Iraqis form council

BY RAJIV CHANDRASEKARAN
WASHINGTON POST

BAGHDAD — A group of 25 Iraqis from diverse political, ethnic, and religious backgrounds stepped onto a stage and declared themselves a "governing council" Sunday, taking the first step to define the country's political future by accepting an offer of limited power-sharing from the U.S.-led occupation authority.

The members — who include former exiles, politicians, Muslim clerics, tribal leaders, social activists, physicians, and lawyers — were selected by the occupation authority to help run this country of 25 million people until sovereignty is handed over to an elected government. The council's responsibilities will include the operation of ministries, the appointment of diplomats, the approval of next year's budget, and preliminary work to form a commission to draft a Constitution. Final control over those issues will still rest with

Delivering the joys of summer

BY KATE BRASER
THE DAILY IOWAN

Only 10 minutes after emerging from his Iowa City home, David Daniel wipes the tip of his pink polo shirt across a bead of sweat on his forehead as he steers his white Pinky's Ice Cream and Treats truck straight west into the blazing afternoon sun. The interior of the truck may be filled with icy delicacies, but the heat of the generators and freezers that work to keep his frozen goods intact leave Daniel wilting.

"All right kids, here we are," the 48-year-old says as he hits a button and carousel tunes tinkle from the truck's speakers and down the streets of Iowa City's Regency Mobile Home Park. As if on cue, a group of children in bathing suits jump up and down and wave their arms, afraid Daniel may not spot them.

"That's what I call the 'Ice Cream Hop,'" Daniel said laughing and nodding towards the children as they descend on the truck panting, red-faced, and smiling.

Those smiles are the reason the North Huntington, Pa., native and his wife, Kathy, an Iowa City native, moved to Iowa City from Pennsylvania in April 1998, he said.

"No one ever smiles at an insurance salesman, but everyone smiles at the ice-cream man," Daniel said about his decision to grow a ponytail and purchase an ice-cream truck after 23 years of working as an insurance salesman outside Pittsburgh.

After an unsuccessful attempt to continue in insurance in Iowa City, Daniel responded to an ad for a driver of the Peppy's Ice Cream truck. He then began working for the only competition he now has in Iowa City, all the while storing away the secrets of the business.

Last year, Daniel bought a 1960 truck from Phoenix on eBay. After some maintenance and a fresh coat of paint, Blue Bunny supplied him with his first batch of popsicle and ice-cream treats, and Daniel headed into familiar territory — this time under a new name.

"The name Pinky's came to me in a dream," he said. "It was something I thought I could work with."

The "high-tech ice cream man," equipped with his cell phone latched to his khaki shorts, said technology plays a key role in the marketing side of his traveling business — occasionally, he will call his "Pinky's Pals" and issue "Pinky's Alerts," letting people know he is headed into their neighborhood.

"Twenty-three years in sales taught me to be customer-service oriented," he said.

True to his word, Pinky's On Demand Delivery service, 936-4681, is available for customers to call and ask Daniel to stop by when they are in the mood for something cool and sweet.

Daniel said he has big plans for his business, which include eventually owning two trucks with his wife at the wheel of one.

"I'd like to own the streets of Iowa City," he said with a chuckle. "But what I want to do more than make a business for myself is to be a good dad to my son. And that's what this is all about."

Kevin Daniel can be found working in the passenger seat beside his father five days a week. The 9-year-old, his father says, considers the ice-cream truck his birthright.

"I told my dad to drive the truck out to see my class and give them free ice-cream so that more kids would know about it, so he did," said Kevin, who is saving his money for a go-cart. "Now, I'm the most popular kid in my school."

Loneliness hits friends of deceased UI worker

BY ASHLEY HOFFMAN
THE DAILY IOWAN

Dave Swartzendruber spent July 11 alone at the Oakdale power plant, gathering personal belongings and clothes left behind in the locker of his former colleague and friend Herbert "Herb" Delano Jr., who died at the plant July 5.

Swartzendruber and Delano worked together at the plant for approximately three years, until Delano's death, but now, Swartzendruber works alone.

"It's lonely," he said. "I keep looking around the corner, thinking he's going to pop out and say, 'Hi.'"

UI and Coralville police officers responded to an emergency phone call on July 5 from one of Delano's friends, Darcy Fisher, who found him unresponsive that morning. Officials arrived at the facility around 8:40 a.m. and pronounced Delano, 46, dead.

UI police officials have concluded the investigation of Delano's death, but they are awaiting autopsy results to officially close the case, said Duane Papke, the department's associate director. He could not comment on the suspected cause of death but said the department did not investigate it as a homicide, work-related accident, or suicide.

Fisher and Swartzendruber said they believe that Delano died of heart failure or other natural causes sometime on July 4. Because of the holiday, no one else was at the plant.

Both Fisher and Delano's niece, Amanda Delano, said the family has a history of cardiac failure at a young age.

"He always said he would be lucky to make it to 49," Fisher said. "But we just didn't expect it."

Friends and family speak of Delano as a man who enjoyed playing pool, riding motorcycles, reading, and collecting Zippo lighters. Fisher said the Zippo collection includes just about every original Zippo made in the United States. He had an obsession with watching old Western films, and he idolized film-legend John Wayne, who, Fisher said, in some ways was who Delano was.

"[Delano] was very loving and giving," she said. "He was a beautiful person."

Res still popular, but people more cautious

BY JOHAN BERGENAS
THE DAILY IOWAN

Two drownings at the Coralville Reservoir did not discourage beachcombers from enjoying the sun this weekend, but officials, parents, and students were more cautious about the dangers of water.

Following the deaths of Allan Leon Butler, 19, of Hiawatha, Iowa, on June 17 and Hanna Leigh Meeks, 4, of Cedar Rapids on July 6, the Army Corps of Engineers decided to decrease the roped-in 600-foot by 200-foot swimming area by 50 feet and put up additional posters about water safety to prevent more accidents from happening, said Randy Haas, the chief ranger for the reservoir.

"I feel safe; I know the dangers of water," said Kim Lorence, a UI senior, adding that she does not think the smaller roped-in area would create greater safety because more people will be swimming in a smaller space. However, she said, it is important to watch out for others when visiting a beach, especially in deep water.

"I would never go out to the ropes by myself," she said, adding that she wants a friend to look out for her.

Ashley Perreau, another UI senior, is also in favor of a "buddy system" when going in the water especially because boats passing close to the roped-in area can create waves.

There were approximately 30 to 40 boats in the area of the beach July 12, some motoring very close to the swimming area.

Perreau, a former lifeguard, said one of the problems with swimming is that people overestimate their ability and get stuck in situations they cannot handle.

Haas said parents should always keep an eye on their children when they are playing in the water and make them wear a life jacket or other flotation devices, such as mattresses and air rings.

Jennifer Fiduccia, who was at the Reservoir on July 12, makes her 3-year-old son wear water wings around his arms when in the water.

Gephardt touts labor, health ideas

BY ANNIE SHUPPY
THE DAILY IOWAN

CEDAR RAPIDS — A leading Democratic 2004 presidential candidate promoted his agenda to a local union on July 12 as one that will support working-class interests.

Wearing a red shirt and khakis, a tie-less Rep. Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., touted his trade, health care, and education policies to the crowd of roughly 200 at Machinists Local 831, 222 Prospect Place S.W. He also contended that he is a champion of labor issues and a more experienced leader than some of the other Democrats vying for the nomination.

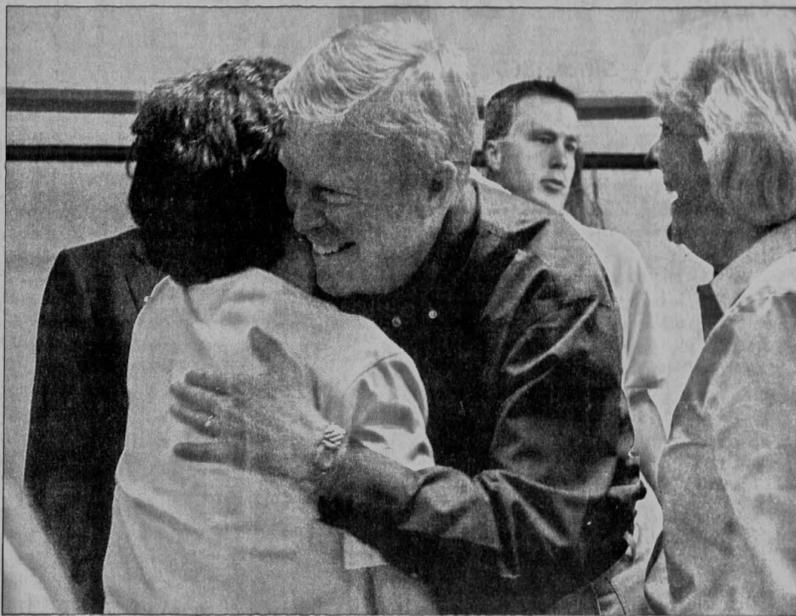

The event was part of a five-day swing across the state.

"Every day I've been in the House, I've been trying to decide issues for people like my parents," said the son of a Teamster and a secretary, who also reminded the crowd that, unlike fellow Democratic contenders John Kerry and Howard Dean, he opposed the North American Free Trade Agreement. That pact, he said, sent many American jobs to Mexico and did little to improve the quality of life for workers.

Gephardt's health-care plan would require all employers to provide health coverage to both their full- and part-time employees and would also refund 60 percent of the cost to companies through a tax credit. He said his plan would serve as an economic stimulus and foster growth.

"[The fight for health-care] is in my heart; it is in my soul; it is in my head," said the 13-year House Democratic Leader. "I will not rest until we get everyone covered with health insurance in this country."

father of three focused primarily on domestic issues but later touched on foreign policy and the war in Iraq.

Although Gephardt co-wrote the congressional resolution to allow use of force against Iraq, he said he advocated that President Bush secure U.N. support for the war, knowing that the United States would need its help in the war's aftermath.

However, he noted, it is now too late to achieve U.N. backing.

"We need a president who will talk to people and listen to people," he said. "Listening is a very important thing this president hasn't done very well."

Cedar Rapids resident Mark

Bailey said he would "probably" vote for Gephardt in the Jan. 19 caucuses, but he added that Gephardt's support for the war has made him more hesitant and that it is still too early in the race for him to make a decision.

"If it hadn't been for his stance on the war, I would probably be behind Gephardt 100 percent," said Bailey, a self-proclaimed "veteran Democrat."

Responding to questions from reporters, Gephardt said he does not think CIA Director George Tenet should resign from his position because President Bush unreasonably blamed intelligence for erroneous statements in his State of the Union address regarding why the United States should attack Iraq.

"I think the president unfairly placed that blame on someone else," said Gephardt, later adding that although he does not think Congress was misled about the case for war, a Senate inquiry is necessary for obtaining valid information.

Bill Burton, Gephardt's Iowa press secretary, said most of the attendees of the event were committed Gephardt supporters.

"Some were still deciding, but I think a lot of them left decided," Burton said.

Jacoby talks health care, development

BY ANNIE SHUPPY
THE DAILY IOWAN

A Democrat who is vying for the District 30 seat in the Iowa House, which includes Coralville and a section of Iowa City, spoke to a small group of voters July 12 about his campaign platform and answered questions about local issues.

Jacoby

Approximately 25 people attended Dave Jacoby's morning forum at the Coralville Public Library. Jacoby has 42 days left before facing Republican challenger Jack Young in an Aug. 26 special election for the seat, which was vacated when House Minority Leader Dick Myers retired in May.

Jacoby said much of his campaign effort thus far has gone into "getting the word out."

Sen. Bob Dvorsky, D-Coralville, who defeated Young in 2002, said one of the biggest challenges will be getting voters to turn out for a special election. Jacoby's name recognition will be an asset for him, Dvorsky said.

Serving in his second term on Coralville City Council, Jacoby, a program coordinator at Kirkwood Community College, said he understands the effects of fiscal belt-tightening for cities. State budget cuts to local entities are sometimes hidden under the guise of a tax cut, he said, but ultimately end up as tax increases as cities and counties must find ways to compensate for the losses.

Funding for public safety also needs to be maintained, said the life long Eastern Iowa resident. In addition, the state needs to begin to allocate some of its homeland security funds to cities and counties, he said, and Iowa's health-care system is "in vast need" of revamping.

"Across the board, entities and individuals struggle to make health-care payments," Jacoby said.

Iowa's national rank of 50 in economic growth is also unacceptable, he said. Although Jacoby, who has worked in employment programming and economic development, said he believes the Iowa Values Fund is "a great start," the state needs more initiatives to spur economic development.

"I think to develop business and good jobs, frankly, Iowa needs to invest more," said Jacoby, who has received endorsements from the Iowa Federation of Labor/AFL-CIO, the Iowa City/Cedar Rapids Building Trades Council, and AFSCME Local 2985.

"There's going to be a risk venture for investment in Iowa."

Jacoby said lawmakers should not only work on stopping tuition increases but also consider ways to control fee increases. The UI and Kirkwood Community College are two of the best economic-development tools in the state, said the University of Northern Iowa alum.

"What we have to do is make sure that the university is available to people from any economic background if they have the academic ability," he said, adding that he thinks community college should be free.

Ultimately, Democrats expect work ahead, as Dvorsky described Young as "a viable candidate."

Man charged after high-speed chase

Christopher K. Oaks, 32, Burlington, was arraigned on July 12 on charges of eluding law enforcement and first-degree theft stemming from an alleged incident on July 11.

A cash-only bond of $22,500 was set for Oaks, who is being held in Johnson County Jail.

The Johnson County Sheriff's Office was contacted July 11 concerning a stolen 2002 Chevrolet Impala from Tipton that was being tracked.

When law-enforcement agents attempted to stop the vehicle on Dubuque Street, the driver tried to elude officers. Authorities employed Stop Sticks, which extend small spikes when thrown onto a street in order to disable a vehicle through a controlled deflation of the tires.

Officers from both the Iowa City police and Iowa State Patrol engaged in the pursuit.

In the process of laying down a Stop Stick, Iowa City police Officer David Droll, standing in a yard along Prairie Du Chien, fired at the vehicle's tire to avoid being run down, said police Lt. Sid Jackson.

Authorities may file additional charges against Oaks.

The vehicle became disabled when Oaks hit a curb near Glendale Terrace and Glendale Road.

A female passenger in the vehicle, who had met Oaks earlier that day, was not charged.

"She was an unfortunate victim," said sheriff's Lt. Steve Hayslett.

Judge to allow state-ments by Bosnian teen

WATERLOO (AP) — Statements made by a Bosnian teenager accused of burglary and robbery will be allowed in court, a judge has ruled.

Police arrested Arif Hajtic of Waterloo on charges of first-degree robbery and third-degree burglary following a string of business break-ins and a holdup at a gas station in December 2002.

Hajtic wanted the judge to throw out statements he made because officers used his 14-year-old sister to interpret his Miranda rights.

Hajtic was 17 when he was arrested and police telephoned his mother to get permission to interview him. The mother, who speaks little or no English, brought Hajtic's brother and sister to the police station at the department's request.

Officers then used Hajtic's sister to interpret his Miranda rights and their request for the mother's consent.

Hajtic said his sister could not effectively translate to his mother the concept of the Miranda rights and a juvenile waiver that his mother had to sign before police could interview him.

However, a Bosnian interpreter, Ennis Mrzljak, reviewed tapes of the conversation and testified that the sister effectively conveyed the information to the mother.

Search for 2 missing kids focuses on Midwest

BY ANNE SAUNDERS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CONCORD, N.H. — Ohio authorities said Sunday they are helping the FBI search for the bodies of two missing New Hampshire children in the Toledo area.

Ohio State Highway Patrol Lt. Rick Fambro said his agency was assisting the FBI with a helicopter and officers. An FBI spokesman in Ohio did not immediately return a message seeking comment.

New Hampshire Assistant Attorney General Jeff Strelzin would not confirm the search was focused on the Toledo area, but he said investigators were targeting the Midwest. He said the bodies have not yet been found.

Investigators have been looking for the bodies of Sarah and Philip Gehring along the route their father traveled between Concord, N.H., and Gilroy, Calif., authorities said.

Sarah, 14, and Philip, 11, were last seen at a fireworks display in Concord with their father, Manuel Gehring.

Gehring was arrested on July 10 at a hotel in California; authorities announced on July 12 that they were treating the case as a double homicide.

Officials gave few details about why they believe the children are dead except to say that evidence found on July 11 and 12 led them to that conclusion.

In the Midwest, Gehring apparently traveled through Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa (including Iowa City), and Nebraska on Interstate 80.

Jim Cole/Associated Press

New Hampshire Attorney General Peter Heed, joined by state and federal officers in Concord, N.H. on July 11, announces that Philip and Sarah Gehring are missing. The two were last seen with their father, Manuel Gehring, who was arrested July 10 in Gilroy, Calif. after a cross-country drive.

The hot-pants

diva syndrome

BY DAVID SEGAL
WASHINGTON POST

Last August, when Britney Spears announced a hiatus from the music business, her detractors enjoyed a snicker or two. She's finished, they chuckled, a washed-up hot-pants diva whose simmering harlot act had overstayed its welcome. The teen-pop craze seemed, at the time, fatally wounded and was presumed to be a few heartbeats from a bright pink toe tag.

And if this corpse were buried, well, that'd be the end of Spears, wouldn't it? By January, an 18-year-old Canadian lass named Avril Lavigne was being hailed as the Britney-slayer, lauded for writing her own songs, playing an instrument and dressing in anti-show biz, unslutty duds, such as T-shirts and jeans. A new era of substance seemed to be dawning, an era that would wipe away all the froth that had so enraptured 12-year-olds for so long.

Thanks for playing our game, Ms. Midriff. Don't let the door hit your career on the way out.

But 11 months after announcing her hiatus, look who's laughing. True to her word, Britney hasn't released any music lately, but the world of female singers is today more Spearsified than ever. The Britney Brigade just keeps growing. And here's the funniest part: Few of these recruits actually belong in this army.

Remember when Jewel was a preachy coffeehouse folk poet who wondered "who will sa-aa-aa-ve your soul"? She's been rah-rahed off the field by a perky cheerleader with a mesh shirt that doesn't cover her bellybutton. On her latest, 0304, Jewel regresses to a high-school sophomore, her do-gooder sentimentality buried under mechanized beats.

Jewel isn't the only singer trying to backhandspring into the lives of youngsters. Liz Phair took five years off from fame and emerged with a decidedly grit-free rock album that sounds sunny enough for the Jell-O shot contest at Spring Break.

Jewel and Phair might have been cribbing, in part, from the notes of Sheryl Crow, whose last album, Cmon, Cmon, was released before Miss B's cool-off period began. On Cmon, Crow resisted the urge to act her age — 40, at the time — and let rip a rock album for gals half her age.

Crow's album went platinum. Jewel's has done well, too, rising to No. 2 and lounging in the Top 20 a month after its release. It's too soon to tell about Phair's album and, in any case, she's never been a chart-buster. But even if it's usually lucrative, there's something striking about the apparently endless, Spears-ward lean in female pop. It has yet to generate a backlash.

So even if Britney's next album bombs, those eulogies back in August seem pretty silly. She has won. And all efforts to out-Spears her are doomed to fail because she does herself better than anyone. If you're looking for a heroine to sa-aa-aa-ve pop's soul, your wait could be a long one.

The Britney Brigade just keeps growing. And here's the funniest part: Few of these recruits actually belong in this army.

FILM REVIEW
by Richard Shirk

He Loves Me ... He Loves Me Not

When:
7 and 9 p.m.
today through Wednesday

Where:
Bijou ★★★ out of ★★★★★

BY RICHARD SHIRK
THE DAILY IOWAN

As the adage goes, it's better to have loved and lost than to have never loved at all. But in the case of He Loves Me ... He Loves Me Not, it seems that an even better idea is to have a good laugh at a film trying to explore this question in a serious way with unintentionally hilarious results.

He Loves Me opens on a familiar note — a shop of flowers flooding the screen in deep, sensual reds, framing the smile of Angélique, a young artist in Bordeaux (played by Audrey Tautou of Amélie). For the first third of the film, He Loves Me follows this scene's cue. Angélique vies for the affection of Loïc (Samuel Le Bihan), an older married man, while she ignores the obvious perfect match of David (Clément Sibony), the boyish confidant of Angélique and a French Patrick Dempsey doppelgänger to boot. With all these plot devices in place within the first 10 minutes, it seems He Loves Me could hardly escape the predictability of every romantic comedy — a dramatic scene in the rain in which Angélique realizes the married man is a creep, the dance scene (hopefully DJ'ed by Usher) in which she realizes that the perfect guy for her is the friend who was there all along, etc.

But after 35 minutes, the Freddie Prinze Jr. date-movie vibe completely and abruptly disintegrates into about half a dozen sub-genre sketches, pitching Tautou into Glenn Close's role in Fatal Attraction among other things. Liberally doling out her favorite clichés, director and co-screenwriter Laëticia Colombani ransacks all of her favorite bits from the Stalker Film, the Teen Comedy, the Buddy Movie, the Mystery, and the Hospital Drama (and tries to do so with a straight face.) The world has never seen a romantic-comedy-murder-mystery-stalker art film before, and there are more reasons for that, aside from carpal tunnel claims from the video-store guys who would have to magic marker the plastic placards.

On the bright side, as soon as the seasickness from such abrupt, implausible, and illogical changes in the film's tone and plot subsides, the bargain-bin mix and match of the remainder is where He Loves Me begins to shine as an unplanned and successful comedic farce, like a Mystery Science Theater 3000 B-movie on autopilot.

Audiences aren't meant to laugh at the supposedly dramatic scenes. But we do. And though we are not meant to, we chuckle when certain characters are whacked out of the blue in the head with pewter statues. We can't help it. Like those best of "Johnny Carson" videos advertised early in the AM on television, He Loves Me is a parade of the most ridiculous and expected events that could happen in a film written and directed by a person obviously suffering from both lack of imagination and acute ADD. There's even a coma. It's a miracle there wasn't a volcano threatening to explode crosscut with a wedding, a Mafia hit, and a car chase. Not only are the schizoid film-making and constant plot non sequiturs laughable, the characters are marked by a lack of sympathy and emotion. As the perspective shifts to show both sides of the story, each character is merely an unlikeable, automaton plot-device blundering along. Angélique is shown as conniving, David is stupid and too easily manipulated, and Loïc, the married stalkee, is mildly villainized during the initial romantic-comedy portion and ogre-ish and boring when portrayed as the victim of Angélique's obsession.

However, what began as the murmuring of confusion or ridicule from a pissed-off audience being jerked around by a no-talent French director soon became the laughter (and some more ridicule) of a group of people enjoying the most accidentally funny movie since Star Wars II: Attack of the Clones.

Subtitles or no, He Loves Me is so horrendous that it's wonderful. Vive la France.

Josh Young watches the Frogs, a Milwaukee-based band, during its performance at Gabe's on July 12.

Frog got your tongue?

A crowd of people, as it usually happens, will show up to see a band they enjoy. But then again, with a caustic reputation and a mean streak in the guise of sarcasm, there is the Frogs.

Appearing July 12 at Gabe's, these Milwaukee anti-pop veterans have a prodigious back catalogue and a booked tour schedule, but, if people expected to hear the band perform its music, they were at the wrong bar.

With the usual fantastically drunk haranguers, the trademark sequined angel-wings of singer/guitarist Jimmy Flemion, and more emphasis on antagonizing an audience than performing an actual rock show, this was indeed a typical night in Frogdom.

After half an hour of taking the stage, the band had only stumbled through three of the songs on the night's set-list — not for drunkenness or incompetence, but as one of many barbs offered to the five-deep crowd, offending those unprepared and making the night a fulfilling piece of performance art for those expecting the act.

"There not as shitty as I thought, but they're a total joke," said Orion Meyer, an Iowa City concert-goer and first-time witness to the spectacle.

And like many jokes, it wasn't that funny.

Guest Opinion

James Schlesinger, the former secretary of Energy, wrote recently that the science of climate change and global warming is uncertain. That is quite true, as far as it goes — but it doesn't go very far.

What does that mean for national policy? Does it mean, as the Bush administration argues, that any serious decisions should be put off to a later time when the scientists have achieved greater certainty? Schlesinger seems to be leaning in that direction.

In fact, the science may never be clear. Or it may become clear only after severe and damaging change.

Three things can be said about global climate change: (1) The world has grown measurably warmer over the past century. (2) The chief cause is probably carbon dioxide, a gas that traps heat and is generated by burning fossil fuels. The volume going into the atmosphere is rising steadily. And (3), nobody knows what's going to happen as the concentrations of carbon dioxide keep rising.

The geological record is full of warnings that when change comes, it can come exceedingly fast. The evidence hints at hidden trigger mechanisms that, once sprung, can send whole continents into radically different climates. It could happen for purely natural reasons, having nothing to do with human activities. But the rapid buildup of carbon dioxide from power plants, cars, and furnaces increases the risk. That much is not an uncertainty.

Faced with an unknown risk of a huge calamity, what should a government do?

It could spend a lot of money on further scientific research, call on industry to show voluntary restraint, and postpone any serious action into the indefinite future. That's what the Bush administration is doing.

The better policy would be to start now, gently and gradually, to discourage fuel use and encourage efficiency with a small tax on fuel — and put the country on notice that in years to come, if necessary, the tax would rise. It wouldn't affect consumers much immediately, but it would warn the people who build power plants and design cars that the premium on efficiency might go up substantially in the years for which they do their long-term planning. (Because it's a tax, it won't happen in this administration. But we're talking about what's best, not what's most likely.) A gradual beginning and a long-term perspective are important. Among the basic defects of the Kyoto treaty, which was designed to impose greenhouse-gas emission limits on all the industrial countries, is that it would have begun with a jolt, making energy suddenly a good deal more expensive.

President Bush was right to get the United States out of the Kyoto treaty. But he promised to develop an alternative — which, except for a little jawboning, he has never produced.

Another major shortcoming of Kyoto is that it puts no limits on emissions from developing countries. Any plan that does not include China and India is not worth much. To bring them in will require a lot of persuasion, including financial aid and technology transfers. No doubt many Americans will object to the idea of foreign aid to protect the climate. Perhaps they might want to reflect that a warmer world means ice melting at the South Pole, and when the sea level rises in the Bay of Bengal, it also rises in California and along the East Coast.

Scientific uncertainty is a fact of life. One purpose of public policy is to address uncertainty. It's not an excuse for inaction in confronting a rising risk.

Bill would allow states to cut Head Start programs

The House of Representatives is set to vote next week on a plan to turn over control of the federal Head Start program to the states. President Bush was touting the plan leading up to his trip to Africa, saying the program needed to do more to prepare children for kindergarten. The plan would let states control the Head Start funding, giving state governments control of how the funding is spent and better tailoring it to existing state pre-school programs. However, the Republican-backed plan would only threaten the continued existence of the 38-year-old program.

In Iowa, Head Start officials already work with the state Department of Education to dovetail preschool programs with Head Start. Head Start officials receive grants from the education agency to provide year-round and full-day daycare in this area, serving 670 children from Linn, Jones, Benton, Washington, and Johnson counties. The arrangement meets federal standards set by Head Start but uses state resources to add to the program. However, in other states, Head Start is the only preschool program offered.

The shift of control would begin with a five-year pilot program allowing eight states to control the Head Start money via grants subject to the governor's control. Under the bill, state funds earmarked for early childhood education wouldn't be allowed to be diverted, but the states would not be prevented from reallocating Head Start federal funds. Head Start programs would also follow a different set of federal guidelines, focusing on determining reading skills of pre-school students and qualifications of teachers rather than the resources the program is currently required to offer, including nutritional care.

Putting control of the Head Start resources in the hands of some state governors would allow state officials to diminish the program because it would no longer be governed by federal guidelines. States already have the flexibility to operate their programs in conjunction with Head Start.

The plan seems to follow in the footsteps of the "No Child Left Behind" philosophy of new standards without new funding. It would replace overall standards that include social skills and nutritional needs with standardized tests and literacy evaluations.

Bush is correct that Head Start needs to do more. It now reaches between one-quarter to one-half of the children eligible for the program, and it doesn't necessarily provide full-day resources. This bill, however, doesn't address the program's shortfalls — it creates the potential for new ones.

Breakups — how to keep it together

You're not always right and the other person wrong — statistically it's impossible ...

I have a better chance at winning the lottery than you do of having a writing career ...

It's abnormal that 85 percent of your friends grow to hate you ...

I'm sitting at my computer screen reading this. A lengthy, well-argued dissertation from an ex on why I suck. There's a crop of acne blooming on my chin and a cappuccino splotch on my right breast, and I'm too tired to care.

We've all had breakups like this — where you become as unrecognizable as the person insulting you. According to this e-mail, I rank somewhere in between slugs and chimps on the food chain. In response to this outburst, I want to flip my wrist and say, "Pfffffft, whatever. I'm not self-centered or selfish. I'm not petty. I can too hold onto relationships, romantic or otherwise. Most of all, I would never write this to anyone. The person who writes this is absurdly cruel, absurdly unhappy, and I'll take these allegations with a grain of salt — maybe even the whole shaker.

None of this is true. Of course I've felt the need to scream, throw a pillow, or just punch it. Of course I've been this upset with someone. The only difference is, I haven't put it down in writing, at least not anything that's seen the light of day. But now that it has been put down in writing, what do I do? Speculate on the other person's flaws? That's about as productive as attempting to solve an algebraic equation by chewing bubble gum.

Now, what to do. Here's a universal question for myself and everyone: What do you do when someone's extracted the most choice cuts of your character flaws? Presto, it's usually an instant recipe for self-loathing, the effect of which lingers for about a second until you call a friend, your mom, have a drink. Or two. Or three. Usually, I would have merely sat down with a stiff, sweet drink, bitched to a few friends, then forgotten about the whole thing. After doing all of these things, this time, I did something different.

MARIA NAZOS

Absolutely. Now, I'm starting to realize that growth can occur long after the romance is dead. It's human nature to clasp a wilted daffodil to one's chest and cry to friends. But for the first time, I'm starting to think it's OK to sort through verbal landfills, especially if they come from someone you cared about and trusted. Yes, I realize, there's much required hurt to ever pursue a friendship. Too many issues, drama, and so forth. And when any relationship — romantic or otherwise — starts to reek of pop psychology,

I stopped and wondered if this person had a point. (Or two. Or three.)

Then, instead of subjecting myself to further mudslinging, I did something most people — especially myself — don't do when dissed.

I stopped and carefully considered what this person said.

If relationships are for growing, then is listening to another person's post-relationship insults always out of line? I used to think:

then it's time to call it quits. Now, I'm using this time-out to think about how this person might be right. As a person who focuses on improving herself, it's the best and the least I can do. When someone tells me I'm accomplishing just the opposite of self-betterment, and that I've hurt other people, well, some self-examination is in order.

However, as I began the laborious task of sorting through the truth from the hurt, the BS from the anger, I realized it wasn't much of a task at all. We're all born with an inherent, efficient BS-detector. Sometimes the most painful stuff can be converted to the best stuff of all. I guess for now I'm looking for the truth in all the hurtful places, finally admitting to myself that I was hurt for a reason: It was the truth.

I don't typically listen to what others say. But now I feel like there is a distinct difference between being single-minded and strong-minded. People change all the time, and the last thing I want is to never grow and to only grow set in my ways. Sometimes, I still don't know which I want more: to hug or hate the writer of this e-mail. For now, I want to thank him.

Intelligence on Iraqi arms unravels

BY DAFNA LINZER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Most of what Washington and London knew about Saddam Hussein's suspected weapons programs before the war was based on old intelligence. The few new details, which garnered the most attention, are now under serious scrutiny and in question.

Some information about Iraq's purported chemical, biological, and nuclear-weapons programs has already been dismissed by U.N. inspectors or international experts. Other intelligence has turned out to be uncorroborated or has not been agreed upon by government officials at the CIA and State Department and in Britain.

With no weapons of mass destruction found three-and-a-half months since President Bush launched the war against Iraq, intelligence agencies on both sides of the Atlantic are now scrambling to explain not only why their information failed to lead U.S. troops to the goods but exactly how they came by the knowledge in the first place.

Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld acknowledged last week that no "dramatic new evidence" was discovered showing Saddam had weapons of mass destruction. "We acted because we saw the existing evidence in a new light through the prism of our experience on Sept. 11," Rumsfeld told the Senate Armed Services Committee.

According to a British House of Commons report released in London this week, the picture Tony Blair's government painted in 2002 "is little different from that set out in a much shorter document released by the government in 1998," ahead of four days of air strikes launched that year against Iraq.

Since Bush went to the United Nations on Sept. 12, 2002, the two English-speaking allies chose to highlight some of the long-unanswered questions identified by U.N. inspectors as they campaigned for world support for war against Saddam.

After eight years in the field, inspectors said in 1999 that they were still missing information from the Iraqis on the production of the nerve agent VX, evidence that 550 mustard-gas filled artillery shells were destroyed, and an accounting of ingredients for the production of anthrax and botulinum toxin.

Those items were highlighted in a State Department fact sheet distributed Dec. 19, 2002, together with several pieces of newer intelligence, such as a charge that Iraq was trying to purchase uranium from Niger. It also included a mention of mobile laboratories for a biological-weapons program and an allegation that Iraq was involved in a secret missile program.

U.N. nuclear inspectors from the International Atomic Energy Agency, which tried unsuccessfully to get evidence to support the uranium claim when the British alluded to it in September, now asked Washington to share what it knew on Niger.

Six weeks later, supporting documents were handed over to the U.N. inspection office in New York and within weeks, the nuclear agency was able to determine that the documents were forged. U.N. officials say they repeatedly asked Washington and London to provide any further evidence to support the charge.

"It was not provided to us," agency spokesman Mark Gwozdecky said.

Both the Bush administration and the government of Blair said Sunday that the president's statement in the State of the Union address about Iraq seeking uranium was accurate and is supported by other British and U.S. information.

"The British stand by their statement," National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice said on "Fox News on Sunday." "They have told us that despite the fact that we had apparently some concerns about that report, that they had other sources, and that they stand by the statement."

Nevertheless, Rice said the statement should not have been in the Jan. 20 speech in which Bush laid out reasons for military action against Iraq. "We have a higher standard for presidential speeches" than raw intelligence, she said.

Rice said Britain was unable to share more information it has with Washington because of sensitivities surrounding the source. But Britain, like all U.N. members, is resolution-bound to share any intelligence on Iraq's weapons programs with U.N. inspectors.

Robin Cook, who resigned from Blair's Cabinet to protest the war, told the House of Commons committee that information sharing between Washington and London was so intense that it was often difficult "to spot which raw data was originally gathered in the United Kingdom and which was originally gathered by the United States."

U.S. troops launch another offensive

BY BORZOU DARAGAH
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALAD, Iraq — Facing an increasingly organized and violent resistance, the U.S. Army stepped up pressure on pro-Saddam Hussein holdouts Sunday with a fourth large offensive in central Iraq.

At least four suspected loyalists were killed, and big weapons caches were captured in the operation, called Ivy Serpent, which aims to blunt potential anti-American attacks in the run-up to the now-banned holidays of Saddam's Baath Party.

Meanwhile, the military announced that one soldier was killed and two others injured early Sunday when a tractor trailer crashed accidentally into their vehicle, parked at a checkpoint outside a base in Diwaniyah, 100 miles south of Baghdad. The names of the soldiers were withheld pending family notification.

Also Sunday, Iraqi police and coalition forces exchanged fire at a military checkpoint in the Iraqi capital, witnesses said. They said a police vehicle drove up to a coalition checkpoint and started shooting, and U.S. soldiers returned fire. It was not clear if there were casualties, and the U.S. military had no immediate comment.

U.S. forces also detained nine "high-value targets" in raids near Mosul, in northern Iraq, none of them on the list of 55 most-wanted Iraqis from Saddam's old regime.

Ivy Serpent, launched late on July 12 in Sallahadin and DIALA provinces, has so far yielded more than 50 detainees in approximately a dozen raids before key holidays supported by Saddam loyalists. The four suspected anti-American militants were killed when they opened fire on Army scouts near Baquba, military officials said.

The Army said insurgents planned a series of attacks against U.S. soldiers to commemorate the July 14, 1958, overthrow of Iraq's King Faisal and the July 17, 1968, Baath Party coup.

"We want to get within the enemy's temple, disrupt his timing," said Col. David Hogg, the commander of 4th Infantry Division, 2nd Brigade.

The July 17 holiday was one of six banned July 12 in the first action of Iraq's new government council, which also named a national holiday marking Saddam's ouster.

the U.S. administrator, Paul Bremer, but he has said he will follow the council's decisions in all but the most extraordinary circumstances.

"The establishment of this council is an expression of the national Iraqi will in the wake of the collapse of the former oppressive regime," intoned Mohammed Bahr Uloom, an elderly, bespectacled Shiite Muslim cleric in gauzy black robes who was selected leader of Sunday's ceremonies.

"The people have won," said Ibrahim Jaffari, a leader of the Dawa Party, a Shiite political organization whose opposition to Saddam Hussein's government resulted in the execution of thousands of its members. "After all of these years and all of the sacrifices we have made, we have taken the first step toward democracy."

Bremer and other U.S. officials here hope the council, which was assembled over the past six weeks and culminated in a frantic series of meetings over the past few days, will play a key role in tempering public disenchantment and restoring stability.

They expect the council to appease Iraqi political leaders, who have been clamoring for a chance to govern, as well as ordinary people, who have called for a greater role for Iraqis in the postwar transition. U.S. officials believe that foisting responsibility for government operations on the council could help deflect public anger over the tardy resumption of basic services from the occupation authority.

A convoy of U.S. military vehicles passes the main road in Fallujah, 37 miles west of Baghdad on July 12.

Although Bremer and his top political aides contend that the council's members represent a cross-section of the country and will have wide public support, it is not clear how Iraqis will react to a group handpicked by the occupation authority. While some Baghdad residents said they would adopt a wait-and-see attitude, others dismissed the group as American lackeys. "We cannot trust them," said Mohammed Abbas, an Oil Ministry employee who joined legions of Iraqis in watching the announcement of the council on live satellite television.

The members, 22 men and three women, held a two-hour, closed-door meeting before walking onto the stage in a large conference hall. They sat in a semicircle of chairs to deliver a statement and answer questions from the media as Bremer and other dignitaries looked on from the front row.

UI worker remembered as 'fix-it' guy

Delano loved animals and had an extensive collection of more than 60 stuffed monkeys. Fisher didn't really know why Delano loved monkeys so much, explaining that "he was just kind of a monkey man."

Though Delano lived alone in his Coralville home, Fisher said, they had spent almost every day with each other for the past nine years. Delano had a three-legged cat named Ahab, who will now live with close friends of Delano. He named the 14-year old pet after the character in Moby Dick, one of his favorite books.

Delano worked for the UI for more than 20 years; before going to Oakdale, he had been a chief boiler operator at the main UI Power Plant.

The last contact anyone had with Delano was on the morning of July 4, when he left Fisher's home and told her he was headed to the Oakdale facility to work on his vehicle, something he did often, she said. Before leaving, they made plans to attend Coralville's Fourth of July festivities with Fisher's 4-year-old son, Zachary.

"That was their holiday; we always went to the fireworks," she said, adding that Delano had voluntarily taken on a father-figure role for her young son. "Zachary thought the world of his dad and considered him his best friend."

No one else would see or hear from Delano until the following morning, when, after a worrisome night, Fisher drove to the plant in search of Delano and found him in the basement garage of the facility, where he would have been doing automotive work.

UI police officials confirmed that Fisher was the last reported contact with Delano.

Amanda Delano described her uncle as a fix-it kind of guy who didn't drop his repairman ability at the plant doors.

"He would've done anything that you asked him to," she said. "If you need something fixed or repaired, he would do it if he could."

Swartzendruber now works alone at the power plant, unsure if and when someone will be hired to accompany him. Fisher said she, too, feels lonely and will miss Delano's help in raising Zachary.

"I'm lost," she said. "I'm just going to try to live day by day."

"He does not go out of my sight," she said, adding that it is the parents' responsibility to put limitations on what children can do when going to the beach.

Another parent, Andrew DiVerde, agreed that parents have a great responsibility when taking children to the Reservoir. Water can be dangerous, especially when the beach is crowded because it is hard to tell who is waving and calling for help and who is just having fun, DiVerde said, adding that he strictly adheres to a rule to keep his 1-year-old child safe.

"If the kid is in the water, you are in the water," he said.

On weekends, the Reservoir is also a popular place for people to drink, but Lorence and Perreau said they do not believe it is necessary to ban alcohol at the beach as long as people drink responsibly.

Although there are no imminent plans to ban drinking at the beach, Haas said, he never recommends drinking at the beach because it causes dehydration and loss of concentration.

"We are not out to spoil people's fun," he said, adding that beachgoers need to be careful and aware that other people are using the beach, too.

Haas strolled around the reservoir on July 12 and estimated the crowd to be 400 to 500. He said his presence was not due to the recent drownings and that there is always a ranger at the Reservoir when the beach is busy.

Daniel said that while children, and most adults, are usually happy to see his truck, not everyone likes the music. He pulls up behind an aqua Pontiac Grand Prix with a bumper sticker reading, "If I wanted to listen to the crap coming out of your stereo, I'd be sitting in your car."

"Kind of ironic, don't you think," Daniel says with a wink and a laugh as his signature tune, "Music Box Dancer" — a hit from his days as a disc jockey at the University of Pittsburgh radio station.

Rick Bradshaw, a resident of Regency Park, is one adult who said he doesn't mind Daniel's music.

"I am the Paul Revere of the ice cream world," he said, raising one hand in the air and licking an orange push-up pop in the other. Bradshaw spends some of his afternoons riding his bicycle ahead of Daniel, letting residents know the ice-cream truck is coming.

"I envision myself coming up over the hill, looking down on the people at their picnics, then flicking on the lights and music, and everyone will come running," Daniel said, as he licks the frozen fruit mango bar — his personal favorite — adding, "I'm into the performance-art aspect of the business."

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Spot starter Kerry Robinson hit an RBI triple and scored the go-ahead run in the seventh inning as the St. Louis Cardinals beat the San Diego Padres, 3-1.

Both benches cleared in the first inning when Albert Pujols was hit in the shoulder blade on the first pitch he saw from Adam Eaton.

Eaton was immediately ejected, and Pujols, Padres catcher Gary Bennett, and San Diego manager Bruce Bochy also were kicked out.

Rookie Dan Haren allowed one run in six innings for the Cardinals.

OSU's Clarett investigated

BY JONATHAN DREW
ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Ohio State's Athletics Department will investigate a report that star Maurice Clarett received special assistance to help him pass a class before the Fiesta Bowl.

In a story Sunday in the New York Times, an associate professor said Clarett was allowed to take two oral exams for the African-American and African studies class after he walked out of the fall midterm.

It wasn't clear whether university or NCAA rules were broken. The associate professor, Paulette Pierce, said she has taken similar steps with students who are not athletes.

"We recognize that the spotlight will always be on the national champion," university President Karen Holbrook said at a news conference Sunday. "Being in the spotlight makes it even more important for us to respond quickly and appropriately to these allegations."

Calls placed by the Associated Press to the home of Clarett's mother in Warren went unanswered Sunday. The Times said he did not respond to its requests for an interview.

Athletics Director Andy Geiger said he was not aware of any NCAA violations and that Clarett — then a freshman on the Buckeyes' national championship team — was not given preferential treatment.

"There are no special considerations for student-athletes," Geiger said Sunday.

Holbrook said Geiger and incoming interim Provost Barbara Snyder will lead the investigation, which will examine athletes' athletic performance, tutors who work with the program, and the relationship between athletes and faculty members. No time frame was set.

Clarett finished high school a semester early and enrolled at Ohio State in January 2002.

Despite numerous injuries, he set Ohio State freshman records with 1,237 yards rushing and 16 touchdowns last season as the Buckeyes beat Miami, 31-24, in double-overtime for the national title.

Armstrong finally takes yellow jersey

BY JOHN LEICESTER ASSOCIATED PRESS

L'ALPE D'HUEZ, France — Lance Armstrong took the overall leader's yellow jersey for the first time in the Tour de France, but he showed signs that he may not be the dominant force of years past.

The four-time champion struggled up the legendary ascent to the Alpine ski resort of L'Alpe d'Huez — a grueling climb he mastered just two years ago — and finished third in the eighth stage of the Tour.

"If you'd asked me a month ago: 'Are you going to suffer like that on L'Alpe d'Huez?' I would have said, 'No way,'" Armstrong said Sunday. "It was a hard day."

He did, however, complete the stage close enough to the winner, Iban Mayo of Spain, to take the overall lead in the race.

"I'm perhaps not as strong as the other years," said Armstrong, who usually leaves rivals in his wake in the punishing mountains. "Let's hope that things get better and not worse."

In overall standings, Spain's Joseba Beloki, the 2002 Tour runner-up, is second, 40 seconds back; Mayo trails Armstrong by 1 minute, 10 seconds. "A dream has become reality," Mayo said after winning Sunday's stage. "L'Alpe d'Huez is a mythical stage."

Armstrong didn't respond Sunday when Mayo broke away dramatically from the champion and other riders up the 8.5-mile climb, with its 21 hairpin bends.

Peaking at 6,105 feet, L'Alpe d'Huez is a renown part of the Tour's 100-year history. In 2001, Armstrong toyed with his rivals, making them think he was exhausted, before powering up the mountain to win.

Sunday's race was different.

 you didn't know

The Major League Baseball logo is supposedly based on a photo of former Senators and Twins player Harmon Killebrew.

IN BRIEF

Perry continues hot streak in Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Kenny Perry isn't about to analyze the hottest streak of his career.

"I don't know why all of a sudden I'm winning golf tournaments," Perry said after his victory Sunday at the Greater Milwaukee Open, his third win in four starts. "It's just my time, and I believe in my heart I'm going to win."

Perry sank a three-foot birdie putt for a one-stroke victory over Steve Allan and Heath Slocum at the GMO.

He won the Colonial and Memorial Tournaments and finished third at the U.S. Open before taking three weeks off leading up to the GMO at Brown Deer Park, where he shot a 4-under-par 66 Sunday for a 12-under 268 total.

Brett Quigley finished in fourth, two strokes back.

Allan, Slocum, and Quigley all were vying for their first PGA Tour victory.

"I had nothing to lose, and those guys are fighting to win their first," said Perry, a seven-time winner on Tour who surpassed $13 million in career winnings.

Perry had to rally after his one-shot lead over Allan turned into a three-stroke deficit over a 16-minute span thanks to a bogey on the 12th hole and a double-bogey on No. 13.

Over the final four holes, Perry, who began the day with a one-stroke lead over six golfers, including Allan, had three birdies and a par and Allan shot three pars and a bogey.

Daniel wins soggy Canadian open

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Beth Daniel birdied the final two holes in rainy conditions for a 4-under 68 and a one-stroke victory over Juli Inkster at the Canadian Women's Open on Sunday.

Daniel, 46, finished at 13-under 275 for her 34th career title and first win since 1995. The 23-year LPGA veteran made a 3-foot birdie putt on the par-3 17th to tie Inkster, 43, at 12 under.

Daniel laid up to 104 yards on the par-5 18th, but knocked her wedge to 7 feet. After Inkster left her 12-foot birdie putt short, Daniel made a right-to-left breaking putt for the $195,000 win.

Daniel and Inkster — both LPGA and World Hall of Fame members — started the day tied at 9 under and battled for 18 holes at Point Grey Golf and Country Club.

Daniel birdied the first and third holes to take a two-stroke lead, but missed makable birdie putts on the 10th and 11th holes to give Inkster a chance.

Inkster made up one stroke with a birdie on the 485-yard, par-5 10th, and took the lead with a two-stroke swing on No. 12.

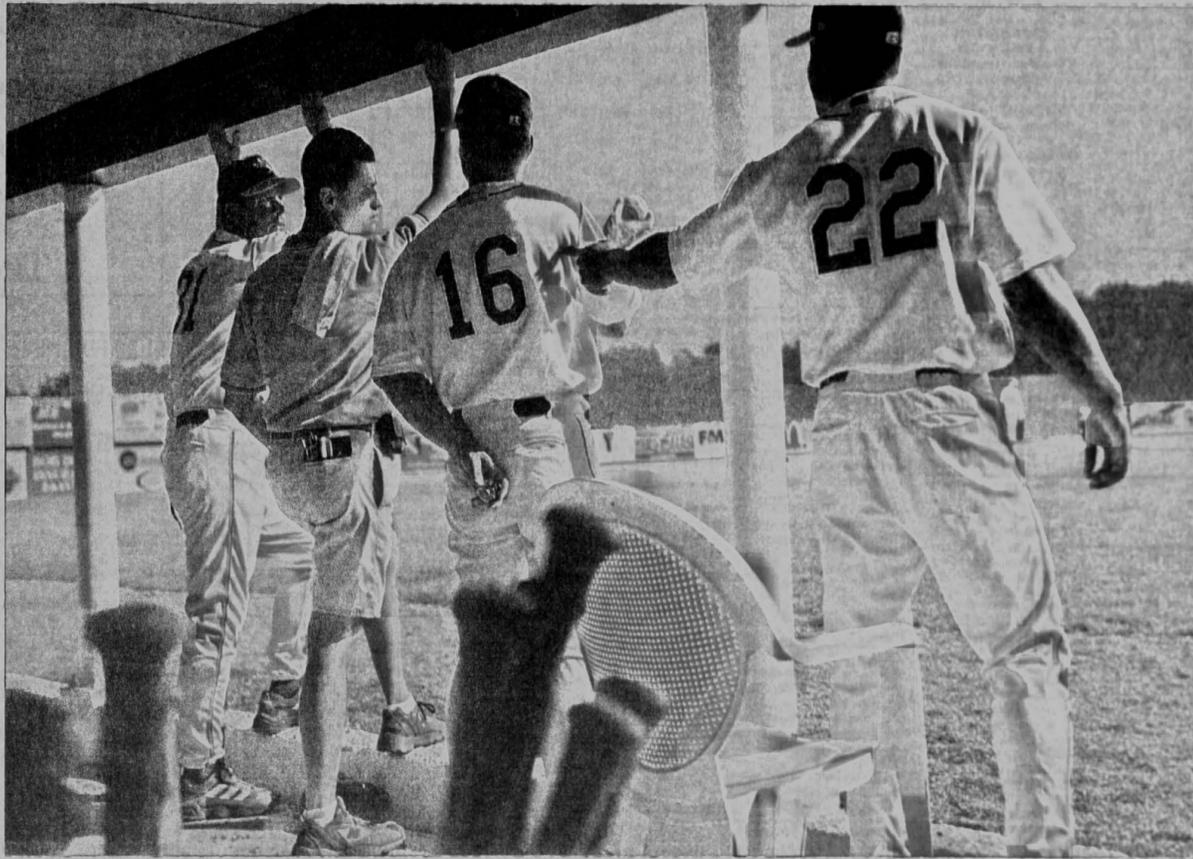

Inkster made a 2-foot birdie putt on the 12th, while Daniel struggled to a bogey after hitting her tee shot into the thick rough on the right side.

Top: Burlington pitcher Kieran Mattison gets the attention of pitching coach Tom Burgmeier during a game against the Clinton LumberKings on July 2 at Community Field in Burlington.

Bottom: A fan takes time out of the Bees and LumberKings baseball game to purchase concessions in Burlington. Price of a hot dog: $1.50.

'The grass roots of baseball'

BY J.K. PERRY
 THE DAILY IOWAN

Even at 9:30 in the evening, the heat enveloped all those who sat in anticipation of a Burlington Bees rally in the bottom of the ninth. The humidity made the lights in the outfield cast a ghoully glow, while the intensity of the game and the sweltering night made the fans sweat.

The Bees, a Single-A affiliate of the Kansas City Royals, managed to score to pull within one run of the Clinton LumberKings. The Bees put runners on first and second with one out but stranded them and lost, 3-2.

Highway 218 provided the best way to get there, and after reaching Community Field, 2712 Mount Pleasant St., the odometer read right around 70 miles.

Admission for student, seniors, and military personnel was $4; a general admission ticket goes for $5.25. The woman taking tickets at the gate, Kathy John, was friendly despite having to tell her two sons to go and find something to do. Turns out she is a Cubs fan, and when the Sammy Sosa corked-bat incident took place, she caught some heat. "You wouldn't believe how many corks I got handed," she said.

To get to the concourse, you have to be careful of flying sunflower seeds being rained from above by unruly but well-meaning kids.

Walking underneath the grandstands up the concourse and into the park, one is immediately struck by the feeling of minor-league baseball — bleachers throughout the grandstand except for the box seats up front and a wooden outfield fence painted with advertisements from local businesses.

Straightaway center is 400 feet, right is 318, and left comes in at 338 in the stadium, whose stated capacity is 3,502.

"I think this is one of the best ball parks in the league," said Dick Dobson, a 25-year member of the club's board of directors. "The players are closer than [in] a lot of the others."

Community Fields, which partially burned down 30 years ago, has hosted the longest running full-time baseball team in a town of only 25,000.

Deals are plentiful: 2 for 1 Tuesday's on admission, Monday has $1 pizza, dogs, admission, beer, pop, and popcorn, and on Saturdays, a family of four can gain admission for only $13.

By the third inning, food was essential, so I headed back down the concourse to the food stand. A couple of hot dogs cost $1.50 a piece and a Coke went for $1.75. The dogs were decent, not major league by any means, but for the price, what can you expect?

The gift stand right across from the food stand contained loads of Bees apparel and memorabilia. The shop didn't stock any jerseys, but the most popular T-shirt there was fairly inexpensive, as was the cap.

The atmosphere at the park was family-oriented, with varied activities and contests for kids to get involved in, such as pizza-box relay and the hula-hoop test.

Thirteen-year Bees season-pass holder and St. Louis Cardinals fan Janice Hobby commented on past and present Bees. Such players as Mark Buehrle of the White Sox and Paul Molitor, formerly of the Brewers, Blue Jays, and Twins have passed through under these lights.

"[Albert] Pujols used to kill us," she said about the former Peoria Cardinals minor leaguer, now a major-league All-Star.

Despite the team's fairly uneventful past four seasons, four-year general manager Chuck Brockett feels this is not only important point in these young baseball players' careers but also for baseball.

"This is what they call the grass roots of baseball," he said.

Hawkeye guards pace Game Time victory

BY FRANK KLIPSCH
 THE DAILY IOWAN

It was a Crystal/Kristi combo that set the tone for Bob's Your Uncle Pizza Café Sunday afternoon against Coralville Hy-Vee in a Game Time League match-up at a crowded North Liberty Community Center.

Hawkeye point guards Crystal Smith and Kristi Faulkner attacked the rim early and often for a well-balanced Bob's team, while streaky shooting forced Hy-Vee to play catch up. Despite a brief run by Hy-Vee in the second half, Bob's continued to put the ball in the hole, finishing strongly and winning, 83-69.

Faulkner

The lightning-quick Smith made an impression on both ends of the floor, tipping balls and stealing passes on defense and leading Bob's on offense with 15 points and five assists. Faulkner ended with 12 points.

Hy-Vee was led once again by former Iowa State forward Mary Coefield. The veteran hit 70 percent from the floor to go with an impressive 4-8 from 3-point territory. Coefield's former Cyclone teammate, guard Megan McCracken, tried to shoot her way into a rhythm, but never got there. McCracken finished with only 10 points on 4-17 shooting.

The senior Faulkner saw more floor time at the point than the sophomore Smith for the Hawkeyes last season. But the Game Time League has allowed the talented duo to put in a lot of court time together.

"I like this a lot better," said the 5-6 Smith. "It's nice to get a chance to work with her."

With about five minutes left to play, Hy-Vee put a nice run together to make the game exciting.

McCracken connected on an 18-footer off the dribble from the right wing. On the next play, she came off a screen by UNI's Amy Swisher to knock down a 3 from the top of the key.

The resulting confidence spread throughout the Hy-Vee squad when Cyclone Brittany Wilkins made a steal and rumbled her 6-3 body the length of the floor for a difficult lay-up while being fouled. The resulting free throw cut the lead to eight, 65-73.

It was the closest Hy-Vee would get.

On the next play, Smith regained the momentum as she demonstrated her fearless tenacity by running the length of the floor through two bone-jarring picks. She finally caught up to McCracken and tipped the ball away.

"We have to have good teamwork and play transition defense," Smith said. "And we've got to make our shots."

The Game Time League play-offs will begin Tuesday with Bob's matching up with Westport Touchless Autowash at 6:30 p.m. Cullen Printing will face Goodfellow Printing at 8.
