Federal law costs UIHC $1 million

BY LAURA HOLMES
THE DAILY IOWAN

Internal losses have totaled approximately $1 million at the UI Hospitals and Clinics as a result of employee training mandated by a federal act passed in April.

Following the enactment of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act, hospitals have had to use employees' paid work time to conduct training sessions, forcing the facilities to incur the losses.

Although the act did not specify exactly how hospital staff should be trained, the training process itself is required by the act.

Debbie Phoman, a compliance officer for the act, said the staff training has been the most resource-consuming project in adhering to the regulations.

"We began training in February, and by April, we had trained 8,000 staff members," she said. "That is a huge task, but we managed it."

Paul Foelsch, the Mercy Hospital chief information officer, said the change to meet the health-insurance act policies has been an expensive one, citing not only employee training but also the direct expense of printing the privacy forms.

Tom Moore, the UIHC media coordinator, said the policy gives patients the right to control who accesses their medical information.

"All patients receive privacy notices when they are admitted," he said, adding that it is up to the patients whether they want to opt out of the hospital directory — which includes patient names, locations, religious affiliations (for clergy only) and a short description of the patients' conditions.

"If patients come into the hospital in a condition where they are unable to communicate, we presume that they don't want to have their information available to people," Moore said.

Foelsch said he observed how other hospitals were training their staffs and chose to attend a statewide group exchange of ideas on effective training methods. The exchange, held in Dec. 2002, was run by the Iowa Strategic National Implementation Process Affiliate, an organization open to anyone who is interested in or affected by the health-insurance act in Iowa.

The group decided that presentations to all employees would be the most efficient means, Foelsch said. A team was established to run the training sessions at the various hospitals.

"We researched what would be the most cost-effective method to implement this program," Foelsch said. "We decided that it would be more efficient to use internal resources."

So far, the UIHC has been successful at complying with the act, with the staff gradually learning how to apply the new patient-privacy regulation, Phoman said.

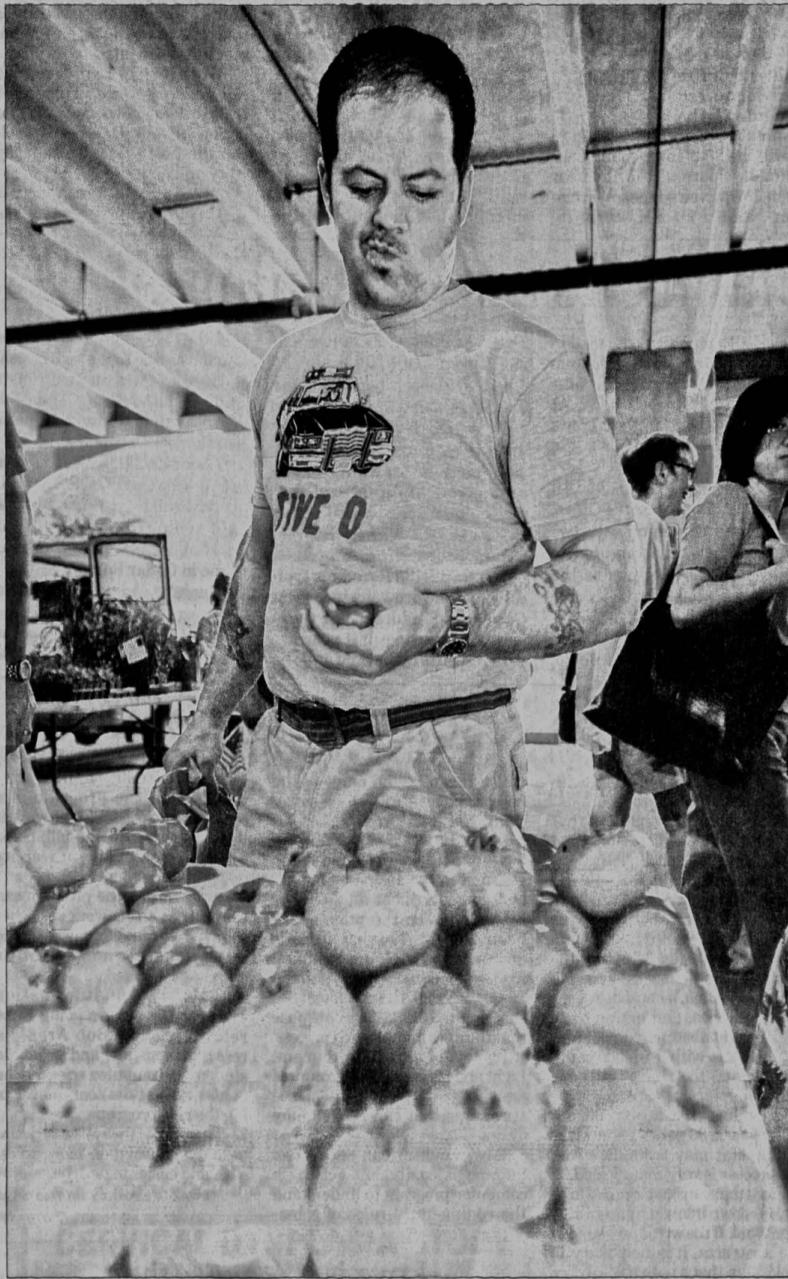

"I still receive between 10 and 15 calls every day from staff asking questions to check what they should be doing," he said. "But everyone is really aware now of what is going on."

At Mercy, training isn't just a one-time deal, Foelsch said.

"We think ongoing training is really important," he said. "We have developed an online Web-based system. It will primarily be used for annual training, but it's also there as a refresher for all employees."

Troops kill 2 protesters in Baghdad

BY TINA SUSMAN
NEWSDAY

BAGHDAD — American troops on Wednesday fired into a crowd of former Iraqi soldiers who had thronged outside U.S. headquarters to demand paychecks.

Two protesters died in what the Army said was a self-defense shooting but the Iraqis portrayed as an unjustified attack.

Hours later, a gunman shot two U.S. soldiers guarding a Baghdad gas station, killing one, before fleeing. It was unclear if the incidents were linked. The slain soldier was the second American fatality in Baghdad and the fourth across Iraq this week.

Whether the shooting at the protest was self-defense or an attack, the incident was sure to intensify the bitterness that former Iraqi soldiers and officers feel toward occupying forces and the U.S. government. Approximately 400,000 Iraqis were fired in May when the United States' chief administrator for Iraq, Paul Bremer, dissolved the Iraqi military as part of his plan to rid the public service of remnants of Saddam Hussein's regime.

"This army is a time bomb," one protester, Ziad Tariq Ali, said of his fellow military men, who haven't been paid since March. "They promised us we'd get paid on the 18th, and they didn't fulfill that promise."

"We've been getting these promises two months, and they're lies," said another, Wajdi Abdul Baqi. Both men said they had served more than 30 years in the military.

Meanwhile, U.S. forces have captured Saddam Hussein's most trusted aide, Pentagon officials said Wednesday, nabbing a man who could point the way to the ousted Iraqi president and his two sons.

From Hendrix to defending the poor

BY ANNIE SHUPPY
THE DAILY IOWAN

Representing the indigent through what can sometimes be a "pay and go" legal system has been the life's work of one Johnson County public defender, a former bartender, steel worker, and security guard for a rock legend-to-be.

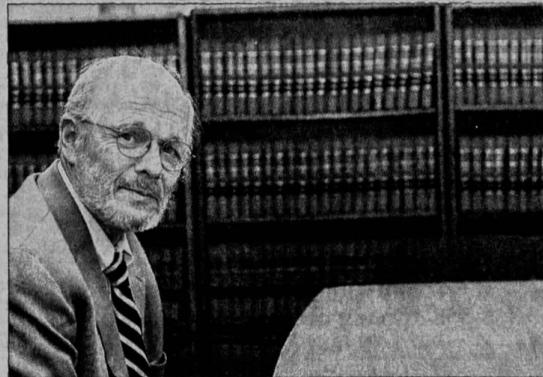

Richard Klausner, 57, who has worked in Iowa City for 13 of the 23 years he has been a public defender, said one of his favorite aspects of criminal law is that there is nothing repetitive about the job.

"Everyone has a story, and most of them are fascinating," said Klausner, who said some former clients still write to him from prison — both on a social basis and a professional one. "As a general rule, I don't think anyone gets into this field if not for the separate component of a social agenda."

In 1968, Klausner graduated from Oberlin College in Oberlin, Ohio, with degrees in history and political science. Yet the Grinnell, Iowa, native, did not begin to pursue his law degree until 1977. Rather, he took on "pretty much all the basic entry-level jobs" until he considered going to law school.

"If it was an entry-level job and looked interesting, I took it," he said.

Besides working in such clubs

as the Mill, 120 E. Burlington St., Klausner said he has supported himself with jobs at a steel mill, driving trucks, and working construction. He added that one of his least expected former stints, however, was that of a security guard for Jimi Hendrix circa 1967.

While living in New York City the summer between his junior and senior years of college, his roommate, a "big, tall, muscular guy," had found work as a bodyguard for a private security company — which was looking for another bodyguard.

"They didn't realize they were hiring a guy who was 5-6 and 140 pounds," Klausner said.

For this job, he said, he had to stand in front of such music venues as the Electric Circus and Flushing Meadows, "keeping 14-year-old girls from ripping their clothes off." That summer, Hendrix was the opening act for the Monkees and had not yet achieved his post-Woodstock status, and Klausner said there was "absolutely nothing exotic" about his work.

"[Hendrix] was just the guy on the elevator who wore a big fur coat in 100-degree New York City weather," Klausner said.

DI's Grant Schulte collects Scripps award

BY JEROD LEUPOLD
THE DAILY IOWAN

UI junior Grant Schulte is collecting awards at a rate Monty Haul would be proud of, and the Scripps Howard Foundation is just the latest to heap accolades upon the undergrad.

Schulte, who will become The Daily Iowan metro editor in the fall, was a finalist for the foundation's scholarship given annually to the top 10 student-journalists in the nation; he will receive $10,000 for his outstanding efforts.

"He's determined, a very talented guy, and very gracious," said DI Publisher Bill Casey.

Casey, who has known

Schulte for three years, remembers him beginning at the DI the summer after graduating high school.

"He has something we always like to see," Casey said. "He comes in early and stays late. The award is well-deserved."

Other awards that Schulte has acquired include the Laurence Fairall Scholarship in April, the 2002 Iowa Young Outstanding Journalist of the Year from Iowa Newspaper Association, and a DI Scholarship, which grants recipients four years of paid tuition and a job at the paper.

Schulte, the oldest of three children, launched his writing endeavors early.

"In fifth grade, he wrote a book with a friend that was 500 or 600 pages," said Grant's mother, Gloria Schulte. "I always said to be like Walter Cronkite; he would report the facts, then shut up without any quips."

After graduating from Iowa City West High School in 2001, he continued his education at the UI. The journalism and German major has held the positions of metro reporter, interim metro editor, and editor of the 2003 University Edition.

Schulte is calling Washington, D.C., his home as an intern for the Washington Times, and he has contributed articles to the Iowa Alumni Magazine and Young Money Magazine.

Former DI Editor Ryan Foley worked closely with Schulte for more than two years and was immediately impressed with his coverage of the Jonathan Member murder trial.

"What he had that developed right away is voice," Foley said. "Not just for newspaper but for fiction as well. He's really well-rounded and will tackle any story and do it well."

Reservoir claims its 1st drowning of '03

BY SARA STRAIN
THE DAILY IOWAN

Allan Leon Butler, 19, of Hiawatha drowned approximately 6:45 p.m. Tuesday in the Coralville Reservoir, marking the first drowning of the year at the lake.

According to a release from the Johnson County Sheriff's Office, a 911 call was made from the West Overlook Beach.

Johnson County sheriff's deputies, the fire departments of North Liberty, Solon, and Coralville, and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers responded to the scene. Upon arrival, search crews began dragging the lake in search of Butler's body. At approximately 8:20 p.m., crews recovered the body and took it to UI Hospitals and Clinics.

According to Maj. Keith Slaughter of the Sheriff's Office, Butler was swimming with two friends when he attempted to swim to the floating pipe in the lake but began to have trouble and called for help.

Butler's friends tried to help him but were unable to do so, said Detective Mike Scheetz of the Sheriff's Office.

Reservoir operations manager John Castle said that 90 minutes before Butler's drowning, authorities were called to investigate a near-drowning in the same location. Castle said that an ambulance responded before the Corps of Engineers arrived; that individual survived.

The Coralville Reservoir typically has one drowning per year, Castle said, adding that there were no drownings last year.

In response to the drowning, he said that no additional changes would be made to the lake or policy. He said it was an unfortunate situation, although Butler did follow recommendations, such as swimming with two friends.

"There is no lifeguard, and people have to keep that in mind," he said.

A visitation for Butler will be held today from 4-8 p.m. at Murdoch-Linwood Funeral Home in Cedar Rapids.

Funeral services will be held in Wharton, Texas.

Program tries to ease researching abstracts

BY KENT NGUYEN
THE DAILY IOWAN

A new computer program being developed by six UI researchers could speed up scientific experiments by allowing researchers to forgo reading thousands of scientific articles on relevant research topics by providing a simple, organized database of information.

Marc Light, an assistant professor of library and information science, is part of the team developing a program that will search through the articles and create a database.

This program could prevent a researcher from wasting time on an experiment that has already been done, allowing her or him to spend time advancing the completed research.

Light said, for example, that without the program, a researcher digging for information on a transcription factor — a type of protein that helps with the regulation of a gene — may be bombarded with an average of 1,500 articles.

"The general problem is that there is too much information, and you just can't read it all," he said.

Light said the "literature data-mining for biosciences" program will take a phrase, such as "Which protein helps in the regulation of which gene?" search the myriad scientific abstracts available on Medline, a database of scientific articles, and extract only the relevant abstracts.

"You start with 1 million paragraphs, and the result is a table with a couple hundred entries," he said, adding that he expects the process to be 80 percent accurate.

Simple it may seem, however, the process is very complicated.

First, the search topic needs to be broken down into separate entities, Light said. If the words are found in the abstracts, it is necessary to make sure that a search word does not have a second meaning.

"Bush can be the name of the person, but it can also be something you plant in the garden," Light said.

Vladimir Leontiev, a research assistant in the anatomy and cell-biology department and another collaborator on the project, has been going through scientific abstracts to develop a "training module" for the computer program. He agrees that the complexity of the English language can pose some hurdles in the search process.

In developing the program, Light and his team have accounted for ambiguous words and sentence structures that can cause many errors.

"My daughter can speak two languages easily, but getting a computer program to understand the rudimentary rules of a language is very difficult," he said.

Although the program is a "work in progress," Light said, it will be finished in the fall. He is unsure whether the university will pursue a patent.

In the future, the program can provide the framework for other search programs that wish to do more general, non-scientific searches, he added.

"This idea of information extraction is always going to be relevant," said Bob Arens, a research assistant and graduate student in computer science who is also among the team developing the new program.

There will always be a desire to make information more accessible and easier to find, he said.

Dodge St. Eagle to close

Eagle Food Center Inc. officials announced Tuesday that the company will close nine of its 59 stores and that two are located in Iowa — one in Davenport and the other at 600 N. Dodge St. in Iowa City.

A store spokesman at the Dodge Street Eagle said 28 employees will be laid off. A court hearing is set for June 27 to determine Eagle's course of action with its remaining 50 stores nationwide.

Chapter 11 filing in April, management and the board of directors have been exploring various alternatives that would result in maximum recovery to our creditors and, at the same time, have the least impact on the jobs of our employees," said Robert Kelly, the Eagle CEO in a press release.

Eagle has 3,550 employees nationwide. The nine stores are set to close by the end of summer. The seven other stores slated for shut down are located in Illinois.

LOGS

Shenita Candus Canty, 22, and Stephanie Venita Ceaser, 36, both of Cedar Rapids, were charged with third-degree theft in connection with an alleged incident Wednesday at Dillard's, Coral Ridge Mall. The two allegedly concealed $912.45 worth of merchandise in bags and attempted to leave the store, court records show. A subsequent search of their persons allegedly yielded merchandise from several other stores.

Kai Mathias Ringen, 21, address unknown, and Michael Ross Burnett, 18, 1705 Prairie Du Chien Road Apt. 6, were charged with forgery and second-degree theft in connection with incidents allegedly occurring between May 27 and May 30 involving three stolen credit cards. Both are accused of using stolen credit cards to purchase $654.76 worth of merchandise at Coralville Wal-Mart and a kayak and accessories, valued at $1,422.72, at Scheels All Sports, as well as other purchases at the Coralville HandiMart, Dodge Street Hy-Vee, and Sinclair, court records show. The total value fell between $2,227.79 and $2,570.36. Ringen allegedly told police the credit cards were stolen from a vehicle that was unlocked, records show.

Beleaguered Ariz. bishop resigns

BY RENE SANCHEZ
WASHINGTON POST

PHOENIX — Bishop Thomas O'Brien, who has led the Roman Catholic diocese here since 1981, resigned Wednesday in the wake of his arrest this week on felony charges of leaving the scene of a fatal traffic accident and his recent admission that he'd shielded priests accused of molesting minors from criminal investigators.

The Vatican issued a brief statement Wednesday morning announcing that it had accepted his decision to step down immediately as the spiritual leader of nearly a half-million Catholics in Arizona. The statement gave no explanation for O'Brien's resignation, except to note that church law allows a senior cleric to relinquish his post when he has either a serious illness or other circumstances make him "unsuited for the fulfillment of his office." Archbishop Michael Sheehan, who leads the largest Catholic diocese in New Mexico, has been named O'Brien's interim successor.

O'Brien is the first bishop in the United States to resign in the face of criminal charges and the first to be charged with a felony, two Catholic Church historians said Wednesday.

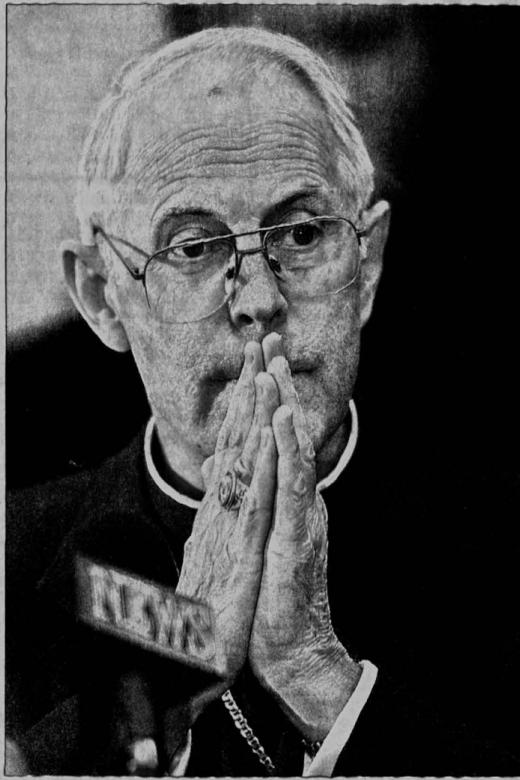

Across Phoenix, many Catholics applauded the news of O'Brien's sudden departure, saying that he'd lost credibility and that the diocese had become engulfed in controversy. "It would have been almost impossible for him to be effective anymore," said Sandy Simonson, the local leader of a national group of lay Catholics known as Voice of the Faithful. "This is a step forward."

O'Brien, 67, has remained secluded in his residence and has made no public statement since his arrest Monday. Police say that while driving along a busy avenue near downtown on June 14, he struck and killed a jaywalker and continued home without reporting the incident, an offense that under state law could lead to a prison term of more than three years. Police said they traced the car involved in the accident to O'Brien after a witness gave them a partial license plate number.

Investigators, who said O'Brien has given vague and contradictory accounts of the accident, are looking into whether the bishop was impaired by alcohol at the time. Catholic leaders here said he'd been under great stress in the days before the accident.

Earlier this month, O'Brien was spared criminal penalties by signing a controversial agreement with prosecutors here in which he acknowledged that during his tenure he hadn't notified authorities about priests accused of pedophilia and instead let them continue working with children. As part of the deal, O'Brien agreed to give up authority over sexual-abuse cases in the church and pay victims $600,000. The agreement prompted the first public calls for his resignation.

Matt York/Associated Press

Archbishop Michael Sheehan pauses before answering a question at a news conference Wednesday at the Catholic Diocese in Phoenix. On Wednesday, just over two weeks after Phoenix Bishop Thomas O'Brien admitted sheltering alleged molester priests, he resigned in disgrace following his arrest in a fatal hit-and-run accident. The Vatican appointed Sheehan as interim administrator of the diocese.

Sniper-case chief quits in book flap

BY STEPHEN MANNING
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROCKVILLE, Md. — Montgomery County Police Chief Charles Moose, who led the three-week hunt for the Washington-area sniper, resigned Wednesday after a clash with county politicians over his upcoming book on the investigation.

Moose, 49, said in a statement that he had worked to make the county a "safe and secure place to live" but that it was time "to move on and explore other paths in life."

His book, Three Weeks in October, is scheduled for release in October, one year after the sniper attacks.

In March, the county ethics commission ordered him to drop the project and barred him from serving as a consultant on a movie about the sniper case, saying a county employee may not profit on the side from his official duties.

The commission also said the book could undermine the prosecution in the sniper case by catering to "the public's thirst for all of those 'inside' details." The defendants' attorneys also object to the book, saying it could taint possible jurors.

Moose appealed in state court and also filed a federal lawsuit claiming his free-speech rights were being violated.

Despite win, estate-tax momentum decreasing

BY JONATHAN WEISMAN
WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — When a coalition of wealthy families, small-business groups, and farm interests won temporary repeal of the estate tax two years ago, they immediately resumed their campaign for permanent repeal. Now, even as the House voted Wednesday afternoon to do just that, some in the alliance have second thoughts.

It's not that they've backed off their vehement opposition to the tax on large inheritances. Rather, as the federal budget deficit grows and their patriarchs and matriarchs age, they're losing faith that permanent repeal will ever happen and are considering compromises that were unthinkable two years ago.

Even at the height of the stock-market boom, the estate tax affected very few families because estates worth up to a certain amount are exempt. That amount is currently $1 million for a single person or as much as $2 million for a couple. In 2000, the most recent year for which statistics are available, more than 2.4 million adults died in the United States, but only around 52,000 left taxable estates. The strength of the repeal movement always came from people's fear that their estates would be hit with a huge tax bill. If that fear dissipates in a sluggish economy, so will the movement, lobbyists said.

The House voted 264-163 to permanently repeal the estate tax after 2010. But no one expects the Senate to pass the bill, leading some proponents to believe that the vote and the distant temporary-repeal date are more political gamesmanship than a serious legislative attack on the tax.

So some of the affluent families who have bankrolled the repeal movement are exploring estate-tax changes short of repeal that could be implemented sooner.

"There is some real concern that 2010 is not soon enough," said a lobbyist working on the issue, referring to the deficit and the uncomfortable fact that some affluent benefactors may not live until 2010. Grover Connell of privately held Connell Co., for example, is 85. The matriarchs and patriarch of the Hallmark greeting-card fortune are in their 70s.

Mission for tourists in space ready

NEW YORK (AP) — The company that brokered missions into space for two millionaire businessmen announced plans Wednesday for the first mission intended solely for tourists.

Space Adventures, the Russian Aviation & Space Agency, and RSC Energia, Russia's leading aerospace company, announced an agreement to fly two tourists simultaneously to the international space station on a Soyuz spacecraft.

"After the loss of Columbia, the president said that our journey into space must go on," said Space Adventures CEO Eric Anderson. "The advancement of commercial space flight and space tourism should and will continue, to everyone's advantage."

Approximately a dozen people have applied for the two civilian seats on the proposed flight, and two will be selected in 60 to 90 days, the company said.

It won't be cheap — $20 million per seat, the same amount American businessman Dennis Tito paid to become the first space tourist in 2001 — and qualifying won't be simple.

Applicants will have to undergo rigorous medical examinations and training to qualify. If the flights go to the international space station as Space Adventures promises, they also likely will require the approval of NASA and the space-station partners.

Incubating art with imagination

BY DAVE STRACKANY
THE DAILY IOWAN

Meet the Cultural Incubator — a two-person think tank with a steering committee of Iowa City heavy-hitters from the university and the community — people such as Mark Ginsberg, Dottie Ray, and Josh Schaumburg. Now meet the founders, John and Sandra Hudson.

But let's not say words like "founders." The Hudsons prefer to describe themselves as cultural volunteers.

In retirement, the Hudsons went Tampa in favor of the burgeoning cultural communities in Iowa City. They've lived here five years now — about as long as the average UI student, yet they're already ubiquitously regarded as influential figures in local art and culture. And though they worked as educators and business administrators in Cambridge, Mass., for 45 years, work in Iowa City is just beginning for the Hudsons.

The bulk of the Hudsons' contributions to Iowa City's cultural landscape are siphoned through what they've come to call the Cultural Incubator. As per its mission statement, the Incubator "assists organizations to incubate ideas, programs, and new ventures and assists with the business side of arts and culture." Beyond its connections to various local organizations, the Cultural Incubator is driven otherwise by the wisdom, experience, and brainstorming power of the Hudsons.

"[The Hudsons] brought a sense of purpose, focus, attention to detail, and passion to many individual arts groups, which have allowed each of these groups to take the organizations to a higher level," said David Collins, a member of the Cultural Incubator's steering committee.

The husband-and-wife team have already assisted 17 organizations to varying degrees.

The history of the pair can be traced back to a blind date in Portland, Ore., in 1956, while the Cultural Incubator's roots in the Englert were forged more recently.

"As Englert volunteers, we attended a regional caucus and were elected delegates to the strategic planning process for the Iowa Department of Cultural Affairs," John Hudson said. "That process led to the long-range plan called Imagine Iowa 2010. Out of that came the concept for the Cultural Incubator, which we founded in 2001."

Currently, the Hudsons are paring down a full plate of projects. Among the Incubator's highest priorities are the Cultural Sharing Network, the development of the Canoe House, and lending continued support to the Englert Civic Theatre.

Whitney Kidder/The Daily Iowan

John and Sandra Hudson attend a benefit at US Bank for the Englert Civic Theatre on Tuesday evening.

The Sharing Network is Sandra Hudson's brainchild. It essentially works to get disposable, yet reusable, resources (such as theater sets and backdrops, but also ideas and tactics) to be recycled for use by other organizations. For example, the Gazette recently made a software program for the Children's Museum offering tutorials on newspaper manufacture. Once the workshops were done, the Children's Museum organized a program at the Incubator's behest to disseminate the educational CDs to schools around the region. These programs lower the amount of fiscal waste, which frees up limited money for arts grants and allows funds to be used more efficiently and effectively.

Enter Canoe House, a building nuzzled between the Music and Theatre Buildings along the Iowa River. The Hudsons' son, Brad Hudson, a specialist in the hospitality industry (restaurants, hotels, etc.), was the first to suggest that the cobblestone hut be put to good use. Wasting no time, the Hudsons began laying plans to develop the Canoe House into a coffee shop, lunch stop, and impromptu music venue.

"I remember hearing Sandy Boyd describe the university's need to reach out to the community," Sandra Hudson said. "So we decided if the UI was going to roll the red carpet out, we'd use that same carpet to walk in."

With the university enthusiastic and acoustic engineer Rick Loula aboard (also the sound and stage designer for the Englert), things seem to be falling into place. The Hudsons expect the project to be realized sometime in 2004, "round about when things at the Englert should start rolling."

The Hudsons' endeavor, "Englert Night Out," and the many other fund-raisers by the contributors to the Englert's campaign have drawn the theater to within $190,000 of its goal. The deadline is July 19, but the Hudsons are confident, they said. They expect the new theater to open equipped with a second-floor convention, gallery, and performance space, and they are personally commandeering a project to make the third floor a shared office space for local art and culture organizations. "Our experience in working with organizations in the past led us to understand that there is strength in collaboration," Sandra Hudson said. "Even though cultural organizations must raise their own funds, we believe that if nonprofit organizations collaborate to raise awareness and enhance their visibility, everyone comes out ahead. By collaborating, each organization may receive a smaller slice of the pie, but because the pie becomes larger, each organization receives more actual dollars. In addition, collaboration leads to greater learning, greater viability, and greater impact on the community."

Pottermania waits for the bewitching hour to begin again

BY BETH HERZINGER
THE DAILY IOWAN

Midnight Friday marks the return of the wizarding hour.

Saturday morning, hundreds of muggles will swarm local bookstores in eager anticipation of Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, the fifth installment in the widely popular children's series created by J.K. Rowling.

A three-year wait since the fourth book was released has created a high demand from readers who simply cannot get enough of boy-wizard-wonder Harry Potter's adventures against magical creatures and turbulent adolescence. In response, local bookstores will open their doors at midnight to offer the book at its first available sale time — 12:01 a.m. Saturday.

Iowa Book, 8 S. Clinton St., will open at midnight to sell exclusively the Harry Potter book, and it is offering a 30 percent discount off the $29.99 list price.

"It'll be a lark," said Matthew Lage, the store's general book buyer. "We're very enthusiastic. Who cares about John Grisham or Tom Clancy? Rowling is an author that you want to sell."

The store began taking reservations in January from eager fans wanting to secure a book, and it currently has orders for almost 100 copies. Many come from students.

"We've even had a lot of parents reserve numerous copies, one for each of their children," he said. "That way they don't have to fight over who gets to read it first. It will be a quiet weekend at home for a lot of people."

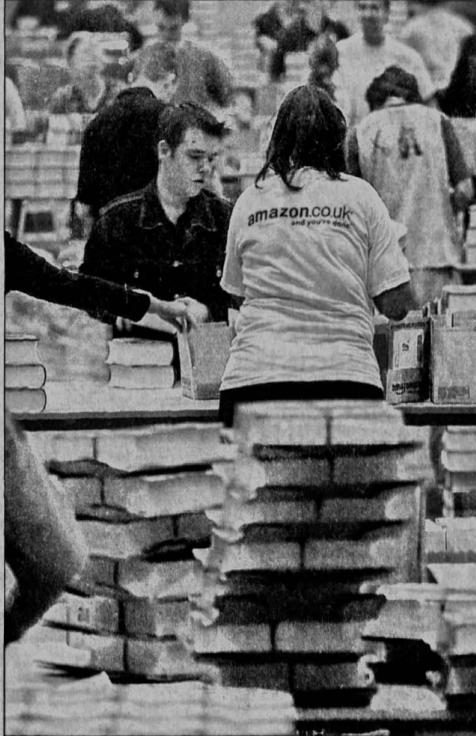

Barnes & Noble Booksellers, Coral Ridge Mall, will host a two-hour extravaganza culminating at midnight.

Wannabe wizards can dress as their favorite Hogwarts character for a storewide parade. Enchanting magical performances and arts-and-craft activities will help those of all ages kill the last few hours before the series return.

Prairie Light Books, 15 S. Dubuque St., will also open at midnight to sell the 896-page book.

The story revolves around Harry's fifth year at Hogwarts, a school where future witches and wizards learn their magical ways. At 255,000 words, the book promises to be chock-full of treats for devoted readers, revolving around themes of loyalty and sacrifice. In addition, fans should continue to expect the unexpected, and speculation has been high. In an interview available on the BBC Web site, Rowling revealed her grief over the death of a main character, as yet unrevealed.

Stocks of Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix are being packed in a secure warehouse at Amazon.co.uk's distribution center in Milton Keynes, England, on Wednesday.

Harry Potter and the national-security clearance

Thieves have disrupted the magical world of the Harry Potter countdown.

Thousands of copies of the new Harry Potter book have been snatched from a warehouse in England, potentially spoiling publishing's most treasured — and guarded — secret.

Booksellers, warehouse workers, and others across the English-speaking world have been following strict security measures to ensure a smooth release of Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, the latest adventure in the blockbuster series.

Thieves made off with a tractor trailer containing 7,680 copies of the new book, police said Tuesday. The truck was taken Sunday from outside a warehouse in Newtown-le-Willows, in northern England, where the books awaited distribution for their 12:01 a.m. Saturday release. Authorities have made no arrests and have no suspects.

The truckload of books had an estimated retail value of $220,000 — but advance copies would have a much higher street value. The book has a list price in the United States of $29.99.

Bloomsbury, the London-based publisher of J.K. Rowling's beloved fantasy stories about the young wizard and his friends, issued a statement Tuesday noting that a legal injunction bars publishing any contents or plot summary of the book before it goes on sale and requires the return of any missing books to the publisher.

"We hope that nobody will spoil the excitement for all Harry Potter fans who are looking forward to reading the book," the publisher said.

Bush raps Iran for nuke plans

BY COLUM LYNCH
WASHINGTON POST

UNITED NATIONS — President Bush on Wednesday praised student protesters in Iran for demanding greater political freedom from the country's ruling clerics, and he urged foreign leaders to send a clear signal to Tehran that the world "will not tolerate" its secret development of nuclear weapons.

Bush's tough language came as the United States is mounting a diplomatic campaign to pressure Iran to agree to more intrusive inspections of its nuclear-power program. The remarks appeared calculated to take advantage of growing international criticism of Iran for failing to divulge secret efforts to process enriched uranium that could be used in a weapons program.

"The international community must come together to make it very clear to Iran that we will not tolerate the construction of a nuclear weapon in Iran," Bush said in Washington after meeting with congressional leaders. "There's near universal agreement that we all must work together to prevent Iran from developing a nuclear weapon."

Bush also lauded student demonstrators in Iran, saying, "I appreciate those courageous souls who speak out for freedom in Iran."

"They need to know America stands squarely by their side," he added. "And I would urge the Iranian administration to treat them with the utmost of respect."

Iran's reformist president, Mohammad Khatami, who has come under fire from the demonstrators for not delivering greater reforms since his 1997 election, charged Washington with "interference in Iran's internal affairs." He suggested that Washington's public support for the students was serving to unite Iran behind its government.

Polls: U.S. more of a threat than N. Korea

BY AUDREY WOODS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — A sampling of public opinion in 11 nations finds many see the United States as an arrogant superpower that poses a greater danger to world peace than North Korea.

President Bush failed to impress 58 percent of those questioned by pollsters for a BBC broadcast Tuesday night. They said they had a fairly unfavorable or very unfavorable view of the American president. If the American respondents were removed from the sample, the number rose to 60 percent.

The poll questioned 11,000 people in May and June in 11 nations: Australia, Brazil, Britain, Canada, France, Indonesia, Israel, Jordan, Russia, South Korea, and the United States. The poll was conducted by pollsters including ICM in Britain and IPSOS Reid in the United States. The BBC did not estimate a margin of error.

Even though 67 percent said they wouldn't want their countries to copy U.S. economic policies, 67 percent would aspire to U.S. gains in science and technology, and 56 percent to the opportunities for advancement available to people in the United States. Forty percent aspired to U.S. freedom of expression.

The way the United States wields its power worried many of those questioned for the program "What the World Thinks of America."

Only 25 percent said U.S. military might was making the world a safer place.

Forty-one percent agreed with Prime Minister Tony Blair's opinion that the United States is a force for good in the world, and 55 disagreed.

Sixty-five percent overall said America is arrogant. Forty-seven percent said America is friendly, and 33 percent find the United States antagonistic.

Letters to the Editor

No ban on abortion

Bravo to The Daily Iowan for its editorial (June 10) outlining what a bad idea it is to put a ban on abortions and interfere with the client/physician relationship. Because 43 percent of women in the United States will have an abortion by the time they are 45, it makes abortion services basic health care for 51 percent of our population.

I would like to correct one error about a statistic cited in the piece — 95 percent of all abortions performed in the United States and at the Emma Goldman Clinic are performed during the first 12 weeks (first trimester); 80 percent are within the first eight weeks (the editorial said 12 weeks). Five percent of our clients are seeking second trimester services, up to 20 weeks.

We are unusual in that the Emma Goldman Clinic sees 37 percent of our abortion clients in the first three to four weeks of their pregnancies. This is a testament to women in Eastern Iowa being aware of their fertility cycles, observant of failed birth control, taking advantage of readily available information, knowledge, awareness of early signs of pregnancy, and being willing to confront any risky behaviors in which they may have been engaged.

Bans on abortions, even on certain types of procedures, put women's health at risk. Let's take the exaggerated focus away from the fetus and put it back to where it rightly belongs — on women's trustworthy ability to make good decisions about their own health care.

and children more and therefore deserve more time at home?

The UI should quickly settle the lawsuit brought by one of its employees (DI, June 13) and end yet another embarrassing story with a modicum of grace.

Carol deProse
Lone Tree, Iowa, resident

Oh, dance me a dance

A UI dance student called on the phone and wanted money because the dance department suffered a budget cut. I turned the caller down.

UI dance students make queer gestures to queer noises. It wasn't always that way; years ago, students danced to Rachmaninoff's Symphonic Dances and Stravinsky's Rite of Spring. I would see no sin in dusting off an entire Delibes ballet for the Dance Gala.

I enjoy watching a French curve in motion, not the Dubuque Street skywalk. If the dance department is going to dismiss ballet as archaic, it can get along on whatever frugal budget the Board of Regents allows.

End discrimination against fathers

According to UI General Counsel Mark Schantz, the university has a rational basis for the exclusion of biological fathers from a policy that allows only adoptive fathers to take accrued sick leave in order to spend time at home with new children. What could this rational basis be? That adoptive fathers are more fragile than biological fathers? That adoptive fathers have more stress regarding the introduction of a new member into the family? That adoptive fathers love their partners

State needs a better plan to refill groups' 'sugar cups'

When your neighbor borrows a cup of sugar, all too often the debt goes unpaid. For most people, to whom scrounged sucrose is a trifling matter, such instances are shrugged off.

This principle seems to have been adopted by the Iowa government, though many recent actions are only "borrowing" in the loosest sense of the word.

Seeking to avoid tax hikes during the recent economic doldrums, Gov. Tom Vilsack and state legislators have resorted to diverting $1 billion originally earmarked for specific programs from various groups over the past three years.

In times of budgetary crisis, shifting funds from special projects to general expenses can be justified. However, some of the methods recently employed by Iowa's leaders to reshuffle the wealth are dubious at best.

For example, $1.725 million in registration fees paid by snowmobile and ATV riders for trail construction was appropriated by the Legislature.

Snagging funds that had been provided by the riders themselves with the understanding that the money would be used for a specific purpose fosters mistrust and ensures that fewer snowmobile and ATV aficionados will be any too eager to purchase licenses in the future. In addition, endeavors such as recreational trail-building could enhance tourism in the state and thus provide new sources of revenue.

For those who consider off-road vehicle routes frivolous, consider this: Capital has also been diverted from a number of other programs, including those designed to supplement Medicaid payments to hospitals, provide building improvements to schools, clean up areas near leaking underground fuel tanks, and assist senior citizens.

Siphoning funds away from schools, the elderly, and the environment could engender an acute decline in state living standards.

Most alarming, however, is the lawmakers' disregard for safeguards built into some of the appropriated funds designed to prohibit such raiding. Inconvenient laws were, in some cases, superseded with new regulations that authorized transfers. Such legislative crapolence sets a dangerous precedent.

To their credit, however, state officials have agreed to return some of the borrowed funds — someday. Such an agreement should extend to the return of all diverted funds within a more definite time frame. Without such assurances, state lawmakers are all too likely to play the neighbor in this scenario, thereby making life less sweet for all Iowans.

A summertime of dangerous fad diets

Finally, summer is beginning to show its red-hot, full, sweaty face.

Consequently, locals are beginning to show their red-hot, full, sweaty asses. With folds of Midwestern flesh oozing outta swim trunks, it's no wonder that losing weight has been the topic de jour lately. I am ever-intrigued with the wacky lengths people will go to lose weight.

Now, I confess that my dieting record is hardly squeaky clean, but at least I chose the most straightforward route: stop eating. Not always pleasant but simple and effective, if your goal is to look like an obsessive and bony freak who sheds a lot. I really like my hair, though, and eventually decided that it was in my best interest to just deal with the curvy hips and eat already. I know how easy it is for a diet to turn into an obsession, and I get seriously disturbed when people try to shed mass amounts of poundage so they can fit into the perfect summer outfit by, you know, yesterday.

The losing-weight obsession is hardly restricted to the stereotypical poor little middle-class white girl. Although the majority of known calorie-counters are straight women (with gay men scrambling to narrow the gap), I've known smart folks of all ethnicities, sexes, and sexual identities climbing on the Cabbage Soup bandwagon and other diets of that ilk. Eating healthily is good; slurping cabbage broth all day so you can lose five pounds by the weekend is straight-up crazy. The following are some more diet tips I relegate to the straight-up category.

The Spit-It-Out Diet: This is the brain-child of a normally intelligent friend of mine who figures that the only reason he overeats is because he so enjoys the taste and texture of food. Therefore, he reasons that after reaching a comfortable state of fullness, he could continue eating without weight gain if he simply chewed the food and then spat it out. "It's not like I'd be throwing it up, like bulimia," he argued after I pointed out that it was frigg'n' disgusting and, if ever realized, would warrant a trip to the shrink. He agreed that in practice in might not be such a golden idea, but in theory, he's a devotee.

The Buffet Diet: This one comes in many versions, but the gist of it is to eat once a day at the same all-you-can eat buffet. Also, you must eat late at night, and you can only choose a few foods to eat each time. For example, Monday, you eat a family of chickens and two gallons of milk, and Tuesday, you switch it up and eat a school of haddock and two gallons of pork gravy. Eventually you lose weight cause you get so sick of eating the same crap. I'm pretty sure the décor in most buffet-style restaurants helps curb the appetite, too. Incidentally, all the poor saps on the Crazy Diets Web site who actually tried the all-buffet-all-the-time diet ended up regaining all the lost weight plus some.

The Liquor Diet: I must say that I appreciate the simplicity in this plan, but drinking Jack Daniel's until you're no longer hungry isn't a diet tip, it's alcoholism. Get thee to an AA meeting!

These are only a few of the disturbing diets and procedures that people subject themselves to in a desperate effort to lose weight. It doesn't take much for "disturbing" to turn into "dangerous." The glamour and novelty of eating disorders have worn off, and magazines don't write about them as often as they used to (thankfully, as most articles were virtual handbooks for little anorectics-in-training), but that doesn't mean they aren't still a real problem. It doesn't mean that suddenly our twisted culture has fixed itself into letting our bodies be what they are without ubiquitous images of supermodel bodies and increasingly skinnier Hollywood stars assaulting our psyches. All it means is that the big media are already bored with what was relatively recently a "new epidemic among American girls."

While millions of folks, mostly women in their late teens and early 20s, are either slowly killing themselves or stuck in psych wards reciting cheesy affirmations about how much they love their bodies (which, although effective, are annoying as hell), crazy diet fads are still considered normal. Most of them are obviously laughable, like the gems I've mentioned here. But many turn into life-threatening diseases, all of them take advantage of the insecurities our culture cultivates within us, and none of them are normal.

the IMU, where he stays until 1 p.m. in the summer and 3:30 p.m. during the school year.

UI junior Keli Owens said he looks forward to seeing Leroy, his favorite Add Sheet distributor, who just happens to be the Add Sheet head honcho as well.

"He really brightens my day," Owens said, adding that Leroy reminds him of Santa Claus.

Rowan said he has his favorite students, too.

"Every semester, there will be one or two students who will stop and talk awhile," he said, adding that he finds the social aspect of the job highly appealing.

"There's a real human component to it," he said. "At the end of the day, there's a kind of satisfaction interacting with people. You get to talk, laugh, and enjoy the weather. It's a great little job."

As a group of future freshmen walk toward the IMU for Orientation, one asks, "What are those yellow things?"

After all, Add Sheet distribution is a new sight for UI newcomers.

One of the strangers to the sight of the Add Sheet distributors, Marnie Reifenrath, takes a flier from Mark Johnson with a little hesitation. Katharine Reifenrath, a UI junior and Marnie's sister, however, seems to know him well.

Johnson, a tall, thin man in a plain green T-shirt and black jeans, can be seen smiling on the Pentacrest on Wednesdays with the recently unveiled Old Capitol dome in the backdrop. He has worked at the intersection of Iowa Avenue and Clinton Street for the past five years — regardless of the weather.

"I'm here in the rain, sleet, and snow," he said. "But if a tornado rolled through, then I'd be out of here."

Add Sheet employees are paid an extra dollar an hour on days when it rains or snows or if the temperature is below 32 degrees.

Katharine Reifenrath said she did not know that the Add Sheet employees were paid hourly, adding that she takes Add Sheets because she had heard the distributors are not allowed to leave until the whole stack is gone.

Rowan, who for a long time has seen people throw Add Sheets in the nearest trash can, said he appreciates the sympathy of people such as Reifenrath but adds that hers is a very common misconception.

As far as he is concerned, Rowan said, he would rather have the Press-Citizen — which owns the Add Sheet — recycle the unwanted fliers at the end of each Wednesday.

U.S. troops fire on Iraqi protest

defense official as "the Condoleezza Rice of the Baath Party," was seized Monday in central Iraq. He was Saddam's national-security adviser, personal secretary, and top bodyguard, officials said.

"Other than the two sons, he is the closest to Saddam," the Defense official said. "He should know the fate of Saddam and the two sons."

After Saddam and sons Uday and Qusay, Mahmud is the highest-ranking official on the U.S. Central Command's list of the top 55 wanted Iraqis.

Mahmud controlled access to the president for anyone but immediate family members, Defense officials said on the condition of anonymity. Military officials, who offered no details on his arrest, kept the capture secret until news leaked out Wednesday, apparently hoping to prevent Saddam, if alive, from discovering that his closest aide was being interrogated.

Protesters gathered outside U.S. headquarters, in a heavily guarded complex of lavish palaces once used by Saddam, Wednesday morning after going to a pension-payout center, where they had expected to receive $50 each. It was unclear where they got the idea the payment was imminent. Many said they heard of it in an Iraqi newspaper, though Bremer has yet to announce a payout plan for ex-soldiers.

The U.S. Army said soldiers fired after protesters began pelting them with large rocks and after someone in the crowd fired a gun. Protesters said some rocks were thrown by troublemakers who joined the demonstration but who were not from the military. They denied shots were fired from the crowd.

Dried blood stained the sidewalk where the dead fell, and a metal electricity box was punctured with several bullet holes. Hours after the shootings, several protesters were still outside the U.S. headquarters, waiting to hear from an Iraqi delegation that had gone inside to try to negotiate a payment date.

Local public defender stands up for poor

receiving his law degree, he worked in private practice for a couple of years before becoming a public defender. Public defense "was more interesting than income taxes, and it was more interesting than driving a truck around all day," he said.

He said he often finds minor offenses as emotionally challenging as more serious offenses, noting that some clients have had such immense personal difficulties as substance abuse and alcohol problems. He said he has also seen clients who keep legal problems hanging over them because they must provide for their families instead of paying court fees.

"A simple arrest downtown can lead to two years of perpetual court appearances," he said. "Even less serious charges result in complicated legal issues."

While noting that she is very proud of her husband of 12 years, Sheri Seggerman said she understands the hefty demands of his job.

"It's a hard job, especially with the state cutbacks and changes in the court system," she said. "A lot of people say, 'Dick, how can you defend that kind of a person?' They forget the Constitution and the big picture. What if it was your son or daughter or you?"

Klausner said one of his most difficult, emotionally wrought cases involved the murder of a police officer in Cedar Rapids. While an unfortunate background does not make crime excusable, he said, even clients who have done the most outrageous things can be interesting and sympathetic if you listen to them long enough.

"Often, the victim whom the prosecutors were trying to protect was the perpetrator 15 years earlier," Klausner said. "My ethical obligation is to zealously defend my client. He may or may not be guilty, but the problem is, he's defenseless."

Join us for dinner at Hancher

We know that it can be difficult to work all day, grab some dinner and make it to Hancher for an 8 pm performance. So here's an option for three of our weeknight performances: Plan on having dinner in the beautiful Hancher Café before performances of Terence Blanchard (October 23), Cloud Gate Dance Theatre's Cursive (November 12), and SoVoSó (January 28).

Reserve your dinner in advance. We will then contact you to offer three menu choices. For Cloud Gate the food will be Asian; for SoVoSó it will be upscale Californian; and what else but Cajun for Terence Blanchard who hails from the Big Easy.

Reserve dinner directly on the ticket order form in our season brochure. Call the Box Office to request your free brochure. Or order your tickets and reserve your dinner online at www.uiowa.edu/hancher.

quote of the day

My bottom line ... is that the United States government executed two people for doing something they knew people didn't do.
 — Robert Meeropol, the younger son of Ethel and Julius Ethel Rosenberg, who became the first civilians executed for espionage in U.S. history on June 19, 1953. A year and a half ago, the star witness against them admitted he had lied during the trial.

BASKETBALL

Another Jordan for the Wizards

WASHINGTON (AP) — New Jersey Nets assistant coach Eddie Jordan will be the new coach of the Washington Wizards, the Associated Press has learned.

A source with the Wizards, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said Jordan accepted an offer Wednesday after meeting with owner Abe Pollin.

Jordan is expected to be introduced at a news conference today. He will become the Wizards' seventh coach in six seasons.

The Wizards pursued Jordan after higher-profile coaches Larry Brown and Jeff Van Gundy opted to take other jobs. Brown took over at Detroit; Van Gundy was hired by Houston.

Jordan replaces Doug Collins, who was fired May 30 after back-to-back 37-45 seasons. Collins' dismissal was part of Pollin's housecleaning after the owner decided not to rehire Michael Jordan as president of basketball operations.

Pollin initially said he would let Michael Jordan's replacement pick the new coach, but the strategy changed as the pool of available coaches dwindled. Pollin has said he would like to have a new president of basketball operations in place by next week's draft.

EXPANSION

Source: ACC to pursue Va. Tech

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Atlantic Coast Conference presidents will invite Virginia Tech to join three other Big East schools in jumping to the ACC as part of its expansion plan, two sources told the Associated Press on Wednesday night.

The sources spoke to the AP on the condition they not be identified.

The decision to add Virginia Tech was made during a three-hour teleconference of nine league presidents on Wednesday after it appeared that the original expansion involving Miami, Boston College, and Syracuse would not get the required seven votes for approval. One source with knowledge of the talks said.

AMES — They'll meet later than usual, but Iowa State and Iowa are going to play each other in basketball, just as always.

New ISU coach Wayne Morgan wouldn't have it any other way.

After introducing his staff at a news conference Wednesday, Morgan revealed that the game with Iowa this season will be played in January, after both teams have started conference play. The game usually is played in mid-December.

It's Iowa State's turn to host

Dateline

Iowa and ISU are expected to play out their intrastate rivalry game Jan. 21.

the game, and Morgan said the two schools could not agree on date in December. It's expected to be played Jan. 21.

"[The Hawkeyes] were offered several dates in the pre-conference schedule," Morgan said. "On all of those dates, they indicated they could not be here."

Iowa is not allowed to play on the Saturday or Sunday before finals week, which is why last season's game with Iowa State was played on a Friday night.

Iowa Athletics Director Bob Bowsby had expected this season's game also would be played on a Friday night — Dec. 12 — but Iowa State has a women's basketball tournament at Hilton Coliseum then.

"That sent us all looking for another date," Bowsby said.

Morgan said he'd rather play Iowa before the Big 12 season. But he said it's important to play the game and there was never any discussion of not playing it this season.

"I think it's a valuable game. I think it's a big rivalry," he said. "I think people throughout the state have great interest in it ... It's a good thing not only for basketball but [for] the state. So I think we should play the game."

Morgan said the Cyclones' nonconference schedule is still not complete, though it will include the annual games with Northern Iowa and Drake. He said he talked to such schools as Arizona State, Miami, and Seton Hall about games but could not work out agreements.

Some schools wanted guarantees that Iowa State can't afford, he said. Others want to play Iowa State at their place but not in Ames.

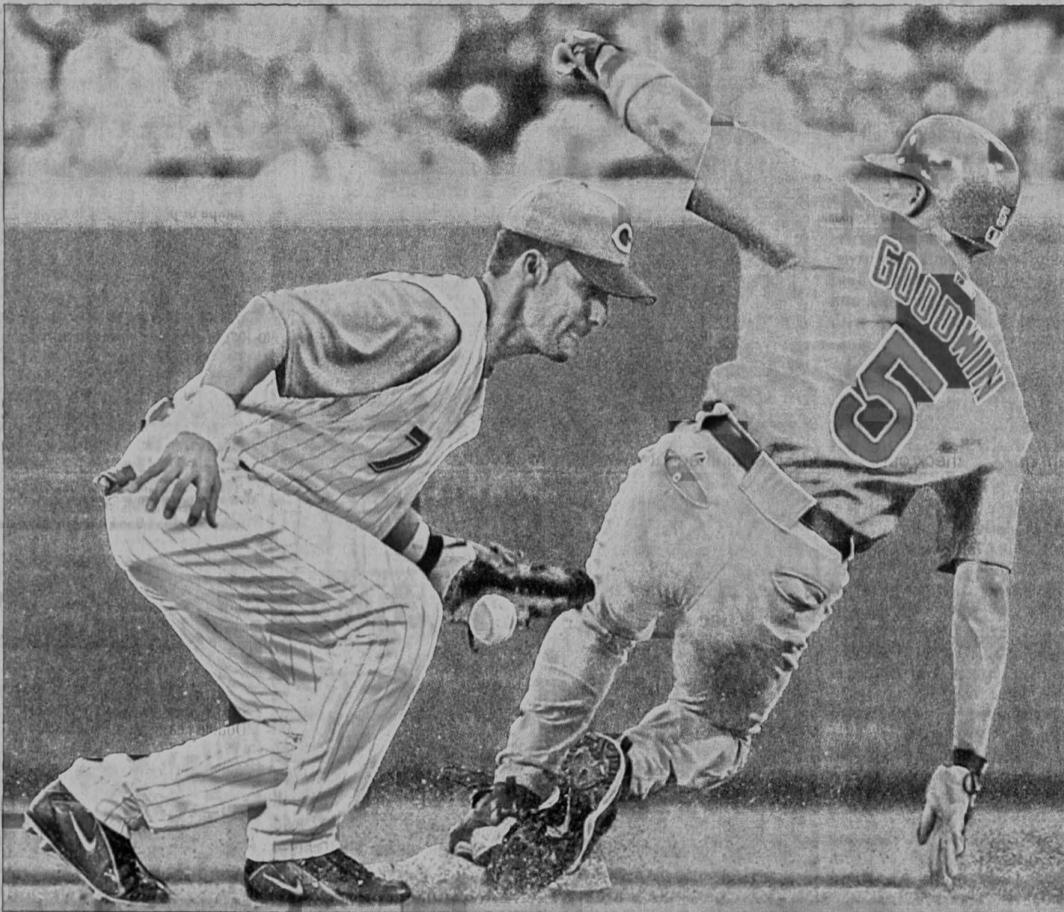

"If we're playing a 'name' school, we're going to play home and home," Morgan said. "Now, I would play somewhere if ABC wants to give us a million dollars. Then we'll go do that."

Morgan, a former Iowa State assistant, became the Cyclones' head coach on May 14. He succeeded Larry Eustachy, who

Chicago's star hits first homer since May 1

CINCINNATI — Sammy Sosa hit a prodigious homer, acting like nothing had changed since he was caught using a corked bat. He couldn't help but notice the one striking difference.

From now on, one of baseball's beloved stars can expect to get booed.

Sosa singled the first time he made contact while cracking his bat — nobody made a fuss — and later hit a two-run shot Wednesday night as the Chicago Cubs beat the Cincinnati Reds, 4-1, in their slugger's return from a seven-game suspension.

Cubs star Kerry Wood (6-5) retired the first 17 Reds batters and finished with a three-hitter. Still, it was Sosa's show.

Sosa's fifth-inning homer off the top of the batter's eye in center field against Jimmy Haynes (1-6) showed he was ready to get on with it.

On the last day of his suspension, he asked fans to forgive and forget that he had used a corked bat. But many of the 39,053 fans at Great American Ball Park — where Sosa got a standing ovation when he hit his 500th career home run on April 4 — weren't ready to do either.

Gibsen blends being an emcee, coach

BY FRANK KLIPSCH
THE DAILY IOWAN

Times done changed for the emcee ...

This De La Soul lyric applies perfectly to local hip-hop artist Rowland Gibsen. Gibsen, whose rap moniker is D.N.A., is adding one more duty to the work he already does promoting, booking, and distributing his musical goods; he is the head coach of Access Direct in this year's edition of the Prime Time League.

Gibsen

"I like to have my hands in a little bit of everything," said Gibsen, a Cedar Rapids native. "And I love the game of basketball, so it's cool to be a part of it."

The recent promotion to head coach didn't come easy.

"I admit it," he said with an honest chuckle. "My game used to be garbage. And I really had to work through the ranks."

Those ranks have included many hours at the Field House, earning respect from players quick with the comment, "Oh, I thought you just rapped." The ranks have also included a two-year stint as a Prime Time League player, as well as three years of experience as an assistant coach to PTL veteran Brian Thomas.

Thomas remembers five years ago, when D.N.A. started getting serious about basketball.

"He just started showing up and playing all the time," said Thomas, who coaches Iowa City Readymix/Deli Mart. "A lot of people knew him as the music guy, but you could tell he wasn't satisfied until he started getting respect for basketball."

With cable television creating a continuous demand for year-round sports and competition, a debate is being sparked on what exactly a sport is. ESPN televises everything from auto racing and bowling to billiards, miniature golf, and poker.

Could hip-hop be considered a sport?

"They're both definitely competitive," said D.N.A., who opened for the group Jurassic 5 on its recent appearance in Iowa City. "Success comes down to wanting to be the best, stepping up to the challenge

MEN'S TRACK & FIELD SEASON WRAP-UP

Hawkeyes look to double their success

BY J.K. PERRY
THE DAILY IOWAN

As the season came to its end, the Iowa men's track team finished up on a somewhat subdued note but with good prospects for next year's outdoor season.

While the men sent only one athlete, javelin thrower Bill Neumann, to the NCAA championships, the team did manage to send 11 athletes to regionals, all of whom are underclassmen and will need to make an impact during the next campaign.

"I would think, conservatively speaking, that we can bring double that number to [next year's] regionals," said Hawk coach Larry Wiecezorek.

Neumann stands out as a model for the rest of the team — a hard-working individual with a thirst for competition. Excluding nationals, the thrower won every meet he competed in, and during nationals, he managed to come away with third place.

Of the 11 who made it to regionals, including Neumann, six are from the field events: Tim Broderson and Eric Rothwell in the discus, Adam Hamilton and Chris Voller in the hammer, and Brad Daufeldt, who throws both discus and hammer.

Hamilton shows potential — the freshman was ranked No. 44 in the nation and No. 10 in the region. He threw a team best 196 feet at Big Tens, securing No. 4 in Iowa record books for an outdoor performance.

"I was disappointed with my performance up until Big Tens," he said, adding that participation in regionals was a good experience that would help him in the future.

Hamilton, a national high-school champion, was expected to have an immediate effect upon the team.

"He's lived up to our expectations and is one of our mainstays," Wiecezorek said.

Of the runners who were available for competition this year, senior Tony Leick showed the most promise. At regionals, he was able to pull off a seventh-place finish with a time of 53.16.

He did not make nationals, but the coaches feel he had a terrific season.

On a whole, however, there were some disappointments with redshirt and injured

Hawkeyes not being available and some athletes not performing to their potential.

Next year, athletes coming off of redshirting and injuries will be back with the team, including distance runners Micah VanDenend and Matt Esche, field athlete Ken Kemeny, and sprinters Derrick Burks, Juan Coleman, Omar Issacs, and Russell Peterson.

Wiecezorek also pointed to other achievements the track program produced this year — the Fifth Annual Musco Twilight was a success, and its popularity continues to grow, as well as completion of the renovation of the indoor track.

All of which, he said are, "exciting things for me."

BASEBALL COMMENTARY

Indelible marks corrupt Hall of fame

BY JIM LITKE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Roger Clemens didn't make any new friends by demanding a say about which hat he wears into the Hall of Fame.

Never mind Clemens isn't even eligible for induction until 2009 (probably). Most baseball fans' sense of outrage has been doused so often that anything short of a Bud Selig fright wig would win approval. Fortunately, the people at the Hall are more discerning than that.

In order to keep any more "this-space-for-sale" signs from sprouting on the foreheads of the game's most recognizable faces, museum curators decided a year ago to reserve the last word for themselves.

According to the edict, "Every team for whom an inductee played is listed on the plaque; however, the logo selection is based on where that player makes his most indelible mark."

We'll get to the "indelible mark" later, but first some history.

The idea of drawing up guidelines had been kicked around ever since members of baseball's first free-agent wave became eligible. For years, rumors circulated that cash, cars, and cushy jobs changed hands to ensure certain players entered the Hall in certain hats. The best and biggest payoff rumors always involved former Yankees — naturally — both those they nabbed (Reggie Jackson) and those who got away (Dave Winfield).

What finally forced the curators' hand was when Wade Boggs coyly auctioned off his plaque in Cooperstown, hinting it would be topped off with the lid of whatever former organization — Red Sox, Yankees, or Tampa Bay Devil Rays — treated him best.

Because Boggs also said his secret for getting so many hits was eating chicken before every game, maybe Hall historians worried he'd try to sneak in wearing a chef's toque with "KFC" emblazoned on the front.

That same rule was on Clemens' mind soon after he nailed down his 300th win.

"They're not going to tell me what hat I'm wearing," he said. "I became a Hall of Famer here."

Clemens was also wearing a Yankees cap when he got his 4,000th strikeout, picked up the last of six Cy Young awards, pocketed both of his World Series championship rings, and received his first paycheck with George Steinbrenner's signature on the bottom right.

The flip side is that most of those wins, strikeouts, and Cy Youngs came while Clemens was with the Red Sox. But former Boston general manager Dan Duquette let him go in 1996, after 13 seasons there, adding his now-famous assessment that Clemens was in the "twilight" of his career.

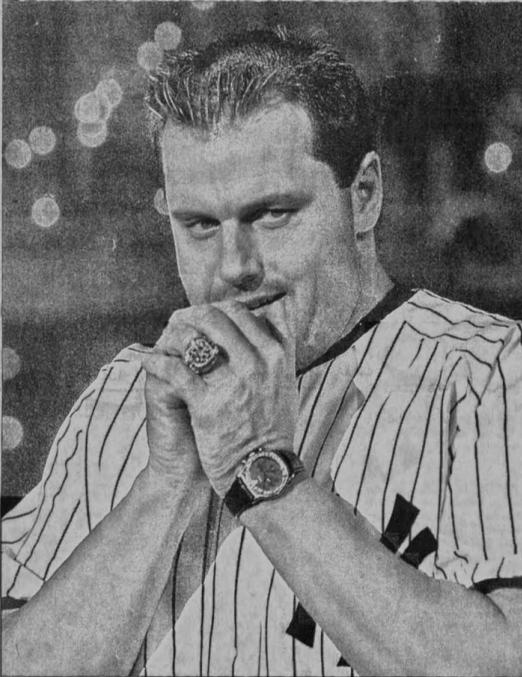

The pitcher and town have had it in for each other ever since. It didn't help that Clemens tried to pass off his move to Toronto for two seasons as his best chance to win a World Series.

Clemens seems less motivated by money than spite, and he threatened to boycott his own induction ceremony unless he gets to stroll in wearing a Yankees cap.

"There might be a vacant seat there," he said. "I'll take my mother, and we'll go to Palm Springs and invite y'all, and we'll have our own celebration."

The threat calls to mind Buffalo running back Thurman Thomas explaining a day later that he skipped his own news conference early in Super Bowl week to protest a lack of media attention. The league's MVP then got more attention than he ever wanted for misplacing his helmet just before kickoff and missing the opening series.

The funny thing is that if Thomas gets into the NFL's Hall of Fame, he won't have to choose between the Bills' hardhat he wore for a dozen seasons or the Dolphins' helmet he used during a brief comeback as a third-down specialist. Pro football doesn't require inductees to pick a team helmet for their plaques. Neither

J.P. Fila/Associated Press

Yankees pitcher Roger Clemens presents the "Top Ten Things Baseball Has Taught Me" during the taping of "The Late Show with David Letterman," on Monday. On June 13, Clemens notched his 300th career win and recorded his 4,000th career strike-out at Yankee Stadium.

does the Basketball Hall of Fame.

Baseball let in Catfish Hunter and a few others wearing caps without any logo at all. Clemens brushed back that possibility.

"That would be disrespectful to what Mr. Steinbrenner has given me: an opportunity to come here and continue my career, to be able to achieve these moments and become a Hall of Famer," he said.

But spokesman Jeff Idelson said the Hall will continue to make decisions based on the long view. "We have to look ahead 50 years to make sure that it still makes sense."

That wasn't a problem in 1936, when the Hall inducted its first class of five ballplayers. At the time, only Babe Ruth had played more than a season or two with more than one club — six with Boston, followed by 15 with the Yankees and one with the Boston Braves. It's hard to imagine a Hall of Fame class like that ever again.

Other than the owners, few people would argue baseball was better off when ballplayers were bound to a team for their entire careers.

Still, if the idea is to determine where a ballplayer made an "indelible mark," then the correct logo for Clemens and the first generation of free agents in the Hall should be clear.

The only real question is how many dollar signs are necessary.

Torre: I know what I'm doing, Steinbrenner

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Yankees manager Joe Torre wants a pat on the back now and then from owner George Steinbrenner and believes his boss can sometimes be a distraction for the team.

"At times, I'd like [him to] just give me a little more credit that I know what I'm doing," Torre told Fox News Channel, according to a transcript of an interview broadcast Wednesday.

Torre also told Fox that he was not pleased with Steinbrenner's public criticism of shortstop Derek Jeter and the Yankees' coaches.

"Conversations happen all the time," the manager said. "Over the 7 1/2 years I've been here, they continue to happen, but it's never been as public as it has been this year. It started last year when we lost to Anaheim. He was very upset, and I was, too. And then he got on Jeter... he got on my coaches. The change is he went public with a lot of it, and it's gotten in the newspaper.

"George Steinbrenner wants to win. There's nothing wrong with that," Steinbrenner complained last

At times, I'd like [him to] just give me a little more credit that I know what I'm doing.

Joe Torre,
New York Yankees manager

would be going to the team's Class AAA farm club in Columbus, Ohio. The change was apparently ordered by Steinbrenner.

Contreras eventually went to Columbus, then was recalled by the Yankees, and now is on the team's 15-day disabled list.

Torre said he was bothered because of the public flaps with the owner.

"I still have to be me," he said. "The most important thing in what I do is to be there for my players. The one thing I haven't been able to do is keep this distraction out of the clubhouse. That's the one priority I've had when I took this club over was to make sure this ballclub can only think about winning baseball games and not have to deal with everything else."

University of Mississippi's Colonel Rebel, has been discontinued by the school's athletics director.

Ole Miss boots Colonel Rebel mascot

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OXFORD, Miss. — The Colonel Rebel mascot is out for this football season while the University of Mississippi searches for a new image.

Athletics Director Pete Boone said the "Southern plantation-looking" man with a big head, floppy hat and clothes and cane will be off the sidelines while Ole Miss considers what it will do about its mascot. The Colonel Rebel logo, however, is still an official trademark of the university, school officials said Wednesday.

In recent years, Mississippi has been steering its image away from the Old South by phasing out symbols that some say are ethnically divisive. Confederate battle flags, once pervasive at football games, have been banished, and "Dixie" has been dropped as the school's unofficial fight song. Boone said there are no plans to change the school's longtime nicknames, "Ole Miss" or "Rebels."

School officials have been toying with the idea of revamping Colonel Rebel for approximately eight years, Boone said.

"The thing that has always struck me about our mascot is that it was not an athletics mascot," he told the Oxford Eagle newspaper. "It was, as we've all said, an old man with a cane. It just didn't look athletic, it didn't represent anything athletic, and it seemed to be a different image than what we were trying to do from an athletics department standpoint."

The private Ole Miss Loyalty Foundation that supports athletics has spent $30,000 for the New York-based Phoenix Design Works to study Colonel Rebel and Ole Miss lettering and logos.

The university may ask for suggestions in a design contest that opens it up to students, alumni, and other supporters during the 2003-04 school year.

The study and search are under way, but school officials have said it's highly unlikely a replacement will be found before basketball season or next year. Officials said the school will not have a mascot until a suitable replacement is approved.

Morgan: All recruits who signed with Eustachy are staying resigned after the publication of photos that showed him partying with college students in Missouri following a game.

Morgan's staff has been completed with the hiring of Darryl Sharp as director of basketball operations. Sharp most recently was an assistant at Norfolk State and once worked under Denny Crum at Louisville.

Morgan's other assistants are

Bob Sundvold, a holdover from Eustachy's staff, Damon Archibald, who had been at Southern Cal, Fred Quartlebaum, who had worked at North Carolina, and former Iowa State star Jeff Grayer, who will be an undergraduate assistant.

Morgan's cell phone rang while he was introducing his assistants. "It might be a recruit," someone said. "It might be a recruit changing his mind," Morgan added, drawing a laugh.

Iowa State had been recruiting 6-8 Kris Humphries, who announced Monday he would play at Minnesota.

Morgan said all the recruits who signed while Eustachy was coach were still coming except for 6-6 Justin Holt of Tacoma, Wash., Community College.

Because he spent six weeks at Oregon State before transferring to Tacoma, Holt would have had to sit out a season if he came to Iowa State.

Morgan said he could not comment on whether any returning players were in trouble academically. He also said forward Jackson Vroman was working to get back in good standing with the team.

Vroman was suspended after being charged with marijuana possession.

"He's working very hard and very diligently to try to do everything he can to rectify his situation and get to where we want him," Morgan said.

Morgan's contract is almost ready

AMES (AP) — Wayne Morgan's four-year contract as Iowa State's basketball coach is just about ready for his signature.

Athletics Director Bruce Van De Velde said on Wednesday he was reviewing the agreement and expects it to be signed within the next couple of weeks.

Morgan will be paid $500,000 a year, with annual raises built in.

The contract contains incentives for accomplishments such as winning conference championships, making the NCAA Tournament, coaching honors, and academic achievement.

If Morgan were to max out on incentives, he would make around $750,000, Van De Velde said.

"It's a good contract," he said. "It's fair for the university and fair for Wayne."

Morgan's predecessor, Larry Eustachy, was paid $1.1 million. Eustachy received a $960,000 settlement when he resigned last month.

Van De Velde said Morgan's contract includes a clause that gives him a new contract if he wins 20 games or reaches the Sweet 16 of the NCAA Tournament.

"We never negotiate again," Van De Velde said.

"The next contract is spelled out already if he has success, so we don't go back and renegotiate. We just click into the next one."

Gibsen up for new challenges

and seeing what transpires."

Another local emcee, Orion Meyer of former UI Battle of the Bands champion Psychosomatic, also thinks there's a connection between hip-hop and sport.

"It comes down to overall gamesmanship," he said. "They're both about upping the game and staying positive." Meyer is also looking forward to seeing the progress of his fellow emcee in a new arena.

The job of an emcee is to focus an entire crowd into a single mind through words amped by a microphone.

A basketball coach performs a similar activity by focusing a group of people, often with coliseum-sized egos, into one team with a singular goal.

Gibsen's current Prime Time League task will be to gel incumbent Hawkeye post player Sean Sonderleiter with newcomer Ben Rand.

"I drafted a solid group of individuals," Gibsen said.

"My job is to get them to hustle and play team ball." Maybe he'll rhyme to the team; maybe he'll yell coaching lingo at an audience. Please, team, breathe deep and leave it all on the floor, or C'mon, crowd. You can do it!

Regardless of that mythical line dividing work from play and hobby from sport, D.N.A.'s mantra transcends just about every human endeavor:

"Do what your heart tells you, and if you love something, go for the gusto!"

Check Gibsen's progress at the Prime Time League Monday and Thursday nights in North Liberty. Dig his latest CD, The Whole Package, after the game, or check it out at cdbaby.com/DNAhiphop.

Basketball is always being played at the UI Field House, and hip-hop battles will be taking place at 3rd Street Live, Friday in Cedar Rapids.

when the windows opened, their biggest walkup sale of the season for only their eighth sellout.

Sosa heard only cheers the last time he was in town, connecting for the first historic homer at the new stadium.

The adulation was gone on Wednesday. Boos drowned out the cheers, and some of the 39,053 fans yelled "Cork" as he waited for pitches.

Pittsburgh 7, Montreal 3

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Montreal Expos can't wait to get home. For a change, the Pittsburgh Pirates played like they enjoyed being at home.

Aramis Ramirez, Kenny Lofton, and Reggie Sanders homered, and the Pirates finally reached the double-digit mark in home wins, beating the Expos in the first game of a double-header Wednesday night.

The Pirates bunched five singles in a span of six batters during a decisive three-run fourth inning against Livan Hernandez (6-5) to win their third in a row. Montreal matched its longest losing streak this season by losing its fifth straight.

Pittsburgh needed 31 games to do so, but finally became the last NL team to reach the 10-win mark in home victories. The Pirates are 10-21 at PNC Park. Only the Tigers, who went into Wednesday night's game against Cleveland with a 6-27 home mark, have fewer home victories in the majors.

Indians 4, Tigers 1

DETROIT (AP) — Jason Davis came within one out of his first career shutout and Ben Broussard's seventh-inning double broke a scoreless tie as the Cleveland Indians beat the Detroit Tigers on Wednesday night.

With one out in the seventh, Milton Bradley singled off Jeremy Bonderman, then stole second. Broussard followed with a double and took third when Alex Sanchez misplayed the ball.

Casey Blake followed with a single past the drawn-in infield to make it 2-0. Josh Bard's single put runners on the corners, and brought Chris Spurling out of the Tigers' bullpen.

Toronto 6, Baltimore 2

BALTIMORE (AP) — Roy Halladay allowed two runs over seven innings to win his 10th-straight start, and Mike Bordick hit a key two-run single against his former team as the Blue Jays beat the Orioles.

Halladay (10-2) gave up six hits, struck out five, and walked none. The right-hander is the first Toronto pitcher to win 10 starts in a row and the first Blue Jay to win 10-straight decisions since Roger Clemens had a 15-game run in 1998.

The last major-league pitcher to win 10-successive starts was Chuck Finley in 1997.

Halladay joins Seattle's Jamie Moyer and Los Angeles' Kevin Brown as the season's only 10-game winners.

Atlanta 6, Philadelphia 1

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Russ Ortiz pitched six shutout innings, and Robert Fick had three RBIs, leading the Braves over Kevin Millwood and the Phillies.

Gary Sheffield added a two-run homer for the Braves, who improved the NL's best record to 46-23.

Millwood (8-5) allowed four runs and eight hits in five innings.

Ortiz (8-4) allowed four hits, struck out three and walked three. Fick gave the Braves a 2-0 lead in the first on a two-run single. Millwood retired the first two batters, before Sheffield and Chipper Jones hit singles. Andruw Jones walked to load the bases, and Fick hit a single down the first-base line.

Fick had another two-out RBI single in the third to make it 3-0. After Javy Lopez walked, Vinny Castilla's RBI single put the Braves ahead 4-0.
