reputable family, be well-educated, have a steady job, and be a good Muslim. Indian or Pakistani nationality was not required, but it was preferred.

Those who complied were flown in, parents in tow, to the Rasheed home, where she sized up the potential Mr. Saba Rasheed over a traditional Pakistani dinner, all in the company of her parents and older brother.

Four or five proposed, usually expecting a "yes" or "no" in one or two weeks.

"Try to imagine having your first date with your whole family watching," Rasheed said in her Southern lilt. "I understood the process, but when I went through it, it was very different."

Parent tested, child approved

Some second-generation Americans say the practice, oceans away from its direct subscribers, has slackened here, as it is starting to in parts of India. It's not so much an "arranged marriage" anymore as an "arranged introduction," bestowing the young with the ultimate choice: veto power.

"You get the final say," said UI junior Poonam Bhakta, an Indian-American. "If you say 'no,' you can say 'no,' and that's fine."

But the clock is ticking for Bhakta, too. The 21-year-old's parents would prefer her to be engaged by the time she graduates, two years away. They'll allow her to find her own man, but because she is at the UI, which has approximately 400 Indian students ("that kinda sucks"), they hold the advantage.

"I try not to think about it right now; it's like sitting here and trying to think about my retirement," she said. "I know I'll meet someone eventually."

"It's more important for me to stand on my own two feet and be independent than run around to find a guy to give me a ring."

The notion of parents acting as a clearinghouse of class, family status, and education level seems to be anathema to a Western culture infatuated with the notion of love from the other side of the tracks.

But in real life, Western individuals weed out those candidates from disparate socioeconomic levels in much the same manner as parents do in the arranged marriage system they demonize, said Meena Khandelwal, a UI women's studies visiting assistant professor.

"I don't see them as completely opposite systems," the Indian-American said. "[American couples] talk about their first meetings in very romantic ways, like it was love at first sight. But there's a lot of self-censorship. The fact of whom you're attracted to is very sociological — of class, education. But that's not the way we like to think about it."

The cardinal benefit of an arranged marriage — upfront parental approval of your future spouse — crosses national barriers: U.S. youth commonly seek this acceptance long after the initial meeting. This doesn't mean pleasing one's parents is a moot point in American culture, Khandelwal said: Just look at the stress associated with the fabled meet-the-parents episode.

Still, the laissez-faire mentality with which most American parents approach their kids' dating, leaving the onus of finding one's life partner entirely on the child, seems almost cruel by cultural standards in India, Khandelwal said. Outside of cosmopolitan urban cities such as Delhi or Bombay, finding matches for their child is a moral obligation, not a control ploy, she said.

"When [traditional Indians] look at the American system, I think they say, 'Don't their parents love them? They make them go through this dating system?'"

UI sophomore Yasmeen Khan, a Pakistani-American, says she takes comfort that she will not have to endure "emotionally expensive" breakups and dating dramas in the quest for that perfect person who doesn't exist.

"I'm not going to try to find this fantasy," she said. "I just want someone who will work forever."

"I don't want to have to compare my future husband to anything. I'm just as happy being blissfully ignorant. I want to love and accept him for what he is."

Khan says she plans to acquaint herself with a potential spouse over a series of dinners with her parents, or being accompanied by a third person — her little brother in her case. She says she will not have, theoretically, touched the man before marriage.

Khan, 19, says she's told her mother "to keep her eyes peeled" for Muslim guys at the national religious conferences she attends because of the slim chance of finding a marriage partner in Iowa City, where the Islamic population is estimated at 1,000.

"If we were Christian walking down the street, the chances of finding the man of your dreams is 100 percent greater," she said. "Walk down the street as a Muslim — you basically don't have a chance in heck."

Arranging marriages is a cultural practice, not an Islamic one, and the predominantly Islamic countries make up a fairly small slice of the world that still does so, said Reza Aslan, a UI visiting instructor in religious studies.

But for UI junior Archana Venugopal, it still works. Going from just a photo and her mom's check that their astrological horoscopes foresaw an auspicious future, the 20-year-old started e-mailing a 26-year-old software engineer from Arizona last May.

One week later, they decided to marry in December.

"I felt my parents didn't arrange it, but fate arranged it for us," she said. "Cheeseball, huh?"

Success at last

Matrimonial ads in publications such as India Abroad are helping the tradition hold on in the United States.

But Rasheed jokes she never got that desperate.

"We draw the line at ads," she said in reference to the classifieds that tout singles by occupation, caste, and location.

Not that the search wasn't getting desperate after almost a dozen unsuccessful dinners. Rasheed told her mother, "I don't think this process works for me," and she started contemplating life as a single woman. But her cousin knew a family whose son was weary of the system after a few unsuccessful matches. Her mother begged her to try just one more time.

Enter Mushtaq, 34, a software engineer from Virginia. Rasheed says she "knew he was the one" right away. He's a bit of an introvert, but he's open-minded, and he can cook a mean chicken curry. He relates to 1980s pop culture and wants to run a marathon with Rasheed, an inveterate jogger. He will pick up his life and move to Iowa City so she can stay at the university. Perhaps best of all, he enforces no curfew.

One and a half years and many a sky-high phone bill and frequent-flier mile later, the wedding is set for May 25-28. (It's a four-day celebration in Pakistani/Indian culture.)

"It works both ways," Saba said. "I can give you horror stories, and I have this one experience that is wonderful in my life."

"My mom likes to take the credit for it, so, I'll give it to her."

STATE

Manure spills near Kalona

KALONA (AP) — A tractor hydraulic connection became stuck near this town in Eastern Iowa, spilling up to an estimated 10,000 gallons of manure, officials said Wednesday.

Rob Brenneman of Brenneman Pork built makeshift dams to stop the manure from flowing Tuesday evening into a tributary of Camp Creek, but some made it into the stream, said Terry Jones, a Department of Natural Resources environmental specialist.

"There is no way of knowing the exact amount that entered the stream, but the producer estimates it was between 500 and 2,000 gallons," Jones said.

No dead fish have been found, but it's not clear if the stream normally supports aquatic life because of its low flow, Jones said.

The DNR was working with Brenneman to make sure the standing pools of manure are properly cleaned up. The agency will inspect the stream later this week, Jones said.

Where do I sign up?

This is in response to Professor Pat Hitchon's letter, "Israel to blame for war in Palestine" (DI, March 26). I was wondering where we could sign up for one of your courses, because I have been looking for an anti-Semitic course, teaching false facts, displacing the "blame" on the wrong people, all while being taught by a close-minded ultra-liberal person such as yourself. Comparing Israelis to "SUVs with faulty tires leading to rollovers, trucks with gas tanks that explode, cigarettes and alcoholic beverages that are harmful to society" is a ridiculous comment, fueled by a lack of knowledge and resent. Is that what they are teaching over in your department?

The truth hurts

Many people have called the CampusTruth ads racist and lies. The fact is the ads are true, and the truth hurts. It is hard for Palestinian sympathizers to realize that children are growing up in Gaza and the West Bank idolizing suicide bombers. In Palestinian classrooms, posters praising suicide bombers hang on the walls. Truth: Dia al-Talwil, a Hamas activist blew himself up in a suicide attack in the French Hill neighborhood of Jerusalem, and his picture hangs on the classroom wall. Truth: Popular children's shows praise suicide bombers singing songs glorifying their "martyrdom." This is the truth that never gets told. Since Yasser Arafat

"renounced" violence in the Oslo Peace Accords on Sept. 13, 1993, the truth is at least 37 Americans have been murdered and at least another 72 Americans have been injured by Palestinian terrorism.

The CampusTruth Ads are not racist; they are merely the truth that some wish were lies. When Palestinians see the truth staring them in the face, they call it racist. The truth is most Palestinians have no idea what racism is. The truth is these are the same people equate Zionism with racism. If the CampusTruth ads are racist, then the responses by those in The Daily Iowan might as well be called anti-Semitic.

Safewalk program must fix its problems to be more effective

The troubled Safewalk program is looking to hire a new director. The UI Student Government-run program has been without a director since Lucas Christian resigned at the end of last semester for personal reasons.

Safewalk is meant to provide a campus-wide evening escort service as an option for reducing the risk of sexual assault and other violence. It is a great idea, but it has several problems, beside the vacant director position, that need to be addressed if the program is to continue.

Currently, Safewalk only runs Monday through Thursday, 8:30 p.m. to 2:30 a.m. This program does not run during the weekend, which is a time when there is a higher risk of violence. As many buildings remain open during nighttime hours and during the weekend, Safewalk should be available for these times.

Once a student calls Safewalk, there is no guarantee of an escort. Because of a lack of volunteers, it can sometimes take several hours to reach the evening escort service if there is no operator taking calls. There are only three volunteers working each shift, one male and one female escort, and one volunteer operating the telephone. Because of this, Safewalk also warns that escorts may be busy when a call comes through, adding to the time that students will have to wait.

Another concern is that only students who live in residence halls or fraternity/sorority houses can use this rape-prevention program. Safewalk will not escort students to any off-campus housing or building. Without a safe escort, these students face the same problems as they would without Safewalk — a real concern. The campus is well lit, and Safewalk would be used best in the dimly lit streets outside of campus.

The best thing that Safewalk can offer is peace of mind. The volunteers for the program are not trained law-enforcement personnel. There is safety in numbers, but Safewalk cannot guarantee complete protection for evening walks.

Safewalk has the groundwork to be a good program if it fixes these simple problems. The new director, who will receive a salary of $1,000, will have to immediately address these problems or UISG should send its funds elsewhere. Because Safewalk only provides service on campus, the funds could be used for a more resourceful way to prevent violence, such as another late night Cambus route. A new Cambus route would provide service to much more students than the 50 per semester that Safewalk boasts.

Press right to point out mistakes in government's war predictions

The administration's attacks on the media, accusing journalists of leading the American people to believe the war would be swift, are a sad attempt to draw attention away from the misleading statements its members have made.

Vice President Dick Cheney's famous "weeks, not months" statement has gotten him in hot water. He told NBC's "Meet the Press" before the war, "We will be greeted as liberators." He added, "Significant elements of the Republican Guard ... want to avoid conflict with the U.S. forces and are likely to step aside."

The media cannot be blamed for Cheney's untrue predictions. The vice president's disdain for journalists arises because they reported his first statement, then recalled it when he more recently said, "No one ever said this would be an easy war." President Bush seems to have held back from the easy war talk more than those around him. From the beginning, he simply said the war would take however long victory took. The president also acknowledged possible war casualties before the war started. On Oct. 7, 2002, he said, "Military conflict could be difficult. An

Members of the Bush administration inaccurately claimed that the war would take a short time and are lashing out at the press for pointing out their mistakes.

Iraqi regime faced with its own demise may attempt cruel and desperate measures ... There is no easy or risk-free course of action."

Others in the administration did not hold back on the hawk talk. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said, "The fedayeen, Saddam are onesies and twosies." Today his statement is, "I can't manage what people, civilians, or retired military want to say ... if some analyst wants to say it's going to be a cakewalk. We have repeatedly said we can't say how long it's going to last."

The "cakewalk" comment actually came from Richard Perle, who headed the Pentagon's Defense Advisory Board. He said war would last no more than three weeks, "and there is a good chance that it will be less than that." Perle, like others in the administration, believed the "shock and awe" campaign would be enough to make Iraqi opposition simply fold.

In wartime, the administration does need to generate as much American support for the war effort as it possibly can. However, lying to the public and getting angry at the press for reporting conflicting statements is not right.

Activism and religion ... but ...

A friend who is studying to be a pastor in St. Paul has a sign in her window reading "Give Up War For Lent." Two weeks ago, during the demonstrations against the outbreak of the war in the Twin Cities, she went in collar, carrying her sign, and got a lot of honks, waves, thumbs up, and, "Cool sign, dude!" comments.

I have been thinking a great deal lately about how much more acceptable the religious community becomes to the activist community when it gets to crunch time. (Not, of course, that the two are mutually exclusive ... I think offhand of the Catholic Worker people, the American Friends Service Committee, the Sisters of Mercy ... to name just a few.) I got to thinking of this, actually, because I was remembering a conversation from PDP, the Professional Development Program that all rhetoric instructors at the UI must go through. We were talking about how one dealt with students who wanted to write essays on the controversy of, say, gay marriage, and used the Bible as a source, often as the only source. This, of course, as many a student has found, is not acceptable and will not get you an A in rhetoric. Rhetoric instructors are largely (or at least we think of ourselves as) liberal and enlightened folk, and enlightened thought and Christian thought have come, over the years, to be seen as a contradiction in terms.

Of course, I would not argue (I would have a hard time coming up with any viable points or sources) that Christians face much in the way of discrimination. Certainly one does not hear that people are, secretly (perhaps ashamedly), thinking, "woman with crucifix ... terrorist!" If you speak of a Christian name, you are merely using a semi-archaic, English term for "first name." Sessions of Congress are opened with a prayer, and this bothers nobody except the folks at the Freedom From Religion Foundation and a few ACLU people.

But there is something, well, a little ... suspect, perhaps? arcane? ... about identifying oneself as a Christian. Douglas Coupland, one of the laconic spokesmen of Generation X, proclaimed in his eponymous first novel that we are the first generation raised without God, and even, to drive the point home, wrote a collection of short stories called Life After God. I've rarely heard someone say "I am a Christian" without also saying, in the same breath, "but ..." (Those who are Catholics have a particularly emphatic "but," with more clauses after it. Gary Willis, in fact, recently had to write an entire book called Why I Am a Catholic.)

LAURA CROSSETT

I wonder, though, going back to that rhetorical rhetoric paper. What if, let us say, rather than its being a paper about abortion and citing the Bible, or the pope, or both, it were a paper arguing for a living wage and using the laws of Moses and the teachings of Jesus Christ as its source material? (You could find plenty of support for the concept, believe me.) Or a paper about the death penalty, in which the writer suggested, like Illinois's former governor, and Moses several thousand years before him, that there ought to be two eyewitnesses in order to convict someone of a capital crime? Those of you who have taught rhetoric, or any other general-education class at the UI, may find this line of inquiry a moot one, because nobody ever writes papers like that in rhetoric. (You may be right ... I never got one in five semesters of teaching it.)

We hear, on a regular basis these days, that God is on our side. Another friend called up the Vatican to check on this. He said he was unable to speak to the pope directly, but that Cardinal somebody-or-other assured him that, no, God was not on the side of the United States of America, or of its government. (Or, for that matter, I imagine him saying, of anybody else ... vengeance is mine, saith the Lord, which many people interpret as selfish and, well, rather willful of God, and others of us see as an indication that, yet again, being human, it's a little hard for us to make ultimate judgment ... we have too many blind spots. Many prefer the later, more humane versions of the same sentiment ... Judge not that ye be not judged, or my favorite, Let he who is without sin cast the first stone.)

I've been toying with you this whole time, playing dodge, or peek-a-boo; lamenting that the last public Christian intellectual who was taken seriously was Martin Luther King Jr. (and he wasn't taken seriously at all by a great many people while he was still alive), not quite willing to lay myself down without a "but," trying to clear a place where we can have a conversation without disclaimer ... but I haven't made it there yet.

Battling boredom by celebrating intellectual excellence

Recently, my attention was called to a photograph of a young adolescent in a newspaper. It was the Dec. 17, 2002 issue of the Des Moines Register. On top of the picture was a caption that attempted to satirize the appearance of the young adolescent. The caption simply read: "a + b - c = yawn?" in large bold letters. The picture showed the adolescent in the middle of a big yawn.

There was a one-liner at the bottom of the picture that might give a reader an idea of the significance of the picture, but the print was so fine, most people wouldn't notice it. The Gazette published the same picture two days earlier, but with a different caption. In contrast to the Register, the Gazette titled the same picture "Tiring contest" to explain what was going on in the picture.

The picture was of Chris Lu, a 17-year-old student representing City High School in a statewide math competition. At first glance, most readers will reach only one conclusion: This young man was bored to death. Reading the cutline did not make things easier, either. The cutline — for readers willing to risk blindness — seemed to suggest Chris was bored to death, because he was forced to do something he hated to do. This assumption could not be more false. Chris, a junior and member of the City High Math Club, has won several math and other awards, including first place in several statewide math competitions. In fact, math is one of Chris' favorite subjects at school.

Chris is not your classic "nerd" whose excellence is only academic. Since he started at City High and joined the Kung Fu Club, he has won several first-place trophies in martial-art tournaments. He's also a member of the City High School Symphony Orchestra and has been inducted into the National Honor Society. All of these achievements were lost in the picture with the big yawn.

It is very easy to conclude that no damage was done to Chris — and I agree. But, how about marginal high-school students who might feel academics are boring and might be looking for excuses to ignore them? Anyone with a teenager will agree that boredom is one thing he or she doesn't handle well. Indeed, one of the most common complaints against school, especially among students who are not doing well in a particular class or in school in general, is that it is boring. This may be more significant among inner-city students in Des Moines, where there might be a relatively larger population of poor students.

The problem of boredom is not limited to primary and secondary schools. Three years ago, there were concerns about retention of minority students at the UI. There were many reasons reported that the UI was not retaining minority students, but the recurring answer was that there was nothing to do in Iowa City. In other words, the university, and by extension, Iowa City, is boring (DI, Nov. 30, 2000). Mind you, these were supposedly more mature students who chose to come here rather than high-school students who must attend to school.

Both young and old dread mathematics, more than any other subject. Unlike sports, companies may not advertise during a math competition. But it was a news item and should have been treated as such. The image that projected from the picture of Chris in the Register was that academic pursuits are so unimportant that they are not worth a few lines. Society and the press hold student-athletes in high esteem. I can understand why: It is the economic thing, stupid! Local television stations choose student-athletes of the week, but student academicians are shown in a large group, only once, and only at the end of the school year. Neither their names nor faces are made noticeable.

Schools in Tampa Bay, Fla., closed early for the parade welcoming the Buccaneers back home after the Super Bowl, but no one cares who was the valedictorian at the University of South Florida in the same city. Only excellence in sports counts, it seems. Otherwise, why would a college coach earn four times more than the college president?

Periodically, society laments the poor performance of American students, who typically rank behind the Europeans and Japanese in math scores. But there are no efforts to applaud students who achieve academic excellence.

How much we celebrate good students is indicative of the value we put on intellectual excellence. Even the Register should realize that it is students such as Chris Lu who make its publication possible.

Clinton's good ol' days

As I listened to former President Clinton speak on March 26, I found myself reminiscing about his presidency. In all honesty, I miss him as president, and I believe a lot of Americans do, too. Aside from the adultery, I see Clinton as one of America's finest presidents for three reasons. First, he has an amazing ability to speak to us. He has the capacity to take complex issues, ranging from North Korea to Social Security, and translate them to something we can understand. His public-speaking skills far outmatch anything seen today. Can anyone truly see George W. Bush talking insightfully to an audience of 15,000 for more than two hours?

Second, Clinton had credibility. With Clinton, we had faith that the government could foster an environment in which small business, families, and the stock market could prosper and in which a government could balance its budget. Today, that trust is worryingly absent. More and more people have lost their jobs. Education and homeland security are left unfunded at the expense of irresponsible tax cuts. In this administration's third year, does anyone have faith that it will solve our problems?

Third, his presidency had foresight in its foreign policy. Clinton attempted to make the world safe through the international community, military assistance, and humanitarian aid. He agreed to the World Trade Organization, the International Criminal Court, and the Kyoto Protocol because they bound the world's economy and security to ours. In large part due to Clinton, China, the former Soviet Union countries, and Africa have made strides in democracy and peace. Clearly, joining the rest of the world is better than pushing away from it, isn't it?

Obviously, you can make arguments for Republican presidents. But I, and a lot of Americans, felt safer and more confident in our future with Bill Clinton in the White House than I do now with George W. Bush.

POW fought ambush

BY SUSAN SCHMIDT AND VERNON LOEB
WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — Pfc. Jessica Lynch, rescued Tuesday from an Iraqi hospital, fought fiercely and shot several enemy soldiers after Iraqi forces ambushed the Army's 507th Ordnance Maintenance company, firing her weapon until she ran out of ammunition, U.S. officials said Wednesday.

Lynch, a 19-year-old supply clerk, continued firing at the Iraqis even after she sustained multiple gunshot wounds and watched several other soldiers in her unit die around her in fighting 11 days ago, one official said. The ambush took place after a 507th convoy, supporting the advancing 3rd Infantry Division, took a wrong turn in the southern city of An Nasiriyah.

"She was fighting to the death," the official said. "She did not want to be taken alive."

Lynch was also stabbed when Iraqi forces closed in on her position, the official said, noting that initial intelligence reports indicated that she had been stabbed to death. No official gave any indication Wednesday, however, that Lynch's wounds had been life-threatening.

Several officials cautioned that the precise sequence of events is still being determined, and further information would emerge as Lynch is debriefed. Reports thus far are based on battlefield intelligence, they say, which comes from monitored communications and from Iraqi sources in An Nasiriyah whose reliability has yet to be assessed. Pentagon officials said they had heard "rumors" of Lynch's heroics but had no confirmation.

There was no immediate indication whether Lynch's fellow soldiers killed in the ambush were among 11 bodies found by Special Operations forces who rescued Lynch at Saddam Hussein Hospital, although U.S. officials said that at least some of the bodies are believed to be those of U.S. soldiers. Two of the bodies were found in the hospital's morgue, and nine were found in shallow graves on the grounds outside.

Seven soldiers from the 507th are still listed as missing in action following the ambush. Five others, four males and a female, were taken captive following the attack. Video footage of the five has been shown on Iraqi television, along with grisly pictures of at least four soldiers killed in the battle.

Lynch, from Palestine, W.Va., arrived Wednesday at a U.S. military hospital in Germany. She was in stable condition, suffering from broken arms and a broken leg, in addition to the gunshot and stab wounds, sources said. Victoria Clarke, a Pentagon spokeswoman, gave no specifics of her condition, telling reporters only that Lynch is "in good spirits and being treated for injuries."

But one military officer briefed on her condition said that while Lynch was conscious and able to communicate with the U.S. commandos who rescued her, "she was pretty messed up." Lynch spoke by telephone with her parents Wednesday night, who said she was in good spirits, but hungry and in pain.

"Talk about spunk," said Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kansas, who had been briefed on the rescue by military officials. "She just persevered. It takes that and a tremendous faith that your country is going to come and get you."

One Army official said that it could be some time before she is reunited with her family, because experience with those taken prisoner since the Vietnam War indicates that soldiers held in captivity need time to "decompress" and reflect on their ordeal with the help of medical professionals.

Deep in the hell of Abu Ghraib

BY MATTHEW MCALLESTER
NEWSDAY

AMMAN, Jordan — At first it sounded like the guards who played pool throughout the night in a room at the end of the cell block were having a play fight or at worst an argument over what the local rules might be at Abu Ghraib.

The clicking of the pool balls had stopped. Shoes that usually padded or snapped down the concrete hallway running between the two rows of cells were rushing this time. Several pairs of shoes, or boots. There was shouting, too.

A body fell to the ground, and now, amid the shouting, emerged a single voice coming from the level where I lay, on the cold floor of my cell. That voice was different from the others. It wasn't that it was quieter, because the man was calling out almost as loudly as the others in this group. But it came from a throat contracted by fear. It seemed about two or three yards from me.

I recognized one of the other voices, I am sure. It belonged to a guard who had broad shoulders and wore wire-rim glasses and who walked in smallish steps, with his feet pointing out slightly, because of his large girth. He had been there when we checked in to the prison a couple of days earlier, and he had searched the pockets of my black fleece, pulling a drawstring tight around my waist for no apparent reason. He had stood beside me as I stripped to my boxer shorts and put on my blue-and-white striped prison pajamas. Somehow in our new universe full of dark stars, I picked him out as perhaps one of the blackest. Ever since, I had avoided eye contact with him whenever he walked past my cell door.

He had a loud voice, normally, barking commands angrily to the Iraqi prisoners who occupied the cells opposite ours. His was a nonchalant aggression. Now his voice was unrestrained, furious. And it came in a new rhythm, alternating with another sound.

In the early 1990s, I once saw two men rush out of a warehouse building on a quiet street in Manhattan with baseball bats to beat up a man who looked like a drug addict. The man had been clumsily, hazily trying to break into a car. The sound of the bats against his gangly body has always stayed with me. That was the sort of sound I was hearing now, alternating with the shouts of the heavy-set guard.

The prisoner was on the ground, and he was being beaten with something that wasn't a fist or a boot. A shout and then that slightly resonant sound of flesh and bone giving way to something very hard that was moving fast. And then another shout from the guard, another blow. It went on.

Voices mingled, but it sounded like the other guards were perhaps trying to persuade the big guard to ease up on the prisoner a little. But maybe they were egging him on, because the beating did not stop, nor did the yelps coming from the tightened throat of the man on the ground.

The fluorescent strip above my head filled my cell with light, as it did 24 hours a day. I was plainly visible to the men in the corridor, and I did not want to be seen watching. As soon as I had sensed the violence beginning, I turned onto my left side and lay motionless, staring at the marine-blue strip painted around the base of the cinderblock walls of my cell.

Journalists are meant to bear witness. That's rather the point of our job. We watch, and record, and tell other people what we have seen, perhaps in the hope that an account, a witnessing, could chip away at badness. But I turned away and chose not to see a thing.

Dusan Vranic/Associated Press
Newsday correspondent Matt McAllester answers a question at a press conference in Amman, Jordan, on Wednesday.

Eventually the beating stopped, and the man was dumped into his cell. The big guard seemed to have exhausted his fury. The block echoed as it always did when the iron bars of the prisoner's cell door was closed, and the click of its padlock confirmed that he would not be leaving his 6-by-10-foot room that night.

With each breath he made a sort of crying sound. Sometimes he broke that rhythm to exhale his pain with more force, and the otherwise silent block filled up with what I wondered might be the man's last gasps.

A guard ambled back and spoke to him, asking him a question. The man just continued to whine with his agony, and the guard walked away.

After another while, two guards came back, and I wondered whether one of them was the man who had appeared once at my cell door to ask, in English, "Medicine?"

Burk's lawyers ask judge for decision

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Martha Burk's lawyers asked a judge Wednesday to override the sheriff's decision prohibiting her from demonstrating at the front gate of Augusta National during the Masters.

The request comes 10 days before Burk plans to protest at the club because of its all-male membership. Burk wants thousands of golf fans to walk by her demonstration.

But Sheriff Ronald Strength says the closest Burk can legally protest is a 5-acre site just less than a half mile from the gate. A city law revised last month gives him authority to regulate protests.

Burk's lawyers told a federal judge their client was denied access to public property outside the gates because Augusta wants to protect its image — not public safety, as the sheriff has said.

"This is an embarrassing protest and I'm sure the city would rather it be moved up the street where there are fewer people around to see it," said Sarah Shalf, one of Burk's lawyers.

Augusta officials deny blocking Burk's free-speech rights. They say the busy street in front is crammed with pedestrian and vehicle traffic during the tournament, making it dangerous.

IOWA CLUB RUGBY

No pain, no game

Rugby players motivated by team camaraderie, experience

BY KATIE LOW
 THE DAILY IOWAN

With the temperature hovering around 30 degrees and huge snowflakes falling sporadically last weekend, Iowa rugby players run drills to warm up before stripping off their sweatsuits and hitting the field wearing only shorts and long-sleeved shirts.

Nate Hey, a December graduate from the UI, stands and watches. Hey was a former member of the rugby team who now attends games to cheer on his former teammates, occasionally playing a game with the second-string team, or B team.

"Since I graduated, I just like to let the kids play," he said. "I try to help them by teaching them instead of playing."

Hey, who currently works at Old Navy and Cambus but is looking for a job in law enforcement, still feels strong connections with his former team. He said that although he enjoys the sport, he also considers the players to be good friends.

"It's really a social club; we're all best friends," he said. "We have the same interests and often hang out together."

Hey says along with the social benefits, people also join the rugby team because it offers non-scholarship athletes a chance to play sports for the pure enjoyment of physical activity.

"Being on the field and running around make you feel a lot better than going to class all day," he said.

Davis' legacy not forgotten

BY JEROD LEUPOLD
 THE DAILY IOWAN

Down a busy hallway in Carver-Hawkeye Arena hangs a small plaque that goes largely unnoticed. The commemoration lists extraordinary achievements in running.

It is one of the only memories of "Nan" Doak Davis, the Iowa women's athlete of the decade in the 1980s, who is largely forgotten these days.

Davis accumulated nine All-American titles, held the world record in the three-mile run, was a three-time USA cross-country team member, a four-time Big Ten champion, TAC 5,000- and 10,000-meter champion, and alternate for the Olympic team during her career as a long-distance runner, from 1980 to 1989.

Now, only distance runners draw from her success.

"It's definitely a goal to live up to," senior distance runner Becca Thompson said.

There wasn't a track to practice on. I ran on brick streets, grass, and dirt. Humble beginnings.

"Nan" Doak Davis,
 Iowa women's athlete of the 1980s

"Seeing what she was able to accomplish."

Thompson met Davis her freshman year. But none of 10 randomly chosen Iowa students could place the name of one of Iowa's most prolific athletes.

Davis wore many different shoes during her career as a track athlete. She traveled the world and was sponsored by Nike, New Balance, and Adidas. Now, she spends her time chasing her daughters, Amanda, 9, and Amy, 6, with her husband, Wisconsin wrestling head coach Barry Davis in Madison. But she began her journey as an Iowa Hawkeye.

Davis was born in the town of Hendrick, Iowa, population 800, and her high-school graduating class numbered 25.

"There wasn't a track to practice on," she said. "I ran on brick streets, grass, and dirt. Humble beginnings."

When she came to Iowa, she received a partial scholarship, something that drove her to be a better athlete. As a true freshman, she finished 10th in the nation. While setting records, Davis was also touching the people around her.

Iowa sailing club to host regatta on Lake Macbride

BY NICHOLAS BERGIN
 SPECIAL TO THE DAILY IOWAN

With the panache of experienced sailors, juniors Joe Fricton and Kristen Martin del Campo maneuver their Flying Junior sailboat, cruising through the waters of Lake Macbride.

Fricton and Martin del Campo have sailed together on the UI club sailing team for the last two years.

"I usually crew and let Joe drive," Martin del Campo said.

The skipper navigates the boat, sitting behind the crew and using the tiller to steer and control the main sail.

The main job for the crew is to control the jib, or front sail. The crew will also keep the skipper informed of such things as wind gusts, lulls, or other boats.

"The No. 1 thing Kristen says to me is, 'Joe don't be stupid,'" Fricton said.

"He's in control of the boat. I just want to make sure he has a plan," Martin del Campo said.

The sailing team is practicing hard because this weekend, it will host the Midwest Collegiate Sailing Association Spring Regatta, the team's first regatta of the season. Races will be held on the south arm of Lake Macbride.

Nine colleges from across the Midwest have accepted the team's invitation and will race this weekend.

The teams include representatives from Washington University, Iowa State University, University of Minnesota, Carleton College, University of St. Thomas, University of Wisconsin-Madison, University of Chicago, Michigan State, and Illinois Institute of Technology.

"We want to finish in the top three; I think we have a pretty good chance. Minnesota and Wisconsin will be our main competition. They always win the regattas," Fricton said.

The Iowa sailing team will enter two teams into the regatta. Team one consists of Fricton, Martin del Campo, team captain Jennifer Springsteen, and freshman Steve Schmid. Team two includes sophomore Lauren Trolley and senior Brad Kosar as skipper with rotating crew.

The regatta will consist of 20 races, with each lasting 15-20 minutes. Teams will sail both triangle- and oval-shaped courses. The boats being used will be Flying Junior sailboats, which are 14-foot dinghies typically

NCAA TOURNAMENT

Collison, Hinrich families travel well

BY DOUG TUCKER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Tire salesmen must hate to see Nick Collison and Kirk Hinrich bring an end to their remarkable college careers.

Traveling around the country the past four years watching their sons star for Kansas, Dave and Judy Collison and Jim and Nancy Hinrich have put about 300,000 miles on four vehicles.

Rock bands might envy the loyal following these tight-knit, Iowans lavish on their boys.

"It's been a pure joy," said Judy Collison.

Now the families are packing up for their final road trip, and possibly their most joyful.

The Collisons planned to drive to New Orleans, where Kansas meets Marquette on Saturday. The Hinrichs had just about made up their minds to fly.

"We think it will be about 15 hours," said Dave Collison. "We'll get up early the morning we leave and get everything packed. But the truth is, we'll have everything packed before we go to bed the night before, we'll be so excited."

Collison and Hinrich coached their sons in high school and Judy and Nancy are both teachers, so getting time off wasn't always easy. Occasionally, it's been impossible.

When the Jayhawks played in the NCAA tournament this month in Oklahoma City, the Hinrichs drove down Thursday, hurried back to work Friday, then turned right around for the second game Saturday.

Often the families have traveled together.

"We all got into the Hinrichs' van and drove to New York twice," said Dave Collison. "It was a lot of fun. We'd drive all night. We had plenty of drivers so it was easy to keep going."

The conversation during the long car trips often turned to basketball strategy. It was amazing, Dave Collison said with a laugh, how often the two old coaches would agree.

"I don't remember that we ever decided that Roy Williams wasn't handling his team right," Dave Collison said.

The travel was not only for seeing their sons on display.

"Dave and I made up our mind from the beginning that we wanted to get to every game we could possibly get to," said Judy Collison.

"We knew there would be 16,000 people there cheering for him and talking to him. But we wanted him to know there were two people in that big crowd who love him just because he's Nick."

Mike Yoder/Associated Press

As coach at Sioux City West, Jim Hinrich knows how important support is.

"I've known moms and dads who were interested in coming to the games only if their son was a good player," he said. "They wanted to be there if they played well and won but not if he wasn't a good player. Well, it's even more important to be there for them when they lose."

Since their boys lost only three home games in their four-year careers, the loyal parents spent little time consoling them.

The families took separate cars to Columbus, Ohio, a few years ago.

"We were somewhere in Indiana," said Jim Hinrich. "It was cold and bleak and about 2:30 in the morning when we decided to pull into a rest stop. When we were getting up to leave, Kirk said, 'We must be crazy. Look — the entire place is deserted. Nobody in their right mind would be out here on this lonely highway this late at night.'"

Right then, Dave, Judy, and Nick, walked in. "We all had a big laugh," Nancy said.

point/counterpoint

Who will win the NCAA men's tournament?

Midwest region

Get your underdogs here! I'll take mine topped with blue and gold, wrapped in Golden Eagle cellophane.

Twenty-six years after the sweetness of tournament championship glory, the Golden Eagles of Marquette have advanced to the Final Four. The No. 3 seed will arrive in New Orleans to face year-in, year-out Kansas.

Don't let the Eagles' lack of experience fool you. They have talent — especially in Dwayne Wade. He put up serious numbers against Kentucky, posting a triple-double. If the team has a good defensive outing, and Wade can play to his potential, the Jayhawks will be in trouble. The Eagles also have faith in their ability. Now, this may not count for much on the outside, but confidence in the locker room is key for a team that few thought would advance this far.

And give the Eagles some credit. They've been David among Goliaths. A squeaker got them by Missouri in the second round, Pittsburgh then fell, and mighty Kentucky fell even harder. Marquette wreaked havoc on many brackets because no one had the foresight to put it past round 3.

So listen up, folks, this is how it breaks down: The Golden Eagles slay yet another giant on their way to facing the Orangemen. For the final act, Tom Crean will play the part of the late Al McGuire and take his Warriors, umm ... Golden Eagles to their second tourney championship.

— by J.K. Perry

South region

Texas will win the national championship because of All-American T.J. Ford.

That alone could be enough, but might not be. Ford can take over a game better than any other player in the Final Four. He is the team's leading scorer with 15.1 points per game, but he also has quickness and great vision. Ford has an improved jump shot that defenders must respect, while at the same time guarding against his lightning first step.

Another important key for Texas is its role players. James Thomas needs to continue his double-double play, scoring 11.1 ppg and pulling down 11.2 rebounds per game.

And Brandon Mouton needs to be the hot hand and make shots over the tenacious Syracuse zone if Texas plans to be playing on April 7.

Texas also has the depth and defense to cut down the nets. They have 10 players who average 11 minutes a game. And while Texas doesn't have much postseason experience, it does know how to win big games.

The Longhorns twice beat Oklahoma this season and held off a charging Spartans team in the Elite Eight. They can also draw from the Sweet 16 experience from a year ago. If Texas can get over the pressure of being the only No. 1 seed left, Rick Barnes and the Longhorns will have a great three-day weekend.

— by Dustin Deaveany

West region

The Jayhawks' advantage — experience.

Kansas, which suffered a loss to eventual national champion Maryland in last year's Final Four, is the only team out of this year's remaining bunch that has made it to the semifinals in the past six years.

Jayhawks coach Roy Williams is making his fourth trip to the Final Four — more than the other three teams' coaches combined — and he is arguably the best coach in college basketball without a championship to his name. He is hungry.

Senior leaders Nick Collison and Kirk Hinrich, who have combined for 36.0 ppg this season, have a strong chance of fulfilling Williams' appetite in New Orleans.

Granted, Kansas suffered a scare in its 78-75 victory over Arizona in the Elite Eight, but Texas, Marquette, and Syracuse have all had their share of close calls as well. The Longhorns only beat UConn by four, the Golden Eagles sneaked by Pitt in a three-point victory, and the Orangemen edged Auburn by a single point. The Jayhawks also made it out alive in the toughest region, which, along with Arizona, included Duke, which Kansas also took down in the third round.

But that is all history. It's what takes place on the court that counts. And a Kansas championship is what will take place.

— by Brian Triplett

East region

Say what you want about the Big 12, or how Dwayne Wade is so good, he once scored 500 points in one minute, but the team to beat in the tournament is Syracuse. Yes, the Orangepeople.

Don't believe me? Well, you probably had Kentucky in your Final Four, and I didn't, so listen to Uncle Adam when he talks.

Texas is athletic and has the best guard tandem in the nation, but the 'Horns' and coach Rick Barnes have more experience eating boogers than playing in the Final Four. I guarantee I'm right. They're tough, and they're Syracuse's coach. Boheim picked them to win it all before the season with a body on Texas can or will stop Carmelo Anthony. Oranges win by 5.

Kansas will beat Marquette in a laugh, so there's no need to discuss the Golden Eagles. Still, the Jayhawks are not going to win it all. Not now, not any time that Roy Williams is coaching them.

This is probably Roy's best opportunity, and like me hooking up with Anna Kournikova, it's not going to happen. Teams such as Utah State and Holy Cross have given Kansas fits in the tournament with their zone defense, shutting down Nick Collison with ease.

Guess what? Syracuse's zone defense is better. Syracuse will walk all over Kansas — the team, not the state. The state is uglier than Oprah in a bikini. Syracuse by 20, and I want a piece of the net.

Rugby team devoted to philanthropy, fund raising

RUGBY

Current member Zac Lujan, a sophomore, said the team helps keep him active.

"I guarantee if I wasn't on the rugby team, I'd be sitting on my ass a lot more," he said.

However great the benefits of the team may be, there are also some drawbacks. Rugby is notorious for being an extremely physical sport, and players often sustain injuries. Hey said he's seen people lose teeth as well as break collarbones, puncture lungs, receive concussions, and tear ACLs.

"Injuries happen, but it's mostly because of stupidity," he said. "People wouldn't get their teeth knocked out if they had been wearing mouth guards."

Because rugby is a club sport and does not have enough money to hire a trainer, players try to avoid injuries.

Club sports at the UI do not receive funding from the Athletics Department and are categorized as student organizations. They do receive money from the university, which is distributed through Recreation Services. However, it is often not enough, and the team must take on fund-raising activities in order to supplement travel costs it incurs when attending tournaments in such places as New Orleans, Iowa Falls, and Cedar Falls.

Hey said the most popular form of fund raising is for the team to throw keg parties. Rugby parties are somewhat infamous on campus and could be part of the reason for the team's party-animal reputation.

But the team has participated in philanthropic events as well, including helping out at the Wesley House and sponsoring a family for Dance Marathon.

"We try to do good stuff when most of the time all people think we do is party," Hey said.

The team not only has to work to raise money, but also to recruit players. There are no scholarships in club sports and in the case of rugby, it's often hard to find new members.

"It's not like people come out and want to play rugby," Hey said. "They're just here and we find them."

Lujan said he initially joined the team because a friend he met freshman year in class encouraged him to try it.

"I wasn't looking that hard to join something when I came to college but rugby just fell in my lap," he said. "I liked it and I plan on sticking with it. It's more fun each year and we just keep getting better and better."

Hey said most players initially don't know much about the sport but pick it up over time. The team does not hold tryouts so anyone that wants to try it can.

"We just want people to come and learn and no matter how good or bad they are, we'll make them better," he said.

Because rugby did not originate in the United States most people are unaware of how it's played. Lujan said that was one of the reasons he was drawn to the sport.

"It gives people the opportunity to be a part of a sport that isn't really part of the U.S.," he said. "Rugby in America has unlimited boundaries. It could be really huge someday."

Easley signs with Devil Rays

BY FRED GOODALL
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Damion Easley signed with the Tampa Bay Devil Rays on Wednesday, five days after becoming the most expensive player cut loose in baseball history when the Detroit Tigers released him with $14.3 million still owed on his contract.

The 33-year-old second baseman is in the fourth season of a $29.9, five-year contract that pays him $6.5 million this year. The Devil Rays, who have the lowest payroll in the majors, will only have to pay $300,000 of that.

The Tigers also must pay the one-time All-Star $6.5 million in 2004 and a $1.3 million buyout of an $8 million team option for 2005.

Easley

by the Tigers last week. The move came less than a week after the Devil Rays, who have trimmed their on-field payroll to just over $15 million, set the previous record for the most money owed to a released player by cutting Greg Vaughn, who is guaranteed $9.25 million this year.

In other moves Wednesday, outfielder George Lombard was sent outright to Durham and left-hander Hans Smith was sent outright to Double-A Orlando after clearing waivers.

Outfielder Jason Tyner was designated for assignment, and infielder Hector Luna, taken from Cleveland in the winter-meeting draft, was returned to the Indians, who assigned him to their Triple-A team in Buffalo.

Davis attributes success to work ethic, competitive spirit

WOMEN

"She made the rewards intrinsically better," former coach Jerry Hassard said. "I've never coached anyone who had her mental skills. She was a very pure athlete and a very nice person."

Personally, Davis attributes her success to a competitive spirit.

"Even in workouts, I was the type of kid who wanted to get out there," she said. "I wanted to get business done."

Hassard remembers sitting with her in Boston before the World Championship.

"I asked her 'Do you feel ready to take top six?'" Hassard said. "She looked at me and said, 'You don't think I'd travel this far and not be ready?'"

Another tale of the normally cheery woman has her going to the Iowa sports information director and telling him she was going to win the national title, a feat no Iowa woman had accomplished. The director got so worried that he contacted Hassard and asked him if that was a healthy approach to the sport.

"I was there when she won the NCAAs [in 1985]," former Iowa women's Athletics Director Christine Grant said. "I think she really epitomizes the commitment that student-athletes have."

As director for 27 years, Grant's name became synonymous with Title IX.

"Before Title IX, women were actively discouraged," she said. "[Participating in sports] was seen as un-ladylike, therefore unacceptable. Imagine a young woman being told by society that you can't participate."

In 1973, Grant worked with then-UI President Willard Boyd to elevate all 12 women's clubs to varsity sports. Since then, Iowa has added rowing and field hockey. Over the course of 30 years, Iowa has staunchly supported women's athletics and provided Hawkeye fans with many heroes to cheer.

Davis looked back on her career and wanted to leave one last thing for today's female athletes.

"Be selfless," she said. "Remember why you're there and how you got there. Working together on a team makes individuals great."

Competitive sailing requires patience

SAILING

sailed by two people.

Each four-person team divides into two fleets, A and B. Each division sails two races per rotation, receiving one point for finishing first, two points for finishing second, and so on. The team with the lowest overall point total wins. Judges are also on site to decide protests, which may be filed by any sailor who believes he or she has been fouled by another boat.

Competitive sailing requires many skills that can only be acquired with experience.

"A good sailor can look into the wind and see if it is going to shift or get weaker or stronger. Being able to judge that and react to it makes a great sailor — also not doing anything stupid, like fouling someone or capsizing [tipping over]," Friction said. "When a boat gets ahead of other boats, it will create a wind shadow that will lessen the wind speed for the boats behind it and will slow the other boats down."

"Competitive sailing takes a lot of patience, the ability to stay calm under pressure, and a lot of attentiveness," Martin del Campo said.

Over the last two years, Friction and Martin del Campo have built a strong bond of trust.

"When I do something, she kind of knows exactly what I'm going to do," Friction said.

"At first, during my freshman year, I was falling in the water a lot — that was my main concern; but I don't worry about that anymore with Joe," Martin del Campo said.

Sailing teams will start arriving Friday evening to attend the regatta-registration meeting.

"It's Friday night, so we have to serve refreshments," Friction said. "The gathering can last well into the early morning, but everyone is always up and ready to sail the next day."

On Saturday, the teams will meet at 8 a.m. for the start of the regatta, and the races usually run from around 9:30 a.m. until 5 p.m. The activities on April 6 will also begin at 8 a.m., but only last until 1 p.m.

"We always get up at about 7, and I always insist we stop at McDonald's," Friction said.

The Spring Regatta will be held near the UI Macbride Nature and Recreation area, 10 miles north of Coralville. Directions can be found at the Iowa sailing club Web site, <http://www.uiowa.edu/~sail/contactinfo1.htm>.

Throwers travel to Texas for Relays

The Iowa track team sent a small force to the Texas Southern Relays today — a throwers-only corps.

Expected to see his first action of the year is Bill Neumann. The junior from British Columbia has been touted by many to be one of the best athletes the Hawkeyes have in their ranks. Neumann will be competing in the javelin throw. He threw for a personal best last year during the NCAA championships, taking third in with a throw of 244 feet, 8 inches.

Last week Neumann did not throw due to the adverse conditions in Kalamazoo, Mich.

"I think his training has paid off," said coach Larry Wiczorek. "I expect him to have a good debut."

Wiczorek also felt that better conditions in Texas could contribute to heightened performances by the other Hawkeye throwers. Wiczorek opted not to send his runners to the high-octane meet.

Third time's a charm: Celtics beat Heat

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — The Boston Celtics decided two embarrassing losses to the Miami Heat were enough.

Paul Pierce scored 28 points in three quarters as the Celtics beat the last-place Heat for the first time in three meetings this season with a 90-62 victory.

The Celtics suffered a 91-81 loss to Miami here on Dec. 18, then shot a franchise-low 27.8 percent (22-79) from the field in a 90-70 defeat at Miami nine days later.

Boston turned the tables in this one, holding the Heat to 35.5 percent (27-76). Only a 3-pointer by Mike James with four seconds left Miami enabled to match its season low in points, set in a 93-62 loss at Detroit on February 17.

The Celtics allowed just 28 points in the first half, building an 18-point halftime lead before blowing it open in the third quarter.

Boston has won three in a row following a season-high six-game losing streak, although the two previous victories came in a home-and-home sweep of the league-worst Cleveland Cavaliers.

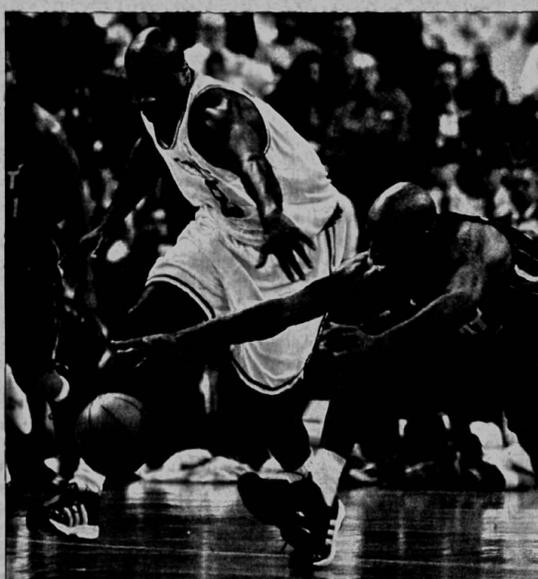

After scoring 18 points in the first quarter, the Heat managed just 10 in the second period. They were held to 16 in the third and trailed, 73-44, entering the final quarter.

Rookie Caron Butler led Miami with 17 points.

Indiana 103, Cleveland 82

CLEVELAND — The Pacers may not have had Jermaine O'Neal, but they had Al Harrington and Jonathan Bender.

Miami guard Anthony Carter stretches as he battles Boston forward Antoine Walker for the ball during the second quarter on Wednesday.

as the Pacers won on the road for the first time in nearly two months with a rout of the Cavaliers.

Mired in an 11-game road losing streak since a victory over New Orleans, the Pacers learned before tip-off that they would be without O'Neal — their All-Star forward, leading scorer and rebounder — due to a sprained right ankle.

Inserted into the starting lineup, Harrington played like O'Neal normally does, while Bender saw increased time off the bench and responded with one of the best games of his career.

Philadelphia 108, Chicago 101

PHILADELPHIA — Allen Iverson

had 24 points and a season-high 12 assists, leading the 76ers to a victory over the Bulls.

Kenny Thomas added 16 points and 14 rebounds for the Sixers, 20-5 since the All-Star break.

Jay Williams scored 23 points, and Donyell Marshall had 18 points and 11 rebounds for Chicago, which has lost four in a row. The Bulls fell to 3-36 on the road. They are 23-14 at home.

The Sixers missed 13 of their 18 shots in the second quarter, including eight straight at one point.

San Antonio 105, Memphis 87

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Tim Duncan scored 33 points and grabbed 19 rebounds, leading an inside dominance by as the Spurs defeated the Grizzlies.

Duncan connected on 13 of 16 shots from the field.

The Grizzlies seemed to have little answer for Duncan inside, and when point guard Tony Parker added 10 of his 16 points in the third period, San Antonio continued to build the lead.

Six minutes into the final period, the Spurs led by 20 and eventually would hold a 21-point advantage down the stretch.

Reserve Malik Rose added 18 points for San Antonio.

Lorenzen Wright led Memphis with 24 points.

Wesley Person added 14 points for Memphis.

Memphis trailed by 38-37 with five minutes to play in the half.

From there, San Antonio outscored the Grizzlies, 11-2, to build the lead to 10, and eventually held a 49-40 lead at the half.

Sacramento 105, Washington 99

WASHINGTON — The Wizards finally got back to their own building, then were nearly run out of it by the Sacramento.

Chris Webber torched his old team again for 28 points, nine rebounds, and six assists as the Kings took control in the second quarter and held on for a 105-99 victory Wednesday night.

Jerry Stackhouse scored 27 points for Washington. Michael Jordan scored 17 points and played 33 of the game's first 34 minutes and 42 minutes total.

Webber hit a 20-foot jumper, and the Wizards didn't have enough time left to catch up. Stackhouse twice cut the lead to four with inside baskets, but the Kings went 4-for-4 from the free-throw line in the final minute.

Babcock fired after 13 years with the Hawks

BY PAUL NEWBERRY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Pete Babcock was fired as general manager of the Atlanta Hawks on Wednesday, with eight games left in the team's fourth-straight losing season.

The Hawks never advanced past the second of the playoffs and won just one Central Division title during Babcock's 13 years at the helm.

"It's time to try a new plan," team president Stan Kasten said. "It's time to try something else."

Billy Knight, the former GM of the Vancouver-Memphis Grizzlies, was named Babcock's interim successor and will be considered for the job on a permanent basis, Kasten said.

Before this season, coach Lon Kruger guaranteed the Hawks would return to the playoffs. Instead, Atlanta is 29-45, and Kruger was fired in December.

The Hawks are virtually eliminated from the Eastern Conference race, trailing Milwaukee by 6½ games for the final playoff spot before the Bucks played Wednesday night.

Despite a lineup that includes three former all-stars — Glenn Robinson, Shareef Abdur-Rahim, and Theo Ratliff — the Hawks have been one of the NBA's most disappointing teams.

"I knew the reality of life," said Babcock, who attended the news conference to announce his firing. "We needed to turn the corner and show marked improvement. We didn't."

Babcock decided to remake the roster after being swept by the New York Knicks in the second round of the 1999 playoffs. Babcock hoped to make the team younger and faster by trading Steve Smith and Ed Gray for Isaiah Rider and Jim Jackson. He later traded center Dikembe Mutombo.

Rider didn't even make it through one season with the Hawks, who released him for repeated tardiness and team rules violations. Babcock called that trade his biggest mistake.

Atlanta hasn't won more than 33 games in a season since 1998-99.

"It's not like this is a shock," Babcock said. "There's no gray area in this business. It's all about wins and losses."

Before coming to the Hawks in 1990, Babcock was GM of the Denver Nuggets. During his six years, the team won two division championships and reached the Western Conference finals once.

Babcock joined the Hawks in February 1990. During the next nine seasons, Atlanta won at least 50 games three times and made the playoffs eight times.

Babcock hired Lenny Wilkens, who led the Hawks to the Central Division championship in 1994. The GM also engineered trades that brought Smith, Mookie Blaylock, Dikembe Mutombo, and Christian Laettner to Atlanta.

Despite repeated postseason appearances, the Hawks were always eliminated in the first or second rounds. Babcock also was criticized for his poor draft record, including first-round busts such as Doug Edwards, Ed Gray and Priest Lauderdale.

NHL ROUNDUP

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAMPA, Fla. — Nikolai Khabibulin made 26 saves and extended his career-best unbeaten streak to 16 games as the Lightning beat the Canadiens on Wednesday night.

Cory Sarich scored the go-ahead goal in the second, and Vinny Prospal tied a career high with his 22nd goal for the Lightning, who are 7-0-6 in their past 13 games and are approaching the first division title in their 11-year history.

Tampa Bay leads Southeast Division rival Washington by three points with two games remaining for each team in a race for the No. 3 seed in the Eastern Conference and home-ice advantage in their anticipated first-round playoff matchup.

The last unbeaten streak longer than 16 games by an NHL goalie was 21 by Chris Osgood (19-0-2) for Detroit seven seasons ago. Khabibulin (30-21-11) also set a club record for victories.

Pittsburgh 3, Carolina 2

PITTSBURGH — Mario Lemieux had two assists in what may have been his final NHL game, and the Penguins rallied for two goals in the closing minutes to beat the Hurricanes.

Richard Lintner scored with 3:01 remaining to tie it before Eric Meloche's second goal of the game, assisted by Lemieux, won it with 10.1 seconds to play.

Michael Zigomanis scored once and assisted on another goal in a two-minute span of the second period, but the Hurricanes couldn't hold the 2-1 lead.

Lemieux couldn't convert a couple of good scoring chances in the first period, including one on a breakout when he couldn't distance himself enough from Bret Hedican to get off an uncontested shot against Arturs Irbe.

Lintner who tied it with 3:01 remaining, sweeping in a rebound of Martin Straka's backhand.

Columbus 3, Minnesota 0

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Marc Denis stopped 27 shots for his fifth shutout of the season, and Mike Sillinger had a goal and an assist as the Blue Jackets scored three power-play goals late in the first period to beat the Wild.

Geoff Sanderson and Rick Nash also scored, and Ray Whitney had three assists for the Blue Jackets.

With just over five minutes remaining in the first period, Minnesota's Wes Walz was assessed an attempt-to-injure penalty and the Blue Jackets went on a five-minute power play.

Fifty-five seconds later, Sillinger drilled home a rebound for the first goal to give Columbus a 1-0 lead at 16:03.

With the power play still in effect, Pascal Dupuis was penalized for high sticking and the Jackets had a 5-on-3, which they capitalized on when Sanderson scored on a one-timer at 18:34.

Buffalo 4, Atlanta 3

BUFFALO, N.Y. — Daniel Briere and Tim Connolly scored power-play goals in the final 1:59 and the Sabres rallied to a victory over the Thrashers.

Dmitri Kalinin and Ales Kotalik also scored, and Mika Noronen made 20 saves for Buffalo, winners of five of its last six. The Sabres won for the first time after being down by three goals since Oct. 17, 1998, at Montreal.

Pasi Nurminen made 36 saves for Atlanta, which failed in its bid for a club-record five-game unbeaten streak. Lubos Bartekko, Yannick Tremblay, and Dany Heatley scored for the Thrashers, and Marc Savard and Slava Kozlov each had two assists.

With Atlanta up 3-2 and Buffalo on a two-man advantage, Briere banged in a rebound with 1:59 remaining.

Connolly tipped in a shot from the right slot with 53.7 left to give the Sabres a 4-3 lead.

Bartekko and Tremblay scored 23 seconds apart in the first period, giving Atlanta a 2-0 lead.

Tar Heels' head coach failed to lead team

BY DAVID DROSCHAK
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — North Carolina's basketball program ran on automatic pilot for four decades under Dean Smith and Bill Guthridge.

Fans and players took it for granted that Matt Doherty would continue the tradition.

But Doherty's reign as the head coach of the Tar Heels ended Tuesday, his resignation bringing an end to three seasons of tension on-and-off the court.

"Guys were frustrated and it wasn't because of the losing," said Rashad McCants, one of the team's freshman stars. "It was mostly because we had to go to practice every day saying, 'Man, we've got to deal with this guy.'"

Melvin Scott, a sophomore, also had his ups and downs with Doherty.

"I've been through a tough year," Scott said. "But I don't hate coach. I didn't want him to get fired. But that comes with basketball, man. Personally, I want what's best for the university. Whatever's best to get this program to where it used to be."

The team's failure to make the NCAA tournament in two of his three seasons was secondary to Doherty's inability to lead and get along with players and UNC athletic-department staff.

"It's not about winning and losing," athletics director Dick Baddour said. "It has not been and I say that with great confidence. It's hard to predict what might have happened had we gone to the Final Four. I don't know. I had to play with the cards that I'm dealt."

"It's difficult to follow two coaches as successful as Dean Smith and Bill Guthridge," he added, "but Carolina is a basketball trust and the athletics director and the head coach are charged with maintaining that trust."

Baddour and chancellor James Moeser portrayed Doherty as a coach who failed to communicate and connect with his players, and was unable to move the storied program forward with a 53-43 record in three seasons.

"The issue here is not basketball," Moeser said. "It's not wins and losses or players running the program. It's about leadership."

Royals roll over White Sox to begin season 2-0

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Joe Randa hit a tiebreaking two-run homer in the seventh inning as the Kansas City Royals beat the Chicago White Sox, 5-4, on Wednesday for their first 2-0 start in 24 years.

With the score 3-all, Angel Berroa reached on a throwing error by shortstop Tony Graffanino, and Randa homered off Rick White (0-1).

Albie Lopez (1-0) gave up an RBI single in the eighth to Armando Rios, and rookie Mike MacDougal pitched the ninth for his second save. With a runner on first, Frank Thomas grounded into a game-ending double play.

Raul Ibanez was 3-for-3 with two doubles and two RBIs for the Royals.

Bartolo Colon made his first start for the White Sox, who acquired him from Montreal during the offseason in a three-team trade. Colon, 20-8 for Cleveland and the Expos last year, allowed three runs, four hits, and three walks in six innings, striking out two.

Anaheim 11, Texas 5

ANAHEIM, Calif. — A historic home run by Alex Rodriguez wasn't enough for the Texas Rangers.

Rodriguez became the youngest player to hit 300 homers, but the Anaheim Angels beat the Rangers on Wednesday behind home runs from Troy Glaus, Brad Fullmer, and Darin Erstad.

Rodriguez, 27 years, 249 days old, hit a three-run homer in the fifth inning off Ramon Ortiz (1-0).

Bengie Molina had four RBIs and Ortiz allowed four runs and seven hits over five innings.

N.Y. Mets 4, Chicago Cubs 1

NEW YORK — Sammy Sosa took a big swing and sent a fly ball soaring to left field. Sure it was home run No. 500, he immediately threw his arms up, took a signature hop, and clapped his hands.

Instead of history and a tying three-run homer, however, the ball was blown back into the park and fell for a harmless out, exactly the kind of break the New York Mets needed Wednesday night in a victory over the Chicago Cubs.

The Mets won minus Mike Piazza, who began serving a four-game suspension.

Al Leiter (1-0) limited the Cubs to four hits in six innings. David Weathers and Mike Stanton each followed with a scoreless inning and Armando Benitez pitched the save.

Floyd's first home run for the Mets, estimated at 455 feet, and a shaky Matt Clement (0-1) helped New York score three times in the first.

Boston 7, Tampa Bay 5

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Jason Varitek hit a three-run homer, and Derek Lowe shrugged off a shaky start to pitch six innings Wednesday night as the Boston Red Sox beat the Tampa Bay Devil Rays.

Varitek homered off one of the catwalks that support the roof at Tropicana Field, giving Boston a 7-3 lead in the fifth. The Red Sox also scored three in the third, when Kevin Millar and David Ortiz had RBI doubles off loser Jim Parque.

Montreal 3, Atlanta 0

ATLANTA — Zach Day and three relievers combined on a three-hitter, and Jose Vidro hit a two-run homer to lead the Expos over the Braves.

The vagabond Expos, who won't play in Montreal until April 22, have outscored the Braves 13-2 in the first two games at Turner Field. Atlanta is 0-2 for the first time in six years.

Vidro hit a two-run shot in the first inning, sending rookie Braves starter Horacio Ramirez to a hard-luck loss in his major-league debut.

Day, making just his third big-league start, dominated a Braves team that looked downright feeble offensively. Atlanta got only one runner past second base.

Cleveland 4, Baltimore 2

BALTIMORE — The Indians won their first game under new manager Eric Wedge, beating the Orioles behind a solid pitching performance by rookie Ricardo Rodriguez.

Ellis Burks drove in two runs for the Indians, who rebounded from a 6-5, 13-inning loss to Baltimore on Monday to give the 35-year-old Wedge his first victory as a major-league manager.

Rodriguez (1-0) gave up one run and four hits in seven innings in his eighth career start. His only costly mistake came in the second, when he yielded a solo home run to Tony Batista.

Ed Zurga/Associated Press

Kansas City shortstop Angel Berroa and Chicago's Tony Graffanino look for a call on Wednesday.

Minnesota 8, Detroit 1

DETROIT — Jacque Jones hit a two-run homer and had four RBIs as the Twins beat Detroit in the major-league debut of Jeremy Bonderman, the Tigers' 20-year-old right-hander.

Joe Mays didn't have much trouble with the Tigers during his five-inning outing. Mays, who made just 17 starts last year because of an injury, retired his first six batters.

quote of the day

If a school like Stanford University with all its scientists and computers ... can't make this work, I wonder about the smaller colleges.
— Rep. Zoe Lofgren, D-Calif., describing the problems the university is having trying to implement SEVIS, the federal system to track foreign students.

horoscopes

Thursday, April 3, 2003 by Eugenia Last

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Don't overspend because you have been too pushy with loved ones or friends and want to make it up to them. Use your ingenuity, and you can come up with better ways to make amends.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Don't let your stress level skyrocket just because other people put demands on you. It's time to stop doing so much for others and focus on your own needs.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Someone may withhold information today. Refuse to be railroaded into making a quick decision based on few facts. Take your time, and spare yourself a lot of grief.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Involve yourself in a worthy cause. You will probably meet someone who can be of assistance in the future. This is a good day to form new partnerships.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Uncertainties regarding your position may crop up. Be prepared to defend yourself. Taking on too much will lead to problems and disappointments. Concentrate on getting as much done as possible and saying little.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Travel and knowledge will be high on your list today. Open your mind to the unique ideas being presented to you, and you'll find yourself moving in a new direction.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Look into an investment that is affordable and start saving. Do what you can to ensure that you will stay healthy. Proper diet and exercise should be enforced.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): This is a perfect day to meet someone new or to nurture the relationship you already have. You will be able to get the help you need if you pull in favors owed you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): If you show interest in what others are doing, you will gain respect as well as support. Form a business plan, and stick to it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): This is a great day to do something nice for yourself. Physical changes will turn out better than expected. Today should be all about you and what you want.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Things won't run too smoothly, especially in your personal life. Stand up for your rights, and take some time to figure out what you really want.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Get together with friends. Expect something interesting to come via mail or e-mail. New opportunities are available to you, but you must act fast.

Signs of Spring

- Short, short shorts.
- Baby Ts and bra straps.
- Pit stains.
- Dirty toes.
- There are people actually complaining about the heat.
- Denim skirts.
- A large reduction in class size.
- Hawkeye sports fans go into hibernation.
- Lots of khaki.
- Beached coeds on the Pentacrest.
- People are finally starting that New Year's resolution to get in shape.
- The population of weirdos in the Ped Mall multiplied 10-fold.
- Everybody's got a haircut.
- Snow shovels and overcoats are still readily available just in case.

Playing Mao

in lotus land

Iowa Writers' Workshop student Joshua Miller is a tremendous overachiever in a family of overachievers.

His accomplished Hollywood family includes his mother, Susan Bernard, a former Playmate of the Month from the '60s and an actress, publisher, and writer. His father, Jason Miller, a Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright and actor, is known for his role as the priest in The Exorcist. Miller's grandfather Bruno Bernard, the famed photographer, is credited with discovering Marilyn Monroe and known for his photograph of her skirt flying up above a blowing sidewalk vent.

But Miller, 26, wants his work to stand on its own. And it is certainly doing just that.

The Los Angeles atmosphere and the culture that his family raised him in inspired his most ambitious and successful artistic achievement. The Mao Game, his first novel, received enough acclaim to warrant a film adaptation of the same name, featuring a distinguished cast.

After years of wrangling over distribution rights, the film will be screened in Iowa City on Friday and Saturday.

A semi-autobiographical piece about a Hollywood family, The Mao Game follows adolescent Jordan Highland, a heroin-addicted and prostitute-dating actor, as he becomes the prize of a card game, the Mao Game, between his mother and grandmother. The game has no rules, much like the characters' lives. The cancer stricken and dying grandmother, a famous photographer, and the mother, an actress and former Playmate, fight for the custody of the 15-year-old Jordan.

He made film history by writing, directing, producing, and starring in a film at only 24, now Writers' Workshop student Joshua Miller brings the semi-autobiographical The Mao Game to the Bijou. Story by Dane Roberts.

Jordan, played by Miller in the movie, struggles with drug addiction and a dysfunctional family and childhood, in which his father, a former NFL player, molested him as a child during weekend visits. The dying grandmother wins custody of Jordan in the card game, and he goes to live with her. He poses for her last photo shoot, smokes pot with her, and helps her search for illegal cancer medication in the Nevada desert.

Throughout The Mao Game, Jordan

works for reconciliation with his mother and grandmother and tries to leave behind the trauma inflicted upon him by his incestuous father. He attempts suicide on the Hollywood Walk of Fame, forsakes his father, and in a touching scene, dyes his grandmother's hair the night before she succumbs to cancer.

The book and its film adaptation give pervasive views into the seediest realities of Hollywood life.

Miller's completion of the film adaptation is particularly notable. At only 24 years old, he became the first person in film history to write a novel, adapt it into a screenplay, direct, and produce the movie adaptation, as well as play the lead in the film.

The Mao Game also features an experienced cast. Three-time Academy Award-nominated actress Piper Laurie (The Hustler, Carrie) plays the grandmother, and Kirstie Alley plays the mother. Whoopi Goldberg is the executive producer and Vivian Kubrick, daughter of Stanley Kubrick, scored the film. Although Tobey Maguire was originally going to produce, direct, and play the lead, Miller decided that he would take on the tasks.

"Because it was so personal and, in a lot of ways, my life story in fiction, I wanted to be the one to tell my story," Miller said in an interview with The Daily Iowan.

Projecting the scenes of varied dreams

BY ARYN HENNING
THE DAILY IOWAN

Andy Stoll has done a lot, which is perhaps the understatement of the year.

The UI senior has been UI Student Government vice president and president, and he is now the Bijou's executive director. Thus, he knows a lot of people.

But all that doesn't promise a latte the week before midterms in a caffeine-crazed college community.

Zach Boyden-Holmes/The Daily Iowan

After tracking down the busy film student and setting up a meeting, four coffee shops later, we finally got to sit and get into it.

"It" meaning the Bijou — it's been doing a lot as well. With a bevy of new board members and Stoll as the director, the organization erased a 5-year-old debt of more than $30,000, implemented some innovations, and increased attendance and profit per film — the first growth since 1996.

The board is a sundry group of students who really like movies. The members range from freshmen to Ph.D. candidates, and they hail from four countries, more than nine different majors, and varied cinematic backgrounds. Board member Martin Klara, a UI senior, joined the team not only for the movies but also the learning experience involved.

"It was the only place where I could see so many of the films that I want to see without driving to Chicago," he said. "The Bijou was such a unique and independent organization that I couldn't pass up the opportunity to be a part of it and learn more about indie film."

The board members go to their Sunday meetings with five or six movies to offer for consideration.

At the end of discussion, Stoll hopes that at least one movie from each member is on the calendar.

Klara, in his second year on the board, enjoys selecting the films, then watching the public enjoy them.

"That's why the Bijou is such a special place," Stoll said. "Everybody loves movies, and we're able to create basic goals, promote, and have a schedule diverse enough to appeal to many people. And that's a challenge."

Lettin' it all funk out

BY RICHARD SHIRK
THE DAILY IOWAN

With a crash of funkadelica and a haze of smoke, Parliament/Funkadelic landed at the IMU on March 30 and set the bop gun to "high."

But seeing George Clinton and P-Funk was not just a concert featuring one of the most influential, far-out, and iconic cosmic gurus still on the move. Nor was the band's three-and-a-half-hour set a musicology lesson about the imprint of funk on modern music. More than anything, it was a party.

Socially conscious while thoroughly epicurean, Parliament/Funkadelic has spun science fiction, drugs, and grooves into a three-decade long funkadelic odyssey to unite the world under a groove. The bands not only blew minds, they cascaded over the boundaries to leave a mark on rock'n'roll, while helping to create rap, hip-hop, and arguably, even disco.

Playing until the house lights were brought up Sunday night, P-Funk kept the party going even after the plug was pulled. As Bernie Worrel and some of the other core members who have been with Clinton since the 1950s drifted off into the thick cloud backstage, they were noticeably older than the younger musicians currently shoring up the wall of groove. Clinton grinned and shouted over the first rows, leading the people to chant, "Ain't no party like a P-Funk Party/Cause a P-Funk Party Don't Stop."

And after 30 years, for Clinton and P-Funk the party isn't going to stop anytime soon.

The Daily Iowan caught up with the grandfather of modern urban music in the IMU Wheelroom following the show. A benevolent Buddha-like figure in a yellow trench coat with squinting, friendly eyes obscured by dangling multicolored hair extensions, Clinton was straight from the Mothership.

DI: I've never seen you play before. The floor was covered in cigarette lighters and change.

George: I'll make you dance tha money outya pockets.

DI: It seems like you had a good time up there, too. What's your favorite part about performing?

George: Just the people getting into it. When they get into it they get us back into it.

DI: There were a lot of people on the stage tonight, and you have worked with a ton of people over the years. It seems like a big family. What's it like to work with such a tight-knit group of people over such a long period of time?

George: It's a pain in the ass. But it's a lot of fun. They, like your brother and sisters, been with you all your life. Soon as they get to know each other, they don't give a fuck. "Worr, get your feet out of my fucking face." It's family, I mean, you know, it's just like working with any family. You get so used to 'em. You ain't no stars to each other; we like playing the music for ourselves, so after the first two hours we play the rest of the night for us. We play until they pull the plug out on us. Six hours, we still be playing.

DI: Is that every night?
George: Hell, yeah. Sometimes they try to outlast us. There was a bunch of Deadheads, they up dancin' and dancin' till day breaks, six hours sometimes, in New Orleans or someplace like that. They stay all night long. They give us a test. They test us, see how long we gonna go.

DI: Athletes can train to be better athletes, students can study to be better students; how do you, after so long, keep so damn funky?
George: Do a show or two a week. Three of 'em a week, four of 'em a week. You stay in shape. It's its own reward.

DI: How does it feel to be able to turn on the radio or put on an album and hear so much of your influence in terms of the effects of funk as well as the extent to which your music is sampled?

George: It feels good. It lets me know the clones of Funkenstein is alive. Funk is the DNA for hip-hop. And techno. So, I mean, it feels good. All the minions keep funk alive.

DI: So imitation is still ...
George: Hell yes. I put out a record, I sample some of this

Photos by Zach Boyden-Holmes/The Daily Iowan
George Clinton spreads the funk Sunday night at the IMU.

and sample some of that. Lot's of pieces of the pieces — drums 'n' bass, guitars, so they can sample, all different variations of it.

DI: Can funk bring about social change? Can a big enough P-Funk party affect how the world works or just how people view the world?

George: It make you think about it, that's for sure. Fact is, it's enough to stimulate you to think about stuff. It don't preach to you but it definitely can help everybody get along in the world at the same time [and that's] usually pretty peaceful. Whenever there is a good vibe around the world, everybody be feelin' kinda funky and loose. Ain't nobody be uptight. So then we got the wars and shit. There ain't no time for that bullshit. They uptight, and that's what happens. Those guys a loosen up, and we all be cool, and things will get funky.

Corn-fed & proud of it

BY ALISON FELDMANN
THE DAILY IOWAN

You may have seen her image around Iowa City on T-shirts or pinned on bags: the brazen, outwardly gazing, slightly coquettish woman known as "Cornfed Hussy."

Although she's a mere illustration, she has become synonymous with the zine that her likeness graces, and both she and her creator, Soma Honkanen, have become Iowa City icons of the enduring Midwestern variety. After a six-month hiatus, Cornfed Hussy's sixth issue will come out Saturday at the Missing Peace, 620 S. Dubuque St.

Honkanen originally appropriated Cornfed Hussy as a term of reference from a train-hopping friend traveling through the Midwest who said that he was going to "find hisself a nice corn-fed hussy," she said. Thinking it humorous and oddly appropriate, she and fellow Cornfed Hussy creators Happy Burbeck and Lizzy Walker took it to the streets. Originally conceived in January 2002 as a publication for women to express themselves, the zine consisted of poetry, feminist rants, journals, photography, comics — basically, whatever art form the authors wished to use.

However, as time went on, the form and content of the zine, as well as the editorial staff, changed to take on a more egalitarian focus, with the submissions and views of both men and women represented.

"I try to include a lot of different people's views, not necessarily just feminist or political," Honkanen said. "I try not to cut down things with negative rants... I want to give people who usually wouldn't do things with their work the chance to be read and published."

With the journals and travel logs of Honkanen as a stand-by, the issues that come out every two to three months continually change with the various submitted pieces. The 20-page zine is fairly substantial, with five to eight contributors for each issue and a focus on appealing to the reader on a frank and personal level. Honkanen said that she wished to enlarge the circulation outside of Iowa City by sending Cornfed Hussy to more zine shops and review magazines.

Fellow Iowa City publication Skirt and performance art by Mandealynn will also be featured at the reading on Saturday at 7 p.m.

A paper trail into the mind of Joshua Miller

MILLER

Friday at the Bijou Theater will not be the first time The Mao Game has graced the screen. The movie premiered three years ago at the Seattle International Film Festival, where it won a Special Grand Jury prize and best-actress award for Laurie. The film was received well at the Cannes Film Festival, and the American Film Institute chose Miller as one of six directors to watch in 2000 for his work in The Mao Game.

After the film's initial success, two camps of film producers started fighting over the distribution rights; only recently has it become possible to show the film again.

"To me it is almost like giving birth to a child and having it kidnapped and held for ransom," Miller said. "I've mourned the film in a way, but I'm glad I'm able to share it again here, and hopefully, again with more people in the future. It's moving toward reaching a life on the screen."

However, the film showing at the Bijou this weekend is not the same film that premiered some years ago; rather, it is an unseen director's cut. One hour of footage was taken out of the film and another hour put in. Miller's involvement with the movie presents unprecedented creative control for a first-time novelist and director.

"With The Mao Game, it was my vision in every aspect. Not the budget, though," Miller said. "We wanted to make it independently so I could have complete creative control."

"I don't know any other way but to express myself creatively. It's all I know. It's how I learned to respond to the world. It's survival to me, to make it base and simple."

He started performing at an early age, "since the day I was born," he joked. He starred for three consecutive years in the Los Angeles Ballet Company's production of the Nutcracker, starting when he was 7. He eventually worked his way into several major TV shows, plays, Janet Jackson's Grammy-winning long-form video for "Rhythm Nation 1814," and movies, including River's Edge and Near Dark in 1987.

As an undergraduate at Yale University, he wrote articles for the Yale Literary Magazine, Harper's Bazaar, and Playboy.

Miller also attended creative-writing classes at UCLA, where he was mentored by poet/writer Kate Braverman, his creative-writing professor.

"I didn't write the story I was assigned," said Miller. "So Kate told me to do the assignment over lunch break. I wrote a poem on a napkin, and based on the poem, she invited me to her private workshop outside of school."

The Mao Game came out of this workshop, which consisted of him, 12 women in the various stages of divorce, and a few others. Several novels came out of the workshop, including White Oleander by Janet Fitch.

"I discovered that I had been keeping a secret journal, even from myself," Miller said. "I spent two years weaving the journals and stories together like they were pelts. Because as an actor I spent so much time living someone else's ideas out, I wanted to write. I wanted to say something. The novel was a sort of genesis of self."

Numerous influences were at work in Miller's creation of the novel and film, especially dancing and music. He listened to opera and classical music while writing The Mao Game because the grandmother in the novel does. Dancing and its movement and fluidity, as well as poetry and its concise language and imagery, were also influential during the creation of both the novel and the film.

As a person, Miller is the furthest thing from a stereotypical Hollywood director, writer, and actor. He doesn't mention his past works. He has famous friends, colleagues, and acquaintances but he rarely name-drops and apologizes if he does.

"For some reason, I've had the grand opportunity to be full of unbelievable anecdotes from my life. But yet, my life is a lot darker than that, and sadder," he joked self-deprecatingly.

Miller is working on his thesis, a novel titled Pop. In addition, he will soon start production on his next feature-length movie, titled The Student Body, which he wrote based on an article that he published in Playboy. The film will be produced by Amy Heckerling (Clueless, Fast Times at Ridgemont High).

"The Student Body is more accessible than The Mao Game," Miller said. "I've been developing it for a while with Single Cell Pictures, which is Michael Stipe's company. They made Being John Malkovich and Velvet Goldmine, and they've been helping me develop the script."

For the most part, his plans for the future are uncertain but hopeful.

"I want to keep writing books and making movies. And save the world," he said. "One book can change the entire culture. One movie can inform an entire culture. Who's going to write the next Catcher In The Rye? I don't think it will be me; I just hope I'm around when it happens."

"In my very pretentious vision of my future, I would like to be an expatriate making movies in Europe."

The world should certainly watch the horizon for big things to come from the ambitious and prolific Miller as he continues to document his insights and experiences.

"I want life to be a literary moment," he said. "I write to get to some place else, literally and figuratively. If I leave a story behind, then I have the permission to leave those experiences and wherever I wrote them. So I'm trying to pave my way out — a paper trail, literally."

The schedule reflects the assorted tastes of the board members. With movies such as Michael Moore's Bowling for Columbine or Writers' Workshop student Joshua Miller's The Mao Games to Raiders of the Lost Ark and Real Women Have Curves, moviegoers can find a film for almost any mood.

And that, in turn, helps the Bijou fulfill its cinematic mission: to introduce independent, art-house, foreign, and classic films not normally available in the Iowa City area and at the same time educate, entertain, and provoke thought while maintaining a balanced budget and catering to the diversity of the university and Iowa City communities.

The idea of serving the community drew Stoll to the Bijou. He was reluctant when first approached for the post of director, but his skill at running an organization and his daring nature pushed him to accept the position.

"I'll try anything once is my strategy," he said. "Except for the illegal and the extremely dangerous."

Being neither of those things, the job was perfect for him, and he for the job.

"Andy really took charge as a leader," Bijou adviser Jennifer Tucker said. "He empowers people. It's just this talent he has."

In addition to infrastructure changes such as increased marketing, an updated and more accessible Web page, and an e-mail newsletter, Stoll and the board hosted a number of special events, including live music to Buster Keaton's short films, sneaks of first-run feature films such as About A Boy, Spy Game, and K-Pax, a 3-D presentation of Creature From the Black Lagoon, and midnight screenings of Silence of the Lambs and The Rocky Horror Picture Show.

The Bijou also implemented three new film series: director visits coinciding with some of the films screened, dinner plus a movie, in which patrons pay $35 to see a movie and have a meal prepared by a local chef in correlation with the movie, and a classic film series of some of the best movies of the past.

"You don't get any of that in the area," Tucker said. "[Stoll's] just done a lot of huge things that equal a recipe for success."

Last weekend's Iowa City International Documentary Festival proved to be a hit as well: All three days were almost entirely sold out. This type of success at the Bijou is designed to continue after Stoll leaves the university.

"I joined the Bijou the same time as Andy did, but I can still tell how much better things have gotten since he's been the director," Klara said. "He is extremely dedicated, and the university will miss having him around. I would work with him anytime."

Fancy flights: daydreaming in anime

FILM REVIEW

by Eric Baker

Spirited Away

When: 12:20, 3:30, and 6 p.m.
Where: Coral Ridge 10 ★★ out of ★★★★★

Do you ever close your eyes to help yourself daydream? Unbound by the material world, your imagination starts to weave flights of fancy until something external jolts you back into reality.

Spirited Away creates that feeling, although the film is merely the retelling of an uncomplicated story.

A Japanese anime cartoon movie, Spirited Away resembles the new Batman series in look and feel. The story and characters are a cross between Fantasia, The Adventures of Baron von Munchausen, and Willy Wonka & the Chocolate Factory.

The film follows the adventures of Chihiro, a girl roughly 10 years old who moves into a new house in a new city.

The plot unfolds slowly, and it almost seems painful to watch at the beginning, with Chihiro constantly complaining to her parents. As with all fables that teach a moral, director Hayao Miyazaki is merely setting the groundwork for revelations later.

The family members eventually come to a clearing on their way to their new abode, and they can only advance by foot, leaving their Audi and Adidas bags behind.

Chihiro's father is eager to explore, but she is reticent. The building they must pass through appears foreboding, and Chihiro has started to notice little carved figures on their trek.

A series of events leads to Chihiro being stranded in a magical land/bathhouse, and the characters she meets while there are the best part of the film: little bits of coal dust with legs, disembodied heads that bob around in agreement, even

Publicity Photo

A giant baby named Bou and a bunch of other Pokémon-looking animated characters wave as Chihiro runs across a bridge.

Undoubtedly there are inside jokes on Japanese pop culture that Americans will not pick up, but one doesn't have to understand every single tidbit to revel in the film's bizarre creativity.

No cartoon would be complete without Disney-esque pithy lessons that the lead character teaches her younger viewers, but even this did not bother me.

Of course, the target audience for a movie of this type is children, so I can appreciate the benefit of moralizing.

Yet this movie achieves a Zen-like balance between a serious fantasy story and campy high jinks. I am convinced that if kids and adults were to watch this film in the same room, each would laugh at completely different moments, and both would walk away sated.

Playing for 10 minutes of fame

BY SARA CONRAD
THE DAILY IOWAN

The Ten-Minute Play Festival will debut tonight, showcasing seven short plays by UI undergraduates and demonstrating once again that length isn't everything.

"This is an important opportunity because there aren't many programs that offer their undergraduate writers a chance to see their work performed," said Kate Aspengren, an adjunct assistant professor of theater and the festival's artistic director.

Held every spring, the festival begins with a contest to discover several scripts written by undergraduates, who need not be theater majors. It is a rare opportunity, because most undergraduate playwrights can only see their work produced in theater classrooms.

Aspiring actors then have the chance to audition for the winning playwrights, who review anywhere from 60 to 80 actors before setting their casts.

Junior Spencer Griffin, who has been involved in the festival for three years, is directing junior Paul Rust's play "Thick." Last year, Griffin acted in Rust's play, and the year before that, Rust acted in Griffin's. Rust's credits include producing a full-length movie, America's Funniest American, and a full-length play, The Garveys.

While many of this year's playwrights have less experience than Rust, Griffin said, the festival is about creating more outlets for all artists.

"The audience is unaware of how many great writers there are, not just at the Writers Workshop," he said. "Thick" centers on the issue of communication — focusing on how people can talk about the weather, but when pushed to talk about something real, they are unable to, Griffin said.

A patchwork of themes make up this year's bill, said graduate student Janet Bentley, the director of "The Correspondence," a play by junior Joy Odeyemi. Bentley, who has been an actor for 26 years, chose to direct "The Correspondence" because she was attracted to its theme as a period piece, and because she was familiar with Odeyemi's work.

Odeyemi's play, which takes place in 1931, is about the collage of moments that take place during the collaboration of acclaimed writer Langston Hughes, one of the main shapers of the Harlem Renaissance in the '20s, and Zora Neale-Hurston, the author of Their Eyes Were Watching God. Bentley noted that the play includes authentic black humor from the South.

The festival will also include "Film Noir" and some surreal plays, such as sophomore Chris LaVoie's "CP, I Love You."

The Ten-Minute Play Festival is also beneficial in strengthening relationships among people interested in theater, many of the participants said. Griffin said it is an opportunity in itself just to have people around with whom he can discuss scripts. Stage manager Brian Finley said that so far, the festival has been a positive social experience.

"It's a way to remember people after you leave," he said.

Bentley stressed that the festival is especially important because of the opportunity it allows aspiring and gifted undergraduates.

"I want people to know that there's a great talent languishing in the [undergraduate] classes," she said.

Rock 'n' law for a good cause

BY BETH HERZINGER
THE DAILY IOWAN

The 10th annual Lawlawpalooza will prove that law students do more than study — they can also rock for a good cause.

Lawlawpalooza, a benefit concert highlighting the musical styles of bands affiliated with the law school, will take place Saturday evening at the Mill, 120 E. Burlington St., and will feature performances from seven eclectic bands. The show will begin at 7 p.m. and continue until 1 a.m. Tickets are $10.

SHOW

Lawlawpalooza
When: 7 p.m. Saturday
Where: The Mill, 120 E. Burlington St.
Admission: $10

The proceeds from the concert go to the Equal Justice Foundation, a nonprofit law-school organization dedicated to assisting public-interest work. Funds from Lawlawpalooza and other foundation fund-raisers will be distributed as grants to law students pursuing public-interest legal internships.

"Unfortunately, public-interest lawyers don't make very much money," foundation President Kelly Wilson said. "These grants are the only way students interested in this kind of work could afford to do it."

Lawlawpalooza has become a law-school tradition, attracting students, faculty, and alumni, both to attend and to perform.

"We've always tried to secure bands and band members from the law school and alumni," Lawlawpalooza coordinator Kyle Kaiser said.

Kaiser, a third-year law student who also will serve as MC, performs with Jonas and Me. The evening will also feature performances by local Celtic band Stones in the Field — one of the members is married to a law student — and Casanatra, an alternative group from Minneapolis with an alumnus member.

In addition to drawing on talent from within the law school, local support for Lawlawpalooza comes from such businesses as Mondo's, the Deadwood, Devotay, and Prairie Lights, which donate door prizes. Admission at the show automatically enters audience members in drawings held throughout the evening.

"We have some great door prizes available," Kaiser said. "They run the whole gamut from CDs to gift certificates. For the price of admission, there's a good chance you'll recoup your investments in neat door prizes."

Additional support for the foundation's grants comes from the Law Foundation, which matches the amount of scholarship money raised.

"Really, your ticket price is like a double donation to the cause, because the more money we raise, the more the Law Foundation will match us," Kaiser said.

Wilson said the Equal Justice

Foundation hopes that Lawlawpalooza will raise more than $2,000, which will help meet the requests for this summer's large applicant pool.

"The whole law-school community gets behind the [Equal Justice Foundation]," Wilson said. "As a whole, the law school realizes how important public-interest law is, because it helps people who are disadvantaged. It's the only way some people are able to have legal help and rights enforced."

Wilson is a former grant recipient, and she spent her first two summers in law school doing public-interest work. The grant money allowed her to pursue her interests and showed her what she could do with the rest of her life.

"Without that experience, I may not have come back to law school," she said.

ARTS

Moe. better jams

Indie-jam band moe. will bring its energetic stage presence to the IMU today, the next in a series of concerts sponsored by SCOPE.

The concert will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the IMU Main Lounge. Tickets are on sale for $17.

Formed in Buffalo, N.Y., in 1991, moe. consists of Al Schnier and Chuck Garvey, guitar and vocals, Rob Dherck, bass and vocals, Vinnie Amico, drums, and Jim Loughlin on percussion and acoustic guitar.

Moe. has enjoyed recent success at the 2003 Indie Awards, conducted by the Association for Independent Music. The band's seasonal release, Season's Greetings from moe. won the award for best seasonal album.

The band is touring in support of its latest studio album, Wormwood, released in February. The offering is one continuous piece of music, featuring basic tracks recorded at live shows over the summer of 2002. Studio jams and other additions were assembled into the piece.

Tickets for today's show are available from the University Box Offices, 1-800-346-4401 or (319) 335-3041.

Taking time to take care of yourself

"You have at your command the wisdom of the ages."

Or so says the small, folded up fortune that was wedged underneath the mouse pad of the computer I just sat down at. I have no reason to not trust this profound beacon of insight, so with that, I'll launch into this week's self-help lesson.

I don't know about the rest of you, but my motivation and stress levels are inversely related — just as the weather gets gorgeous and all I want to do is sit outside and people-watch, course requirements kick up a notch, and I find myself with no free time and no will to study.

Finding a balance between school and play is not an easy thing to do, especially during spring, when the weather is amazing. It always feels like I'm the only one who doesn't get to have any fun — the brohams with their ridiculous anti-hippie flag are out drinking and listening to bad Top-40 mix CDs, the protesters with their grills, lawn chairs, and coolers are camping out and relaxing, and the rest of Iowa City is taking a nap on the lawn of the Pentacrest. For days, I've been walking from class to work or from work to class and wanting just so badly to just sit down at the Peace Camp and not protest anything at all, or to curl up in the shade on the Pentacrest and let my dreams take over.

Yet, day after day, I find myself cooped up in classrooms and newsrooms, bedrooms and library study-rooms — my days just don't have large gaps of leisure time like I'd like them to. The sunrise happens in secret

DREW BIXBY

After further reflection

every morning while I sleep, and my only glimpses of the sunset come through dirty window panes. Each night, as I trudge up Washington Street and down Dubuque Street on my way home from work, I lament that I can't enjoy these beautiful days and anticipate the days of summer, when I can.

All is not lost, though. Now that I have you properly depressed about my situation (and probably yours), I'm going to suggest a few ways to stay productive and happy.

• Study/read outside — This is the easiest way to get work done and enjoy the weather. As long as you don't need a computer, go sit outside and get tan while you get smarter.

• Walk everywhere — Budget your time accordingly so that you can soak up the sun with more than just the arm that hangs out the driver's side window.

• Eat your meals outside — If you're anything like me (and haven't been to the grocery store in months), get your Big Mike's or Baldys to go and enjoy the breeze instead of the air conditioning. It doesn't take any more time to eat outside than it does to eat inside.

• Go for walks at night — Because I usually only have free time at night, I've found myself enjoying the temperature drop and the clear sky by walking or simply sitting outside. Although sunshine is preferable, the stars and moon do a pretty sufficient job of keeping me company.

I make these suggestions assuming that you're an outdoors person. But if you're just sick of classes and stress, and jealous that everyone else seems to be enjoying the weather but you, there are other ways to find peace and beauty.

• Sleep with the windows open — Take the comforter off of your bed, crack the window, and discover the therapeutic value of fresh air and night-sounds.

• Read that book you've been meaning to — Take 20-minute study breaks and read a few chapters of a book not required for class. Want some suggestions? Read The Perks of Being a Wallflower by Stephen Chbosky; Loser by Jerry Spinelli; The Little Prince by Antoine de Saint-Exupéry; or The Giving Tree by Shel Silverstein.

• Write in a journal — Take some time to clear your thoughts by writing (yes, pen and paper) in a journal that no one will ever see. Or, write letters to people in your journal and take the time to share it with them sometime in the future.

Whether you're an outdoor person or not doesn't matter. The point to this feel-good column is simple: Don't let work, class, relationships, and money problems keep you from staying sane and being happy. Go to work, finish your studying, but find some time in between to take care of yourself.
