Locals not worried by lawsuits on file-sharing

BY SEUNG MIN KIM
THE DAILY IOWAN

UI senior Steve Wilson lives music. He plays it, he studies it, and, like millions of others in the country, he downloads it.

And despite the Recording Industry Association of America's attempts to crack down on users who share files over the Internet, many locals, such as Wilson and Kirk Walther, are shaking off the threat.

"What are they going to do, sue 80 million people?" said Walther, who owns the Record Collector, 125 E. Washington St. "It's mostly a scare tactic."

0.08 OWI limit begins today

The new OWI blood-alcohol limit goes into effect today, but some local officials say the new limit will not change behavior.

BY JOHAN BERGENAS
THE DAILY IOWAN

A law passed by the Iowa Legislature on April 23, and signed by Gov. Tom Vilsack, changing the acceptable OWI blood-alcohol concentration from 0.10 to 0.08 will go into effect today.

"We need to get drunken drivers off the road," said Rep. Mary Mascher, D-Iowa City, adding that by passing the law, the state is demonstrating that it will not tolerate people driving while drunk.

Although supported by the majority of the Legislature, several authorities on drunk driving are not convinced that the law will be effective.

The new blood-alcohol limit will not change people's drinking-and-driving behavior, said local attorney Dennis Bjorklund, who specializes in drunk-driving defense.

"People hate to wait around for cabs, and the public transportation does not run at night," he said, adding that drinkers will continue to drive.

He said he believes that the law is not primarily a public-safety issue but a way for the state to get federal funding. By lowering the limit, the state will not lose $45 million in federal road funds.

"It's a money game," Bjorklund said, adding that legislators masked the true purpose behind public safety.

Rep. Dan Boddicker, R-Tipton, agreed with Bjorklund, saying, "If it was not for the federal money, that bill would never have come to a vote."

He voted against the law in the House of Representatives on Feb. 6 because he thought the 0.10 percent limit is an adequate standard and that society is used to it, he said.

"I don't think it will have the impact as people say," Boddicker said, adding that people who cause harm by drinking and driving are way over the 0.10 limit. However, law-abiding citizens will follow the law and be more cautious, he said.

Boddicker also cited the lower limit's effect on restaurants and bars. "Restaurants and bars will see reduction in the number of people who drink," he said.

Mascher said that loss of profit by restaurants and bars should not be a factor in the discussion.

"It's more important that people are safe," she said, adding that bars and

Iowa laws that will affect both survivors of sexual assault and its perpetrators go into effect today, after having been passed by the state Legislature during this year's session.

The new legislation mandates that the Iowa Law Enforcement Academy adopt a sexual-assault curriculum in training new officers. The legislation also involves reforms in sentencing those convicted of sexual assault, mandatory child-abuse reporting, and procedural law in sexual-offense cases. Among other provisions, the new laws

In the wake of the June 26 U.S. Supreme Court ruling striking down the Texas sodomy law, local conservatives and gay-rights advocates alike are wondering if the decision will open the door to legalizing same-sex marriage.

As of 1960, all 50 states had anti-sodomy laws. Since then, 37 states have repealed those statutes; Iowa got rid of its in 1978. But as a result of the court's Lawrence v. Texas decision, the anti-sodomy laws in the remaining 13 states are now rendered void.

Henther Shank, a human-rights coordinator for Iowa City, said she believes the Supreme Court made the right decision, adding, "What people do in the privacy of their own bedrooms should be of no concern of the government."

In response to Justice Antonin Scalia's remarks that the ruling invites laws allowing gay marriage, she said, "I don't think that just because justices approved of the privacy rights of gays that one can make such a speculative connection."

IOWA CITY — The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers approved a plan Monday to build the nation's first summer camp for Muslims — if organizers agree to scale back their proposal.

Col. William J. Bayles, the Corps' district engineer in Rock Island, Ill., issued a report saying plans by the Muslim Youth Camps of America to build its camp along the wooded shores of the Coralville Reservoir would have no significant effect.

JERUSALEM — Israel agreed to return the West Bank town of Bethlehem to Palestinian control after its pullback Monday from the Gaza Strip, crucial steps that advance the U.S.-backed road map to Palestinian statehood and raise hopes that 33 months of violence may be nearing an end.

The two sides' prime ministers also set a meeting to plan their next moves, as bulldozers tore down Israeli checkpoints and traffic flowed freely in Gaza for the first time in months. Palestinian police took control of the Gaza town of Beit Hanoun on the heels of the departing Israeli troops.

U.S. gift to aid UI's digital bridges

BY ANNIE SHUPPY
THE DAILY IOWAN

When a UI adjunct instructor studied in Nigeria on a Fulbright Scholarship five years ago, he noticed an unfulfilled need for access to technological resources and returned with a vision that became the WiderNet Project.

Cliff Missen, the co-director of the project, accepted a $236,000 grant Monday from Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa, to help African universities expand and update their off-line digital libraries and aid in the delivery of digital educational materials using satellite-broadcast technology.

"The entire country of Nigeria has as much bandwidth as my mechanic," Missen said, who stayed at the University of Jos in 1998 and runs the project with Mike McNulty, a UI professor emeritus of geography. "The big dream for WiderNet is building a digital bridge."

The grant, donated by the U.S. Agency for International Development's Leland Initiative, will be used over two years to fund several of the project's components, which include technology training and providing faculty and students with computers, Internet, and e-mail.

In a brief speech, Leach alluded to great philanthropists, such as James Smithson and Andrew Carnegie, but noted that Carnegie's substantial gift to libraries went to buildings, not books.

"It might be argued, that in relation to dollars, more knowledge will be transmitted through this project than through Carnegie's gift," Leach said.

The veteran lawmaker praised the project's efforts to gather knowledge that will benefit everyone. He also lauded the potential of those involved with the project not merely to transmit information but also to learn from it.

"Not only will new knowledge be created, but there will also be a capacity for us to listen," he said. "It's very symbolic that this is coming to the heartland of America."

Missen said satellite connections are expensive for African universities, and administrators there must make "tough choices," such as limiting who can use bandwidth and how much.

One solution to the problem of extremely sluggish Internet speeds is replacing bandwidth with storewidth. At the University of Jos, putting data on a local area network was a "remarkable success," Missen said. A central server in Iowa copies its hard drive to be sent to anyone in the world who chooses to join the project. Then, they would use a satellite to weekly broadcast the changes.

WiderNet staff members are collecting copyright-free materials from the Web for the eGranary digital library and will secure permission from publishers to distribute the materials in Africa. The staff will also train African library personnel to digitize their materials so that African research can be shared more easily with other world educational institutions.

The WiderNet project is part of the UI International Programs and is funded by the university, the MacArthur Foundation, the U.S. Department of State, U.S. AID, and the Nigerian National Universities Commission. Additional funding for some participants has been provided by the Carnegie Corp.

Jail issue looms as officials ponder budget

BY SARA STRAIN
THE DAILY IOWAN

Johnson County elected officials met Monday to begin strategic planning for the county.

The planning for fiscal 2005 aims to ease the budget-allocation process for the county. Supervisor Terrence Neuzil said county officials have been getting more serious about the plans in the last month to prepare for the opening of budget season, in October.

The officials outlined six areas of importance: space needs, financial planning, prioritizing services, communication with staff and the public, reorganization of county government, and county jail space and services. The jail, however, dominated Monday's discussion among the eight officials.

"It's the big gorilla in the background," County Treasurer Tom Kriz said.

Officials pointed out that high jail costs affect the county's decisions on programs and policies. Specifically, Kriz warned that departments looking to make big purchases may be told to wait because of the costs associated with the jail.

While most of the officials agreed that transporting prisoners to other counties' facilities has solved the problem of overcrowding in the jail for the time being, the situation will continue to be a financial burden for the county.

"We're status quo, and it's costing us," Supervisor Mike Lehman said.

Currently, the county spends approximately $400,000 to transport prisoners to other county jails to alleviate overcrowding. This is an alternative to building a new, larger facility or to creating programs as alternatives to jail time for convicted persons. Transporting prisoners is paid for through the General Basic Fund, which amounts to approximately $24 million and funds most county programs.

"The general fund is at its cap," Neuzil said, summing up the problem.

If the county were to build a jail alternative, he said, it would be allowed to obtain the funding from the supplemental fund, which currently holds $2 million. This would allow the county to spend money from the General Basic Fund on other programs and services, he added.

The next step in the strategic plan is for Board of Supervisors executive assistant Mike Sullivan to discuss the areas of importance with budget coordinator Jeff Horne. County officials will meet again July 29.

Contractor sues ex-College St. Club owner, attorney

An area contractor filed a lawsuit Monday against Dave Moore and Joseph T. Moreland, claiming that Moore owes him money and that Moreland and Moore abused the legal process.

According to court documents, Trevor Bertelli claims that between April 2000 and April 2002 he sold and delivered various goods and materials and rendered services to Moore on an open account. At the time, Moore was involved in College Street Billiards Club & Deli, 114 E. College St.

Bertelli claims that Moore owes him $34,140; in the civil suit filed in the 6th District Court in Johnson County on June 27, he demands restitution of the debt, plus interest and cost of the lawsuit.

Bertelli is also suing Moore and Moreland, an Iowa City attorney, on grounds of legal abuse, claiming the defendants jointly conspired to "falsely deny the valid claim of the plaintiff for the improper purpose of delay and to deceive the plaintiff and court into denial of the plaintiff's valid claim ..."

Additionally, Bertelli is suing Moore and Moreland for statute violation, conspiracy, and exemplary damage and rule of procedure.

Bertelli alleges in the petition that he has suffered anxiety, worry, stress, and distress regarding the reputation of his business in addition to fear of failure and bankruptcy.

According to court documents, Moore has made partial payments of $10,000.

Bertelli further claims that Moore and Moreland conspired to delay and avoid payment by "fabricating a defense to the plaintiff's claim and falsely asserting ... that the partial payment of $10,000 on the account was agreed in full satisfaction ..."

POLICE LOG

Todd Hulfish, 35, address unknown, was charged Monday with second-degree burglary and second-degree theft. After Hulfish was refused entrance to 1100 Arthur St. by the owner, he allegedly broke in through a window and used the house's shower, records show. Police officers allegedly found a shopping cart from the Iowa City Walgreen Drug Store at the scene, records show. The value of the cart is unknown.

Wallace Gregg Taylor, 45, Coralville, was charged Monday with eight counts of forgery and second-degree theft. According to court records, at the beginning of June, Taylor allegedly entered his brother's residence and removed eight Red Carpet Commercial Care checks. Court records show he is accused of writing them for cash or merchandise at Hills Bank and Trust Co., US Bank, Wal-Mart, and the Depot totaling $1,476.44. According to records, Taylor allegedly used the money and merchandise for controlled substances. Taylor, who allegedly admitted to the actions after his Miranda rights were read, was released on his own recognizance; he is restricted from leaving Iowa while charges are pending.

Cesar Antonio Galarza, 24, California, was charged June 29 with the transportation of an uncased firearm and possession of marijuana and methamphetamine. According to court records, Galarza was pulled over for allegedly driving 105 mph in a 65 mph speed zone. Upon being stopped, he allegedly admitted to having an unloaded .38-caliber pistol wrapped in a towel under the driver's seat. Authorities also allegedly found methamphetamines, marijuana, and ammunition for the pistol in the black GMC pickup. Galarza is being held at the Johnson County jail on $10,000 bail.

Louise Ann Calkins, 31, Lone Tree, was charged June 27 with forgery stemming from alleged incidents between Nov. 20 and Nov. 26, 2002. Calkins is accused of using a credit card she was not authorized to use. According to court records, Calkins allegedly used the stolen credit card at Hy-Vee, Consumer Cooperative, and Iowa Telecom for food, services, and food gift cards. Calkins, who allegedly tried to use the cards at other places but was refused, was released on her own recognizance.

Christa Lea Johnson, 29, Coralville, was charged June 29 with assault causing injury. Coralville police officers were called to 1401 Oak Wood because of a fight. According to court records, a man at that address had a cut on the right side of his face and complained of pain. Both Johnson and the man allegedly were "very intoxicated," records show. Johnson, who was released on her own recognizance, allegedly admitted to hitting the man.

Christian program defies state

BY KATE BRASER
THE DAILY IOWAN

Cornerstone Christian School of Coralville is continuing to operate its summer Vacation Bible School despite a recent state Department of Human Services denial of its application for a childcare license.

The Rev. Royce Phillips, the pastor of the Tabernacle Baptist Church — which operates the school, 2050 12th Ave. — said that although he has heard rumors that Human Services has turned the case of the facility's refusal to close over to Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White, church officials have not been notified of such action.

White said his office has been in touch with the state attorney general and Human Services, but he could not speculate on what the next step would be.

On May 21, a Human Services consultant recommended denying approval for Cornerstone's childcare license, said Roger Munns, a Human Services spokesman. The school appealed the decision and continued to operate even though the denial forbids the church to operate the summer program during the appeal.

Cornerstone was given until June 23 to halt operations. When Human Services received word that the summer program was still open, it sent two consultants to investigate the situation. Munns said that on June 25, both consultants concluded the facility was a childcare simply operating under a different name — summer Vacation Bible School — and hence was still in violation of Human Services regulations.

"Cornerstone Christian has filed an appeal in the name of freedom of religion," Munns said. "The issue here is not religion but the safety of children. Anytime you care for other people's children for money, you are expected to comply with common-sense rules."

Some examples of the rules include keeping medicine out of the reach of children, having a list of emergency contacts, and adopting a medical-distribution plan, he said. Cornerstone had failed to comply with such rules over the course of several regular visits conducted since September 2002, he said.

The issue here is not religion but the safety of children. Anytime you care for other people's children for money, you are expected to comply with common-sense rules.

— Roger Munns, a Human Services spokesman.

Phillips said he and church officials met with attorneys in Des Moines in March, at which time they reluctantly applied for approval of their childcare facilities. Phillips said Section 237 of the Iowa Code clearly shows that Cornerstone's before- and after-school program is exempt from being recognized as a childcare facility.

"This is a clear example of a state bureaucracy attacking a church," he said, adding that Human Services has no foundation for its claims that the school is running a childcare facility. "As broadly as Human Services is interpreting the law, I am afraid of how far it will go; I am concerned it will shut down the school as well. They are trying to shut down a daycare here, but we do not have a daycare."

Cornerstone's summer program has 28 children enrolled at a price of $17 each per day. Parents were notified June 4 and 6 of the school's impending closing. Phillips said many parents are concerned and have pulled their children out of the program since the beginning of summer.

"Human Services's intimidation tactics are scaring these families to death," he said. "They are telling parents they will close the school and take their kids and put them in foster care."

Munns responded to claims against Human Services staff by iterating that safety, not religion, is the name of the game, and that many churches across the state are complying with the Human Services regulations.

"It is not true that children will be placed in foster care," he said. "That is simply an attempt by people running the school to change the subject."

Putting the pot in potato chips

DES MOINES (AP) — A woman found more than chips inside a bag of potato chips she bought at a convenience store.

Lois Campbell, 42, of Des Moines said that when she opened a small bag of Uncle Ray's garlic-flavored chips on June 28, she found another bag inside containing what she and police thought was marijuana.

"We were eating a few of the chips, and I was about to give some to a 3-year-old child," she said.

"I thought it was a little bag of seasoning inside. When I saw what it was, I called the police."

A police report says the contents of the heat-sealed bag smelled like marijuana.

The chips and the leafy substance were seized as evidence.

Mandi Lockridge, the manager of the Git-N-Go store where the chips were bought, said the rest of the bags of Uncle Ray's chips have been taken off the store's shelves.

The chips were packaged in Detroit, she said.

"To find out what was in there, they will have trace it back to Detroit," she said.

Republican leaders ready to sue Vilsack

BY MIKE GLOVER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES — A panel of legislative leaders took a first step toward suing Gov. Tom Vilsack on Monday over his selective vetoes in a huge economic-stimulus bill approved in special session.

The Legislative Council voted, 14-9, along partisan lines to authorize hiring a law firm to advise lawmakers. The council rejected a bid by Democrats to force competitive bidding and to set a $200,000 cap on what lawmakers would spend.

"You don't tie your hands first if you want to win," said House Speaker Chris Rants, R-Sioux City. Rants and Senate Majority Leader Stewart Iverson, R-Dows, would be authorized to hire the law firm under the measure approved Monday.

House Democratic Leader Dick Myers, D-Coralville, said it's foolish to waste money on a lawsuit when the state is facing deep budget cuts, yet top lawmakers won't even set a cap on what they'll pay in legal fees.

"I think it's silly," he said. "We're laying off people, we can't offer services that are needed, but here we have an open checkbook."

The huge and complex bill approved during the special session included a $503 million economic-development fund, income-tax cuts, a pilot project to test a new system of taxing property, and regulatory changes.

Vilsack used his item veto to strike income-tax cuts and some of the regulatory changes that would have made it more difficult for injured workers collect compensation and for those harmed by defective products to collect in court.

Lawmakers contend that the governor can use a line-item veto only on spending measures and must accept or reject outright bills that set policy and do not appropriate money. Vilsack exceeded his authority, they argue.

The governor asserts that his authority is broad, including measures that may affect his handling of the budget. The tax cut, for example, could hinder his ability to carry out other budgetary duties, such as education.

Democrats say a lawsuit is little more than Republicans seeking to impose their will on a governor they couldn't defeat in the last election, but Republicans insist it is aimed at defining the power of the various branches of government.

"This is a matter of separation of power," said House Majority Leader Chuck Gipp, R-Decora. "It's not about Democrats and Republicans."

Democrats also said they were worried about cronyism. They pointed to a successful lawsuit in the late 1980s against Gov. Terry Branstad, who had vetoed a pay raise bargained by state workers. The state workers union sued and won, arguing that the state could renege on a contract.

Doug Gross, a former Branstad aide, received nearly $500,000 in legal fees to defend Branstad but lost a 9-0 Supreme Court decision.

"Are we going to spend another half-million dollars to lose nine to zip?" asked Senate Minority Leader Mike Gronstal, D-Council Bluffs.

Judge keeps terrorism charge in case

BY MATTHEW BARAKAT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANASSAS, Va. — A judge refused to dismiss one of the two capital murder charges Monday against sniper suspect John Allen Muhammad, rejecting claims that prosecutors are overreaching in trying to apply Virginia's new terrorism law to the crime spree.

Muhammad

The ruling from Circuit Judge LeRoy Millette Jr. is the first ever on Virginia's untested terrorism law, which was passed after the 9/11 attacks with the intention of punishing "evil masterminds" of terrorist attacks, such as Osama bin Laden.

Defense lawyer Peter Greenspun argued that prosecutors were twisting a law designed for the likes of bin Laden. He said the law is written so vaguely that any crime that produces fear in a community — bank robberies or serial rapes, for example — could conceivably be prosecuted as terrorism.

"The prosecution is trying to put a square peg into a round hole. It's trying to fit what can best be described as a crime spree, as serious as it was, into a terrorism statute," Greenspun said.

But Millette said Muhammad can be charged under the terrorism law for his role in the string of sniper shootings that terrorized the Washington area last fall.

"I think the statute is in fact constitutional," he said.

Prosecutor Richard Conway argued that the "court must presume that a legislative act is constitutional" unless it finds severe problems with the law.

Muhammad faces the death penalty under two statutes in the shootings. One is an anti-terrorism law passed after Sept. 11, 2001, that explicitly allows for a death sentence even if the defendant never fired a weapon. The other allows for the death penalty in multiple murders.

In another development, Muhammad's lawyers at least temporarily dropped a request to allow a judge to decide the case. Greenspun said after the hearing that a retooled motion to dismiss would be refiled in a few days, but he declined to say whether the motion would actually seek a bench trial.

Guest Opinion Promote diversity funding

The Daily Iowan editorial position on June 27 was disappointing in its apparent misunderstanding of the UI's commitment to equality of educational opportunity for minority students. Your basic point seemed to be that there are enough minority students on campus because the percentage exceeds the proportion in the state.

In the early 1980s, the state Board of Regents established the goal of 9 percent minority enrollment in the regents' universities. In the past, the UI achieved that goal, but in recent years, it has lost momentum and slipped downward. While this fact alone underscores the need to continue vigorous efforts to advance the concept of equality of education for all, there is a more important reason for students of this generation to understand the history of racial exclusion in higher education.

Historically, blacks and other minorities have suffered disproportionately during good economic times and even more during downturns in the economy. In 1967, black students at the UI, and around the country, began to demand that universities increase the numbers of black students on campuses and to make the curriculum more relevant for them.

In April 1968, after the assassination of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., the UI established a program to increase educational opportunities for students from educationally and economically disadvantaged backgrounds and to increase minority populations of first year, transfer, graduate, and professional students on campus. I was recruited to initiate the recruitment and educational-support programs. The university used this approach because it was then, and regrettably is still the case, that many students from educationally and economically disadvantaged backgrounds have the potential to achieve excellence but not necessarily the previous exposure to adequate educational opportunity.

Then-President Sandy Boyd and each subsequent president have sought to advance the cause of equal opportunity in good times as well as during lean years, and there have been many lean periods during the past 35 years. But the university has maintained a commitment to always do the best we can with what we have.

Diversity results from the development of equality of opportunity in the university. The UI is a national resource. Its excellence is predicated on the relevance of our programs in state, national, and international contexts. If we assume there is enough diversity because the percentage of minorities equals the state's population of minorities, then should the number of minority students in athletics programs reflect the same logic? After all, it costs more to recruit and support all nonresident students.

The greatest barrier to higher education for minority students is financial aid. The numbers of minority high-school graduates has increased significantly in the past three decades, but the proportion of college-going minorities has not kept pace. Historically, blacks and other minorities have always made education of the next generation a top priority. The opportunity to enhance life skills has not been forthcoming. Contrary to your editorial position that no more should be spent on recruiting and supporting minority students, there is a social and economic imperative to advance equality of opportunity.

Excellence through diversity in higher education is enriched through the investment in equality of educational opportunity for educationally and economically disadvantaged students and the increase of minority populations. Maintaining our commitment to this principle is a strategic goal of the university. I encourage us all to support the quest for excellence through diversity.

Court's ruling on gay sex is a civil-rights landmark

The Supreme Court's decision to strike down a Texas anti-sodomy law is not just a decision backing privacy rights for all American adults — it also establishes a precedent for gay rights. The 6-3 decision makes a clear statement that what consenting adults do in the privacy of their homes cannot be legislated. Therefore, sodomy, which can be loosely defined as any form of non-conventional sex, is a private matter and cannot be outlawed.

"The promise of the Constitution is that there is a realm of private life government may not enter," said Justice Anthony Kennedy in his written opinion when the decision was delivered June 26.

Also, beyond the decision's fundamental implication — upholding every American's privacy, gay and straight — Justice Sandra Day O'Connor recognized that anti-sodomy laws allowed for discrimination against homosexuals. She said such laws went against the constitutional guarantee of equal treatment under the law.

Her interpretation on the ruling preserved civil rights for homosexuals. It also recognized that laws and policies can and have been used to discriminate against people based on their sexual preference. It therefore not only recognized homosexual civil rights but also the historical denial thereof — making a landmark decision in the fight for gay rights.

While this ruling offers only basic privacy protection for homosexual sex, some see it as going too far toward granting homosexuals civil rights. Justice Antonin Scalia wrote in his dissenting statement that the court's decision was the product of a "law-profession culture that has signed onto the so-called homosexual agenda..." That agenda, he said, was to eliminate the moral shame of homosexuality. No one should feel shame for her or his sexual preference. Nor should engaging in consensual sexual behavior at home make someone an outlaw. That Scalia would stand behind such invasive laws to prevent homosexuals from privately, legally, and consensually engaging in intercourse shows immorality and intolerance.

He goes on to say the court failed in its duty to ensure "democratic rules of engagement are observed." However, if the court had ruled based on one group's specific set of ideals and morals, that would be the opposite of democracy — it would be fascism.

Scalia also said the decision made it clear "that the court has taken sides in the culture war." We live in a diverse society with many nationalities and cultures. To declare that we are in the midst of a "culture war" belittles what makes this country great — unity despite differences.

The Supreme Court's ruling does not condone homosexual acts, as Scalia implies; it merely prevents those in authority from outlawing them, which is still a long ways away from guaranteeing homosexuals the same rights and protections we should all enjoy.

Reality virtually bites & other tales from the pods

Somedays, you just gotta stop and wonder what is up with this group of people who call themselves Americans. They all live in pods or something? Hooked up to some kind of virtual-reality program?

Nah. Couldn't be. That notion wouldn't even fly in a movie.

But still. Consider the Iraq and weapons-of-mass-destruction brouhaha. You must remember this; it's been all over the news. Bush Inc. used Iraq's alleged possession of WMD as its whipping boy in the drive to invasion. Iraq had tons and tons and tons of the stuff. Forty-five minutes to launch time. Serious threat.

Turns out that there was nothing of the sort. Oh, I'm sure that eventually the United States will find some WMD somewhere in Iraq; it can always resort to the LAPD detective method of "finding" evidence by seeding the crime scene.

But it turns out, actually, that there are some serious questions about the veracity of the statements U.S. and British leaders made on the subject in the rush to war. They may not have been outright lying (though that remains a possibility). But, as the testimony of two British Cabinet ministers who resigned to protest the war and the statements of American intelligence analysts demonstrate,

U.S. and British leaders were certainly hyping and cooking the intelligence data.

We know this. It's been all over the news for the last six weeks or so.

So how, exactly, can (according a list of national surveys that Mother Jones has on its Web site) 34 percent of Americans believe that U.S. forces have already found weapons of mass destruction in Iraq?

Or, for that matter, how can 22 percent of Americans think that Iraq actually used WMD in the war?

They live in pods? Hooked up to a virtual-reality construct? Programmed no doubt by Fox?

Somedays, you just gotta stop and wonder. Especially on those days that you run into a list like that of Mother Jones.

There's lots more on the list to shock and awe you. For instance, 37 percent of Americans believe that aliens have contacted the U.S. government. Why else would we have the "X Files," I guess.

Twenty-eight percent think that the government should have the right to control what the media may or may not report — a damn scary thought, because it implies that more than a quarter of Americans wouldn't be all that averse to living with the KGB. But then, 28 percent also believe you can communicate with the dead.

So what we have here is a sizable chunk of the populace who are not-so-closeted Stalinists who believe they can talk to Elvis.

Pods?

How else to explain that 34 percent of Americans believe that rock 'n' roll has had a sinful effect on American culture and values?

Hmmm. Maybe they don't want to talk to Elvis, after all. Maybe it's Genghis Khan. I have to admit, that one about rock 'n' roll really puzzles me. I mean, rock music was a favorite whipping boy 40 and 50 years ago for a certain segment of the population, but didn't they all die? Or at least trundle off to the senility machine that is the nursing-home industry?

Apparently not. That 34 percent, incidentally, fits in well with the 34 percent of Americans who don't know the basic facts about Watergate — which dovetails nicely with that 28 percent who think the government ought to ride herd on the news media.

The bright among you have no doubt already noticed that all these percentages rather neatly coincide with the percentage of Americans who describe themselves in national polls as being conservative.

Just a coincidence, I'm sure. And then there are the 23 percent who believe that the 9/11 attacks were predicted by the Book of Revelation. OK. That fits in rather well with the 22 percent of Americans who get all their news from radio talk shows.

And then there's my absolute favorite from the Mother Jones list: 52 percent of Americans are convinced that the earliest human beings lived at the same time as the dinosaurs.

Right. I guess that explains why so many Americans believe they can communicate with Fred Flintstone.

How can so many Americans be so many bristles short of a broom? Pods? Fox News?

New Tomb Raider game definitely no angel

BY WILLIAM SMITH
THE DAILY IOWAN

The most famous heroine in the history of video games, Lara Croft, has finally made her return.

Tomb Raider: The Angel of Darkness was released last week for the PlayStation 2, marking the debut of the Tomb Raider series for that system.

The series got its start on the first PlayStation when Tomb Raider was released in 1996. The game put players in the role of Croft, an archeologist who hunts for treasures in ancient tombs, and the series became immensely popular, spawning countless sequels and two major motion pictures.

Unfortunately, The Angel of Darkness doesn't display the quality of the first title, which revolutionized the gaming world seven years ago.

In her latest adventure, Croft is accused of murdering her former mentor, and much of the early game is spent trying to clear her name. The plot, although a bit clichéd, is skillfully handled.

The story eventually reveals connections with the occult, giving this title a far darker feel than the previous games. Players travel to a variety of locations and get the chance to control a new character, Kurtis Trent.

The stylish presentation of the plot is further complemented by the incredible music, which was performed by the London Symphony Orchestra.

The story can be a big motivation to play The Angel of Darkness, but the actual game behind the slick presentation is horrendous.

The controls are extremely sluggish, and players will often "die" because of the poor controls than because of any mistakes they make. The camera is never at the right angle, so part of mastering the controls is learning to manually adjust the camera. Even when the controls are mastered, Croft is still frustrating to control; she feels about as nimble as an 8-month-old learning to walk.

The graphics are merely average, and it is surprising that such a high-profile game looks so bland. The frame rate will drop off drastically at times, making the game look like it's running in slow motion. While Croft is animated extremely well, at times with subtle complexity, overall, the graphics are far surpassed by such 2-year-old games as Metal Gear Solid 2.

The game is not all bad, however, and there are times when it almost breaks free of its negative qualities. Croft has a host of new moves that are fun to perform, such as shimmying up gutters and kicking down doors.

Although the game starts out with a poor level of design, some of the later levels are well-designed and highly reminiscent of the early Tomb Raider games.

There is a good game buried beneath the poor controls and average graphics, but no gamer should have to endure this kind of frustration before he or she starts having fun.

Despite the good intentions of the programmers and the interesting story line, this game is just not fun to play. Most gamers will throw down the controller after half an hour and never play it again, and those who do persevere may develop a brain hemorrhage from frustration.

With so many amazing games available for the PlayStation 2 that offer fun from start to finish, this latest Tomb Raider game is just not worth the pain.

Comic no longer quite so Green

BY LYNN ELBER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BURBANK, Calif. — Tom Green walks out on stage to greet the audience for his new MTV talk show, pulling gamely at the dress shirt spilling out of his pinstriped trousers.

The comedian, known for his crass antics on television and in movies, is making more than a style point with the designer suit. He's all dressed up with somewhere to go: in a different career direction.

Shock value is out, and bonding with guests and his audience is in, Green said on June 27 after wrapping his first week of "The New Tom Green Show" (airing 11 p.m. CDT on MTV).

"It's not comfortable to watch someone come out and [play with] a dead moose for an hour a night. As much as I'd enjoy watching that," he said, drily, "not everybody else in the world would."

Deliberately, much of "The New Tom Green Show" is traditional. In the style of Johnny Carson, Green encouraged a monkey to scramble over him as he conducted an interview with skateboarding champion Tony Hawk. Even the 1960s-style set evokes "The Tonight Show."

"What we're trying to do, and Tom Green poses on the set of "The New Tom Green Show" in this undated publicity photo. The comedian, known for his crass antics on TV and in movies, heads in a new career direction in the new show.

hoping to accomplish once we get in the right groove, is to make it feel real casual and letting people get to know the characters on the show and feel they're in a little world," Green said. "I want to be as honest as I can be, and I want people to feel they're seeing something real when they tune in."

Traffic flows freely in the Gaza Strip

ISRAEL

The developments followed declarations of a temporary halt to attacks by three main Palestinian groups, but there were still trouble spots.

The first full day of the truce was marred by a Palestinian shooting that killed a Bulgarian construction worker on an Israeli road project near the West Bank town of Yabed. Renegade members of the Al-Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades, loosely linked to Yasser Arafat's Fatah movement, claimed responsibility.

Palestinian Information Minister Nabil Amr called the killing "an individual attack that should not affect the truce declaration" and said "the Palestinian government will do its best to prevent such attacks" in the future.

Three hours later, Palestinians opened fire on workers building a security fence near the West Bank town of Qalqilya, the military said. Soldiers returned fire, but no one was hurt.

Despite the violence, Israeli and Palestinian officials remained upbeat about prospects for further advances under the road map peace plan launched by President Bush at a June 4 Mideast summit. The plan leads through three stages to a Palestinian state in 2005.

Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon declined to criticize his Palestinian counterpart, Mahmud Abbas, after the shootings, noting that security responsibility was handed over to the Palestinian Authority in the northern Gaza town of Beit Hanoun only on Monday morning.

"Even if the Palestinians were the fastest in the world, and the most determined, you can't expect them to destroy terrorism in a moment," he told members of his Likud parliamentary caucus. In the past, Sharon has made strident demands on the Palestinians to crack down immediately on militants.

Sharon planned to meet with Abbas in Jerusalem today to discuss the way forward.

Security measures to be taken by both sides were expected to figure prominently in the talks, along with Palestinian demands for the release of political prisoners and further Israeli withdrawals from territory reoccupied since the start of fighting in September 2000.

In a statement Monday, Abbas said the success of the peace plan "depends on carrying out the commitments of both sides." He called on the Israelis to implement their part of the plan.

Israel agreed to withdraw from Bethlehem on Wednesday, Palestinian security sources said. Israeli military sources, speaking on the condition of anonymity, would confirm only that the handover was to take place toward the end of the week.

Rights backers laud decision

GAY RIGHTS

Partners Sara and Renee Baird of Iowa City have been together for seven years and would like to get married. Although they had a commitment ceremony in May 1998 in which they exchanged vows, they would like to establish themselves as a legally united couple.

"I'm thankful for living in Iowa City because it is very open-minded, and it doesn't look down upon us," said Renee Baird.

Sara Baird said she is excited about the recent Supreme Court decision because she thinks it brings all gay and lesbian couples one step closer in a long fight toward legalizing same-sex marriage.

However, Pastor Jong Lee of All Nations Baptist Church, 1715 Mormon Trek Blvd., said he strongly disagrees with the Supreme Court because the ruling "flagrantly violates Christian values and ethics."

"If the government allows homosexuals and sodomy on the grounds of privacy and individual law, then it will prevent the reproduction of mankind," he said, adding that God's ordained law says marriage should take place between males and females for the purpose of procreation.

"Before it's a matter of human rights, it should be a matter of God's law of creation," he said, adding that diseases such as AIDS are a direct result of homosexual activity. "I'm afraid that the decision will incur God's wrath eventually."

Fred Phelps, a pastor of Westboro Baptist Church in Topeka, Kan., and a staunch anti-homosexual activist, has picketed the gay community at hundreds of events nationwide — including Iowa City Riverside Theatre's production of The Laramie Project in April.

Phelps did not return phone calls Monday for comment, but according to his Web site, "Sodomy is an abominable sin, worthy of death."

He quotes Leviticus 18:22, which says, "Thou shall not lie with mankind, as with womankind: It is abomination."

Lawrence v. Texas is not the only homosexual-rights case to go to court recently. On June 10, Canada's top court ruled to amend its federal law in order to recognize homosexual marriage. Also, the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court will issue its decision within the next few weeks on whether same-sex marriages will be legally recognized in Massachusetts.

Locals shrug off file-sharing threats

MUSIC SHARING

The recording industry announced last week that it will start to prepare lawsuits for copyright infringement against individuals who distribute a substantial amount of files through file-sharing programs.

If the industry succeeds in the lawsuits, which could occur as soon as mid-August, it can collect damages from $750 to $150,000 per file under U.S. copyright laws.

In April, the recording industry successfully sued four college students at Princeton University, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, and Michigan Technological University who ran file-sharing programs on their school servers. The students paid up to $17,000 each in settlements.

Although Wilson said his file-sharing tendencies have waned in the past two years, he doesn't deny the advantages of file-sharing programs such as KaZaA and Morpheus.

"I support file-sharing," he said, adding that he primarily used file-sharing programs to explore different artists and genres. "It can expose people to different music, and if they find something they like, they'll buy the artist's CD or a related CD."

But while officials on the national level are pursuing legal action, UI officials have chosen to educate students about copyright-infringement laws and the legalities of file-sharing.

Jane Drews, the security officer for the university's Information and Technology Services, said that while file-sharing is generally not a big problem at the university, she understands that it is a problem that can lead to serious consequences.

"It's too easy to share files, and I'm not sure if the lawsuits will be effective deterrents because there are thousands, if not millions, of users," she said. "We attempt to educate students on the legal aspects of file-sharing."

Last semester, the ITS paired up with the UI Student Government to educate students about copyright laws and bandwidth through posters and fliers. This fall, Residence Services plans to expand that campaign.

Although final plans for the effort are still tentative, David Coleman, the assistant director of Residence Services, plans to use bulletin boards and user-friendly brochures throughout campus to inform students.

"College students have been sued throughout the country," he said. "We don't want it to happen here."

But regardless of national and local efforts to deter file-sharing, there may always be people who prefer to dodge the law to get the perfect mix of music on a blank CD.

"Every time another new law or something comes up, something else comes up so there's always a way to get around it," said UI senior Randy Howard, who has been using file-sharing programs for four years. "I believe [the lawsuits] please call."

tenders should be more pro-active in helping to curb drunk driving.

Mike Porter, the owner of the Summit, 10 S. Clinton St., and One-Eyed Jakes, 18-20 S. Clinton St., said the new law will not affect his businesses' revenue because most of his clients are students living in Iowa City. However, he said, there might be a loss of social drinkers who visit his establishments in the afternoons.

"The 0.08 law does absolutely nothing for public safety," he said, agreeing with Boddicker that people over the 0.10 limit cause problems.

Iowa City police Sgt. Brian Krei said he believes that OWI charges will increase because of the lower blood-alcohol level, but he added that the number will eventually decrease as people start to monitor how much they drink.

The police will not specifically look for drunken drivers, but when they make traffic stops, they will enforce the new law, he said. He foresees no increase in costs for the police and said he hopes the new law will become a norm in society.

"[The goal of the law] is to create safety," he said.

Portions of the new law coming into effect July 1:

- A person does not need to install an ignition interlock if that person had between 0.08 and 0.10 percent alcohol concentration in the blood and no accident occurred.
- The 30-day wait for a temporary restricted license will be waived if a person had a 0.08-0.1 percent alcohol concentration in the blood and no accident occurred.
- The 30-day suspension period will be waived if a person had a 0.1-0.15 percent alcohol concentration in the blood and no accident occurred. However, if a person's alcohol concentration in the blood exceeded 0.1, the defendant must install an ignition-interlock device.

new proposal that calls for at least a 50 percent reduction in size and use of the property.

The proposal by the nonprofit group has drawn international media attention and criticism from a range of detractors since it was proposed in 1999.

Neighbors say it will forever alter their quiet, rural way of life and have a negative effect on the environment around the reservoir. Local government officials complained it would stress services, while a handful of opponents voiced distrust of Islamic groups in the aftermath of the 9/11 attacks and conflict in the Middle East.

Ron Fournier, a Corps spokesman, said the decision was based on land use, impact, and the environment, not the religious beliefs of the applicants.

The Corps "is preceding with this lease action as we ... are dedicated to preserving and protecting the rights of Americans of all religious beliefs," Fournier said.

Bayles' ruling could ease some of the environmental concern because it asks the Cedar Rapids-based group to craft a plan for fewer campers and less ambitious year-round use.

The original blueprint calls for 10 overnight cabins with capacity for 136 campers, swimming and dock facilities, a paved parking lot with 66 spaces, and a caretaker's residence on 106 acres.

allow prosecutors to use the defendant's commission of previous sexual-abuse acts as possible evidence against her or him in a sexual-offense case.

Karla Miller, the executive director of the Rape Victim Advocacy Program, says she believes this is critical in punishing repeat offenders.

"Sexual offenders' nature is repetitive; it's an addictive nature," she said.

According to the U.S. Justice Department's Bureau of Justice Statistics, 52 percent of convicted rapists and 48 percent of persons convicted of sexual assault were arrested within a three-year period following release from prison.

Anne Lahey, an assistant Johnson County attorney, said prior sexual abuse is highly relevant evidence.

"There are usually no eyewitnesses, so [prior commission of sexual abuse acts] is important evidence because it shows intent and a pattern of conduct," she said.

A new law will also require sexual offenders released from a correctional facility on parole or work release to live in a monitored residential facility for a minimum of one year.

Fred Scaletta, the head of media and public relations for the Iowa Department of Corrections, said requiring a felon to reside in a residential facility had been an option for district correction officers — not mandatory — until the new law.

Scaletta added that the new law allows offenders a mandatory adjustment period following release from correctional facilities, which "makes sense," he said.

Elizabeth Barnhill, the executive director of the Iowa Coalition Against Sexual Assault, said the new law mandating that offenders live under direct supervision for one year may help prevent offenders from repeating sexual assaults, but it won't solve the problem.

"It's always important to have a fairly high level of supervision," she said. "This way, they will be more closely scrutinized." Previously, while sexual-assault training may have been voluntarily delivered by law-enforcement officials, it is now mandated.

Jeff Barkhoff, a Coralville police detective, said officers in his department joined Iowa City, Johnson County and UI police officers this year in the first multi-agency training program designed for veteran and new officers. The program included sexual-assault training, such as treatment of a sexual-assault victim during police questioning and proper procedure for gathering evidence on the scene.

The training teaches officers how to correspond with victims from the first contact with her or him, he said — something that is important because it can help the investigation.

"It's important that there is trust built early on," Barkhoff said. "We're taught to gather evidence and information but trained to keep our focus on the needs and feelings of the victim."

Deepest-diving sub disappears

TOKYO (AP) — The world's deepest-diving submarine has disappeared in the choppy Pacific Ocean off Japan, a setback to deep-sea research on everything from earthquakes to rare bacteria.

Kaiko, a bright yellow submarine that entered the record books in 1995 by diving 36,008 feet to the bottom of the Challenger Deep — the ocean's deepest point — snapped its tether as a typhoon approached in late May and has been missing since then, officials said on Monday.

Daniel Fornari, the chief scientist for deep submergence at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute in Massachusetts, called the disappearance of the 10-foot-long unmanned submersible "an enormous loss" for science.

"It was unique in the world," he said. "There is no doubt whether it is going to be sorely missed. ... It's not something that you can go out and buy at your local deep-sea equipment store."

Barbara Moore, the director of the undersea research program at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration in Washington, said the development was "very disappointing."

"It was a one-of-a-kind instrument," she said. "It's had a good and productive career; nevertheless, it still had a lot of life left in it. It's a real loss to the scientific community."

U.S. pressed on Liberia

BY MARK MATTHEWS
BALTIMORE SUN

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration, under growing pressure from African and European countries, is debating whether to lead an armed peacekeeping mission to Liberia or find some other path to help end a bloody civil war there, officials said Monday.

A week before President Bush's first trip to the continent since entering the White House, the administration is described by diplomats and analysts as sharply divided on whether to lead an international stabilization force in the impoverished West African nation, founded 150 years ago by freed American slaves.

State Department officials have pressed the case for leading a multinational force, which would assign a major African peacekeeping role to American troops for the first time since the United States pulled its forces out of Somalia in 1994, diplomats said.

The Pentagon, wary of an open-ended commitment, and with 146,000 U.S. troops fighting pockets of resistance in Iraq, wants to train African troops to do the job, backed by U.S. equipment and intelligence help.

Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, speaking with reporters at the Pentagon on Monday, suggested that the situation was less dire than it appeared to be last week, when European and African leaders and U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan began urging that the United States send troops to Liberia.

"The reports out of Liberia tend to come up and go down in terms of urgency or lack of urgency," Rumsfeld said. "It was relatively calm there, the latest reports. And that's a call the president would make, if and when he decided to make such a call."

Rumsfeld added that "we're looking at a range of options."

Liberia has been torn by conflict for much of the past decade, and its president, Charles Taylor, is now cornered and fighting for his survival, having been indicted by an international tribunal for war crimes in neighboring Sierra Leone. Bush called last week for Taylor to step down.

Opponents of U.S. intervention say that for a peacekeeping force to achieve any lasting result, a political process aimed at bringing peace needs to be well under way beforehand, and chances of that happening appear to be slim.

"Nobody knows what it's going to take" to stabilize Liberia, one U.S. official said. "We don't even know if 100,000 troops" would bring a solution.

But proponents fear that without the United States taking the lead, West African states will be reluctant to intervene, and Liberia will continue to descend into chaos as the death toll and humanitarian crisis mount.

West African countries have reportedly offered to send 3,600 troops in a force led by 2,000 Americans.

European leaders argue that France and Britain have each brought a measure of stability by sending troops, respectively, to Ivory Coast and Sierra Leone, both former colonies.

J. Stephen Morrison, the director of the African program at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, said administration officials pressing for intervention are making the case that "there's a big vulnerability ... for the United States ... if we're seen allowing this place to spiral into chaos."

Troops jail U.S.-backed Iraqi mayor

BY BASSEM MROUE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NAJAF, Iraq — American troops moved in force Monday to arrest the U.S.-appointed mayor of this southern Iraqi town, removing him on kidnapping and corruption charges and detaining 62 of his aides — a step likely to please Najaf's Shiite residents.

The arrest came as a sweep across central Iraq entered its second day, aimed at capturing Saddam Hussein loyalists and curbing a wave of attacks on American soldiers. But so far in the crackdown, dubbed Operation Sidewinder, no major fugitives have been reported arrested.

Some soldiers say their efforts have been plagued by faulty intelligence and bad luck.

Southern Iraq, dominated by Shiite Muslims who largely hated Saddam, has seen less violence in recent weeks — though many Shiites have railed at U.S. domination. One of the country's top Shiite clerics issued a fatwa, or religious ruling, this week, denouncing U.S. administrators' plans to appoint a council to draw up a new Constitution and demanding elections so Iraqis can elect their own constitutional convention.

The arrest of the mayor of Najaf, Abu Haydar Abdul Mun'im, came less than three months after he was installed by American troops, who entered the town in April. The former Iraqi army colonel was unpopular from the start with the local population because of his background in Saddam's military.

In recent weeks, residents of Najaf, 110 miles southwest of Baghdad, have held demonstrations against Abdul Mun'im, accusing him of links to Saddam's Baath Party.

Coalition forces made the arrest at the request of an Iraqi investigative judge in Najaf, said a statement by the U.S.-led provisional authority.

quote of the day

To any man or any woman or anybody who's living in despair, what could they do? They have nothing left but to carry arms and defy the people who are here occupying their country and doing nothing for them or their families. Where is democracy? Nonexistent. Where is stability? Nonexistent. Where's electricity? Where's water?

— Iraqi political scientist Saad al-Jawwad, on the continuing violence against U.S. troops in Iraq.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Focus on what you do best, and forget about trying to please everyone around you. Rely on yourself; don't expect others to keep up with you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Get out with friends, and you will be introduced to someone new. Don't let your stubbornness stop you from having a good time.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Making money may have its frustrations and limitations today. Don't worry; instead, focus on what you do best. Good ideas will be wasted on those who aren't visionaries.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): If you put your excellent memory to good use, you will be able to put your past experiences to work for you. Your pessimism will counteract productivity, and you may feel as if you have a half-inch fuse.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A poor diagnosis is likely not to turn out as predicted. Get a second opinion to ease your mind. Someone you work with may try to withhold important information, but as long as you are persistent, you should be able to overcome any minor setback.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You will dazzle new acquaintances with your intellectual conversation and business knowledge. Socializing will lead to romantic encounters or new business partnerships.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Hold off making any unnecessary changes. This will not be the day to force issues or to question those you work with or for. Keep your ideas to yourself.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Learning something new will provide just the change you're needing. You will have some unique ideas that could turn into a moneymaking venture.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Tedious holdups regarding finances will cause upset and confrontation. Legal matters should be left alone today — wait until tomorrow.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't expect things to run smoothly. Your emotional well-being may be tested. Avoid further discussions if you appear to be losing ground.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Concentrate on whatever task is at hand, and put your creative ideas to work for you. You'll be on a roll today, so keep up the momentum.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Lots of changes are coming your way, and if you interact with enough trusted friends and relatives, you will get great results. Your ability to change with the times will put you that much further ahead.

Grunfeld takes over Wizards

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Ernie Grunfeld was hired as president of basketball operations of the Washington Wizards on Monday, taking the job that Michael Jordan held the last two seasons. The hiring came a day after Grunfeld was released from his contract as general manager of the Milwaukee Bucks. He inherits a team that went 37-45 in the two years Jordan held that position while playing his final two years in the NBA. Washington owner Abe Pollin decided he no longer wanted Jordan as an executive. Grunfeld is the final piece of Washington's front-office puzzle. Two weeks ago, Pollin hired Eddie Jordan to replace Doug Collins, who had been Michael Jordan's hand-picked choice as coach. The Wizards on Monday also introduced their two draft selections — Jarvis Hayes of Georgia and Steve Blake of Maryland. "From my standpoint, those of you who have said that Mr. Pollin is over-the-hill, incompetent, and doesn't know what he's doing," Pollin said. "I think we proved that we still know what we're doing, and we got what we wanted." Pollin had said he hoped to have a new president of basketball operations by the night of the June 26 draft. However, draft duties were handled by outgoing general manager Wes Unseld. "I told you that I was going to get the best brain in basketball to be the president of basketball operations that I could get," Pollin said. "It's been somewhat of a longer process than I thought — at times aggravating. But I didn't give up because I got the guy I wanted." Grunfeld, who assembled three playoff teams during four seasons with the Bucks, has little time to get adjusted. Tuesday is the first day teams can begin to talk with free agents. "I haven't even seen my office yet," Grunfeld said. "So once we get that out of the way, we'll start moving along." The Wizards haven't made the playoffs since 1997 and haven't won a playoff series since 1982. Despite drafting Blake, the search for a point guard is the top priority for Washington in the free agent market. "We have Jared [Jeffries], Kwame [Brown], and those guys have a year or two under their belt," Eddie Jordan said. "We've got some veterans. The youthfulness and inexperience are out now. You can't use that anymore."

Move leaves Big East weakened

originally targeted in its 12-team scenario. But those institutions were told last week they would not receive invitations. Shalala and Athletics Director Paul Dee didn't make their decision until Monday morning, just hours before a news conference to announce it. Shalala then called Barker to tell him. The Big East's financial guarantee was "a lot" higher than the ACC's, she said. Still, it wasn't enough. "You're really betting on the future in terms of the ACC," she said. Miami's decision ensures the legal battle over the ACC's expansion will continue. A lawsuit against the ACC and Miami contends Big East members Connecticut, Rutgers, West Virginia, and Pittsburgh have spent millions on their football programs based on presumed loyalty from schools it had been aligned with, including the Hurricanes. On Monday, a judge in Connecticut, where the lawsuit was filed, denied a request by Connecticut Attorney General Richard Blumenthal to speed up the case. Blumenthal had asked the judge to order several key people, including Shalala, to give depositions or sworn testimony as early as today. Instead, the judge began a two-week vacation. Virginia Tech was removed as a plaintiff in the case after being invited to join the ACC. Miami now is the lone school, accused of participating in a conspiracy intended to weaken the Big East.

"We will continue vigorously to protect the Big East in the courts of Connecticut," said Jeffrey Mishkin, the lead counsel for the Big East plaintiffs. "The ACC's 50th anniversary will now be marked with depositions and document discovery exposing the ACC's predatory conduct and Miami's conspiratorial actions." Miami has won six of the 12 Big East football championships; Virginia Tech has three. Miami has the best all-time record in Big East play (66-10), followed by Virginia Tech (53-23), which is percentage points ahead of Syracuse (56-26). In the last three seasons, Miami has the best record among all Division I-A football programs, 35-2. Virginia Tech (29-9) is tied for eighth on that list. Since the inception of the Big East's football conference in 1991, Miami is the only school to have won a national championship. The Hurricanes won titles in 1991 and 2001 and played for the crown after last season, losing to Ohio State. Virginia Tech also played for the national championship after the 1999 season, losing to Florida State. ACC Commissioner John Swofford said the addition of Miami and Virginia Tech makes his conference perhaps "stronger than at any point in its history." Miami joined the Big East in October 1990, five months before the league's football conference was formed. The Big East had long been best known as a basketball conference, especially after the success Georgetown, St. John's, and Villanova enjoyed during the 1980s.

Popp, who's ranked 198th and beat Olivier Rochus (5-7, 6-3, 6-4, 6-2). Other quarterfinals: No. 5 Andy Roddick vs. Jonas Bjorkman, No. 4 Roger Federer vs. No. 8 Sjeng Schalken, and Britain's Tim Henman vs. Juan Carlos Ferrero or Sebastian Grosjean — their match was stopped because of darkness with Grosjean ahead, 2-1, in sets. Wimbledon is the only Slam that schedules all 16 fourth-round matches on the same day. After rain delayed Monday's start an hour, the Williams sisters, Jennifer Capriati, Lindsay Davenport, and Kim Clijsters were in action. They all won quickly, dropping a total of 23 games. Venus Williams had to be the most satisfied. She picked up a 6-1, 6-3 victory over No. 16 Vera Zvonareva, who stunned her in the French Open's fourth round. "Venus was unbelievable today," Zvonareva said. "She didn't give me chances." Today's women's quarterfinals: defending champion Serena Williams vs. No. 8 Capriati, 2000-01 champion Venus Williams vs. 1999 champion Davenport, No. 2 Clijsters vs. No. 27 Silvia Farina Elia, who never made the quarters at 43 previous majors, and French Open champion Justine Henin-Hardenne vs. Svetlana Kuznetsova. Davenport will try to snap a five-match losing streak against Venus; Capriati has lost seven straight against Serena.

"The level will jump quite a bit tomorrow — the level of opponents," Davenport said. "The top players have gone through relatively unscathed so far." The same can't be said for the men. With defending champion Lleyton Hewitt a first-round loser, and second-seeded Agassi gone, it's the first time in the Open era neither No. 1 nor 2 made the last eight. "I had nothing to lose," Philippoussis said. "Everyone was expecting him to win. That's a great position to be in." Agassi appeared to be in great shape after taking the tiebreaker by adjusting to a 115 mph offering, reaching wide and — letting out an "Aaahhh!" — ripping a cross-court forehand return winner. But, like Agassi, Philippoussis knows how to fashion a comeback. At Wimbledon in 1999, the 6-4 Australian, then 22, took the opening set off Sampras but hurt his left knee and quit. His 2002 season ended in August, after hurting the same knee during the U.S. Open. About a month ago, Philippoussis dumped coach Peter McNamara and returned to working with his father, Nick, who taught him to play tennis at age 6. "We went back to basics — simple as that," Philippoussis said. "That's my thought process on court — just think about what I used to do when I was younger." He cranked second serves at up to 120 mph and surprised Agassi with all-of-a-sudden winners. In the second set, Philippoussis broke to 2-0 in a game that featured four aces (Agassi finished with 10), six deuces, and six break points.

Philadelphia Phillies' Mike Lieberthal leaps after scoring past Chicago Cubs catcher Damian Miller from third base on a sacrifice fly by Marlon Byrd in the fourth inning Monday. The Phillies won the game, 4-3.

Cubs can't keep lead against Thome, Phillies

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Jim Thome's two-run homer in the seventh inning led the Philadelphia Phillies to their sixth-straight win, a victory over the Chicago Cubs, 4-3.

Vicente Padilla (7-7) pitched seven strong innings.

Padilla allowed three runs — two earned — and five hits in seven innings.

Jose Mesa earned the save. Shawn Estes (6-7) gave up four runs and seven hits in seven innings. He also homered, helping Chicago take a 3-0 lead.

Leading 3-2 in the seventh, Estes retired the first two batters before Jimmy Rollins hit a single. Thome then lined a 3-0 pitch deep into the left-center field seats.

Mets 3, Expos 1

NEW YORK (AP) — Steve Trachsel pitched seven neat innings, and Ty Wigginton hit a two-run double as the New York Mets snapped a five-game losing streak with a victory over the Montreal Expos.

Cliff Floyd added an RBI single for the Mets.

Trachsel (7-5) held Montreal to one run and five hits, striking out three and walking two.

Indians 10, Royals 5, 1st Game

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Casey Blake hit his first career grand slam, and Cliff Lee earned his first major-league win as the Cleveland Indians beat the Kansas City Royals in the first game of a double-header.

Blake also had a sacrifice fly for a career-high five RBIs. Matt Lawton hit two doubles and a single, and Milton Bradley and Jody Gerut each drove in two runs.

Lee (1-0) went six innings plus three batters. He gave up three hits and two unearned runs.

Brad Voyles (0-1) gave up four runs and eight hits in 4 1/2 innings.

Giants 5, Cardinals 1

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Jason Schmidt threw his third-consecutive complete game, holding down St. Louis on seven hits and leading the San Francisco Giants over the Cardinals.

Marquis Grissom doubled twice with an RBI and Edgardo Alfonzo had three hits.

Schmidt (8-3) blanked the Cardinals until Jim Edmonds homered to lead the ninth. That shot ended Schmidt's streak of 26-straight innings without an earned run.

Yankees 6, Orioles 5

BALTIMORE (AP) — Ruben Sierra hit a pivotal three-run homer, and Andy Pettitte won his fourth-straight start as the New York Yankees won their season-high eighth-straight game, beating the Baltimore Orioles.

Karim Garcia also homered for the Yankees.

Baltimore led 4-3 in the seventh when Sidney Ponson (10-5) gave up singles to Derek Jeter and Jason Giambi. B.J. Ryan came in, and Sierra sent the fourth pitch into the seats.

Pettitte (9-6) yielded four runs — three earned — and 10 hits in six innings.

Marlins 8, Braves 1

MIAMI (AP) — Mark Redman pitched a five-hitter, and the Florida Marlins roughed up Greg Maddux and beat the Atlanta Braves Monday night.

Ivan Rodriguez hit a three-run homer in the first inning off Maddux, and Derrek Lee connected later.

Redman (6-3) settled down after giving up two runs in the first inning, retiring 18 of 19 batters until Julio Franco singled in the seventh.

Maddux (6-8) gave up seven runs on six hits in four innings.

Rodriguez hit his 10th home run and added a double off Trey Hodges in the fifth.

Lee's two-run homer in the third came after Mike Lowell singled with two outs.

Tigers 6, Blue Jays 2

DETROIT (AP) — Mike Maroth gave up two runs over seven innings as the Detroit Tigers ended a nine-game losing streak with a victory over the Toronto Blue Jays on Monday.

Maroth (3-12) allowed eight hits and a walk. He struck out four.

Chris Mears pitched two perfect innings in relief.

Cory Lidle (10-6) gave up six runs on eight hits and two walks in six-plus innings.

White Sox 10, Twins 3

CHICAGO (AP) — Magglio Ordonez homered twice, and Jon Garland pitched seven strong innings to lead the Chicago White Sox to victory over the Minnesota Twins on Monday night.

Ordonez had a two-run homer in the fifth inning and added a solo shot in the seventh.

Joe Crede, Jose Valentin, and Carlos Lee also homered for Chicago. Garland (6-6) allowed a single to Jacque Jones to lead the game before retiring the next 11 batters. He was flawless other than back-to-back home runs by Bobby Kielty and A.J. Pierzynski in the seventh inning.

Garland allowed two runs and five hits in seven innings. He struck out seven and walked two.

IN BRIEF

Red Wings exercise option on Hasek

DETROIT (AP) — The Detroit Red Wings said Monday they have exercised their $8 million option for 2003-04 on goaltender Dominik Hasek.

He retired in 2002 after leading Detroit to the Stanley Cup, but the 38-year-old recently expressed interest publicly in returning to competition.

The Red Wings had until Monday to exercise the option on Hasek for next season, or come to another agreement. If they had not, he would have become an unrestricted free agent.

Hasek's agent, Rich Winter, declined to comment Monday evening. Calls seeking comment left for Red Wings general manager Ken Holland were not immediately returned.

If Hasek, who lives in the Czech Republic, returns, the Red Wings will have to talk goaltender Curtis Joseph into waiving the no-trade clause in his contract so they could deal him.

Detroit signed Joseph, a 14-year veteran, to a three-year, $24 million contract last summer. The deal with the unrestricted free agent included the no-trade clause.

Hasek is a six-time Vezina Trophy winner as the NHL's best goalie, a two-time Hart Trophy winner as the league's MVP, and won an Olympic gold medal in 1998.

The Red Wings' hopes of repeating as Stanley Cup champions were cut short when they were swept in the first round of the playoffs by the Anaheim Mighty Ducks.

Doped-up skier will lose Olympic medals

PRAGUE, Czech Republic (AP) — Russian cross-country skier Larissa Lazutina was stripped of her remaining medals from the 2002 Olympics because of positive drug tests.

The International Olympic Committee executive board Sunday took away two silver medals and wiped out a fourth-place finish after Lazutina lost a series of appeals for her doping suspension.

Lazutina, one of the most decorated athletes in Winter Olympics history, had already been stripped of her gold medal in the 30-kilometer classical race after testing positive for the banned endurance-enhancer darbepoetin.

She had not been disqualified from other events because she had passed drug tests after those races.

After the Olympics, it emerged that Lazutina had also tested positive for darbepoetin months earlier. The international ski federation ruled she should have been ineligible to compete in Salt Lake City and banned her for two years.

Lazutina will lose silver medals in the 15K free mass start and 5K free pursuit. Her fourth-place finish in the 10K classical race has also been removed from the record books.

Miami joins Virginia Tech, moves to ACC

BY TIM REYNOLDS
 ASSOCIATED PRESS

CORAL GABLES, Fla. — Loyalty and money weren't enough to keep Miami from bolting the Big East. The Hurricanes believe their future is more secure in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Ending a seven-week courtship, Miami accepted the ACC's invitation Monday, rejecting a better financial offer from the Big East to stay put.

"Ready or not, here we come," Miami President Donna Shalala told Clemson President James Barker.

Miami's decision to join Virginia Tech in defecting from the Big East dramatically alters the balance of power in the conferences. The ACC adds two of the nation's strongest football programs; the Big East is left with a big void.

"It has been a bizarre, strange, and goofy process," Shalala said. "But it has allowed us the opportunity to give ourselves some distance, so that we got a view of who we are, where we are, and where we want to be."

The presidents and chancellors of the six remaining Big East football schools — Boston College, Syracuse, Connecticut, Rutgers, Pittsburgh, and West Virginia — vowed their conference would become "even stronger."

"Although we are certainly disappointed with the actions taken this week by the ACC, we as a conference will now turn our attention to the future and the challenges that lie ahead," Big East Commissioner Mike Tranghese said in a statement.

Nonetheless, a lawyer for four of the Big East schools that sued to block the ACC's expansion said they would continue their court battle.

Miami and Virginia Tech will begin playing in the ACC as soon as the 2004-05 season. Both remain Big East members for 2003-04 because schedules have already been made.

Each school will pay the Big East a $1 million exit fee and the ACC a $2 million entrance fee. If Miami had made its intentions known after Monday, its exit fee could have doubled.

Virginia Tech President Charles Steger said last week his school would join the ACC, and Tech formally accepted the offer Monday.

The ACC originally sought to expand to 12 schools so it could offer a lucrative conference title game in football. While the league plans to seek another school, it also could ask the NCAA to change the 12-member requirement.

Officials from several Big East schools tried to persuade the Hurricanes to stay. The Miami officials were studying a counterproposal from Big East members, who had previously guaranteed the Hurricanes $45 million over five years to stay.

The counteroffer was led by Boston College and Syracuse, the other two schools the ACC

PRIME TIME LEAGUE

Clash of the Titans

Horner, Pierce battle in North Liberty

Horner Pierce

BY JASON BRUMMOND
 THE DAILY IOWAN

For Monday night's Prime Time League action, the schedule noted the face-off between Iowa City Ready Mix/Deli-Mart, and Imprinted Sportswear/Goodfellow Printing. However, the more enticing matchup was between two of Iowa's star players: guards Pierre Pierce and Jeff Horner.

The talented pair of Hawkeyes each scored 19 points, but Horner's Imprinted Sportswear won the game, 102-81. The guards squared off against each other throughout the game.

"We ended up winning the game, and that is kind of what I take pride in," Horner said. "Just trying to play against bigger guards like Pierre is tough. You try to work your game, and get around them, and just make plays."

In the first half, Pierce grabbed a long rebound, went behind his back to lose the last defender, and laid in an easy finger roll to give his team an early 9-4 lead with 15:00 left in the half. Both teams were careless with the basketball and were cold shooting to start out, resulting in the slow start.

Horner showed that he is a complete player by adding eight rebounds and six assists to his 19 points. His passing abilities sent the crowd to its feet on more than one occasion, when the Mason City native threaded the ball through pack of defenders.

"He's a good player; he's real competitive," Pierce, a Westmont, Ill., native said, of his Hawkeye teammate. "I like playing with guys that really go hard, and it's good to come out and play against him, but it's unfortunate we lost tonight."

Ex-Drake University player Greg Danielson led all scorers with 26 points, with 18 coming in the second half, and dominated the glass with 14 rebounds for Imprinted Sportswear. Teammate Dave Newman, also an ex-Drake hoopster, put on a 3-point shooting clinic, nailing three in succession from behind the arc.

UI incoming freshman Mike Henderson of Waterloo led Ready Mix with 21 points. The ball handling, quickness, and knowledge of the game that he showed will be a valuable asset in his Hawkeye career.

Pierce doesn't believe that the summer basketball league is designed to produce improvement but rather is a step towards that goal. The 6-4, 205-pound guard feels that he will be able to tell how he has improved once Iowa's season is underway.

"The PTL isn't really where I'm looking for my progression," he said. "Once we start the season, and the Big Ten, is where I will really be able start to see how good I have gotten, or better."

Philippoussis shows Agassi Wimbledon's exit

BY HOWARD FENDRICH

WIMBLEDON, England — Crack!

That's what Andre Agassi heard on the way out of Wimbledon — the sound Mark Philippoussis' racket made as it smacked serve after unreachable serve Monday.

Undaunted by the game's greatest returner, who also happens to be ranked No. 1 and own eight Grand Slam titles, the unseeded Philippoussis hit a record-tying 46 aces and upset Agassi (6-3, 2-6, 6-7 [4], 6-3, 6-4) in the fourth round.

"So little can decide each set that it's pretty frustrating at times," said Agassi, the 1992 champion. "I felt like I made him earn it. I made him play the big shot at the crucial time, and he came up with it."

His exit means no past winners are in the quarterfinals; that hasn't been the case at the All England Club since 1973, when a player boycott diluted the field.

For Philippoussis, who had lost six-straight matches against Agassi, this represents a return to the big time. Once ranked No. 8 and the 1998 U.S. Open runner-up, he fell out of the top 100 in 2001 after a series of left knee injuries. He's always had that booming serve, though.

Broken twice in the second set Monday, Philippoussis won the last 16 games he served, saving nine break points. Only Goran Ivanisevic, in 1997, had as many aces in a Wimbledon match.

"The great thing about the serve is you've got the ball in your hands. You can take your time; no one can rush you. You're in control," the 48th-ranked Australian said. "Even on the second serves, I went for them. Against a guy like Andre, you have to."

He earned his fourth trip to Wimbledon's quarterfinals, having made it that far in 1998-00. He lost each time, once to Agassi, twice to Pete Sampras.

Philippoussis, who surfs four hours a day when home in San Diego, will play a less-distinguished foe this time: Alexander
