It's official - city goes 19-only for bars

BY INGA BEYER
THE DAILY IOWAN

Patrons under the age of 19 will not be able to enter an Iowa City bar after 10 p.m. as of Aug. 1, under an ordinance Iowa City councilors adopted unanimously Tuesday night.

The measure passed with little discussion and in the absence of an ill Councilor Irvin Pfab, who had flip-flopped on the issue several times.

"We came very close to putting a padlock on downtown Iowa City; I'm glad we didn't," Councilor Mike O'Donnell said, referring to the council's original attempt to make the entrance age to all bars 21.

In an unusual turn, Jim Clayton, the co-coordinator of the Stepping Up Project, said he supported the council's move as "a good faith effort" in advancing his group's goal of stopping underage drinking.

"If it has the effect of reducing the harmful effects, we will continue to support it," he said.

Clayton had been one of the staunchest supporters of a 21-ordinance and was unabashedly critical of a 19-measure when councilors dropped their original plan in light of protest from student leaders and bar owners.

"This problem is not going to be solved or even dented by 19," he said the day after councilors compromised with a 19-ordinance after an unusually long April 22 meeting that ran until 1 a.m.

Despite his turnabout, Clayton said "we'll be back" if the 19-ordinance fails.

In passing the ordinance, councilors also entertained the formation of a task force composed of student leaders, bar owners, downtown business owners, and councilors that would monitor underage drinking and measure the effectiveness of the law.

They will discuss its functions at a future work session.

"This committee is a means for oversight," said UI Student Government President Nate Green. "It will have no legislative powers or official deadlines, so it will be a pretty informal group."

Don Stalkfleet, who owns the Sports Column, 12 S. Dubuque St., and Joe's Place, 117 Iowa Ave., said the panel will provide a good opportunity to keep the lines of communication open and deal with the intricacies of measuring the effectiveness of the ordinance, which will permit 18-year-olds in bars if accompanied by a guardian, parent, or spouse.

The items Stalkfleet envisions that the committee will address include the implementation of universal wristbands and bar monitors. The group will disband after one year unless it is re-authorized by the council.

Cheating backlash may nab student

BY AMIR EFRATI AND RYAN J. FOLEY
THE DAILY IOWAN

UI officials are considering disciplinary action against a graduating senior who was quoted saying he had often cheated during his four years in college.

UI senior Mike Gabler, 22, received a phone call from Fred Antczak, the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences associate dean for academic programs, on Tuesday about his remarks published in Tuesday's Daily Iowan. The two reportedly have scheduled a meeting to discuss his comments today.

Linda Maxson, the liberal-arts dean, said Gabler's admission "contradicts the Code of Student Conduct."

"I think [Antczak's] planning to do something," she said.

Gabler said he would not comment until the issues are resolved.

During a 45-minute interview with The Daily Iowan on May 1, Gabler appeared to boast when he said, "I've cheated my entire way through college. Students who cheat don't have a hard time doing it, and it seems like almost everyone does."

The quote stunned many, not so much that it happened, but that he would go on the record saying it. The comment also angered some students and professors that someone could get away with taking shortcuts and still earn a diploma.

"I was dismayed that someone would brag about cheating," Maxson said.

UI General Counsel Mark Schantz, who handles the hearings of accused cheaters, said Gabler's comment was a "general admission" and said it would merit an investigation.

"If a person was correctly understood to say, 'I cheated on all my tests and papers,' then I think that could be a basis for saying, 'OK, you didn't graduate. The work that's attributed to you wasn't honestly done,'" Schantz said.

The case will cover new territory for the liberal-arts school, said Lola Lopes, the associate provost for undergraduate education.

"This is not the typical case," she said. "University processes are not set up to deal with this."

Normally, an instructor must notify the suspected cheater in writing and send a written report of the case to Antczak, who then can impose several penalties, including issuing a disciplinary warning, suspending the student, or recommending expulsion to the president. In Gabler's instance, the procedure is not so simple.

For refugees, America's not paved with gold

BY LAUREN SMILEY
THE DAILY IOWAN

Congolese refugee Jean-Claude Botembe looks out over the sarongs, boxers, and T-shirts drying on the grass under the late afternoon sun, singing in Swahili along with the African rumba filtering out the screen door.

The slim 42-year-old walks over to examine four slabs of goat meat sizzling on the Coleman grill.

"Wooooowww," he gles it, his wide-eyed incredulity quickly morphing into sheer giddiness.

"Goat!" he chirps, pumping his fist downward in excitement.

Upstairs, Venantie Botembe fries plantains and coaxes flour into fufu — churning the fine powder into warm water until it congeals into a puffy blob. In the backyard, her ever-frenetic 7-year-old son, Aaron, fights bandits, namely a white lawn chair, with his water bottle.

Judging from the scene at the Botembe household on a recent Saturday afternoon, the cut and paste of Venantie Botembe's urban life in Tanzania to Iowa City has been seamless.

Yet for her and a growing number of African refugees resettling in Iowa, the transition from living in a developing country to the world's superpower serves up a slew of financial headaches that leave the hopeful newcomers grappling to pay the monthly bills, let alone keep up with the Joneses.

"The picture we have of going to America is not struggling but having a good life and living well," the 43-year-old Congolese refugee said. "But just being here three years, I've grown 10 years older. I knew I'd have to go through some adjustment time, but not this depressing, frustrating, or traumatizing thing."

Instead of fearing bombings, such as the 1998 Al Qaeda attack on the U.S. Embassy in

Ben Plank/The Daily Iowan

Iowa City resident Venantie Botembe prepares a dinner of carp, beef, vegetables, and rice for her family on a recent evening. The 42-year-old Congolese refugee works at the UI Hospitals and Clinics, attends school, and cooks for her family every night.

Tanzania that tossed her 15 feet, she says agonizing about paying the house rent and electricity bills mires her nights in bouts of insomnia.

She may no longer worry about sustaining a 11-person family on one paycheck — such as the time she and other embassy workers in Tanzania were cut off from pay when Mobutu Sese Seko, who had ruled Zaire for 32 years, was thrown out of power in a 1997 rebellion. The leader of the coup, Laurent Kabila, changed the name of the country to the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

When Venantie Botembe arrived in Cedar Rapids in 1999 with three of her children, she was disturbed to discover that the only job the college graduate fluent in four languages could land was stuffing shampoo bottles into boxes during an eight-hour night shift at a packaging company.

Discovering her education was considered to be null and void in the States without documentation, she decided to go after an Uncle Sam-endorsed degree in communications, first at Kirkwood, and now at the UI, where 15 other students claim refugee status. That decision has kept her dependent on welfare off and on for the last three years.

She is one of a handful of refugees in Iowa who have chosen the long-term benefits of education over an immediate full-time paycheck — a decision frowned upon by the Iowa Bureau of Refugee Services, which urges refugees to enter the Iowa workforce immediately.

"On one hand, the U.S. government says get them a job, any job, get them off welfare," said Wayne Johnson, the bureau's chief. "So that's what we do. Very rarely is it possible to get a good fit."

He said the most "severe" example of this occurred during the influx of refugees from the former Soviet Union in the late 1980s and early 1990s — many of those were physicists, professors, doctors, and attorneys who did not pursue licensing in the states. Most now live in Des Moines, doing "whatever they can," he said, adding that poor English skills are the No. 1 barrier to obtaining a job commensurate with their education and skills.

Venantie Botembe says she cried after receiving a letter from Lutheran Social Services, a Cedar Rapids-based organization that places refugees, saying, "This program is geared toward employment,

Hawkeye residents detail substandard living conditions

BY JAMES BAETKE
THE DAILY IOWAN

Some UI students and their families are speaking out against what they call "substandard" living conditions in the brick apartments at Hawkeye Court and Hawkeye Drive.

But the conditions in the patch of apartments in western Iowa City may not improve within the next decade, officials say.

Concrete staircases crumble under residents' feet, roaches scuttle out from cracks and crevices in the night, and the cinder-block units lack insulation, say many residents of Hawkeye Court and Hawkeye Drive, a set of university apartments erected in 1960 for graduate, married, and international students.

Many seek housing in one of the 694 non-air conditioned units as a feasible alternative to Iowa City's tight housing market, finding the $373 per month rent for a one-bedroom and $425 rent for a two-bedroom unit at Hawkeye Court palatable. Hawkeye Drive's units, all two bedroom, cost $512 per month. Compare that with the cost of a non-air conditioned, double dorm room with no bathroom, which would run about $614 a month, and it's clear why students find the complexes a financial haven.

But in light of a $20 to $27 monthly rent increase next year, residents are calling on UI officials — in particular Phillip Jones, the vice president for Student Services — to address the "unsatisfactory" living conditions.

UI graduate student Jacob Wedemeyer, who has lived at Hawkeye for three years and is head of the University

President David Skorton, and the state Board of Regents, among others, asking for "affordable, quality student apartments."

The petition demands improvements in apartments and grounds and transportation to campus — which is approximately three miles away. It also calls for rent to remain low and fees for auxiliary services such as cable TV, high-speed Internet, and phone-calling plans to be made optional.

In a meeting Monday with Jones and other university officials, a dozen residents aired a litany of grievances that officials acknowledged exist but cannot be rectified because of budget limitations.

"We're not trying to be slum landlords," Jones said. "Our problem simply comes down to cost. We're trying to find a way to rebuild these apartments."

The goodnight of the Iguana

BY MATTHEW MOSS
THE DAILY IOWAN

Fans of the X-Men, Daredevil, and the Incredible Hulk are going to have to find their super heroes on the big screen this summer and not on the shelves of Iguana's Comicbook Cafe.

The comics and collectible shop at 123 E. Washington St. will shut its doors after 10 years of operation by the end of June, said the store's owner, Matt Gibson.

"It was a tough decision that I came to," he said. "The main reason was that my interests didn't lie there anymore."

Gibson said he wanted to put more energy into his 1½-year-old business, Reminisce, a scrapbook shop in Coralville.

"The business itself was constant," said Gibson of Iguana's sales. "That wasn't a consideration." However, he said, rent was a factor that contributed to his decision to close, a move he had mulled over ever since he sold off the mail-order arm of Iguana's in 2000.

Profit margins of collectible products has also shrunk over the years because of corporate buy-outs of small gaming companies, such as TSR, by larger ones, such as Wizards of the Coast, he said.

Iguana's general manager Ryan Devine, who handles the day-to-day operations, attributed the store's closing to the rising overhead costs. An attempt to lower operating costs was made by shutting down the second-floor gaming lounge five months ago, he said, "but in the end that wasn't enough."

In an effort to liquidate remaining merchandise, Devine said, Iguana's is offering storewide discounts that will increase as the closing date nears. He added that negotiations for a possible buyout had not panned out.

"There are going to be a lot of disappointed people," Gibson said. "Some of them seem more disappointed than I am."

A staple of Iguana's business has been its loyal patrons, some of whom have been regulars since the store opened, Devine said. Surrounded by Pokémon and Yu-Gi-Oh cards, he said the store's closing "will certainly leave a hole in Iowa City."

One of the regulars, Iowa City resident Brian Clapp, said he will have to look elsewhere for his DC and Vertigo comic titles, which he's been buying at Iguana's for the last eight years.

"Obviously, I'm disappointed," he said. He added that he would turn to mail order and local stores for his collectibles and scale back the amount he buys.

Iguana's opened at its first location in the Brewery Square on Linn Street in October 1992 before moving to its current downtown location in 1997. It had chiseled itself a place in the lucrative gaming and collectibles industry, which Gibson described as a "big aspect of business," hawking such products as Magic: The Gathering cards, Beanie Babies, anime, and used DVDs and video games.

Devine, a 1997 UI graduate with a master's in science education who has worked for Iguana's for seven years, said he doesn't yet know what he is going to do after the store closes.

Council again OKs nuisance bill

BY ANNIE SHUPPY
THE DAILY IOWAN

The Iowa City City Council voted a second time to approve a proposed nuisance ordinance aimed at making landlords and tenants more accountable for disruptive activity.

The move will probably necessitate hiring a new housing inspector — a $50,000 per-year cost that may carry over to tenants. City Manager Steve Atkins will recommend a proposal to charge landlords a $25 fee for property inspection to subsidize part of the cost in light of a $1 million budget cut in the city's finances. The councilors will review the fee, which Atkins admits could fall on renters, at their May 12 work session.

The nuisance ordinance will require that tenants who commit two violations within a year — including criminal complaints, possession of alcohol under the legal age, and disorderly house — attend a meeting with their landlords, police representatives, and/or the Department of Housing Inspection Services to discuss their infractions. Tenants who choose not to attend the Code Compliance Meetings could face "disincentives," including fines.

The measure passed, 4-2, with Councilors Steven Kanner and Dee Vanderhoef in the minority. Councilor Irvin Pfab was absent because of an illness.

Under the proposed ordinance — branded by some critics as "anti-student" — landlords could also be sanctioned with reduced rental permits or suspension or revocation of rental permits for failing to address nuisance problems. They are also given the authority to evict tenants charged with any of the specified violations.

A fifth housing inspector will be needed to cover the duties should the ordinance garner a third approval and become law. "[The housing inspectors] would be involved, more likely in offering a testimony," Atkins said. "They would act as a third party to mediate discussion."

The post would likely be needed even without the ordinance because of an increase in the number of multi-family rental units, which number more than 15,000, said Douglas Boothroy, the director of Housing and Inspection Services.

"This growth has put pressure on our capability to perform our services," he said.

The council originally hoped to fund the new inspector with a portion of the $862,000 Community Block Development Grants awarded to Iowa City in fiscal 2004. But the move was not recommended by city staff and councilors did not include it in its approval of block-grant funds Tuesday night.

UISG to offer free newspapers

BY TINA STEIN
THE DAILY IOWAN

Newspaper stands offering a wide array of free publications for UI students will be scattered across campus next fall once UI Student Government chooses the appropriate pilot program.

At its meeting Tuesday night, UISG looked into the USA Today program, which would provide the Iowa City Press-Citizen, Des Moines Register, Chicago Tribune, New York Times, and USA Today on a daily basis. The organization is also considering the New York Times program, which has a more limited selection of newspapers.

"This is a great way for UI students to gain a more global view of what's happening in the world," said UISG President Nate Green. "Professors can also assign students homework to retrieve certain articles."

The Collegiate Readership Program will start with a four-week pilot in the fall in order to determine the success of the program. UI students will be able to obtain the newspapers using a swipe system in which their IDs will unlock the newspaper display.

"Our point is to stress education value and enhance the student life," said Michael Beck, the Iowa City Press-Citizen president and publisher. "Readers will become more involved and have a better tendency to vote."

UISG will decide over the summer how many papers will be available and ask for approval from UI President David Skorton and Phillip Jones, the vice president for Student Services. If the program is approved after the pilot program, a $5 charge will be added to student fees, Green said.

Daily Iowan Editor Ryan J. Foley said in a statement: "Having national publications in the program would supplement students' reading and offer a greater perspective on the world."

"But student fees already pay for a nationally recognized student-run local paper to be delivered on campus everyday. "So I see no reason to include other local newspapers in the program. Why should students pay more to help out a huge corporation like Gannett?"

That company owns USA Today, the Press-Citizen, and the Des Moines Register.

The USA Today Collegiate Readership Program is used on 140 campuses nationwide, Beck said, adding that USA Today would donate papers to 10 percent of students.

"The school will only be charged based on consumption," said Tracie Saxton, the USA Today senior account manager. "Leftover newspapers will be recycled when the following day's newspapers are delivered."

In addition to newspapers next fall, UI students will also be able to increase their knowledge about their rights prior to being arrested.

The Undergraduate Arrest Rates Task Force will provide information to students on their rights if arrested for possession of alcohol under the legal age, public intoxication, or possession of a controlled substance.

"The task force will begin meeting in the fall," said UISG Vice President Mayrose Wegmann. "We'd like to see an informational brochure sent out to UI students."

Concern over undergraduate arrest rates increased last spring following reports that more than 10 percent of male UI undergraduates were arrested each year from 1997 to 2001 and that the UI led the nation in on-campus drug arrests in 2001, according to a Faculty Senate report.

"This will really help inform students of their rights," Wegmann said.

State plans appeal of sex-offender ruling

WASHINGTON, Iowa (AP) — The Iowa attorney general plans to appeal a Washington County judge's action to declare unconstitutional the state law limiting where convicted sex offenders can live as she dismissed charges against a Riverside resident.

Judge Lucy Gamon last week said the law that prohibits a sex offender from living within 2,000 feet of a school or a child care facility violates the rights of the sex offender.

The attorney general late Tuesday said he would ask the Iowa Supreme Court to review the lower court ruling, WHO-TV reported.

ACT typo snarls bar exams

BY CAROL ANN RIHA
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES — A typo at an Iowa City testing office was blamed for a scoring problem that could affect some people who took the multistate bar exam in February.

The clerical error at ACT Inc. affected one of 200 questions on the test, said Erica Moeser, the president of the National Conference of Bar Examiners, based in Madison, Wis.

"Unfortunately, it's a typo that has serious consequences," she said.

Approximately 20,000 people nationwide took the test, known as the MBE, as part of their state bar exams in February.

"Most people who passed are completely unaffected by it. Most people who failed are not affected by it at all. The action will be at the pass-fail line," Moeser said.

She said her organization responded promptly and candidly when it learned of the error, notifying states that include the MBE as a component of their state bar exams. In Ohio, a swearing-in ceremony for new lawyers had already been scheduled.

The Ohio Supreme Court announced on Tuesday that it would be required to recalculate scores for 551 applicants who their status after the total exam scores are recalculated."

Moeser said she did not yet know how many people would be affected. Each state determines its own pass-fail line, she said.

States also determine how much weight each component, such as the MBE, is to be given in the overall score.

A spokesman for ACT referred questions to the bar-examiners group.

The not-for-profit organization is best known for the ACT college-entrance exam, but it also provides research, education, and work-force-training services, according to its Web site.

"It happened in Iowa City at ACT, but ultimately we own this test; we accept responsibility for this test," Moeser said.

A scoring error at the Iowa City offices of another testing company, NCS Pearson, two years ago led to thousands of Minnesota schoolchildren being told they had failed the state's Basic Standards Test. NCS settled a class-action lawsuit earlier this year for $7 million.

Most people who passed are completely unaffected by it. Most people who failed are not affected by it at all.

Iowa teens' drug, alcohol use down

BY MIKE GLOVER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES — The rate of drug and alcohol use among Iowa teenagers dropped significantly from 1999 to 2002, according to a survey released Tuesday.

Seventy-eight percent of Iowa students questioned last fall said they had never smoked cigarettes, up from 72 percent in 1999, according to the survey by the Iowa Department of Public Health.

Fifty-eight percent said they never drank, up from 54 percent in 1999.

Ninety-seven percent said they had never tried drugs such as methamphetamine or cocaine, up from 96 percent.

"It basically looks like a modest decline across the board," said Dale Woolery, a spokesman for the Governor's Office of Drug Control Policy.

The survey was conducted last fall among 97,000 students in the sixth, eighth, and 11th grades, as well as in some alternative high-school settings.

Marvin Van Haften, the governor's drug czar, said the survey may point to a long-term trend because it comes as officials worry about the use of methamphetamine and other hard drugs among older adults.

"It's good to know that our students are smarter than the rest of us," he said. "It's good to have some good news."

While the use of tobacco dropped by 6 percentage points overall, it was an even larger decline among third-year high school students. Woolery noted that the state is in the midst of a big anti-tobacco campaign looking to convince youngsters not to take up smoking, but he said a variety of factors are probably at work.

"It's difficult to pinpoint one thing," he said. "It's probably a combination of things."

He said a series of surveys around the country have shown similar declines among youngsters.

"This is pretty consistent with the most recent national reports," said Woolery. "It's the kind of good news we hope to continue."

The state is using a portion of its settlement with the tobacco industry to pay for the campaign against youth smoking.

Rains keeping farmers out of fields

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES — The recent rain that has replenished much needed soil moisture has slowed spring planting, but farmers remain optimistic about the season.

Farmers had planted 56 percent of their corn as of Sunday, slightly ahead of the average of 50 percent, according to a report from the Iowa Department of Agriculture.

Soybean planting was at 4 percent, slightly behind last year and lower than the five-year average of 11 percent, the report said.

Soil-moisture levels improved because of the rain, said Elwynn Taylor, an Iowa State University climatologist.

"At this time, we don't have any entire counties that are considered on the dry side," he said.

Previously six counties were short on soil moisture.

Last week's soggy weather was the wettest week in five years, said Harry Hillaker, state climatologist in Des Moines.

"The rain that we received this weekend is doing more harm than good in the short run," he said. "It's keeping farmers out of the fields."

Some farmers are beginning to worry about getting their corn planted on time, Taylor said.

"There's always a little anxiety, but it's not a time for great concern," he said.

Ideally, corn would be planted by May 10 and soybeans by the end of the month, Taylor said.

During the week ending Sunday, the National Weather Service in Johnston recorded the most rain in the state with 6.29 inches. Sioux Center in northwest Iowa received 1.39 inches, the least amount of rainfall but still twice the normal amount.

Worth County Extension Education Director Dennis Johnson said the rain in northern Iowa was timely.

"We kind of needed to get our subsoil moisture replenished," he said. "This should help get it done. Now, if we can just see some warm conditions and sunshine, we'll see this corn really take off, I think."

Andy Hill who farms near Manly, about 10 miles north of Mason City, said he is in "good shape."

"I believe we're sitting OK, and most of the farmers are comfortable," he said.

Tom and Judy Barrett of Dallas Center in central Iowa had approximately half of their corn planted before being drowned out by weekend rains. "We've had too much rain, but we can't stop it. We don't have any choice," said Harold Barrett, Tom's father.

Where crops are already planted, standing water becomes damaging after three days, Taylor said.

The National Weather Service forecasts a chance of showers each day this week, with the greatest chance of storms on Thursday.

I believe we're sitting OK, and most of the farmers are comfortable.

Graham slams Bush on security

BY MANUEL ROIG-FRANZIA
WASHINGTON POST

MIAMI LAKES, Fla. — Sen. Bob Graham, D-Fla., declared his candidacy for president Tuesday, casting himself as a champion of working people and accusing President Bush of ignoring homeland security and of failing to develop an economic plan beyond "tax breaks for the wealthiest Americans."

Graham, 66, who was governor for eight years and has served 16 years in the Senate, made it clear he is ready to take on Bush, offering a withering critique of the president's record.

"He has divided our nation between the few at the very top, who are served by this administration, and the many at the bottom protected by the moral equivalent of duct tape," Graham said.

After months of building his candidacy on homeland-security concerns and differences with Bush on national security — Graham voted against the war in Iraq because he said the first priority should be the war on terrorism — he seemed to stake out new rhetorical ground by also emphasizing class-related themes. He stressed public education and the importance of working Americans during his speech in the idyllic, brick-lined downtown of Miami Lakes, where he earned a fortune by building a town on his family's dairy and pasture lands.

Graham was flanked by hundreds of people he has met over the years during his "Work Days," a long-standing outreach program in which he spends part of a day working alongside bus boys, truck drivers, and other laborers. Workers, such as those arrayed behind him, have been shown "damning indifference" by the Bush administration during the corporate scandals that have led to mass layoffs in the past two years, Graham told the crowd gathered in the sweltering heat at the corner of Main Street and Bull Run.

He lambasted Bush's tax-cut plans, saying the president has "jeopardized our future." Instead, Graham said, he supports "targeted tax cuts," though he did not go into details. The third-term senator touted his votes against the Bush tax-cut plan in 2001 and, again, earlier this year. In his one, albeit passing, swipe at his Democratic presidential opponents, Graham noted that "some who seek to replace" Bush supported the Bush tax-cut plan this year.

"He knows how to sudar la camisa," said Harold Guido, 70, invoking a Spanish phrase about hard work that translated means "sweat the shirt." After Graham's speech, Guido, a Republican who came to Miami 43 years ago from Cuba, said he would cross party lines to support Graham because of his record as a two-term governor of Florida and his support for public education.

Like many in the audience, Guido was encouraged by Graham's criticisms of the war against Iraq. Graham drew applause when he said that Bush invaded Iraq "to settle old scores."

Americans on alert in the Middle East

WASHINGTON (AP) — In an update, the State Department is advising Americans in the Middle East and North Africa of a continuing threat of violence against Americans, including terror.

"Credible information has indicated terrorist groups may be planning attacks against U.S. interests in the Middle East," the department said. "Terrorist actions may include suicide operations, bombings, or kidnappings."

Civilians in the Middle East, including the Persian Gulf area, the Arabian Peninsula, and North Africa, were advised to be careful.

Bush's acerbic budget czar calls it quits

BY DANA MILBANK
WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — It's official: President Bush's sharp-tongued budget director, Mitchell Daniels Jr., will step down.

The long-awaited announcement Tuesday morning that Daniels will resign within the next 30 days clears the way for the feisty former aide to Ronald Reagan to run for governor of Indiana. He is expected to be replaced at the Office of Management and Budget by Clay Johnson, Bush's chief of staff in Texas and an old friend of the president who was recently installed as Daniels's deputy.

"The president appreciates his service to the nation," White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said of Daniels, whom Bush dubbed "the Blade" for his budget-cutting desires. "The president will miss him."

Daniels budget director

The loyal opposition was rather less charitable. David Sirota, a Democratic spokesman for the House Appropriations Committee, fired off a good riddance: "By OMB's own estimates, Daniels has presided over an era which has seen a projected $5.6 trillion [surplus] in 2001 turn into a $2.2

trillion projected deficit today. In short, Mitch Daniels is the clown that turned our fiscal house upside down. Let us pray that the era of deficit creation and fiscal destruction are over."

Daniels, 54, seemed to relish antagonizing lawmakers, with whom he was constantly warring as he sought to cut taxes and restrain government spending. Lawmakers' motto, he once said, is, "Don't just stand there, spend something." Sen. Robert Byrd of West Virginia, the top Democrat on the Senate Appropriations Committee, called him "Little Caesar" and "big mouth."

Unlike other members of Bush's economic team, Daniels's departure shows every sign of being voluntary. Others — Treasury secretary Paul O'Neill and economic adviser Lawrence Lindsey — were pushed out. With the departure earlier this year of Council of Economic Advisers Chairman R. Glenn Hubbard, most of the key players on Bush's economic team have turned over.

Daniels, a former Eli Lilly & Co. executive, has been commuting home on weekends to his wife and daughters in Indiana. He is expected to vie for the GOP gubernatorial nomination with former congressman and 2000 nominee David McIntosh in his bid to succeed Democrat Frank O'Bannon, who is retiring.

City Council passes 19-only ordinance for bars

COUNCIL

Stalkfleet said he hopes bars can implement task-force recommendations by midsummer in order for owners to "get their ducks in the row" before students return.

"I applaud the City Council for giving us the opportunity to prove ourselves," he said. "We will put our best foot forward; otherwise, we will be back here and talking about 21 again."

The 19-ordinance, which will affect the nightlife of many incoming freshmen, marks a dramatic turnaround for a council that was well on its way to passing a 21-ordinance in April.

The reduction of the entrance age from 21 to 19 was introduced by Councilor Connie Champion after intense lobbying from students leaders and bar owners.

For nearly four years, councilors have grappled with alcohol ordinances that have ranged from limiting drink specials to raising the minimum bar entrance age to 21.

The new law carries a $250 fine for offending patrons and escalating fines for bars each time they grant access to people under 19, starting at $100 for the first offense and increasing to $500 for the third.

The measure only applies to establishments that receive more than 50 percent of their revenue from alcohol sales. Bar owners will be responsible for providing the city attorney's office with a verified statement from a certified public accountant by Aug. 1, that will show the establishment's sales.

The ordinance was granted expedited consideration upon request of city officials, in order for it to pass before students leave for the summer.

not education" after she decided to attend Kirkwood.

The average wage for a refugee arriving in Iowa in 2001 was $8.08 — six cents less than for those relocated in 2000, bureau statistics show.

Attending class full-time was the only way to get a full-tuition federal grant, Venantie Botembe said, yet it has only left time for a 24-hour-a-week job on the psychiatric ward of the UI Hospitals and Clinics. Paired with her husband's 30-hour-a-week tailoring job at Ewers Men's Store, the Botembes' income now disqualifies them from collecting welfare or food stamps, yet leaves little money for such expenses as car insurance. Or the $89 basketball shoes for her 16-year-old son Nico's City High sophomore team. Or a rented-tuxedo for prom. Or a lone Lego set for Aaron's 7th birthday party.

"When I take my kids to the mall with not a penny in my pocket, I feel miserable," she said. "America is not meant for poor people."

Venantie Botembe says the constant money bind taxes her emotions, too. The once-gregarious lady who, in Africa, "knew everyone" and would often invite friends to dinner has become reticent, prone to sighs and tears — only partly abated by her Medicaid-funded Celexa stress pills.

And Botembes' fiscal woes will only intensify when her six other children living with her extended family in Congo get their plane tickets to Iowa, an estimated cost of $12,000.

Johnson said refugees often harbor unrealistic expectations of future life in the fabled land of freedom and democracy. Some have told him that the officers at the refugee camp told them they'd get a free car and three years of education. One Vietnamese man was disappointed that the president was not at the airport to shake his hand as he stepped down from the plane.

"All they know about America is through movies; they don't know for most of us life is a struggle," Johnson said. "But on the other hand, refugees are survivors. They might not become a congressman or a CEO, but they'll do OK, and their kids will do even better."

Eugenie Dwalya, still wearing her cotton uniform from work as a nursing assistant at Lantern Hill Nursing Home, recounts her tenure delivering babies alone in Congo after five years of nursing school. The mother of five, whose husband is currently seeking asylum to join her, will take the Iowa nursing-board exam in December.

"Sometimes I feel like challenging the system," she says of the barriers that keep her washing off seniors instead of afterbirth.

Jale Amina, a Congolese on respite from engineering school at Los Angeles Community College to earn money in Iowa City, tells Dwalya not to try.

"Don't waste your time," he said in his thickly French-inflected English. "That's the American way, baby. They don't care."

UI officials condemn cheating

CHEATING

"We have university policies against academic dishonesty," Lopes said. "We don't have a policy that deals with cases where students assert that they've been dishonest."

In the May 1 interview, Gabler said that he often looked at others' tests and also described how he once stole a copy of an upcoming test from a TA's office. He said he was often able to get similar tests from previous years.

On May 5, Gabler, worried about possible ramifications, backed off from some of those admissions in a follow-up interview but acknowledged making the statements and that he knew his name could be used in the newspaper when he said them.

He did confirm that he personally got a hold of tests from previous years for "a very large percentage" of his classes, sometimes from fraternities that have a file of old tests, but he said he wasn't sure if that was prohibited. He said it is the instructors' fault for not changing the tests.

Maxson said using such recycled tests from previous years may not violate the student code.

Gabler said that he tapered off that practice recently as he got into higher-level classes for which the tests were harder to find.

Stephen Williamson, the chairman of the economics department, said he was "disturbed" by Gabler's comments but was unsure that the admission constituted evidence of cheating.

"I haven't been through a case like this," he said.

Gabler was the only student who spoke on the record for Tuesday's story. Other students described the great lengths they went to cheat, including programming calculators, hiding cheat sheets on gum wrappers, and playing recorded answers on a music device hidden under a stocking cap.

UI Provost Jon Whitmore, the school's top academic officer, said he saw the article but was too busy to read it Tuesday. He acknowledged that there was an "awareness" and a "general attempt" to quell cheating but the university has not yet "found the magic formula."

Hawkeye residents air their grievances

APARTMENTS

Jones admitted that the materials used to construct the facilities were cheap and that the apartments are in poor condition, a reality he experienced as a resident of the complex in 1968.

And although he asked Helen Baker, the manager of University Apartments, to address such minor issues as replacing thermostats and stoves, Jones said he could not make any immediate changes to the buildings nor sign two contracts presented to him by residents that would ensure improvements at Hawkeye. Jones said he could not sign the contracts because they were poorly worded.

"There is nothing on the [petition] list that can be done in two years," he said, adding that improvements may take up to 10 years. State funds are not allocated to fund housing, forcing the university to look elsewhere for money, he said, adding that the university's goal is to rebuild the complexes from the ground up.

The university has been "struggling with this for years," said Maggie Van Oel, the director of Residence Services, adding that the conditions are partly due to how residents keep up the units and the inferior building materials.

Meanwhile, Hawkeye residents say they are living with high humidity problems that lead to condensation and mold, high energy bills, stoves without exhaust fans, faulty appliances, no laundry facilities, and slow modem connections.

One issue — the total absence of sidewalks for children and the handicapped — did garner a promise by Jones to promptly address the problem within a month.

"These facilities blatantly violate Americans with Disability Act regulations," said Samuel Gerbyshak, a Hawkeye resident who was confined to a wheelchair for four months.

UI graduate student Ying Kang, a Hawkeye resident, said she is disgusted by the ants, roaches, and other pests that creep into her small second-story apartment. The conditions have remained the same for her three years in the complex, she said.

"I have bought all kinds of things to kill the insects," she said. "But it is still a huge problem in the neighborhood."

Guard aids twister cleanup

BY SCOTT CHARTON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PIERCE CITY, Mo. — National Guardsmen bound for Iraq returned instead to their tornado-flattened hometown of Pierce City to help clean up splintered homes and businesses and check on their loved ones Tuesday after twisters killed at least 40 people in three states.

One person was still listed as missing Tuesday in this southwestern Missouri town.

The death toll reached 18 in Missouri with the discovery of a child's body outside Pierce City, and it rose to 15 in Tennessee after a man was found dead in a field near Jackson. The storms Sunday night also were blamed for at least seven deaths in Kansas.

Severe weather returned to both Kansas and Missouri Tuesday afternoon, as the National Weather Service issued tornado warnings for 14 counties, including Cole County — where everyone from lawmakers and students touring the Capitol were evacuated to the building's basement.

"I never thought this would happen twice," said Molly Manes, a 14-year-old who was visiting the Capitol on Tuesday. She lives in Fair Play, a town east of Stockton, and Sunday's tornadoes destroyed four of her family's barns.

"It's pretty scary," she said. "It's pretty unreal."

There were several reports of touchdowns and some minor damage but no injuries from the new batch of storms.

Members of the Missouri National Guard's 203rd Engineering Battalion had been at the Army's Fort Leonard Wood, approximately 75 miles from Pierce City, working on paperwork for their deployment to Iraq, when their cell phones started ringing with calls about the tornado.

Judge allows Malvo statement

BY TOM JACKMAN
WASHINGTON POST

Almost all of the lengthy and detailed statement that sniper suspect Lee Boyd Malvo gave to investigators in Fairfax County, Va., in November 2002 will be allowed as evidence at his capital murder trial this fall, a Fairfax judge ruled Tuesday morning.

Fairfax Circuit Court Judge Jane Marum Roush discarded arguments by Malvo's lawyers that the suspect, then 17, had requested a lawyer at the outset of questioning, that police illegally kept Malvo's lawyers away from him, and that he automatically had a right to a lawyer because he'd been charged the previous day.

"I conclude," Roush wrote, "that Malvo's statement, 'Do I get to talk to my attorneys?' was not a request for counsel."

Malvo, now 18, is charged with the Oct. 14 killing of Linda Franklin, 47, outside a Home Depot store in the Seven Corners area. He was arrested Oct. 24 with John Allen Muhammad, 42, who is also facing capital murder charges in Prince William County in the Oct. 9 slaying of Dean Harold Meyers in Manassas.

Malvo and Muhammad have been charged with murder in all 10 fatal sniper shootings in the Washington area, which occurred in a three-week period in October 2002.

Malvo and Muhammad initially were held in federal custody after their arrest while sleeping in a car at a Frederick County, Maryland, rest stop. But on Nov. 7, federal charges against both were dismissed, and they were shipped to Virginia. Malvo arrived at Fairfax police headquarters about 4 p.m. and was taken to an interview room by homicide Detective June Boyle and FBI Special Agent Brad Garrett.

Boyle testified at a hearing last week that for the first 90 minutes, she and Garrett made small talk with Malvo while they waited for his dinner to arrive and then for him to eat it. One of Malvo's first comments, Boyle said, was, "Do I get to talk to my attorneys?" Boyle said she told him yes. "Because the lawyers told me not to talk to the cops until they get here."

The conversation continued. Around 5:30 p.m., Boyle said, she began questioning Malvo more specifically about the sniper shootings. At 5:55 p.m., she said, she read Malvo his Miranda rights to remain silent and to have a lawyer present. She said after reading each right, she asked Malvo, "Do you understand?" and each time he said yes. Malvo signed the form with an X. Boyle testified that she then asked Malvo four different times whether he was certain he wanted to talk without a lawyer present. Again, Boyle said, each time Malvo said yes.

Roush ruled that everything Malvo said before he signed the Miranda rights form could not be used at his trial. But those statements were fairly general concerning the shootings, and referred to Muhammad only as "his friend." According to a summary prepared by prosecutors, Malvo said, "the people killed had a right to survive ... when you say you're going to do something, you do it."

Malvo's statements after he signed the Miranda form are more specific, according to a separate summary of them obtained by the Washington Post. "She came into my range, and within two seconds, I fired," Malvo allegedly said of the killing of Franklin.

Ashcroft: Art looters pros

BY JOSEPH COLEMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LYON, France — Iraqi museums pillaged after the war were looted by organized thieves who knew exactly what they wanted and may have already taken priceless items out of the country, U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft said Tuesday.

He spoke at an Interpol conference aimed at creating a database listing pieces of art and historical objects stolen in the aftermath of the war.

A main theme at the two-day Interpol conference, which concluded Tuesday, was how much officials still don't know about the pillaging — who carried it out, how organized the looting was, and how many pieces are missing.

Ashcroft, however, said investigators have indications the looting was a professional job.

"From the evidence that has emerged, there is a strong case to be made that the looting and theft of the artifacts were perpetrated by organized criminal groups — criminals who knew precisely what they were looking for," he said.

His account matches comments by others — including officials at Baghdad's National Museum — that at least some looters had access to museum keys and could distinguish copies from real pieces of art.

For example, looters who entered a reinforced storage area left three rooms full of artifacts untouched but almost emptied a cabinet at the back of the building containing hundreds of small — but valuable — ancient cylinders used as signature seals.

"It is clear that the person who did this had intimate knowledge of the museum and its storage practices," said Lt. Col. Matthew Bogdanos, who is leading a U.S. inquiry into the damage done by looters at the museum.

Ashcroft did not say whether he suspected international organized crime, such as the Mafia, but others at the Lyon conference said they had no such evidence.

"We are waiting for more information," said Jean-Pierre Jouanny, an Interpol specialist in the theft of cultural objects.

Lack of reliable information has turned out to be a major obstacle to retrieval, experts say. Cultural officials say they have not been able to get access to records in Iraq that will help shed light on what pieces are missing.

Speaking in Baghdad, Bogdanos said that 38 items were missing from the main gallery, but museum officials were still trying to establish inventories for several external sites where artifacts were transferred before the allied invasion.

Every day, items are being returned to the museum, ranging from an inscribed cornerstone from King Nebuchadnezzar's 7th century B.C. Babylon palace to curios sold at the Baghdad airport gift shop.

Iraq's museums held millennia-old artworks from the Assyrian, Sumerian, and Babylonian cultures. Ancient Mesopotamia — modern-day Iraq — was the cradle of urban civilization. Some experts fear thousands of artworks, including priceless antiquities, may be missing.

Interpol Secretary-General Ronald Noble said a top task was to collect and distribute descriptions of missing objects. He said such information was still sorely lacking.

"Right now, we are just operating on rumors and anecdotal evidence," he said.

Noble added that after the 1991 Gulf War, Interpol was able to log only one looted item into its database. That item was recovered two years ago, he said.

Another obstacle is the lack of a coherent police force inside Iraq.

U.S. says it seized Iraqi biolab

BY WALTER PINCUS AND MICHAEL DOBBS
WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — A suspected mobile biological-weapons lab has been recovered in northern Iraq, a development that senior U.S. officials said Tuesday would lend support to Bush administration contentions that the government of deposed Iraqi President Saddam Hussein had a banned weapons program.

A senior administration official said the Pentagon will announce today the results of a two-week investigation into a tractor-trailer truck stolen from a government depot in the northern Iraqi town of Mosul and later handed over to U.S. forces. He said equipment found on the truck included a fermenter bolted to the floor that could be used for the production of biological agents.

The official said the truck and the equipment inside it had been cleaned with bleach and therefore did not show any identifiable residue of biological agents. But intelligence analysts have concluded that "there doesn't seem to be any legitimate use for it, other than as a biolab."

The existence of Iraqi weapons of mass destruction, in violation of United Nations resolutions dating back to 1991, formed a major part of the Bush administration's rationale for invading Iraq and overthrowing Saddam. But the administration has been unable to point to concrete evidence of illegal Iraqi weapons activity, nearly a month after the fall of Baghdad to U.S. forces.

The truck-mounted lab is of the type described by Secretary of State Colin Powell to the U.N. Security Council in February, when he outlined what he said was a pattern of concealment by the Iraqi government. But intelligence officials said Tuesday they were still trying to determine whether it was actually ever used to produce biological agents and, if so, when it was operating.

The search for illegal weapons in Iraq has coincided with a hunt for billions of dollars in financial assets accumulated by Saddam and his family. Treasury and State Department officials said Tuesday that investigators were attempting to recover an estimated $1 billion in cash seized from the Iraqi Central Bank in Baghdad on Saddam's instructions in the hours leading up to the U.S. attack on Iraq.

The size of the bank heist, which reportedly involved enough $100 bills to fill three tractor-trailers, was an indication of the challenges facing investigators as they seek to track down billions of dollars in ill-gotten Iraqi assets scattered around the world. Much of the money was raised through illegal oil-smuggling operations to circumvent U.N. sanctions that were imposed in the wake of Iraq's invasion of Kuwait in August 1990.

Bush names civilian to top Iraq post

BY MIKE ALLEN
WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — President Bush named longtime diplomat L. Paul Bremer III to be the presidential envoy to Iraq Tuesday as part of what the administration called an effort to enlist more countries in postwar operations.

Bremer, who will serve as the civilian administrator of Iraq, is expected to head to his new post by early next week, officials said. He will report to Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and will have authority over Jay Garner, the retired Army lieutenant general who has been in charge of the reconstruction effort.

Bremer
civilian administrator

A White House announcement said Bremer "will serve as the senior coalition official in Iraq."

Bush appeared briefly in the Oval Office with Bremer, 61, and called him "a can-do-type person" who has "the full confidence of all of us in the administration that he can get the job done."

"He shares the same values ... as most Americans share, and that is our deep desire, to have an orderly country in Iraq that is free and at peace, where the average citizen has a chance to achieve his or her dreams," said Bush, referring to Bremer by his nickname, Jerry.

Administration officials said they hoped Bremer's arrival would elicit more cooperation, including financial assistance, from countries that had been withholding support while the reconstruction effort had more of a military hue.

Officials said Bush's speech on May 1 declaring the end of "major combat operations" made it possible to win assistance from countries willing to participate in humanitarian and stabilization efforts, but not military action.

Bush did not mention Garner, the director of the Pentagon's Office of Reconstruction and Humanitarian Assistance.

One solution to the 21 ordinance problem

As the City Council considers an ordinance banning those under 21 from Iowa City bars, opponents offer the predictable responses. Bar owners object to losing the opportunity to make money from an illegal activity, and students fight for their right to party. It's time for some thinking outside the box.

I start from the proposition that I am not opposed to drinking. Those who know me know that I actually enjoy a few beers or glasses of wine. I do object, however, to the damage that irresponsible excessive drinking leaves in its wake. I see no reason why the citizens or taxpayers of Iowa City should have to put up with the public urination, vomiting, litter, noise, fights, and other mayhem that accompany a typical weekend (or these days, even Thursday) night in the downtown area.

Students and other young people argue with some justification that they are adults, old enough to vote, drive, and fight for their country, and ought to be able to drink like adults as well. Memo to students: When someone asks your mom or dad at work on Monday how their weekend was, they don't say, "Dude, I was sooooo wasted!" If you want to be treated like an adult, how about acting like one?

The problem, as I see it, is that young people in this country are rarely given the opportunity to learn how to drink responsibly. According to the law, drinking is strictly forbidden until age 21, and then anything goes. We take a different approach with cars; we give young drivers permission to drive with restrictions in the hope that they will learn through experience to handle a car. As they demonstrate increased proficiency, the restrictions are eased until eventually adult privileges are granted. In that spirit, I offer the following modest suggestion: Drinking Permits.

To obtain a Drinking Permit, a person between the ages of 18 and 20 would have to take an appropriate short course — Drinker's Ed — and pass a written test. The course would explain the effects of drinking on mental and physical performance, teach how much is reasonable to drink within a given time period, show scary movies about the horrible consequences of excessive drinking, and so on. Think of the jobs this would provide for recent graduates of the College of Public Health. Under-21 year olds would be allowed to drink in bars, restaurants, and elsewhere if they had a valid Drinking Permit. If all they want to do is listen to live music, dance, and have a few drinks, this should keep both them and the bar owners happy. The Drinking Permit would be revoked, however, if its possessor were convicted of an alcohol-related offense such as public intoxication or driving while under the influence. Perhaps one warning could be allowed. The penalty for underage drinking without a permit would be severe, considerably more so than the current penalties for PAULA offenses, as would the penalty for serving alcohol to an underage person without a permit. This would reduce the amount of damage caused by irresponsible drinkers, to the benefit of citizens and taxpayers.

The system would give young people the right to drink, but an incentive to do so responsibly. Hopefully, by the time they reached 21, young people would have learned how to drink more responsibly and would have outgrown the desire to drink themselves silly. After all, to be old and wise, you must first be young and stupid. No doubt this isn't a perfect solution. There are plenty of over-21-year-olds who drink irresponsibly, too. But given the mess we are in, with bar owners turning a blind eye to underage drinking, Iowa City the binge-drinking capital of America, the City Council proposing to exclude young people from bars entirely, and opponents pushing for a referendum to overturn any such ordinance, how could it make things worse?

Bowl junket ban the right move, but late

The UI Board in Control of Athletics voted last week to impose a ban on any university-funded extraneous travel to postseason football games. The move comes after the board came under fire for sending 12 members and 11 guests to January's Orange Bowl in Miami, all paid for by the university. Under the new rules, only the board's chairman, currently education Professor Nicholas Colangelo, gets to go on the UI's dime. The board's ruling is the appropriate one, even if it did come too late to save some much-needed money.

What is alarming about the board's vote is how close it was. Of the 16 members who voted, seven cast their ballots against the restrictions. A common refrain among the dissenters was the need to represent the UI. Board member Keith Carter, an ophthalmology professor, remarked that "they invited us to go as representatives of the university. We had an obligation to go; that's why we went." But what of the 11 spouses who went along? No one better represents the UI at a football function than the wife of an ophthalmology professor.

There's no denying that playing in a big-time

The Athletics Board's decision not to send all its members to bowl games is correct, but the timing raises questions.

game such as the Orange Bowl is good not only for a football program but the school as a whole. For much of last fall and winter, Iowa got the kind of positive media exposure that public-relations types dream of.

However, it was still just a football game. UI law Professor James Tomkovicz, who was somehow able to refuse his "obligatory" free trip to Miami in protest, pointed out that board members are no better representatives of the university than are other faculty members. He makes a valid point; perhaps instead of sending 12 people connected with the Athletics Department, the university should send a dozen professors from a wide range of academic disciplines. After all, education always comes before athletics at the UI, right?

Finally, although the board did make the right move, its timing is suspect. One can't help but wonder if this move would have been made if the football team was expected to match last year's success. It's easy to cop out of a bowl game in Detroit or Seattle when you've already had a bite of the big time. At least they'll always have the memories.

Living a sustainable lifestyle starts at (small) home

Whoa. So my column is due in a few hours. OK, so maybe it's time for me to turn off CNBC, get up on the soapbox, and preach about sustainable salvation and eco-friendly living. Yeah, you know what I'm talking about. Others refer to this as the type of lifestyle that isn't going to submerge you into debt and deplete the world of natural resources at the same time.

"Hey Alex," you say. "Curbing consumption is kind of like hiring a consulting firm to transform a company by cutting down unnecessary and wasteful expenses. And more efficiency sounds like good business!"

Ah, yes, but calm down, my clever and compassionate capitalist friend. Ever read Winnie the Pooh growing up? Boy, I did. I loved that bear. And remember how everyone in the Hundred Acre Wood lived simply? Owl lived in a one-room tree house, rabbit had an underground home, and piglet abided in the bottom of a beech tree.

Well, that's kind of like the Small House Society here in Johnson County. People from computer analysts to teachers are treading new ground for humanity on their tiny turfs. You see, they're all convening to erect their 100- to 400-square-foot low-cost houses on nearby land.

Yet these are rather atypical cozy cottages. Only cedar wood and industrial-grade particle-board made from wheat straw make up the exteriors. All throughout the tiny habitats you might find such materials as expanded polystyrene blocks, recycled synthetic shingles, and insulation made from recycled paper.

Also, you can sometimes expect to find miniature wind-turbines conjoined with scanty solar panels providing electricity. Isn't that cool? No more utility bills! And some of the self-sufficient generators pay for themselves after only three to five years — or it can be less if you split the costs with others.

Lately, I've been listening to a few of these folks with admiration, even envy. Everything they have to say seems logical, really. Personal bankruptcy in the United States is up 400 percent since 1980. And currently, more than 1 million Americans are behind in their mortgage payments, many of whom are trying to juggle a lifestyle that they can't sustain.

So embracing the lifestyle of living well beneath one's financial means makes sense for a lot of people. Not just financially but psychologically, too. First, retirement comes earlier. And second, less space and less upkeep mean less stress. Then, with extra time and less anxiety, there's more free time for the important things in life — such as spending time with friends and family, self-reflection, dreaming, and self-expression. Simplicity promotes sanity.

Plus, there's something appealing about being young and not paying rent anymore. Especially when you're talking about low-income housing — small studio-apartment complexes that are older bring in the highest relative profit margins of 15 to 20 percent for most property-management groups here in town. Low-income tenants, especially students, are always getting ripped off.

But if you were a student and lived in a little house for a few years, not only would you pay less a month in mortgage payments, you'd own property by graduation.

Yet after hearing all the rationale, I can't help but wonder what's stopping people from living in smaller houses and, more importantly, being content?

Perhaps people buy into new ideas for the same reasons people buy new products. Most of the time, it's all about the packaging or word-of-mouth, right?

So then, I'm wondering, what's it going to take to get people to start looking at the way they live? If we paid such celebrities as Michael Jordan, Britney Spears, Brad Pitt, and Martha Stewart to live in little houses, would the masses follow? Or what if being a smart consumer was presented as being cool, rather than "liberal" or eccentric? Would people start basing their identity off what was "in" as we do with just about everything else?

Or what if we didn't have magazines such as Unique Homes advertising multimillion-dollar estates? Would people then not want what they didn't know about? Or is it human to be horny for something bigger? What are the causes behind the need for pathological and ongoing material growth?

At the core, I'd speculate that living in smaller living areas makes sense to all of us when we're honest with ourselves. The same is true for community-focused living. But we're not going to enter this sustainable world with more talking, preaching, or logical arguments. And personally, I'm not even moving into a little house soon. Not one that's under 400 square feet, anyway. It just seems too extreme. And it's not because I haven't heard the arguments.

Rather, it's just how I feel. And until more social activists begin to understand the science of persuasion, the emotions of the masses, and the health of the soul, I'd guess that there's going to be little demand for little houses.

Sisters, insanity, and a struggle over time

"Hummingbirds fly on the wings of eagles," Jeannine Coulombe's mother said one morning while lounging on the wooden deck overlooking Rainy Lake, Minn. As they watched eagles fly over the glistening lake, Coulombe thought her mother's mythic tale was a beautiful metaphor for a play on relationships. From this, she wrote her new play, Hummingbirds.

Set in the rural Midwest, Hummingbirds portrays the relationship between two sisters and one's constant struggle to keep the other from crossing the line into insanity. The play covers a large span of the sisters' lives and reflects their bond woven and unraveled over time.

"The story is told in the framework of one sister's memory," Coulombe said. It is a human story about family that everyone can relate to.

Hummingbirds is the last play Coulombe will write before graduation in May from the UI Playwrights' Workshop. Having been born in International Falls, Minn., and lived in New York, the Netherlands, and Minneapolis, Coulombe wanted to come to Iowa City for "one of the best programs in the country."

"The program has allowed me to emerge as a theater artist," she said. "I have tried to do nothing but write while I was here, and I was able to concentrate solely on my craft."

Along with being playwright and director of Hummingbirds, Coulombe has established herself by winning the UI Maebaum Award in 2002 for her play Beakers and the National AIDS Fund CFDA-Vogue Initiative Award for Playwrighting from the Kennedy Center in 2001.

Hummingbirds will be performed at 5:30 and 9 p.m. today in the David Thayer Theatre.

Cashing in on the legend of the King

BY DANNY KIMBALL
THE DAILY IOWAN

The story of Lisa Marie Presley is quite interesting — being the only child of Elvis Presley certainly ensures that. Being the ex-wife of Michael Jackson and movie star Nicholas Cage doesn't hurt, either.

Now, Presley is going public and telling all about her past in magazines and on television — oh, and she just happens to have released her debut album, To Whom It May Concern.

She seems to be ubiquitous in the various media, and she barely tries to conceal her exploitation of her status as the daughter of the King. But while her publicity stunts are in the forefront, her album is perhaps the more interesting story: After spending 35 years resisting the temptation to enter the music industry, it turns out that she is actually not a bad singer. However, while the album is surprising in many ways, it remains no more than the pop status quo.

The obvious strength of the album is Presley's deep, sultry voice. She clearly has inherited at least a little bit of Daddy's chops. The big problem, however, is that the songs are grossly overproduced. The tunes are mostly average pop-rock songs in the vein of Sheryl Crow, and the superfluous backing vocals, guitars, keyboards, and drum loops added by producer Andrew Slater take the focus away from Presley. The songs follow the standard pop formula used to gloss over under-talented vocalists, but in this case, Presley would have been better off standing alone.

CD REVIEW

To Whom It May Concern
Lisa Marie Presley

The album does exhibit a surprising depth in the lyrics. Having the biggest rock star of all time as a father, a rather screwed-up childhood, and a marriage to Jackson, Presley clearly has quite a bit of material from which to work with. Many of the songs on To Whom include an almost Alanis Morissette-like anger. The first single, "Lights Out," makes clear references to growing up in Memphis, while other songs deal with past relationships and her self-doubt. While the issues she deals with are heavier than the typical pop subject matter, she comes off as relying too heavily on the attention-grabbing aspects of her life.

So, by unveiling her juicy past to the media, Presley can thrust herself into the spotlight and make a rather poor record a big hit. This is unfortunate, because it seems that if she didn't depend on the legacy of her father and fancy production tricks, she does have some talent to succeed on her own.

However, it's always been far easier to manufacture pop stars through publicity and money than to let them develop on their own. These days are no different.

quote of the day

I am loath to think of an aircraft carrier being used as an advertising backdrop for a presidential political slogan, and yet that is what I saw.
— Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., on President Bush landing on an aircraft carrier in a fighter jet. The White House admitted Tuesday the president could have flown by helicopter.

horoscopes

Wednesday, May 7, 2003 by Eugenia Last

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Don't let things get to you. Control your reactions, and spare yourself grief. Be more tolerant of others, especially today.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Organizational functions will turn out to be interesting and could lead to something you least expect. Your kindness will not be dismissed lightly and should bring about sincere gestures in return.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Financial opportunities are evident, and you must be prepared to take advantage of whatever tips come your way. You will probably be asked to help out a relative or close friend.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Don't let your negative attitude force the ones you love out of your life. A motivational seminar will do you a lot of good. If you are optimistic, you'll attract upbeat people.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You'll be down in the dumps today. Do a little soul-searching, and discover what and who is actually at fault.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your practical approach will attract some very worthy people into your life. Get involved in groups of an intellectual nature. You will discover how fun and rewarding helping others can be.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Someone is likely to misinterpret you today. Be precise in what you say. Get help if you need it, but most of all, stay calm.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): This can be a very progressive day if you share your thoughts. Someone who opposes your beliefs may try to slant your intentions, so be precise.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): It's a day to think and sort through things, but it's certainly not a day for new beginnings. Projects started today will be a waste of time. Enjoy the comfort of your home and the company of loved ones.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You'll have regrets if you let a disagreement ruin your plans. Be careful how you handle other people; feelings will be easily hurt today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): How to earn money will be on your mind. Use your imagination, and don't be afraid to start your own small business. Get advice from someone who has experience.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You will be in a strange state of mind today. Love will manifest itself in the strangest ways. Be sure to get out and socialize.

COLLEGES

Alabama looks for stability after Price

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Alabama interviewed two more former Crimson Tide players for its coaching vacancy — NFL assistants Sylvester Croom and Richard Williamson.

University President Robert Witt and Athletics Director Mal Moore interviewed Croom of the Green Bay Packers and Williamson of the Carolina Panthers on Monday, according to newspaper reports. They also reportedly met with Miami Dolphins assistant Mike Shula on Sunday.

The Birmingham News and Mobile Register reported a decision could come as early as Tuesday, but university spokesman Larry White said no announcement was scheduled and the job hasn't been offered.

"I don't know where that's coming from," White said. "Those are inaccurate. We certainly are not in any negotiations."

Witt fired Mike Price on May 3 after the 57-year-old coach, already warned about his behavior, spent hundreds of dollars at a Pensacola, Fla., topless bar. A woman reportedly ordered about $1,000 in food from room service sent to his hotel room the following morning.

Eustachy brought highs and lows to Iowa State

BY CHUCK SCHOFFNER
 ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMES — The conference championships Iowa State won under Larry Eustachy brought the school some of its brightest moments.

Over the last week, Eustachy was the key figure as it went through one of its darkest periods, battering the image of this normally tranquil campus and leaving a basketball program in disarray and a community divided.

"I don't ever remember an issue as divisive as this," said Dr. Jon Fleming, an Ames physician and longtime Iowa State booster. "It's been an ugly, messy time."

Now the university must patch it all up after Eustachy's resignation.

Eustachy

After first vowing to fight for his job, Eustachy stepped aside Monday, one week after the publication of embarrassing photos of him drinking and kissing young women at a fraternity party. With a $1.1 million salary, he had been Iowa's highest-paid state employee and was the AP national coach of the year in 2000.

"We've seen it in politics, but never thought of it happening here," said Matt Moles, a sophomore at Iowa State. "It was educational in how fast a person can fall from grace."

The photos were accompanied by reports of Eustachy drinking at parties with students in Columbia, Mo., and Manhattan, Kan. The Missouri student who took the snapshots sent them to the Des Moines Register, triggering a week marked by one startling development after another:

• Eustachy revealed on April 30 that he is an alcoholic and is seeking treatment. Three hours later, Athletics Director Bruce Van De Velde suspended Eustachy and recommended Eustachy's problem is only one of many for Iowa State University.

IOWA ROWING

Sophomore sensation

Trannel takes to rowing like a duck to ... you know

BY ADAM JACOBI
 THE DAILY IOWAN

According to sophomore rower Michelle Trannel, the coaches look for four things: strength, speed, technique, and mental toughness.

The strength and mental toughness make all the difference in the world for Trannel.

Last year, Michelle Trannel was a freshman, rowing for the first time in her life. She was on the novice team, and not even on their first boat. As rowers go, she's undersized, at only 5-5. One wouldn't expect much for this year out of a short, inexperienced rower.

Things changed, however, when she took the 10K ergometer test and posted the best results on the team.

"She tested first in a test she'd never taken before," head coach Mandi Kowal said.

Trannel's performance earned her way onto the first varsity-eight, Iowa's top boat. The V8+ is now No. 16 in the nation with one meet left, and the top 16 varsity-eight boats go to the NCAA tournament.

"I'd like to go to nationals," said the remarkably bashful Trannel.

Despite her quiet demeanor, Trannel's best quality is her ultra-competitive nature.

The coxswain on the V8+, senior Natalie Moretz, acknowledged the rarity of going from the second novice boat to the top varsity boat in the course of a year.

"She's the person who hates to lose and loves to win," Moretz said. "She's in the seventh seat, so she's the second face I see. It's really motivating to see her face and how much she wants to win."

Kowal agrees.

Curtis Lehmkuhl/The Daily Iowan

Michelle Trannel was named second-team all-Big Ten as a sophomore. Teammates say her competitive nature has helped drive her success.

"She can deal with a lot of discomfort and keep pushing herself," she said. "Not a lot of people can do that."

Not even the early-morning practices faze her. While most people regard 5:30-8 a.m. as time best spent in bed, Trannel takes a different perspective.

"The early-morning practices aren't a bad thing at all," she said. "I like them. After a while, you get used to getting up early, and it makes me feel really productive to have two hours of hard work in by 8 a.m."

Though rowing is a recent endeavor for Trannel, being an athlete is nothing new. In high school, she participated in track, softball, and cross-country, taking karate on the side.

Her experience in sports enhances her sense of competition. "The most fun part of rowing is racing," Trannel said. "When we're going so fast down the course bow to bow with crews alongside of us and each boat is taking shifts to surge ahead, it is so intense. I love it."

The best part about Trannel's varsity career is that it's just beginning. With less than two years of rowing experience, she's already rowing at an all-conference level — garnering second-team all-Big Ten honors last weekend at the conference tournament.

But Kowal said the sophomore still can improve.

"She's 5-5, but she's 5-5 of pure muscle," Moretz said. "She has a high ceiling. She could be better technically, which would make her faster."

Kowal also said Trannel is still raw and "learning every day." But the coach is quick to acknowledge her potential.

"By her senior year, she'll be one of our top performers in our program," Kowal said. "If she stays healthy and works out in the offseason, she can be one of the top athletes we've had come through here."

Roadtrip offers Cuervo Girls, Toot Toots, and errors

The Kansas City Royals organization is one of the best in baseball — and not just because it had the Cuervo Girls at the stadium Monday night for Cinco de Mayo.

The Royals were the only club on our trip generous enough to provide us with press credentials, which allowed free access to the Kansas City facility. The Royals were nearly as generous as the helpings we took from the all-you-can-eat lunch buffet at the Toot Toot family restaurant Monday afternoon.

The Toot Toot, a Bethany, Mo., eatery, is the sort of place with a sign on the restroom wall reading, "If your aim's that bad, sit down," where customers don T-shirts proclaiming, "Rush Limbaugh for President!" Still, the buffet was the perfect place to break up the drive between Des Moines and Kansas City. If you visit, remember to wear your overalls and cover up your Nader/Laduke bumper sticker.

Maybe the Cubs' extra-inning win we saw on Sunday brought us good luck; Monday's cloudless, 80-degree conditions at Kansas City's Kauffman Stadium were the first real baseball weather we encountered. We even ran into some Cubs fans in Kansas City, including Michael, age 5, who thought he liked the "Cubs a little bit more" than the hometown Royals.

Michael was among the 21,232 fans on their feet when the Royals won the game in the bottom of the ninth. The atmosphere in the stadium was "like a playoff game," said Royals manager Tony Pena after the contest. "The fans have a lot to do with [tonight's] win."

Boston shortstop Nomar Garciaparra was responsible for the loss, committing an error in the bottom of the final frame that allowed the winning run to cross home plate. "The ball went between my legs," said Garciaparra in the locker room. "That's what happened. Game over." He then turned to his locker and dropped his towel to start getting dressed. It didn't take a rocket scientist to figure out the interview was over once Nomar showed us his bare ass.

You might think that attending the manager's post-game press conference and player interviews would make a person want to be a sportswriter. To be honest, the thought did cross our minds.

But watching the game from behind the press box glass and eating the press-club meal of dry fried chicken made the decision to stick with law much easier. While it was a great experience, we prefer to watch the game with the fans.

Tuesday, we'll see if the Red Sox can bounce back. Go Nomah!

We know that everyone is wondering how the hot dogs at Kauffman stadium compare with those we tested at Miller Park, Comiskey, and Wrigley. Make sure to read Thursday's column, our last, for the verdict on the dogs in the city known for its barbecue.

Everything Ducky now in Anaheim

BY KEN PETERS
 ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANAHEIM, Calif. — The Mighty Ducks don't have to go far to find a kindred spirit as they make a run at their first Stanley Cup title. The World Series champion Angels play right up the street.

With the Ducks' game against Dallas tied in the third period Monday night, the video board at Anaheim Arena showed Scott Spiezio's dramatic three-run homer in Game 6 of the World Series. Next was a shot of the Angels first baseman sitting in a luxury suite holding his young son.

The caption read, "Game 6 karma."

A few minutes later, defenseman Sandis Ozolinsh knocked a rebound past Stars goaltender Marty Turco with 1:06 remaining to give Anaheim to a 4-3 victory. The Ducks clinched the series, 4-2, and advanced to their first Western Conference finals.

The Ducks, who swept defending Stanley Cup champion Detroit in the first round then knocked off the top-seeded Stars in the second, seem to be benefiting from an Anaheim "halo" effect.

Steve Thomas, acquired by the Ducks from Chicago at the March 11 trading deadline, and teammate Rob Niedermayer recently visited the Angels' clubhouse.

"Spiezio was kind enough to spend a lot of time talking with me and Rob," said Thomas, who had a goal and three assists in the clinching win over Dallas. "He's a real hockey fan. We were walking around the locker room, and I got to talk to Tim Salmon and Mike Scioscia.

"They're a great bunch of guys, and they can appreciate what we're going through, just as we can appreciate exactly what they went through last year."

The Walt Disney Co. owns both the Ducks and Angels, but has agreed in principle to sell the baseball team to Arizona businessman Arturo Moreno, and has the hockey team up for sale.

While the Ducks shocked the Red Wings in the opening round, the Angels' improbable run to their first World Series championship last fall included an opening series win over the defending AL champion New York Yankees.

As the Ducks have built up steam in the postseason, the scene at the arena more and more resembles an indoor version of the nearby baseball stadium that was rocking last October.

With fans banging their plastic "Pond Rockers" — white versions of the red "ThunderStix" used by Angels fans last October — and waving "Fowl Towels," the Ducks trailed early against the Stars.

They moved ahead only to see Dallas come back to tie twice, the final time on Brenden Morrow's goal with 5:11 remaining.

The crowd of 17,174 erupted when Ozolinsh scored, and the roar continued several minutes after the game ended.

"Anytime you hear that and feel the building shaking, people are into it," said rookie coach Mike Babcock. "The crowd was deafening. We couldn't even communicate with each other."

The Ducks next face the winner of the Vancouver-Minnesota series. The Canucks lead, 3-2, heading into Wednesday night's Game 6.

"I'm going to watch," Babcock said. He grinned and added, "I hope they play two more."

Game 7 in that series would be Thursday. Ducks general manager Bryan Murray said the Ducks' first game of the conference finals will be Saturday on the road.

Is Sammy Sosa the best Cub ever?

I must say, I was moved to tears when I read Adam's paean to Mr. Cub, Ernie Banks. Of course, it didn't address the issue of who the greatest Cub ever is, but hey, it would look good on a Hallmark card. Sammy Sosa will never reach the level of adoration that Banks has, true; but when it comes to what happens between the white lines, Slamm'n' Sammy is truly Chicago's Great One.

The easiest way to prove Sammy's superiority is to look at the numbers, the objective black-and-white digits that separate the men from the boys. In his 15-plus years as a Cub, Sosa has hit 475 homer runs, second-most in team history. Second to Banks, you say? Sure, but Ernie took 19 years to hit his 512. Barring a Roberto Clemente-like disaster, Sosa will pass Mr. Cub on both the team and all-time home run lists this season. Sosa also has a higher career batting average and slugging percentage than Banks. By the time his career is over, Sammy will have passed Banks in every major offensive category.

And aaaa? Sure, Banks is the Jesus of the North Side, but let's look at the bigger picture. He was always respected around baseball, but Banks was never feared. Sammy is both. Everywhere the Cubs play, visiting fans wave Dominican Republic flags and chant, "¡Vámonos Sammy!" while knock-kneed opponents issue one intentional walk after another. Since 1998, Sosa has been one of the two or three most feared hitters in baseball, and he is rapidly becoming one of the game's all-time great power men. And although he's 36 years old, Sammy is showing no signs of slowing down — unlike Banks, who drove in 100 runs only twice after he hit the big 30.

Ernie Banks may be Mr. Cub, but when it comes time to take stock of great Cubs players, Sammy Sosa will top the list.

—by Donovan Burba

Sammy Sosa is a great hitter. That much is unquestionable. Unfortunately, there's a difference between being a great baseball player and being a great person. To declare him the Greatest Cub in history is an affront to tradition, good taste, and the other intangibles that make baseball more than just a bunch of millionaires wearing pinstripes and hats.

The designation of Greatest Cub, as any true fan of baseball (see: not Donovan Burba) ought to know, is Mr. Cub himself, Ernie Banks. Before baseball players gained 30 pounds of muscle somehow and pounded the ball into oblivion, there was Ernie, using a magnificent swing and an even better personality to bring light into the darkness that was the erstwhile Cubs of 1953-1977. He was Chicago's patron saint of lost causes — a modern St. Jude, but for a different religion: baseball.

Oh, Ernie could play, too. He was an 11-time All-Star, including a streak of eight years in a row. He hit 300 home runs when it was still rare. He was a first-ballot Hall of Famer. Make no mistake, Mr. Cub earned his respect on the field, but it was his smile and the quintessential baseball quote: "It's a beautiful day for baseball; let's play two." Sammy's awfully good. He'll be in the Hall of Fame, guaranteed. He's not even a bad person, not by a long shot.

But he's not Ernie. Before Michael Jordan, Walter Payton, and Sammy Sosa, Ernie Banks was Chicago's hero. Actor Joe Mantegna put the city's adoration best: "He never complained about his team's bad luck or bad talent, never stopped playing the game with joy, never stopped giving his all, never lost his proud demeanor, and never acted like anything but a winner. He was a symbol of the Cub fans' undiminished resilience. If he could be happy to come to the park each afternoon, then so could we."

Wizards' owner Pollin considers axing Jordan

BY JOSEPH WHITE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Washington Wizards owner Abe Pollin wants to do what he believes is right for his team this time, even if that means saying goodbye to Michael Jordan.

At his state-of-the-union speech to Wizards employees last week, Pollin gave a hint of his mind-set heading into a crucial meeting with Jordan on Wednesday.

Pollin said while he has always been a "league guy," he is now going to do "what's best for the franchise," according to two team sources familiar with the speech and speaking on condition of anonymity.

Pollin's clear implication was that he would not be swayed by anyone when he makes his decision about whether to continue his relationship with Jordan, who had planned to return to the Wizards' front office after his two seasons back on the court.

So, it's unclear if Pollin will welcome Jordan back as president of basketball operations next season. He held the job from January 2000 to September 2001.

At Wednesday's meeting, Jordan will ask for the same authority he had before, Pollin will want to hear Jordan's plans.

"I'm just hoping that Michael and Mr. Pollin will be able to sit down together and get this resolved," coach Doug Collins said, "so we can move forward."

Despite reports of a rift, Jordan said again this week that he wants to return.

"When I came down from the front office to play, I said at that time I wanted to play for two years then resume my duties running the basketball operation," Jordan told the Washington Post. "I always wanted to resume my responsibilities, always."

It's a difficult decision for Pollin, a 79-year-old owner looking for one more title. In the end, he must either turn away the world's most popular basketball personality and start from scratch or give control to someone whose management record is spotty at best.

The meeting comes amid a feeling of general discontent throughout the franchise. Players have been unhappy with Jordan and Collins.

Collins criticized players for being disrespectful. Jordan didn't like his teammates' effort. Pollin's sendoff for Jordan at the last home game was tepid, and his statements about the prospects of Jordan staying on have been surprisingly neutral.

The New York Times reported Sunday that unidentified team executives have concerns about Jordan's work ethic as an executive.

"If they've got a problem with me, I'd like to hear it from them," Jordan told the Post.

Working against Jordan is his record. The Wizards are 110-179 over 3½ seasons since he became the top decision-maker — he still essentially ran the team while he was playing. He acquired every player on the current roster except Jahidi White.

Collins points out that Jordan inherited a salary-cap mess.

"I think it's moving in the right direction," said Collins, whose future will be in doubt if Jordan doesn't return. "For the organization to be in a situation where they'd want to start over, that would be awful."

Washington Wizards owner Abe Pollin shakes hands with Michael Jordan as he presented Jordan with a trophy that commemorated his 30,000-point scoring milestone. Pollin may decide this week to oust Jordan.

Iowa State battles through storm

that he be fired, an action that could not take effect immediately because the coach had five days to appeal.

• Steve Barnes, Eustachy's top assistant, was suspended after allegedly telling a player and his family that they needed to get behind Eustachy and "go after the people that got us." Barnes denied making that remark.

Barnes

• The next day, Iowa State disclosed that Eustachy broke NCAA rules by twice paying players to make free throws. The NCAA suspended Eustachy for one game.

• A student-manager for the basketball team said he was fired because of his support for Eustachy. School officials said the manager yelled profanities and threats during a meeting with Van De Velde.

Weeks before the Eustachy story broke, assistant coach Randy Brown was charged with possession of child pornography after his office computer was seized.

Later, two players were charged with alcohol-related offenses.

"It was surreal," Fleming said. "You just couldn't have written a scenario like that."

Van De Velde's recommendation to fire Eustachy angered many fans, who felt the coach should be given a second chance. Some threatened to withdraw their financial support if Eustachy wasn't the coach, and players threatened to transfer.

Students rallied several times on campus in support of Eustachy, a hyperactive coach who prowled the sideline in a black turtle-neck sweater and guided Iowa State to Big 12 championships in 2000 and 2001. Football player Hiawatha Rutland led chants of "Larry, Larry, Larry" at one rally.

In this stormy atmosphere, the university is trying to present a united front while Van De Velde looks for a new coach. Gary Thompson, an All-American at Iowa State, wonders how the program will be perceived.

"Most coaches will want to know if they're going to have somebody in the administration that supports them," he said. "I'm not saying [Iowa State] won't do that, but it's going to have to sell this new person, if that's his question, that it's going to be behind him."

Thompson said he'll continue to support Iowa State even though he felt Eustachy, who says he wants to coach again, should have been allowed to stay. Another booster, Bob Gitchell, isn't as forgiving. He is giving up his front-row seats at basketball games and ending his donations.

"I hope things work out well. I wish no one ill will through this whole thing," Gitchell said. "The bottom line is I'm just disappointed."

University President Gregory Geoffroy said the administration will insist the new coach's contract contain strong language on behavior.

"All coaches of major intercollegiate athletic teams are highly visible people," he said. "Because of that, they have a unique responsibility to represent the university well."

"It is absolutely essential that any coach we consider understands that."

Geoffroy said he was confident the hiring of a new coach would help reunite the Iowa State community. Fleming thinks the university can count on something else, too.

"Time is an incredible healer," he said. "The wounds are fairly deep right now, but it'll pass. All things come together with time."

Pistons down 76ers in opening game

NBA

ASSOCIATE PRESS

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — The Detroit Pistons didn't want to get off to another bad start.

Richard Hamilton scored 25 points as top-seeded Detroit beat the fourth-seeded Philadelphia 76ers on Tuesday night in Game 1 of the Eastern Conference semifinals, 98-87.

The Pistons lost the opening game of the playoffs to Orlando and was forced to rally to be just the seventh team in NBA history to win a series after trailing 3-1.

Allen Iverson, who led the league in scoring during the first round, had 27 points on 8-21 shooting for the 76ers.

Game 2 is Thursday night in Detroit.

Detroit was in control for much of the game against the Sixers, but it was never comfortable.

after his 24th point gave the Pistons a 77-70 lead with about 10 minutes left. Billups scored 77 points in the final two games of the first-round series against the Magic.

The Sixers scored consecutive baskets to pull within three — the closest they had been since early in the second quarter — but Detroit rookie Mehmet Okur scored six-straight points.

Philadelphia could not get closer than seven points as the Pistons made just enough free throws to seal the win.

The Pistons have not trailed in the second half of any of their last four games.

Detroit's bench, which led the league with 34.1 points a game during the regular season, was a force.

Okur scored a playoff-high 16 while Tayshaun Prince and Corliss Williamson each had eight. Chucky Atkins, who replaced Billups, scored a basket for the first time since Game 5 against the Magic.

GOLF COMMENTARY

Haas follows in father's footsteps

BY DOUG FERGUSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Bill Haas followed his father into the locker room at Quail Hollow Club and sat down for breakfast, a routine he knows well from a dozen or so trips on the PGA Tour.

Tuesday morning was different. The kid isn't at the Wachovia Championship to watch. He's here to play.

Haas not only has a locker next to his father, Jay, but a tee time Thursday morning against a field that includes Masters champion Mike Weir and Davis Love III.

The younger Haas also has plenty of game.

"There are a lot of 'can't-miss' kids who do miss," said Curtis Strange, whose friendship with the father dates to their NCAA titles at Wake Forest in 1975-76. "But from what I know of Bill, he can't miss. He's full of potential. He has a natural swing, and he seems to want it."

The 20-year-old Haas was an All-American at Wake Forest last year as a sophomore and the medalist at the U.S. Amateur, where he lost 1-up in the semifinals to eventual champion Ricky Barnes.

The Wachovia Championship is his second PGA Tour event. He played in the Greater Greensboro Classic last year and missed the cut by one shot. He wants to play in the Walker Cup this summer, graduate next year and then turn pro.

Where that leads is anyone's guess, although Haas doesn't have history on his side.

Not many sons of successful golfers make it to the big leagues.

Even fewer of them win.

Al and Brent Geiberger. Julius and Guy Boros. Joe and Joe Jr. Kirkwood.

The best father-son combination ever? Young Tom Morris won the first of four consecutive British Opens the year after Old Tom Morris won his fourth Open. That was 135 years ago.

The Haas family outing at Quail Hollow comes one week after Jack Nicklaus played in a Nationwide Tour event with his four sons.

Carlos Osorio/Associated Press

Twenty-year-old Bill Haas, son of professional golfer Jay Haas, is hoping to shake the history of sons washing out of the PGA. As a sophomore at Wake Forest, he earned All-American status.

Only the 63-year-old father made the cut.

"I came here to play with them, and all of a sudden I'm the only one left," Nicklaus said. He wound up in a tie for 45th.

Three of Nicklaus' sons played as professionals. Only one of them — Gary — ever earned his PGA Tour card. He lost in a playoff to Phil Mickelson in the 2000 BellSouth Classic, but all that did was buy him an extra year on tour.

Dave Stockton Jr., whose father won two PGA Championships, has been on and off the PGA Tour the last several years. Andy Miller, Johnny's son, made a hole-in-one at the U.S. Open last year and earned his PGA Tour card at Q-school.

You could call Nicklaus the most disappointing sire since Secretariat, only it's not that simple.

Golf at the highest level is more about passion, hunger, and technique, traits that are not easily inherited. Making it even more difficult for sons to follow their fathers is an exclusive PGA Tour roster, with approximately 200 players every year.

"The percentages are against you," Jay Haas said. "The odds of any player making it big is pretty slim, so two from the same family is rare."

Other theories abound. Topping the list is pressure to live up to a father's reputation. No son had a bigger burden than Gary Nicklaus, who made the cover of Sports Illustrated at age 16 as the heir to the Golden Bear.

Some kids who spent their childhood hanging around the PGA Tour get tired of it. Others simply don't have the talent or the hunger.

"All kids of golfers are good athletes," said Strange, whose 21-year-old son Thomas occasionally qualifies for matches at North Carolina State. "Do you inherit the same drive to play well? Do you inherit a perfect golf swing? They might love the game, but they're not in love with the game. That's a huge difference."

Bill Haas' first love was basketball, but the passion turned to golf during high school, when he grew to 6-2 and adopted a swing so natural and powerful that he rarely asked his father for help.

He still remembers the first time he beat the old man. It was three years ago at the Cliffs Keowee Vineyards course at home in Greenville, S.C. The next summer, Bill shot under par every week he played, highlighted by a 62 at the Porter Cup.

"My dad never pushed me to play golf at all," he said. "He never came out to give me lessons. I had to ask him for a tip or ask him to watch me hit balls."

It helps that he comes from a golfing family. Jay Haas' uncle is former Masters champion Bob Goalby. His brother, Jerry, is the golf coach at Wake Forest. His brother-in-law is Dillard Pruitt, a PGA Tour rules official and former player.

Still, Haas said he only wanted his sons — 21-year-old Jay Jr. plays at Augusta State — to have a chance to learn. At best, he thought it would help them in the business world.

"There was always a club lying around, but they've done this on their own," Haas said. "I showed them the swing, the setup, the grip. But I never said, 'You have to go play.'"

Bill figured it out for himself. His father is curious where it will lead.
