Old Capitol gold & shining again

Zach Boyden-Holmes/The Daily Iowan

UI President David Skorton addresses the audience at the unveiling of the Old Capitol's new dome and cupola Tuesday afternoon. Iowa and U.S. flags were raised for the first time since a Nov. 20, 2001, fire.

BY KELLEY CASINO
THE DAILY IOWAN

More than 100 bystanders sat and stood on the Pentacrest Tuesday to view the newly uncovered east side of the Old Capitol.

After the canvas on the scaffolding was removed, exposing the new 12,000-pound golden dome, the U.S. and Iowa flags were raised for the first time since a Nov. 20, 2001, fire destroyed the dome and cupola of the 161-year-old building.

"It was nearly 18 months ago that we watched in horror as the dome of the Old Capitol burned," UI President David Skorton said, turning around periodically during the ceremony to look at the dome at the 20-minute ceremony. "Now, we are pleased to take one more step in restoring this revered building, symbol of our university and a source of pride for the entire state."

The unveiling of the dome marked a milestone in the restoration of Iowa's first capitol, made necessary after EnviroSafe Air workers, state officials have alleged, used open-flame torches to remove asbestos from the Old Capitol roof, igniting a blaze that caused $6.2 million in damages. Steve Parrott, the UI director of University Relations, said the case has been turned over to the Iowa attorney general, adding that it could take years to be resolved.

"We still have much work to do before the building can be reopened," Skorton said, speaking before UI senior Natasha Anders sang the national anthem during the flag raising. "But it's so great to see the progress towards that goal and to see how many people care."

The crowd fell silent as two honor guards from the Iowa City American Legion Post and the UI Air Force Reserve Officer Training Corps proceeded down the sidewalk from Clinton Street to the Old Capitol and handed the flags to Skorton for raising.

Spectators grew silent again as the new 1,770-pound bell was

Saudis link bombing to Al Qaeda

BY GLENN KESSLER
WASHINGTON POST

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — A known Qaeda cell headed by a veteran Saudi militant who trained in Afghanistan carried out the coordinated car bombings that ripped apart buildings and homes in three compounds inhabited by Americans and other Westerners in Riyadh, Saudi officials said Tuesday.

The ferocious explosions, which erupted in the Saudi capital just before midnight Monday, killed at least 29 people, including seven Americans and nine attackers, the Saudi Interior Ministry reported. More than 190 people were injured in the nearly simultaneous blasts, many so seriously they were not expected to live, the officials said, warning that the final death toll could surpass 100.

President Bush, visiting tornado-stricken areas of Missouri, vowed that those responsible will be tracked down, and he depicted the bombings as another chapter in the war with terrorism that began with the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon that killed approximately 3,000 people.

J. Scott Applewhite/Associated Press
President Bush denounces the Tuesday bombings in Saudi Arabia as the work of "killers whose only faith is hate."

"Until Al Qaeda is completely brought to justice, they want to hurt Americans and our friends and allies," Bush told reporters. "The war on terror goes on. We still have got a war to fight, and we will fight it, and we will win it. They'll hit and run, and they'll try to hide. We'll get them."

Secretary of State Colin Powell, who arrived here Tuesday for a previously planned visit, toured one of the devastated

SARS can't stop student's nuptials

BY AMIR EFRATI
THE DAILY IOWAN

Love can transcend time, space — and a deadly respiratory disease.

Lin Wang stood in a courtyard outside his Hawkeye Court apartment Tuesday, his face covered by a white, rounded mask as images of his fiancée, Lei Lingyan, fluttered through his mind.

It was a dress rehearsal for May 18, when the 25-year-old will board a United flight to Shanghai en route to Leshan, where he will marry his sweetheart — the product of a two-year online romance — despite a chorus of objecting voices from family and friends in China who fear he might contract SARS. They think he's nuts; Wang sees no other option.

"My friends, they say, 'Don't come back now; just wait for a couple of months,'" said Wang, a UI graduate research assistant from Wenling, in south-eastern China.

"My parents tried to persuade me not to go back." Wang looks uncomfortable wearing the model N-95 "standard respirator" — manufactured by 3M, it runs about $1 — which is meant to prevent the spread of SARS.

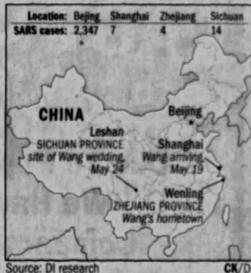

"I don't want to wait any longer," Wang said, his fingers twitching with nervous excitement.

"But if I say I don't worry about the [SARS] situation, it's not the truth."

Inside Wang's apartment, seven antibacterial lotion bottles surround a box full of SARS masks — valuable commodities in China, where an outbreak of the disease has claimed 262 lives and infected 5,086, according to the World Health Organization. But Wang doesn't have time to worry about a worldwide epidemic that has, since November 2002, affected more than

UI to use database for credentials checks

BY INGA BEYER AND
MATTHEW MOSS
THE DAILY IOWAN

UI officials are turning to an online database to quickly check the credentials of applicants for jobs in a new policy aimed at unmasking bogus candidates.

They say the use of the DegreeVerify National Student Clearinghouse will ensure that nobody slips through the cracks, as did at least one UI researcher who falsely claimed to have postgraduate degrees for more than a decade.

"We want to prevent the discovery of fake credentials in the future," Judie Hermesen, the assistant director of UI Human Resources, said Monday. "We want to make sure we hire the most-qualified candidates."

Under the new policy, which goes into effect June 1, university officials must notify candidates during the interview that their employment is contingent on a successful background check. The candidate must sign a release at the end of the interview that allows the departments to perform the check, a move required under the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act.

Those checks will be carried out largely through the clearinghouse, a nonprofit organization that counts 460 colleges and universities as participants.

According to a contract the UI signed in February, the university will access the database free of charge in exchange for giving the database a trove of information about current and former students. All academic information about students will be available from DegreeVerify, including transcripts.

The new policy calls for the credentials check for all faculty hirings, all professional and scientific jobs, and for all other jobs that require a license or specific certification or merit jobs in which the hiring or salary is influenced by a certain credential.

The checks are to be completed no later than 15 days after the worker begins employment. They can be carried out at any time of the day and generally take less than 24 hours to complete.

UI ponders moving Workers' Health Clinic

BY JEFFREY PATCH
THE DAILY IOWAN

University officials are considering relocating the UI Workers' Health Clinic to North Liberty after nearly a decade of service in Iowa City.

The clinic, located in the UI Hospitals and Clinics, serves all university employees injured on the job and half the worker's compensation claims in the state. UIHC officials denied rumors that the clinic and the proposed new site, the North Liberty Family Practice clinic, were "in the red" or that the relocation was being considered for budgetary reasons.

The clinic, which served approximately 1,700 patients last year, an average of five per day — is one of two statewide that serve worker's compensation claims throughout the state and, by estimate, it handles 90 percent of UI employees.

John Fieselmann, the director of the clinic, recommended that it relocate to North Liberty, said representatives from the Service Employees International Union. Fieselmann declined to comment Tuesday.

But Steve Maravetz, the director of UI Health Science Relations, said no decision has been made and the issue is "very early in the discussion process."

"[North Liberty] is one of many options," he said. "This is far earlier in the process than the unions would have you think."

The possible decision would not affect emergencies; employees needing immediate care would still be directed to the UIHC Emergency Room first and the Workers' Health Clinic second, said Richard Saunders, the university's assistant director of Human Resources.

He said he received approximately 30 phone calls and e-mails Tuesday about the clinic's possible move, mostly from UIHC employees.

Nobel-nominee searches for peace

Priest says life in Israel is a series of funerals 'celebrating our own deaths'

BY JESSE HELLING
THE DAILY IOWAN

Finding a tidy classification for Father Elias Chacour is not an easy task.

Chacour is simultaneously an Arab, a Christian, and a citizen of Israel.

Above all, however, he is committed to peace and justice in the Middle East.

The three-time Nobel Peace Prize nominee shared his thoughts on relations between Israelis and Palestinians at the Iowa City Foreign Relations Council luncheon on Tuesday.

"The main reason for the continuing conflict is the lack of dialogue [between Israelis and Palestinians]," Chacour said. "Our life has been turned into a procession of funerals celebrating our own deaths."

A Melkite Catholic priest, Father Chacour founded the Mar Elias Educational Institutions in the northern Israeli town of Ibillin in 1982. Currently, 3,850 students ranging in age from kindergartners to college students attend the school, which is open to all faiths and ethnicities and extolls the virtues of peace in the Middle East.

Speaking before an audience of more than 100, Chacour stressed that the claims of statehood for Israel and the Palestinians are equally valid.

"There is enough space for all of us ... the problem is one of tolerance and acceptance," he said. "The Jews are right to say no more concentration camps, no more inquisition against the Jews."

However, said Chacour, a Jewish homeland should not result in the deprivation of rights of Palestinian Arabs.

"For 55 years, our Jewish brothers and sisters insisted they want peace and security," he said. "There is no way Israel can survive through the power of weapons."

"This conflict has never been and will never be a war between religions. It is not a racial war ... we are Semites — Jews and Palestinians, we all pride ourselves on being descendants of Abraham. I pray these children of Abraham will meet again."

Whitney Kidder/The Daily Iowan

Father Elias Chacour, a Christian Arab Israeli, speaks about peace in the Mideast at the Congressional Church on Tuesday afternoon.

Chacour's first visit to Iowa came as a result of a long effort by a local clergyman.

Former UI campus minister Darrell Yeaney first met Chacour in Nazareth 12 years ago.

Before leaving the Middle East, Yeaney made Chacour promise to come to Iowa sometime.

"In my opinion, [Chacour] is a type of Martin Luther King for the Middle East," Yeaney said, citing his deep commitment to peace and nonviolence.

Chacour, however, was quick to play down the comparison during a question-and-answer period that followed his 25-minute speech.

"I think King was in a very different environment," he said. "People can come to a limit of patience ... that's why it's important to give hope to Palestinians."

UI senior is hot to globetrot

Moving Forward

BY ANNIE SHUPPY
THE DAILY IOWAN

The next step in the life of UI senior Dilek Dogruyusever is a leap across the Pacific Ocean and 10 time zones.

The 21-year-old native of Urbandale has a quick tongue familiar with English, her native tongue, Turkish, and the language of her future — Japanese.

Dogruyusever, a student of Japanese since her freshman year in high school, will move to Japan Aug. 2 to begin work with the Japanese Exchange and Teaching Program to work as a translator for an undetermined government body.

The journalism/Japanese major attended a nine-week intensive language program last summer at Middlebury College, in Vermont, where participants were forbidden to read or speak English. That experience helped her decide to apply to the exchange program, which could keep her abroad from one to four years.

"There's no doubt in my mind this is the next step for me," Dogruyusever said. "It's going to be difficult to adapt to a new way of living and living in an apartment on my own, but I've traveled since I was 1, and it just feels right. I'm totally psyched and ready to go."

Dogruyusever, who was voted "Most Likely to Move to a Foreign Country" in high school, plans to attend as many concerts as possible in Iowa City and visit friends in Chicago before her departure.

"I have a feeling I'll end up loving [Japan] and wanting to stay," she said.

Her cosmopolitan roots come partly from her father, who moved to the United States from Turkey when he was 26 to attend graduate school at Iowa State University.

Dogruyusever's roommate and longtime friend, UI senior Joelle Cook, said the two share a passion for other cultures; Dogruyusever's travels have included Turkey, Japan, and parts of Europe.

"We'll go to the grocery store, and [Dilek] will start speaking Turkish to a group of people, then she'll turn around and start speaking Japanese," Cook said. "Her ability to communicate is so amazing."

Dogruyusever has aspirations of returning to the United States to attend journalism graduate school, but at times, she has wanted to start an English newspaper in Japan, work as in MTV veejay in Japan, or, as her mother would like, work at CNN in Tokyo. Although she is not set on living the rest of her life abroad, it's still an option.

"I'm one of those people who need to be open to whatever happens," said Dogruyusever, who has worked at KRUI, the Peaceful Fool, Record Collector, and volunteered with Dance Marathon and Stepping Up.

Dogruyusever's mother, Sherry Dogruyusever, said she is not surprised her daughter has chosen such a globetrotting path.

"Of course, we have apprehensions, but we have apprehensions when they go to Chicago," Sherry Dogruyusever said. "There was no thought of stopping her."

IC man pleads guilty to meth possession

An Iowa City man accused of running a meth lab in his apartment in 2001 accepted a plea bargain Tuesday, six days before he was scheduled to stand trial in 6th District Court.

Donovan Scott Wyse, 33, pleaded guilty to possession of less than five grams of a schedule II controlled substance with intent to deliver and possession of precursors with intent to manufacture methamphetamine.

Wyse was arrested on March 29, 2001, after neighbors reported smelling odors near his apartment at 2017 Keokuk St. After a police investigation, authorities charged Wyse with operating the first meth lab identified in Iowa City.

Assistant Johnson County Attorney David Tiffany said Wyse agreed to serve the full 10-year sentence on the first count, a Class C felony, if prosecutors dropped a second charge of possession of methamphetamine as a repeat offender. The original charge carried a mandatory 25-year prison term upon conviction.

Wyse could serve a maximum of five years in prison for pleading guilty to the newly added charge, a Class D felony, which was added in an amendment to the trial information.

Tiffany said he will ask for the five-year sentence for the second count to run consecutively to the 10-year prison term that Wyse already agreed to serve. He said he expects Wyse's attorney, Paul Miller, to request that the second term to run concurrently to the first, keeping Wyse behind bars for 10 years instead of 15 years.

A sentencing hearing had not been scheduled as of Tuesday.

Board mulls labor plan

BY JESSICA REESE
THE DAILY IOWAN

In a move unique for public schools in the state, the Iowa City School Board is contemplating the use of guidelines to help govern the construction of one new school included in the district's multimillion-dollar improvement plan.

A Project Labor Agreement sets uniform rules, including standardized wages and work days, supersedes all collective-bargaining agreements, and prohibits workers from striking. Such guidelines are more commonly used by private businesses, but they have been used by school districts outside of Iowa. Each new building project in the School District's $39 million improvement plan would have its own agreement if the board decides to pursue the controversial measure.

The proposed school to which the guidelines, discussed at Tuesday's board meeting, would best apply is the 465-seat elementary school slated for North Liberty, said Bill Gerhard, a representative from the Iowa Laborers' District Council.

Board members, who were seeking public input as they gather more information about the guidelines, did not make any decisions on the possible use of a labor agreement; discussion will continue at a June work-session. District lawyer Kirsten Frey said that if the board decides to pursue such an agreement, it should be started by this fall and would take about a month to complete.

District officials estimate that the new elementary school in North Liberty will open for the 2005-06 school year.

Labor-agreement supporters, including Rep. Mary Mascher, D-Iowa City, and Sen. Bob Dvorsky, D-Coralville, and community members, said it would expedite the building process and provide opportunities for local workers. They urged the board to give it consideration.

"This ensures we'll provide the skilled manpower when you need it in light of the shortage across the state and nation," Gerhard said.

But a number of community members said such an agreement would limit competition and discriminate against non-union workers.

"A Project Labor Agreement would significantly, if not completely, reduce competition," said Darin Knapp, who represents Iowa City construction workers. "It boils down to that we are not in favor of anything that would possibly reduce competition."

To compose a labor agreement, the board would form a committee to sit down with contractors and set out project standards. Although anyone can bid on the agreement, hiring must be done through the local union hiring halls, although the hired workers do not have to be union members.

In 2002, the Iowa Supreme Court upheld the legality of such an agreement used by the Polk County Board of Supervisors to construct the Iowa Events Center. Those bringing suit contended that the Events Center agreement violated the Competitive Bidder and Right To Work statutes in Iowa.

"As long as you include in the [agreement] language that explicitly states no discrimination of employees based on union membership ... then there is no violation of the Iowa Right to Work statute," said Charlie Swartz, an attorney who defended the Polk County agreement.

"I think it's very important we collect a lot of data," said Superintendent Lane Plugge. "This is something our community is very interested in."

BY SCOTT GOLD
LOS ANGELES TIMES

AUSTIN, Texas — By vanishing from the Capitol, by going on strike, Texas Democrats exposed themselves to ridicule Tuesday. Republicans slapped their faces on milk cartons as if they were missing children. U.S. House Majority Leader Tom DeLay, a Republican, said the ploy — "to turn tail and run" — contradicts everything Texas stands for.

It was, said Republican Gov. Rick Perry, a "childish prank."

For a second day, 51 Democratic legislators remained hunkered down in a small town in southern Oklahoma. They chatted with constituents who had baked cookies and made the drive from northern Texas to show their support, met to discuss school finance and other issues, and talked on their cell phones while wandering the grounds of a hotel.

For a second day, they prevented Republican leaders in the Texas House of Representatives from establishing a quorum, leaving a divisive legislative session at a standstill.

One of the most hotly contested issues is the GOP's non-redistricting-year redistricting plan, which Democrats say is being pushed by U.S. House Majority Leader Tom DeLay, R-Texas. In a ploy audacious even by the standards of Texas politics, one of the GOP's new congressional districts would be composed of two Republican-leaning areas, one north of Austin and one in the Rio Grande Valley — 300 miles away. The two areas would be connected by a mile-wide ribbon of land running the 300 miles.

Far more important to the embattled Texas Democratic Party than stopping the legislation, however, was the sympathetic response it received across the state. Middle-of-the-road analysts and independent activists and lobbyists placed the blame for the fiasco on conservative Republicans who have wrested political control of Texas.

Local newspaper editorial pages, including those typically supportive of the GOP, also lent their support to the Democrats. The Dallas Morning News, for example, encouraged Republicans to "play by the rules."

In interviews, moderates and independents claimed on Tuesday that Texas Republicans were not forthcoming about their politics during last year's election campaign. Democrats failed to capture a single statewide election, giving the GOP control of the governor's mansion, the state Senate, and the state House for the first time since the 19th century.

Iowa casino ordered to close

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAMA, Iowa — The National Indian Gaming Commission, citing the ongoing dispute over leadership of the Meskwaki tribe, on Tuesday ordered the immediate shutdown of the tribe's casino.

In a letter mailed to both sides of the dispute, commission Chairman Philip Hogen said the tribe "is ordered to cease and desist from all gaming activity in the Meskwaki gaming facility."

As of Tuesday afternoon, tribal members said the Tama County casino was still operating, and there were no plans to shut it down.

"We're still open," said Homer Bear Jr., the chairman of an appointed council that took control of tribal operations seven weeks ago.

Bear and six others were picked by the tribe's hereditary chief, Charles Old Bear, after the council elected by the tribe in 1999 ignored recall petitions. The appointed council seized control of tribal offices March 26 and has been running day-to-day operations ever since.

Mark Jarboe, an attorney for the elected council, said the commission had found the casino in violation of federal Indian gaming rules because it was not overseen by an elected tribal council.

If the casino remains open, Jarboe said, the commission likely will ask a federal judge to order a shutdown. If that happens, he said, U.S. marshals could be sent to physically close the casino.

Commission officials did not immediately return phone messages Tuesday.

U.S.-European food fight goes to WTO

BY EMILY GERSEMA
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Escalating a dispute with Europe over its moratorium on genetically modified foods, the United States filed a complaint with world trade regulators Tuesday, arguing that Europeans are ignoring scientific studies showing the foods do no harm.

"The EU has disregarded the advice of its own scientific committees and its own commissioners," said U.S. Trade Representative Robert Zoellick, announcing that the case was filed with the World Trade Organization in Geneva.

The case means the United States and other countries that signed the complaint — Argentina, Canada, and Egypt — will have 60 days to work with the Europeans to find a solution.

But Zoellick said that if the moratorium isn't lifted, the United States will ask the WTO form a panel to consider the complaint and resolve it.

Agriculture Secretary Ann Veneman said the case will help farmers wanting to plant genetically engineered crops.

"Farmers here and around the world must be assured that their products won't be rejected simply because they used biotechnology," she said.

Lawmakers praised the move. House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., and other lawmakers from agricultural states have been pushing U.S. trade officials to fight the ban since it began in 1998.

"We simply cannot allow the free trade of our fine products and services to be rendered meaningless if they are short-circuited by the EU's unfair and unjust trade barriers cloaked in fear and conjecture — not sound science," said Hastert.

EU Trade Commissioner Pascal Lamy said that the EU regulatory system for genetically modified foods complies with trade rules.

"The U.S. claims that there is a so-called 'moratorium,' but the fact is that the EU has authorized [genetically modified] varieties in the past and is currently processing applications," Lamy said.

Indeed, the European Union never officially declared that it was blocking genetically modified products. Countries simply stopped accepting applications from exporters wanting to sell them. They were under pressure from European consumers, who worry biotech food is unsafe and should be labeled.

Per Pinstrup-Andersen, a biotech expert at Cornell University, says the U.S. challenge could compound already-tense relations between the United States and Europe.

Saudis tie blasts to Al Qaeda

sites, which was a training and residential complex for a company under contract to the U.S. military. With the acrid scent of the bomb blast still hanging in the air, he peered into a 10-foot-deep crater left by the car bomb.

"This was well-planned terrorist attack," he said, standing in front of four-story building that had had its face sheered off by the force of the blast. "Obviously, the facility had been cased, as had the others, and it shows the nature of the enemy we are working against. This is criminality and terrorism at its worst."

Earlier, in Amman, Jordan, Powell said he believed "Al Qaeda has been weakened, but it has not been destroyed."

The bombings marked a bloody gesture against the U.S. presence in Saudi Arabia, which has been cited by Osama bin Laden as the main reason for his terrorism campaign against the United States. Bin Laden, a Saudi native, veered toward his radical goals after U.S. troops remained on Saudi soil following the 1991 Persian Gulf War despite a promise from the Saudi royal family to disarmed Islamic purists that they would leave as soon as the conflict was over.

The number of U.S. military personnel in the kingdom, which rose to 10,000 during the recent war against Iraq, has returned to its normal level of around 5,000. Acknowledging widespread opposition to their presence among the Saudi people, the Bush administration announced two weeks ago that nearly all U.S. military personnel will leave by the end of the summer.

The seven Americans killed Monday night were employees of a local subsidiary of the Fairfax-based Vinnell

Corp., which has a contract to train the Saudi National Guard. Northrop Grumman, which owns Vinnell, said two of its Filipino employees also were killed, and a number of other employees were hospitalized, two in serious condition.

In a hallmark of Al Qaeda's previous operations, the three bombings came within a few minutes of each other, and all used the same technique. In all three cases, U.S. and Saudi officials said, the assailants attacked guards at the compounds, opened the gates and then drove a vehicle packed with explosives deep inside before igniting the blasts.

"These were sophisticated, nearly simultaneous attacks," said a U.S. army official advising the Saudi government.

Poll: 49% think Bush overstated weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — About half the country believes the Bush administration overestimated the number of weapons of mass destruction in Iraq, according to a poll released Tuesday, but most people feel the war was worth it anyway. The CBS News-New York Times poll found 64 percent of Americans are aware that no weapons of mass destruction have yet been found in Iraq.

Some 49 percent said the administration overestimated the amount of mass destruction weapons in Iraq, while 29 percent said its estimates were accurate and 12 percent said they were low.

Two-thirds of those who believe the weapons count was overestimated also believe it was a deliberate exaggeration to build support for the war.

CERVICAL DYSPLASIA STUDY

Healthy non-pregnant females age 18 to menopause with a diagnosis of LSIL or ASC-US are invited to participate in a 2-3 month study. In this study we will be evaluating the safety of an intravaginal experimental gel in women with mild dysplasia. This study would require that participants come to the clinic a minimum of 8-10 times including some hospital stays. Participants must be currently using either Depo-Provera or an oral contraceptive pill.

- All study-related exams and hospital expenses will be provided.
- Compensation provided.

UI spiffs up résumé/credentials checks

CHECKS

"Although a number of possible options exist for verifying degrees, the university is committed by contract to DegreeVerify as the first methodology for doing so," said a memo sent last week to campus leaders from Susan Buckley, the associate vice president for Human Relations.

The university will only use the clearinghouse to check the educational credentials, certificates, and licenses of candidates, Hermesen said. The school will directly contact institutions or ask applicants to supply original copies of certificates if their university doesn't participate in DegreeVerify, she added.

UI Business Manager Andrew Ives, who signed off on the contract with DegreeVerify, said the clearinghouse was a "more sophisticated basis for moving these checks along swiftly."

The new policy comes as fake résumés and credentials have surfaced both nationally and locally, Hermesen said. She said UI's problems have not been "on a large scope" in the past, when background checks were up to each department and at times rarely conducted.

Pat J. Palmer, 51, claimed she had a UI doctorate and two master's degrees when she was hired in 1991 as a researcher by the psychiatry department, a Daily Iowan investigation discovered in August 2002. After a job switch 10 years later, a new colleague discovered the fake credentials. She resigned shortly thereafter.

But by that time, she had allegedly embezzled $53,000 from the university between 1998 and 2000 through falsified travel vouchers. Authorities recently added a rare charge for misrepresenting her credentials on top of her two counts of first-degree theft and one count of second-degree theft. Her case is slowly moving through the legal system.

When departments believe a candidate has lied or misrepresented a credential, they are to offer "a reasonable opportunity for the individual to provide clarifying information," according to the policy.

Employees who lied will be fired, and such candidates will not be considered, the policy says.

Rumors of clinic's move spark ire

CLINIC

Several issues are being discussed about the possible relocation, Saunders said, including travel time, transportation costs, and loss of employee productivity.

The talks have local union representatives concerned that a move will impinge on the workers' access to specialists, cutting-edge medical equipment, employee medical records and histories, and pharmacy services that the UIHC offers.

"It doesn't matter if the clinic is making money or not," said Anne Gentil-Archer, a nurse and union representative. "It should be a service to employees. It doesn't make sense that people should be bused out."

Maravetz said the issue wasn't necessarily money, adding that in the early stages of the process numerous reasons — including streamlining services with the North Liberty Clinic, run by UI Health Works — have been discussed.

Union officials said they first heard rumors of the move in mid-March. Their suspicions were confirmed at an April 16 labor meeting between the union and hospital management when officials confirmed they were looking at relocation because both the Iowa City and North Liberty facilities are "in the red," said Gentil-Archer, who could not elaborate.

The rumors prompted union members to distribute fliers Tuesday morning condemning what they thought was a definite decision to move the clinic approximately 10 miles north to North Liberty.

A double dose of Black Eyes

BY DAN MALONEY
THE DAILY IOWAN

A curious number of bands of late have adorned their names with the epithet "black."

There are enough bands using the color in their names to fill at least one side of a diverse yet pleasant-sounding mix-tape, which could include such bands as Black Keys, Black Dice, Black Lips, and Black Eyes.

The last of these, from Washington, D.C., packs an explosive assault of pulsating rhythm that melds elements of hardcore, post-punk, and dub music. Its distinctive use of rhythm could stem from the band's rhythm section, which composes four-fifths of the band — not only two bass players but also two drummers. The strategic use of the bulky rhythm section varies from blistering off-tempo attacks to droning, hypnotic, mid-tempo rumbles.

Black Eyes adds to the mixture spastically jangled guitar parts and two vocalists — one providing intense shrieking and the other maintaining subdued monotone howls. The two vocalists complement each other well, placing vocal lines that either weave or bleed together — adding sassiness without becoming annoying and displaying just the right measurement of restrained singing.

All of these factors coincide on Black Eyes' self-titled debut disc on the legendary punk rock label Dischord, alongside DIY purists Fugazi and fellow new-school sass-dance screamers Q and Not You. Mr. Straight-edge himself, Ian Mackaye of Fugazi, holds production credit alongside longtime-Dischord engineer Don Zientara, providing a mix that boosts the powerful bass and drums while lifting the vocals to the sonic surface.

On the first track, "Someone has his Fingers Broken," static-laden guitar distortion cues one drummer. Around five seconds later, the second drummer hammers in, followed by two thumping bass lines and a schizophrenic guitar that fills the lapses in the rhythm section. On the next track, "Pack of Wolves," two bass lines come from each side, followed by panting, screechy vocals from the high shrieking singer with an urgency that sounds as if the singer is being choked — yelping to the point of a blackout. Luckily, the singers work as a vocal tag-team; as soon as one loses steam, the other picks up the slack.

Black Eyes will play two shows in Iowa City tonight — the first, an early show at a house on South Dodge Street, the second, at Gabe's with the Faux, Meth and Goats, Swing By Seven, and the Organ.

The group's dub influence takes shape on the fourth track, "On the Sacred Side," mixing a steady bass drone with both vocalists howling together, scrambling each other's vocal lines.

Extreme cases of dance-floor-ready jams are "Speaking in Tongues" and "Deformative." On "Speaking in Tongues," disco-reminiscent bass lines clash with a double attack of vocals and some percussive cowbell. "Deformative" speeds out like a steaming locomotive of high-hat cymbals crashing, while, with frothy hissing guitar noise, vocals combust with energy.

The last track "Letter to Raoul Peck," concludes the high-octane disc with more throbbing bass lines, squeaky guitar chirps, and squawking vocals that profess, "One-sided politics sell boring records/cause your vision's too cloudy and our visions are clear." The track also references poets Langston Hughes and Derek Mahon.

The result of the Black Eyes debut is one blistering cesspool of energy. Packed like a brick of fire-crackers, each track enchants and rattles the senses.

Black Eyes will double dose Iowa City with performances tonight. The band will first play at a house on South Dodge Street at 5 p.m. and then end up at Gabe's for an 8 p.m. show. Black Eyes will be joined at Gabe's by opening acts the Faux, Meth and Goats, Swing By Seven, and the Organ. Don't blow it by missing either one of these shows.

Sticky fingers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A former movie studio security guard pleaded no contest to receiving custom-made Spider-Man and Batman suits stolen from Warner Bros. and Sony Studios and was sentenced to nine months in county jail.

Deputy District Attorney Donald Tamura said former security guard Jeffrey Glenn Gustafson was placed on formal probation for five years Monday and ordered to pay restitution of approximately $93,000.

Gustafson, 36, of Burbank worked as a security guard for Warner Bros. in 1996 and for Sony until January 2001.

Another defendant, 35-year-old Robert Hughes of Los Angeles, pleaded no contest to one misdemeanor count of receiving stolen property. He was sentenced to 30 days of community service and placed on two years probation, Tamura said.

Four custom-made Spider-Man suits were stolen from the Sony Studios lot in Culver City in April 2001 and a Batman suit and mannequin were stolen from the Warner Bros. lot in Burbank in March 1996.

royalties for the re-release of songs he made in the 1970s.

The lawsuit accuses Universal Music Group of violating a 1980 agreement to pay Jackson royalties from recordings he made with the Jackson 5 and as a solo artist from 1969 to 1976 for Motown Records, which was acquired by Universal Music Group.

According to the lawsuit filed May 9 in Los Angeles Superior Court, Jackson reached a settlement with Motown Records in 1980 that forfeited his right to royalties for songs released before that time. But Motown was to pay Jackson royalties for previously unreleased material and songs released on best-of compilations, according to the lawsuit.

The lawsuit seeks an accounting of royalties owed and unspecified damages. Jackson also wants the 1980 settlement voided and seeks ownership of his Motown master recordings.

Times debacle raises race, credibility issues

A New York Times reporter resigned recently after committing dozens of acts of journalistic fraud, including fabricating quotes and plagiarism. Although the Times handled the controversy admirably, that Jayson Blair, the dismissed reporter, is black has raised issues about affirmative-action hiring and promotion practices. While minority hiring is as important in journalism as it is in any other profession, no newspaper can afford to sacrifice accuracy for the sake of a more diverse newsroom.

On Sunday, the Times ran a front-page story on Blair's misdeeds, as well as two full inside pages detailing the paper's extensive internal investigation. The Sunday edition included two more pages that dissected each one of Blair's misdeeds, article by article. At a time when many media outlets try to hide their past misdeeds, the Times' forthrightness is refreshing. Howell Raines, the paper's executive editor, even said he has plans to assign a task force to make sure the other Times reporters learn from the Blair fiasco. Unfortunately, as the Times story makes evident, Blair was only part of the problem.

During Blair's four-year tenure at the paper, there were numerous warning signs that should have led to severe disciplinary action. As far back as January 2002, Blair was reprimanded for his "extraordinarily high" correction rate. Despite the concerns, he was assigned to high-profile stories such as the Beltway Sniper case and the Jessica Lynch rescue. Why was such an unreliable reporter allowed such leeway?

Raines made no secret of his pride in his increasingly diverse newsroom, and he used Blair as a specific example in a speech to a convention of minority journalists. Now arises the inevitable question: Was the Times' buck-passing a conscious effort to maintain that diversity at the cost of journalistic integrity? The public may never know, but Raines' 2001 statement that his campaign to hire minority journalists made the Times' staff "better, and, more importantly, more diverse" is telling. Nothing, not even diversity, is more important than accuracy; in the Blair case, Raines appears to have violated that cardinal rule of journalism.

It would be a shame if the Blair incident stigmatizes minority journalists, who, just as the vast majority of all journalists, strive for accuracy above all else. Blair's deception could have easily been carried out by a white reporter. But if the Times is to regain the credibility it lost with Sunday's revelations, it must make realize that the truth is always colorblind.

Letters to the Editor

Bush a citizen-general

An interesting feature of our system of government is that the highest ranking military official is a civilian. Our Constitution places a civilian elected official, the president, at the top of the military's chain of command. The founders did this in order to "check" and curb military power, a key to the preservation of our democracy. Generals who had led armies into battle, such as Washington, Grant, and Eisenhower, recognized the civilian nature of their office when they became commander in chief. Whenever Eisenhower was saluted, he never returned the salute. He was a civilian, and civilians do not salute.

This is why I am very disturbed to see our current president emphasize his military role. George W. Bush breaks a long tradition by donning a military uniform and flying onboard the carrier USS Abraham Lincoln in the style of a victorious general. It seems to erode the American ideal that the chief executive should not be a military officer but a civilian to whom our armed forces defer their power.

UISG bungle revealing

As a student who applied for a charter-committee position and has now viewed the aftermath of Nate Green's decision to unilaterally veto all appointments, I am extremely disappointed with this course of action. I applied for these positions not for any real self gain but in order to give back to the UI and serve as a voice for students on one of the committees. Not having been in student government at the UI before, I was excited to participate in something that would have an actual effect on the quality of life here.

After experiencing the mistakes and bungled handling of this seemingly simple process by the current administration, I will be surprised if anything formative gets accomplished in the next year through UISG. I must ask the question that many have wondered: "Why should a group of more than 50 people who took the time and energy to attempt to give something of themselves back to the UI be punished for the mistakes of our elected officials?"

As seen in the mangled interview process, the vague, one-sentence explanation of the "veto" to all applicants in an e-mail, and the refusal of the administration to even give us the basic respect of a more in-depth explanation of why we have been discarded, UISG fails to take responsibility for its actions. The questions raised by the mistakes made by the Green administration show more than just a mismanaged interview process; it shows a disregard for the process set forth for it to follow and a disconnection from the students it is supposed to represent.

Let voters choose on Iowa smoking ban

What many seem not to understand is that the case against the illegal prohibition of smoking in privately owned restaurants readily concedes the risks of secondhand smoke. My air is not what's at stake here. If I don't want to breathe smoke, I won't go where the smoke is. I'll vote with my dollars. Smokers will vote with theirs, and we'll see what happens.

It's called a free market. It's called a free country. We call a restaurant a public place, but that's a misnomer. It's a privately held business, and my presence there is 100 percent voluntary. My right to clean air is suspended at the door.

What's at stake here is the American right to own oneself and accept responsibility for oneself. If we allow our blind race to mandate courtesy and health to reach legislative tendrils into privately owned businesses, how far behind will our homes be?

Donald L. Denis

Dream a little dream — of more creative UI research

The world-famous 19th-century German chemist Friedrich Kekulé von Stradonitz fell asleep in front of a fire one day. And it was there, in his dreams, that he saw a snake put its tail in its mouth. The rest is history. He later recalled the dream to explain the structure of benzene, which laid the groundwork for organic chemistry.

The Indian mathematician Srinivasa Ramanujan claimed that his discoveries came to him in dreams as a gift from the Hindu goddess Namagiri. Russian scientist Dimitri Mendeleev dreamed of a periodic table of elements in its completed form before showing his vision to the scientific community. Otto Loewi dreamt of the Nobel-prize-winning experiment to demonstrate the chemical transmission of nerve impulses to a frog's heart.

In fact, studies show that around 80 to 90 percent of Nobel laureates have used the study of their own dreams as a foundation for their accomplishments.

Beatle Paul McCartney has said that the music for "Yesterday" came to him in a dream. Author Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley gave life to the horror story Frankenstein in a dream at age 19 when she was pregnant. Even Jack Nicklaus has told the press that he improved his golf game after dreaming of a new grip.

Some feel that the nature of originality lies in knowing how to hide one's sources. I mean, obviously most Hollywood producers believe this. We don't see many fresh screenplays anymore. It's all about the money. So all we see are the movies that have a high probability of grossing a high return.

But I disagree with the notion that originality doesn't exist. In fact, I'd argue that such an attitude only serves the function of keeping the masses in their place. History would seem to agree that the womb of originality, innovation, and therefore prosperity in all its forms, mostly spring into being while we're asleep — therefore proving that all of us have the potential to be creative problem-solvers and artists. We all dream, whether we remember the morning after or not.

Deidrea Barrett of Harvard Medical School's psychiatry department even wrote a book about this very point, The Committee of Sleep: How Artists, Scientists, and Athletes Use Dreams for Creative Problem-Solving — And How You Can, Too. It doesn't just tell stories of how so many great ideas came to life. She also offers exercises that the reader can use to follow in the tradition of other original minds throughout history.

One exercise, for instance, is to simply think of the question to which you're trying to find an answer — and then just sleep on it. Sometimes it's just that simple.

Then there are also such researchers as Stephen LaBerge at Stanford University. He wrote Lucid Dreaming, one of the classics among the academic circles studying the phenomenon of using the dream world as a canvass for the development of ideas and fresh designs.

You've probably heard about lucid dreaming from alternative films such as Waking Life and mainstream films such as Vanilla Sky. Lucid dreaming is essentially dreaming while still conscious in the dreaming state — thereby giving you control over what you dream as well as how you interact in it.

And studies prove that during lucid dreaming, one can not only improve creativity but also improve self-confidence by overcoming fears through using certain techniques. By doing this, the dreamer also develops a greater understanding of the self. But there are lots of other potential benefits, too. Check out the Web site lucidity.com.

The UI has an international reputation as being on the cutting edge in several areas of research. But it could be doing more to encourage more patents, innovation, and creativity in all of its academic disciplines if only it would start offering programs and workshops that help students understand and practice lucid dreaming.

Yet, if we are to stay committed to the mission statement of the university, then that's only the beginning as to what we could be doing to help the school reach new levels. There's so much we can do to make the UI attractive to what Richard Florida, a professor of economic development at Carnegie Mellon University, calls "the creative class." And all it takes is for the UI to make small investments in various programs that scientifically study creativity that in turn can yield big returns. Schools such as Harvard and Stanford shouldn't be the only schools studying dreams.

At least, that'll be another step making the UI even better, right?

ring 15 times — the first time since the fire. It will not be rung again until later in the project, Skorton said.

All of the speakers at the ceremony called the day momentous, joyful, and exciting not only because of the flag raising and ringing of the bell, but also because of the removal of the canvas and scaffolding, allowing people to see the new dome. Skorton said all the canvas and scaffolding will be removed by the end of the week.

"It's a wonderful milestone to get to this point," said project manager Gary Nagle, adding that restoration project is expected to be completed in fall of 2004. "It's a wonderful feeling to be able to unveil it."

The first phase of the project will be completed in July after the roof is replaced. The second phase will include restoration of the interior of the building, which sustained peeling paint, warped wood floors, and water damage. A new fire-suppression system is also being installed, Nagle said.

Shalla Wilson, the assistant director of the Old Capitol Museum, said she was filled with joy to see the charred ruins of the building no longer, adding that the cupola and the dome were the only things that had remained unchanged in the building until the fire destroyed them in 2001.

"Nothing seemed right," she said of the day fire destroyed the landmark. "The skyline was blemished."

Despite SARS, student heads for wedding

7,000 from Kuwait to New Zealand — including 64 non-fatal cases in the United States, none in Iowa. This biomedical engineer has bigger fish to fry. Besides planning for the wedding, Wang must also ready his wife's visa documents for her move to the United States in June.

Upon his arrival in China, Wang said, he will whip out his mask, sanitize his hands, and slip into surgical gloves to blend in with the Shanghai crowd. A taxi will jet him across town to the domestic airport — not before passing medical workers spraying city buildings with sterilizing chemicals. At the terminal, Wang said, he will walk under an infrared machine that scans passengers' temperatures to detect anyone over 100.4 degrees Fahrenheit for quarantine.

relatives and friends.

When Chen Liu got a phone call from his sister-in-law in Beijing two weeks ago, she listed acquaintances who had been infected by SARS.

"She told the truth, that they died," said Liu, a UI graduate student. "I think she's used to it."

Checking updated stories on the crisis in China, Liu often thinks of his family members, who have been holed up inside their Beijing apartment for weeks as 70 percent of the city's workers — including his father, an accountant — stay home from work. In late April, UI senior John Denning returned from the capital after his study-abroad program was canceled there.

Zhenzhou Lei, another UI graduate student who had planned to return to see his parents in southeastern China, now faces a $300 penalty for changing his flight schedule, and even if he reaches China this summer, he said, authorities would keep him quarantined for four weeks.

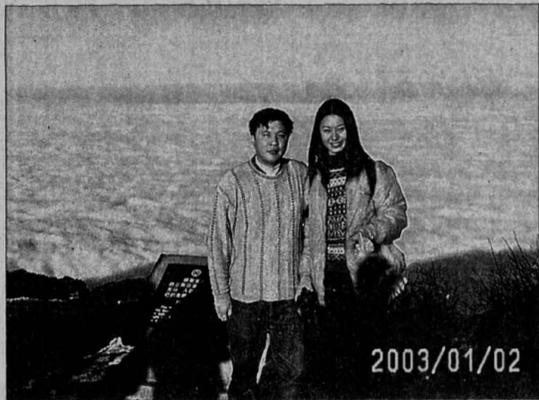

"It's very, very horrible now; the death rate is very high," said Lei, the vice president of the Friendship Association of Chinese Students and Scholars.

Lei said he had a friend who was a nurse at Beijing Chest Hospital and tends daily to SARS patients.

"Before she enters the hospital, she puts on three preventative coats, three masks, a special hat, three gloves, and boots — it's very complicated," he said.

At first, he said, fear kept her locked at home but she later changed her mind and returned to work.

"I was shocked to know she chose to go back to work," he said. "She said that if she stays at home, when she gets old she might feel remorse because she didn't pick up her responsibility when she needed [to]. And if she goes back to work, she might die, and this way she would have no chance to feel remorse."

Contributed Photo
Lin Wang and fiancée Lei Lingyan pose on Mount Emei at 10,000 feet. "We decided to marry each other on that day," Wang said.

SARS is a "popular topic" in the UI's Chinese circles, and debate continues over whether it will soon be controlled. Despite the distance, some have decided to combat the illness from Iowa City by forming a SARS donation fund.

"This is a serious natural disaster," said Xiang Li, a UI graduate student and president of friendship association, the group that organized the fund.

So far, Li said, group has raised more than $1,100 for the Red Cross Society of China to supply masks and medicine in the poorer, rural regions of the country that lack basic health facilities. The group will accept donations until the end of June.

In a time of fear and recession in China, Wang, who will soon enter its fray, relies on humor. A bona fide romantic, he knows how to woo his girl in a time of national crisis. Two weeks ago, he sent her a "care" package of SARS masks — a true sign of affection.

"She said, 'Oh, no need,' but I think she was happy," Wang said.

In what is to be only his second face-to-face encounter with Lei later this month, he imagines a "classic" scene of love modified only slightly by SARS: Donning his mask, he will say hi to her and her family when they pick him up from the airport. Dropping his bags, he will warn her to stay back until he sanitizes his hands, give her a big hug, and tell her that she will be his bride in three days.

"Then," he said, "I will take the mask off."

U.S. kicks out 14 Cubans for alleged spying

BY COLUM LYNCH AND
KAREN DEYOUNG
WASHINGTON POST

UNITED NATIONS — The United States has ordered the expulsion of 14 Cuban diplomats posted in Washington and at the United Nations on the grounds they were conducting "activities outside their official capacity," a phrase that is used as diplomatic shorthand for espionage, the Bush administration announced Tuesday.

The move marks an escalation of the administration's recent diplomatic feud with Cuba in the wake of a crackdown on dissidents by Cuban President Fidel Castro and its active opposition to the war in Iraq. It comes a week after the United States sharply criticized Cuba's election to the U.N. Human Rights Commission at a time when human-rights organizations are charging the communist government in Havana with increased abuses.

U.S. officials declined to comment on the specific nature of the charges against the Cuban officials. But State Department spokesman Phil Reeker said the Cuban government has "a long record" of spying on the United States, citing a number of recent episodes. They included the case of Ana Belen Montes, a senior analyst for the Defense Intelligence Agency, sentenced last year to 25 years in prison for providing the Cuban government with classified documents, photographs, and the names of at least four covert operatives working in Cuba.

The United States retaliated against Havana in October 2002 by expelling two Washington-based Cuban diplomats and two U.N.-based Cuban officials suspected of engaging in espionage.

The most senior diplomat among those expelled is Cosme Torres, the deputy chief of the Cuban Interests Section in Washington. Press spokesman Juan Hernandez was also among the seven. The mission did not respond to telephone calls Tuesday.

U.S. officials said the expulsions were based on specific Cuban activities and were not a response to Cuba's opposition to the war against Iraq or to last month's arrests of 75 democratic and human-rights activists on the island.

But there's no question that "Cuba came into the special vision of folks here" following its effort to promote a special U.N. General Assembly session to discuss the Iraq war, an official said. "The Cubans made a run at a similar effort at the U.N. Commission on Human Rights" last month, the official said. "They were the principle instigator." Both efforts failed.

At the same time, officials said the expulsions were not related to the arrests in Cuba, although, as one official put it, "the fact is that we're very concerned about the human-rights situation in Cuba."

Politically powerful Cuban Americans, many of whom believe President Bush owes his presidency to their votes in Florida, have long pressed the administration to tighten the trade embargo and travel restrictions against Cuba. Until recently, however, Bush has limited himself to escalating rhetoric against the Castro government and the appointment of a number of anti-Castro Cuban Americans to senior positions in his administration.

Iraqis find more mass graves

BY THOMAS WAGNER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — More mass graves have been found in two new locations in Iraq, together containing at least 4,000 bodies and perhaps as many as 15,000, human-rights groups and a British news report said Tuesday.

If forensic experts confirm the findings, the mass graves at Hillah and the village of Muhammad Sakran would be the largest discovered since Saddam Hussein's regime collapsed in the U.S.-led war.

Residents using tractors and, later, their hands excavated bodies this week from graves in the central Iraqi town of Hillah, 60 miles south of Baghdad.

In a news release Tuesday, New York-based Human Rights Watch said the United States had known about the Hillah site since early May, when the mayor of the city asked for help in guarding the graves, and U.S. forces refused.

"The U.S. government has not acted on important information about mass graves in Iraq," said Peter Bouckaert of Human Rights Watch in Baghdad.

"The result is desperate families trying to dig up the site themselves — disturbing the evidence for forensic experts who could professionally establish the identities of the victims."

The BBC, which showed television footage of the grisly scene, said at least 3,000 bodies were exhumed. It quoted unidentified human-rights groups as saying the graves could contain 10,000 to 15,000 bodies. While Human Rights Watch confirmed the existence of the Hillah graves, it did not confirm estimates of the number of people buried there.

Another grave containing more than 1,000 Iraqis was recently found in Muhammad Sakran village, approximately 25 miles north of Baghdad, Human Rights Watch said.

Entifadh Qanbar, a spokesman for the Iraqi National Congress, a London-based exile group close to the U.S. military, said Tuesday in Baghdad that four graves found in Hillah could contain about 15,000 bodies.

"The citizens of the area are excavating these sites with a great deal of sadness and absolutely no assistance," Qanbar said. "Mothers and fathers are trying to identify their children by ID cards and the clothing they were last seen in." He called for help from U.S. civilian administrators.

The reports came a day after Iraqis pulled bodies from a newly discovered mass grave near Basra, the country's second-largest city. The site was believed to contain remains of up to 150 Shiite Muslims killed by Saddam's regime after a rebellion in 1999.

Human Rights Watch also criticized U.S. forces for not guarding the grave in Muhammad Sakran, which it said contained the remains of civilians executed by Saddam's regime in the 1980s.

The BBC said it did not know how or when the victims in the Hillah graves were killed. But it said they could have been Shiite Muslims massacred by Iraqi forces after a Shiite uprising against Saddam after the 1991 Gulf War.

BBC television footage of Hillah showed a tractor quickly excavating decomposed remains of men, women, and children.

AWARDS

Waters nominated for national accolade

Iowa men's tennis player Stuart Waters has been nominated for the John Van Nostrand Memorial Award. The award is a stipend presented to an outstanding senior player who plans to pursue a professional career after college. The winner will be presented at the national championships on May 21 in Athens, Ga.

Waters

Waters is one of six national nominees. The others are Michael Yani, Duke; Daniel Klementz, Middle Tennessee; Verdan Vidovic, Indiana State; Marcus Bernston, Boise State; and Matt Hanlin, Washington.

A two-time All-Big Ten selection, Waters emerged in his final two seasons with the Hawkeyes to play No. 1 singles and excelled in doubles. Waters finished No. 10 in school history with 44 dual-meet wins.

"This is a wonderful, well-deserved honor for Stuart," Iowa coach Steve Houghton said.

BASEBALL

Selig to investigate Florida practices

MIAMI — Baseball Commissioner Bud Selig told his staff to investigate whether the Marlins followed minority-hiring guidelines when the team replaced manager Jeff Torborg with Jack McKeon last weekend.

In April 1999, Selig sent a letter to all big-league clubs requiring them to notify him about certain job vacancies, including manager. Teams are to provide Selig with a list of minority candidates, and the commissioner's office reviews the names before anyone is hired.

General manager Larry Beinfest declined to say whether other candidates were considered before the Marlins hired McKeon last weekend.

"Bud's looking into it," Bob DuPuy, baseball's chief operating officer, said on Tuesday. The Marlins could be fined if it's determined they failed to follow Selig's guidelines. He has the power to fine teams up to $2 million. The Detroit Tigers failed to consider minority candidates before hiring manager Phil Garner in 2000. The Tigers escaped punishment from Selig by creating a five-member community advisory board to work on minority employment and contracting issues, as well as on public relations.

Eustachy assistant says he is next ISU coach

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES — Iowa State assistant Wayne Morgan said Tuesday night he will replace Larry Eustachy as the coach of the Cyclones.

Morgan, 52, told WHO-TV in Des Moines that he agreed to a deal Tuesday evening and an official announcement will be made Wednesday afternoon.

"I'm just really, really happy. I'm glad to have this opportunity. I think that it's a wonderful place," Morgan told the station. "I just look forward to doing great things here."

Messages left for Iowa State director of media relations Tom Kroeschell on his cell phone and at home late Tuesday were not immediately returned. A phone call placed to Morgan went unanswered.

Morgan, who joined Eustachy's staff in July 2002, told WHO his first goal as head basketball coach will be to heal the wounds of the divided Cyclone nation. Eustachy resigned last week, seven days after photos of him drinking and kissing young women at a fraternity party were published.

Before going to Iowa State, Morgan was the head coach at Long Beach State for six seasons, finishing with a 91-84 record. His 1999-2000 team finished 24-6 and won the Big West Conference championship.

He was an assistant at Syracuse, Xavier and Dartmouth.

He and his wife Maribeth have three children. Earlier Tuesday, Chattanooga coach Jeff Lebo said he took himself out of the running to replace Eustachy.

Iowa State athletic director Bruce Van De Velde declined to say Tuesday whether Lebo was even offered the job. He said the search would continue and that the pool of 30 candidates he began with last week had been narrowed to fewer than six.

"We've attracted some great candidates and we're excited about who is left in the pool," Van De Velde said. "Our hope is that in the next few days we'll have somebody hired."

Van De Velde also said at that time that Morgan was a strong candidate for the job.

Morgan and Wyoming coach Steve McClain also interviewed last weekend for the job. McClain removed his name from consideration on Sunday.

But much of the focus had been on Lebo, who issued a statement Tuesday afternoon saying he was "looking forward at coaching at Chattanooga next year."

Lebo said he and his wife, Melissa, returned to Chattanooga on Tuesday and he met with school officials to relay his decision.

"I am flattered that Iowa

State had an interest in me," Lebo said. "Iowa State is a first-class institution and it has a first-rate athletics director in Bruce Van De Velde."

A source close to the ISU search committee told the Des Moines Register that Lebo's interview went so well he was the group's unanimous choice.

Lebo, 36, led Tennessee-Chattanooga to a 21-9 record last season, 11-5 in the Southern Conference, and was named the league's coach of the year. The Mocs lost to East Tennessee, 97-90, in the finals of the Southern Conference tournament.

With a $1.1 million salary, Eustachy had been Iowa's highest paid state employee.

MY EXPERIENCE

Testing the waters

No boats tipped over but the natural groove was missing

ADAM JACOBI
Sports reporter

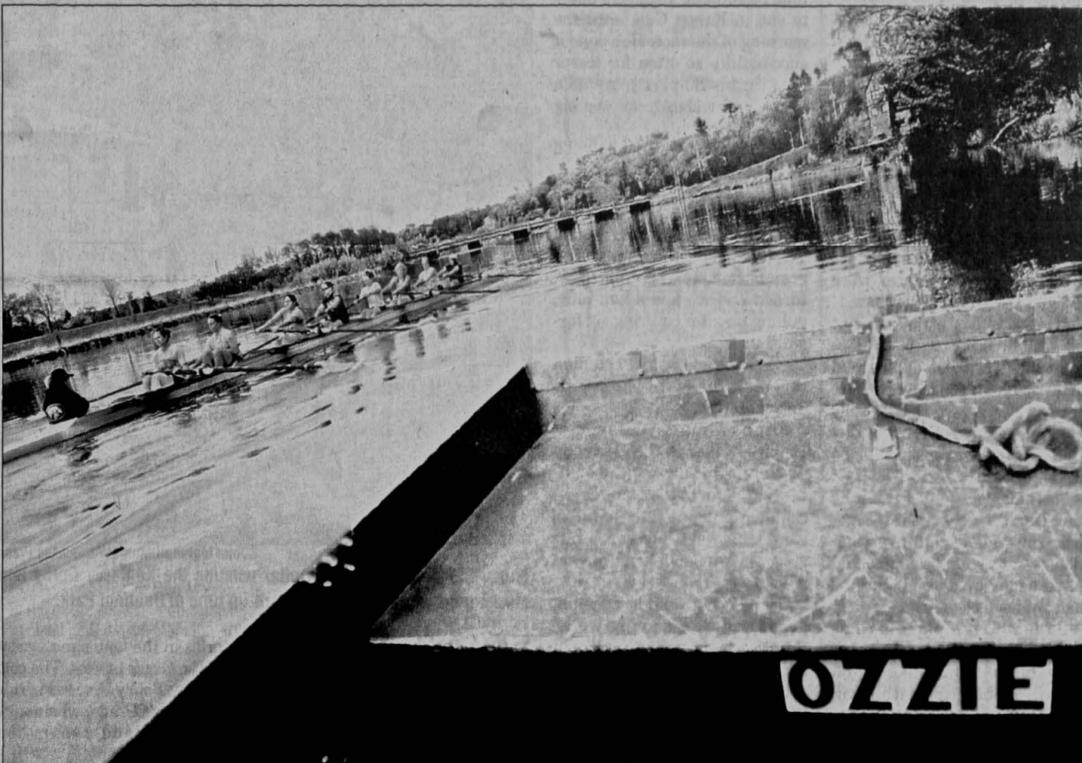

I'm tired, I'm sore, and my legs are on fire.

I couldn't be happier.

I spent the afternoon with the women's rowing team, and it was a transcendent experience. Surely, they are far more skilled than I. Surely, they realized that I was embarrassingly incompetent at their sport. Surely, they didn't care.

Recognizing my status as a world-class athlete, head coach Mandi Kowal teamed me with the first Varsity-8 boat, essentially the top

Gymnastics skills more strenuous than they look

BRIAN TRIPLETT
Sports reporter

I'll be honest. Before covering the Iowa women's gymnastics team this season, I knew virtually nothing about the sport. Then, throughout the season, going to meets and conducting interviews with the coaches and players, I slowly began to understand the concept of gymnastics.

But it wasn't until I suited up in my T-shirt and gym shorts and headed over to the gymnastics practice facility at the Field House for a crash course in Gymnastics 101 that I truly began to understand what the sport was all about.

Now, I consider myself to be in decent shape (at least I was in my pre-college days), but little did I know that after an hour of only a fraction of an actual

On my walk to the gym, my confidence level was high. "How hard can it be?" I thought. The gymnasts saw me enter the gym like I'd done dozens of times before, but this time I wasn't there to flip on my tape recorder and rattle off questions. I was on a different sort of mission.

I was greeted by women's gymnastics coach Mike Lorenzen — my instructor for the day — and after a few minutes of incorrect stretching, I was ready to go. Luckily, most of the real athletes were still finishing up

I started off on the trampoline, which gymnasts use for practicing their gravity-defying aerial acrobatics. I used it to practice jumping up and down.

I was instructed to land on

MILWAUKEE — Shawn Estes won his third-straight decision, getting a victory on the road for the first time this season as the Chicago Cubs beat Milwaukee, 7-2, Tuesday night.

Richie Sexson hit his major league-leading 14th homer for the Brewers, who have lost three straight and five of their last six.

Estes (4-3) allowed two runs and five hits in seven innings, striking out five to beat Milwaukee for the second time in six days. Antonio Alfonseca and Joe Borowski completed the five-hitter.

Hee Seop Choi and Corey Patterson drove in two runs apiece. Chicago had 13 hits, a day after getting a season-high 19 against the Brewers, and at 22-16 the Cubs matched their season high of six games above .500.

Milwaukee starter Ruben Quevedo (0-1) lost his career-high fifth-straight decision, allowing six runs and 10 hits in 6 1-3 innings. Quevedo, winless since last July 24, made his second start of the season, his first since May 3.

Choi put Chicago ahead in the second inning with a two-run homer his seventh of the season but first since May 5 off Milwaukee's Ben Sheets.

Twins 4, Royals 2, 10 innings

MINNEAPOLIS — Todd Sears hit a two-run homer with two outs in the 10th inning, giving Minnesota a victory over Kansas City.

Pinch-hitter Bobby Kielty tied it with an RBI single off closer Mike MacDougal in the bottom of the ninth. Doug Mientkiewicz also had an RBI single for the Twins.

LaTroy Hawkins (2-0) earned the victory with two scoreless innings.

Reds 7, Cardinals 2

ST. LOUIS — The Cincinnati Reds won in Ken Griffey Jr.'s return, not that he had much to do with it.

Griffey grounded out as a pinch-hitter in his first game since dislocating a shoulder on April 5. Austin Kearns and Adam Dunn supplied much of the offense with two-run homers in the first inning that led the Reds to a victory over the Cardinals on Tuesday night.

Griffey Jr. batted for Paul Wilson (2-3) in the seventh inning and grounded to shortstop.

Athletics 3, Tigers 1

DETROIT — Miguel Tejada's two-run double broke a seventh-inning tie, lifting Ted Lilly and Oakland to a victory over Detroit.

Mike Maroth (0-8) became the first Tigers pitcher to lose his first eight decisions since Ted Gray in 1953, according to the Elias Sports Bureau, baseball's statistician.

Lilly (3-2) gave up one run on three hits and no walks in 7 2/3 innings.

Oakland loaded the bases on two walks and a single with one out in the seventh. Steve Sparks replaced Maroth and got Eric Byrnes to foul out before Tejada doubled.

The Tigers put runners at the corners with one out in the eighth, but Chad Bradford got Andres Torres to ground into an inning-ending double play.

Red Sox 5, Rangers 4

BOSTON — Nomar Garciaparra hit an RBI double that capped a three-run eighth inning as Boston beat Texas.

The Rangers led 4-2 in the eighth when third baseman Hank Blalock let Shea Hillenbrand's hard grounder off Francisco Cordero (1-4) get by him for an error. One out later, Jason Varitek singled, and Johnny Damon followed with another single that cut the deficit to 4-3.

Todd Walker followed with a tying single, and Garciaparra's double put Boston ahead.

Alan Embree (2-0) pitched a perfect eighth, and Brandon Lyon got the save. Juan Gonzalez singled leading off and Herbert Perry's two-out infield single went off Kevin Millar's glove at first to put runners at the corners. Michael Young then grounded to Garciaparra at shortstop, and he threw to second for the final out.

Astros 6, Pirates 3

PITTSBURGH — Richard Hidalgo hit a three-run double just out of the reach of right fielder Rob Mackowiak in the ninth, and Houston came back to beat Pittsburgh for the 10th-straight time.

Jose Vizcaino also drove in three runs for Houston.

Pete Munro (3-1) pitched a scoreless eighth for the victory. Billy Wagner threw a perfect ninth for the save.

Mariners 8, Indians 3

CLEVELAND — Randy Winn drove in three runs, and Joel Pineiro settled down after a shaky start to lead Seattle to a win over Cleveland.

Winn had a two-run triple and an RBI single.

Ichiro Suzuki had four of the Mariners' season-high 17 hits, and Edgar Martinez and Jeff Cirillo had two RBIs apiece.

Pineiro (3-3) allowed three runs and nine hits in six innings. But after giving up all three runs on five hits in the second, the right-hander blanked the Indians on two hits over the next four innings.

Winn's two-run triple highlighted Seattle's four-run fourth off Brian Anderson (2-4) that gave the Mariners a 6-3 lead.

Angels 10, Yankees 3

NEW YORK — Derek Jeter returned to a familiar sight: Anaheim beating up on the New York Yankees.

Scott Spiezo hit a grand slam and a solo homer, sending Mike Mussina to his first loss of the season in the Angels' win.

Jeter went 1-for-4 in his first game after missing six weeks with a dislocated shoulder.

Diamondbacks 6, Phillies 1

PHILADELPHIA — Quinton McCracken hit a two-out RBI single off Jose Mesa that drove in the go-ahead run in a five-run ninth inning, leading Arizona over Philadelphia.

After Alex Cintron singled to load the bases, Barajas scored on a wild pitch, Junior Spivey followed with a two-run single, and Luis Gonzalez added a RBI double.

Mike Koplove (1-0) got two outs in the eighth.

Matt Mantei finished the six-hitter. Mesa (1-3) gave up five runs and four hits in two-thirds of an inning.

Devil Rays 7, Blue Jays 5

TORONTO — Newly promoted Jared Sandberg hit a two-run homer, and Joe Kennedy rebounded from the worst outing of his career, leading Tampa Bay over Toronto.

Sandberg gave Tampa Bay a 5-2 lead in the sixth with his two-run shot off former Devil Ray Tanyon Sturtze (3-4).

Bell boosts Mavericks

DALLAS (AP) — Raja Bell was the unlikely hero for a Dallas victory, 112-93, on Tuesday.

Bell provided a big boost for the suddenly re-energized Mavericks, outshooting the Sacramento Kings in the game-turning third quarter of a 112-93 victory. Bell had just 13 points, but nine in the decisive period as Dallas took a 3-2 lead in the Western Conference semifinal series.

Bell had four baskets in the third quarter. That was one more than Sacramento managed while being outscored 29-10 in the period.

Steve Nash scored 25 points. He was just 5-of-12 from the field but hit 15 of 16 free throws. All five starters, plus Nick Van Exel, scored in double figures for Dallas.

Dirk Nowitzki had 16 points, 15 rebounds, and a career-high nine assists, falling just short of the first triple-double in Dallas postseason history.

Devils tie series with decisive win

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OTTAWA — New Jersey delivered the near-perfect game John Madden said they needed, winning, 4-1.

Madden, Tommy Albelin, Jeff Friesen, and Jay Pandolfo scored as the Devils beat Ottawa on Tuesday night to even their NHL Eastern Conference finals series.

Game 3 of the best-of-seven series, that is tied 1-1, is Thursday night in New Jersey. The Devils are 6-0 this postseason at home.

Radek Bonk scored for the Senators, who appeared flat and failed to build off the momentum of Saturday's 3-2 overtime victory. The Senators also allowed more than two goals for the first time in 12 games, ending an NHL playoff record streak they set in Game 1.

Tired of spending two days between games hearing about how much quicker, talented and creative the Senators were, the Devils responded with an efficient, no-nonsense performance in jumping out to a 2-0 first-period lead.

The Devils returned home to New Jersey after Game 1 and came back to Canada on Monday.

Albelin, back in the lineup after sitting out the opener, made it 1-0 just 4:15 in on New Jersey's first shot. His point shot beat Ottawa goaltender Patrick Lalime, who was screened by New Jersey's Pascal Rheaume.

It was Albelin's seventh career postseason goal, and first in 33 playoff games, dating to May 7, 1995.

Friesen made it 2-0 before the period was out, capping a 2-on-1 break that came off Ottawa defenseman Zdeno Chara's turnover deep in the Devils' end.

The game was a turnaround from the opener, in which the Senators jumped out to a 2-0 lead before allowing the Devils to tie it.

New Jersey didn't make the same mistake.

The only blemish came when Bonk cut the lead to 2-1, scoring on a 2-on-1 break 2:02 into the second period. Marian Hossa set up the play after he stripped Scott Gomez of the puck at center.

The Devils responded when Madden beat Ottawa defenseman Karel Rachunek to a loose puck to create a partial break, firing a 15-footer past Lalime to make it 3-1 with 3:27 left in the second.

Pandolfo, with his second goal in two games, sealed the win, popping in Jamie Langenbrunner's rebound with 5:31 left.

Longtime Jazz coach Sloan extends contract

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALT LAKE CITY — Jerry Sloan isn't ready to retire to his Illinois farm just yet.

Sloan, whose 15 seasons with Utah is the longest tenure among any head coach or manager in the four major professional sports, said Tuesday he has agreed to a contract extension that will keep him with the Jazz through 2006.

"When the season was over I was very concerned about whether I would be able to put the energy into it," Sloan said. "But I think after you have a chance to get away from it a little bit and kind of see what your thoughts are, those questions are pretty much answered."

Sloan, who still had a year remaining on his contract, was considering retirement after the Jazz were knocked out of the playoffs in the opening round for the third-straight year.

It took just over a week at his farm in McLeansboro, Ill., for him to decide he wants to keep coaching even if it will be without John Stockton and possibly Karl Malone.

"When you get beat up a little bit, you feel like sometimes you want to run and hide. But I think if you have any fight in you, you want to come back and try to go at it again," Sloan, 61,

If you're a competitive person, you want to go at it again. It's hard to back off and just duck your head, and walk away.

Jerry Sloan,
Utah Jazz coach

said during a conference call. "If you're a competitive person, you want to go at it again. It's hard to back off, and just duck your head, and walk away."

Terms of the deal were not announced.

The Jazz have never missed the playoffs under Sloan, and they won Western Conference titles in 1997 and 1998.

Sloan may have locked himself into a challenge like the one the Chicago Bulls faced when they picked him No. 1 in the 1966 expansion draft.

For the first time during Sloan's era in Utah, Stockton will no longer be running the offense. After 19 seasons with the Jazz, he is retiring.

And Malone, the Jazz's leading scorer the last 17 seasons, is considering leaving as a free agent.

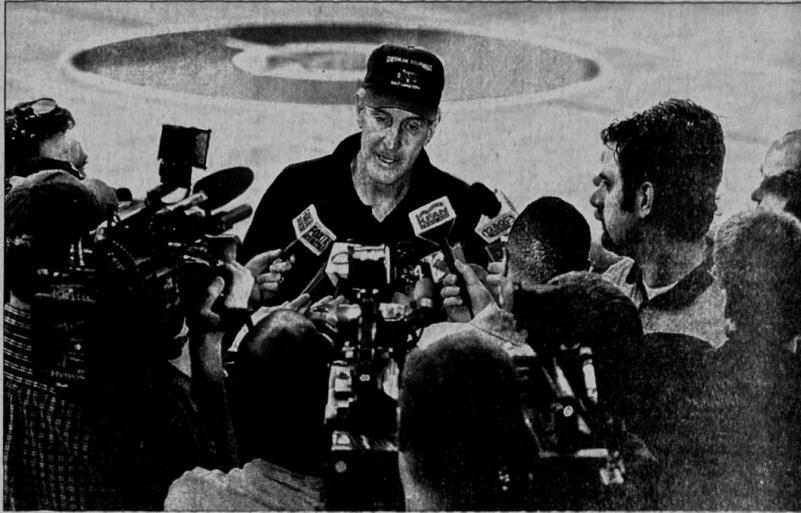

"No one wanted to see Stockton retire and go away, but that's part of this business," Sloan said. "We know we can't replace him, but we still have to go to compete. That's the one thing. If you like to do that, you have the opportunity to go try it again."

Sloan said he hadn't talked to Malone about his future and didn't plan to. Once Malone makes up his mind, Sloan and his assistants, who also are staying, will take a look at who's returning and who Utah plans to pick in the draft next month.

Sloan replaced Frank Layden as coach early in the 1988-89 season and is 781-400 with the Jazz. He was also 94-121 while coaching 2½ seasons with the Bulls.

Known for his quick temper and straight talk, Sloan has not mellowed with age. The low point of the season, and possibly his career, came in January, when he shoved referee Courtney Kirkland during a game at

Utah head coach Jerry Sloan talks to reporters after his seven-game suspension in January. Tom Smart/Associated Press

Sacramento and was suspended for seven games.

Sloan has been apologizing since.

"I made some mistakes, and I wish I had never done that and put myself in that position," Sloan said. "But you've got to be a little bit tougher than that sometimes, and go on, and hope you don't have any other problems."

Sloan finished third in the 2003 coach-of-the-year voting after guiding the Jazz to a 47-35 record, a three-game improvement over 2001-02. Without Stockton and possibly Malone, improving on 2003 could prove to be difficult.

But Sloan said he's looking forward to the challenge, which he calls an opportunity to see how well he can coach without two of the players named among the NBA's top 50 ever.

Jazz management is confident Sloan is still the right coach as the organization moves out of the Stockton-to-Malone era.

"I just think it's so important to have continuity and be able to have stability. Certainly Jerry brings both of those to the table for us," said Kevin O'Connor, the Jazz vice president of basketball operations.

Technique awful, but fun

rowers on the team. What better audience for an ego-deflating performance like rowing for the first time in my life?

Senior Dorian Piehl let me take her spot carrying the Dr. Christine H.B. Grant out of the boathouse. I still have bruises on my shoulders from carrying the boat on my shoulder, but it was still fantastic to be part of the team.

We warmed up by running for about 10 minutes. I joked that the women weren't sprinting, but I was secretly afraid that they actually would make a complete fool of me. Make no mistake, these ladies are serious athletes. While most men would drool at the thought of dozens of young, fit women running around in Spandex, I was slightly intimidated, knowing that the vast majority of them were strong enough to beat me senseless.

Even if the Hawkeyes weren't a nationally recognized power, anybody would like being a part of this team. Their camaraderie and constant good nature ought to be a model for any team to follow. Their humor was genuine, and their smiles infectious.

After the jog, I followed the women into the IMU, where most entered the women's bathroom. (Sadly, reporting has its limits.) After a cruelly short break, we stretched. I'm no stranger to stretching. I do it more than anybody I know when I play pickup basketball. That said, this was nothing like I had ever experienced. They did stretches my body had never heard of. On several occasions, I thought I could feel my limbs detaching from their sockets.

After a quick meeting, the V8+, sans me, went out onto the water. Once again, Piehl graciously let me carry the boat to the water, but I hit my head on the boat twice and had to stop. I was no natural, but they didn't seem to mind.

I spent most of the time on the water in Coach Kowal's motorboat, talking about rowing and random things — like seeing deer swim. After about a half-hour of watching other people do all the hard work, it was my turn. We decided to do a transfer in the middle of the river, which made me far more nervous than anybody ever should be. I was told I should not step in the place where it looked like my feet should go, because it would break the boat. Instead, shoes were attached to the boat. Amazingly, they weren't big enough to handle men's size 14 feet, so I had to just put my feet on top of them. I blame my difficulties on the shoes.

Calling my technique awful doesn't even begin to describe it. There wasn't a span of five seconds when I wasn't doing something egregiously wrong. At one point, I thought I had found my stroke, then I looked up and saw I was completely off the cadence of the boat. I responded by losing whatever rhythm I had. Someone charitable — and wrong — would call it marching to the beat of my own drum. Yet through it all, my crewmates provided encouragement.

After around five inglorious minutes, it was time to turn around and dock. I was lucky enough to be on the side that rowed while turning around, and in doing so, something downright magical happened. I didn't screw up. I was keeping up with the women. Granted, it helped that we were rowing about a fifth as fast as normal, but that's a minor detail. We got to the dock, and I stepped out tenuously, but triumphantly. I had accomplished both of my goals: I never fell in and never irreparably damaged equipment.

As I was leaving, one of the rowers told me that as I got off the water, I was "glowing." I asked her what she meant, and she said I had a big smile and was, you know, glowing. I hadn't realized that; my smile was involuntary. When she said that, it occurred to me that I was still smiling. And later, walking home, I was still smiling. I may have put forth the worst performance the sport has ever seen, but by God, the women made it fun.

I could write as an impartial reporter. I could write as an earnest fan. I could write as whatever I want to. To write as anything other than a truly impressed newcomer would be a disservice to this team. The titles they'll win this year and years to come are almost secondary to me. They've earned my admiration and respect, and for that I can't thank them enough.

ly land far from it.

After adding a few more steps to the process, such as learning the art of a proper landing and turning while in mid-air, my instructor handed me a harness, which I strapped myself into. "What's this for?" I wondered. "I was jumping up and down just fine."

As I soon found out, it was time to attempt a backflip. Luckily, from prior experience as a child, I somewhat knew how to do these. It went smoothly for the most part, with the exception of nearly falling off the trampoline on one occasion.

I stood proud, thinking I had conquered the trampoline. But in no way was I prepared for the words that came out of my instructor's mouth. "Let's try to double backflip now," he said.

"You don't mean flipping twice in the air?" I asked naively.

It turned out he was serious. On my first attempt I rotated once, then began desperately searching for the ground, eventually being yanked up by my instructor via the safety harness. After some practice, I actually landed the double back flip, earning some applause from the remaining gymnasts.

As I began to break a sweat, I was feeling good about my performance so far. But anything close to a perfect 10 stopped there.

I went on to learn the basics of each event, struggling to support my lanky frame in the men's events, which required an uncanny amount of strength, and lacking the gracefulness and balance required for the women's events.

Among the most difficult events for a first-timer like myself was the balance beam.

I've tried skydiving and have jumped off 40-foot cliffs into water, so I never imagined being terrified of standing four feet above ground. As I struggled to walk across the four-inch wide surface, all that ran through my head was, "If you fall, make sure both legs go to the same side.

There are more important things in your life."

I did fall a few times, and was completely satisfied that stubbing my toe into the ground after leaping off the beam was my only notable injury.

I learned a lot that day — and not only about my athletic limitations — but that experiencing the sport provided a much clearer idea than just merely observing it. And I only got a taste. The thought of attempting the advanced routines with flips and jumps and turns scared me just thinking about it.

"It's funny to see people who aren't exactly into this sport test the equipment because you see how awkward it is for them," said men's gymnast Mike Kelly, who observed my performance. "Not everyone in the world can do this kind of stuff."

I have a newfound respect for the sport, but I don't think there is a future for me.

As I inspected my raw hands while trying to catch my breath, my instructor for the day laughed and suggested I lean toward golf.

Probably a good idea.

WOMEN'S FOOTBALL

Peter Cosgrove/Associated Press

Charlotte Chambers receives low fives entering the field. Chambers is 70 years old.

70-years-young Charlotte Chambers plays football

BY MIKE BRANOM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORLANDO, Fla. — Charlotte Chambers' application stuck out among the dozens of hopefuls who tried out for Orlando's fledgling Independent Women's Football League team.

In the space for date of birth, Chambers wrote "1932."

Surely that must be a mistake, Orlando Starz CEO Marsha Beatty thought. But it was no error, as the teammates of the retired teacher known as "Miss Charlotte" soon found out.

"Sports has always been my thing," Chambers said last week, two seasons into her playing career as Orlando's reserve safety. "But growing up, you would never think of a woman playing tackle football because that's the way society was geared."

Chambers, who is indeed 70, used to get her football kicks through her devotion to the New England Patriots and Tampa Bay Buccaneers defensive tackle Warren Sapp. Now she has a chance to lace up the pads and butt helmets with women less than half her age. And if those opponents don't want to hit her out of respect for their elders, the great-grandmother of four isn't about to play nice.

"I say, 'You better hit me, because I'm laying you out,'" Chambers said.

Added Beatty: "Last year, I thought I should tell the other teams to go easy and not hit her too hard. But now I'm afraid she's going to hurt somebody. When she puts on her uniform, all this aggression comes from somewhere."

"Charlotte's ready to hurt somebody — she uses the word 'death.'"

The Independent Women's Football League, founded in 2000, is one of at least four full-contact women's leagues currently operating. It has 21 teams across America and Canada.

Chambers isn't big, measuring 5-4 and 140 pounds with a low center of gravity. But she has a quick gait, thanks to daily five-mile walks and aerobics, plus football practice twice a week. "I'm in this for the fun and exercise," she said.

An athlete dating back to her days in high-school basketball ("I had a mean left hook shot"), Chambers is a firm believer in a use-it-or-lose-it philosophy when it comes to fitness.

"You have to work for it!" Chambers shouted after a game. "You have to earn it! You have to earn it!"

To be honest, Chambers doesn't see much action for the winless Starz. During Orlando's 20-14 loss to the Tampa Bay Terminators last week, she was on the field for only four plays during a goal-line stand. She never saw contact, aside from falling on a pile when a run ended short of a touchdown.

"She's our Rudy," linebacker Mona Mitzenius said, comparing Chambers to Daniel "Rudy" Ruettiger Jr., the undersized yet scrappy Notre Dame football player whose life became a movie after playing 27 seconds during a two-season career. "How can you complain when Miss Charlotte's running the hills with you?"

Chambers also is the team's spiritual leader, befitting a woman who has taken her faith seriously enough to attend Hartford (Conn.) Seminary. Before and after games, she leads the players in prayer for health and strength.

Although the league could use all the attention she's bringing in, Chambers insists she is not a publicity stunt.

"Listen, I'm two years into this, right?" an intense Chambers asked a reporter. "Last year, nobody said squat."

Chambers wrapped up the May 10 game by reminding everyone of who they are and why they were there. The players took a knee at midfield of the high-school stadium and gave Miss Charlotte their undivided attention.

With a raspy shout that carried the length of a long bomb downfield, Chambers said, "When I say 'women,' you say 'football.'"

"Women!" "Football!" four dozen sweaty warriors replied.

"Women!" "Football!"

INTERNATIONAL SOCCER

Soccer returns to Iraq

BY SLOBODAN LEKIC
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD — Weakened by years of neglect and intimidated by an oppressive government, Iraq is getting a soccer team back together to chase an improbable dream — qualifying for next year's Olympics.

"Practice will commence this week," assistant coach Adnan Hamad said in a broadcast carried by Voice of New Iraq, a radio station controlled by the U.S.-led coalition.

In war's aftermath, the job of rebuilding the country's sports infrastructure is slowly beginning. Athletes who have been living in Europe are preparing to return home in the next few days after winning the support of the Kuwait-based Olympic Council of Asia on Tuesday.

"It is not going to be easy," said Naji Ghazi, a runner and one of the seven members of the Free Iraq Olympic Group.

Iraq, once among the most powerful teams in Asia, has a hard road ahead in Olympic qualifying, which is limited to players under 23. But that hasn't tempered Hamad's determination. The team disintegrated during the run-up to the war, but Hamad urged the players to show up at Baghdad's al-Karkh stadium to begin practicing for international competition.

"We will train four times a week to be ready for the matches," Hamad said. "Iraq will be fully prepared for the Olympic qualifiers."

A friendly match between two popular teams, al-Zawra and Police, was delayed twice in the past week and now is tentatively scheduled for Friday. It will be the first professional match in Iraq since the war.

Iraq's soccer organization used to be run by Saddam Hussein's eldest son, Uday. There have been reports that Uday, who also oversaw Iraq's Olympic Committee, tortured players who failed to perform to his standards. Ahmed Radi, Iraq's best-known soccer player in recent years, said he was imprisoned three times on Uday's orders.

Last month, the Asian Football Confederation first postponed Iraq's qualifier against Vietnam for the 2004 Athens Olympics because of the war and later ruled that Vietnam would be awarded the canceled match. But it later appeared to backtrack in the face of protests from Iraq.

Bernd Stange, a German coach who manages the Iraqi team, has pleaded with the Malaysia-based AFC to reschedule the qualifier and allow Iraq a chance at the Olympics.

Despite the war, Iraq remains in the top-five bracket of Asian football rankings, and is 53rd in FIFA's global listing. But its last success in an international tournament came at the West Asian Football Federation championship in 2002, when the team — coached by Hamad — beat Jordan 3-2 in the final.

FIFA has decided to dispatch a team of experts to Iraq when the situation stabilizes to ascertain the condition of stadiums and other soccer facilities. The governing body also will formulate a plan to assist Iraq in restarting its domestic leagues and prepare the national team for upcoming international tournaments.

Serena, Seles advance in Open

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROME — Serena Williams and Monica Seles overcame challenges from unlikely sources Tuesday at the Italian Open.

Williams, the defending champion at the clay-court tournament, had her serve broken twice in the first set but still managed to beat Czech qualifier Klara Koukalova (6-4, 6-3).

Seles, meanwhile, had to rally for a 4-6, 6-2, 6-3 victory against 46th-ranked Myriam Casanova.

Williams is tuning up to defend her French Open title, but she looked rusty at times against Koukalova, losing nine-straight points in one stretch during the first set.

Later, though, Williams broke Koukalova to go up 5-3 in the second set and served out the match with an ace.

"She was striking it well and very deep," Williams said. "Some of her balls were off the line. That was good practice for me. The next match I'll be ready for the pace as well as the slow ball."

The 10th-seeded Seles appeared stunned by Casanova's powerful strokes in the first set, then mounted a comeback.

"She just came out and was hitting the ball very hard," Seles said. "It took me awhile to adjust to that."

Seles, the Italian Open champion in 1990 and 2000, received constant encouragement from the Foro Italico crowd. After the match, a group of fans clad in U.S. flags presented the naturalized American with a dozen red roses.

"I've really got some amazing fans here," Seles said.

"They've been with me since 1990."

Casanova, a Swiss player making her Rome debut, came up with a string of aces and winners in the first set. But as the match wore on, Seles began to win longer rallies.

Three other seeded players advanced Tuesday.

The 11th-seeded Magdalena Maleeva beat Silvia Farina Elia (6-4, 6-4). No. 12 Eleni Daniilidou eliminated Samantha Reeves of the United States (6-2, 6-4), and No. 13 Ai Sugiyama topped Paola Suarez (6-2, 6-3).

Three other Americans lost, including sixth-seeded Chanda Rubin, who was defeated by Emilie Loit of France (6-2, 1-6, 6-3). Virginia Ruano Pascual of Spain beat Meilen Tu (6-4, 6-4), and Fabiola Zuluaga of Colombia beat Alexandra Stevenson (6-1, 6-1).

Advice for next year's freshmen

- The best pool table in Iowa City is at the Parthenon.
- Go tailgating at least once. It's one helluva learning experience.
- Best late-night munchies: Pizza on Dubuque.
- Skip a night at the Sports Column and check out the Bijou Theatre.
- Dump your high-school sweetheart.
- The cafeteria waffles are awesome.
- Take a Latin Dance class — there's, like, 25 women for every guy.
- Parking in the Public Safety parking lot is free after 4:30.
- The Airliner has the best service.
- Make friends with the 21-year-old on your floor.
