Dr. John, a musician from New Orleans, highlighted the music festivities at the 2003 Iowa Arts Festival. He performed June 7 to a large crowd in the intersection of Dubuque Street and Iowa Avenue.

Art and more for IC's sake

THE DAILY IOWAN

Last weekend, the Iowa City community took back the town.

Instead of backpack-bedecked students monopolizing the Pedestrian Mall, the streets were filled with children, dogs, and art.

The 15th-annual Iowa Arts Festival kicked off its 2003 incarnation with a turnout that climaxed during the main attraction — New Orleans legend Dr. John's show June 7. Vicki Jennings, the festival's executive director, estimated the crowd numbered between 8,000 and 10,000.

It all started June 5 with an outdoor screening of The Music Man and continued through Sunday as diverse activities coursed through downtown.

"This festival's geared toward families, so we always have a wide variety of entertainment," Jennings said. "We've pretty much got everything."

"Everything" equals 100 artist booths, exotic-food vendors, and such kids' activities as Russian egg painting and henna tattoos, plus music ranging from jazz and funk to folk and blues.

Artists traveling from such states as Arkansas — plus those who call Iowa home — applied earlier in the year for a place in the juried art fair. John Weyer, a wood carver from Sperry, Iowa, who has been coming to the festival for the past four years, said he hopes to come again in 2004.

ITS cuts desktop division

BY SARAH REICKS
THE DAILY IOWAN

Despite charging more for computer fees in 2003-04, UI Information Technology Services is closing the Desktop Services Division, which handles computer problems, before classes start in the fall.

The division, which runs on a budget of approximately $800,000, is responsible for both personal-computer hardware repair and software desktop support. David Dobbins, the university's assistant vice president for ITS and the interim director of the desktop division, said technological advances have allowed his department to provide online software support, reducing the need for employees in the division.

"The work has just gone away over time," he said, although, he said, ITS does not keep statistics on how many people use the services.

A 4 percent computer-fee increase for students in the next academic year will both keep up with inflation and cover such university services as dial-up Internet service and Information Technology Centers, Dobbins said, adding that warranty services provided by computer companies diminish student and employee needs for the desktop division's services.

He said no employees will be laid off; rather, they will be relocated to other university departments.

"It will shift the focus of the staff and put them closer to the departments that need their services," he said. "They are good employees. We just need to transition business."

But such employees as Don McConnell and Al Jagnow said they are concerned that small

UI officials hope the implementation of 20 recommendations from two committees within the next few months will improve procedures in handling student criminal cases at the university.

UI President David Skorton on June 6 announced plans to implement all but one of the 11 recommendations drafted by an ad-hoc committee appointed by former interim President Sandy Boyd to investigate the school's role in the resolution of criminal charges in the Pierre Pierce case. In addition, he accepted 10 recommendations from a Board in Control of Athletics subcommittee, two of which have already been installed.

"I am optimistic that these recommendations will make more likely an outcome best for everyone in the future," Skorton said, adding that though his actions are not a direct comment on the Pierce case, he hopes they will bring peace of mind to those who feel that basketball player's case was mishandled.

He said he still plans to evaluate how one ad-hoc committee recommendation, which dictates that the university not participate in the resolution of criminal matters, should be implemented. It would attempt to "institute a 'firewall' whereby the university awaits the resolution of criminal charges before dealing with the consequences within the university environment."

Although Skorton said he "strongly endorses" that recommendation, some of the words need to be changed because there still may be certain situations in which the university and the criminal-justice system need to communicate.

Other changes call for centralizing investigations of such cases in the Office of Affirmative Action and affirming the Office of the Vice President for Student Services as the sole authority in imposing student discipline. The university must limit involvement of outside parties while maintaining confidentiality in such cases, and it should establish a policy regarding interim suspension of students, the ad-hoc committee recommended.

Pierce, who turned 20 on June 7, was charged with third-degree sexual assault stemming from a Sept. 6, 2002, incident at his Orchard Street residence. He pleaded guilty to assault causing injury on Nov. 1, 2002, and red-shirted for the 2002-03 basketball season.

The university's investigation found that the victim, a UI female athlete, was not always referred to appropriate university personnel and that many with whom she spoke were not aware of the resources available to her. In addition, investigators found that attorneys on both sides had contact with university administrators and top Athletics Department staff during a mediation — discussion that may have focused on Pierce's participation as an athlete rather than his well-being as a student.

Skorton credited the Athletics Department for reinstating the Student-Athlete Welfare Committee and for naming Mary Curtis, an assistant athletics director, as a sexual assault/sexual harassment compliance officer.

Nicholas Colangelo, an education professor and the chairman of the Athletics Board, said these improvements in procedures and oversight are not meant to correct a past situation because it would be "shortsighted" to try to fix a case that has already been resolved.

Attacks kill 5 Israelis; Sharon booted by party

JERUSALEM — Hours after Palestinian gunmen killed four Israeli soldiers in a fog-shrouded outpost in the Gaza Strip and another Israeli in the West Bank, Prime Minister Ariel Sharon faced down jeering, boeing opponents of a U.S.-backed peace plan Sunday and declared that the initiative would move forward.

"I intend to fulfill my promise to the people: I will bring security, and I will bring peace," the prime minister told a raucous convention of his Likud Party in a speech repeatedly interrupted by hecklers who chanted slogans, blew whistles, and waved signs denouncing the peace plan, known as the "road map."

City targets 'nuisance' tenants

BY ASHLEY HOFFMAN
THE DAILY IOWAN

Several changes for the Iowa City Housing and Inspection Services are imminent following last month's passage of a nuisance ordinance by the Iowa City City Council in a 5-2 vote.

Douglas Boothroy, the director of Housing and Inspection Services, said the technology department is working on a new software system that will help retrieve information from police databases regarding tenants' nuisance violations. He said the system will provide an automated flow of information and allow the staff to run daily or weekly reports of tenant violations in an efficient manner.

Boothroy said he hopes to have the software developed by the time students return to Iowa City in the fall. The software system will also help notify landlords of tenant violations.

Rod Faulkner, an associate manager and realtor with West Winds Property Management, said that because his company is often unaware of certain nuisance violations, the new system should prove to be highly beneficial.

The city's housing department will add a fifth housing inspector, because the new ordinance means more work duties and more staff time. The last time a staff member was hired was in 1992.

Officials are uncertain on how the new position will be funded. City Manager Steve Atkins, who has proposed charging landlords a $25 property-inspection fee to fund the new position, said the council will likely accept his proposal. Boothroy mentioned the city's economic-development fund as another possible financing source.

Tenants who commit two or more violations in a 12-month period are required to attend meetings with their landlords and city officials to discuss violations.

Violations include such criminal complaints as disorderly house and possession of illegal substances that take place on the rental property.

"We are dealing with issues that affect the livability of the neighborhoods," Mayor Ernie Lehman said, adding that similar ordinances in other cities have been successful, largely because they allow for open talks and discussions among all parties involved.

Failure to attend meetings or comply with action agreed on could result in fines and possible evictions.

Lehman said he was unaware of any city having to reduce or revoke rental permits of landlords for failure to address nuisance properties. Consequences of such failures by the landlord are spelled out in the Iowa City ordinance.

The Neighborhood Housing Relations Task Force originally recommended the ordinance in an effort to deal with properties with chronic code violations.

Both Iowa City police Sgt. Brian Krei and Lehman believe the ordinance will largely remedy the properties-with-nuisances problem.

"I have no question that [the ordinance] will have positive effects," Lehman said.

Captured Oakdale escapees face federal charges

BY KENT NGUYEN
THE DAILY IOWAN

Now back in custody, Oakdale escapees Jeffrey Hershberger and Omar Wilkins are facing the one thing they wished to avoid when escaping — more time in prison.

Both men, who fled the medium-security prison April 12, face federal charges of carjacking and using and carrying a firearm in commission of a violent crime. In addition, Hershberger faces a bank-robbery charge.

Al Overbaugh, a spokesman for the U.S. Attorney's Office, said Hershberger, 38, and Wilkins, 19, could be looking at an additional 15 years in prison. If convicted of using and carrying a firearm, these two escapees would face mandatory consecutive five-year sentences.

"Hershberger and Wilkins are going to be tried together, so Hershberger's trial date of June 30 will most likely be pushed back depending on when Wilkin's trial date is set," Overbaugh said.

The trial date for Wilkins, who was serving a life sentence for murder, has to be set at least 30 days after returning to Iowa, he said. Wilkins was returned to Iowa on June 5.

Hershberger, who was in prison for theft and forgery, intends to represent himself. Federal Public Defender Phil Mactaggart was assigned to help Hershberger with any questions throughout the trial.

Both Mactaggart and Don Allegro, the federal prosecutor assigned to this case could not be reached for comment.

Hershberger and Wilkins also face state charges of escape for allegedly scaling two 12-foot fences topped with barbed wire and stealing a visitor's car. The two later allegedly carjacked a 1998 Dodge Caravan, telling the driver they had a gun.

"These charges may be expanded, but escape is the only official charge that has been announced," said Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White.

Escape is a Class D felony and carries a maximum penalty of five years.

The trial date has not been set for the state charges.

Hershberger was apprehended on April 18 in Atlanta. Wilkins surrendered to the police in Atlanta on May 19.

Hershberger is currently being detained at the Scott County Jail; Wilkins is being held at the Muscatine County Jail.

UI opens search for provost

BY CHRISTINA ERB
THE DAILY IOWAN

The Search Committee for the Provost, created to replace UI Provost Jon Whitmore, has received 10 nominations and no applications so far since it began accepting candidates June 1.

In the wake of Whitmore's resignation, UI President David Skorton appointed the volunteer committee — an alternative to hiring a search firm for more than $100,000 — in order to save money.

Whitmore announced his intent to resign in August 2002 after former UI President Mary Sue Coleman resigned. It is customary for the university president to choose her or his own provost.

"One of our goals as a committee is to view the requirements of the candidates," said James Torner, a professor of epidemiology and the co-chairman of the committee, adding that the lack of applicants is normal at this time because the application period began only nine days ago.

The responsibilities of the provost include involvement in both financial and budgetary planning and representing the UI on the Committee on Institutional Cooperation, which comprises officials from the Big Ten universities and the University of Chicago. The provost also oversees the deans of the various colleges, represents the academic program to the state Board of Regents, and is responsible for hiring, tenure, and promotion of faculty.

"Because this is a diverse university, we have a lot of special interests," Torner said. "We have to pick some criteria and issues that go across all campus as things to look for in a possible candidate; we don't expect a candidate to meet all criteria."

According to the UI Provost Search Web site, necessary qualifications include being established as an intellectual leader, holding tenure in at least one university department, and having earned a doctoral degree.

The first of two interviews will take place off-campus. Those candidates who meet the committee's criteria will be invited to a second, on-campus interview in the fall. The search committee plans to keep the application process confidential until the final, on-campus interviews.

All interviews will be conducted by the search committee, which hopes to choose a provost by the end of fall semester, Torner said.

In support of the university's efforts to increase diversity, the panel had all advertisements approved by the UI Office of Affirmative Action before beginning the search.

"This search is as strong as any search we do, as far as emphasizing and reaching out to minorities and women to apply for a position," Torner said. "We would like the university to be diverse in its leadership, including women and minorities, but we aren't going to give a priority to any person because of [sex and ethnicity]."

Alternative school eyes new digs

BY KATE BRASER
THE DAILY IOWAN

Iowa City's Senior High Alternative Center will have a new home in the future.

Currently located in the district's central office, 509 S. Dubuque St., the School District will pay Johnson County $1.14 million for three acres of land near Sycamore Mall for the school's new site.

This decision comes four months after Johnson County citizens passed a $39 million school-bond referendum, opting for higher taxes in exchange for major expansion in local schools. Preliminary discussions were already in the works at that time for the purchase of the property on Mall Drive.

The School Board is pleased with the price, especially given recent development around Sycamore Mall.

"Having the alternative high school in such close proximity to Kirkwood Community College is great," said school Superintendent Lane Plugge. He added that the School District plans to take advantage of the campus setting and its proximity to local businesses.

The new Senior High Alternative Center is set to receive $3.4 million from the bond referendum and a $1 million federal grant for construction of the new building.

The site will hold a $4.3 million facility that can accommodate approximately 250 students, grades nine through 12. The current location holds 64 students. Faculty and students have expressed concern in the past that the new school will lose the family atmosphere so important to its current, though cramped, location on the third floor of the district's central office.

"I do not think the family atmosphere will be lost with a student body of 250," Plugge said, adding that 250 is a small population for a high school. He also said the needs of students and faculty will be considered in the final designs of the facility.

"The property was chosen because it is a location that can serve the needs of kids," he said.

The School District is still looking into the possibilities of using energy-efficient means of powering the facility, such as wind turbines.

"We are still considering alternative and educational means to powering these new facilities, but we also are going to weigh the decision on whether or not it will delay the construction process," Plugge said.

The School District plans to take possession of the property on Aug. 1.

Dems knock Bush's Iraq intelligence

BY MIKE GLOVER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOUNT PLEASANT, Iowa — President Bush's credibility in foreign policy has been undermined by questions about how the government used intelligence on Iraq before the war, four Democratic presidential candidates said on Sunday.

The four were in Gov. Tom Vilsack's hometown for the governor's annual family picnic, mingling with hundreds of activists in the state whose party caucuses next January launch the presidential nominating season.

At the top of their agenda was the suspicion raised in the press and elsewhere about Bush's handling of intelligence data regarding weapons of mass destruction, a primary justification for launching the attack. No weapons have been found despite an intense search since President Saddam Hussein's government was overthrown.

Sen. Joe Lieberman, who supported military action in Iraq, questioned whether intelligence agencies "had it right or whether the administration was overstating the case" that Iraq owned banned weapons.

Former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean revived a Watergate-era phrase to raise questions about whether Bush withheld information from Congress: "The question now is going to become, 'What did the president know, and when did he know it?'"

Ohio Rep. Dennis Kucinich said Bush's handling of the issue was fraudulent, and he demanded a full explanation of reports that some intelligence workers worried that data they were reporting was misused.

"They took this country into a war that we did not have to go into," Kucinich said. "They led this country into a war that was unnecessary."

Florida Sen. Bob Graham, the former chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, one of the first to get into the intelligence fray, accused Bush of "a pattern of deception and deceit of the American people."

"Those questions ought to be answered, because America's credibility is on the line," Lieberman said. He cited pending congressional investigations, saying "those investigations ought to go forward aggressively."

Dean, the former Vermont governor, warned against attacking Bush too harshly.

"I think we ought to take a measured approach to this," he said. "Somebody's credibility is on the line, and I would prefer it to be a Republican president's."

One rival for the nomination, Rep. Dick Gephardt of Missouri, who supported Bush's war effort, said military action was needed to protect Americans. In Washington, Gephardt criticized such talk. "You can't bring politics into this. And I felt that from the beginning, and I continue to feel that," he said on CBS' "Face the Nation."

"This is about life and death. It's about keeping this country safe. We cannot have weapons of mass destruction used in this society. And we've all got to work together to the best of our ability to achieve that."

Man guilty in stabbing

Jurors in an attempted murder trial found a West Liberty man guilty on lesser charges June 4.

Juan Antonio Rueda, also known as Juan Perez, was found guilty of simple assault and assault causing serious injury, a Class D felony that carries a maximum five-year sentence.

Authorities had charged Rueda, 31, with attempted murder and willful injury after a Jan. 31 incident in which he stabbed one Proctor & Gamble employee, then allegedly abducted another.

Although Rueda was found guilty of lesser charges, Assistant Johnson County Attorney Victoria Dominguez was content with the outcome.

"I think that based on the evidence the jury was allowed to hear, the verdict was correct," she said.

According to police reports, on Jan. 31, Rueda approached a woman with whom he had a dating relationship and Enrique Santos, 23, outside Proctor & Gamble. After the woman refused to enter Rueda's car, the defendant stabbed Santos numerous times above the ribs, the reports show.

Rueda then allegedly forced the female into his car at knife-point, taking her to a hotel where, according to police records, he sexually assaulted her.

Jurors got the case late June 2 and began deliberating June 3. They returned the verdict on June 4.

Rueda is being held without bail in the Johnson County Jail. He will be sentenced July 18 in the 6th District Court in Johnson County.

Nuisance ordinance a pain

The Iowa City Council's new ordinance regulating "nuisance properties" may become a nuisance itself.

The ordinance requires tenants who commit two or more violations in a 12-month period to attend Code Compliance Settlement Meetings with their landlords and city officials to discuss the problem. Such violations include criminal complaints and municipal infractions.

Douglas Boothroy, the city's director of Housing and Inspection Services, contends that getting all relevant parties together to seek a solution "results in higher compliance rates, is less stressful, is less costly, and is less disruptive to all involved."

That's simply not true.

The new system will certainly not be "less costly" for the city. The meetings mandated by the ordinance will necessitate the hiring of a fifth housing-code inspector, something the city cannot afford in a budget crisis. And some tenants with only a couple of minor infractions may find these meetings to be more "stressful" and "disruptive" than Boothroy imagines.

The council should revisit the following factors: the efficiency of the Code Compliance Settlement Meetings and the nature of the relationship between landlords and tenants.

The relationship between tenants and landlords should not extend into the community. What occurs on the premises is not of public concern, and it should be handled privately.

It's hard to believe that "meaningful discussions" will take place and solutions will be obtained at the meetings. If anything, futile attempts toward reaching an understanding will only prove more stressful for all the parties involved. Without a person experienced in dispute resolutions to preside over the meeting, such as a judge, it's unlikely that the meeting will have a positive outcome.

It seems that these meetings will only serve one purpose: to insert city government into a process where it does not belong.

The relationship between tenants and landlords should not extend into the community. What occurs on the premises is not of public concern, and it should be handled privately.

Simply put, it is the landlord's responsibility to make the policies clear in the rental contract, and the tenant's responsibility to abide by them. The government already has the court system to punish disruptive tenants, and city involvement should be left at that. The community has more pertinent issues to worry about than a party lasting until dawn or a pet being discovered on a property that does not permit one.

In passing an ordinance that will likely increase stress, cost, and disruption "to all involved," the city has made itself the greatest nuisance of all.

Guest Opinion

Wal-Mart and family values?

When Wal-Mart announced that it removed Stuff, Maxim and FHM from its shelves because customers found them too racy, what struck some observers was the hypocrisy of the gesture. Here was the largest U.S. retailer with a history of disregard for humane concerns, accused over the years of sexual discrimination, union-busting, and poor working conditions, portraying itself as a guardian of community values.

The original story attributed Wal-Mart's removal of these men's magazines to Christian groups' objection to scantily clad women on the covers. There are at least two problems with this.

First, using "Christian groups" in this manner allows Wal-Mart to pretend to be moral while remaining vague about its own ethical stance. The words conjure vague notions of powerful, conservative values over which Wal-Mart has no control but to which it pays homage as a good community member.

A second problem is the objection to "scantily clad" women. Wal-Mart shelves may no longer have Maxim, FHM or Stuff, but they still have their share of glossy female skin. Take, for instance, The Source, a hip-hop magazine that recently boasted the "wet dreams fifth annual swimsuit issue" featuring three thong-clad women draping rapper Pharrell. Not to mention all the young women's magazines such as Cosmo Girl, with equally bare yet younger cover models.

If the argument is larger, concerning protection of innocents from inappropriate media, the corporation's failure is more egregious. Consider the 12 magazine titles I recently saw on the shelves devoted solely to ammunition and handguns (not to hunting — I didn't count them). This doesn't even touch on the sale of guns in the sporting goods department.

A regional manager for Wal-Mart in Arkansas said on PBS in November that "respect for the individual" is the heart of the retail chain. But consider these recent interactions between the corporation and employees concerning working climate and benefits.

First, Wal-Mart employees have charged persistent discrimination, claiming repeatedly that the company systematically fails to provide equal assignments, promotions, training, and pay to women and men. A pending lawsuit against Wal-Mart on behalf of 1.5 million women for sexual discrimination could become the largest civil-rights class action in U.S. history.

Second, four months ago Wal-Mart raised health-insurance payments 30 percent over 2001. To make up the difference, the company suggests employees pay out of their own retirement funds. Employees argue this straps them financially and makes previously tax-protected retirement monies subject to taxation.

Third, Wal-Mart's consistent anti-union activities have produced numerous claims by employees that they were harassed and threatened with a loss of benefits should they try to unionize.

Fourth, in 2000, Maine imposed its largest fine ever against Wal-Mart for 1,436 violations of child-labor laws, such as allowing minors to work too many hours, too early or too late.

So, as to Wal-Mart's claims to represent community values? They're empty rhetoric.

I loved you, but I had to pull the plug

Dear Television, When I decided to disconnect the cable last fall, it was a hard time for both of us, but it had to happen. I have to admit, I thought about you once in a while, but I never seriously considered getting back together. When I received the envelope from Mediacom yesterday, I immediately knew what you wanted. I'm writing to tell you that we can't get back together over the summer. We just can't.

It's not what you think. I know there are those who consider you beneath them. They are the people who read books and go to plays. They listen to NPR and watch foreign films. They think Garrison Keillor is funny, send their kids to Montessori schools, eat expensive cheese from the Co-op, buy African drum-circle CDs, and have ponytails. They claim, "I can't even stand television."

I want you to know that I'm not one of them. I didn't break up with you because I thought I was better than you. How could I? There was a time when I truly loved you.

Others attacked you because you gave Jeff Foxworthy his own show, made Bob Saget narrate repeated blows to the crotch delivered by all manner of recreational sports equipment, and allowed "Home Improvement" to stay on the air for eight excruciating seasons.

And that's just ABC during the early '90s. Multiply these abuses by 60 years and 100 different channels, and it wasn't always easy to justify our relationship. People kept telling me you were no good, you didn't treat me right, and I deserved more.

But I always defended you. I told them that they didn't know you like I did. I saw the goodness in you, and I challenged other people to look harder. What better example of postmodern fragmentation of sensibility than the singular disjointed narrative of American pop culture of "The Simpsons"? What more accessible articulation of existentialism and ennui than the calculated urban superficiality of "Seinfeld"? What better popular propagation of the spirit of Dadaism than Conan O'Brien's sketches featuring such characters as Pimpbot 2000 and the Masturbating Bear?

But I guess the problem was never that I didn't love you; I always loved you too much. Our intended 30-minute trysts would turn into six-hour idylls. I hated daytime television, but I'd watch it just to be with you: "The View," "Passions," "Zoom," and then into the afternoon with "Elimidate," "TRL," and "E! True Hollywood Story." Suddenly, it was prime time, then it was late night, and then ... well, then it was 4 a.m. and it was just you, me, and Ron Popeil.

After almost a year apart, I realize now that you took advantage of my trust and manipulated me. You didn't just monopolize my time. You made me want products I didn't need with your commercials, you made me afraid of things I didn't need to fear with your "Dateline" special reports, and you tried to control my emotions with your Hallmark made-for-TV movies.

You say we can work it out. How? With digital cable and a TiVo? I'm not ready for that kind of commitment. You always tell me you're going to change. But that's just the problem: You change every season, and you always get worse. You took basketball from NBC so I didn't have to hear John Tesh's "Roundball Rock" at every commercial. But that's a small consolation in comparison to the replacement programming of non-Olympic women's curling and Arena Football. Did you learn nothing from your fling with the XFL?

I know that we took a break, and you are free to do what you like, but your slumming really does hurt me. You always told me John Ritter was just a friend. I find that difficult to believe given your history together: "Three's Company," "Three's a Crowd," "Hooperman," and now "8 Simple Rules." You can do so much better.

I can forgive Lorenzo Lamas as "Renegade." It was syndication; it didn't mean anything. But now you're letting him ravage your network prime-time slot and with "Are You Hot?" no less — a show so shallow that one need go no further than its three-word title to plumb its depths. He can't possibly be satisfying you.

But it's not just that. The truth is, it's just no fun anymore. We would be naive to think that we can recapture that old fire. We once shared something beautiful, but we've grown apart. We're too different now. I'm Bea Arthur from "The Golden Girls." You'll always be Blanche.

I'm throwing away the Mediacom envelope, but not without shedding a few tears. They won't be the same ones I cried after the series finale of "Cheers." This time there will be no Ted Danson guest appearances on "Frasier." This time it's for real.

So goodbye, and never forget: We'll always have the monorail episode.

With all my love,
 Shawn

Money, money, money rules the roost in Smiley's latest

BY DIANA ROFFMAN
THE DAILY IOWAN

A rejection on her first application to the UI Writers' Workshop didn't stop Jane Smiley.

Instead, she ended up taking undergraduate English classes and writing classes, biding her time until she was accepted. She wasn't going to apply to anywhere else for her M.F.A., either, because Iowa was where she wanted to be.

"It was the most famous place to go for writing. I had just come back from Europe, and I read a pamphlet about it," she said in an interview with The Daily Iowan.

It is a strange combination of desire to be where the fame is and wariness of fame that drives Smiley to this day. Her latest novel, Good Faith, is a work that alternates between glorifying and demonizing the '80s, with its empowerment of women and financial roller coasters.

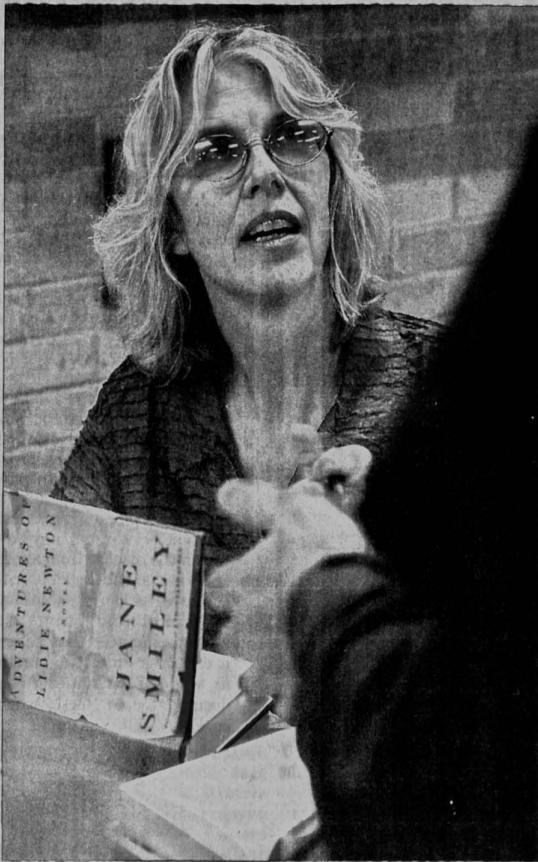

Set up so that the reader learns as much of, if not more than, the real-estate business as the characters themselves, Good Faith is a novel that will bring people through the rise and fall of one of the most All-American men that we have met in literature recently. Joe Stratford, the divorced realtor, becomes entangled in a get-rich-quick scheme because of his new friend, Marcus Burns, a former IRS agent.

"Money is social, but it is also personal. The economic background is painful because there is a personal betrayal when we lose everything that we have worked for. Money is not just something abstract; we have associations with it; we are not just economic cyphers," said Smiley of why money played such a huge role in this novel — the controlling factor in the characters' lives.

The two main women in Good Faith both lead lives of self-empowerment. Felicity Ormquist, Joe's rendezvous lover, and Jane Burns, Marcus' sister, explore control in the workplace and in the bedroom. "Women back then were in the throes of feeling that they could do what they wanted. It just seemed typical that the characters I would write would be tempted by that. But they would also be characters that Joe is attracted to," Smiley said.

Having been dubbed a "social novelist," it is no longer Smiley's character development that many are concerned with; they instead focus on what she is addressing within her work.

But, where her 1992 success, A Thousand Acres, for which she won the Pulitzer Prize, was set to be a remake of sorts on King Lear, Good Faith can be considered a dive back into the '80s as well as a testament to all of its glorious politics, hollowness, and money-minded businessmen and -women.

"I address things in a way that interests me. Hopefully, if it continues to interest throughout my writing of the novel, it will interest the reader as well," Smiley said. "The basic reason that I use plenty of details in my novels on things like realty is that you don't want people who know to say, 'Well, that's all wrong.' If that happened, then the work would be inauthentic. Plus, any business that you fudge it for would not be interesting to anybody."

This need for detail perhaps pushes readers a bit further than they would like to go. Smiley relies on her characters' turmoil to push the audience past conversations on house trimming and into the romance scenes that are scattered throughout.

"I knew I wanted a whole career of writing novels," she said. "Money and fame can't be the only things that keep you interested; you have to want to know more and more about your subject as well."

In Good Faith, this above all else is true, as evidenced by the sheer amount of research throughout. Jane Smiley has combined the world of selling with the art of storytelling.

Hillary, up close, personal, & on the air

NEW YORK (AP) — If you don't want to bother with the book, there's a Hillary Rodham Clinton TV movie in the works.

A&E announced on June 5 that it will make a two-hour movie on the New York senator and former first lady that is expected to air in early 2004.

No one has been cast yet, but producers have already talked with Sharon Stone about the title role, said a source close to the production who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

A&E's announcement comes just days before Rodham Clinton's book, Living History, is scheduled to hit bookstores. The senator will be seen in TV interviews with Barbara Walters, Katie Couric, and Larry King in the next few days.

The A&E movie will be based on a different book, though: Gail Sheehy's best seller, Hillary's Choice.

The movie begins with the start of husband Bill Clinton's presidency, and it "will focus on Hillary's quest to fulfill her own high hopes and ambitions as she repeatedly faces humiliating personal setbacks," the network said. It ends with her election to the U.S. Senate.

"It's a fascinating story and one that has absolutely captured the imagination of the public," said Robert DeBitto, the A&E senior vice president of programming.

A&E is known for its "Biography" series, but DeBitto stressed that Hillary's Choice will not be a documentary. The cable network has been struggling in the ratings the last few years and is eager for attention.

He said no casting decisions have been made on, for instance, the actress playing Monica Lewinsky.

"We're open to suggestions," he said.

Ferretting out the famous red face

NEW YORK (AP) — Finding embarrassing secrets in the past of reality television stars is about as tough as finding Botox in Hollywood.

That doesn't stop The Smoking Gun from looking, or Web surfers from lapping it up. The Web site has made a specialty of finding the drunken-driving arrests, porn acting jobs, and other not-so-shining moments behind the smiles of TV's newest stars.

"I don't know how many people in the country get arrested for driving under the influence," said William Bastone, the site's editor. "But it seems like a very high percentage of reality-TV participants do."

Much of their findings offer a harmless diversion, but The Smoking Gun has altered such games as "American Idol" and embarrassed television networks.

Bastone, a former Village Voice writer who covered organized crime, started The Smoking Gun largely as a way to reveal interesting court documents that didn't find its way into stories.

Student electrocuted at Snoop Dogg concert

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Authorities are investigating the death of a college student who was electrocuted while walking barefoot on a wet stairway during a concert by Snoop Dogg and the Red Hot Chili Peppers.

Ashley Faris, 26, was pronounced dead at a hospital on June 6, police said. A passerby who tried to help him was treated at the hospital for electric shock but was released June 7.

Police said Faris, a UNC-Charlotte student, was walking on the night of June 6 on a lighted, concrete stairway with metal edges at Verizon Wireless Amphitheatre when he was electrocuted.

Verizon officials have declined to answer questions about the incident, providing only written statements.

"We are working with local authorities and investigators to determine how the incident took place," a statement released Saturday said. "The Verizon Wireless Amphitheatre extends heartfelt sympathy to the family and friends of the individuals involved in this unfortunate incident."

Tight security follows attack

BY TODD PITMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

KABUL, Afghanistan — Peacekeepers in Afghanistan's capital will take more security precautions because of a bus bombing that killed four soldiers, but the threat in Kabul is high and more attacks are likely, a peacekeeping official said on Sunday.

German Lt. Col. Thomas Lobbering, a spokesman for the International Security Assistance Force, stressed there had been no specific warning before the June 7 attack.

"Let's make it absolutely clear that [the peacekeepers are] here in Kabul because the situation is not yet stable and not yet 100 percent safe," he said.

Four German soldiers were killed and 29 wounded in the blast, which occurred when a man driving a yellow taxi pulled up beside a bus carrying 33 peacekeepers in eastern Kabul and detonated 220 to 1,110 pounds of explosives.

Lobbering said peacekeepers had known for months that suicide car bombers might strike in the capital, but preventing such attacks was almost impossible.

"There is no single day without warnings, and we take each and every warning very seriously," he said.

"On the other hand, we have to recognize that ... there is no 100 percent sureness to avoid such terrorist attacks."

The first of the wounded soldiers arrived in Germany on Sunday; they were transferred to military hospitals for treatment.

Over the last few months, assailants have struck at peacekeepers with grenades, rockets, and assault rifles in several separate incidents, but they inflicted only light casualties until this weekend.

"The type of terrorist attacks and the number of terrorist attacks are in line with what we have been expecting and what we still expect — I'm sorry to say that — for the upcoming future," Lobbering said.

One 17-year-old Afghan boy — a bystander — was killed in the June 7 attack, and five to 10 Afghans were wounded, said Dutch Lt. Col. Paul Kolken, another spokesman for the peacekeepers.

The taxi driver, whose nationality was unknown, was also killed.

The deaths were the first hostile fatalities for the multinational peacekeeping force since it was established to help maintain security in Kabul in December 2001.

Lobbering said the use of buses would be temporarily suspended, but he refused to say what added security precautions the force would employ.

On Sunday, peacekeepers patrolled Kabul's potholed streets in jeeps and armored cars as usual.

German soldiers of the International Security Assistance Force stand guard outside the military base in Kabul, Afghanistan, on Sunday. The bombing killed four German soldiers and wounded 29 in the worst-ever attack on the security force.

In Germany, there were calls for increased security measures to protect the nation's soldiers serving in peacekeeping missions in Afghanistan, Kosovo, and Bosnia.

Prairie dogs fingered in rash of infections

BY TODD RICHMOND
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MADISON, Wis. — Doctors initially feared a smallpox outbreak when they began seeing cases of a mysterious disease that has spread to at least 19 people who came into contact with pet prairie dogs in the Midwest.

The symptoms were alarmingly similar — fever, chills, rashes, and swollen lymph nodes, said Milwaukee's health commissioner, Dr. Seth Foldy. It was when the prairie-dog connection surfaced that they knew it must be something else.

"We asked the question but discounted it very early," he said Sunday. "Smallpox has never been known to affect another species."

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said on June 7 that pet prairie dogs from a suburban Chicago pet distributor likely are infected with monkeypox, a member of the same viral family as smallpox. The pet rodents may have gotten the disease from another animal at the distributor.

The virus can pass animal-to-animal and animal-to-human, and scientists believe it can pass human-to-human, as well, but it had never been documented in North America, Foldy said.

So far, at least 17 people in Wisconsin and one each in Illinois and Indiana have become sick since early May with symptoms consistent with monkeypox after coming in contact with prairie dogs.

Illinois health officials were investigating three more potential cases in the metropolitan Chicago area, said Jena Welliver, a spokeswoman for the state Department of Public Health. The three had contact with a prairie dog and had developed a rash, she said on Sunday.

"It eventually will clear up as you treat the symptoms," said Mark McLaughlin, a spokesman for Froedtert Memorial Lutheran Hospital in Milwaukee, which has treated several patients with the symptoms.

"We don't need people to go off the deep end. This is not an epidemic in the public's common perception of that," he said.

Of the people infected, two remained isolated at the hospital in satisfactory condition Sunday, McLaughlin said. He said doctors treating them are wearing masks as a precaution.

Both Wisconsin and Illinois banned the sale or importation of prairie dogs, and officials urged people not to release prairie dogs for fear of spreading the disease to other wildlife.

SARS toll climbs to 33 in Canada's largest city

TORONTO (AP) — Two more SARS deaths were reported in Toronto on Sunday after a second outbreak of the illness gripped Canada's largest city, raising the virus' death toll here to 33.

The latest outbreak is mostly under control in Toronto, but officials have warned some patients in critical condition could die instead of recovering.

The two latest fatalities were a 66-year-old woman and a 63-year-old man, said Ontario health officials. Both died on June 7.

SARS has killed at least 783 people and infected more than 8,300 in two dozen countries worldwide, but officials in Asia — the hardest-hit region — say declining numbers of deaths and new cases are evidence the crisis is easing.

Hong Kong and China each reported one more death from SARS but no new cases Sunday. Taiwan reported three more SARS cases, but officials said the latest outbreak would be brought under control soon, and they expressed hopes the World Health Organization would lift a travel warning against the island next week.

The latest figures for Toronto, the epicenter of the biggest SARS outbreak outside Asia, were 68 probable cases with more than 170 people displaying symptoms of SARS under investigation.

Toronto authorities believed they had the illness under control last month after an initial outbreak.

Jeremy Hansen, an artist from Kearney, Neb., talks to Iowa City resident Becky Kiersch about his paintings on June 7 at the 2003 Iowa City Arts Festival. Artists from all over Iowa and other states traveled to Iowa City for the four-day event to display and sell their art.

back or not is usually a pretty good indicator of how good an art show is," he said while taking a break from the 40 spoons he carves a day. The artist/construction worker surrounded by wood shavings and a captivated audience was the only demonstrator among the tents lined along Washington and Dubuque Streets.

Metal workers Alan and Rachel Haynes of Stray Cat Art made the trip from Altoona, Ill., for their first year in the festival. They were pleasantly surprised by the Iowa City community.

"Iowa City's wonderful," said Rachel Haynes. "It's a great town with a healthy artistic community."

For the Haynes, business was "unreal," but the artists weren't the only ones to benefit from the festival.

Local businesses also profited. Prairie Lights Books, 15 S. Dubuque St., had extra traffic all weekend, with folks coming off the street to get out of the sun or rain or even take a bathroom break, and most of them stopped to shop as well, said Richard Landon, a Prairie Lights employee. He enjoyed the Arts Festival in brief glimpses June 7 from the Prairie Lights window.

"Sometimes I can even hear the music when someone opens the door to walk in," he said, laughing.

The music was the biggest draw. Virtually nonstop, except for the interruptions due to rain, bands played free shows all weekend and brought a diverse throng of attendees.

"The people who come are what makes this festival," said Debra Hoffman, a North Liberty resident. "Women my grandma's age come out, park their chairs, and sit to watch the music."

Dr. John had those "grandmas" tapping their toes and some festival-goers even shaking a leg or two. The band was met with the wild enthusiasm of a town caught up in the spirit of celebration.

Although rain on Sunday made some festivities impossible, the weekend was a success, Jennings said. Plans for the 2004 Iowa Arts Festival, set for June 3-6, began shortly after the last artists packed up their soggy tents, leaving the town to its own creative endeavors. Hoffman looks at the festival as just one of the many great things marking the town.

"Iowa City's the only place I'd live in Iowa," she said. "It's always happening."

Sharon jeered by his party

PALESTINIAN ATTACKS

The day's attacks, the first since last week's summit of Sharon, President Bush, and Palestinian Prime Minister Mahmoud Abbas, pointed up the pitfalls facing both Sharon and Abbas as they try to keep the fledgling peace process from foundering.

In a clear challenge to Abbas, three militant groups that are often at odds with one another — Hamas, Islamic Jihad, and the Al Aqsa Martyrs Brigade, an armed offshoot of Palestinian Authority President Yasser Arafat's Fatah faction — claimed rare joint responsibility for the early morning raid on the Israeli military post just inside the Gaza Strip.

A senior Hamas political leader, Abdelaziz Rantisi, called the attack a message that the militant groups "are in the trenches of resistance together." "It announces the rejection of what happened at the summit, it announces rejection of the summit, and it announces that resistance is the only option," he said.

While Hamas and Islamic Jihad have occasionally cooperated in planning and staging suicide bombings and other attacks, the participation of the Al Aqsa Brigade in Sunday's assault was an ominous sign that Arafat, who has been sidelined under pressure from the United States and Israel, might be quietly giving loyalists the green light to use violence to undermine Abbas.

Abbas has been trying to reach a cease-fire with the various armed Palestinian groups but has been sharply rebuffed in the wake of last week's summit in Aqaba, Jordan.

The groups, particularly Hamas, have denounced Abbas for failing in his summit statement to lay claim to Jerusalem as the capital of a future Palestinian state and for not demanding that millions of Palestinian Israelis on Sunday carry the body of Moran Menachem, 17, during her funeral service in Jerusalem's Givat Shaul cemetery. Menache's body was found next to the body of an Israeli man on June 5; both had been stabbed to death in what Israelis say was a terrorist attack.

refugees and their descendants be allowed to return to their homes in what is now Israel.

The display of noisy opposition from within the ranks of Sharon's own party was a reminder of the deep fissures in Israeli society laid bare by the peace plan.

The shouts of "Sharon, go home!" and signs reading "Sharon surrendered to terrorism!" stood in striking contrast to his near-coronation as Likud leader last year, when he easily fended off a challenge from rival Benjamin Netanyahu.

Among the road map's controversial aspects for Israelis are provisions demanding that a number of Jewish settlements in the Palestinian territories be dismantled.

While Jewish settlers make up only a small share of the population — numbering about 225,000 out of more than 5 million Israeli Jews — they have always wielded disproportionate political clout. However, public-opinion surveys suggest that growing numbers of Israelis — nearly 60 percent, according to a Tel Aviv University poll released Sunday — believe that all but large settlement blocs should be relinquished as part of a peace accord.

Because Sharon was for so many years an ardent champion of the settlers' movement, their sense of rage and betrayal is palpable — and likely to intensify in coming days as the government prepares to begin dismantling small unauthorized settlement outposts scattered across rocky West Bank hilltops.

Israeli media reports said army troops could begin evacuating the first outposts as early as Tuesday. The government has been negotiating with settler leaders to try to stave off violent confrontations, but senior military officials said the evacuations would go ahead even in the face of resistance.

With Bush now having involved himself personally in the push for peace, U.S. officials insisted that Sunday's violence must not be allowed to galvanize opposition to the road map.

"What we have to do now is make sure we don't allow this tragic, terrible incident to derail the momentum of the road map," Secretary of State Colin Powell said on "Fox News Sunday."

To expedite implementation of the road map, John Wolf, a veteran U.S. diplomat and arms expert, is being assigned to the region this week, Powell said.

UI to institute new policies on athletes

"When a case comes up like Pierre Pierce, it highlights the weaknesses in procedures," Colangelo said, adding that the committees would not have been formed had it not been for the Pierce case. "All recommendations will help us in any future case where a student-athlete is in difficulty."

In addition, coaches and senior Athletics Department staff must receive media training, and all media commentary should be directed to a media spokesman or -woman. The Athletics Board subcommittee included recommendations that the Student-Athlete Handbook contain an explicit suspension policy and that coaches apply appropriate discipline in enforcing relevant rules.

The recommendations also determined that the athletics liaison and general counsel functions should be separated, a change Skorton initiated in his first days in office when he decided that the Athletics Department would report directly to him as opposed to General Counsel Mark Schantz.

Skorton said he has also formed an advisory council of top university administrators and athletics officials, which, he said, will meet at least every three months to help him oversee athletics and the implementation of these recommendations.

"I believe I owe these people feedback," he said. "I hope to continue to rely on their counsel."

departments in the university don't have enough money to hire the displaced employees, and that 2003-04 budgets may already be completed.

"High expense will occur in departments," said McConnell, who said he is facing a layoff. "Then payments will leave to the community and not stay in-house."

He said the decision to close the division will only cause more problems.

"Upper management hasn't considered who will repair the employees' machines, who will repair the students' machines. Will [closing the repair center] save the rest of the university community money?" he asked rhetorically.

The desktop division employs 13 people, two of whom, including Jagnow, have opted for early retirement. The other 11 employees have summer jobs, but as their department is phased out, they will be placed on furlough, laid off, or, Dobbins said, might land new jobs at the university while receiving full pay and benefits.

"We expected the hardware support would go away," Jagnow said, because the inventory had been pared down to a single shelf. "But someone needs to support services like ResNet and HawkID."

He added that although the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences has a software-support division, the ITS desktop division handled 500 service calls to the college last year, adding that a student needing Apple computer repair may have to travel to Marion, the nearest repair center.

"The students will be hurt the most," he said.

CUBS BRIEF

Choi goes on DL after horrific collision

CHICAGO (AP) — Cubs first baseman Hee Seop Choi was in fair condition with a concussion after colliding with pitcher Kerry Wood in the June 7 game against the Yankees. Choi lay motionless for a time after he was knocked to the ground and was taken off the field in an ambulance. Choi was admitted to Illinois Masonic Medical Center, where he will remain for overnight evaluation. Cubs officials said Choi was moving and talking. With one out in the top of the fourth inning, Chicago put on a shift with New York star Jason Giambi at the plate. Giambi hit a high pop-up toward third, but third baseman Lenny Harris was near second base and had no chance at the ball. Wood and Choi raced toward the pop, but neither had a great look at it in the sun. As they neared the third-base line, approximately 20 feet from home plate, they collided, with Wood's glove hitting Choi in the face. Choi fell hard, slamming the back of his head on the dirt. Four doctors and two trainers rushed to the field while Choi was on his back. Wrigley Field, which had been frenetic as Roger Clemens tried for his 300th win, went quiet. Fans watched in silence as, first, a stretcher was called for, then the ambulance.

Iowa players eye pro baseball careers

BY JEROD LEUPOLD
 THE DAILY IOWAN

Less than 24 hours after Hawkeye outfielder Kyle Thousand signed for Toronto he discovered some of the pitching heat he would be facing in the New York-Penn League — former Iowa teammate and good friend Reed Pawelk. Even though Pawelk signed with the Florida Marlins, both teams possess Single A farm clubs that play in New York.

"Reed is one of my best friends," Thousand said. "I hope that we are close and are able to keep in touch."

Both minor leaguers listened to the draft at Thousand's apartment. Thousand's name was called during the 26th round; Pawelk's wasn't.

"After the draft, I thought it was done," said Pawelk, a Plymouth, Minn., native.

The next day, he was playing hardball in the afternoon. When he returned to his car, 11 messages were waiting on his cell phone that said one thing from Florida: "We've got a spot for you if you want it."

"It was quite a roller coaster with the last two days of the draft," said Pawelk's mother, Terri Pawelk. "We stayed home taking shifts to man the phones. [The Marlin organization] called her first."

One trip to Coralville's Sluggers Neighborhood Grill with a Marlins recruiter sealed the deal, and Pawelk officially became a professional.

"It is a godsend to pursue my dream," Pawelk said.

He may have had an angle in his corner. Bob Oldis Jr., who recruited Pawelk, also signed Pawelk's uncle Tom Train for the Expos.

For Thousand, the reality of the situation solidified after signing the contract in his apartment. Since that point, he's been receiving counsel from friends, family, and coaches.

"Some of the best advice has been, 'Be the first one there and the last one to leave,'" the Hawkeye walk-on said. "It's a job now; I don't have anything else to worry about."

Thousand is a junior and will leave the university early without earning a degree. His former coach, Scott Broghamer, doesn't see that as a problem.

"Give us three years [for education]," Broghamer said. "But it's hard to argue with a $750,000 contract. Kyle is one of those guys who is going to get his degree."

The finance major led Iowa with a .355 batting average and earned second-team honors. Thousand led the Hawkeyes in several categories, including runs (42), hits (57), doubles (17), and stolen bases (20) in 2003. He was second-team All-Big Ten this year.

Pawelk posted a 2-7 record and a 5.94 ERA in 11 starts. He pitched more innings than any other Hawkeye hurler — 66.2 — and notched two complete games. As a freshman, he earned the Bob Oldis Jr. Co-MVP (named for the scout who signed him) and was named to Louisville Slugger's freshman All-American team.

"I think I have a lot to prove," the 6-5 Pawelk said. "I had a bad year, and my stock really dropped. I have the ability to play at the next level."

Thousand will play for the Auburn Doubledays, while Pawelk will suit up for the Jamestown Jammers.

West High will take action against Coleman.

Head coach Dan Dvorak was unwilling to answer, saying, "The school and I are aware of the situation, and that's all I'm going to say."

Looking toward the future, Coleman's options concerning scholarships could be in jeopardy.

"Coaches today look at character," Kakert said. "If you're somebody that affects the school in a negative way — they're going to look at that."

He went on to say the offers put forth by interested schools may now be off the table.

Iowa athletics officials could not be reached for comment.

There are, however, exceptions to the rule. Randy Moss bounced from school to school before settling at Marshall. Coaches in that case were willing to take on the extra baggage that came with Moss. The receiver went on to become a star with the Minnesota Vikings.

Dodgers fall to White Sox at home

White Sox 10, Los Angeles 3

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Frank Thomas hit a two-run homer, and Tony Graffanino had a two-run double during a five-run fifth inning that carried the Chicago White Sox over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Esteban Loaiza (9-2) allowed three runs and seven hits in seven innings, striking out nine and walking none to improve to 5-0 on the road. His ERA, which had been the best in the major leagues, rose from 1.90 to 2.06, moving behind Woody Williams of St. Louis (1.99).

Arizona 13, Cleveland 3

PHOENIX — Robbie Hammock had four hits, including a pair of triples that tied a team record, to lead the Arizona Diamondbacks over the Cleveland Indians.

Chad Moeller had three hits, Hammock had three RBIs, and Alex Cintron and Junior Spivey each homered for the Diamondbacks, who have won four of six. Arizona had a season-high 18 hits.

San Francisco 7, Detroit 6

SAN FRANCISCO — Pinch-hitter

Edgardo Alfonzo had a tiebreaking double with two outs in the eighth inning as the San Francisco Giants rallied to complete a three-game sweep of the Detroit Tigers on Sunday.

Joe Nathan (6-2) pitched the eighth for the victory, tying Cincinnati's Scott Sullivan for the most relief wins in the majors.

Anaheim 8, Florida 5

MIAMI — Adam Kennedy and Garret Anderson hit run-scoring singles in a three-run fifth inning as the Anaheim Angels took advantage of an error to rally from a four-run deficit and beat the Florida Marlins on Sunday.

Ramon Ortiz (6-5) won his second-straight start after going 0-3 in his previous five. He gave up five runs in the first three innings, then settled down and retired nine of his last 11 batters. Overall, he allowed six hits in six innings.

Colorado 8, Kansas City 7

DENVER — Chris Stynes drove in three runs, Larry Walker and Charles Johnson each had two RBIs, and the Colorado Rockies beat the Kansas City Royals on Sunday to avoid a three-game sweep.

Scott Elarton (3-1) won his third-consecutive start for the first time since Aug. 16-27, 2000. He went five innings, allowing 11 hits and six runs.

Seattle 13-7, Mets 1-0

NEW YORK — Jamie Moyer became the majors' first 10-game winner, and the Seattle Mariners, with Ichiro Suzuki again leading the way, beat the New York Mets on Sunday to complete a double-header sweep.

Suzuki got four hits in the opener as the Mariners bolted to a 12-run lead and routed the Mets behind Freddy Garcia's six-hitter.

Boston 9, Milwaukee 1

MILWAUKEE — Kevin Millar homered twice and drove in four runs, backing a strong outing by Derek Lowe as the Boston Red Sox beat the Milwaukee Brewers.

Todd Walker added a two-run double for the Red Sox, who became the latest team to tee off against struggling lefty Glendon Rusch.

Millar, who had a pinch-hit grand slam to help Boston rally from a pair of six-run deficits in the Red Sox's 11-10 victory, batted .387 (12-for-31) as the Red Sox went 5-7 on their road trip.

Philadelphia 7, Oakland 1

PHILADELPHIA — Kevin Millwood pitched seven strong innings, and Pat Burrell hit a three-run homer as the Philadelphia Phillies snapped a four-game losing streak with a win over the Oakland Athletics in the first game of a double-header Sunday.

Jimmy Rollins and Marlon Byrd had three hits apiece, and David Bell broke out of a 1-37 slump with an RBI double for the Phillies.

Montreal 3, Texas 2

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — Brad Wilkerson's second run-scoring double broke a tie in the eighth inning and helped the Montreal Expos send the Texas Rangers to their ninth-straight loss on Sunday.

The powerful Rangers were held to two runs over their final 16 innings at cozy Hiram Bithorn Stadium. They are on their longest skid since also dropping nine straight in June 2000.

Michael Barrett broke an 0-19 stretch with a solo homer in the fifth.

Spain's Juan Carlos Ferrero backhands to the Netherlands' Martin Verkerk during the men's final of the French Open tennis tournament at Roland Garros stadium in Paris on Sunday.

Ferrero takes first title

BY HOWARD FENDRICH
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — Juan Carlos Ferrero smacked winners while lunging so far he nearly landed in the court-side geraniums. He whipped returns at his opponent's feet, put strokes on the lines, and controlled the tempo on nearly every point.

Add it up, and Ferrero made Martin Verkerk look exactly like what the Dutchman will be this week: a player at a local club.

Far more at ease with the setting, Ferrero claimed his first Grand Slam title at the tournament where he came so close the past three years, beating the unseeded Verkerk (6-1, 6-3, 6-2) on Sunday in the most lopsided French Open final since 1978.

"This is a tournament I always wanted to win," the No. 3-seeded Ferrero said. "And now I have it in my pocket."

When the Spaniard laced a forehand winner on match point, he dropped his racket and fell to his knees. After a hug from Verkerk, Ferrero ran to the other end of the court and hopped the wall to celebrate with friends and family in the guest box.

His energy was just that boundless all afternoon. He lived up to his nickname, "Mosquito," earned by the way he zips around the court.

Scrambling side to side, Ferrero won 15 of the 22 points that lasted 10 strokes or longer. And by standing as far as 12 feet behind the baseline, he managed to neutralize with precise returns serves from 6-5 Verkerk that reached 131 mph.

"I'm not happy, of course," Verkerk said. "But on the other hand, I can say, 'OK, I had no chance.'"

Until this tournament, he had never won a Grand Slam match, and his overall career record in seven years as a pro was below .500. On Tuesday, he'll be back in the Netherlands to play for the national club-team championship.

"To be in a final of a Grand Slam — there are no words for that," Verkerk said. "I mean, I'm still dreaming. And I think I will dream for a little longer."

Right from the start Sunday, the 46th-ranked Verkerk seemed happy to be there: When the players walked out on court, he led the way, smiling and waving to the crowd. Ferrero was straight-faced, looking down as he carried two racket bags to his chair.

Ferrero's victory came a day after Justine Henin-Hardenne beat fellow Belgian Kim Clijsters (6-4, 6-0) for her first major title — the most one-sided women's French final in 15 years.

ACCOLADES

Six football players garner early awards

Three Hawkeye football players were named pre-season first-team all-Americans by The Sporting News, while three others received a special nod for the upcoming season.

Iowa's offensive tackle Robert Gallery, strong safety Bob Sanders and place-kicker Nate Kaeding have been named as the top players in the country at their position by the publication. Running back Fred Russell was named the eighth best at his position in the country, outside linebacker Grant Steen, the 13th best, and defensive tackle Jared Clauss, the 16th best. All six players will be seniors this fall.

Gallery and Kaeding have were also named to the 2003 Playboy magazine pre-season all-America team. Gallery, a 6-7, 317 pounder, is considered one of the favorites for this year's Outland and Lombardi Awards.

Field hockey names new assistant coach

The Iowa Athletics Department named Carla Tagliente as the new assistant field-hockey coach.

The Maryland native led the University of Maryland Terps to three ACC championships and the 1999 NCAA championship. She was a two-time captain and a four-time academic All-American. "We are thrilled to add Carla to our coaching staff," Iowa head coach Tracey Griesbaum said. "She has great work ethic and knows what it takes to be a winner. Besides that, she is a great person and will be a tremendous addition to our program."

Prime Time hopefuls strut stuff at Field House

BY FRANK KLIPSCH
THE DAILY IOWAN

The line of potential Prime Time League players stretched across three courts at the Field House on the morning of June 7. Among the group were all-stars and all-staters, small-college studs, high-school heroes, and junior-college players looking to make the transition to major universities.

With 500 applicants vying for only 88 spots and the big-gun players — current and returning Hawkeyes and players from UNI — staying at home, each player had 90 minutes to make an impact.

"This is a chance to show 'em what you can do," yelled Randy Larson to the long line of eager ballers.

Larson, an Iowa City attorney, is heading up the Prime Time League's 17th season, along with the female equivalent, Game

Time, now in its third season. He's also one of the league's eight coaches, scouting for "unselfish hard workers" or anyone else who might catch his eye.

One eye-catcher was Damien Bakis. Besides the tight, long cornrows hanging down his neck, Bakis stood out from the crowd for two other reasons. At roughly 6-8 and 250 pounds, he was the biggest player at the tryouts. And because he's come from France to Iowa City by way of Indian Hills Community College, his home is without a doubt the farthest away.

At the tryouts, the coaches made and discussed notes to the sound of rattling rims. Players from all over the state had a chance to see how they stacked up.

Sharpshooting Adam Kaufman recently finished his playing career at Cornell College in Mount Vernon. When he left the tryouts early for a golf outing, his sweaty, red hair matted to the sides of his head, he took with him the only pair of shorts that didn't hang below the knees.

Kaufman was hot, but others were not.

Cathy Phillips carried her son's bag to the car when he decided the day wasn't his. Nick Phillips just finished his sophomore year at Davenport West. He had already played in one tournament earlier in the day, and there was still one more to go.

Sharif Youssef, a City High and recent UI grad, summed himself up succinctly.

"I wish I had just two more inches," said Youssef, who clocks in at just under six feet.

The Game Time draft will be held Tuesday, with games beginning on June 15. Prime Time coaches make their selections Wednesday, and competition will begin June 16. All games are played at the North Liberty Community Center.

NBA FINALS

Spurs take 2-1 series lead

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Out of the Jersey swamps emerged a horrific sight, a game so ugly it was almost frightening. They called it Game 3.

On a night that featured the lowest-scoring first half in the history of the NBA Finals, Tim Duncan and the San Antonio Spurs didn't really care how it looked.

They took control of the game with a 14-3 run to open the fourth quarter, putting them back in charge with a 84-79 victory Sunday for a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven series.

How unsightly was it?

Well, the winning team committed 17 turnovers, missed 12 foul shots, tossed up numerous airballs, and even had players bickering at each other after a series of botched plays in the first quarter.

Duncan, the league MVP, had a night that was nothing too special by his standards, scoring 21 points with 16 rebounds — the 15th of which was most crucial.

Tony Parker added 26 points — two off his career playoff high — to make up for the lack of any other double-digit scorers.

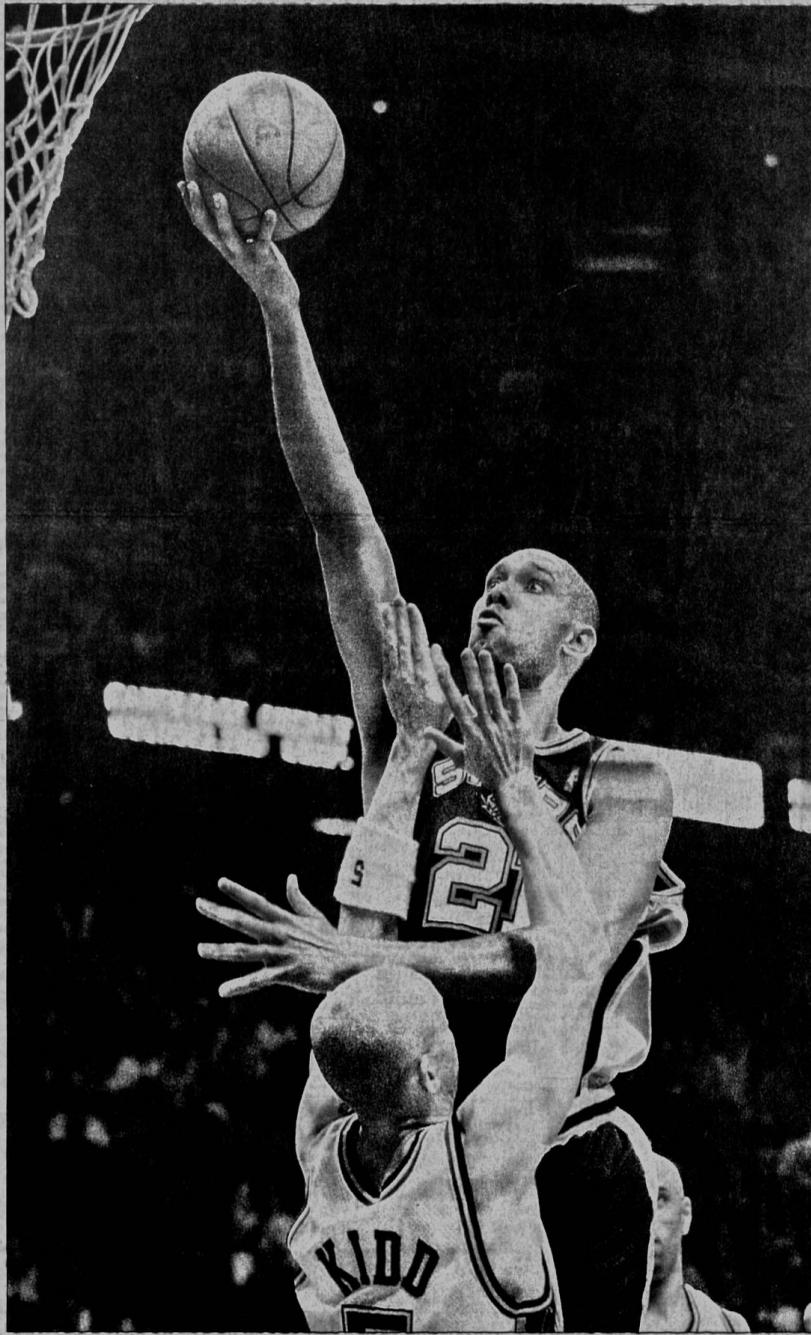

San Antonio improved to 7-3 on the road in this year's playoffs with its fifth-consecutive victory away from home. This time, it came at one of the NBA's oldest buildings — an arena built in the 1970s in the swampland west of the Hudson River.

Game 4 is Wednesday night. The final score didn't accurately indicate what an offensive horror show this was for three quarters. The teams combined to score 55 points in the fourth quarter after totaling only 111 through the first three periods.

The teams played the lowest-scoring first half in NBA playoff history, with the Nets having the lowest-scoring second quarter — nine points — ever in a postseason game.

Kenyon Martin scored 23 and Kerry Kittles 21 for the Nets. Jason Kidd struggled with his shot all night — just as a lot of players did — and finished 6-for-19 for 12 points with 11 assists. He also had four of the Nets' 20 turnovers, and Martin had five.

When Martin made a foul shot with 1:46 left in the third, the teams had finally combined for 100 points. New Jersey led, 57-54, entering the fourth.

Football recruit arrested in attack

BY J.K. PERRY
THE DAILY IOWAN

Coleman

Iowa City West High School football phenom Gregory Coleman was charged with three counts of interference causing bodily injury and two counts of assault on a peace officer causing bodily injury after an alleged altercation during the early morning hours of June 5.

The junior running back, who has been scouted by the UI, Iowa State University, and the University of Michigan, gained more than 2,100 yards and scored 25 touchdowns in the 2002 season.

He is one of the best high-school running backs in Iowa, if not the best, said Tom Kakert, the publisher of hawkeyereport.com, a firm specializing in analyzing recruits.

After his alleged actions, however, Coleman may disappear entirely from the radar of the three schools.

Police were summoned to a location on the 700 block of Bowery Street because of a reported fight, reported police Sgt. Brian Krei.

According to police, three suspects fled the scene — among them Coleman, who allegedly did not respond to commands by Officer Darin Zacharias to stop and get on the ground. The 6-0, 205-pound running back allegedly ran over Zacharias, who sustained a separated shoulder. Zacharias will remain off-duty in the near future because of the injury.

Coleman allegedly evaded police until he was trapped by five officers on the third floor of an apartment in the 600 block of South Dodge Street.

The junior allegedly tried to block entry to the floor by holding a door closed. According to a police report, after forcing the door open, Officer Gabe Cook was allegedly assaulted by Coleman, who threw numerous punches. Cook sustained a cut on the back of his head.

Coleman was released June 6, according to the Johnson County Sheriff's Office. Bond was set at $5,000.

After the incident, it remains to be seen whether

Broghamer resigns after six seasons

BY JEROD LEUPOLD
THE DAILY IOWAN

Broghamer

Scott Broghamer closed a 17-year chapter of his life on May 28 when he resigned as the head coach of Iowa's baseball team.

"Leaving the Iowa baseball program is the hardest thing I've ever done," said Broghamer, who took over the head coaching post six years ago. "But I think it's time for someone else to assume the reins of power in Hawkeye baseball."

The former Urbana, Iowa, high-school athletics director compiled a 123-183 record as Iowa's skipper.

"In Division I, it's a fact that there are wins and losses," he said. "There's great pressure to do things the right way, give your best to the program. That's how you are judged."

In 2002, the Hawkeyes had a 26-29-1 record on their way to a Big Ten Tournament berth, their first appearance in 12 years. That year was also Broghamer's most successful at the Hawkeyes' helm, in which he earned his 100th win.

Former Iowa State transfer and Hawkeye standout Kyle Thousand started playing under Broghamer in 2002.

"You really can't blame [this] season on the coaches," Thousand said. "We went in with high expectations, and it just didn't work out."

Thousand was drafted by Toronto on June 4. He garnered Big Ten honors, along with pitcher Nathan Johnson this season. Broghamer's other successes include senior pitcher Reed Pawelk, who recently signed with the Montreal Expos.

"He's a great guy who got caught in a bad position," Pawelk said. "He's the kind of coach who would do anything for his players. His door was always open."

Broghamer began his Hawkeye career as a graduate assistant from 1987-88. He then worked as pitching coach in 1989 until being promoted to head coach in 1997 following Duane Banks' departure.

"The best thing was the people, the players, and the support staff," Broghamer said. "They are outstanding. I developed relationships with quality people."

Even with Hawkeye baseball in Broghamer's past, coaching may still be in his future.

"I enjoy it," he said. "To be honest, it would be great."

He said many options are open to him, and he expressed a desire to stay in Iowa City. He is married and has 13-year-old twins.
