Police respond slowly to man's beating

BY JAMES BAETKE
THE DAILY IOWAN

Iowa City police acknowledged that they failed to thoroughly investigate a beating that has left a local man in the hospital, unable to remember friends' names or objects as ordinary as a pen.

Jeremiah King, 23, was found unconscious in a gutter on Dubuque Street outside the Deadwood coughing up "blood bubbles" with his hair caked in blood about 2 a.m. April 5, apparently the victim of a brutal physical attack, an eyewitness who found him told The Daily Iowan.

"I noticed the kid was in really bad shape," said Andrew Neskow, who witnessed the scene across the street from Pizza on Dubuque. "I've never really ever seen anything like that before." King was in the UI Hospitals and Clinics intensive-care unit until Monday, where he initially fainted in and out of consciousness from the fist-size blood clot that formed in the left side of his brain, friend and roommate Paul Kasten said. On Tuesday, doctors administered an MRI to determine if the blood clot had shrunk or increased in size, he said.

The beating "has changed his life forever," Kasten said.

Three Iowa City police officers and one UI police officer responded to the scene, police say. The UI officer was quickly dismissed while Officer Jerry Blomgren, Sgt. Mike Brotherton, and Officer Scott Miller took eyewitness accounts of the incident, said Lt. Jim Steffen, who is in charge of the criminal-investigations section. Officers responded to the scene after a call was placed at 2:01 a.m.

The department did not launch an investigation until a media inquiry on Monday. By Wednesday, still no police report was on file.

"It shouldn't take this long," Sgt. Brian Krei said Tuesday, describing Steffen as "not a happy camper."

Brotherton defended his decision not to file a police report even after his superiors criticized that move. He compared the incident with common fight disturbances police respond to five to 10 times a night — occurrences he said don't merit a police report.

"He basically had a nose-bleed," he said, but he added that King could not communicate clearly.

Scattered fighting marks war's end

U.S. forces arrest Iraqi men caught robbing the vaults of a burned-out bank in central Baghdad on Wednesday. Light fighting and the reopening of Baghdad's central market were signs that the war was mostly over.

Bush gets military briefing from one of Saddam's palaces

BY DAVID ESPO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

The top commander of U.S. forces in Iraq briefed President Bush on the war from inside one of Saddam Hussein's ornate palaces on Wednesday, underscoring the death of the old regime.

Four weeks after the war began, American troops raided the Baghdad home of the mastermind of Iraq's biological-weapons laboratory and also discovered a recently abandoned Palestinian terrorist training camp on the outskirts of the capital.

Army forces exchanged fire with a small number of die-hard paramilitary fighters north of Baghdad, then took out two surface-to-air missile systems and three anti-aircraft guns left over from Saddam's military.

Iraqis in Mosul said three people were killed and at least 11 wounded when shooting erupted for the second-straight day. Iraqis blamed the Americans, but the circumstances were cloudy.

Gen. Tommy Franks, in command of more than 200,000 troops in the war zone, lit up a cigar as he toured the palace just outside Baghdad that had been part of Saddam's realm. Franks and other senior officers sat in plush green chairs with gold, wood trim for the briefing with Bush in Washington, held over a secure video-conference linkup.

Earlier, the four-star general viewed, with evident disgust, gold sink fixtures, a gold toilet paper dispenser, and a gold toilet bowl brush inside one of the bathrooms.

"It's the oil for palace program," he said.

Franks' visit to Baghdad, from his command headquarters in Qatar, came less than two weeks after Army tanks first rumbled through the capital and one week after Iraqis, aided by Marines, toppled a statue of Saddam in a downtown city square, signaling the end of his regime.

Saddam twice was the target of U.S. bombs dropped on places where he was believed to be, but his whereabouts are unknown. U.S. officials say they don't know if he is dead or alive.

"The fact of the matter is, though, he is gone. Whether he is dead or alive, he is gone," Secretary of State Colin Powell told Associated Press Television News. "He is no longer in the lives of the people of Iraq."

Slowly, cities across Iraq were struggling to shed the effects of the war. After days of looting and mayhem in Baghdad, Americans armed newly recruited Iraqi police officers with handguns to help keep order. And citizens sought to pick up their normal lives.

"The market is open, and products are available," said Tadamoun Abdel-Aziz as she shopped with her son for eggs, bread, and vegetables in the downtown Irkheita Market. But with power only partially restored and temperatures in the 90s, some residents bought 3-foot blocks of ice.

American commandos backed by approximately 40 Marines staged the raid on the residence of Rihab Taha, dubbed "Dr. Germ" by U.N. weapons inspectors. Taha, a microbiologist, was in charge of Iraq's secret biological laboratory, suspected of weaponizing anthrax.

Three men emerged from the raid on her home with their hands up, and American troops removed several boxes of documents. Her whereabouts were unknown.

Administration officials cited the desire to eliminate weapons of mass destruction as one key reason for the war, although none has yet been found. "We're really just in the early stages of that" search, Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks told reporters at a briefing in Qatar.

U.N. weapons inspectors also failed to find any banned weapons during prewar searches. Hans Blix, the chief inspector, is expected to appear before the U.N. Security Council next week to discuss a possible resumption of the effort — even though the United States has not invited the international team back into Iraq.

A Marine spokesman, Cpl. John Hoellwarth, said the terrorist training camp consisted of approximately 20 permanent buildings on 25 acres south of Baghdad, and was operated by the Palestine Liberation Front and the Iraqi government.

Councilors remain staunchly behind 21-only measure

BY KELLEY CASINO
THE DAILY IOWAN

Three Iowa City city councilors said they plan to continue to support the 21-only ordinance, but they are still taking public input into consideration.

Councilors Connie Champion, Ross Wilburn, and Dee Vanderhoef made those comments in interviews on Wednesday.

With news Tuesday that Councilor Irvin Pfab withdrew his support for the ordinance, focus quickly turned to whether one of the four remaining in support would flip-flop and vote down the ordinance.

Interviews on Wednesday turned up nothing.

"I've been speaking for it for five years," said Councilor Connie Champion, adding that she's willing to listen to arguments and proposals presented by bar owners and students at future meetings. "I'm probably going to be for it."

The council voted 5-2 on April 8 to support the measure, which would prohibit underage patrons from entering bars after 10 p.m.

That was the first of three votes required by June 1 for the ordinance to go into effect on Aug. 1 — before the next school year. A simple majority is needed in each vote to pass the ordinance, which is scheduled for a second vote next week.

Critics plan a march and to address the council, but Wilburn suggested it might take a new argument or information to persuade him to switch sides.

"I'm not hearing suggestions on how to get rid of the problem," he said, adding that he's still reading letters, answering questions, and listening to input from all sides of the issue. "At this point, I'm planning to continue to support it."

Vanderhoef, who voted for the measure but last month said she could see both sides of the issue, said she is still in support.

Mayor Ernie Lehman could not be reached for comment, but is described as unlikely to switch.

For his part, Pfab announced at Tuesday's UI Student Government meeting that he will oppose the ordinance as long as it remains in its current state.

He said he decided to join the

Oakdale will heighten security after escape

BY GRANT SCHULTE
THE DAILY IOWAN

Oakdale prison officials plan to heighten security with more guards and an extra patrol vehicle in the area where two convicts escaped last weekend — a getaway that revealed apparent security lapses within the facility — a state corrections official said Wednesday.

The medium-security unit from which Omar Wilkins, 19, and Jeffrey Hershberger, 38, escaped on April 12 will upgrade to a maximum-security status, with more guards assigned to that area and heavier supervision of dangerous convicts, said Department of Corrections spokesman Fred Scaletta.

A second prison vehicle will also patrol the alarm-rigged fence the duo scaled, which failed to sound during the breakout because officials had turned it off for a construction project, Scaletta said.

The project is expanding the section that houses inmates with special needs, said Oakdale Deputy Warden Greg Ort, adding that turning off the fence did not change any procedures and that the prison is safe.

The two escapees remained at liberty as of Wednesday evening.

Wilkins, a convicted murderer, and Hershberger, a property offender with numerous convictions, scaled a fence topped with tensile-strength barbed wire while a third inmate distracted the lone guard watching a group of 60 inmates. They used sweatshirts and winter coats to clear the wire but did not make the escape uncut, Ort said.

Oakdale officials said they believe a fourth convict was also involved in the escape, but Ort said they are still investigating.

"None of the other inmates we interviewed said they were aware of the incident until they saw it happening," Ort said, adding that prison officials talked to everyone who was in the yard.

3 sex offenders ask to be released

BY AMY JENNINGS
THE DAILY IOWAN

Three convicted sex offenders are requesting their release from a treatment program at the Oakdale prison facility, asserting that they are being unlawfully detained.

Donald Ashlock, 48, Travis Vaughn, 29, and Leonard Wrieden, 53, have been confined at the Civil Commitment Unit for Sexual Offenders after completing prison sentences for sex crimes.

In 1998, the state adopted a sexual-predator law that allows the indefinite civil commitment of such offenders at the Oakdale program after their release from prison.

An attorney for the men said in court papers filed Wednesday that his clients' imprisonment is unlawful because the men were being held on separate charges at the time a petition seeking their commitment for sexual assault was filed.

Judge Kristin Hibbs set a hearing for April 23 on the matter.

In a decision handed down three months ago, the Iowa Supreme Court reversed an order for the confinement of convicted child molester Jessie Gonzales, 49. Under the ruling, a sex offender can be committed to the Oakdale facility upon completion of a prison term only if the state can demonstrate the prisoners are a threat to society.

First Assistant State Public Defender Mark Smith, the attorney for the men, cites the Gonzales case as precedent.

He also represented Gonzales, who was scheduled to be released from prison on June 15, 2001, after being convicted in 1999 of operating a vehicle without the owner's consent. One month before his release, the state filed a petition for his commitment at Oakdale as a sexually violent predator.

Gonzales served two prison sentences after pleading guilty to second-degree sexual abuse in 1981 and two counts of indecent contact with a child in 1994.

Ashlock, who has served more than a year and a half in the facility, was convicted in 1987 of two counts of third-degree sexual abuse in Woodbury County and second-degree sexual assault in Dakota County, Neb., in 1978.

Ashlock was about two weeks away from completing a prison term for failing to register as a sex offender when he was committed to Oakdale by a court order that stated two mental abnormalities, pedophilia and antisocial personality disorder, would make him likely to reoffend.

Vaughn was convicted in 1992 of assault with the intent to commit sexual abuse in Scott County and third-degree sexual abuse in Clinton County. Like Ashlock, he was serving time for failing to register as a sex offender when he was committed to Oakdale in 2000 by a court order that stated he was a sexually violent predator.

Wrieden was convicted in 1982 of third-degree sexual abuse in Lee County. He was charged in 1969 with lascivious acts with a child and in 1981 with second-degree sexual abuse, both of which were dismissed.

While serving a sentence for an arson conviction in Lee County in 2000, a state petition granted in 2001 committed him to the facility.

Iowa official faults Bush's education act

BY LAURA JENSEN
THE DAILY IOWAN

Iowa's top education official on Wednesday criticized the No Child Left Behind Act, saying it places too much emphasis on the accountability of schools and not enough on increasing educational opportunities for students.

Under the program's accountability provisions, approximately half of Iowa's high schools could be designated as institutions failing to improve fast enough in their level of proficiency — institutions that would be subject to increasingly harsh sanctions, said Ted Stillwell, Iowa's director of education.

"That means some adjustments need to be made," he told a group of approximately 85 as part of the UI's annual Science Education Ph.D Seminar.

One point of controversy in the federal approval of Iowa's accountability plan was the issue of how proficiency would be assessed. Stillwell said Iowa is willing to fight to maintain use of the Iowa Tests of Basic Skills and the Iowa Tests of Educational Development for assessment.

President Bush signed the act into law by in early 2002. It focuses on four areas — accountability, greater flexibility and local control, emphasis on proven teaching methods, and more parental options — but Stillwell said the measure was not aimed at Iowa because the state has already met many of the standards.

"The single best asset Iowa has is that we move forward in our educational system," he said.

Iowa had previously raised teacher requirements, he also pointed out, and most changes made in the state's system were not in response to federal suggestions.

Stillwell said Iowa's educational system is at risk due to the state's budget deficit.

"We are dismantling the system that made us great," he said, citing the reduction in courses offered, an increase in class sizes, and the length of bus rides as evidence.

Today, a post-secondary education and a diverse educational background is essential for economic success, he said.

"If we want to keep options open to our kids, they need to have the widest possible background," he said, noting fine arts as a subject currently threatened by budget shortfalls.

Edwards brings pro-war stance to local voters

BY CALVIN HENNING
THE DAILY IOWAN

Presidential hopeful Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., will add his name to the list of candidates trying to woo local voters with an appearance at the UI today.

Kim Ruby, Edwards' Iowa press secretary, said she expects Edwards to speak primarily about economic issues, but he will also probably address the war against Iraq.

"He is always clear and consistent about his belief that Saddam Hussein is a threat and must be disarmed," Ruby said.

UI freshman Megan Heneke said such consistency on the issues is a major reason she has thrown her early support behind the first-term senator. Although she realizes that his war stance may be unpopular in Iowa City, she said, she does not expect it to hurt him in the general election, adding that most of the general public supports the troops and the United States in the war.

"I'm really excited to get other issues on the table," she said, citing the economy, health care, and Bush's tax cuts as some of the most relevant.

Heneke, a member of UI Democrats, acknowledged that it is somewhat early to decide on a candidate but said it isn't unusual.

"For people [who] are into politics and active Democrats, it's really fun to jump on with a candidate early," she said.

Edwards' visit marks a divergence from recent Iowa City visits by candidates. Thus far, only former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean and Rep. Dennis Kucinich, D-Ohio, have visited Iowa City, along with former Colorado Sen. Gary Hart, who has not announced his plans. All are staunchly antiwar and are considered by most to be long shots for the Democratic nomination.

Edwards, on the other hand, has repeatedly expressed support for the war in Iraq and is the race's leading money earner, with more than $7 million raised in the first quarter of this year. Either characteristic may help or hurt Edwards with local voters as he tries to sway them at the Boyd Law Building at 5 p.m. today.

Gillian Rosenberg, a co-president of UI Democrats, said she has not decided on a candidate yet but that Edwards is her "front-runner," adding that she also liked Edwards' stance on the issues.

"There is no one else who is more likely to beat Bush, and that's the most important thing," she said, acknowledging another attribute that may come in handy for Edwards:

"I think people like to vote for attractive presidents, and John Edwards is very attractive."

Senators say student-regent term too long

Gov. Tom Vilsack will withdraw his appointment of UI senior Neala Arnold to the state Board of Regents after state senators voiced concerns about the six-year terms of students.

"It is hard for a student to have a six-year term on the Board of Regents and manage school," said Sen. Donald Redfern, R-Cedar Falls. He said the future of the student post will be reviewed after Arnold completes the interim term next year. The term of student regents could be shortened, he said.

Vilsack will make the final decision based on recommendations from the Senate.

Regent David Fisher believes that Arnold would continue serving if she enrolled in graduate school and continues to maintain her student status.

Arnold says she wants to continue as a regent because she has developed a feel for the job in the past year and would not want to leave at this point.

"I don't believe this situation came about because of any personal objection to me but because it got caught up in some of the politics," she said.

Arnold says she has no concrete plans for the future but will continue her education as either a teacher or a student somewhere in Iowa.

Iowa leaders shift tack on development

DES MOINES (AP) — Republican legislative leaders have quietly dropped plans to use a statewide property-tax levy to finance a new $890 million economic-development fund, choosing instead to use gambling revenues, the Associated Press has learned.

In turn, they have decided to replace the gambling-tax revenues by approving a streamlined sales-tax collection method for Internet transactions.

"It has a couple of upside benefits," House Speaker Chris Rants, R-Sioux City, said in an interview with the AP.

Rants and other House leaders met privately with other lawmakers on Wednesday to outline their new proposal, which leaders want to make the highlight of this year's legislative session.

The plan quickly drew bipartisan support, and proponents said the money could be flowing by summer.

"This is the best bipartisan effort I have ever seen," said Rep. Clarence Hoffman, R-Charter Oak, one of the architects of the package.

"I think this is a good plan," said House Democratic Leader Dick Myers, D-Coralville.

Gov. Tom Vilsack asked the Legislature in January to create a $500 million "Iowa Values" fund to attract the biotech industry to the state.

Lawmakers generally have agreed to create such a fund, but they are at odds over how it should be financed. Republicans earlier unveiled a plan to use a statewide property-tax levy to finance the effort, but that's run into a buzz saw of opposition.

"It works, but it's not something we're going to do," Rants said.

Instead, GOP legislative leaders have crafted a less-painful way of financing the effort.

Currently, the first $60 million in gambling profits is diverted to a special fund used for repair and renovation of state buildings, and that money would be diverted to pay for the economic development fund.

The gambling money would be replaced with sales taxes on Internet purchases.

Marine will be buried with ring

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CEDAR RAPIDS — Marine Gunnery Sgt. Jeff Bohr will be buried with a new wedding ring his wife had bought before he died.

Bohr, 39, a native of Ossian in northeastern Iowa, was killed April 10 during a seven-hour battle outside a downtown Baghdad mosque. He had recently lost his wedding ring and failed to find it after a four-hour search, said his wife, Lori Bohr, 45, of San Clemente, Calif.

"He was really bummed," she said. "When I read the letter, I went out and bought another ring. I was going to replace his gold band with a ring that has a diamond and two crosses."

Lori Bohr, a native of Cedar Rapids, had recently talked to Jeff by satellite phone and told him that a new ring was waiting for him at home.

"When the body comes ... I will place that ring on his finger," she said. "I want to touch him. I have to touch him. I have to put that ring on his finger."

The Bohrs would have celebrated their ninth wedding anniversary Saturday.

The family does not yet know when Jeff's body will arrive for burial. He will be buried in Mount Calvary Cemetery in Cedar Rapids.

Lori Bohr had planned to have her husband's funeral in Cedar Rapids but changed her mind after visiting Ossian, where Jeff had lived for

Bohr
Marine

17 years. All of the flags in the small town were at half-staff in Jeff's honor, and numerous people made offers to help.

"I thought that I've got to give this town the funeral," Lori Bohr said. "He was one of their own."

She said her husband told her before he left that if he was killed, he wanted to be buried at Arlington National Cemetery in Washington, D.C.

In his fourth or fifth letter, Lori Bohr said, "the last line read — 'If I am killed I want to be buried next to you.'"

Jeff Bohr had served in the military for approximately 20 years, four in the Army and the rest in the Marines. He served in Operation Desert Storm in 1991.

"Jeff had very strong feelings that this was the right thing to do," his wife said. "He loved the Marines."

Jeff Bohr's brother, Richard, 36, of Minneapolis, will be deployed to Iraq as an Army reservist soon after the funeral.

"He wants to go over," Lori Bohr said. "He's intense on going over, and finding where [Jeff] fell, and placing a cross there. [Richard] was telling me that Jeff was his hero."

Bush pushes for end to Iraqi sanctions

BY SCOTT LINDLAW
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. LOUIS — President Bush urged the United Nations on Wednesday to lift sanctions that have choked Iraq's economy for nearly 13 years as he toured a fighter-jet factory that he said helped defeat "a ruthless enemy."

Bush was careful not to declare the war over, and he cautioned that coalition forces still face serious risks. But he basked in the success of a military campaign that had stirred such fierce opposition, noting battlefield successes, Iraqi political prisoners freed, statues of Saddam Hussein torn down, and a fledgling government being assembled.

Throughout his speech at a Boeing factory that assembles fighter jets, he used the past tense when referring to the Iraq war. "The quality of the workmanship that goes into the aircraft that you build here is one of the main reasons why we were successful in making the world a more peaceful place," he said.

"Just one month ago, the forces of our coalition stood at the borders of Iraq with orders to advance hundreds of miles through hostile territory against a ruthless enemy," Bush told about 1,000 Boeing workers and military personnel on the factory floor. "Today, organized military resistance has virtually ended; the major cities of Iraq have been liberated."

After Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait, the United Nations imposed sanctions that cut off investment and development in the country. Some oil sales were permitted to finance purchases of food and medicine.

Ron Edmonds/Associated Press

President Bush shakes hands with Vice President Dick Cheney, left, as he leaves the White House on Wednesday. The two leaders have rarely been seen in public together since the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks.

"Now that Iraq is liberated, the United Nations should lift economic sanctions on that country," Bush said.

White House spokesman Scott McClellan said Bush would soon call for a U.N. resolution lifting the sanctions. That could be complicated by a requirement under previous resolutions that U.N. inspectors certify Iraq's banned weapons programs are dead.

The United States has not invited U.N. inspectors to return to Iraq.

Bush used symbols of America's military might as the backdrop for his speech. The Boeing plant here assembles F/A-18 Super Hornet jets, the newest and most advanced strike fighters in the Navy's inventory. Thirty-six of the fighters are deployed to the Iraq region.

He walked the cavernous production facility before his speech, donning clear safety goggles even though manufacturing was shut down for his appearance.

Bush, a former Air National Guard pilot, peered into several of the half-finished machines, their wings not yet attached. Wires and hoses spilled from the forward fuselages, which are fused here to aft fuselages that are manufactured near

Los Angeles by Northrop Grumman.

The planes can reach speeds of 1,330 mph and cost $57 million each.

Before leaving for St. Louis and a long weekend on his Texas ranch, Bush signed a $79 billion supplemental budget measure that will finance combat, reconstruction, and domestic anti-terror efforts.

Bush signed the measure with no ceremony and no lawmakers present — the kind of treatment he reserves for bills he does not particularly like. He devoted just two sentences to the spending bill in his speech.

FBI says fingerprints of 4 suspects found

BY DAVID RUNK
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DETROIT — An FBI expert testified Wednesday that fingerprints of four men accused of acting as a "sleeper" terrorist cell were found in a day planner that the government claims contains casing sketches of possible targets.

The planner, which immediately caught the attention of agents during a raid six days after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, contains illustrations of what other prosecution witnesses say are an American air base in Incirlik, Turkey, and a military hospital in Amman, Jordan.

FBI fingerprint specialist Jacob Holmes said a print belonging to defendant Karim Koubriti was found on a page that a U.S. Air Force official has said shows flight sequences for missions at Incirlik, kinds of aircraft, and possible lines of fire for shoulder-mounted missiles.

No prints matched to the men on trial were found on the page the government claims shows the hospital, according to testimony from Holmes.

Defense lawyers say the planner belonged to Ali Mohammed Ali Ahmed, a mentally unstable Yemeni immigrant who died in an apparent suicide in March 2001. The defendants claim they found the planner in a Dearborn apartment that previously had been occupied by Ali Ahmed and his brother.

The government suggests the defendants got Ali Ahmed to sign the planner to cover their efforts.

Holmes testified that he found four of Ali Ahmed's fingerprints in the planner, including two on pages where Ali Ahmed's name is written. He also found two fingerprints of Ali Ahmed's brother, who said he once thumbed through the planner.

Ali Ahmed's name is on the page in the planner that the government says represents the air base, but Holmes said he didn't find a fingerprint from Ali Ahmed on that page. He later said that it is possible to write on a page without leaving a print.

Koubriti, Abdel-Ilah Elmaroudi, Farouk Ali-Haimoud, Karim Koubriti, and Ahmed Hannan are charged with conspiracy to provide material support or resources to terrorists. The trial is the first in the United States for an alleged terror cell detected following the Sept. 11 attacks.

The charges stem from the same raid of a Detroit apartment that turned up the planner and led to the arrest of Koubriti, Hannan, and Ali-Haimoud. Elmaroudi was arrested in November in North Carolina.

Of the 44 usable fingerprints Holmes was able to find on pages of the planner, he testified that 29 of them matched fingerprints of the men on trial: 15 from Koubriti, 10 from Hannan, and two each from Elmaroudi and Ali-Haimoud.

The defendants say they were using the planner for scrap paper. Some of the prints attributed to them were found on pages with notations about English phrases and pages without writing.

U.S., N. Korea agree to nuclear talks

BY PAUL RICHTER AND BARBARA DEMICK
LOS ANGELES TIMES

WASHINGTON — The United States and North Korea on Wednesday ended a six-month standoff by agreeing to resume direct talks on security issues, but only after the Bush administration made an important concession.

Officials said the two countries will meet in Beijing, probably late next week, for three-week talks with the Chinese. The agreement came after the U.S. administration abandoned its insistence that the talks also include North Korea's two democratic neighbors, the South Koreans and Japanese.

Instead, U.S. officials said, they will press to include the two countries in later rounds of talks, although North Korea has not yet agreed to this.

U.S., South Korean, and Japanese officials all hailed the planned talks as an important step forward, though the Americans acknowledged that it will not be easy to get Pyongyang to give up the nuclear deterrent it has sought to acquire.

"We're not looking for a solution in one meeting of a couple days' duration," U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell said in an interview with the Associated Press. "We believe this is the beginning of a long, intense process of discussion."

Though the outlook is unclear, that talks are scheduled was widely viewed as a breakthrough after a half year of growing tensions and intermittent threats of war.

The U.S.-North Korean relationship deteriorated in October 2002, after Pyongyang

North Korean leader Kim Jong Il, wearing dark glasses, visits a plastic factory in Hamhung, North Korea, on Wednesday. The U.S. and the North have agreed to talk about the North's budding nuclear-weapons program.

acknowledged that it had violated pledges by carrying on a secret bomb-making program. Since then, North Korea has ejected U.N. weapons inspectors and taken a series of steps suggesting it wanted to begin a weapons program that could make it a major exporter of nuclear materials and bombs.

"The priority is to lift the atmosphere of crisis from the Korean peninsula," said Yoon Young Kwan, the South Korean foreign minister, whose economy has been badly stressed by talk of war.

Intensive secret talks on a meeting have been going on for weeks, but the breakthrough apparently came last week. On April 12, the North Korean government, in a shift, said it could agree to multilateral talks.

The U.S. delegation will be led by Assistant Secretary of State James Kelly, who was conducting talks with the North Koreans last fall when they admitted carrying on a secret enriched-uranium bomb program.

Powell said the American delegation is "placing no conditions on the meeting. We are not afraid of talking." And he emphasized that President Bush "is looking for a diplomatic solution.

Administration lowers terror level to yellow

BY JOHN J. LUMPKIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration lowered the terror-alert level from orange to yellow Wednesday, saying the end of heavy fighting in Iraq has diminished the threat of terrorism in the United States.

It was unclear whether the heightened alert had prevented any terrorist attacks, officials said.

A number of security measures around the country will be relaxed, officials at the Department of Homeland Security said.

For example, the federal "Operation Liberty Shield" — the code name for security measures keyed specifically to the war on Iraq — will be terminated. It called for National Guard or state police to be posted at nuclear-power plants and other critical facilities.

Still, a significant threat remains, officials said.

The new, yellow level marks an elevated risk of terrorist attacks. It is the middle level on the five-tier danger scale. The old level, orange, signifies a high risk and is the second-highest level. A red alert has not been declared since the system was implemented 13 months ago.

"We must be vigilant and alert to the possibility that Al Qaeda and those sympathetic to its cause, as well as former Iraqi-regime state agents and affiliated organizations, may attempt to conduct attacks against the U.S. or our interests abroad," Homeland Security Secretary Tom Ridge said.

The threat level was raised on March 17, two days before the war began.

"We believe that during Operation Liberty Shield there were individuals in places, at times, where they should not have been," said Brian Roehrkasse, a spokesman for the Department of Homeland Security. "The investigations continue on those."

Roehrkasse declined to provide specifics.

President Bush agreed to lower the level during an intelligence briefing Wednesday on Ridge's recommendation, said White House spokesman Scott McClellan.

Not everyone was relaxing. New York City police said the city would remain on orange alert and checkpoints at bridges and tunnels would continue.

"We are maintaining the current status because New York remains under a greater risk of terrorism than other parts of the country," police spokesman Michael O'Looney said.

The alert system is designed to guide law-enforcement agencies, businesses, and the general public in their security decisions, and it is mostly up to local governments and companies to decide what measures to enact.

Riot police fire pepper spray at demonstrators during clashes in an antiwar demonstration outside the European Summit in Athens on Wednesday.

EU attempts to repair rift

BY ROBERT J. MCCARTNEY
WASHINGTON POST

PARIS — European Union leaders moved to resolve deep differences over the Iraq war Wednesday and present the United States with a common position that the United Nations should have an important role in post-war reconstruction and that European countries would cooperate in that job.

French President Jacques Chirac predicted that the gathering of heads of the union's 15 member countries in Athens would formulate a unified stance today addressing "our concerns for the future of Iraq, the principles upon which we believe that reconstruction ... has to be carried out."

It remained unclear what role Europe might play in the rebuilding. But in a first step,

Chirac announced agreement on an airlift of wounded Iraqis, especially children, to EU countries for medical care.

The Iraq war, protested by thousands of demonstrators who gathered in Athens, in many ways overshadowed the official work of the summit, the signing of a treaty to admit 10 new members, eight of them former communist states in Eastern Europe. They are set to enter in May 2004, pending referendums or other treaty-approval processes. It will be the EU's biggest expansion since it originated as the six-nation European Coal and Steel Community in 1951.

Disagreements over Iraq have produced one of the deepest splits in EU history. Britain and Spain led a pro-war faction against an antiwar group led by France and Germany. But Wednesday, in a sign of efforts to overcome the rift, British Prime Minister Tony Blair and Chirac had their first extended face-to-face conversation since the war began.

Among other topics, they discussed what role the United Nations would play in the political and economic reconstruction of Iraq. The United States has resisted calls for the United Nations to take over responsibility for Iraq after American and British forces have established security there.

The French government continued Wednesday to sound conciliatory toward the United States, following Chirac's phone call to President Bush on Tuesday. It was their first conversation in two months. "Issue by issue, we have to find the right balance between the role of the United Nations, which must be the essential role, and the American and British forces present on the ground," said Chirac spokeswoman Catherine Colonna.

U.S. snubs Palestinians on Abbas

BY DAN EGGEN
WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — U.S. officials flatly rejected Palestinian demands for the release of captured guerrilla leader Mohammed Abbas, saying Wednesday the only question was whether he should serve a life sentence in Italy or face new charges in the United States for masterminding the 1985 Achille Lauro hijacking.

Abbas, also known as Abu Abbas, led the Palestine Liberation Front splinter group in the 1980s and 1990s that orchestrated the takeover of the Achille Lauro, an Italian cruise ship. The terrorists singled out elderly American tourist Leon Klinghoffer because he was Jewish, killed him and then tossed him and his wheelchair into the Mediterranean.

The detention of Abbas was cheered by the Klinghoffer family and their supporters, who immediately called for criminal prosecution of Abbas in U.S. courts. Klinghoffer's daughters, Lisa and Ilsa, said in an interview that they have been frustrated for nearly two decades by the lack of action against Abbas, who has openly shuttled between Gaza and Iraq for years.

"We won't be happy unless he's brought here, tried here, and serves his entire sentence here," said Lisa Klinghoffer, 51. "He's been in our face all these years saying, 'Someone try to get me,' but nobody ever does. He's a murderous thug, and nobody has done anything about it."

The capture prompted an immediate legal dispute among the United States, Italy, Israel, and the Palestinian Authority that could complicate U.S. efforts to resume Middle East peace negotiations. In addition, the detention raised anew the question of whether the United States could successfully prosecute a murder case against Abbas, who was not on the Achille Lauro when it was hijacked and has since called the action a mistake.

Italian officials said they would seek extradition of Abbas, who was convicted in absentia and sentenced to life in prison for the hijacking in 1986. Many Israeli leaders praised the arrest, and some said there was evidence that remnants of the liberation front in Iraq might have helped provide financial support for Palestinian suicide bombers.

Palestinian leaders said Abbas should be freed, arguing that the terms of an interim peace agreement signed in 1995 extends immunity to Abbas and other Palestinian militants for violent acts committed prior to the Oslo accords of 1993. The Israelis in 1996 allowed Abbas to enter Gaza, where he lived openly until returning to Baghdad in 2000.

Official: Pentagon needs billions more for Iraq

BY ROBERT BURNS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Iraq war has cost at least $20 billion and probably will consume that much or more in the next five months, the Pentagon's top budget officer said Wednesday.

An additional $5 billion to $7 billion will be needed to pay for getting U.S. troops from the Persian Gulf region to their home bases, officials said. That process is just now beginning.

Those totals do not include the yet to be calculated sums for postwar reconstruction of Iraq, the Defense Department's comptroller said at a news conference. The United States is counting on contributions from other countries to pay part of the rebuilding cost.

Dov Zakheim said military operations in Iraq to date have cost approximately $10 billion to $12 billion. Personnel costs have been about $6 billion, and the cost of munitions has been more than $3 billion. The figures include what it cost to move 250,000 troops to the Persian Gulf area.

Between now and the end of the federal budget year on Sept. 30, the Pentagon expects to spend around $20 billion more on military operations inside Iraq, officials said.

In human costs, the Pentagon said the war's official death toll rose to 125, including a Marine corporal killed in a March 23 firefight near Nasiriyah, Iraq. The Pentagon said it had identified the remains of Cpl. Kemaphoom A. Chanawongse, 22, of Waterford, Conn., who had been listed as missing in action. There are now three Americans listed as missing.

At a separate news conference, Maj. Gen. Stanley McChrystal said that although major combat was ended, there are still some Iraqi towns that U.S. forces have not reached, including an area north of Tikrit, Saddam Hussein's hometown.

McChrystal said the war's overall commander, Gen. Tommy Franks, is sending some U.S.

forces home. He did not mention any that had not been reported this week, including the USS Kitty Hawk carrier battle group, which left the Persian Gulf Wednesday en route to Japan.

The USS Constellation battle group is due to leave the Gulf this week.

Franks probably will move some sort of headquarters operation into Iraq soon, McChrystal said.

"Whether it will be located in Baghdad proper, I can't say," McChrystal said. "But at some point, I think as he transitions to the next phase, he would probably recommend and stand up that kind of headquarters and put it right within Iraq."

The military's top officer, Gen. Richard Myers, said in a speech Wednesday that U.S. forces in Iraq are now beginning to focus more on hunting for weapons of mass destruction rather than fighting.

"Weapons of mass destruction, while important, weren't as important as winning the war. We had a priority to win a war," Myers told the Navy League of America. "I have every confidence that we will find them. We're going to need some help from the Iraqi people. That is being worked on very hard right now."

Myers said he is not surprised that such weapons have not been found.

"I don't know how long it will take. They have been hiding that stuff from inspectors now for 12 years," he said.

American forces also have bombed bases of a group opposed to Iran's government that had been supported by Saddam's regime in Iraq, Myers said Tuesday. Speaking to foreign reporters, Myers said U.S. forces were pursuing fighters from the Mujahedeen Khalq remaining inside Iraq.

U.S. pushes ahead on remaking Iraq

BY COLUM LYNCH AND VERNON LOEB
WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon's search for foreign peacekeeping forces for Iraq gathered some momentum Wednesday as the State Department solicited bids from private U.S. contractors for training a national Iraqi police force and overhauling the country's judicial and prison systems.

Two European allies that have supported the Bush administration's war in Iraq, Denmark and the Netherlands, said they might be willing to send peacekeeping forces to Iraq to help stabilize the country. Italy, Bulgaria, and Albania also offered forces this week.

Amid these tentative commitments, NATO announced Wednesday that it will assume full responsibility for the peacekeeping operation in Afghanistan beginning in August. This undertaking will be the 19-member alliance's first mission outside its membership area in Europe and the United States.

With NATO committed in Afghanistan and with Europe's capacity for contributing large numbers of peacekeepers already strained by operations in Afghanistan and the Balkans, military experts said the United States and Britain might be forced to shoulder much of the peacekeeping burden in Iraq.

On the policing front, the State Department has asked a handful of U.S. companies to bid on a contract for assembling an American team of 1,000 former police officers and lawyers to train Iraqi police and help build effective judicial and prison systems in the country. An administration official said the total cost of the police mission "could be in the range of hundreds of millions of dollars."

The move is aimed at easing the burden on U.S. combat troops, who have been forced by the breakdown in law and order into a policing role in Baghdad and other key Iraqi cities. It also signals the administration's intent to expand the role of private U.S. firms in managing the post-conflict phase in Iraq.

As a first step toward reforming the Iraqi police, the Justice Department plans to send an "assessment" mission to Iraq as early as next week to determine precisely how large an American presence will be required. "They will get on the ground and look at what's going on and tell us what's needed," a State Department official said.

The assessment team — which will ultimately include 26 law-enforcement specialists — is to form the administrative core of a much larger U.S. police mission. They will answer to retired Army Lt. Gen. Jay Gardner, who has been appointed by the Bush administration to oversee Iraq's civil administration pending the creation of an interim Iraqi authority. Congress has approved $25 million in emergency spending to "jump-start" the program, an official said.

The United States is trying to cobble together a disparate group of law-enforcement specialists, primarily former police officers, but also prosecutors, human-rights lawyers, and corrections officials, a State Department official said. "They will only be advising and training," the official said. "We're not cops on the beat."

DynCorp International, a government contractor based in Reston, Va., is among the key contenders for the State Department contract. It has already been given the task of recruiting an initial group of 150 former police officers who could be quickly deployed in Iraq.

DynCorp has been a key player in U.S. law-enforcement and military operations from Colombia to Afghanistan — including providing Afghan President Hamid Karzai with American bodyguards and supplying U.N. peacekeeping operations from Kosovo to East Timor with U.S. police officers.

But its record of running police missions in the Balkans during the 1990s has been troubled. In Bosnia, the company came under harsh criticism for allegedly hiring poorly qualified officers, failing to discipline wrongdoers, and turning a blind eye on a series of sexual crimes implicating DynCorp employees.

The Bush administration, highly skeptical of nation-building and peacekeeping operations when it assumed office in January 2001, has nonetheless spent the past year and a half engaged in what it calls "stability operations" in Afghanistan.

U.S. POWs land in Germany to cheers

BY PANOS KAKAVIATOS

RAMSTEIN AIR BASE, Germany — A smiling Army Spc. Shoshana Johnson was carried out on a stretcher from a plane and taken for medical examinations at a military hospital Wednesday night along with six other American POWs who were rescued in Iraq.

The seven were brought on a C-141 transport aircraft from Kuwait to this U.S. base, the latest stop on their return home after three weeks in Iraqi captivity.

Six of the former POWs, dressed in military fatigues, walked down the aircraft's rear ramp, two of them shaking hands with air-base workers and three waving at reporters who waited approximately 50 yards away.

Johnson, who was shot in the foot during the ambush that led to her and her comrades' capture, was carried off the plane on a stretcher, partly covered by a blue blanket and wearing fatigues. Smiling and wearing a blue baseball cap, the 30-year-old from Fort Bliss, Texas, was greeted by applause from a group of around 20 air-base workers.

The seven boarded a bus for the trip to the nearby Landstuhl Regional Medical Center.

Five of the freed prisoners were comrades of former POW Jessica Lynch from the U.S. Army's 507th Maintenance Support Company; the other two were Apache helicopter pilots from the 1st Battalion, 227th Aviation Regiment.

None of the group was expected to stay long at Landstuhl. Also wounded was Spc. Edgar Hernandez, 21, of Mission, Texas, who was shot in the elbow.

After Sept. 11, liberties limited, federation says

BY SUSANNA LOOF
ASSOCIATED PRESS

VIENNA, Austria — Anti-terrorism measures introduced since the Sept. 11 attacks are severely curtailing human rights and civil liberties in much of the world, a prominent watchdog group said Wednesday.

The measures often threaten freedoms because they are too broad, too vague, and applied too arbitrarily, the International Helsinki Federation for Human Rights contended in its report.

"We are accomplishing the goal that [terrorists] are allegedly pursuing," said Aaron Rhodes, the director of the Vienna-based federation.

Limited breaches of human rights would be expected in an emergency situation, such as the period immediately following the terrorist attacks in New York and Washington, he said. But governments in the post-Sept. 11 era have failed to "minimize the erosion of rights," he added.

"Terrorist suspects have rights also," Rhodes said.

The group studied measures in 55 countries that are members of the Organization of Security and Cooperation in Europe — a security organization that includes the United States. It argues that "many states apparently do not view human rights as a matter requiring due consideration in the fight against terrorism."

Since Sept. 11, the report says, countries have increased powers of law-enforcement and intelligence institutions, introduced measures allowing authorities to intercept private communications and search homes without safeguards, tightened border controls, introduced firmer asylum and immigration laws, and authorized registration and profiling schemes that appear to target certain groups because of their ethnicity or religion.

In Basra, aid misses the most needy

BY ROBYN DIXON
LOS ANGELES TIMES

BASRA, Iraq — Well-fed and well-dressed, Dr. Saber Joda walked out of Basra General Hospital on Wednesday carrying home a large shopping bag filled with humanitarian aid sent from the United Arab Emirates.

The aid had been delivered to the hospital in this southern city for the first time since the war, and as Joda and other members of the staff hauled bags and boxes emblazoned with Red Crescent stickers, some were besieged by furious relatives of the sick.

Abdur Hamad, 32, was seething. "They distributed the aid only to the doctors and hospital staff. Sick people have no water to drink," he complained, gesticulating angrily. "Everything is as it was before, under Saddam Hussein. The food is going to people with high positions, and that's all."

Suddenly he spotted a hospital staffer laden with two shopping bags filled with milk, biscuits, water, and other aid items.

"Look at her," he shouted, then confronted her angrily. "Why do sick people have no water when you are taking it?"

"It's only for staff. I'm taking it home," responded Hayfa Lateef, 32. "They gave it to me. What should I do, throw it away?" She said she had not been paid this month.

Saber, the director of general surgery at the hospital, said salaries had not been paid for three months. As a group of patients' relatives surrounded him in the parking lot, he handed his bag of Red Crescent biscuits to a colleague and shooed him away. Then the doctor planted his feet on the concrete and listed all the problems he and his staff face: The hospital was suffering severe shortages, including water, food, medicines, and dressings.

"We have no clean water to sterilize our hands or equipment," he said. "Of course people are going to get infections. What do you expect?"

He defended the decision to hand out bottled water and food to staff members, citing the lack of pay. Although he seemed a little nonplused when asked why needy patients didn't get the aid first, he recovered quickly, saying that was someone else's decision.

But the head of the hospital kitchen, Thaera Hashem, 42, hauling home a box of bottled water home on her shoulder, said it was Saber's decision. A group of staff members walking out with her agreed.

Inside, the hospital's wards were a chaotic picture of wrenching misery: People lay injured from allied bombing and artillery strikes on Basra and the surrounding area. None of them had been given Red Crescent milk, food, or water.

"The plane came and attacked with bombs," said Nasera Farhan, 10. "It hurts a lot." She recalled running in panic from the roof of their house in the village of Omara.

The wall collapsed and crushed her leg. Her mother, Fatima, standing barefoot by the bed, fanned the listless child. She buys tomatoes and vegetables for her, and said she had to buy medicine as well.

She slapped her hands together in a dismissive gesture to express the hopelessness of efforts to get humanitarian aid for her child. She said she has to queue for water from Kuwait being distributed in tankers.

A young woman in a nearby bed began crying and moaning. Her family fluttered anxiously, and everyone cast looks of pained sympathy. Under her bed lay a bloodstained towel.

In another bed, Basem Faves, 15, had a gash in his stomach about a foot long. He said he'd been shot in the stomach by a British tank.

"It was a big tank. I was standing outside my house, and suddenly I was shot. I fell down," he said. "At the time, I didn't really feel anything."

His brother Habeeb, 33, said he and others had asked staff for aid and was told patients would get it the next day. But the aid had run out, he said.

In the next bed lay a frail boy named Abass Kadem, 13, with stomach and back injuries, hurt when artillery hit his house. He has had two operations, but his father has been told they were not successful.

"We're waiting for the food aid that they promised," said his father, Harda Kadem, 52, referring to allied forces.

Zaidoon Dahoos, a surgeon, said he had heard that some doctors were given aid but that he had not received any. "It's supposed to be distributed to the sick people," he said. "There are always some bad people. They have a good chance to get something."

WHO links SARS to virus

BY THOMAS H. MAUGH II
LOS ANGELES TIMES

Only 34 days after the mysterious disease known as SARS was first identified, Dutch researchers have produced the disease in monkeys by infecting them with a recently discovered coronavirus, producing the final piece of evidence that the virus is the cause of the outbreak.

"We now know with certainty what causes SARS," said David Heymann, the executive director of the World Health Organization's communicable-diseases programs. "With the establishment of the causative agent, we are one step closer" to developing more effective preventive programs and treatments, he said.

The announcement came Wednesday as the disease, formally called severe acute respiratory syndrome, continued its spread through Asia. There were 58 new cases of SARS reported by WHO on Wednesday — 50 of them occurring in mainland China and Hong Kong, the epicenters of the outbreak. The total number of deaths has climbed to 159.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reported 199 probable and suspected cases of SARS in the United States, but experts said the number could drop to as low as 30 by the end of the week as new diagnostic tests weed out suspected cases that are actually other illnesses.

U.S. Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson warned Wednesday that China has been under-reporting the number of cases there and said that U.S. physicians are very concerned about the rapid spread of the disease in the region.

"I've got to tell you — my doctors, I've never seen them quite as concerned about anything as they have been about SARS," he said while on an official visit to Italy. "It's new, and they are really concerned about it turning into an epidemic."

Although most experts have been convinced that SARS is caused by the new coronavirus — whose genetic blueprint was identified Sunday by a Canadian laboratory and Monday by the CDC — actual proof requires fulfilling four conditions known as Koch's postulates. To identify a virus as the source of a disease, scientists must show that it is present in all cases of the disease; it can be isolated from the host and grown in the laboratory; it can produce symptoms of the original disease when introduced into a susceptible animal host; and it can be isolated again from that animal.

A team led by Dr. Albert Osterhaus of the Erasmus Medical Center in Rotterdam, the Netherlands, said Monday they had fulfilled the last two postulates.

They placed the virus in the noses of monkeys and found that the animals developed symptoms similar to those exhibited by humans with SARS. Examination of lung tissues from the monkeys showed damage similar to that found in humans as well.

Stem-cells promising in MS study

BY ALEX DOMINGUEZ
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Raising hopes of a treatment for multiple sclerosis, researchers have found that stem cells injected into mice can repair damage and sharply reduce symptoms from an experimental form of MS.

Seven of 26 mice recovered completely from hind-leg paralysis, and others showed substantial improvement after the stem cells were injected into their spinal cords or blood.

The study's authors, from the San Raffaele Scientific Institute in Milan, Italy, say they now plan to try the procedure on monkeys using human stem cells, but they caution that a treatment for human patients, if possible, is years away.

Multiple sclerosis occurs because the body mistakenly attacks the fatty substance that surrounds nerve fibers, interfering with signals sent by the brain. Symptoms can include slurred speech, numbness, blurred vision, and muscle weakness, spasticity, or paralysis.

Approximately 400,000 Americans, mostly women, have MS, and most are diagnosed between the ages of 20 and 50, according to the National Multiple Sclerosis Society. Current therapies help slow the disease by quieting the immune-system attack on nerves, but no cure is known.

Researchers from the San Raffaele institute created a disease in the mice that mimics MS.

In the experiment, the researchers used stem cells that had been removed from the brains of adult mice and grown into larger quantities in a laboratory.

Once injected, the cells traveled to damaged nerve areas and changed into cells needed to make repairs, according to the study published in today's issue of Nature.

Research on monkeys is expected to begin in the next few months, and the results are expected by the end of 2004, said Gianvito Martino, one of the study's authors.

"This opens new hope for patients, but the way is very long and very hard," he said. "We have seen the phenomenon, but now we have to dissect why we have seen this phenomenon and take all the steps to understand that."

The research raises the hope of reversing the damage caused by the disease, but it does not address the cause, said Stephen Reingold, the MS society's vice president for research.

One impressive aspect of the approach is that the cells seem to seek out the damaged areas themselves, which is important because MS affects the entire central nervous system, he said.

"This doesn't tell us it's going to work in humans, but at least it's a step forward," he said.

If the work does eventually proceed to experiments with people, human fetal cells are most likely to be used, said Angelo Vescovi, one of the study's authors. Such cells will be used in the monkey study.

Laboratory populations of such cells can be established with tissue from spontaneous miscarriages, he said. Tissue matching will probably keep the recipient's body from rejecting them as foreign, Vescovi said.

Lawrence Steinman, a Stanford University neurologist, said overcoming rejection might not be easy because MS is an autoimmune disorder in which the body is already attacking its own tissue.

"I think a huge amount of research has to be done to figure out the conditions to do this in humans, to grow the types of cells that work so splendidly in mice," he said.

Letters to the Editor

War is for freedom

To UI employee Brandi Miller and all who agree with her letter (DI, April 2): You may think that our signs are politically incorrect, immature, and wrong, but you must realize that this war has already begun. Our troops will not leave Iraq until they have finished what they have started. Sleeping in tents and sitting in the streets will not end this war or bring our troops home. For weeks, months, or possibly longer, our troops will risk their lives to preserve everyone's protesting rights.

So you may continue to hide behind other antiwar protesters such as celebrities and clergy to validate your views, but no matter how long your protest, you will not change the outcome. You will not become the next historic movement. And you will not make a memorable difference in our lives. These "ignorant, protest-bashing, pro-war Americans" will continue to exercise the rights of free speech. Macabre contradictions

You published a picture of corpses on the front page of The Daily Iowan on April 9, which shows daily death and horror in Baghdad after weeks of bombardment (images the media and the American government have systematically tried to conceal).

Unfortunately, the picture you picked for the front page the day after (DI, April 10) shows your decision to unite with the tide of blind nationalism. The broadly publicized image of an American soldier being kissed by Iraqis is disgusting compared to the brutal casualties the Anglo-American alliance has caused in Iraq. Your editing is macabre.

The idea that the war has "two faces" is a strategy to disguise the carnage.

The obscenity of blatant contradictions has long been the way to mislead, numb, and cause ultimate indifference. First you showed a pile of bleeding corpses; the day after, you joined in the cheerful exaltation of victory. The massive and destructive attack to an acknowledgedly weak country with the purpose of destroying its weapons of mass destruction is an obscene contradiction. Praising and boasting about democracy while invading is an obscene contradiction. Killing people before liberating them is an obscene contradiction.

I am really sad to see that your editorial policy stands united with a strategy of deceit, self-assuredness, evasion, and ignorance.

Quit your whinin'

If I could say one thing to the underage drinkers on the UI campus, it would be this: Grow up. One week, people are complaining that their "Big Brother" of a university won't recognize their adult status because Phillip Jones wants to notify parents when their children are charged with drinking-related charges. The next week, they're complaining that if the bars become 21-only, they will face the increased dangers of binge drinking, fights, and drunk driving because there aren't "bouncers and bar employees to monitor patrons" at house parties (DI, April 7).

Apparently, having someone watch over your shoulder is a good thing when it's convenient, and it's an infringement on our rights when it's not. Here's a piece of advice to all those freshmen and sophomores: If you want people to take you seriously and to treat you like an adult, act like one. If you feel like you are mature enough to drink, fine. But be prepared to face the consequences of your choices. If you are fighting against having the university be your own personal watchdog, then you can't simultaneously cite the "safety" of that same watchdog mentality present at bars in your argument to keep them open to you.

Personally, I think that 21 is an arbitrary age at which to declare someone mature enough to drink. But if anyone is going to convince the powers-that-be of this, our generation has to stop whining and start composing logical and sound arguments as to why a change needs to be made.

Jail task force comes up empty after many months of research

It looks as though the money and time the county spent impaneling the Jail Space and Services Task Force might go to waste. That's 11 months of study and $67,000, if you're counting at home.

The idea for the task force was a good one: Let's get together defense attorneys, prosecutors, law-enforcement officers, and local citizens to see how to resolve the serious issue of jail overcrowding. In the end, though, the results have been disappointing.

The 26 members last week agreed to recommend a number of alternatives to the Johnson County Board of Supervisors, which has been paying thousands of dollars to ship inmates to Linn County when the local jail is full.

The alternatives include releasing more inmates from the jail before their trials and building a small facility to ease overcrowding.

Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White and Sheriff Robert Carpenter dissented. They appear to have valid concerns and are credible on the issue as two of the top law-enforcement officials in the county.

$67,000 and 11 months later, the Jail Space and Services Task Force was not able to reach a unanimous decision on its recommendations.

They criticized the proposals as too vague to be of any help.

But they have also long favored building a multi-million dollar new jail, which was shot down by voters in 2000. One might wonder if the duo would not be happy with the task force if it came up with any other solution.

White also raised the issue of cost, complaining that many of the recommendations would cost the county money. Originally, he said, the group was supposed to look at no-cost alternatives.

The county should be willing to spend money implementing these recommendations, though, especially if they are found to be more cost-effective than building a multimillion dollar new jail.

Regardless, without any support from White or Carpenter, these recommendations aren't likely to go far.

Making it uncomfortable: My political cervix

I have been asked to write about my cervix. I have been contemplating for some time the politics of doing so. The personal is political, feminists have said for years. I've always liked to reverse it: The political is personal. But I'm not sure quite where this cervical business falls.

Certainly, the cervix qualifies as personal. I recently told my story to a male friend who is studying abroad. (I admit to a certain pleasure in making people uncomfortable). "I'm not even sure what a cervix is," he replied. "I think when telling the story to female-anatomy-(we don't have one of 'em, do we?)-challenged listener, you need to give a brief primer." I wrote back that, because he was planning to have five children someday, he might want to get better acquainted.

"When they talk about women in labor being dilated so many centimeters," I wrote, "it's the cervix that's dilated; normally, it's a small bud-like object. If you go to a cool gynecologist, they give you a little mirror, and you can watch the whole exam, and you can see your cervix (of course, being male, you'll never get to have this particular pleasure). If you use non-hormonal methods of contraception (much to be preferred — why make drug companies richer by taking stuff they haven't really tested?), you have to be able to find your own so you can make sure your barrier device is in correctly."

He dropped the subject, but I haven't. What is it about this rather small and generally insignificant piece of anatomy that causes such discomfort?

As a part of the female reproductive system, the cervix is subject, indirectly, to all sorts of unpleasant political debate. But does this make my story in itself political? I leave it to the reader to judge.

Some months ago, it was time for my annual exam (a quaint euphemism), and, as I was broke at the time, I called around to find an appointment with someone who would take my insurance, which around here, means the hospital.

"Well, we could get you in with a female staff member in four months, a male staff member or a nurse practitioner in two, or a resident tomorrow morning," the receptionist said.

I swallowed and chose the resident. This was a somewhat urgent appointment.

The next morning I show up and am greeted by the resident, whom I'll call Dr. Oversight, or Dr. O, for short. He seems a little nervous, so I try to make small talk. This does not work, so I shut up and hope this will be over quickly. I have a lunch date.

The exam starts, and it becomes clear that this guy has not done a pelvic exam in "some time," as he says. I grit my teeth and try to grin and hide it, when suddenly Dr. Oversight says, "I cannot find the cervix."

The nurse asks me if anyone has ever told me that my cervix is inverted or out of place. "No," I say. Dr. O again indicates that he can't find it (meanwhile jabbing me repeatedly with the speculum. "Hey! Watch it!" I imagine one of the vaginas in The Vagina Monologues saying).

"I assure you, it's there," I say.

"How do you know?" he says. I almost fall off the table.

"Um, gee, because I've seen it?" I offer.

(How do I know my cervix is there? I'm thinking. What the hell kind of question is that? Friends have since suggested other possible replies, generally along the lines of, "Gee, because my uterus hasn't fallen out.")

So Dr. O decides he's going to have to get a staff member to get in on this search. Dr. O and the nurse leave in search of said staff member, and I look at the time, get out my cell phone, and call my friend to leave a message letting her know that I'm probably going to be late for lunch because they can't find my cervix.

A while later Dr. O, the nurse, and the staff doctor all come trooping back in. Staff doc finds everything to be in good working order within five minutes. He talks entertainingly about practicing gynecology in Scotland, where, at least at the time he was there, people were so Victorian that the doctor was not allowed to face the woman while doing a pelvic exam; he had to stand to one side and kind of lean over.

I say this sounds quite awkward. He says I'm good to go.

I get out of there, race over to Lou Henri to meet my friends, who immediately blurt out, "Did they find it?!" I reassured them, and we had a nice lunch.

U.N. should stay out of Iraq

The war with Iraq has been won — or lost, depending on where you stand. Each warring faction is left to lick its wounds. Everyone has had time to reflect. This column does not support or denounce the war; that would be an exercise in futility, a waste of time and energy.

Rather, it is a look at what happened to us all — proponents and opponents alike. No matter which side we were on, what happened in the past three weeks affects our psyche. Except for people of Arab and Islamic descent who are overwhelmingly opposed to the war, most Americans had the luxury of choice. Some were vehemently against it. Some were equally passionate about their support. Others expressed their opposition to the war but support for the troops.

Nonetheless, we were all tainted by the war — from the president who ordered the fight to the soldiers who executed that order to the rest of us who considered ourselves bystanders. Those on each side of the conflict have been damaged. The president and his foreign-policy team have to develop strategies to prevent future failures of diplomacy. Some soldiers are wounded and will have to nurse physical or emotional wounds for the rest of their lives. Many have to make the ritual of visiting graves in memory of dead loved ones. Antiwar activists are continuing their efforts with the hope of getting ready for the next time they need to protest something.

But now that regime change has become a reality, the coalition of the unwilling is clamoring for a piece of the action even before shooting has stopped. Countries that were most against regime change are now crying loudly to get the United Nations involved in rebuilding Iraq because they know that is the only way to protect their economic interests. Russia, which has threatened to go to international court to protect its contract with Saddam Hussein, is demanding that the United States and its allies that fought in Iraq hand the country over to the United Nations on a platter. For lack of other credible reasons, the argument is over the legitimacy of the next Iraqi government.

The United Nations is experienced in humanitarian activities, particularly those activities that support the interests of member nations. But it is not that good at nation-building. Past experiences in Rwanda, Burundi, and Somalia are not encouraging — the United Nations left those countries ruled by minorities or anarchy, sowing the seeds of future con-licts. In contrast, most success stories worldwide were those in which regional powers led the way and the United Nations followed with humanitarian help. NATO managed the Balkan conflicts. Violence was reduced in Northern Ireland and the Oslo accord was signed without the United Nations. Australia was in the forefront in East Timor.

President Bush has stated that there is a role for the United Nations, although he gave no specific details. There is little doubt whether international involvement in rebuilding Iraq is desirable. However, the future of a country should not be a game of desire. Many have suggested the United States would be better off allowing a U.N. reorganization of Iraq so that the blame for any failure would not fall solely on the United States. But why shoot for failure when success is a possibility? Considering what happened before the war, it is doubtful whether the United Nations could organize anything contrary to the economic and strategic interests of the veto-holding members of the Security Council. If past experience is any guide, the United Nations should stick to what it knows best: humanitarian assistance.

In the long run, the important thing is not who supported the war with Iraq but whether Iraq enjoys good governance. The people of Iraq had endured a brutal regime and horrific wars. Iraqis need a stable, representative government to take care of their needs. They do not need the ineptitude and rancor of U.N. power politics. Each member nation has an interest and will pursue that interest, no matter who gets hurt. The United States and its allies have a vested interest in making Iraq a success in order to justify their actions. There are others who may wish the opposite to justify their inaction. For the sake of the Iraqis, let the United States and its allies finish the job and enjoy the thrill of success or suffer the agony of blame.

New bin Ladens?

Two events in the news on April 1 on the Iraq war came in chilling juxtaposition, the first reported widely throughout the world, the second reported widely in other countries, but not in the United States: the tragedy of American forces killing 11 members of an Iraqi family on March 31, including five children, in a renegade car at a checkpoint near Kabala.

Hosni Mubarak, the president of Egypt, in a speech on March 30 (before the checkpoint killings), decried the effect of the American attack on Iraq, predicting that the war would backfire spectacularly, igniting Islamic fanatics and producing "100 new Osama bin Ladens."

On another day, when the sickening face of war did not show itself so clearly, I suspect that Mubarak's speech would have been reported more widely in the American press. But to report the two stories together would have made the connection too painfully obvious. As Mubarak says, our treatment of the people of Iraq is sowing a whirlwind of Arab terror that will last for years.

Lethargic police reaction in beating raises eyebrows

Krei, and Steffen all said the absence of a report is not typical and that investigations should not be delayed for so long after the incident's occurrence.

Steffen launched a "preliminary investigation" and has left messages with a few witnesses. Police have not spoken to King, he said. Anyone with information about the alleged attack is urged to call Iowa City police at 356-5275.

Eyewitnesses were unable to identify King's alleged attacker or attackers, said Brotherton, who reports having talked to two "inebriated" men who came to King's aid.

After patronizing "a few" bars with friends, King, carrying a case of beer, exited the Deadwood, 6 S. Dubuque St., when he was attacked by a person or group of persons intent on pilfering the alcohol he had just purchased at Aajaxxx Liquor, 107 S. Linn St., Kasten said.

Neskow's account tells a story in which "crowds" of passersby laughed and mocked a limp King, whom they mistook as yet another drunken casualty of Iowa City's bar scene.

Neskow said he and two unidentified men rushed over to assist King, who looked as if he had just suffered a "brutal beating." The men turned King on his side to allow the blood that had accumulated in his mouth and on his face — the site of the most severe trauma — to spill onto the pavement, Neskow said.

Neskow said he ran to the intersection of Dubuque Street and Iowa Avenue to flag down UI police Officer Cindy Heick. Heick and UI police were unavailable for comment. When officers came to the scene, the crowd then began to grow, Neskow said. According to eyewitness accounts, police began to get agitated and asked members of the crowd to leave.

Iowa City police officers "just kind of stood there" and ignored an eyewitness who told the trio he saw the beating, Neskow said, adding that officers were only interested in getting the body off the street.

"I definitely remember a kid saying, 'I saw the kid that hit him and run towards that way,'" he said, recalling that the eyewitness pointed towards the Pedestrian Mall. "No police officer asked me anything. They just didn't seem to take it as serious as everyone else was."

Brotherton said King had "a small amount" of blood coming from the corner of his mouth, adding that he was unsure whether King was lying down or unconscious and could not tell whether his hair was caked in blood.

He later met with King at the UIHC, but the Salt Lake City native was "too wild" for questioning, Steffen said, prompting Brotherton to give his business card to hospital personnel before leaving 15 minutes later.

"Going out there [to the UIHC] and checking up on every nosebleed incident isn't realistic," said Brotherton, who reproached Kasten and others for not coming forward with more information about the incident.

An ambulance arrived to transport King to the UIHC when a female passerby called it on her cell phone, Neskow said.

Since the incident, King has been incoherent, is often confused, and still suffers from a black eye and swollen face, Kasten said, adding that no one knows when King could be released. Friends say the local cook has improved over the last week and a half, regaining the ability to determine the date and time and staying conscious for lengths of time. He is now capable of getting out of bed and walking "gingerly," Kasten said.

Still, Kasten said, "Hold up a pen, and he can't say 'pen.'"

He said recruits were apparently instructed in the art of bomb-making, adding that Marines found chemicals, beakers, and pipes at the site, along with questionnaires that asked recruits to state their preference in missions. Hoellwarth said many volunteered for suicide missions.

The discovery came less than a day after American officials disclosed the capture in Baghdad of Mohammed Abbas, a Palestinian said to have been behind the 1985 hijacking of an Italian cruise ship in which one American was killed. Other suspects were taken in a series of raids that also netted weapons such as rocket-propelled grenades, military officials said.

American forces also have bombed bases of a group opposed to Iran's government that had been supported by Saddam's regime in Iraq, said Gen. Richard Myers, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Speaking to foreign reporters, Myers said U.S. forces were pursuing fighters from the Mujahedeen Khalq remaining inside Iraq.

Circumstances of the reported shootings in Mosul were unclear. Several of the wounded said American troops had shot them. But a Marine sergeant denied that, saying American troops shot back after coming under fire from nearby gunmen.

Mohammed Rabih Sheet, an administrator at Jumahuriya Hospital, said three people were killed and 11 wounded, including two children.

It was the second outbreak of gunfire in as many days in Mosul, a city of 700,000 where Arabs and Kurds are highly suspicious of one another and tensions have been high since American forces rolled in a week ago.

Iraqis accused Americans of opening fire on a crowd Tuesday. Brooks said U.S. forces guarding a government compound fired only after being shot at and when some rioters in the street tried to climb over a wall.

In Washington, the Pentagon's top budget officer said the war has cost at least $20 billion and probably will consume at least that much in the next five months. Bush also signed a bill that provides $79 billion for additional war costs and domestic anti-terror efforts.

escape may also face disciplinary action including criminal charges, Ort said. The investigation to determine what action should be taken will take around a month, he said.

Coralville police, in conjunction with authorities from Woodbury and Mahaska Counties — the areas where the two convicts lived — are following leads, but "there's nothing really hot right now," said Chief Barry Bedford.

"People have a tendency to resurface, though," he said, adding that the Johnson County Sheriff's Office, state Division of Criminal Investigation, and prison officials are combining efforts on the case.

"They'll pop up somewhere." Meanwhile, Gov. Tom Vilsack said he did not believe budget cuts to state prisons played a role in the escape, but he criticized the facility for its failure to "beef up" security.

"In my view, there was an error in judgment made when the fencing was disconnected," he said. "There should have been an effort to beef up perimeter security. The fact that the prison took that step following the escape suggests it should have been done earlier."

minority of councilors after realizing the lack of public support for the ordinance, adding that there must be a public consensus before a law can be changed or enforced.

He said the ordinance in its current form would be voted down by a citizen's referendum, which students and bar owners have vowed to force.

"I'm uncomfortable with what we've got — very uncomfortable," he said. "We've got to get something that would withstand a referendum, and I don't think there's a ghost of a chance that this one would."

Councilor Mike O'Donnell, who voted against the ordinance, compared the council to dropping a handful of marbles on a table and watching them disperse, emphasizing a lack of constancy in voting and conviction.

"If you look at my voting record, I have not supported the cigarette ordinance, I didn't support the alcohol ordinance, and I won't support this one," he said. "We already have a law on the books that addresses what we're trying to do."

"It's against the law to drink alcohol in Iowa if you're under 21, but it's not against the law to go out and dance, play pool, eat a hamburger, and socialize."

Councilor Steven Kanner joined O'Donnell in opposition last week.

The measure would impose a $250 fine for underage patrons caught in an Iowa City bar after 10 p.m. The proposed ordinance would also raise fines for bars each time they are caught admitting underage patrons — $100 for the first offense and increasing to $500 for the third.

Card says he thinks that Saddam is dead

WACO, Texas (AP) — White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card told an online audience Wednesday that he believes Saddam Hussein has been killed.

Card made the statement as he launched a new interactive feature on the White House Web site in which Internet users around the world had the chance to question one of President Bush's most-powerful aides on any topic they liked.

Of course, he got to choose which questions to answer.

But Card did not shy away from difficult topics, taking queries on such topics as the United States' commitment to civilians hurt during the hostilities in Iraq, tensions with North Korea, wartime protests, and the role of nations that didn't support the U.S.-led war in Iraq's postwar future.

"Casey" from Quincy, Mass., asked if there was any new information on the deposed Iraqi leader's location and if the war in Iraq could be deemed successful without Saddam Hussein's death or capture.

"He is not likely to be in Quincy, Braintree, or my hometown of Holbrook," replied Card, a Massachusetts native. "I think he is dead. The good news is that his regime is no longer a threat to the people of Iraq nor to the U.S. or our allies."

Card ignored the second half of the question.

Saddam's whereabouts are unknown. Other U.S. officials have said they don't know if he is dead or alive.

The chat — featured on the Web site complete with a White House-supplied picture of Card tapping away at his computer keyboard — got off to a slow start, with the first answer not up on the site until eight minutes into the 30-minute session.

Draft postponed, women disappointed

DES MOINES (AP) — This could have been a special time for Lindsey Wilson and Carla Bennett.

Instead, it was just another round of college classes, another day closer to the end of their senior year at Iowa State.

Wednesday had been the scheduled date of the WNBA draft, which was postponed because of the labor standoff between the league and its players.

The WNBA has said that if an agreement is not reached by Friday, it will cancel the season. That would be a huge disappointment for Wilson, a guard at Iowa State.

"Ever since I was little, before they had a league, I would hope there'd be one in time for me," Wilson said. "For a long time, there wasn't. Then there was the ABL and I remember when that folded, it was disappointing."

The stalled talks also prompted the six-year-old league to cancel its pre-draft camp last week. That was another disappointment for Wilson.

The WNBA and its players association are scheduled to resume talks today.

Before NCAAs, team reflects on turnaround

When Mike Lorenzen arrived as the new UI women's gymnastics coach in July of 1999, he had not much to lose and plenty to gain.

The program, which ranked near the bottom of all Division I teams in the country, was in shambles, and it needed someone to lead it in the right direction.

Not only has Lorenzen provided the program with that guidance over his four-year tenure, he has also helped it achieve more than most thought possible in such a short time.

With the Hawkeyes a week away from their first team trip to the NCAA championships in school history, it is hard for Lorenzen and company not to look back and appreciate the steps taken that have gotten them where they are.

Lorenzen's first year as head coach was a learning experience.

Iowa State pitcher Martinez lasts 12 innings in 4-3 road victory

BY TODD BROMMELKAMP
THE DAILY IOWAN

Somewhere in the 10th or 11th inning, Ruth Crowe isn't sure which, the Iowa State coach joked about conditioning with starting pitcher Erica Martinez.

The banter was semi-serious. Martinez, the senior leader of the Cyclone staff, was making just her second appearance since March 30.

Martinez got her work out and then some as she pitched all 12 innings of Iowa State's 4-3 victory over Iowa (29-10) Wednesday at Pearl Field. The Fort Madison native gave up nine hits while striking out two and walking one to help the Cyclones improve to 17-22.

"For her to come out and throw 12 innings was important," Crowe said. "I wanted her to throw this game."

Iowa coach Gayle Blevins was equally impressed with Ali Arnold's performance in the circle as the freshmen worked ten innings of relief, allowing just six hits and one unearned run. But that one run proved to be the difference maker as Lindsey Herrin crossed the plate in the top of the twelfth with two outs following a throwing error.

"I only wish we could have gotten [Ali's effort] from our starter," Blevins said. "Starting pitcher Lisa Birocci had good warmups. You've got to be able to walk across the line and do it on the field."

Birocci was anything but impressive in just two innings of work at the game's onset, walking five Cyclones and allowing three runs. Two of those tallies came on a mammoth two-run

Jayhawks receive permission to ask for Self help

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — The University of Kansas received permission Wednesday to speak with Illinois basketball coach Bill Self about the coaching vacancy opened when Roy Williams left for North Carolina earlier this week.

"Kansas has contacted us and apparently will be contacting Bill," said Kent Brown, Illinois sports information director.

Kansas officials did not return calls to the Associated Press. Chancellor Robert Hemenway said the school plans to hire a new coach quickly.

Self left Illinois Wednesday for a planned family vacation in Florida. He did not return a call to his mobile phone.

"It's really Bill's situation at this point," Brown said. "We are in a waiting period until one party or the other would indicate what their plans are."

Illinois Athletics Director Ron

Guenther did not return a call seeking comment.

Self is reported to be at the top of Kansas' list of candidates to succeed Williams, whose legacy includes 14-straight NCAA Tournament appearances and four Final Fours. Williams resigned at Kansas on Monday for the head coaching job at his alma mater, North Carolina.

Self was a graduate assistant coach at Kansas in the 1985-86 season. He is a native of Edmond, Okla., and has roots in the Big 12 going back to his playing days at Oklahoma State.

Brown said granting permission to speak with Self was never an issue. "That's a courtesy," he said.

Self said Tuesday that he wasn't sure how he would respond to Kansas.

"If they do call, I may say, 'Let's visit,' or after talking a few minutes I may say, 'I don't feel it.' I certainly wouldn't mislead anyone," he said.

A few minutes later, at the team's postseason banquet, he told 700 Illini supporters that he is happy at Illinois, but he didn't rule out a move.

"This is a great, great program," he said. "I don't know what the future holds, but I am excited to be your coach."

Self signed a five-year contract extension in December that will pay him $900,000 a year if he stays at Illinois. It also provides a $500,000 annuity if he stays until the deal expires after the 2007-08 season, bringing the total to $5 million.

The contract also contains a buyout clause, calling for payment of $100,000 for each year remaining on the contract. If Self leaves before next season, the buyout would be $500,000, Brown said.

Sosa hits 502nd home run in latest Cubs win

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Sammy Sosa hit his 502nd career home run, a three-run shot in the first inning, as the Chicago Cubs overcame numerous mistakes and beat the Cincinnati Reds, 10-4.

Sosa's homer to center was one of four home runs hit by Chicago. Damian Miller, Hee Seop Choi, and Moises Alou had the others.

Carlos Zambrano (2-1) pitched six erratic innings to get the win. He hit two batters, walked three others, and committed an error.

The two teams combined for 18 walks, three errors, four wild pitches, and went through 11 pitchers. Two of the three Cincinnati runs came on passed balls by Miller and another on a ninth-inning wild pitch by Mike Remlinger.

Paul Wilson (0-1) gave up six runs, five earned, in 3½ innings to take the loss. Wilson walked three and also hit a batter. Three of the six hits he gave up were home runs even though the wind was blowing in at Wrigley Field.

St. Louis 15, Milwaukee 2

MILWAUKEE — Scott Rolen hit a pair of two-run home runs, and Matt Morris pitched six solid innings and hit his first major-league home run as the Cardinals beat the Brewers.

The Brewers managed only one unearned run off Morris (1-1). Morris scattered five hits while walking four and striking out seven.

Wayne Franklin (1-2) gave up nine earned runs on eight hits and three walks in 3½ innings.

Albert Pujols had two singles, a double, two RBIs, and scored twice. Mike Matheny drove in three runs with a single and a double.

Morris also singled, walked, and scored a run.

Rolen's first-inning homer scored Miguel Cairo and gave St. Louis a 2-0 lead. Morris hit his homer in the second for a 3-0 lead.

outing from Jeff Suppan, beat the Mets.

The Mets finally got their first extra-base hit and first RBI from Mike Piazza—a solo homer in his 36th at-bat of the season—but still lost their seventh in eight games.

The Pirates made it 2-0 in the third on Kenny Lofton's leadoff walk, a stolen base, and Jason Kendall's run-scoring single. Lofton came in standing up on a close play and scored as catcher Piazza couldn't come up with center fielder Roger Cedeno's throw.

The Mets got a run back on Piazza's first homer since Sept. 29, a drive into the left-field seats on a 3-2 pitch from Suppan.

Braves 3, Expos 2

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — Rookie Horacio Ramirez shut out Montreal until the eighth inning, and Gary Sheffield hit another "jonron," leading the revived Atlanta Braves over the Expos on Wednesday night.

Ramirez (2-2) blanked the Expos until Ron Calloway's two-run homer in the eighth.

Andrew Jones doubled, singled twice, and drove in two runs. Tomo Ohka (1-2) took the loss.

Ramirez gave up four singles before Fernando Tatis singled for his third hit to open the eighth. Calloway followed with his first major league homer, and Roberto Hernandez relieved.

John Smoltz pitched the save.

Sheffield led the fourth with a homer. The previous night, Sheffield hit a tying home run—they are called either a "jonron" or "cuadrangular" in Spanish—in the ninth.

Boston 6, Tampa Bay 4

BOSTON — David Ortiz hit a tying two-run single, and Jeremy Giambi's RBI double put Boston ahead as the Red Sox rallied for four runs in the eighth inning to beat the Devil Rays. Rey Ordóñez hit a two-run homer, and Rocco Baldelli's seventh-inning RBI single extended his hitting streak to a club rookie-record 13 games for the Devil Rays.

With the Red Sox trailing, 4-2, in the eighth, Todd Walker drew a lead-off walk from Travis Harper. One out later, Ramirez singled off Lance Carter (3-1) and moved to second when left fielder Carl Crawford made an ill-advised throw to third.

Baltimore 4, Cleveland 3

CLEVELAND — Melvin Mora led off the ninth inning with his first home run of the season to give the Orioles a comeback win over the Indians.

Mora hit a 2-1 pitch from Danys Baez 400 feet into the seats. Baez (0-1) had blown a 3-2 lead in the eighth by walking in the tying run.

Buddy Groom (1-0) pitched 1 2-3 perfect innings, striking out two. Jorge Julio struck out pinch-hitter Bill Selby for the save.

Should the Devil Rays give Rocker another chance?

John Rocker's assault against my sensibilities and ethics isn't a reason for him to not play baseball.

First and foremost, Rocker is a grown man who throws little stitched balls for a living. Unfortunately, society has put emphasis on physical prowess and relates it to status. If MJ or Tiger speaks about the flow of a competition, perk your audio receivers:

They are the paragons of their field and possess insights that others may not. Taking note of anything they say that doesn't pertain to the sporting realm is stupid. Athletic superiority does not correlate to ethical or mental E.F. Huttonism — "when Hutton spoke, people listened."

Next, Rocker has the same constitutional right of open speech as the Ku Klux Klan. The American amendment defends the man whom time forgives and his particularly slanderous nature. He can say what he wants and can't become punished for it; free speech is our law, and we should abide by it.

Three points, I'm right — the souped-up heat has cooled since 2000. Before being traded from the Braves in 2001 Rocker set up ERAs of 2.13, 2.49, 2.86, and 3.00. The last stat covers 30 games with that callously named baseball team. Fortune spun her web and dropped Rocker on an equally ludicrously named organization, the Indians. Rocker's profile was raised as well as his ERA, which grew to 5.45 during a stretch of 38 games. His numbers under stress got worse when he arrived at the Rangers for only 30 more career games. On the upside of Rockhead's final tour, he struck out 30 hitters over 24.1 innings, posting a higher win percentage than his ghetto-fabulous years with the Braves, save in 1999 where the difference is a mere 44 percent.

Extra innings and out of the park, Meathead might play for the Devil Rays, whose pitching staff has a combined ERA of 6.34. With a little coaxing, Rocker could offer up even subpar performances and be a welcome relief for the Rays. Also, with attendance down for the floundering fish, bad publicity is good publicity.

— by Jerod Leupold

It seems fit that the only team in the major leagues that would sign Rocker to a deal are the Devil Rays, even if it is a minor-league deal.

Rocker blew his last chance during the 2002 season — and not because of behavior. He opened the season closing for the Rangers, but he was sent to the minors after blowing two of three save chances.

He later went on a three-week stint in the minors, with results not much better. He didn't even pitch after July 3 because of shoulder soreness.

Rocker's velocity has never returned to past levels. Opponents hit .299 against Rocker, nothing close to a decent major league closer's number. When he had 62 saves with Atlanta in 1999-2000, opponents hit .193 against him. In the last two seasons, Rocker has committed five errors in just 19 chances.

In fact, Rocker only has 68 save chances, saving only eight games since 1999.

Rocker's ERA is also not a major-league matter. His ERA hasn't been below 3.89 since 2000 and has reached as high as 4.32 in 2001 and 6.66 last season.

Rocker is the Gus Ferrote of baseball. He has been tossed around more than a small rubber football on Panama City Beach. Four moves in three years.

Cleveland gave him a chance after he was booted from Atlanta. But low and behold, the Braves got him back that very same year.

Atlanta remembered why they ditched Rocker to begin with, and dropped him again. Texas traded for him twice in 2002 and finally learned its lesson, releasing him late last year.

And now the Devil Rays will learn to waste their time endorsing Disney movies instead of signing a washed up, subway-hating John Rocker.

Jordan waves goodbye for a third time

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — The Philadelphia 76ers gave Michael Jordan a touching send-off. The Washington Wizards returned the favor.

Jordan's fabulous career came to an end amid cheers and tears as his Wizards were trounced, 107-87, by the 76ers, who clinched home-court advantage in the first round of the playoffs.

Perhaps the greatest player in NBA history, Jordan scored 15 points in the finale to his 15-year career, which included 10 scoring titles, six championships, five MVP awards, two comebacks, and a seemingly endless reel of highlights.

During the pregame introductions, the Sixers turned the microphone over to Ray Clay, the former public address announcer of the Chicago Bulls who launched into his patented growl, "From North ... Carolina ... 6-6 ... number 23 ... Michael ... Jordan!!!"

As Jordan shook hands with Clay, a two-minute standing ovation ensued. Jordan rocked back and forth, trying not to cry while staring at the sneakers that he turned into a status symbol.

With 4:13 left in the period and the Wizards trailing, 75-56, Jordan went to the bench for rookie Juan Dixon.

Then with 2:35 left, Jordan re-entered to a roar. Fifty seconds later, Snow gave a foul to put him on the line, and Jordan sank two free throws to countless glimmers of flash bulbs.

The Wizards quickly gave a foul, and Jordan exited to an ovation that lasted three minutes and culminated with Washington coach Doug Collins pushing him onto the floor to give a final wave to an adoring crowd.

Boston 99, Detroit 92

BOSTON — Tony Delk scored 17 points before sitting out the fourth quarter with the rest of the starters Wednesday night as the Boston Celtics tuned up for the playoffs with a victory over the Detroit Pistons, the top team in the Eastern Conference.

Detroit, the No. 1 seed in the East, will open against Orlando or Milwaukee. The Celtics had previously clinched the sixth spot in the East, and they will play Indiana or Philadelphia in the first round.

Boston opened a 28-18 lead in the first quarter and gave it all back by halftime, when the teams were tied at 50. It was 73-73 after three quarters and 87-86 with 5:21 left in the game before the Celtics scored seven consecutive points to put the game away.

The Pistons took advantage of their early clinch to put Wallace, Clifford Robinson (left knee tendinitis), and Zeljko Rebraca (sore lower back) on the injured list. Wallace, the NBA leader in rebounds with 15.4 per game, missed the last six games of the regular season.

Cleveland 96, Toronto 86

CLEVELAND — The Cavaliers would have helped themselves with a loss. For Lenny Wilkens, the outcome probably didn't matter.

Rookie Tierre Brown had 16 points and nine assists as the Cavaliers beat the Raptors.

Rafer Alston scored 23 points, and Chris Jefferies had 13 for Toronto.

Smush Parker had 17 points for the Cavs, who led, 83-79, with four minutes left.

But Chris Mihm scored on a dunk, Brown hit a jumper, and Cleveland pushed its lead back to 91-81 with two minutes left.

Alston's 3-pointer closed Toronto within seven before Brown converted a 3-point play to put the Cavs up by 10 with 1:12 left.

Milwaukee 93, Orlando 87

MILWAUKEE — Tim Thomas

Rusty Kennedy/Associated Press

Wizards' Michael Jordan could not drive in a win against the 76ers in his last scheduled game.

scored 21 points, and Desmond Mason had 19 points as the Milwaukee Bucks won for the eighth time in nine games, defeating the Magic.

The Bucks secured the seventh seed in the Eastern Conference and will face New Jersey in the first round of the playoffs. Orlando got the eighth seed and will play the top-seeded Detroit Pistons.

Even though playoff seedings were at stake, neither team treated the game with any sense of urgency. In fact, both teams acted like it might have been better to lose this game and get the eighth playoff seed to face Detroit, where star Ben Wallace is coming off an ankle injury, than the Nets.

NHL ROUNDUP

Lightning tie up playoffs, 2-2

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Now that he's back on the top line, there's no stopping Martin St. Louis.

For the second consecutive game, St. Louis provided a spark for the Tampa Bay Lightning, scoring two goals in a 3-1 victory over the Washington Capitals that evened the first-round playoff series Wednesday night at 2-2.

Game 5 in the best-of-seven series is Friday in Tampa Bay, which might or might not be good for the Lightning. The home team has lost every game of the series — in fact, no home team has even had a lead.

Vincent Lacavaliere also scored the Lightning. Peter Bondra had Washington's only goal.

The Capitals now have to deal with an ugly past they thought was long buried. They were the NHL's collapse artists in the 1990s, blowing a two-game series lead three times from 1992-96, and they'll no doubt be reminded of that history many times for the rest of this series.

St. Louis was moved to Lacavaliere's line after the Lightning lost the first two games at home. The new line has since accounted for all seven of Tampa Bay's goals.

In the process, the line has done an amazing thing: It has managed to make Jeff Halpern's usually outstanding checking line — the bedrock of Washington's season — look very pedestrian.

The Capitals had two power plays midway through the third period, but had trouble organizing an attack — or even keeping the puck in the offensive zone.

Ottawa 3, New York 1

UNIONDALE, N.Y. — Mike Fisher scored just 28 seconds in, and Marian Hossa had a goal and an assist as the Ottawa Senators beat

Lawrence Jackson/Associated Press

The Lightning's Martin St. Louis strikes in another goal, leading his team to victory against the Capitals on Wednesday.

the New York Islanders on Wednesday night for a 3-1 lead in their first-round playoff series.

Anton Volchenkov also scored, and Patrick Lalime made 21 saves for the Senators. They'll try to wrap up the best-of-seven Eastern Conference series at home Thursday night.

The teams were coming off a double-overtime game Monday night that lasted 82 minutes, 25 seconds. But Ottawa came out energized in the first period, scoring two quick goals and outshooting New York 15-6.

Ottawa regained a two-goal lead at 8:01 of the second on the power play when Hossa took a shot in close that deflected in off Islanders defenseman Janne Niinimaa. It was the third playoff goal for Hossa, who set a team record with 45 during the regular season.

Colorado 3, Minnesota 1

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Colorado just won't let Minnesota and its fans have any fun.

Joe Sakic took the edge off another loud crowd with two goals in the game's first eight minutes, and Patrick Roy barely missed his second-straight shutout while leading the Avalanche to a victory over the Wild.

The Avalanche, who finished the regular season by winning 25 of their final 37, now lead this best-of-seven Western Conference quarterfinal series 3-1.

The Avs, who also got a goal from Dan Hinote, will try to end the series in Denver on Saturday. Marian Gaborik had the goal for Minnesota, making its postseason debut in this series.

For the first 30 minutes, Minnesota controlled the flow and spent most of its time in Colorado's zone, yet still found itself trailing by two goals.

The Avalanche were outshot 14-7 midway through the second period and 25-21 for the game. But they simply beat the Wild at their own game — with patient offense, solid transition defense, and excellent goaltending.

RAINY DAY AT THE BALLPARK

John Richard/The Daily Iowan

Umbrellas abound as the Iowa bats against UNI. The game was postponed because of rain.

UNI leading game after five innings

The Hawkeyes' in-state clash with Northern Iowa at Duane Banks Field was suspended at the top of the fifth inning because of rain with the Panthers in the lead at 4-1.

The game entered the fifth frame with UNI leading, 2-1, when the Panthers' offense got rolling, scoring a couple of quick runs. First, UNI shortstop Andrew Farmer ripped a low line drive to right-field, to advance teammate Nate Trumm to second with no outs. A couple batters later, Hawkeye third baseman Chris Steele had an errant throw to second base while attempting to turn a double play, allowing two Panthers to score, giving UNI a 4-1 lead. The brief scoring spree drew Iowa pitching coach Travis Wyckoff out of the dugout to summon Hawkeye Andrew Hansen from the bullpen in relief of starter Jeff Maitland.

After Hansen took a few warm-up pitches in a driving downpour, the umpiring crew met on the mound with both UNI coach Rick Heller and Iowa coach Scott Broghamer, eventually deciding to call the game.

The game will be continued from the exact point at which it stopped — with UNI leading, 4-1, in the top of the fifth — as part of a late-afternoon double-header at Waterloo's Riverfront Stadium on April 30, beginning at 5 p.m.

Sharp recruits strengthen Iowa, dazzle program with new talent touted recruits for the following season.

The recruits — this season's junior class — included Stephanie Gran, Brandy Killian, Alexis Maday, and Nicole Wong.

At the Junior Olympics that year, five of the 10 national titles were won by Iowa's incoming recruits.

"We got very, very lucky that we got the class we did," Lorenzen said. "Most people said it was the top three or top five out of all the recruiting classes in the country that year, and there's no way that should have happened."

But since the recruits were looking to go to a school where they could be a part of something that would make an impact, it did happen.

Killian, who knew Lorenzen at a young age from training camps, said she put her trust in Lorenzen's vision for what the team could be, and that's all she needed.

"He's one to really build up a program, so you really get the sense of a dynasty about to be built," Killian said. "I just believed in what Mike had to say and what he could do with the program. We started doing things that no one at the university thought were possible."

Lorenzen was a bit surprised that his vision was enough to bring in top recruits, but his word that he would take the team to higher levels held strong.

Killian

"I was very honest and told them, 'I don't have anything to offer you right now in terms of a world-class facility, except an outstanding education and a vision for what we can be, and you have a unique opportunity to be a part of putting a program on the map,'" Lorenzen said.

In his second season with the team, Lorenzen was awarded co-Big Ten conference coach of the year honors, as his team finished the season ranked No. 23 in the nation, and advanced to regional competition for the second time in school history.

The progress snowballed as the team grew stronger and new recruits came in, and Iowa women's gymnastics began earning national recognition.

The Hawkeyes, who had arguably the best season in school history and broke multiple school records, are currently ranked No. 10 in the country, and are among 12 Division I teams waiting to compete in the NCAA championships.

"I chose to come to Iowa because I wanted to be part of this," Gran said. "I wanted this feeling. I wanted to break records and be a part of something special."

Lorenzen is a firm believer that "if you do things right, good things happen," and said the accomplishments of his team are well-deserved.

He cited the Iowa football program as an example of how to get somewhere by doing things the right way.

"I look up to coach [Kirk] Ferentz a lot because I think he's done it the right way — with integrity — and just patiently and slowly built an amazing program all on the right principles," Lorenzen said. "And that's what we've tried to do."

Along with Lorenzen, assistant coaches Larissa Libby and Derek May — both of whom were honored as the North Central Region Assistant Coaches of the Year — can also be credited with much of the team's building process.

For Lorenzen, earning a bid to nationals was the biggest and best thing to ever happen to his career.

For the gymnasts, the hard work has paid off.

"There are kids that just get turned on at the thought of being a part of something developing and to being able to say, 'Remember when Iowa gymnastics wasn't anything? Well, I was part of the group that took it to the top.'"

home run by Katie Ruby in the first inning, a shot which easily cleared the score board in straight away center.

"That's been a big part of our offense," said Crowe. "[Katie] putting the bat on the ball."

Iowa State added a run in the third and that appeared as if it would be enough to beat the Hawkeyes on a day when the host team looked more than sluggish.

The game was another example of a midweek struggle very similar to Iowa's 9-7 loss to Northern Iowa on April 1. Blevins said the team is clearly taking a different approach to games played during the week.

"We certainly haven't yet

Arnold

demonstrated the type of maturity needed at this point," she said. "About the fifth inning is when we started to play."

Arnold agreed, noting the Hawkeyes "took too long in the game to get warmed up." But Arnold also added, "we were outplayed."

In the sixth Iowa put its first two runs on the board courtesy of an RBI ground out by Sarah Thomson and a base hit by Arnold.

Down to their last out in the bottom of the seventh the Hawkeyes forced extra innings when Stacy May plated Kristin Johnson with a single to right field. Johnson had doubled with one out and advanced to third on a sacrifice by Katie Boney.

Iowa left nine runners on base and committed three errors, both factors which held the team back. But it was at the plate where Blevins feels the Hawkeyes really let themselves down.

"We needed to make adjustments at the plate which we did not do today."

The game, which lasted three hours and 12 minutes, was Iowa's longest of the season in both time and innings played.

Iowa hosts Purdue for a single contest at Pearl Field on Friday.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE

Exum: Athletes failed drug tests

BY STEPHEN WILSON ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Documents purporting to show that a number of American athletes were allowed to compete in the Olympics after failing drug tests prove long-held suspicions of U.S. drug cover-ups, the head of the World Anti-Doping Agency said Wednesday.

Dr. Wade Exum, the former USOC director for drug control from 1991 to 2000, released more than 30,000 pages of documents to Sports Illustrated. He says they show that athletes such as Carl Lewis and Mary Joe Fernandez tested positive but were allowed by the U.S. Olympic Committee to compete anyway.

The Orange County Register reviewed more than 10,000 confidential USOC documents for a story about the committee's failure to deal with doping issues.

WADA head Dick Pound said the documents reinforce what some critics believed all along.

"It's what many people suspected about the U.S. Olympic Committee, that it was being covered up," he said in a telephone interview from Montreal.

"There were lots of rumors around."

The USOC called Exum's accusations baseless. In October 2000, the USOC handed over drug-testing responsibilities to a new organization, the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency.

"I find it ironic that Dr. Exum was actually running the program he claims was so flawed," USOC vice president Frank Marshall said. "When USADA was created three years ago, he was out of a job. It is now considered one of the best anti-doping programs in the world, so what's his point?"

Exum claimed more than 100 positive drug tests for U.S. athletes who won 19 Olympic medals from 1988-2000, but that many of them were allowed to compete.

Exum said Lewis was among them, testing positive three times for small amounts of banned stimulants found in cold medications at the 1988 Olympic trials. The USOC first disqualified him, then accepted his appeal on the basis of inadvertent use. Lewis went on to win gold at Seoul in the long jump — and in the 100 meters after Ben Johnson himself was disqualified for using steroids.

Pound dismissed the claims of "inadvertent" drug use.

"At the time this happened, Carl Lewis already had four gold medals from the Olympics," he said. "You know perfectly well you've got to be very careful what you take. The offense is the presence of the substance in your body."

Pound also criticized USA Track & Field for its record on performance-enhancing drugs. He said he would like to get all the details from the files.

"The more we know the better it is," Pound said. "The more the world knows and the U.S. public knows what the USOC was doing, the more likely they are to fix the problem."

Exum had planned to use the documents in his racial discrimination and wrongful termination suit against the USOC, but the case was dismissed in federal court last week because of lack of evidence.

"I never wanted to out athletes," Exum told Sports Illustrated in its April 21 issue. "I never wanted to name names. Can these names help settle the issue and change the system? We'll see."

Dolphins acquire Seau in Charger trade

BY STEVEN WINE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAVIE, Fla. — Junior Seau wanted to look sharp on his first day with the Miami Dolphins, wearing a blue pinstripe suit, a red tie, and black size-15 sandals. Sandals? "These toes are so beat up," he said with a smile. "Maybe that's why they kicked me out of San Diego — I never made the dress code."

In truth, the Chargers parted with Seau because he's 34 and on the downside of a sparkling career. The Dolphins eagerly provided a new home, acquiring the 12-time Pro Bowl linebacker Wednesday in exchange for a late-round 2004 draft pick.

Seau's relationship with the Chargers soured after 13 seasons with his hometown team, and they gave him permission last month to seek a trade. Describing himself as fired, unemployed, and humbled, he quickly settled on Miami as his first choice.

He likes the Dolphins because they play on grass in warm weather and have a talent-laden, albeit underachieving, roster with championship potential.

"Junior Seau needed the Miami Dolphins more than the Miami Dolphins needed Junior Seau," he said, clutching a Miami jersey with his familiar No. 55.

Maybe so, but the Dolphins were delighted with the acquisition. Seau gives them eight returning Pro Bowl players, a staggering total for a team that hasn't been to the Super Bowl since 1984.

Coach Dave Wannstedt resisted the temptation to describe Seau as the player who can get Miami over the hump. But he lauded Seau's talent, passion, and professionalism.

"Opportunity knocked," Wannstedt said. "It's a great day for the Dolphins."

Middle linebacker Zach Thomas agreed.

"I never thought I would be playing side-by-side with a Hall of Famer," Thomas said. "It's like playing offense with Dan Marino."

Joining a cast that includes Thomas, Jason Taylor, and Sam Madison, Seau said he'll happily fill a complementary role rather than serve as the centerpiece.

"I look forward to working with these studs," he said. "I just have to come in and be the fluff. I'm the glitter. I'm the fanfare."

The Chargers will receive a fifth- or sixth-round draft choice next year, depending on how much Seau plays this season.

Seau wants to complete his contract, which runs through 2005, but his productivity has dropped each of the past two seasons. He missed a career-high three games in 2002 because of an ankle injury that bothered him much of the year and required postseason surgery, and his 84 tackles were a career low.

But he passed a physical Wednesday, the final step to complete the trade. While Seau joked that it took two hours to X-ray his numerous old injuries, he said he expects to be healthier with the Dolphins than in 2002.

Dolphins coach Dave Wannstedt and Junior Seau, the team's new linebacker, speak at a news conference Wednesday. Seau joined the Dolphins, completing a long-anticipated trade with the San Diego Chargers.

BASEBALL COMMENTARY

Crazed fans present threat to baseball

BY JIM LITKE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Apparently nuts celebrate anniversaries, too. The rest of us should have learned that by now. So maybe it wasn't a surprise one of them attacked an umpire Tuesday night on the South Side of Chicago, the first time Kansas City and coach Tom Gamboa came to play the White Sox this season. What was surprising is he was the fourth fan to make it on the field Tuesday night.

Visiting ballplayers used to rank the tough crowds in Chicago, New York, and Philadelphia, but they don't bother with lists anymore. These days, every town is tough. And if you don't mind chicken wire ringing the field, like some ballparks in Japan, or moats between the seats and the playing surface, like some soccer stadiums in South America, cluck your tongue and do nothing.

After the Royals won, 8-5, Kansas City right fielder Brandon Berger marveled at how much punishment some fools would absorb in exchange for 15 seconds on the nightly highlight reels — at least until the liquor wears off.

"I guess some people are willing to take a beating, take a fine, go to jail, whatever," he said.

"Maybe if they get a pretty good beating," Berger added helpfully, "they won't come out again."

Frontier justice sounds appealing to some guys on the frontier.

"A guy ran onto the field the other night," closer Billy Koch recalled, "and I was glad I had a ball with me. I was ready to do what I had to."

This time, a few of the Royals didn't wait. Unlike seven months ago, when Gamboa was mauled by a bizarre father-and-son tag team, they rushed to umpire Laz Diaz's aid and got their licks in early.

I guess some people are willing to take a beating, take a fine, go to jail, whatever.

Brandon Berger,
Kansas City right fielder

Berger appeared to get in at least one good shot, and a teammate can be seen in replays trying to spike the overeager customer, even though he's already pinned to the ground.

That looks suspiciously like the prevailing theory on crowd control: Let the ballplayers knock some sense into anybody dumb, or drunk, enough to make it across the foul line. This line of reasoning argues that once demand dries up, so will the supply.

"Make sure he leaves the field like this kid did," said New York Mets manager-turned-TV-analyst Bobby Valentine, "with his face all bloodied."

But the real threat is not one fan, but many.

A few miscreants stoked by alcohol, rage, or a pathetic need to be part of the show can lead entire crowds down the wrong road. NFL officials bobbled an instant-replay call at the end of an NFL game some 16 months ago in Cleveland and set off a beer-bottle-and-battery-throwing riot.

Predictably, a monkey-see, monkey-do episode in New Orleans followed soon after.

Besides, even if all the ballplayers, real cops, and rent-a-cops join forces, there still won't be enough to beat up every adventurous drunk in the yard. For all the technology and extra security, crowd control is still as much art as science. Owners won't seriously cut liquor sales, leaving it to their security details to cut out the troublemakers and make the rest of the herd easier to steer.

But they still need help, which is where the rest of us come in.

Behavior is a numbers game. Batters could stop threatening every pitcher who throws inside, the way Chicago's Frank Thomas did in the first inning, and teammates on both sides could stay in their seats a little longer, the way they didn't Tuesday night. TV could dispense with the endless replays.

Still, what happened Tuesday night was what always happens when a few act up and too many other people, either amused or resigned, stand around and do nothing.

Seven months ago, the last time the Royals were in Chicago, Gamboa was coaching at first base when a father and son raced onto the field and attacked him from behind. William Ligue Jr., 35, and the teen kicked and flailed at the defenseless Gamboa until some Kansas City players and coaches rushed out of the dugout and came to his defense.

The boy was sentenced to five years of probation and also ordered to undergo mandatory counseling and perform 30 hours of community service. Ligue initially pleaded not guilty to charges of aggravated battery and mob action. His case is still pending.

Gamboa, meanwhile, is still adjusting to minor hearing loss in his right ear as a result of the attack. He was in the bullpen for this one, never imagining he'd hear an echo.

But the dangerous few are more inventive, more abusive, and more menacing. Unless the rest of us are serious about stopping them, soon they'll be the only ones in attendance.

NFL

Traffic officer sues Vikings' Moss

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — A traffic-control officer who was allegedly struck by a car driven by Minnesota Vikings receiver Randy Moss filed a lawsuit against the player Wednesday.

The lawsuit in Hennepin County District Court seeks more than $50,000 for emotional distress, assault, and negligence.

"This lawsuit is about a lot more than negligence or civil claims," said Robert Boedigheimer, one of the attorneys representing Amy Zaccardi. "Mr. Moss has continued to display a pattern of unwillingness to accept responsibility for his actions, an attitude that, somehow, he is better than the rest of us, and that's not the case."

Boedigheimer said Zaccardi deserves an apology "and she will get it — one way or another."

Zaccardi suffers from injuries she received that night, and though she is able to work, she no longer is able to do the same job, the attorney said.

Boedigheimer spoke of the lawsuit at a news conference in Bloomington.

Zaccardi, 27, was directing traffic in downtown Minneapolis on Sept. 24. Police said Moss used his Lexus to push Zaccardi a half-block, finally knocking her down, during the afternoon rush hour.

Moss was booked on suspicion of careless driving and failure to obey a traffic-control officer, both misdemeanors. He later pleaded guilty to the charges. He was fined $1,200 and ordered to perform 40 hours of community service.

As part of his plea agreement, Moss wrote a letter apologizing to his fellow players, motorists, and fans — nearly everyone except the officer.

Moss' lawyer, Emilio Giuliani, declined to comment except to say, "Her claims will be and should be handled through the court system."

Debunking Common Myths of College

• Nowhere in the bylaws of any sorority is it written that you must dye your hair blonde.

• It also isn't a requirement for members of the Greek system to speak with a Chicago accent even if they aren't from there.

• Lectures are, in all actuality, worthless.

• Red Bull does not give you superhuman strength.

• Neither does beer.

• The woman/man you danced with at the bar last night was not nearly so good-looking as you think.

• Doing keg-stands doesn't qualify as a workout.

• Watching "Head of the Class" reruns doesn't count as studying.

• The biggest myth: College should be finished in four years.

Sex & Iowa City

Hancher unveils another pearl

BY ARYN HENNING
THE DAILY IOWAN

Hancher announced its 2003/04 season with confidence this week.

And for good reason. With a schedule that boasts a season kick-off from Emmy Lou Harris, the Grammy-winning American roots legend, to Aquila Theatre Company's performance of Othello and the acrobatic talents of Cirque Éloize, Hancher will offer the opportunity to experience a wide variety of cultural and artistic outlets.

Hancher Artistic Director Judith Hurtig doesn't take the season's planning lightly. Beginning way back in November 2001, she researched, attended performances, and kept an ear open for suggestions, preparing for a lineup that would appeal to Iowa City and the surrounding area's varied demographics. This planning left Hurtig with more events than time — and tough decisions to make.

"I wish I could make the season twice as long," she said. "It's really hard. One of the biggest problems is having to say no to groups that want to come to Hancher."

But events are ultimately selected, including early bookings of the Broadway shows, The Full Monty and Mamma Mia. Scheduled for eight Hancher performances, both were chosen with careful consideration of UI students.

"We are very, very aware of the students, particularly for the Broadway shows," Hurtig said. "If the students aren't interested, we don't do well."

Hancher Executive Director Charles Swanson has seen Mamma Mia, a colorful love story featuring 20 songs by ABBA, in Des Moines, New York City, and London, and he is excited about taking in the show on Hancher's beloved stage.

"It's a real thrill for the staff and community to have Mamma Mia come to Hancher," he said. "Everyone will love it. It's the biggest crowd-pleaser."

Other crowd-pleasers include such eclectic events as Drummers of West Africa and UI alumnus David Lang's Bang on a Can All-Stars with special guest Terry Riley; a varied music selection with jazz artists Stefon Harris and Terence Blanchard, the young Brentano String Quartet, the Estonian Philharmonic Chamber Choir, and Christopher O'Riley and the UI Symphony Orchestra.

The season will also include Cuban jazz pianist Gonzalo Rubalcaba with Iowa-born bass player Charlie Haden, the SoVoS6 a cappella sextet founded by Bobby McFerrin, the unusual instrumentation of the chamber group Antares, and the New York Festival of Song musically exploring the Harlem Renaissance, in addition to returning groups the Academy of St. Martin in the Fields and the Kalichstein-Laredo-Robinson Trio.

This is not your mother's Tupperware party. A different kind of plastic is being bought at a new type of party — the sex party. Natasha Lambropoulos follows the new trend in the Midwest.

There's no Tupperware at this party, but there are plenty of plastic toys. And while these Iowa City partygoers curiously pass around the objects, they bond over plastic.

The Surprise Party representative, Jamie Lankford, 26, of Marion, Iowa, greets each of the 23 young women with a playful smile while passing around an order form and short golf pencils with rubber penis-shaped pencil toppers that come in two shades — brown and pink. The women nervously giggle, while Lankford prepares for her presentation, the climax of the party.

"I recommend drawing little penises next to the items you like," she tells the group.

While partygoers skim over the 100 items, Lankford unloads products from her toolbox and large storage bins. First, massage oils and edible lotions; second, sensitizing (and desensitizing) creams; third, illustrated guidebooks; and finally, battery-operated toys.

"At first, it was shocking, and I didn't know what to expect. It was like sex in your face the whole time, but then it got more laid-back and relaxed," said Lauren Rozich, a UI junior who has attended two of the sex parties.

Lankford begins by explaining the purpose of each product and then follows up with other recommended uses.

The satin sheet spray with pheromones is a popular item, and Lankford encourages the women to use the so-called sexual-enhancing spray on their bodies as well as on their sheets. She contends that men cannot resist the floral scent and that every time she uses it, men come around, sniffing like dogs.

The giggles in the crowd grow louder.

Sampling and taste-testing are some of the pleasures of the party. As the products are passed around, the guests are encouraged to try the creams and lotions in order to get the full effect.

UI sophomore Kelly Gaffney attended a similar party two months ago and then decided to have one of her own.

"It's a comfortable and natural way to buy items you wouldn't normally buy," she said.

"I feel like I make a difference in the happiness of other relationships. I know that I've kept couples together that were getting bored with their sex lives."

Embracing voyeurism in the 21st century

DREW BIXBY

After further reflection

How voyeuristic can we get? With the advent of reality television came a newfound interest in everybody else's business. This came as no surprise, really — our society has always been obsessed with gossiping and spying on one another. Now, however, we can sit on our asses and spy on people in perfect color picture and sound. Creepy.

It's not all pathetic voyeurism, though — at least, that's what we tell ourselves. We like reality television because we can relate to the "real" people and "real" struggles that they go through. We sympathize with these semi-fictional characters; we loathe them, cheer them on, and know more details about their lives than we know about our own family and friends. In fact, deep down, we all wish we were the ones on their side of the camera.

The Internet also presents endless opportunities to live vicariously. Web cams give us the voyeuristic fix that we need, but online diaries, journals, and blogs (short for "Web logs") give us a deeper, first-person look into the lives of regular people.

People have been keeping journals and diaries since the beginning of time. In the past, however, these emotional and personal treasures were kept secret and hidden from the eyes of even close friends and lovers. That has all changed.

Now we have millions of teenagers and 20-somethings sharing the smallest details of their days, lives, and emotions with anyone that has access to the Internet. Services such as Blogger.com, Diaryland.com, and LiveJournal.com (along with a dozen others) give these kids and young people everything they need to broadcast their lives to the entire world. I'll admit, I've tried out a handful of these free services for my personal use. But each time, I find myself giving them up because not enough people are reading them. Sound strange? It is.

I keep a written journal, but nobody gets to see that. So I decided to perform a little experiment to see how many people I can get addicted to my life. If you consistently read this column, then you've already found me (and my life) interesting enough to either love or hate.

So here's what I've done: I registered for and am now in charge of two different online journals. (Tear this column out and put it near your computer so you can remember the URLs of these sites).

• <http://www.drewbixby.blogspot.com> — I will use this Web log to personally answer questions sent to me via e-mail (drewhobbes@aol.com). I'll be sweet and sensitive in one response and a total ass in the next — it all depends on my mood at the time. Ask me anything; I'll even include the authors' names if they prefer. Anonymous requests are acceptable, too; I really don't care. Hopefully, this will turn out to be entertaining and eventful for everyone.

Drew's online journals/diaries

Now you and your friends can share in every one of Drew's thoughts, passions, happenings, and bathroom breaks. Hooray!

• <http://drewbixby.diaryland.com> (no "www") — On this diary, I'll post exclusively about my everyday life. Each time I post, it will be catalogued by subject and date in the "older entries" section so that you can read only what interests you. You can e-mail me directly from the diary and leave me comments, which I'll post and catalogue along with my entries.

So why am I doing this? Because just like you, I feel like my life is fascinating enough for everyone else to be interested in. Just like you, I think a reality show about my life would get incredible ratings. And just like you, I have nothing better to do than participate in the spiraling trend of voyeurism that is saturating our society.

So ask me questions, read my responses, and find out more than you ever wanted to know about the life of Drew Bixby.

Come on, you know you want to.

Bringing new life to Indian culture on campus

BY BETH HERZINGER
THE DAILY IOWAN

"Describing Indian dance is impossible," said UI junior Sumeet Aggarwal after minutes of silent struggle to find the right words. "It's really one of those things you have to see to understand."

The Indian Cultural Association, on which Aggarwal serves as social events chairman, will hold its first function, Nacte Rahon, on Saturday evening, with the primary event of the evening being a dance competition among teams from Midwestern schools. UI students will also perform an exhibition dance and skits about Indian ways of life.

"A lot of people don't really know or understand what Indian culture is about," said association President Neal Gidvani. "We wanted to find an event to involve the community and branch out more."

The champion of the dance competition will receive a $500 cash prize, and the runner-up will get $250. Groups from University of Illinois-Chicago, Iowa State University, and other schools will compete.

Gidvani said that the association modeled this event on similar dance competitions held in Washington, D.C., because "there's nothing like this in the Midwest."

The dance performances will be judged by a panel of qualified community members on artistic ability and team elements, in addition to such traditional aspects as music and costumes.

Nacte Rahon, which will be held in the IMU second-floor ballroom, will begin at 6 p.m. with skits and performances. A full Indian dinner from Taj Mahal restaurant of Cedar Rapids is included in the $10 ticket price. After the dance competition, Chai-Town, an a cappella group from the University of Illinois-Urbana/Champaign, will perform.

"Chai-Town is a Hindi and English a cappella group," said member Anish Parikh, a University of Illinois sophomore. "The audience can expect to hear popular American songs as well as popular Indian songs. We try to fuse the styles together."

Gidvani started the UI Indian Cultural Association last year in an

Tickets are available at the University Box Office; seating will begin at 5:15 p.m. For more information, visit www.uiowa.edu/~ica.

Half-funny, but completely angry

FILM REVIEW

by David Fulco

Anger Management
Where:
Coral Ridge 10 and Cinema 6 ★★ out of ★★★★★

What do you get when you mix high-powered comedic star Adam Sandler and Oscar-winner Jack Nicholson into a boiling pot of comedy and forced jokes? That's right — another disappointing Adam Sandler movie.

Dave Busnik (Sandler) is a low-key Regular Joe who has a hard time asserting his own authority. He doesn't like to kiss his girlfriend Linda (Marisa Tomei) in public, and he has been doing his boss's work for the last five years without a promotion.

During a business trip on a plane, Busnik is mistakenly accused of in-flight battery (yes, you've already seen this scene in commercials) when he asks for a headset to watch a movie. Because of the heightened security at the airports, Busnik is immediately arrested and brought to jail. At his court date, he is convicted.

Famed anger therapist Dr. Buddy Rydell (Nicholson) steps into the courtroom to save Busnik from jail. He then enrolls Busnik in his anger-management class, which is filled with anger loonies (such as criminally insane Jon Turturro) where he hopes that his unconventional methods will help to save Busnik from his rage with the help of an ancient Inuit-derived word.

Although Busnik thinks that he doesn't belong in the class, fate steps in and Busnik is arrested (this time for battery against a blind man), propelling Rydell to subject Busnik to intensive anger-management training that includes around-the-clock therapy in Busnik's New York City apartment.

As Rydell begins to infiltrate every aspect of Busnik's life, Busnik realizes that perhaps he does have a problem expressing his feelings, especially to Linda, and that maybe a life of assertiveness instead of passivity is the right one to lead.

But Anger Management may not be the right type of film for Sandler at this stage in his career.

The wonderfully quirky and original Punch-Drunk Love displayed Sandler for the first time as a viable actor, one with control and poise who seamlessly wove comedy and drama almost effortlessly. But this time out, Sandler has chosen to play the slightly intelligent but graphically violent character that made him famous in Billy Madison and Happy Gilmore. Anger Management shows no growth by Sandler in his craft and is a disappointment to those who thought that Punch-Drunk Love signaled a maturation in his acting.

Nicholson is funny, but problems result when he subjects himself to the same sort of stupidity that Sandler relishes. Nicholson, whose accolades demonstrate that he understands the difference between a good film and a lame duck, should have given much more thought before agreeing to the ridiculously awful third act of the film. He might have wanted to take over as executive producer in order to curb the lunacy and allow Anger Management to live up to its potential as a worthwhile and (dare I say) smart comedy that, with its star power, it definitely had the potential to be.

It is nearly certain that Anger Management is critic-proof; no matter what is written about it, it will still do remarkably well at the box office. What do stuffy critics know about comedy anyway?

What this critic knows is that Anger Management is neither Sandler's or Nicholson's best; it is instead merely half of a movie for which they expect you to pay full price. And that's enough to make anyone mad.

"I figured if anyone could talk to a roomful of girls about vibrators, I could," she said, admitting she had never seen a personal-pleasure device before attending that party. She said her open personality is what enables her to sell the products. After an intimate night with Lankford, most women leave satisfied with brown paper bags in tow. However, not all women agree with what she does.

Her most memorable encounter was hosting a party while an angry grandmother shouted disapproving names at her throughout the entire presentation.

"She was so pissed off. She kept calling me a harlot and a heathen," Lankford said of a party she attended in Cedar Rapids.

But that night did not stop Lankford. Two days later, she was back in front of a group of females with raging hormones explaining the dos and don'ts of the JoyStick.

After the two-hour demonstration, the squeals of excitement slowly diminish, and the not-so-shy partygoers line up to meet with Lankford one-on-one. All purchases are made in a bedroom behind a closed door. One customer at a time.

Hancher schedule set

Dance is also prevalent in the 2003-04 season. Hancher's three commissions this year, dance companies with which the venue has enjoyed lengthy relationships, are celebrating an anniversary — the 20th for the Bill T. Jones/Arnie Zane Dance Company, the Cloud Gate Dance Theatre of Taiwan's 30th, and the 50th for the Paul Taylor Dance Company.

"We think of it as a birthday present of sorts," Hurtig said. "And students tend to come to dance events in large, large numbers."

Those masses will also have a chance to see the contemporary movements of Urban Tap, the Moscow Festival Ballet performing Cinderella, and the Pilobolus Dance Theatre.

"University students should be very pleased," Swanson said. "And they should get the dates on their calendar."

Although the cost of discounted student tickets is rising from $10 to $12 next season, the price is still a bargain. In larger cities, shows of this caliber generally go for at least $20 more than a zone-1 Hancher ticket. The 20 percent student discount off the zone-1 tickets and the $10 seats cost Hancher $250,000 a year, Hurtig said. Most shows at Hancher are not-for-profit, and the auditorium relies heavily on contributions.

"We're one of the few halls in the country that offers discounts. We want to make it as accessible as we can," Swanson said. "We see it as an investment in our University of Iowa students. We want the students to come."

OPENING TODAY AT THE BIJOU

Real Women Have Curves

Bijou

Not yet reviewed

The exuberant heroine of Real Women Have Curves celebrates her Rubenesque figure and insists on living a meaningful life rather than remaining in the stifling sweatshop where she works. The movie follows Ana (America Ferrera), a recent high-school graduate who longs for excitement, love, and the ability to transcend society's stigma against full-figured women.

In the Jaws of Life

Bijou

Not yet reviewed

In the Jaws of Life is a charming film that manages to blend sex politics, romance, and post-Tito political malaise. The love life of soap-opera director Dunja is echoed in that of her character Stefica Speck, a young plumpish office worker who's trying to lose her virginity while receiving Cosmo-style sex advice from a more glamorous co-worker.

ARTS

Funding a filmmaker

In a last ditch effort to scrape up enough benjamins to produce his senior thesis, the full-length film Exquisite Corpse, Student Video Productions director, comedy-sketch artist, and student filmmaker Dave Fishel has resorted to not one but two benefit rock concerts.

The second will begin today at 9 p.m. at the infamous music conservatory known as Gabe's. Admission is $5.

Among the bands slated to perform, a Making Hey! side project called Demon & Me will open. Second up is Genital Hercules, the brainchild of Max Crowe, the mastermind of the impending studio project PBR Workshop and a discordant but deftly proficient guitarist in the vein of Frank Zappa.

Penultimately, Roger Mexico, a finalist in the 2002 D/KRUI Battle of the Bands, will rip through a solid set of garage-rock revivalica in one of its few performances since the Battle of the Bands and its first show since rumors of the group's breakup began circulating.

Jack O'Wilder and the Serrated Blades will headline the show, bringing weighty handfuls of dynamic post-rock epics. A reincarnation of the Ten Commandments (following its bass player's move to the City of Angels), the Serrated Blades interchangeably rages like juggernauts with furious drums and metallic guitar work and purrs like kittens with delicate keyboards and a harping strum. Comparisons with standard epic postrockers such as Godspeed You Black Emperor!, Explosions in the Sky, and Mogwai are common, but the Serrated Blades, like the Ten Commandments, stands confidently eye-to-eye with anyone bold and artsy enough to tackle opera-metal.
