Nelson may serve 2 years

BY KELLEY CASINO
THE DAILY IOWAN

Phyllis Nelson, the Iowa City woman convicted of killing her cheating husband in a fit of rage, was sentenced to a maximum of 10 years in prison Monday for the voluntary manslaughter.

But the sentence from Judge Thomas Horan means the 55-year-old mother of two could be released from prison in about two years with good behavior and credit for time already served.

Nelson was to be transported to the Iowa Medical and Classification Center at Oakdale for evaluation. She will stay there until authorities can transfer her to the woman's correctional facility in Mitchellville, Iowa, where, defense attorney William Kutmus said, she will serve her term.

Nelson, clad in green jail-issued garb, thanked the court before Horan read her sentence and said she was grieving the death of her husband of 33 years, Richard Nelson, the executive dean of the UI medical school at the time of his death.

"I would like to thank you for the professionalism with which I've been dealt," she said, adding her appreciation for her representation and Horan's listening to the case that sent shock waves through the community.

"There is nothing that could make me more sad or grieve more than the death of my husband," said Nelson, who argued in court that she was acting in self-defense when she stabbed her husband of 33 years. "My children are fatherless, and my grandchildren are grandfatherless."

Phyllis Nelson looks back as she walks out of the courtroom with daughter Emily Hansen in the Linn County Courthouse on Monday after being sentenced for fatally stabbing her husband in the heart.

Nelson's mistress breaks silence

BY KELLEY CASINO
THE DAILY IOWAN

CEDAR RAPIDS — Mary Jo Young, Richard Nelson's former secretary and mistress, broke her silence Monday with a statement that defended her former boss' character and said she wished for a tougher sentence against his killer.

An emotional Young read the prepared statement following the sentencing hearing that landed Phyllis Nelson, Richard Nelson's estranged wife, a minimum of five years in prison.

Young was hired as Richard Nelson's personal secretary late in 1996 and admitted to beginning an extramarital affair with him in September 1998. The relationship lasted until his death on Dec. 12, 2001 — when the two were engaged and had a wedding planned for the following April.

Young's statement, which she asked to be printed in its entirety, was as follows:

"I would like everyone to know his temper in the many years that I knew him.

Young

"He had a quick wit, a wonderful sense of humor and a love for life that was evident to the end. Phyllis Nelson's vicious temper during the many months prior to Dick's death, and the violent punishment she chose to inflict upon him that resulted in his death are deserving to no one.

"I respect the judge's decision. I wish the sentence would have been longer, but I am confident that Phyllis Nelson will pay for this crime for the rest of her life and beyond, regardless

Skorton says Herbarium will move

Students lobby UI president to avoid its transfer to ISU

BY ANNIE SHUPPY
THE DAILY IOWAN

UI President David Skorton Monday rejected pleas from students who urged him to stop the transfer of the UI Herbarium to Iowa State University, saying the school does not have the "space, personnel, or professional focus" to retain the collection.

Eleven UI students told Skorton about the importance of the 250,000-specimen collection housed in the Chemistry Building to their studies and research during a 45-minute meeting Monday, hoping to sway him from making the transfer sometime next year. Former UI President Mary Sue Coleman approved the move in July 2002.

Students who attended the meeting argued that the university could find space and funding to keep the facility here.

Skorton did not budge, however, saying locating the Herbarium closer to the center of the state will improve access for all Iowa researchers. ISU also will have the facilities to expand, he said.

"The way the world works in general, not everyone can have these things when everyone wants them," he said, noting that the issue has been addressed and looked over carefully three times. "This was not a decision to get rid of the collection and wave goodbye; this is a way to enhance the collection."

For UI senior Leslie Adams, a Latin and pre-pharmacy student, the outcome of the meeting has caused her to reconsider her graduate-school options. As master herbalist, she said she was hoping to use the Herbarium to write her thesis.

"I don't feel like my interests are being fostered here," Adams said.

Business college gets $25 million

BY JESSE HELLING
THE DAILY IOWAN

A $25 million donation to the UI's Tippie College of Business will endow a faculty chair, help fund computer services and programming, pay prominent businessmen to come lecture, and enhance and maintain the Pappajohn Business Building, university officials said Monday.

The gift from Jerre and Mary Joy Stead, of Scottsdale, Ariz., marks the second-largest gift to the business school and ties for the third-most generous to the university overall.

Over the next seven years, annual gifts totaling $1.4 million will support business-college initiatives. Following that period, $2.5 million will arrive in annual gifts over 10 years.

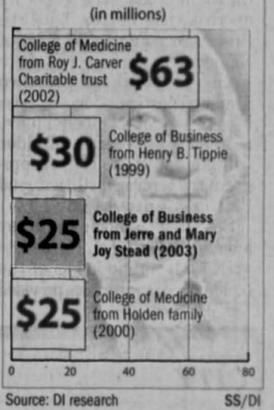

Jerre Stead, a 1965 UI business graduate and a Maquoketa native, is the chairman and CEO of Ingram Micro Inc., the world's largest distributor of technology products and services. He also serves on several corporate boards and frequently speaks on organizational vision and leadership.

Among the first projects to utilize the initial funds will be the business school's ninth endowed faculty chair, which will be named for the business-school dean, Gary Fethke.

Such chairs, which involve a stipend above the faculty member's salary and a reduced teaching load, are given to prominent faculty members within the business school, Fethke said.

The gift will also provide:

UI's largest donations

- Ongoing funding for the Stead Technology Center, which provides computer services and related programming within the college;

- The Kloppenburg-Stead Speaker Series, which will bring prominent speakers to the college's Executive M.B.A. program;

- Financial support for the College of Business Building Fund for continuing enhancement and maintenance of the John Pappajohn Business Building.

"My long association with the Tippie College of Business has convinced me that we have a world-class program here, with students, faculty, staff, and facilities equal to that of any

U.S. leader for Iraq gets taste of Baghdad

BY MONTE REEL
WASHINGTON POST

BAGHDAD — Jay Garner, the retired Army general who will direct the reconstruction of Iraq, on Monday flew for the first time to Baghdad, where he visited a damaged hospital and called on Iraqis to work closely with him and his team of Americans.

At the Yarmouk Hospital, he walked over broken glass left by bombing to hear pleas from staff members that electricity be restored and medicine more fairly distributed — and that foreigners not take over their jobs.

"Thirty years ago, you had the best health service in this part of the world," Garner told members of the hospital staff. With Saddam Hussein's rule over, he said, "we will work together ... and we will take you back to where you've been before, the best in the Middle East."

He visited five patients and told one woman through an interpreter that things are "getting better."

The failure of U.S. forces to quickly curb looting, restore public services, and bring in relief supplies has soured the mood among many Iraqis who welcomed Saddam's fall. Some Iraqis are openly calling for the Americans' departure and dismiss claims of pending democracy, saying the United States intends to impose a government of its choosing.

Monday, Garner got a glimpse of the challenges he faces in attempting to craft a political system to replace the one that for 35 years was dominated by Saddam's Baath Party.

21-only plays well in Ames

BY CASEY WAGNER
THE DAILY IOWAN

Following a 1989 experiment, the Ames City Council decided that a 21-only ordinance for bars was the best solution to prevent underage drinking.

Upon a request from Iowa State University students aiming to improve the city's underage social scene, the council approved a measure in 1989 suspending an 18-year-old city ordinance that prohibited 19- and 20-year-olds from entering the city's drinking establishments.

However, because of a drastic increase in underage-possession charges, an influx of fake IDs, and an overall inability to enforce drinking laws, the City Council let the measure expire less than a year later, officials said.

"Here was the opportunity for students to take the matter in their own hands," said Larry Curtis, who served as the city's mayor from 1990 to 1998. "They just didn't make it work."

The year before the experiment started, Ames police recorded 291 charges for possession of alcohol under legal age — PAULA — and had only 11 arrests or citations for fake IDs. In 1989, those numbers grew to 429 and 107 respectively.

City officials and bar employees say they now agree that the city's 21-only law, similar to an ordinance under consideration by the Iowa City City Council, is effective in curbing underage drinking and alcohol abuse, especially when it is coupled with education.

"We've always had a very different set-up; it has been traditionally very different from Iowa City," said Ames City Councilor Sharon Wirth.

Ames police Sgt. Mike Johns, who served on a special-operations team to enforce alcohol laws from 1988 to 1992, said the City Council's experiment 14 years ago merely built an avenue for minors to gain access to alcohol.

The measures taken by the council and bar owners to identify minors were easily avoidable by patrons, who would cut off wrist bands or get older customers to buy them drinks, he said.

"[Underage drinking] is going to happen when you're looking over 230 people," said Vince Munoz, a bartender at Peoples Bar and Grill in Ames.

Munoz, who has worked at the establishment for nine years, said that without the ordinance, the Ames bar scene would be similar to Iowa City's — rife with underage drinking.

Last year, Iowa City police reported 2,271 PAULA citations — more than five times the 436 tickets issued in Ames.

Munoz said he believes a 21-only measure diverts the drinking scene from the bars to private parties, but city noise and nuisance ordinances and state bootlegging laws have kept house-party problems in Ames to a minimum.

ISU junior and Student Government Vice President Ben Albright said large house parties are present in Ames but are rare, adding that city officials and police have not made house parties a target.

"You can't stop students from drinking," he said. "No matter what kind of laws there are, there is still going to be underage drinking."

Former ISU Student Government President T.J. Schneider said there is a strong underground drinking scene in Ames and added that he believes a similar environment may be established if Iowa City passes a 21-only ordinance.

Officials say they are cautious about giving advice to Iowa City on a 21-only measure — which will come before the City Council for a second vote tonight — because they are not familiar with the town. However, they said passing such a law was a good start at solving the Ames' underage drinking problems.

"There will always be violations of the law, and there will always be underage drinkers," said Ames police Cmdr. Jim Robinson. "This is a good stepping-stone, but it's not the total solution."

Prof warns against pro-gov't spin

BY PHIL DAVIDSON
THE DAILY IOWAN

Jamil Brownson, a UI visiting assistant professor of geography and former journalist, says he knows the pro-government spin adopted by political reporters.

The 61-year-old research fellow from the University of Montana on Monday night criticized President Bush's practice of fielding pre-staged questions from handpicked journalists during press conferences. Brownson spoke in a lecture titled "Twin Towers and Attack on Iraq."

Quoting the now-defunct political rap group Public Enemy, Brownson urged the 18-member audience, "Don't believe the hype, fight the power."

The Vietnam War veteran also pointed to the intense interrogation British Prime Minister Tony Blair is subjected to each week by Parliament as the ideal exchange of information.

"Tony Blair gets raked to the bloody coals," he said. "He gets grilled, and he has to respond."

More of a history lesson than a lecture, Brownson touched on everything from early Islamic philosophy to ubiquitous books on Iraq by authors desperate for financial gain, which he called "instant ramen information."

Turning to the 9/11 terrorist attacks, Brownson asked rhetorically if anyone had actually seen documented facts of the case. Suggesting that Americans are racist as a whole, he argued that Osama bin Laden's dark skin makes him a perfect scapegoat for the Bush administration. While not excusing the act itself, he said, there's never been a terrorist in human history who wasn't reacting to state terror.

"There's no reason to be a bully," he said, adding that the only power threatening the United States is itself.

Brownson spoke of the cross-cultural tendency of oppressed people to express anger against sophisticates, which accounted for the looting of the Iraqi National Museum. He said the rural population's ire against urban dwellers exists not only in the Middle East but in the United States, including his home state of Montana.

He also predicted that the world will probably run out of oil in the next 60 years. Brownson envisioned two scenarios: destitution or the world's population cooperating to build resources. He said religious denominations need to stop segregating themselves and strive step-by-step for unity.

Though she admitted some of his rhetoric was a bit controversial, Jeri Yoder, a UI nursing secretary, said it was refreshing to hear an outlook other than the redundant commentary of U.S. news.

"As someone who's seen other parts of the world, he's drawing from a wealth of information and experience," she said. "It's good to learn a different perspective."

IC residents without home after blaze

Three Iowa City residents are temporarily without a home after a fire Monday evening caused an estimated $75,000 damage to their house.

Area firefighters battled the blaze for nearly an hour after a neighbor noticed smoke coming from 510 E. Benton St. about 6:20 p.m.

No one was home at the time of the blaze.

Crews found fire on the first and second floors of the building and reported extensive fire and smoke damage throughout the building.

Firefighters from Hills, Coralville, Lone Tree, and West Branch assisted Iowa City crews in fighting the blaze. Crews remained on the scene until about 9:30 p.m.

The Iowa City Fire Department is investigating the cause of the blaze.

Study: Iowa easy on corporations in court

DES MOINES (AP) — A new study of the state's business climate ranks Iowa third-best in the nation for corporations that find themselves hauled into court.

Consumer and labor groups said the study, conducted by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, undermines efforts in the Legislature to ease regulations on businesses.

"Corporate defendants get more than a fair shake from Iowa's civil-justice system," said Lisa Davis Cook, of the Iowa Citizen Action Network.

Cook and other activists were touting the study of states' legal-liability systems.

"This evaluation shows that the top five states today as evaluated by corporate America as doing the best job of creating a fair and reasonable litigation environment are Delaware, Nebraska, Iowa, South Dakota, and Indiana," said the study, released this month by the Chamber.

Monika Seitz shows off her straight-edge tattoo at her home in Columbus, Ohio, on April 16. The 1980s-era movement of people who don't smoke, drink, or use drugs is making a comeback.

Going straight to the edge

BY MARTHA IRVINE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

The 1980s-era movement started by young fans of punk and hardcore music was unapologetically clear-headed: no alcohol, no smoking, no drugs. Now that lifestyle — known as “straight edge” — is making a comeback.

Inspired by a song of the same name, the movement developed a reputation for intolerance in the 1990s, when a few straight-edges turned militant, starting fights with anyone who challenged their views. Two were convicted in a 1998 killing in Salt Lake City.

These days, a small but growing core of young people who live the straight-edge life, also known by the abbreviation “sXe,” are trying to reclaim a more positive image by promoting a range of causes, from pacifism and environmentalism to racial diversity.

“There are so many facets of straight edge — so many different kinds of people who can adopt this lifestyle and define it for themselves,” said Monika Seitz, a 24-year-old straight-edger who recently moved from San Diego to Columbus, Ohio. But the common thread is a vow to avoid tobacco, alcohol, and drugs.

Seitz — who figures she’s had “one beer total and a couple of cigarettes” since high school — recently helped form a club for straight-edges across the country who are into vintage scooters.

Other young straight-edges have posted Web sites and online message boards to spread the word about the movement’s positive attributes. And at least one school, Wheaton College in Norton, Mass., has sanctioned a school-owned residence with a “straight edge” theme.

Geoff Bickford, a senior who lives in the house, said he and six others formed the so-called “X” house “to offer some sort of a sanctuary to ourselves and others who want to escape the typical weekend activities of a college town.”

Many straight-edges are also vegetarian or vegan, and some promote monogamy, also inspired by the lyrics to “Straight Edge,” the song by the now-defunct band Minor Threat that launched the movement.

Statehouse focuses on regulation

BY DAVID PITT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES — Negotiations between legislative leaders and Gov. Tom Vilsack intensified Monday over a bill easing state regulation of businesses, which has become the focal point of the session.

Republican leaders have said Vilsack must agree to the bill before they approve the governor’s priorities: his proposed economic-development fund and tax reform.

Democrats repeatedly have rejected the rule changes, which they say hurt working families. Vilsack said on April 15 that he would veto the bill unless it’s amended to eliminate many of the measures harmful to workers.

The bill would make it more difficult for workers who are laid off to get jobless benefits and tougher for injured workers to get compensation.

House Speaker Christopher Rants, R-Sioux City, said he believes agreement can be reached with Vilsack on many of the issues, including changes in the way lawsuits against companies are filed and limits on jury awards for pain and suffering.

“The question for a lot of folks is how much is enough,” he said. “I believe if we can find common ground on those items I outlined, it does make a significant improvement in Iowa’s business climate and we could then proceed forward.”

Senate Majority Leader Stewart Iverson, R-Dows, released a letter signed by nearly 60 businesses and groups calling themselves the Iowa Growth Coalition. The letter says changes in tax laws and business regulation and approval of the economic-development fund should all be accomplished together.

“All of these efforts should be done in conjunction with a thorough and sustained effort to review the structure and size of government,” the letter said.

Republican leaders say if they get the regulatory changes, the governor would get his economic-development fund and tax changes, all before the legislature adjourns in two weeks.

“Now the question is can we get to the point where we have enough agreement with the governor that we can move ahead with those three things,” said Senate President Mary Kramer. “That’s kind of the test for the week. We’ll have to wait and see.”

Man pleads not guilty in pregnant wife’s death

BY JIM WASSERMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MODESTO, Calif. — Scott Peterson pleaded not guilty Monday in the deaths of his pregnant wife and unborn son as the district attorney filed murder charges and said he would probably seek the death penalty.

“I am not guilty,” a clean-shaven Peterson said during a brief arraignment in Stanislaus County Superior Court.

Prosecutors filed the murder charges hours before Peterson, 30, appeared in the Modesto courtroom. In the filing, District Attorney James Brazelton said Peterson acted “intentionally, deliberately, and with premeditation” in killing 27-year-old Laci Peterson and Conner Peterson, the couple’s unborn child.

Their bodies washed ashore last week approximately three miles from where Scott Peterson said he was fishing in the San Francisco Bay when his wife — who was eight months pregnant — vanished just before Christmas.

“They could no longer wait to be found, so last week they came back to us,” Laci Peterson’s mother, Sharon Rocha, said in an emotional news conference after the arraignment. “They didn’t deserve to be dumped in the bay and sent to a watery grave.”

Rocha said her son-in-law called her the night before Christmas with the news that Laci was missing.

“I heard the devastating words that would forever change my life: ‘Laci’s missing,’” Rocha said. “My whole world collapsed around me.”

The charges against Scott Peterson include the special circumstance that he committed more than one murder, allowing the district attorney to seek the death penalty.

“It’s hard for me to realistically believe it is anything but a death penalty case at this time,” Brazelton told ABC News.

California law permits a murder charge for a fetus if a pregnant woman is slain, even if the fetus is not viable, said Hallye Jordan, a spokeswoman for the state attorney general. The law has been on the books for around 30 years.

Nelson could be free in about 2 years

Despite pleas from the defense and Nelson's daughters, Horan ordered a sentence that calls for a minimum of five years because Nelson used a black-handled paring knife — which he deemed a dangerous weapon — to stab her husband in the heart on Dec. 12, 2001.

Horan also ordered Nelson to pay $150,000 to her husband's estate, which in turn will go to daughters Emily Hansen and Elyse Nelson-Winger.

Kutmus unsuccessfully argued against the minimum penalty of five years, citing his client's "absolutely stellar" and "exemplary" record prior to her conviction as well as a background of helping others by reading to the blind and participating in a handicap-awareness program. A parole board should determine the length of her term based on her contributions and conduct in prison, he said.

"Phyllis does not pose a threat," Kutmus said as his client sat unmoving at his side. "It will not ever, ever, ever happen again."

Richard Nelson came to the university in 1987 as an associate professor of pediatrics. Known for his work with children with developmental disabilities, he worked his way up the ladder. He was overseeing the university's largest-ever building project at the time of his death, an undertaking that took an emotional toll on him, according to testimony.

The defense asserted that Richard Nelson had grown emotionally abusive and unstable during the last year of his life, instilling the fear of physical harm in his wife. The two had argued on the morning of the stabbing after Phyllis Nelson interrupted a rendezvous between her husband and his mistress, Mary Jo Young, to tell him their marriage was over, lawyers said.

The argument occurred in a Cedar Rapids apartment that Richard Nelson rented after moving out of the Iowa City home, where his wife continued to reside.

According to her testimony, she and her husband collided as she rounded a corner in the apartment, accidentally thrusting the knife she had picked up for protection into his chest. Horan rejected that, saying she the stabbing was "solely by reason of sudden, violent, and irresistible passion resulting from serious provocation."

Linn County Attorney Harold Denton remained mostly silent during the hearing, asking only that the court impose the minimum sentence — a punishment he said was warranted by the severity and result of Nelson's crime. Denton was originally seeking a first-degree murder conviction.

Hansen, who is eight-and-a-half months pregnant, took the stand during the 20-minute hearing to speak on her mother's behalf.

"Although we accept the verdict, we don't believe Mom should spend any time in jail," she said, speaking for herself and her older sister. "We hope she can be eligible for parole as soon as possible and that the minimum not be imposed. We would like to be with her as soon as possible."

"I don't want to say this is a victory for anybody," Denton, the prosecutor, said after the hearing. "Two children lost their father; their mother is going to prison. I don't see how anybody can see this as a victory."

Kutmus said he is considering an appeal, citing a pathologist's testimony as one possible ground. Dorry Lee Buck Jr., who conducted Richard Nelson's autopsy, testified that it would take a lot of force to penetrate the skin, a detail Kutmus tried to disprove later in the trial.

"He said later there were no studies done," Kutmus said. "It was really guesswork on his part, and the judge relied upon it."

of her prison term. For that, I am at peace."

Young, who has declined all interview requests, opted to read her statement to the media instead of in the courtroom even though she would have been qualified to make a "victim-impact statement."

Testimony throughout the trial suggested that Phyllis Nelson and Young may have been seeing different versions of the same man. Just as he was becoming more withdrawn and explosive to family members, he was falling in love with Young, according to testimony.

Young was reassigned to be an administrative assistant in the Holden Cancer Center in May 2001, the same month she was divorced from her husband. Robert Kelch, the former medical dean, authorized a cut in

Richard Nelson's incentive pay of between $20,000 to $30,000 and reprimanded him for the "indiscreet behavior."

After learning of Young's statement, defense attorney William Kutmus said he didn't believe Young has any credibility after having an affair while both she and her lover were married, and hiding in a laundry room in Richard Nelson's Cedar Rapids apartment building to avoid being seen by Phyllis Nelson on the night of his death.

"This appears to be the statement of a scorned and scarlet woman," he said. "I'm stunned Mary Jo needs more publicity."

Although Young qualifies under Iowa law as a victim in this case, Kutmus said he would have objected to the admission of Young's statement as a "victim-impact statement," saying that she has no standing.

"If Iowa stands for family values ... and if a scarlet woman has standing before a parole board, I would be shocked," he said.

"It's her statement, and she has a right to make it," said prosecutor Harold Denton, the Linn County attorney, after being read the statement by The Daily Iowan. "Everybody I've ever talked to about Richard Nelson has told me they have the deepest regard for him and that he was a terrific physician."

Nicole Bruskevitz, a UI freshman and English major, said that although she was minority among the science majors in the room, having access to the Herbarium has contributed to a well-rounded liberal-arts education.

"It was a new way to appreciate my world," she said. "My education would have been lacking something without the Herbarium."

Diana Horton, an associate biology professor and the curator of the facility, said it typically gets at least 60 visitors per month, including students from a number of departments, researchers, community members, and classes from small colleges in Eastern Iowa.

Jack Lilien, the chairman of the biology department, said combining the UI and ISU collections would give the state a better facility, adding that a larger Herbarium would have access to resources neither one currently has.

"We really need to plan for the future, and we want continued access over a long period of time," he said during the meeting, also noting that the UI barely has space right now to accommodate what it has and that ISU has a full-time herbarium curator.

Still, students say they will not put the issue to rest and will bring their concerns to the state Board of Regents if necessary, said UI sophomore Tom Madson, who planned the meeting.

"I don't feel as if our concerns were taken into consideration," he said. "The decision has been made behind closed doors."

The regents may not be sympathetic to the cause, however; the move marks the kind of collaboration among state universities that they have encouraged.

Court mulls Miranda limit

BY DAVID G. SAVAGE
LOS ANGELES TIMES

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court said Monday it would take up the Bush administration's plea to limit the well-known Miranda ruling and allow the use of evidence that is found after police fail to warn a suspect fully of his right to remain silent.

The new case, to be heard in the fall, could affect everyday encounters between police and crime suspects and witnesses.

Since the Supreme Court's 1966 decision in Miranda v. Arizona, police have been told that they must warn suspects and witnesses of their right to remain silent and their right to consult a lawyer.

But the court has not squarely decided what happens if a suspect's Miranda rights are violated.

In Colorado Springs, Colo., police went to question Samuel Patane about calling his former girlfriend in violation of a domestic restraining order. He cut them off when they began to give him the Miranda warnings, saying he knew what his rights were. They then asked him about a gun he owned, and he said it was on a shelf in his bedroom.

Last year, the U.S. 10th Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver said the gun could not be used as evidence against Patane because it was found after a Miranda violation.

But U.S. Solicitor General Theodore Olson urged the court to reverse that decision. The Miranda rule bars only the use of a suspect's "unwarned statements" in court, not physical evidence, he said.

A second pending case also seeks to clarify the scope of the Miranda rule. Police in Oxnard, Calif., were accused of forcefully questioning a dying man in the hope of obtaining a confession from him, but he survived and sued the police.

At issue in that case is whether the Constitution forbids coercive questioning of an unwilling suspect. The court heard arguments in December in this case, Chavez v. Martinez, and a ruling is expected soon.

The two cases should clarify the scope of the Miranda decision. Among legal scholars and police experts, there are two quite different views.

One holds broadly that the Miranda decision set a constitutional rule, akin to the Fourth Amendment's ban on unreasonable searches. If police break into a house without a search warrant in violation of the Fourth Amendment, the evidence that is found there cannot be used against the suspect.

Similarly, if police violate suspects' rights by questioning them without giving the Miranda warnings, no evidence that is later found, such as a gun, can be used by prosecutors, according to this broad view. The court in Denver adopted this view.

But the other, narrower approach holds that the Miranda warnings concern only statements to be used in a trial. Under this approach, any evidence found can be used against the suspect, even if police ignored his Miranda rights.

In two opinions in the 1970s, the Supreme Court suggested that evidence found in such situations could be used against the suspect.

But three years ago, the court upheld the Miranda warnings in an opinion by Chief Justice William Rehnquist. He said the Miranda decision set a constitutional rule that could not be changed by Congress or state officials.

Since then, judges have been split on whether they must throw out evidence if the police violated the suspect's Miranda rights.

The answer has great practical significance, legal experts say.

If police are told that evidence will be thrown out if they violate the Miranda rules, they will be forced to strictly respect a suspect's rights. But if there is no penalty for violations, police will be free to ignore the suspect's right to remain silent.

In that case, Miranda "would be a hollow right," said Deanne Maynard, a Washington lawyer who often represents the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers.

But prosecutors and police say it makes no sense to throw out solid evidence, particularly when suspects volunteer the information.

Senator's anti-gay remark draws fire

BY LARA JAKES JORDAN

WASHINGTON — Gay-rights groups, fuming over Sen. Rick Santorum's comparison of homosexuality to bigamy, polygamy, incest, and adultery, urged Republican leaders Monday to consider removing the Pennsylvania lawmaker from the GOP Senate leadership.

A coalition of groups in Washington and Pennsylvania compared Santorum's remarks with those made last December by former Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott about Strom Thurmond's 1948 segregationist campaign for the presidency. Shortly afterward, Lott was forced to resign as Republican Senate leader.

Santorum is the chairman of the GOP conference in the Senate, third in his party's leadership, behind Majority Leader Bill Frist of Tennessee and Assistant Majority Leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky.

"We're urging the Republican leadership to condemn the remarks. They were stunning in their insensitivity, and they're the same types of remarks that sparked outrage toward Sen. Lott," said David Smith, a spokesman for the Human Rights Campaign, the nation's largest gay-advocacy

Susan Walsh/Associated Press
Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa., in his office on Capitol Hill, on April 11. The senator has come under fire for a recent anti-gay remark.

organization. "We would ask that the leadership reconsider his standing within the conference leadership."

In an interview with the Associated Press, Santorum criticized homosexuality while discussing a pending Supreme Court case over a Texas sodomy law.

"If the Supreme Court says that you have the right to consensual [gay] sex within your home, then you have the right to bigamy, you have the right to polygamy, you have the right to incest, you have the right to adultery. You have the right to anything," Santorum, R-Pa., said in the interview, published Monday.

Santorum spokeswoman Erica Clayton Wright said the lawmaker's comments were "were specific to the Supreme Court case."

The White House did not immediately return a call seeking comment, and a spokesman for Senate Majority Leader Frist declined comment.

Thousands of Shiite pilgrims head toward Karbala from Baghdad and other cities to worship at the shrine of Hussein, grandson of the prophet Muhammad. Some pilgrims hike for days to reach the sacred city.

Pilgrims swarm to shrine

BY MEGAN K. STACK
LOS ANGELES TIMES

KARBALA, Iraq — The pilgrims have been walking for days, some of them, past the palm groves, and abandoned battlefields, and dusty farms. In a clamor of clapping hands and booming prayer, they have traced the old paths to this sacred city.

They have come by foot, limping and jogging along the roads from Baghdad, Mosul, and Najaf. A 13-year-old boy dutifully pushed his crippled brother in a wheelchair. And once in Karbala, some men have crawled on bloodied knees.

More than 1 million Shiites have been marching to Karbala, eager to reach the shrine in time for today's mass rites. They have marched, as tradition prescribes, because their annual season of mourning has come to an end. And this year, they have marched because they could.

This is the first time in decades that Iraq's Shiites have been free to commemorate the death of Hussein, grandson of the prophet Muhammad. Along the pilgrimage to his tomb, religious fervor has become entwined with political aspiration. The secular regime that repressed the Shiites has fallen; the procession is ripe with the spirit of possibility.

"Sincerely, I'm telling you, I feel free," said Anad Khishai, a 62-year-old graybeard who marched south approximately 50 miles from Baghdad on swollen feet. "For many years we were scared, and we had Saddam's people chasing us."

Saddam Hussein abhorred this ritual, regarding it as a potentially destabilizing show of muscle by the Shiites, a majority group of some 16 million people in a nation run by his Sunni-dominated Baath Party.

Year after year, as Saddam stifled the Shiites, they sought to perform the rites in secret. Pilgrims crept along back roads, slipped into secret ceremonies, hid from government spies. Meanwhile, soldiers flooded the roads to choke Karbala shut. Worshipers were arrested, tortured, and killed.

"We were so afraid, we buried the dead in our houses," said Abu Naseer Nihmeh, a 32-year-old pilgrim who wandered the route south from Baghdad on Monday. "If our people were wounded, we treated them in secret."

The days of furtive worship are decidedly over. Shiites have been marching in the streets of Baghdad for days in anticipation of their pilgrimage, and songs echoed over the pastures on the way to Karbala on Monday.

Worshipers slept under an open sky and built campfires from fallen palm trees. They were feted on their path with offers of mattresses and pillows from nearby homes; villagers stirred pots of tea and vats of rice and provided spigots to rinse weary feet.

When the time came for daily prayer, the pilgrims spread their rugs in the road and bent their heads to the earth. Before a cornfield, a holy man sang from the bed of a pickup truck. Soft rains cooled their backs, and the sky overhead stood pearly and cool.

Upon reaching the green waters of the Euphrates, worshipers sat on the banks and soaked their feet. Stray cluster bombs, blasted craters, and burned-out cars framed the road, but nobody seemed to mind. By late afternoon Monday, the road from Baghdad was clogged with an impenetrable screen of bodies.

"The people are coming in such numbers because they feel liberated," said Hamze Tarish, who crawled through Karbala to the shrine on swollen knees. "Look at me — I'm ready to sacrifice myself, even."

He would soon have the chance to pray — today's ritual will be a melange of prayer and punishment of the flesh. Some Shiites will whip themselves and pierce their skin in memory of Hussein, who was killed in the Seventh century. Every year, the anniversary of his death is marked with 40 days of mourning, a sorrowful season that will culminate this year in a final, communal frenzy at his tomb in Karbala.

South erupts after Korea-talks snub

BY JOOHEE CHO AND DOUG STRUCK
WASHINGTON POST

SEOUL, South Korea — The exclusion of South Korea from talks later this week on the North Korean nuclear problem has caused an uproar here, with much of the criticism directed at the newly inaugurated president, Roh Moo Hyun, who had promised that his government would not take a back seat on key issues of the Korean Peninsula.

News that the United States, North Korea, and China would meet alone in Beijing on Wednesday brought protests from editorial writers and a wide spectrum of politicians. Critics say the South is being relegated to its traditional role of subservience to the United States. Roh acknowledged that the South's absence, a condition imposed by North Korea, brought "disappointment and wounded pride" to his citizenry. But he argued that the outcome of the talks was more important than the form.

The Bush administration has decided to proceed with the talks despite confusion last week over an English-language version of a statement issued by North Korea that said that reprocessing of spent nuclear rods had begun.

U.S. officials have said that such a step, which would turn out materials suitable for nuclear bombs, would be a grave development. A Korean-language version of the statement, however, said reprocessing had not yet begun. U.S. officials, citing lack of independent confirmation that such work is under way, have in essence decided to accept the Korean-language statement as the correct one.

On Monday, the North reached out to the South, offering to reschedule Cabinet-level talks with the South that had been canceled last week. The discussions, now set for April 27-29, will deal with contact between the two Koreas. Officials in Seoul accepted the offer, but that did little to quiet critics for their failure to get a seat in Beijing.

The South hopes to use the talks to persuade the North to give up its suspected nuclear weapons programs in return for aid and better ties with other nations.

South Korea's opposition Grand National Party has called the exclusion from the Beijing talks a miserable defeat for South Korean foreign policy and demanded that Roh apologize for shaming the nation. "Roh's government is shivering like a mouse facing a cat in front of [North Korean leader] Kim Jong Il," a party spokesman said.

Bush's tax cut won't stimulate the economy any time soon

When President Bush delivered a Rose Garden speech last week calling for a tax cut of "at least $550 billion," it was cast as a significant retreat from his original proposal of $726 billion. That may be, but what was striking was that Bush wouldn't simply take the $350 billion in tax cuts he is guaranteed and declare victory. After all, as Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, pointed out in a speech on the Senate floor in which he pledged to hold the line at $350 billion, when reports about the administration's tax cut proposals first began to dribble out last fall, the figures began at $150 billion, then crept up to $300 billion. The notion that a $700 billion-plus tax cut was needed didn't come up until just before the plan was unveiled.

Bush talked a lot in the Rose Garden about the need for tax cuts "right away," to "do it now," for "immediate tax relief." But if the point is to stimulate the economy, his package isn't particularly well-crafted to do that. Just a sliver of the proposed $726 billion in tax cuts — 5.5 percent — would take effect this fiscal year, and only one-fifth would occur by the end of fiscal 2004. Moreover, because the cuts are skewed to the wealthy, much of that money would go to those more likely to save it than to spend it. Perhaps most important, the piece of the president's plan that would likely be left out by keeping the tax cut to a "mere" $350 billion would be ending the double taxation of dividends — a change that Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan supports but says would do little to jump-start the economy.

Big legislative fights have had all the earmarks of political campaigns, so the Rose Garden was just the beginning of the administration's "flood the zone" strategy, in which officials fan out to the states of key senators to flack the tax package. Significantly, they seem to hold out fewer hopes of luring back the four defecting Republicans than of picking off centrist Democrats. Those tempted by the dangling of goodies ought to remember how the White House repaid Democrats who voted for its tax cut last time: The president campaigned against them.

Meanwhile, the administration's allies are using even more heavy-handed tactics. The conservative Club for Growth is airing television ads in the home states of Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, and George Voinovich, R-Ohio, that sneeringly compare "so-called Republicans" who "stand in the way" of the tax cuts to "so-called allies like France."

Bush may be banking on postwar popularity to get his way. But the voters themselves don't seem to be clamoring for tax cuts or taking to the streets to end the double taxation of dividends; they seem to understand, far better than the White House, the long-term dangers of record deficits, which will approach $400 billion in the next fiscal year.

Place blame properly

I think a little perspective needs to be aired in the looting of the National Museum of Iraq. It is a terrible tragedy, and yes, it would have been good to have soldiers protecting the museum. But let's not forget that it was a band of Iraqi citizens that carried out the crime. The way the academic community is raging about this, you would have thought that the U.S. military walked in and stole the treasures itself. So let's put the blame where it really lies, shall we?

Folks, remember that our position, and the position of our military, is very tenuous in the Middle East. Baghdad is a hot spot, and the fighting is not over, even if the news doesn't give it all that much attention.

Let's consider another scenario. What if there had been a few dozen Marines out in front of the museum, and they were forced to kill a bunch of people in the mob? What would that look like to the Arab nations around Iraq? They are already angry at our presence and suspicious about our motives. We have already seen the double standard our soldiers are held to by Middle Eastern countries. Marines opened fire on an angry mob that was lobbing rocks and debris at them just the other day and are now being portrayed by the Arab media as butchers of "innocent protesters." Yeah, I'm sure they'd understand.

Though the loss of these treasures is terrible, I believe that the attack on the Bush administration and the military is unfair and belies a serious dissociation from reality. I have strong suspicion (just call it a

Fight the meter readers

Has anyone noticed the UI parking department's latest attempt to bilk students out of every last penny? Now, affixed to the top of the public parking meters reads a label warning us that parking at a broken meter will result in a $7 ticket. This is brilliant logic: On a campus already weeping with the need for more parking spots, our ever-enlightened parking department decides to further limit the spaces we can use (while raising more revenue for itself at the same time, of course).

UI parking is unquestionably the least student-friendly sector on campus. While many universities stop checking meters at 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, our parking department requires almost all campus meters to be fed until 11 p.m., seven days a week. If the meters do happen to expire at 4:30 p.m. (as is the case in the parking lot across from the Art Museum), the parking people will happily ticket you at 4:28. They've raised parking-ramp prices so that they're more expensive than the ones owned by Iowa City. They've raised meter prices from 60 to 75 cents an hour. They've even gone so far as to extend the working hours of major parking ramps to 3 a.m., spending the money it takes to have an employee sit there for two extra hours just to make sure that people working late shifts will have to pay every last dime. They absolutely go out of their way to milk students for all they're worth, and it's a shame that they're allowed to get away with it.

I recently woke up early on a Saturday morning to move my car from the Hillcrest parking lot before the parking department leeches could ticket me. Sure enough, I saw a parking official writing tickets at 7:40 a.m. (even on weekends, they actively patrol dorm parking lots early in the morning, knowing that most students will still be asleep and that the meters will not have been fed). Having a pocketful of change, I quickly ran up and down the line of cars, depositing money in each of the meters. It was a great feeling; I saved people from their daily bilking, denied the parking department more undeserved ticket revenue ... and the look on the parking official's face was priceless. I encourage other students to do likewise if they have the time or inclination; let's band together and force this greedy sector to stop taking advantage of us.

Peace on, brother, & other war stories

So the war is over; hallelujah and all that jazz. Of course, what that means for the United States, first and foremost, is that now the really tricky part begins: waging peace.

The tricky part will be especially difficult for this particular administration; George W. the candidate, you'll remember, often made dismissive and derisive noises about "nation-building" on the campaign trail. Now, the United States finds itself engaged in nation-building in two countries simultaneously. Hmmm.

Of course, to put those nation-building comments in perspective, Dubya the candidate also promised to cut carbon-dioxide emissions as part of an effort to relieve global-climate change. Dubya the emperor not only did not cut carbon-dioxide emissions, he pulled out of the Kyoto Accord, the world's feeble attempt to fight global-climate change.

So whatever the man says has to be taken with several metric tons of salt, which will no doubt push your blood pressure to dangerous levels. Black is white, war is peace, death is life, government handouts are bad, unless you happen to own a baseball club and the taxpayers are building you a new stadium so that you can turn around and sell the club to one of your campaign contributors, earning you $12 million on your $600,000 investment. Hmmm.

Meanwhile, back at the nation-building business that the United States was not going to get involved in anymore, just how tricky it is can be demonstrated by the incidents in Mosul last week. On two consecutive days, U.S. troops fired into crowds of protesters, killing at least dozens, some of them children. Somebody should point out to Bush Inc. that it gets damn hard to persuade people that you're peace-loving liberators when you're killing their kids. Just ask the Israelis.

The difficulties in waging peace can also be seen in a conversation Jonathan Steele of the Guardian had with a Tikrit café owner, Abdul al-Malaki. They were opposite the grandiose palace that Saddam Hussein built in his hometown, watching U.S. Marines move into the compound through the archway, which featured, as Steele put it, "megalomaniac twin statues of Saddam riding a horse above four missiles."

"The people of Tikrit are like the rest of Iraq," al-Malaki said. "They hated Saddam Hussein. I want to kill him."

But as the Marines continued to pile onto the palace grounds, the café owner sounded less and less like a grateful person being liberated.

"This is an occupation," he said. "Nothing else. We will keep quiet for a year, and if they have not gone, we will kill them."

Some bluster there, for sure. Perhaps even a lot of bluster. But the anger al-Malaki expressed is prevalent in the Arab areas of Iraq; only the Kurds seem happy with the presence of American troops. And the Kurds, of course, had more or less seceded from

Saddam's Iraq.

Last week in Nasiriyah, for instance, Shiite protesters welcomed the arrival of the U.S. administrator for Iraq, retired Gen. Jay Garner, by shouting, "No to Saddam, no to occupation." If you remember, before the war, our leaders assured us that the Shiites would welcome American forces with flowers and open arms. Hmmm. Black is white, war is peace, etc., etc.

And in Baghdad on April 18, tens of thousands of worshippers, both Sunni and Shiite, came out of the mosques after prayers and marched through the streets, protesting the presence of U.S. troops and demanding that they leave.

Nothing is quite so symbolic about the U.S. occupation of Iraq as the tsunami of looting that occurred last week. Yes, every war has looters, but it was the unpreparedness of the American forces that was so striking. As the plundering horde ransacked its way through the city, the only building that the U.S. troops deigned to guard was the Oil Ministry. (No, Virginia, this war was not fought about oil.)

And nothing demonstrated American arrogance quite so much as Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld comments on the stripping of the Iraqi National Museum: "It's the same picture of some person walking out of some building with a vase, and you see it 20 times, and you think, my goodness, were there that many vases? Is it possible that there were that many vases in the whole country?"

Yes, Rummy, there were that many vases. Now they're all gone. But at least the Oil Ministry is safe.

It appears the Americans have a few things to learn about installing "civilization" in the Cradle of Civilization. Welcome to the peace.

Finding the lyrical voice of Iraq

BY DIANA ROFFMAN
THE DAILY IOWAN

Perhaps Dr. Saadi Simawe's command over an audience and literature comes from spending six years in an Iraqi prison for publishing verse opposed to Saddam Hussein's Baath Party, but for this prolific, multi-genre writer and translator, faith in poetry not only exemplifies the strength of society but also gives him strength.

Simawe will read from Iraqi Poetry Today, a collection of poetry that he guest-edited for UI Professor Emeritus and famed translator Daniel Weissbort, today at Prairie Lights. He will be joined by the director of Iowa's International Writing Program, Christopher Merrill, local poet Chuck Miller, and Grinnell resident and translator Ralph Savarese.

Iraqi Poetry Today, the fruit of a two-year journey, can be looked at as a documentation of the determination and consciousness of a society dealing with war and all its repercussions, Simawe said.

In his introduction Simawe acknowledges that his hopes and prayers for peace were all but destroyed by 9/11. Yet, he still believes that a culture can thrive and create art, as was evident when he spoke to The Daily Iowan in a telephone interview.

"All war kills, destroys, and damages, but what remains essential is the poetry — the sacred texts, the holy books. They are poetry and they are what remain. They are what is important," he said.

For him, any sacred text, be it the Bible or the Koran, is poetry, and poetry is the "conscious of the people." Simawe and his fellow editors and translators tried to encompass a wide range of poets and not stick to a certain format.

Considered to be the first major collection of modern Iraqi poetry available in the West, Iraqi Poetry Today brings together free-verse poetry, spoken-word poetry, and the much-questioned prose poem, all in a haunting lyric. Simawe and Weissbort worked hard to give a fair opportunity to all the writers that they came in contact with.

Because of the complexity of translating any work, some poets feel that to translate poetry is to destroy it. The audiences, politics, and references are so different that when someone translates from Arabic to English, the text is changed many times, Simawe said.

Simawe, who worked with many of the poets found in Iraqi Poetry Today, is very aware of the boundaries felt by some who were translated.

"Some of them don't like being translated. They say you cannot translate the music, the phonetic quality of the work," he said.

Merrill, who got involved with the project after meeting Simawe, said it is possible to bring the original power of the work into a translated version.

For him, the work in this book, as well as the work he does on a regular basis with the writers in the IWP, are a constant reminder of what he doesn't know about other cultures.

"Translation can, in no way, be considered a failure," Merrill said. "In times like these, when everyone is paying so much attention to the media, it is important to remember that what the poet writes, endures. That is what the poems in Iraqi Poetry Today suggest."

The more he comes into contact with international writers, the more he is humbled by what other people and cultures can do, he said.

"With the war seemingly winding down, we must find out who the Iraqi people really are. If we are going to occupy their land, then we had better start figuring them out," Merrill said.

Iraqi Poetry Today will help the United States understand the people of the country they are occupying and eventually rebuilding, he said. Working with men such as Simawe are simply benefits to the job, Merrill added.

"Saadi is a remarkable man," he said. "He spent six years in Saddam's prisons; he knows what he is talking about."

OK, OK. So maybe the United States isn't ready quite yet to join the rest of the world in the maddening religion of soccer. But the British import Bend It Like Beckham from director Gurinder Chadha, which has been breaking box-office records throughout the United Kingdom, might just do the trick.

Although he is hardly an American household name, David Beckham (yes, the lucky bloke who married Posh Spice) is one of the world's soccer superstars. For Jessminder Bhamra (newcomer Parminder K. Nagra), Beckham is both role model and walking god. Jess has modeled her soccer game after Beckham's and even confesses her secrets to the poster she has of him hanging over her bed in Western London.

Jess, however, is a first-generation Indian, and her family believes that it is not proper for an 18-year-old girl to be worrying about anything other than getting into university and helping out with the wedding of her older sister, Pinky (Archie Panjabi). Soccer, in the mind of Mrs. Bhamra (Shaheen Khan), shouldn't even be a thought for Jessminder, especially because her dear daughter hasn't learned to cook a proper meal or found a respectable Indian boy to marry. Jess' place is in the home, not out "on the pitch."

But during a pickup soccer game in the park, Jess catches the eye of Juliette (Keira Knightley), a player on the recently formed all-women soccer team, the Hounslow Harriers. Jess impresses Juliette, and she is recruited to play on the team. Although she knows that she will be breaking familial traditions and rules, Jess joins the soccer team and continues to play behind her parents' backs for her Irishman coach and love-interest, Joe (Jonathan Rhys-Meyers). But as Jess' talent grows, will she be able to continue to live a lie to both her parents and herself?

If the plot of Beckham seems overly familiar, that's because for the most part it is. Like Breaking Away before it, Beckham relies on a tried-and-true formula of success against all odds in order to make an effective point about the plight and the determination of its protagonists. But although the plot is formulaic, it seems fresh and invigorating when channeled through Chadha's wonderfully energetic direction. The audience might already know how the film will end, but that does not prevent amusement and the merriment exuding from the faces of moviegoers as they leave the theater. Chadha has infused new life into a predictable plot, and the result is unabashedly refreshing.

Nagra's Jess is also a welcome surprise. While a relative newcomer to the screen, her performance is amazingly sharp, and she succeeds brilliantly in carrying the film. Her innocence and determination are perfect for Chadha, who seems to be attempting to build a truly enlightened 21st century woman with Nagra as a template. Her performance is one of the best by a young, first-time actress in quite some time, and she is a joy to watch on the screen.

Beckham might easily have been a run-of-the-mill, one-dimensional film, and perhaps if it had been made in the United States, it would have been. But what we are given here instead feels like a breath of fresh air. Beckham illustrates how perfectly a film can work if it is character-driven and smartly directed. This is the first great film of 2003, and, hopefully, it will send a message to Hollywood that the British are coming once again, with a brilliant film. Score one for England.

Big unit placed on disabled list

PHOENIX — The Arizona Diamondbacks placed Randy Johnson on the 15-day disabled list with a sprained right knee Monday, and they hope he'll be able to return to the rotation April 27.

Johnson has been experiencing inflammation and swelling in his right knee since his last start, on April 11. He was initially scheduled to return April 16.

Johnson was scratched from that start, however, and the team later determined after a weekend throwing session that he would not be able to start as scheduled today at Montreal. The move is retroactive to April 12.

"While yesterday's session showed us some encouraging signs, after consulting with our training staff, I felt it was in our and Randy's best interest to give the knee a few more days of rest," manager Bob Brenly said. "If he continues to show improvement as he did over the last few days, we'll set our sights on him making the start on Sunday in New York."

Dr. Tom to return to coaching — for Drake

BY CHUCK SCHOFFNER
 ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES — Four years after being let go as basketball coach at Iowa, Tom Davis was hired Monday to rebuild the downtrodden program at Drake.

The university called a news conference for today to introduce him.

Drake hasn't had a winning season since going 17-14 in 1986-87. The Bulldogs last played in the NCAA Tournament in 1971.

Davis, 64, compiled the most victories at Iowa, with a 269-140 record in 13 seasons. But he was told before the 1998-99 season that his contract would not be renewed at its end.

He has been out of coaching since.

"Drake is a terrific school, and if I didn't think I could win here, I wouldn't have taken the job," Davis said. "I've always enjoyed teaching and coaching and I had missed being out of the profession."

He was hired 10 days after Kurt Kanaskie resigned for personal reasons. Kanaskie had a 62-136 record in seven years with the Bulldogs, including 10-20 last season.

"He has a proven track record in rebuilding several college basketball programs," Athletics Director Dave Blank said of Davis.

Davis also has coached at Lafayette, Boston College, and Stanford in a 28-year career. He has an overall record of 543-290, including 16 seasons of 20 or more victories.

His teams made 11 NCAA Tournament appearances, including nine at Iowa.

Davis' best season was his first at Iowa, 1986-87. The Hawkeyes started 18-0, were ranked No. 1 nationally, reached the final eight in the NCAA Tournament, and finished 30-5.

Davis was named the Associated Press national coach of the year that season.

"Tom Davis brings a wealth of experience to Drake," Blank said. "He is a tremendous teacher and, coupled with his background at Iowa, we felt that Tom Davis is the right fit for Drake University."

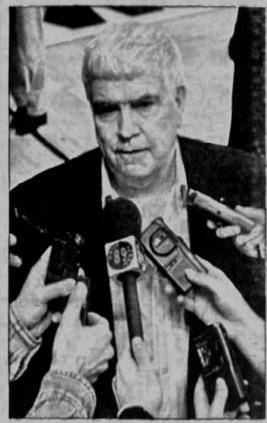

Davis was known for his modest, low-key personality and as a coach who always found something positive to say, no matter how poorly this team might have played.

On the court, his teams played at a frenetic pace, pressing full court and fast-breaking at every opportunity as Davis substituted frequently.

He said he plans to play the same way at Drake.

"Since I coached in high school, I have loved the fast break, getting up and down the court," he said. "We will try to have the same running, attacking style, both offensively and defensively, at Drake."

Davis began his career as a high-school coach in Wisconsin. He was an assistant at Maryland and American University before becoming the head coach at Lafayette, where he had a 116-44 record in six seasons.

Gone fishin'

Enthusiasts look to Eastern Iowa's 'reel' good places to fish

BY DUSTIN DEENY
 THE DAILY IOWAN

Chris Hennessey/The Daily Iowan
 Iowa City resident Greg Eichler, 32, fishes for walleye below the Burlington Street bridge, one of his favorite fishing holes.

As the days grow warmer and the sun stays longer, more and more people are urged to go outside and do something. Fishing is a cheap and relaxing way to get out of the house and spend some quality time with Mother Nature.

For those die-hard fishing fans, there really is no off-season. However, for those who don't like braving sub-zero temperatures to ice fish in January — or who just don't fish enough to know where to go — here is a guide to getting away from the television and closer to the water, a guide to where to fish, what to catch, and how to protect the environment.

Johnson County, specifically the Iowa City area, has great places to cast a line, thanks to the Iowa River. The river runs through an artificial lake north of Iowa City, and eventually runs through the city itself. This provides three good options to choose from. There is also another lake northwest of the city to explore.

Lower Coralville Reservoir

Located just four miles north of Iowa City is the Coralville Reservoir. The reservoir, part of the Iowa River, is a 5,340-acre man-made lake.

For those who own a boat, there are two marinas and several boat-access ramps. For everyone else, there are plenty of fishing areas on shore great for catching a variety of fish. Nate Sadewasser, an employee of Fin & Feather, 125 Highway 1 W., has been fishing for more than 10 years.

"There are a lot of accessible places to fish from," he said. "Shore accessibility is pretty darn good."

There are seven campgrounds around the lower end of the reservoir. Most of these are right on the water with several areas to fish. The most popular place to fish here is right below the dam, on West Overlook Road off Dubuque Street.

The dam is an excellent spot to catch walleye because of annual stocking. The area of Mehaffey Bridge and upstream of it are also great spots for walleye. But according to the Department of Natural Resources fishery biologist Paul Sleeper, that's not the only good spot.

"In the back of the bays, near the shores are excellent for crappies, usually after the second week in May," he said.

Other fish in this area are large-mouth bass, channel catfish, and the occasional carp.

Lake Macbride

Lake Macbride, part of the Coralville Reservoir, is located four miles west of Solon, which is approximately 12 miles north of Iowa City. There are several fishing jetties, a universally accessible fishing pier, and many boat ramps.

The lake is known for its crappie fishing. "It's going to be a big crappie year," Sleeper said.

It also has a good population of channel catfish, large-mouth bass, and walleye. It is the only lake in the state to have a fishable population of Kentucky spotted bass.

During the last two years, the DNR has spent $2.5 million renovating the lake. It improved 12 miles of shoreline, installed numerous fish habitats and fishing reefs, and developed a nursery area, among other things.

"The renovations have been tremendous. It's like a new lake again," Sleeper said.

Also be on the lookout for bluegills. The lake once flourished with them, and the population is again on the rise.

Iowa River

It is not necessary to leave town to fish. There are good places to fish along the Iowa River within the city limits.

IOWA FOOTBALL

Ferentz: Open practices could be the spring game of the future

BY BRIAN TRIPLETT
 THE DAILY IOWAN

Before the annual spring football game, Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz joked that he would most likely keep hard-hitting safety Bob Sanders on the sideline during the game not only for Sanders' sake but for the safety of his teammates as well.

While keeping certain players out may have prevented die-hard fans who stuck safety is the first responsibility and canceling future spring games is a possibility.

Taking further precautions, for the first time in recent history Ferentz cut this year's game down to two 12-minute quarters. He later added an additional five-minute overtime period, which failed to break the 0-0 tie.

Ferentz said replacing future spring games with practices open to the public would be his preference.

"We probably took a step in that direction today, and if anything I'm probably leaning in that direction," he said following the game on April 19. "I don't want to say anything today I have to retract, but there's a pretty good argument for not having a game."

Prior to the storm that rolled in, nearly 10,000 fans were in attendance, and while some onlookers may have been disappointed to see a half of scoreless competition, they at least caught a glimpse of action unlike the fans of conference rivals Michigan and Northwestern — schools that scratched their spring games altogether this year because of poor field conditions and concern for the safety of their players.

"A lot of schools are going to no spring game, so it will be interesting to see what happens in the next few years," Iowa

Houston keeps cards close to vest

BY MARK BABINECK
ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — Houston Texans general manager Charley Casserly dispelled any mystery about the expansion team's first-draft pick. Quarterback David Carr already was house-hunting by the time Houston formally chose him at No. 1 in 2002.

This time around, the Texans own the No. 3 overall pick and have everyone guessing. What they decide to do could be the key to how things unfold next weekend.

"It's a different draft. There's no question about that," Casserly said.

If Houston keeps its pick, the most likely possibilities are Miami receiver Andre Johnson and Arizona State defensive end Terrell Suggs. Suggs acknowledges his stock dropped after a poor pre-draft workout he attributes simply to having a bad day.

The team also has hosted Kansas State cornerback Terence Newman and Utah offensive lineman Jordan Gross, both of whom could still be available if the Texans trade down a bit.

Or perhaps Houston will trade for Cincinnati's top overall pick and snare Michigan State receiver Charles Rogers, who also visited the team this month. But if the Texans don't move up, the Detroit Lions are a virtual lock to take the home-state product at No. 2.

"To make it simple, if we stay at 3, we're going to get a starter," Casserly said. "If we trade back we're going to get a player who will start for us and something else.

"We're looking at a lot of options, and we have for a long time. We're still debating a lot of issues."

Despite the horror show put on by the Texans' offense last season — Carr's record 76 sacks at the forefront — Johnson and Rogers say they're eager to come aboard and improve things.

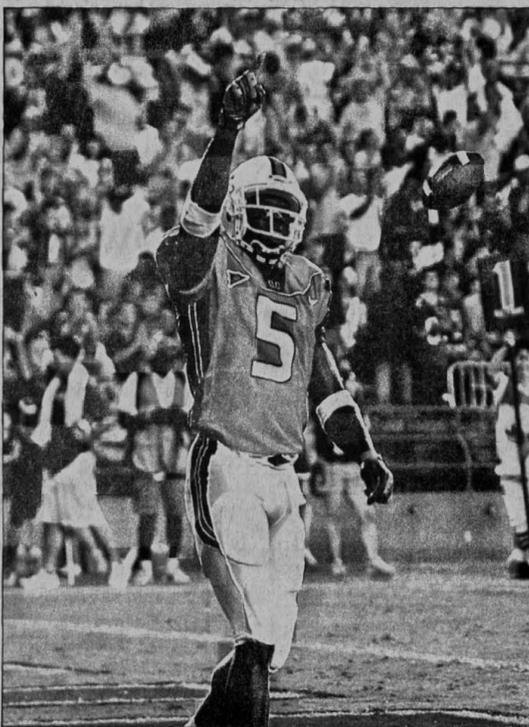

"David Carr is a great player and great quarterback," Johnson said. "I've talked to him a few times. He said if I had any questions at all to give him a call. He's hoping I can be here with him. I'd like to be here a long time, and maybe we could start something great."

Rogers made it clear he'd be just as happy to come to Houston as he would be to stay close to home.

"People who know football know I'm the best player in the draft," Rogers said. "I make good plays. I make great catches. I run fast. I can stretch the field. I can get open. I'm all of the above. I feel like I'm the total package."

There are other intriguing names. Suggs could step in and fill a pass-rushing void left by Jeff Posey, who signed with Buffalo after leading Houston with eight sacks. Newman could make cornerback Marcus Coleman expendable, opening up salary-cap space.

Or the Texans could take Gross so he could help keep Carr upright a little more often. "If the Texans decide to trade Andre Johnson is picked as Texan's top prospect in the 2003 draft.

[down], it's still an option. And if they don't, it's still an option," said the 6-foot-5, 306-pound Gross, who sees himself drafted anywhere from No. 3 to the low teens. "On draft day, I'll definitely be sitting on the edge of my seat for about two hours waiting to see what will happen."

Lost in the first-round speculation is the Texans' opportunity to add much-needed depth across the roster. Houston surprisingly boasted the NFL's 16th-ranked defense last year, but had precious little depth, a weakness masked by the unit's lack of injuries.

point/counterpoint

Will Iowa be well represented in the draft?

I can almost see Mel Kiper's greased-up hair right now. The NFL draft, my favorite sports day of the year, is here. For me, it gets no better than hearing my idol, Kiper, dissect the skills of a punter from Bulgaria in the seventh round.

I'll be at the Vikings' draft party in Eden Prairie, Minn., begging Randy Moss for an autograph (I was thinking of having him sign my hood ornament) and watching Minnesota boss and Steven Segal look-alike Mike Tice on whom the draft.

As for my other beloved, I'll be at the Hawkeyes, I view April 27 as a perfect culmination to an unforgettable 2002 season.

Allow me to do my Kiper impersonation. Cue the intense background music and highlight of Colin Cole nearly ripping Brooks Bollinger in half.

As I see it, eight Hawkeyes will be drafted. Eric Steinbach, a human solar eclipse at 6-6, 300 pounds, should be the only Hawkeye to go in the first round, however.

Next will be a man who ripped my heart out by bolting for the NFL, Dallas Clark. Clark will go in the second round, benefiting from a gift 40-yard dash time. Clark was timed at 4.55 seconds, faster than Brad Banks' 4.71. For a tight end, Clark can fly, but he has nowhere near the quickness of the Heisman runner-up.

As for Banks, it saddens me to say it'll be a while before we hear his name called, like the fifth round, because of his smallish stature and passing accuracy issues.

The rest of the Hawkeyes will fly off the draft board like so: Bruce Nelson in the third round, Colin Cole in the fourth, Ben Sobieski in the fifth, followed by Fred Barr, Derek Pagel, and C.J. Jones in the seventh and final round.

The weekend will conclude with a lot of Hawkeyes getting their wallets fattened. For me, it'll end as I'm escorted out of the Vikings practice compound by rent-a-cops after I pitch a tallboy at Tice's head for neglecting the Vikings' glaring needs on defense. Hey, maybe Moss will let me borrow his lawyer.

— by Kelly Beaton

For a team that crested the Big Ten championship and launched itself into the Orange Bowl, Iowa won't get any respect come April 26.

During the interim of mediocrity and downright lousiness between 1998 and 2001, the NFL has forgotten Iowa. This year's draft pack will feel the effects of losing Quarterback Brad Banks is responsible for more than 200 yards per game in the air and stands lowest of the Hawkeyes on the draft pecking order. For a person who finished second in the Heisman race and won the AP Player of the Year, Rodney Dangerfield earns more appreciation in Natural Born Killers.

This year, Iowa will boast one first-round selection in Eric Steinbach. It is guaranteed that he won't slip past the No. 12 pick overall. Three teams need upgrades on the O-line — Carolina (No. 9), Baltimore (No. 10), and St. Louis (No. 12).

From the predictions, center Bruce Nelson is a steal in the third to fourth rounds. Offensive tackle David Porter isn't even on the board. This is 40 percent of a line that averaged 214.2 rushing yards per game and 424 of total yards.

With this year's crop of tight ends, Dallas Clark might squeeze into the first round; more likely he'll fall into round two because of last year's strong class, which boasts Todd Heap and Jeremy Shockey. He's being punished for timing.

For a team that could potentially place seven to 10 athletes in the national spotlight — and that posted a 10-1 record — Iowa will get the shaft.

Porter, C.J. Jones, and Derek Pagel won't be drafted, but should make impacts as walk-ons this year wherever they go.

I hope the NFL proves me wrong.

Kenya places eight in top 10 at Boston

BY JIMMY GOLEN

BOSTON — Robert Cheruiyot won the Boston Marathon by 23 seconds Monday to give Kenya its 12th victory in 13 years. Russia's Svetlana Zakharova won the women's race to prevent a second-consecutive Kenyan sweep. Cheruiyot (pronounced cheh-REE-yot) finished in 2 hours, 10 minutes, 11 seconds to earn $80,000, an olive wreath, and a bowl of beef stew. It was just his second career marathon, having won his debut in Milan in December.

In Milan, he finished with the same time as two others but was declared the winner by an edge. This time, he wasn't challenged over the final five miles to win by more than two city blocks.

"I was ready to face anything," said Cheruiyot, who felt he had a chance to win at about 15 miles. "I said, 'OK, I'll win this.'"

Cheruiyot is the eighth Kenyan to win Boston since his country began its domination in 1991. Kenyans swept the first five spots in the race and eight of the top nine. Benjamin Kimutai was second, Martin Lel third.

Russian Fedor Ryzhov was the first non-Kenyan, in sixth, and defending champion Rodgers Rop of Kenya was seventh. Eddy Hellebuyck was the first American, finishing in 2:17:18 for 10th place.

"It's disappointing," Hellebuyck said. "I'm representing the U.S., and I'm 42 years old. Where is everybody?"

Zakharova finished in 2:25:20 to beat fellow Russian Lyubov Denisova by 91 seconds. Her biggest challenge was staying on the course when the television truck turned away before the Back Bay finish line; she is the first Russian to win since 1993.

American Marla Runyan was fifth — the best finish for a U.S. runner since 1993. Runyan, who is legally blind, trailed a bicyclist who provided her with her times at the checkpoints and guided her to her water bottles.

She traded positions with defending champion Margaret Okayo of Kenya and the two Russians until Zakharova pulled ahead at the 13.1-mile mark. Kenya's Joyce Chepchumba was third, and Okayo, who set the women's course record of 2:20:43 last year, finished fourth.

Rop was in a pack of a dozen that trailed leader Vincent Kipsos through much of the early race before Kipsos dropped out by Mile 14. Nine Kenyans ran together at the 15-mile mark before some began falling away from the pack.

South African Ernst Van Dyk earned his third-consecutive victory in the men's wheelchair race, finishing in 1:28:32 without a competitor in sight.

Second-place finisher Krige Schabot struck a girl who tried to cross the course at the 11th mile; police said the girl's injuries did not appear to be life-threatening, and Schabot also was knocked over.

Christina Ripp of Savoy, Ill., who finished second last year, won the women's wheelchair race in 1:54:57.

Droves of Boston Marathon runners celebrate crossing the finish line in America's oldest race.

A field of 20,260 left the starting line at noon after the traditional serenade of "Young at Heart" by 95-year-old Johnny "The Elder" Kelley, who started a record 61 races, winning twice. An F-15 flyover followed the national anthem to start the Patriots Day race.

Temperatures climbed to 70 and a slight breeze blew at the start, as runners filled Hopkinton Common, some stretching, others listening to music on earphones. Vendors offered everything from lemonade and fried dough to mutual funds.

Self begins at Kansas

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Bill Self was introduced Monday as the new basketball coach at Kansas, which lost Roy Williams to North Carolina shortly after losing the NCAA championship game.

Self's first college coaching job was as Larry Brown's assistant at Kansas in 1985, and he called his new post "the most prestigious act in all of college basketball."

Self

Approximately 300 people were at Hadl Auditorium on campus for the news conference, greeting Self and Chancellor Robert Hemenway with a standing ovation as they entered.

"I stand before you very, very happy," said Self, who left Illinois after three seasons. "But I stand before you with mixed emotions."

"... It was difficult because I'm leaving behind an unbelievable situation, and I'm leaving behind some great players."

Hemenway said his school's search focused only on Self, who won two Big Ten regular-season titles and one conference tournament with the Illini. His record there was 78-24, and he led the team to the NCAA Tournament each year, reaching the final eight in 2001.

With the Jayhawks, he replaces the beloved Williams, who departed a week ago for his alma mater. Williams led Kansas to nine conference titles and four Final Fours in 15 seasons, going 418-101.

Oregon State corner shot

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DUARTE, Calif. — Top NFL draft prospect Dennis Weathersby is expected to make a complete recovery after he was shot in the back in suspected gang-related violence.

The former Oregon State cornerback was in stable condition Monday and was expected to be released from the hospital no later than Wednesday, agent Gary Uberstine said. No surgery was required.

The 22-year-old player has no history of legal problems or gang affiliation, Uberstine said.

"I was in the wrong place at the wrong time, but I feel fine," Weathersby said Monday. "I'm lucky. The Lord has a reason for everything and this must be part of his plan for me."

He was hit by a single bullet, which entered his back below his lungs, exited his torso, and then struck his left arm.

tors, we are expecting a complete and speedy recovery," said Uberstine, whose client has been projected as a first- or second-round selection in this week's NFL draft.

Weathersby was getting into his car Sunday when several alleged gang members in a white sport-utility vehicle drove up and opened fire, the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department said. There were no arrests, sheriff's officials said.

Weathersby, who graduated from Oregon State after last season, was in his hometown of Duarte, a Los Angeles suburb.

"It is being investigated as a gang incident. There is a gang presence in the area and a rivalry there," Deputy Harry Drucker said. There have been numerous shootings there recently.

A friend who was with Weathersby was not wounded and drove him to a hospital.

Weathersby was a semifinalist last season for the Jim Thorpe Award, which is given to the nation's best college defensive back.

He was a four-year starter and an All-Academic Pac-10 selection. He set a school record with 57 passes broken up during his four years and made five interceptions.

O'Neal to play after grandfather's wake

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Shaquille O'Neal left the Los Angeles Lakers on Monday to attend his grandfather's wake in South Carolina, but he's expected to play in Game 2 of the playoff series against Minnesota.

The Lakers center was to miss an afternoon practice, return late Monday night and be at a shootaround Tuesday, team spokesman John Black said.

O'Neal had 32 points and 10 rebounds in a 117-98 victory in the opener Sunday. Game 2 of the first-round series is tonight.

Baseball's stolen bases leader back

Rickey Henderson will soon put on a new jersey in New Jersey.

Hoping to play again in the major leagues but still searching for a spot, the 44-year-old Henderson will sign this week with a team in the independent Atlantic League, his agent said.

Henderson narrowed his choice to three clubs based in New Jersey — the Newark Bears, Camden Riversharks, and Somerset Patriots.

Henderson, baseball's career leader in runs, stolen bases, and walks, wants to start playing as soon as possible, agent Jeff Borris said. The Atlantic League begins its regular season May 1, the earliest among independents.

Henderson spent last season with the Boston Red Sox, hitting .223 with five home runs and 16 RBI in 72 games. He continued to draw walks, however, and had a higher on-base percentage (.369) than regular Red Sox leadoff man Johnny Damon (.356).

Widely considered the greatest leadoff man ever, Henderson has 3,040 lifetime hits since making his major-league debut in 1979.

Henderson has scored 2,288 runs, and his eight steals last season increased his total to 1,403. He also holds records for walks (2,179) and leadoff home runs (80).

White Sox downed again

CHICAGO — Ellis Burks and Karim Garcia each homered twice Monday as Cleveland won for the second-straight day, beating the Chicago White Sox, 9-2.

Carlos Lee went deep in his fifth-straight game.

Milton Bradley added a pair of RBIs, and Jake Westbrook (1-2) got the victory.

Westbrook allowed two runs and six hits in 5 1/2 innings.

The Indians roughed Jon Garland (0-2) up early, tagging him for five runs and five hits in just 2 2/3 innings. Garcia got it started with a two-run homer in the first inning, and Bradley added a two-run double in the second.

Burks made it 5-0 with his first homer, a solo shot, in the third. Garland was relieved after he walked Casey Blake, with White Sox fans jeering as he left the mound.

NY Yankees 15, Minnesota 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Alfonso Soriano hit a grand slam, and Nick Johnson homered twice to give David Wells more than enough support as New York completed their second-straight season sweep of Minnesota.

Wells (3-0) pitched a seven-hitter. Dustan Mohr spoiled the shutout bid in the eighth with a home run.

Bernie Williams also homered, Erick Almonte had a career-high three hits, and Raul Mondesi also went 3-for-4 for the Yankees.

Two errors cost Rick Reed (1-3) in the third, when Almonte doubled to center and moved up a base when Bobby Kielty bobbled the ball.

Soriano hit a sharp grounder to third that Chris Gomez couldn't scoop and allowed Almonte to score.

Johnson hit a two-run homer to make it 3-0. Reed allowed a career-high 11 runs — 10 earned — and 10 hits in 4 1/2 innings.

Toronto 11, Boston 6

BOSTON — Chris Woodward hit a two-run homer, and Greg Myers homered and drove in four runs Monday as Toronto snapped Boston's seven-game winning streak.

Vernon Wells and Dave Berg hit solo homers for the Blue Jays. Eric Hinske went 4-5 with three doubles.

Manny Ramirez went 4-5 for the Red Sox.

Cory Lidle (3-2) gave up six runs — five earned — and eight hits in six innings.

Baltimore 4, Tampa Bay 0

BALTIMORE — Rick Helling allowed four hits in eight innings, and Jerry Hairston hit a two-run homer as Baltimore beat Tampa Bay.

Helling (1-1) did not allow a runner to reach second base until the eighth inning, walked one, and struck out five. He was helped out by three double plays, all after leadoff hitters reached base.

NHL PLAYOFFS

Minnesota forces game seven

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Richard Park scored his second goal of the game 4:22 into overtime Monday night to give Minnesota a thrilling victory over Colorado to force a decisive Game 7.

The Wild, in the playoffs for the first time in their three-year history, have won two straight while on the brink of elimination. The teams will play tonight in Denver, with the winner moving on to the second round to face either St. Louis or Vancouver. The Blues and Canucks will also play Game 7 today.

Of the 193 teams in NHL history that have trailed a series 3-1, only seven have come back to win two games on the road. After trailing 2-0 late in the third period, the Avalanche looked like they had the momentum by scoring twice on Manny Fernandez in the final 10 minutes.

But they didn't even get a shot off in the extra period and now will play a Game 7 for the fifth straight series, dating to the Stanley Cup finals in 2001.

The Wild got four shots on goalie Patrick Roy, and Park's bad-angle wrist shot slid underneath Roy's glove to send the crowd of 19,350 — another overflow sellout — into a frenzy.

Toronto 2, Philadelphia 1 (2OT)

TORONTO — Travis Green scored 10:51 into the second overtime as the Toronto Maple Leafs beat the Philadelphia Flyers on Monday night to force a decisive Game 7 in the first-round series.

Green backhanded a shot over goalie Roman Cechmanek after Darcy Tucker's rebound landed in front of the net.

The teams have played seven overtime periods during the first six games of the series but will have to recover quickly because Game 7 is Tuesday night in Philadelphia. Not since the 1950 Stanley Cup finals have Games 6 and 7 of a series been played on consecutive nights.

All three games played in Toronto in this series were decided in overtime.

Toronto won 4-2 in double overtime to take a 2-1 series lead last Monday night, but the Flyers won 3-2 in triple overtime last Wednesday and 4-1 on Saturday.

Jeremy Roenick scored for the Flyers, who have lost in the first round four of the past five years.

Toronto's Mats Sundin almost won it in the first overtime with a backhanded shot.

Missouri guard pleads guilty

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Missouri point guard Ricky Clemons, accused of choking a woman and holding her against her will at his apartment, pleaded guilty Monday to a pair of lesser counts and was suspended from the team for one year.

The 20-year-old Clemons, who faced trial April 29 on an original charge of felony second-degree domestic assault, pleaded guilty to misdemeanor counts of third-degree assault and false imprisonment.

Prosecutor Kevin Crane plans to recommend at a sentencing hearing June 23 that Clemons receive two years' probation and a suspended one-year jail term on the assault charge, and 90 days behind bars on the false-imprisonment count.

Later Monday, Missouri suspended Clemons from competition for the 2003-04 season. Mike Alden, Missouri's athletics director, said in a statement that the school would honor Clemons' scholarship, "provided he continues to progress toward his degree and meets his academic and social responsibilities."

In the statement, Tigers coach Quin Snyder said, "As we have maintained all along, we would await the outcome of the judicial process until taking further action in this situation."

Sam Fleury, a spokesman for the program, said Monday's suspension would not end Clemons' association with the team because he would still have a year of eligibility remaining after sitting out next season.

"There's still time on his clock," Fleury said.

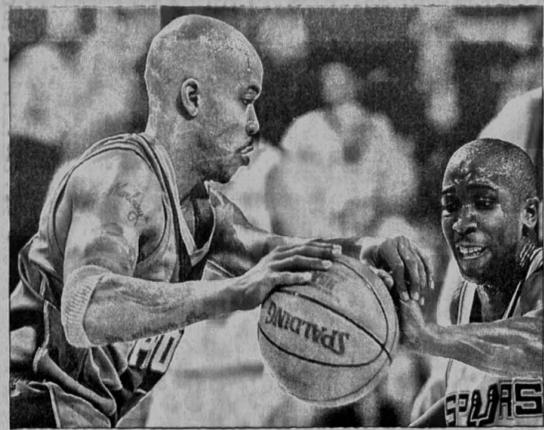

Crane said he had discussions with Clemons' defense attorneys and the victim before agreeing to the plea.

"I made it clear that if Clemons is going to plead to a misdemeanor, I wanted the jail time," Crane said. "I feel like we've served justice and met the interest of the victim," who ultimately wants the sentence to bar Clemons from having future contact with her.

Jessica Bunge, 20, of St. Clair, alleged Clemons pushed her down, bloodied her nose and choked her the night of Jan. 16 after she refused to watch the movie Roots with him. Clemons was arrested the next day and was suspended from the team for one game.

Clemons' attorney, Wally Bley, reached Monday night at his home in Columbia, declined comment.

Stephen Marbury's 32 points and 10 assists couldn't lift Phoenix.

Duncan dominates in fourth quarter rally

SAN ANTONIO — San Antonio played with the desperation of a team that was facing an unthinkable deficit, only to win, 84-78.

Tim Duncan scored nine of his nine of his 22 points in the final 7 1/2 minutes as the Spurs rallied for a victory over Phoenix in Game Two of their Western Conference first-round series.

San Antonio, which had the league's best record during the regular season, lost Game One on April 18 and was trying to avoid going to Phoenix in an 0-2 hole. The Suns controlled the tempo in the second half led by Stephen Marbury, who had 32 points and 10 assists, and led by as many as six in the fourth quarter.

But the Spurs finished the game on a 19-4 run highlighted by huge baskets from Stephen Jackson, who scored 23 points, and rookie Emanuel Ginobili.

Duncan made consecutive baskets to give San Antonio the lead for good at 73-72 with 5:31 remaining. The teams traded baskets twice before Ginobili buried a 3-pointer from the right corner with 63 seconds left for an 80-76 lead.

Duncan made two free throws with 33 seconds left, and Jackson added a pair from the line 11 seconds later for the Spurs, who made seven of their last 11 shots after opening the fourth quarter 0-8.

Penny Hardaway had 17 points and 11 rebounds for Phoenix, which will host Game Three at America West Arena on Friday.

Indiana 89, Boston 77

INDIANAPOLIS — Reggie Miller wasn't about to go virtually unused down the stretch of Game 2 for the Indiana Pacers.

After sitting on the bench for all but two minutes of the fourth quarter in the series opener, Miller showed when he's needed most.

With the crowd chanting "Reg-gie! Reg-gie!", Miller drilled a 3-pointer, allowing the Pacers to hold on and beat Boston, tying the Eastern Conference playoff series 1-1.

Jermaine O'Neal scored 23 points and grabbed 20 rebounds, Miller had 18 points, and Jamaal Tinsley 15 for the Pacers.

Antoine Walker led the Celtics with 19 points, Walter McCarty had 16, and Paul Pierce, who scored 40 in the opener, finished with 16.

Boston has rallied from large double-digit deficits in both games of the series. The Celtics trailed by 16 in the third period and by 13 with 7 minutes left in the opener.

They were down Monday by 18 late in the first quarter.

Twice in the third quarter, Boston pulled within one. The Celtics, though, never took the lead.

"It's great for the fans. It's a chance to come out and see where we're at, and it's good for us to be out there playing in front of somebody instead of just playing at practice every day, so I hope they keep it around."

No Hawkeyes suffered significant injuries in this year's game, but some teams have not been so lucky in the past. Wisconsin wide-receiver Lee Evans, a pre-season second team All-American, damaged ligaments in his left knee in the Badgers' 2002 spring game. "The first responsibility is to your players," Ferentz said. "You don't want to put them at risk, or you're going to hurt the team."

He said he doesn't think replacing the annual spring game with an open practice would bother Hawkeye supporters.

"I think the fans just want to come out and see what the team looks like, how they're doing, where we're going, that type of thing," he said.

"Our fans, they're just fanatic. I think they'll still come out as long as we're not out there just having an Easter egg hunt or something like that."

Hawkeye football fan Riley Schlievert, a UI freshman who attended the last two spring games, understands the injury concern and wouldn't be disappointed if the spring game was thrown out as long as there was something for the fans to see.

"They should definitely have something before the season just to get people excited about it," Schlievert said. "They should have something where people can check out the team."

Hawkeyes never won title with Davis

From there, Davis went to Boston College, where he was 100-47 in five years and took the Eagles to the final eight of the 1981 NCAA Tournament. He then had a 58-59 record in four years at Stanford before taking the Iowa job.

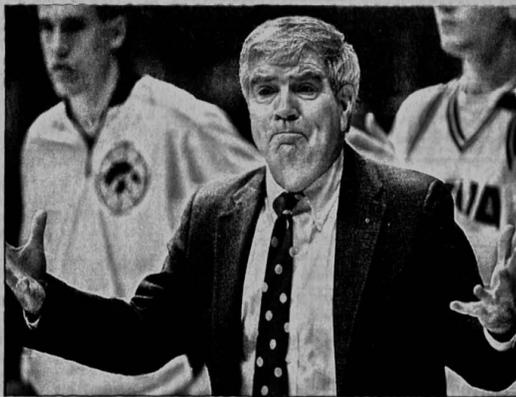

At Iowa, Davis' teams had some memorable victories, one of which ended Kansas' 62-game home winning streak in 1999.

But the Hawkeyes never won the Big Ten title during his tenure, and criticism mounted when Iowa failed to land an NCAA Tournament bid in 1998 despite a 20-10 record.

In April of that year, Athletics Director Bob Bowlsby told Davis he could coach one last season but his contract would not be renewed.

The Hawkeyes finished 20-10 in Davis' final season and reached the third round of the NCAA Tournament.

and catfish," Sadewasser said. Just upstream a bit, there are other fish to catch. According to the most recent report from the DNR, fishing below the Macbride Dam has been fair with walleye and crappie catches.

F.W. Kent Park

Located three miles west of Tiffin on Highway 6 is Kent Park, surrounding a 27-acre lake.

This is another great place near Iowa City to catch catfish, large-mouth bass, bluegill, sunfish, and crappies.

"Kent Park is pretty popular this time of year. It's a good place to fish," Sadewasser said.

A growing nuisance

While fishing can be a great way to relax and forget troubles, there is one aspect that is important to remember. While fishing Iowa's waters, it can be quite easy to introduce new Ways to Prevent Nuisance Species Introduction:

- Don't take water from one body of water to another.
- Always drain live wells after use.
- If using a boat, always drain the motor's water pump.
- Clean exterior of boat periodically.
- Dump out all water in its original body.
- Watch for vegetation caught on boat, fishing pole, etc.
- Always empty bait buckets.

species foreign to the aquatic and surrounding environment.

These species, also known as nuisance species, not only threaten the lakes, ponds, and rivers of Iowa, but also environments all over the world.

"Nuisance species are definitely coming into our area; it's a big concern," said Tom Boland, a DNR fishery biologist.

Nuisance species often compete for food with natural inhabitants. Their population may explode and compete with natural species. Or the natural inhabitants may increase because the nuisance species provide a better choice for predators.

Both scenarios can cause problems for the natural environment.

A specific example of a nuisance species affecting Johnson County waters is the introduction of gizzard shad to Lake Macbride.

Sleeper said gizzard shad are direct competitors with bluegill.

The shad eat the same plankton and invertebrates, and larger predators favor the shad. Because of this, bluegill numbers have declined in previous years, because their population initially, causing their food source to decrease.

However, bluegill numbers are rising again in Macbride. "Bluegills should grow well this year ... Macbride's looking good for 2004," Sleeper said. "It's just too cold up here for shad to survive for too long."

Other examples of an exotic species that has been introduced in Iowa are the zebra mussel and the Asian carp.

"The zebra mussel actually came in by commercial navigation barges, through the Great Lakes and down the Mississippi," Boland said.

"The planet gets smaller, and exotic species are more of a problem."

Sleeper said the Iowa City area isn't being threatened by nuisance species yet. But he and the DNR are still concerned for the future.

"There is a tremendous amount of species coming in, and we're worried about that," he said.

This may not be a concern if those who fish do what they can to prevent introductions. "It's common sense," he said.

Torre, Steinbrenner at odds

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Off to the best start in their storied history, the New York Yankees should be enjoying this season. Instead, there's suddenly tension between the manager and the Boss — something commonplace for years until Joe Torre came along.

Even a 14-0 mark for their starting rotation (the only such streak to start a season since 1900) and a 16-3 overall record could not cover up the first public spat between owner George Steinbrenner and Torre.

Steinbrenner crossed swords with 13 managers until hiring Torre in 1996 and ushering in a period of tranquility, not to mention four World Series championships. The era of good feeling ended abruptly over the weekend, with a dispute over Cuban pitcher Jose Contreras and his minor-league assignment.

"It's not something that can just be washed away," Torre said Monday. "I'm over it, but I'm not going to pretend it never happened."

The clash brought back memories of Steinbrenner's battles with Torre's predecessors. The Boss has been down this path frequently.

This could be the beginning of the end of Joe Torre's tenure as manager of the New York Yankees, according to Bob Klapish of the "Bergen Record".

Steinbrenner fired Billy Martin five times. He fired Lou Piniella and Bob Lemon twice each. He fired Dick Howser after a season in which the Yankees won 103 games.

Piniella, now managing Tampa Bay, wanted no part of the Yankees' latest soap opera.

"Oh, please," he said Monday. "I've got enough problems here without thinking about anything else."

After Monday's 15-1 loss to the Yankees, Minnesota Twins manager Ron Gardenhire was in no mood to worry about Torre and Steinbrenner.

The Ledge

by Kelly Beaton

The Battle is On

Looks like it's Beaton's time to step up to the mic, I've got some insults for Nick I think you might like.

In case our readers haven't heard, Nick's got bright red hair, kinda like that freak in the movie Mask, which I think starred Cher.

I hate to say this Nick, and please don't get miffed, But I heard the only way your mom can stand is with the aid of a forklift.

All you do is write Ledges at the DI everyday, Nick, whoopee! Don't mess with this guy, ladies, or it'll burn when you pee.

I also gotta tell our audience this guy's like 29 years old, I told you not to mess with me, Nick, do 'as you're told.

Next time you make fun of me, Nick, don't just stop. You're about as funny as Urkel, Gallagher, or Carrot Top.
