Do-not-call suffers 2nd legal blow

BY CAROLINE E. MAYER
WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — A federal judge in Denver late Thursday ruled that the government's plan to curb unsolicited telemarketing calls was unconstitutional, another blow to plans to implement a national do-not-call list next week.

The decision by U.S. District Judge Edward Nottingham was announced just minutes after Congress, in a rare display of speed and bipartisanship, voted to overturn another federal judge's decision on the matter.

Since late June, consumers have registered more than 50 million phone numbers on the Federal Trade Commission's anti-telemarketing list. Under the agency's plans, enforcement was slated to begin Oct. 1, with telemarketers risking an $11,000 fine each time they called a number on the list.

But Nottingham found the do-not-call plan unconstitutional on freedom of speech grounds because it would have allowed telemarketers for charitable organizations to continue to call numbers on the list, even though commercial firms would be barred from doing so.

"There is no doubt whether unwanted calls seeking charitable contributions are as invasive to the privacy of someone sitting down to dinner at home as unwanted calls from commercial telemarketers," Nottingham wrote. By exempting charitable solicitations, the FTC "has imposed a content-based limitation on what the consumer may ban from his home ... thereby entangling the government in deciding what speech consumers should hear."

"The First Amendment prohibits the government from enacting laws creating a preference for certain types of speech based on content, without asserting a valid interest, premised on content, to justify its discrimination," the judge said.

The ruling was one more twist in an intensifying legal battle, just one week before the do-not-call list was to take effect.

On Thursday, a little more than 24 hours after legislators learned of an Oklahoma City federal judge's ruling invalidating the FTC national registry, the House approved, 412-8, a measure giving the agency the go-ahead to launch its anti-telemarketing program. Five hours later, the Senate followed suit, on a 95-0 vote, to approve an identical bill.

Congress' goal was to have the measure on President Bush's desk for his signature today, so that Americans could start getting fewer telemarketing calls beginning Oct. 1. Bush issued a statement saying he looked forward to signing the measure. "The millions of people who have signed up for the list have the right to reduce unwanted telephone solicitations," he said.

Congress was responding to a decision issued by U.S. District Judge Lee West of Oklahoma City, who had ruled that the FTC lacked specific authority from Congress to develop and enforce the do-not-call list.

In approving its legislation, congressmen sought to tell the

Taking $80 million out for a spin

An afternoon at the UI National Advanced Driving Simulator proves to be a whirlwind experience for a DI reporter

STORY BY CHRISTINA ERB
THE DAILY IOWAN

My breath stuck in my throat as I hammered the brake. Traffic in the right lane barreled past, and all I saw was the front end of a green jeep speeding toward me. My heart stopped, I clenched my teeth while cursing, and thought the cute boy I have a crush on will never know. Then I realized I was OK — it was only a simulator, and my second thought following that stomach-dropping experience was that the nurse in the back seat of the Chevrolet Malibu had heard me swear. I glanced at two cameras an arm's length away and figured that the technicians at the UI's National Advanced Driving Simulator were laughing at me.

I'm guilty, I'll admit it. Guilty of driving with my foot perched on the dashboard, chatting on my cell phone, and applying mascara while roaring down I-80 at 75 mph.

But Tuesday morning, when I entered the simulator center on the Oakdale campus, I was ready to wow them with my phenomenal driving abilities. After all, I only missed three points on my driver's ed exam.

Wendy Moorehead, the external-relations director for the simulator, gave me a bright red identification card and led me to a secured door that took us into the interior of the $80 million center. The world's most-advanced driving simulator costs $1,000 per hour and attracts clients from across the world. It was like wandering into Area 51.

The rig is propped up in the middle of a white dome, with one door locked from the outside. Located inside a carpeted room the size of a basketball court, 64-by-64 feet, the simulator can tilt up to 9 degrees, creating the most realistic experience current technology can offer.

Included in its program are such real-life scenarios as high-way interstates, high-speed inner-city traffic, running deer, construction zones, bad drivers, and the dreaded bouncing ball, said Judith Wightman, a research

State rejects area facility for rehab

BY WILLIAM MIKESSELL
THE DAILY IOWAN

UI graduate students who hoped to finish their clinical evaluations in rehabilitation facilities locally are having to look elsewhere following the rejection of a proposed 50-bed hospital in North Liberty.

Turning down the $14.25 million Hawkeye Rehabilitation Hospital keeps many students from completing their training inpatient because too few options exist, said David Nielsen, the director of the UI graduate program in physical therapy and rehabilitation science.

"A facility would have supported that," especially helping rural residents in the area, he said. "Having a facility like that here close to our program would enhance our education mission and our research mission."

Diversified Rehabilitation Services, which proposed building the inpatient-care facility at the 1500 block of West Penn Street, failed to persuade the state's Health Facilities Council on Sept. 19 that a freestanding rehab hospital was needed. Currently, no inpatient-rehabilitation beds exist in Johnson County, leaving the closest facilities in Cedar Rapids, Davenport, Waterloo, and Dubuque.

The proposed 53,000 square-foot hospital would have employed 90 people and provided care for patients with head trauma, strokes, amputations, as well as orthopedic and spinal-cord injuries.

Another clinic is not needed, though, because sufficient facilities already exist statewide, said Laura Rainey, a St. Luke's Hospital spokeswoman.

The rehab unit at St. Luke's only fills around halfway each day, she said. "We think we can handle the need without an additional 50-bed hospital."

No accidents in reading collision signs

BY PAULA MAVROUDIS
THE DAILY IOWAN

Iowa City police Officer Allan Mebus never uses the word "accident" to describe a car crash.

In fact, his students — who are completing their hours for traffic-collision reconstructionist certification — are so discouraged from using the word, they have to put a quarter in the "a-word jar" — a swear jar of sorts — if they say it.

"They're not accidents; people screw up," he said. "People don't accidentally speed. It's very rarely a true accident."

Mebus, a 13-year veteran, started his training to be a traffic-collision reconstructionist in 1984. When a collision is reported, he is out on the scene, measuring tire-skid marks and damage to vehicles to determine the speeds of the drivers, impact of the collision, and, eventually, the fault. Sound a lot like the stars of "CSI"? Hardly, he says.

"It can take up to 16 weeks for us to fully complete an investigation," he said. "On those shows, they can get DNA samples within a half-hour. Their technology is accurate, but the timing is off."

Mebus remembers spending 72-straight hours on an investigation a few years ago. He admits that balancing his outside life with his job can be difficult. Usually, however, he said his job feels like "indefinite periods of boredom intermingled with brief moments of sheer terror."

Currently investigating the collision that killed 20-year-old UI student Amanda Skolnick three weeks ago, he said he couldn't comment on the investigation but added that it has been difficult because he's only heard information from a few witnesses.

Mebus can spend up to five hours measuring and drawing a scaled-down map of the collision, complete with tire marks and models of the cars; even though most people use computers and get it done in almost half the time, Mebus prefers figuring the complicated math and physics formulas by hand. Coralville police Lt. Shane Krone, also a certified traffic-collision reconstructionist, agrees that doing the figures by hand is much better.

Krone and Mebus measure each tire skid's angle and length to determine the direction and approximate speed of the car that caused the impact. They also take into consideration an endless number of variables, such as the position in the street and the speed limits of the road.

"We have to evaluate absolutely everything," said Krone, who is also a 13-year veteran.

He spent 18 months earning his certification in collision reconstruction. During that time, he had basic training in class, then several weeks of technical and other advanced collision-investigation classes.

"Because they're specially trained to do it, every reconstructionist's results usually come out the same," said Iowa City Police Chief R.J. Winkelhake. "Their

Rienow-kidnap suspect pleads not guilty

A man charged with the third-degree kidnapping of a UI student with intent to commit sexual assault pleaded not guilty in 6th District Court in Johnson County on Thursday.

Keith T. Hilson, 19, of Oskaloosa allegedly forced a woman into a bathroom in Rienow Residence Hall on Aug. 24 around 1:04 a.m. and attempted to sexually abuse her. The woman filed a complaint with UI police following the incident.

The incident prompted university officials to post notices to students emphasizing the importance of personal safety. Students were warned not to prop residence-hall doors open, which could allow strangers to enter. They were also reminded to lock their doors and report suspicious persons to UI police.

Dennis Cohen, Hilson's attorney, said the pretrial conference and trial dates will be set this month.

Prison escapee pleads guilty to carjacking

A convicted murderer who escaped from the Iowa Medical & Classification Center and eluded authorities for more than a month before turning himself in has pleaded guilty to federal carjacking charges.

Omar Wilkins, 20, will be sentenced Dec. 1 in U.S. District Court in Davenport — the same day his fellow escapee, 38-year-old Jeffrey Hershberger, will go to trial to contest his charges, said Al Overbaugh, a spokesman for the U.S. Attorney's Office in Des Moines.

Wilkins pleaded guilty to the two counts on Aug. 27, Overbaugh said.

Hershberger and Wilkins escaped April 12 by scaling a security fence topped with barbed wire while a guard was distracted. They then forcibly removed a Cedar Rapids man from a Ford Taurus in the parking lot and escaped. They then carjacked a fisherman near the Coralville Reservoir.

Police arrested Hershberger six days after the incident near a set of tennis courts in Atlanta. Wilkins surrendered May 19.

Overbaugh said authorities aren't yet sure where Hershberger will stand trial; likely locations are Rock Island or Des Moines.

Reece named board president again

The Iowa City School Board re-elected Lauren Reece as its president by a 4-3 vote on Thursday, ending a deadlock from the previous day.

Reece beat fellow member Jan Lef for the position at a brief meeting following a 3-3 tie caused by Don Jackson's absence Wednesday. Jackson was appointed the board's vice president at the same meeting.

Asked about her goals, Reece said she "hopes to maintain the work we've been doing. We want to remove barriers to learning and oversee successful completion of the board's projects."

The board's next meeting is scheduled for Oct. 2 at 5 p.m.

Rights group names local award winners

BY MARY BETH LARUE
THE DAILY IOWAN

The 20th Annual Human Rights Award Breakfast, hosted by the Iowa City Human Rights Commission Thursday, awarded three people associated with the UI, one community member, and a local business for their work toward the improvement of the community.

Leonard Sandler, the director of the College of Law's Legal Clinic, received the Isabel Turner Award. His projects included a three-year renovation to make Hickory Hill Park handicapped-accessible and assisting with the design and construction of an accessible home, according to a university press release.

"Working with human rights has given me a greater appreciation for differences and different perspectives," he said. "Improving people's lives improves your own."

Sandler said his law students provide technical assistance and accessibility, customer service, employment, Web resources, and technology to businesses, agencies, and individuals in both the public and private sector. Since 1995, 73 students have been involved.

John-Paul Chaisson-Cardenas, a graduate student in the School of Social Work and newly appointed director of Latino Affairs for the state, received the Rick Graf Award. For the last decade, he has been an advocate for the Latino community and other culturally and linguistically diverse communities in the Iowa City area and across the state. His projects include an annual conference, "Strengthening & Valuing Latino Communities in Iowa," according to a university press release.

"I would like to remind Iowans that human rights start at home," Chaisson-Cardenas said. "Many times we believe that injustice is Gayane Torosyan, a UI graduate student in the UI School of Journalism and Mass Communication and a WSUI producer, received the International Award. She has initiated and hosted numerous radio programs focusing on human-rights issues. In the past, she has worked with the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees in Armenia developing small-business grants for refugee families, according to a university press release.

"My job is to inform the public so that they can make their own decisions," Torosyan said. "Because of commercial and political brainwashing, an extra effort is often needed to bring up issues and voices that would otherwise be silenced."

Rita Offutt, the director of the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill of Johnson County as well as the homeless coordinator for the Star Program, received the Person in a Service Organization Award.

The Business Award went to Thai Flavors, 340 E. Burlington St. Since the restaurant opened, Thai Flavors has donated almost $9,000 to Iowa City nonprofit organizations.

The future of learning may be as simple as having new dogs teach old tricks.

Andrew Williams uses Sony AIBO robotic dogs to interest students in computer programming. The UI assistant professor of electrical-computer engineering showcased three 9-inch-tall, shiny metal puppies that performed a choreographed dance during a university computing showcase Thursday.

Williams is one of seven recipients of the 2003 Innovations in Instructional Computing Award who exhibited projects in a dim auditorium humming with the sound of revolving hard drives. In the past 10 months, winners used grants to purchase equipment and student labor to transform two-page proposals into projects that are ready for the classroom.

When UI computer-science graduate student George Thomas describes the required first-year computer-programming class, he uses one word: "Painful." He learned the trade by writing small programs in a class with a simple display on a monitor, but future UI students may learn from a robot dog.

The goal of the program, sponsored by the Academic Technologies Advisory Council, is to improve instruction in the university's classes and determine how technology can be adapted by any subject for more interactive classes, said Molly Langstaff, the director of academic technologies in the Information Technology Services.

Geography Professor Marc Armstrong and Assistant Professor Dave Bennett submitted a project designed to facilitate instruction in geography. They hope to link the environment and computers for students by using hand-held PDA devices with a Global Positioning System interface to take labs outdoors.

They want to use the PDAs for such exercises as plotting flood plains on the Iowa River and observing how changing water levels affect the landscape.

Others who won awards include:

- Joan Huntley, who created a third-generation, Web-based conference system that improves existing distance-learning technology.

- Catherine Woodman, who was honored for configuring a PDA to provide immediate bedside information to psychiatry residents.

- Scott Fiddelke, for developing a tool that allows instructors to deliver Internet lectures and slides.

- Marian Muste, Anton Kruger, and William Eichinger for developing the first virtual-fluids lab in the world.

Dems engage in sharp debate

BY JIM VANDEHEI
WASHINGTON POST

NEW YORK — The 10 Democratic presidential candidates sparred for two hours over the economy Thursday, displaying deep, and sometimes highly personal, disagreements over tax cuts for the middle class, global trade, and health care.

In the longest and most contentious debate so far, the leading candidates roundly criticized President Bush's spending for Iraqi reconstruction, but they generally agreed the president should and likely will get most if not all the $87 billion he has requested to continue operations there and in Afghanistan. The candidates called on Bush to pay for the funding by repealing scheduled tax cuts, though none of the top-tier Democrats said they would oppose the spending bill if he does not.

Retired Army Gen. Wesley Clark, who entered the race only nine days ago, did nothing to hurt his nascent campaign during the debate, party strategists said. But he offered little in the way of new details about the policies he would pursue. Clark, who generally appeared at ease as he answered questions, stayed silent when other candidates engaged in the most spirited and personal exchanges of the young campaign.

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., scrambling to thwart rival Howard Dean's momentum, showed a new, more aggressive style, repeatedly attacking the former Vermont governor for advocating a complete repeal of the Bush tax cuts and curtailing of foreign trade. Kerry, who wants to retain Bush's tax cuts for middle-class families, said Dean is "absolutely wrong" on taxes and "pandering to people" by telling them he would "shut the door" to foreign trade.

Kerry, who trails Dean in key early voting states, is trying to position himself as a centrist alternative. After other candidates joined Kerry in criticizing him, Dean said: "We need to remember the enemy here is George Bush, not each other."

Compared with recent debates, Bush drew fewer attacks. With pressure intensifying on all of the leading candidates to distinguish themselves, they set their sights on each other.

Thursday's debate over economics at Pace University showed the campaign is clearly breaking into a fight between the more centrist candidates and the more liberal. Kerry, Clark, and Sen. Bob Graham, D-Fla., want to retain Bush's tax cuts for the middle class and encourage free trade, while the more left-leaning Dean and Rep. Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., want to repeal all of Bush's tax cuts and pull back from unfettered foreign trade.

"The debate going on between us is really a debate over whether we want to take the Democratic Party back to where it was before Bill Clinton transformed it in 1992 or whether we want to take it forward," said Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn. "Some of my opponents here, including Howard Dean and Dick Gephardt, want to repeal all the tax [cuts]. That would mean a middle-class tax increase. Some forgot that Bill Clinton was for trade that created jobs, and they're against trade today."

Daley associates charged with fraud

CHICAGO (AP) — Two members of a prominent family close to Mayor Richard M. Daley were indicted on fraud charges Thursday, accused of getting more than $100 million in city contracts through schemes including passing off male-controlled businesses as female-owned.

James Duff, 45, of Burr Ridge and his mother, Patricia Green Duff, 75, of Chicago were among seven people charged with fraud and other counts.

James Duff's father, John Duff, has been a fund-raiser for Daley, and members of the family have socialized with him.

The indictments follow a four-year investigation and mark the first time corruption charges have been brought against anyone so close to the mayor, although many aldermen and other Chicago political officials have been convicted of corruption in recent years.

Daley was not accused of any wrongdoing in the case. His office did not immediately return a call seeking comment.

City officials certified several Duff-owned companies as female-owned, which allowed the firms to get contracts reserved for women and minorities.

The companies, mostly involved in maintenance work, lost their woman-owned status in 1999 after an investigation determined that male members of the Duff family were making the decisions.

James Duff's defense attorney, James Streicker, said his client will plead not guilty.

"Obviously, I'm disappointed that my client has been indicted, but I'm also speaking for him when I say he's relieved," Streicker said. "He's been under investigation for almost four years. It has been a never-ending investigation that has been very torturous for him."

Controversy over city business for Daley friends is not new.

Alderman Patrick Huels resigned from the City Council in 1997 following disclosure that he helped a contractor and Daley friend get a subsidy. Huels, who was never charged, also received a $1.2 million loan from the contractor.

At the time, Daley said he had been "lax" and pushed an ethics ordinance through the council.

10 years later, microchip reunion for cat, man

SAN CARLOS, Calif. (AP) — Call it Ted's excellent adventure, with a high-tech twist: A cat with an ID microchip implanted under his skin was returned to his owner 10 years after he jumped out a window and vanished.

Chris Inglis' sleek, black feline, Ted, was fitted with the chip in the early 1990s, when the technology was still new. But he was gone without a trace for a full decade before someone found him this week.

Ted — named for Keanu Reeves' character in Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure — was brought to the Peninsula Humane Society's animal shelter, which tracked down Inglis despite outdated information on the chip. The cat was found around 13 miles south of where Inglis used to live in Burlingame.

When the pair reunited Wednesday, the cat "rubbed his face on my hand, climbed right up, and started purring," Inglis said. "It's pretty monumental. It's almost surreal."

Where Ted spent all those years remains a mystery, but it appeared someone had been taking care of him. Inglis remembers that one of the things he and Ted liked to do was cruise around in his car. On their way home from the shelter, Inglis said Ted "put his front paws on the dashboard," just like in the old days.

Teddy bear grounded — security risk

MASON CITY, Iowa (AP) — A teddy bear that was supposed to be a geography lesson for children in an after school program will not take off because of security issues.

"Travel Ted," a stuffed bear, was to be handed off between national and international pilots, who would send postcards "from Ted," telling the children his location.

However, Ted could not get clearance for airline flights, said Kellie Moorehead, the director of the After Hours Academy for Kids at Madison Elementary School.

"I figured that once he made it through X-ray, that that would clear him," Moorehead said. "But Mesaba told us that the way they are set up now, they couldn't allow for Ted."

Mesaba Airlines operates as a Northwest Jetlink and Airlink partner under service agreements with Northwest Airlines Corp.

A local Mesaba spokeswoman declined to comment Wednesday afternoon.

Approximately 20 children, from kindergarten through fifth-grade, were at the airport Sept. 19, with send-off signs when security personnel told them that Ted didn't have the proper credentials.

Moorehead said she had talked to local officials and thought Ted's flight plan had been approved. But the pilot told Moorehead that approval would have to come through the airline's headquarters.

Moorehead said Ted will have to find another mode of transportation.

The kids are pretty disappointed," Moorehead said. "They don't understand. They say, 'He's just a teddy bear.'"

Red tape snarls Iowa security funds

BY AMY LORENTZEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES — Federal funding for homeland security in Iowa is more than triple what counties expected, but red tape at the federal and state levels has delayed the delivery of training and new equipment to local police, fire departments, and hospitals.

New distribution procedures are slowing down the delivery of more than $25 million in first responder funds to the counties, officials said.

"The kind of coordination that needs to take place here ... is at the scale we have never had to do before," said Bob Mulqueen, a public-policy analyst for the Iowa State Association of Counties.

Counties have had to apply for grants, and the state, which had trouble detailing the exact totals of the money it will receive, has had to learn to be the middleman as it waits for the federal government to dole out the money.

Mulqueen and Warren County Emergency Management Coordinator Mahala Cox said part of the problem may be holdups at the federal level.

"The state hasn't gotten a lot of guidance from the federal government," she said.

Mulqueen said the feds have had difficulty deciding how to portion out the money to the states.

Iowa's Homeland Security Adviser Ellen Gordon said the state has had to implement a new administrative system for distribution of the funds, including taking orders for equipment — such as gas masks, radios, and bomb detectors — that counties want the state to buy with their share of the money.

"We think we have finally streamlined that purchasing process," she said Wednesday. State officials thought they would get only $7.6 million of $48 million originally promised by the Bush Administration for the current budget year. Congress then approved a second round of funding under the State Homeland Security Grant Program, giving Iowa another $17.6 million.

"I think it is more than they [counties] were expecting," said Gordon. The state had received more than $72 million in homeland security funding over the past 2-and-a-half years. About 80 percent of the money will be divided among counties who have applied for it. The state gets the rest to pay for planning, training, and equipment as well as research at Iowa's public universities. About 90 of Iowa's counties applied for the first round of funding, and all have applied for the second, Gordon said. Cox said she was pleased by the jump in funding. In April, she thought there wouldn't be enough money — only about $44,000 — for Warren County to pay for safety equipment for first responders. Now, her county could get as much as $150,000, with more to come in the future, she said. "I'm feeling a lot better that the homeland security project of equipping and training [local governments] is going to be a long-term commitment by the federal government," Cox said.

judge otherwise. "We should probably call the bill 'This Time We Really Mean It Act,'" said Rep. Billy Tauzin, R-La., who as chairman of the House Energy and Commerce committee spearheaded the congressional move to adopt legislation.

"The court decision was goofy," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y. "Fifty million people can't be all wrong."

Thursday night, after Not-tingham's ruling was released, Tauzin spokesman Ken Johnson said the committee was reviewing the decision. "We will begin exploring our options tomorrow. If the decision is based solely on constitutional grounds, we're confident it will be overturned."

FTC officials were unavailable for comment Thursday night on what the agency's next step would be.

The Denver case was brought by the American Teleservices Association, which represents the telemarketing firms. Even before Nottingham issued his opinion, the association's executive director, Tim Searcy, had been advising members that, in light of the Oklahoma ruling, they should continue calling numbers on the do-not-call list beyond Oct. 1.

The Oklahoma suit against the FTC was brought by the Direct Marketing Association. In spite of the court ruling, this group issued an advisory to its members Thursday telling them to "respect the wishes of consumers who have placed their phone numbers on the FTC list." Group President

Robert Wientzen said, "We have always said we do not want to make calls to people who do not want to receive calls."

Congress' action Thursday was unusually swift; congressional historians could only recall times of financial crisis and war when Congress ever acted so quickly before. Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., said the record speed was equivalent to breaking the record of a four-minute mile. Congress, he added, is moving faster "than a consumer can hang up on a telemarketer at dinner time."

assistant for the simulator.

Finally, after a 20-minute wait, I was cleared to drive. I gripped the steering wheel, took a deep breath, and pulled onto the highway behind a red car. The nurse directed me to call "Angie" as part of the cell-phone stimulation.

It was a hands-off phone, but every time I told it to dial Angie's number, the voice replied, "I cannot hear you. Please speak louder." As I tried to drive and yell the number into the microphone attached to my shirt, my roadside companion pointed to an off ramp, which I promptly missed.

The technicians then decided, after more than five attempts to voice-activate the phone, that I should hand-dial. I nearly crashed at least twice as I tried to steer with my shaking left hand and dial with my right while watching for unsuspecting cars that might knock me off the road.

That's when I glanced down at the speedometer, which read 80 mph — 20 over the speed limit. My mind tumbled with unprintable four-letter words.

The second stimulation was downtown high-speed traffic. This is more like it, I thought as I wove between cars — the only guideline was to maintain the 65 mph speed limit. Just as I began to feel comfortable, the green jeep flying at me jolted to a stop.

Afterward, as I left the secured area breathless, I walked up to Watson and Moorehead, who were chatting about how lucky I was to drive the simulator. After all, they had turned down Diane Sawyer.

Sorry, Sawyer, I thought as I left the center, the keys to my real car jiggling in hand.

North Liberty rehab facility rejected

HOSPITAL

Kathy Horrell, a Genesis Medical Center spokeswoman, echoed that sentiment: "Genesis, along with other institutions in Eastern Iowa, is opposed to construction of this facility because there is not a need for it."

Braden Neiman, the founder of Diversified Rehabilitation Services, said the local hospitals have a misconception about the actual demand for more rehabilitative care in the area. Johnson County is "one of the most underutilized areas he has ever seen," he said, citing a consultant report he presented to the Health Facilities Council.

The jobs created by the hospital and the capital investment would have given a big economic boost to North Liberty, he said.

The rehab center would have also helped patients find treatment faster, said Joseph Buckwalter, a UI professor of orthopaedic surgery. "Sometimes we have patients staying here for days or weeks waiting for a bed," he said.

Within 20 days of the written decision, Diversified Rehabilitation Services can request a rehearing; it can also refile or appeal the decision to district court within 30 days.

"We are weighing our options at this time," Neiman said. "We are committed to building a first-class facility in Johnson County."

A 1992 multiple-fatality car crash on Highway 6 in front of Kmart required closing a street for several hours while Mebus and other investigators measured skid marks and figured formulas over and over again, Mebus said.

"It can be very tedious work," Winkelhake said. "But in the end, you have a very clear picture of what happened."

The ultimate satisfaction for Mebus is sitting down with parents of collision victims and being able to explain exactly what happened through his findings, though both Krone and Mebus agreed that it's important to not get too personally involved.

"I recently worked with a family whose child died in a car crash," Mebus said. "The family was so relieved when I was able to tell them what happened. It got rid of a lot of rumors of what actually happened."

STATE

Vilsack appoints special commission for education

DES MOINES (AP) — A special commission has been appointed to ensure quality preschool for children and two years of college for the state's high-school graduates, Gov. Tom Vilsack announced Thursday. The goals of the Iowa Learns Council will be a quality preschool experience for 90 percent of children and completion of two years of higher education for 90 percent of high school graduates.

The council, headed by Vilsack, will examine the state's education system from early childhood to postsecondary and recommend strategies to ensure coordination between teachers and administrators at all levels.

"This is an important beginning for Iowa as we work to create a comprehensive and unified education system that will help us meet our responsibility to educate our children," Vilsack said.

"The members of the Iowa Learns Council have been drawn from leadership positions in all levels of education, government and business," he said. "I am excited to have them working with me to reach the 90/90 goal and to create even greater opportunities for the children of this great state."

The 38-member council will be divided into three groups focusing on early childhood, K-12 students and strengthening the connection between education and economic growth.

The early childhood group will determine the impact of quality child care on readiness to learn and identify strategies to help parents become teachers for their young children.

U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell indicates that he's out of time for questions from the press on Thursday at the United Nations. Powell spoke briefly to reporters following a luncheon meeting with the foreign ministers of the Security Council.

U.N. yanks staff from Iraq

BY COLUM LYNCH
WASHINGTON POST

UNITED NATIONS — U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan on Thursday ordered a further reduction in the U.N. staff in Baghdad in response to two suicide bombings, sharply curtailing the United Nations' role and delivering a serious blow to U.S. efforts to obtain greater international involvement in reconstruction of Iraq.

Annan's decision to "temporarily redeploy" an undetermined number of the 86 relief workers in Baghdad to Amman, Jordan, by Saturday will leave a largely symbolic U.N. presence in Iraq to direct the delivery of humanitarian relief by more than 4,000 Iraqis working for the United Nations. The U.N. chief's spokesman, Fred Eckhard, also raised the possibility that more members of the skeletal operation could be evacuated if security worsens.

Annan's decision injected greater uncertainty into negotiations between the United States and other key Security Council members over a U.S.-drafted resolution calling for greater support for the reconstruction of Iraq.

France, Pakistan, Russia, and other U.N. members have demanded that the United Nations supervise the transition to Iraqi self-rule in exchange for their support. But Thursday's action makes it unlikely the organization will be able to fulfill even the limited new tasks President Bush envisioned in his address to the General Assembly on Tuesday: help the Iraqis draft a Constitution, organize elections, and train civil servants.

The Bush administration, joined by Iraq's emerging political leaders, fiercely opposed the withdrawal of U.N. staff in recent days, fearing it would complicate efforts to broaden international support for the mission in Iraq. White House spokesman Scott McClellan said Thursday that Annan's decision to reduce the staff was "understandable" but that members of the United Nations "have a vital role to play, and we want them to continue to play that vital role."

"Certainly, in the wake of the recent bombing of the U.N. headquarters, we understand the grief of the United Nations family and the need to ensure the safety of U.N. employees in Iraq," McClellan said. "The Coalition Provisional Authority and coalition forces in Iraq will continue working closely with U.N. officials to ensure the protection of U.N. employees."

Despite the setback, Secretary of State Colin Powell said discussions with the other permanent members of the Security Council — France, Russia, China, and Britain — over a resolution have yielded "some convergence of views."

"We'll be working on language in the days ahead that tries to capture as much of that convergence as possible and to see what we are able to come up with," he said.

The Bush administration indicated this week that it strongly favors setting a deadline for the Iraqis to develop a Constitution that would lead to elections and transfer authority from the U.S.-led Coalition Provisional Authority to the Iraqis. In testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the top U.S. civilian administrator in Iraq, L. Paul Bremer, suggested April 2004 as a possible deadline and said elections could be held before the end of 2004.

Staff writer Peter Stevin contributed to this report.

Nigerian court overturns stoning death

KATSINA, Nigeria (AP) — An Islamic court overturned the conviction of an illiterate mother sentenced to be stoned to death for having sex out of wedlock, easing pressure on the Nigerian government in a case that has drawn sharp criticism from around the globe.

Lawyers hailed Thursday's ruling as a triumph for Islamic justice, but conservative Muslims in the predominantly Islamic north said Amina Lawal should have been executed.

"It's a big relief for all of us," defense lawyer Hauwa Ibrahim told the Associated Press. "Amina can have her life back, and we are grateful to the court."

Wrapped in a light orange veil and sitting quietly at the front of a small, sweltering courtroom, the 32-year-old at the center of the controversy appeared emotionless throughout the hearing, staring down at the floor, cradling her nearly 2-year-old daughter.

A panel of five judges in white turbans and black robes ruled 4-1 in Lawal's favor, citing procedural errors and arguing she had not been given "ample opportunity to defend herself."

Lawal did not speak after the verdict, and police and lawyers hustled her away as reporters crowded around.

Had the sentence been carried out, Lawal would have become the first woman stoned to death in Nigeria since 12 northern states began adopting strict Islamic law, or Sharia, in 1999.

Reading the hour-long ruling in the local Hausa language, Judge Ibrahim Mai-Unguwa argued that only one judge was present during Lawal's initial conviction in March 2002 instead of the three required under local Islamic law.

He noted that under some interpretations of Sharia, babies can remain in gestation in a mother's womb for more than five years, opening the possibility that her ex-husband — whom she divorced two years before giving birth — could have fathered the child.

Iraqi council member dies from wounds

BAGHDAD (AP) — A leading figure in Iraq's Governing Council died on Thursday of wounds suffered in an ambush last week, marking the first time Iraq's violence has claimed the life of a member of the U.S.-appointed administration.

Aquila al-Hashimi's death came as a bomb damaged a hotel housing the offices of NBC News, raising fears of attacks against international media. A Somali guard was killed, and an NBC sound engineer was slightly wounded in the early morning explosion at the small al-Aike Hotel in the city's fashionable Karrada district.

In the north, eight American soldiers were wounded — three of them seriously — when their convoy was ambushed with roadside bombs and small arms fire in Mosul, Iraq's third-largest city.

The commander of U.S. forces in Iraq, Lt. Gen. Ricardo Sanchez, warned he would use whatever force necessary to defeat those who attack American soldiers.

But use of force has led to "friendly fire" deaths in Iraq.

On Thursday, the military said U.S. soldiers shot and killed two Iraqi policemen in Fallujah on Aug. 9.

Col. Bill Darley, a spokesman with coalition joint task force, told the Associated Press that an Army investigation found that the soldiers acted in accordance with the rules of engagement. He identified the soldiers as members of the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, part of the 1st Armored Division's 3rd Brigade.

Darley did not give further details.

Israeli raids kill 4 Palestinians

JERUSALEM — Israeli forces raided a West Bank city and a Gaza refugee camp on Thursday, setting off battles that left four Palestinian gunmen and a soldier dead.

The raids came despite a lull in Palestinian bombing and shooting attacks against Israelis, underlining Israel's policy of hunting down militants regardless of the ebbs and flows of violence.

In an interview on Channel 2 TV for the Jewish New Year, which begins today, Prime Minister Ariel Sharon said Israel will keep targeting militants. "We are hitting, and we will continue to hit, those who strike out at us," he said.

In the past, such raids have provoked Palestinian reprisals, stoking the fires of confrontation as the bloody conflict nears the end of its third year.

On another subject, Sharon told TV interviewers a prisoner swap with the Lebanese Hezbollah has not been completed, but he indicated that prisoners held in Europe might be involved.

"We have good bargaining chips, in which the Iranians are interested, and in which Hezbollah is very, very, very interested," he said.

Kudos for Skorton's diversity moves

In his first keynote address since taking office, UI President David Skorton presented a three-point plan to improve the university's diversity programs.

In addition to changing the name of the Office of Affirmative Action to the Office of Equal Opportunity and Diversity, Skorton said he will form two subcommittees that will explore solutions to diversity issues. The first group will be composed of members of the newly named office and deans from the different colleges; it will discuss institutional focus on diversity. The second panel will consist of Skorton, the Diversity Administration Committee, and members of the UI Foundation, and it will explore ways in which funding for diversity activities may be obtained by the private sector.

Though the specifics of the subcommittees are unclear right now, Skorton made the right decision is pursuing strategies to enhance diversity.

This decision comes of the heels of a report presented to the state Board of Regents that showed minority- and international-student enrollment increased by less than 1 percent from last year. In order for the university to continue working for academic excellence, it must make an effort to increase diversity. As the president said in his speech on Wednesday, the university should strive to make its students and faculty and staff members as representative of the world around us as possible.

"I pledge to work with our faculty, staff, and students and with our administrative leadership to make increased diversity a beacon in our travels as a community of scholars," he said.

Promoting diversity recruitment will, hopefully, curtail potential minority students from overlooking the UI after seeing the predominantly white campus, as Jane Wu, a co-president of the Asian-American Coalition, attests.

Wu suggested offering more scholarships to minorities living outside Iowa — a proposal Skorton should discuss with members of the UI Foundation.

The university has always been an advocate of diversity-promoting measures. When the University of Michigan went to the U.S. Supreme Court defending its admission policies, the UI was one of the schools that vocally supported Michigan. Skorton's initiatives exemplify a conscious effort to continue the tradition.

Though budget cuts may hamper some of the new initiatives he has planned, the steps taken show where the UI's priorities are. Skorton has asked publicly for recommendations in creating a more diverse campus. Not bad for someone still adjusting to a new position.

AIDS effort needs $, not more words

Plenty of noble words about the need to fight AIDS gushed from the U.N. podium this week. We must "shatter the silence that kills," said Secretary of State Colin Powell. French President Jacques Chirac agreed, adding that the world must "unite in a struggle on behalf of life." Listeners could be forgiven if they plugged their ears and trained an eagle eye instead on the only thing that matters for the thousands who die from the scourge every day: the money.

Today, 13 million children are AIDS orphans, one-third of all countries have no policies to ensure that women have access to AIDS prevention and care (though women now account for half of those infected worldwide), and only 300,000 people in the developing world have access to anti-HIV medications (although up to 6 million need them).

As Bono, the AIDS activist and lead singer for U2, noted before meeting with President Bush last week, "The AIDS emergency is just that. It's not a cause. We're not here peddling a cause. We're not looking to get into America's wallet for another cause. [This] is an emergency."

This year, Congress promised to spend $3 billion combating AIDS globally in 2004. On Tuesday, President Bush committed to spending $15 billion over the next five years in poor countries. And, yet, follow the money. The U.N. AIDS fund is just days away from bankruptcy. And the White House has been pressing Congress to support only $2 billion in funding in 2004, with just $200 million going to the U.N. fund, a one-third reduction from the 2003 U.S. contribution.

As in his conflict with the U.N. over Iraq, Bush seeks to keep a grip on funding and refuses to cooperate with other nations. He insists that new funding go to 14 nations of his choice. Bush's newly appointed AIDS ambassador, former Eli Lilly head Randy Tobias, says the new money should help countries that meet administrative economic, social, and political ideals. But is it fair to give short shrift to people who, through no fault of their own, live in countries that fall short of Bush's ideals?

It's no time to reinvent the wheel when 40 million people live with HIV, approximately 29 million of them in Africa. The U.S. should donate at least $1 billion directly to the U.N. fund. On a population-percentage basis, that would match the $177 million that France has pledged to the global fund each year. Bush officials also should back the ambitious campaign unveiled Monday by the World Health Organization to provide anti-HIV treatment to 3 million people in poor countries by 2005. As U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan warned Monday, "We cannot accept that 'something else came up' that forced us to place AIDS on the back burner. Something else will always come up."

This editorial appeared in the Los Angeles Times.

No feminists we?

While we hesitated before responding to the blatant sexism printed in the Sept. 24 Daily Iowan, we decided that the editors at the DI need a lesson in feminism.

The editorial "Will Women Rule the World?" consisted solely of shallow, insular bickering in lieu of meaningful discussion. It succeeded only in perpetuating the sex binary by reducing women to reproductive vessels and men to beer-guzzling idiots.

This misconceived idea of feminism (and speaking of conception, we do more than that), "the battle of the sexes" promotes an us-versus-them, dichotomous view of relations between the sexes. Devoid of profundity, the editorial's counterproductive nonsense oversimplified and generalized the complex issues surrounding sex and education.

The evidence lies in their catty rhetoric, reminiscent of grade-school-esque T-shirts "Girls rule, Boys drool." By saying that "[women] continue [their] ascent towards total world domination," the writer furthers the stereotype that to be a feminist is to be a man-hater, completely ignoring the real goals of feminism (which do not include world domination).

Feminism's goals do, however, include the eradication of the sex division — a division that the editorial only secured. Relying on stereotypes — men are "a lazy species," women are workhorses — the babbling writers mocked one another, creating a cycle of negativity that fostered hostility instead of unity.

Perhaps the next time the DI considers gracing us with a witty dialectic, it should invest more time in research, and save its squabbling for the parties.

Support candidates of peace

We, the members of the UI student group Iowa Mobilization for Global Justice, are concerned about the current U.S. administration and Democratic Party candidates who do not prioritize upholding international law and order. Our organization views international law as an apparatus for creating a just and peaceful world; it is also a system that could eliminate the practice of terrorism.

Several of the candidates have said the United States should become more engaged in international cooperative institutions. However, to be a trusted member, the United States must respect its legal obligations. When Wesley Clark came to the UI last week, he spoke about the need to prevent war, but he did not admit any wrongdoing on the part of the U.S. military establishment. Let us not forget that while he was a NATO general, the United States and its allies illegally invaded Kosovo, thereby breaking a NATO treaty and the U.N. charter. Also, when Howard Dean came to Iowa City this past Labor Day, he stated his opposition to the current war in Iraq but justified the previous Gulf War and the war in Afghanistan, both of which were launched illegally.

The United States should become a member of the International Court of Justice. When Dennis Kucinich spoke at Old Brick last month, he said that as president, he would get the United States to sign the treaty. So far, he's the only candidate (that our group knows of) who supports this.

We ask that all of you who will vote in the upcoming election keep this important issue in mind when you choose which candidate to support. Please raise the subject of international law within whatever group, political party, or campaign of which you are a part. Thank you very much.

Happy with Heneke

Megan Heneke has done a fantastic job of leading the University Democrats. She is dedicated to increasing the participation of students in the political process as well as promoting involvement with the Democratic Party. If Heneke has sent any message to the UI students, it is that she is a superb example of a young person going above and beyond her civic responsibilities. She should be commended for doing so, not criticized (DI, Sept. 23). It is my sincere hope that this article will not diminish Heneke's effectiveness in any way. Even more so, I hope this article will not discourage more student leaders similar to her from involvement in politics.

Showers of doom at Daum

MY LEAST FAVORITE part about college, Iowa in particular, so far?

Being awakened at 8:30 every morning when construction begins or smelling the sickly syrup scent every day? You'd think so. But after six weeks, flames shooting out of my dorm on a Friday afternoon isn't even my biggest problem.

Nope, my least-favorite activity here is taking showers.

I do this as little as possible. I'm not going to lie — I avoid the shower room. I cringe whenever I deem myself too dirty to go another hour without soaping up.

My distaste for Iowa showers began on move-in day. Before that, I had actually been under the impression that my floor bathroom would be nice. This misconception stemmed from my visit last spring, when my student guide took me to Hillcrest to view the showers.

During my bathroom tour back then, I was blown away. Shimmering white tile, two defense mechanisms (a curtain and a lock-worthy stall door) guarding against an unwanted shower intrusion, and lockers to hold shower utensils. I had never seen such a glorious sight.

The showers in Daum are nothing like that.

Yep, the administration shows off clean bathrooms so prospective students will choose this school, and then it places students on the Honors floor, full of chances to register early and to engage in pizza nights with the faculty but devoid of any shower facilities fit for human use.

That first morning, I stepped into the stall and turned around, attempting to close the shower curtain. Yanking one side, I pulled it shut, but was faced with a six inch gap on the opposing side.

After strategically hanging my robe, I turned on the water. Ahh, nice and — OUCH. I jumped out of the stream, vigorously rubbing my burnt leg. The water had suddenly turned a hellish temperature.

I hesitantly tried to throw water at myself, and I even soaked and squeezed my loofah to create a mini downpour over my head. I limped out of the bathroom, lathered and scalded, a defeated showerer.

The next few days, I learned the Shower Hockey Pokey — imagine the music remixed by DJ Jazzy Jeff — I put my right foot in, I take my right foot out, I put my elbow in, and I shake it all about ... This had to stop.

I asked around and found that if I turned the dial only one-fourth of an inch, I could get half the temperature with half the spray.

With that problem fixed, I took my time and really looked around the shower. The brown tile isn't that ugly, I thought fondly, and no one would ever peek through my curtain. I could even accept the soap from the stall next door seeping into my territory, and the ... hair?

As my eyes traveled farther up the outer wall of the shower, I noticed a disturbing trend. Hairs from girls' heads were stuck to the surface. Not just one or two, but billions of them — imagine Planet of the Apes. I vowed to never take another Iowa shower.

While that drastic plan didn't last, my experience did lead to a routine of skipping my daily shower, something I've never done in my 18 years. I hated the bathroom that much.

A recent visit to Kenosha, Wis., however, made me semi-grateful for my Daum bathrooms. I had been anxious to visit because my friend touted the stalls at Carthage College as the "cleanest in the world." After an acrobatic 10 minutes, however, I redubbed them "smallest in the world."

Picture me (or actually, please don't) attempting to pick up my soap with my toes and transferring it to my right hand. Shaving my legs? Out of the question.

I returned to Iowa with a new resolve to tolerate my shower, hair and all.

Every shower has its disadvantages. When I want perfection, I'll visit Hillcrest. ■

WHERE IT BEGINS

Writers Guild of America, West/Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Most people would recognize the line "You can't handle the truth!" as spoken by Jack Nicholson in 1992's A Few Good Men. But who wrote it?

Then there's the two-word phrase, "As if," from 1995's Clueless, a line that inspired teenage girls all over America to speak in the "Valley Girl" dialect.

And how about the line, "Forget it, Jake. It's Chinatown," from the 1974 Roman Polanski film, Chinatown?

A new billboard and advertising campaign to mark the 70th anniversary of the Writers Guild of America seeks to showcase the profession by matching famous movie and TV lines with photos of their authors. The effort is aimed at raising the guild's profile before it negotiates a new contract with producers.

The "Where it Begins" camaign was the idea of Oscar-winner Marc Norman, who co-wrote and produced the 1998 film Shakespeare in Love.

"It came down to the idea that writers have written lines in films and television shows that are so memorable, they have become phrases people use in daily conversation," he said. "What writers do is not just provide entertainment, but they change the culture."

The campaign is not aimed at the general public but rather at studio and television executives; it comes as the guild begins to plan strategy for negotiations on a contract that expires in May 2004. The guild has yet to release a contract wish list, but it is expected to press for better pay and more recognition for its members, particularly those who write for reality TV shows.

Several black-and-white billboards have been placed in key locations in Los Angeles where top executives, directors, agents, and actors are likely to see them. The billboards contain the famous lines and a photo of the writer but not the writer's name or even the name of the film. Ads are also being taken out in trade publications in Los Angeles and New York.

"We wanted to say, 'These are random members, look what they have done,'" Norman said. "We didn't want to take away from the centrality of the Writers Guild logo."

Writers have historically complained about not getting the respect they deserve in Hollywood. During contract negotiations in 2001, writers said it was unfair that film directors get credit for movies, while writers are often not allowed on sets and, in some cases, not invited to premieres.

"I think everybody thinks the directors have all the visual concepts and the actors make up all the lines," said Oscar-winning writer William Goldman, whose lines from 1969's Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, grace one of the billboards.

Protecting endangered sites

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The Great Wall of China, the palaces of Nimrud and Nineveh in Iraq, and Frank Lloyd Wright's Ennis-Brown House in Los Angeles are among the watch list of 100 endangered sites released this week by the World Monuments Fund.

The list includes sites from every continent, among them Sir Ernest Shackleton's 1908 expedition hut in Antarctica and Australia's Dampier Rock art complex, which has rock carvings dating from 8000 B.C. Wright's house, built in 1923, suggests pre-Columbian architecture with its textured blocks.

By focusing attention on the sites, the fund seeks to raise money for their protection and to spur local governments to protect their cultural heritage.

"Be it a palace, a cave painting, an archaeological site, or a town, the sites on the watch list speak of human aspirations and achievements," said Bonnie Burnham, the president of the World Monuments Fund. "To lose any one of them would diminish us all."

The biennial watch list was begun in 1995 by the fund, a New York-based nonprofit organization dedicated to historic preservation. The list was compiled by a panel of international experts.

Threats to the endangered sites include natural disasters, deterioration caused by age, and manmade threats such as neglect, mismanagement, and inappropriate development, fund officials said.

In the case of the Nimrud and Nineveh Palaces, the fund said that 12 years of sanctions limited the ability of Iraqi authorities to control looting; further looting and vandalism occurred following the U.S.-led invasion earlier this year.

A portion of the Great Wall of China is suffering from vandalism by tourists and erosion, the fund said.

Six sites in the United States are on the list, including historic lower Manhattan, which suffered following the 9/11 terrorist attacks. Last month, the World Monuments Fund joined other preservation groups in issuing a call to save historic buildings that they said could be threatened by the redevelopment of the World Trade Center.

Inspect this: Blix gets large book deal

NEW YORK (AP) — Hans Blix, the U.N. inspector who clashed often with the Bush administration over allegations of Iraq's possession of weapons of mass destruction, has a book deal.

Pantheon hopes to publish Blix's book, currently untitled, in the spring of 2004.

"The core of the book will be the four months leading up to the invasion of Iraq," Pantheon Editor Dan Frank said Thursday. "It will give readers a clear sense of what the U.N. does and the ins and outs of diplomacy."

Frank said Blix has written around a half to two-thirds of what should be a 250-300 page book. Financial terms were not disclosed, but a source close to the negotiations said that the deal was worth around $500,000, factoring in both domestic and foreign rights.

Blix, who retired last summer, spent three years searching for Iraqi chemical, biological, and ballistic missiles as head of the U.N. Monitoring, Verification, and Inspection Commission.

Saddam Hussein's alleged possession of banned weapons was the main justification the United States and Britain used for invading Iraq in March. In the weeks before the war, some U.S. officials strongly criticized Blix's failure to support the Bush administration's contention that Saddam had an active illegal-weapons program.

OVERTURNED

Michigan hoopsters will be back in 2004

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — The Michigan basketball team won its appeal and will be eligible to play in the 2004 NCAA Tournament.

The decision to overturn the ban handed down in May was made by the NCAA's infractions appeals committee, the organization announced Thursday.

"This is a tremendously positive day for the University of Michigan and our basketball program," Michigan coach Tommy Amaker said in a statement. "We are so appreciative of the news we received."

HARD KNOCKS

Converse has new 'Loaded Weapon'

(AP) — The company that brought the world the original basketball sneaker has come up with a new one: "Loaded Weapon."

What would Chuck Taylor think?

The name of the latest Converse sneaker is drawing criticism because of recent high-profile cases involving guns, murder, and basketball players.

Jim Haney, the executive director of the National Association of Basketball Coaches, was troubled by the name, especially in light of the fatal shooting this summer of Baylor's Patrick Dennehy.

"You're taking a violent theme and trying to sell it to kids," he said. "I'm sure these people are well-meaning, but I think it's a bad message in today's environment, a bad statement for the time in which we live."

Young failed drug test for steroids

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — U.S. Olympic officials confirmed Thursday that sprinter Jerome Young tested positive for steroids within a year of winning gold at the 2000 Games, a move that could cost him and his relay team their medals.

International Olympic Committee officials can now reopen the case and possibly strip the team of its 1,600-meter championship.

"The IOC hopes that the confirmation of the identity of Jerome Young will offer the opportunity for further action," IOC President Jacques Rogge said. "This has to be done in the interest of sport."

The USOC provided Young's name to the IOC executive board during a review of its drug-testing program from 1985-2000, a process aimed at dispelling long-standing suspicions of U.S. doping cover-ups.

 THE DAILY IOWAN

Ready, aim, fire.

Michigan State gets the first shot Saturday at the bull's-eye painted on Big Ten defending co-champion Iowa's back when the Hawkeyes travel to East Lansing to take on the 3-1 Spartans in the Big Ten season opener. At 4-0, Iowa (No. 9 ESPN/No. 13 AP) hasn't been challenged much yet this year, but coach Kirk Ferentz knows better than to underestimate his conference foe.

"Probably the biggest difference we've seen right now is that they're much more disciplined than they've been in the past," he said. "They've had some trouble in the past with penalties, turnovers — those types of things — but they've really addressed that. They're playing together, [and] they're playing hard."

For the third consecutive year, quarterback Jeff Smoker leads the Michigan State passing attack. Smoker struggled through the first half of 2002 before being suspended for the season's final five games because of a substance-abuse problem. So far this year, he's been inconsistent, but he shows signs of returning to his 2001 form. That year, he led the league in pass efficiency and had a 21:8 touchdown to interception ratio.

New Michigan State coach John L. Smith promised to throw the ball around a lot, and so far, he hasn't disappointed anyone. The Spartans are fourth in the Big Ten in pass offense, averaging 246.5 yards per game.

That aggressive approach can lead to interceptions, though; the Spartans' opponents have picked them off six times. Iowa's defense hopes to add to that total.

"I love to play against passing teams," said cornerback Jovon Johnson, whose three interceptions lead the Big Ten. "That's my motto: 'If you pass the ball, it's mine.' If you pass, there's more opportunity for interceptions, and that's what I want to do."

Defense also carries the Hawkeyes. Iowa has allowed 8.2 points per game, second-

Cubs fans are familiar with heartache

William Butler Yeats once wrote, "Being Irish, he had an abiding sense of tragedy which sustained him through temporary periods of joy." Yeats lived from 1865 to 1939, which means he witnessed the glory days of the Chicago National League Ball Club and saw the Cubs win two World Series. It is doubtful whether more than a handful of readers can say the same. So it's no surprise that Cubs fans have adopted the same pessimism as Yeats' Irishman, particularly at this most joyful time.

Against all odds, the Cubs are, at press time, in first place, a position as foreign to them as a gym is to Ted Kennedy. But beneath a Cubs fan's happy exterior lies a feeling of impending doom, the result of just two division titles and three playoff appearances in the last 58 years.

It's not that the Cubs can't win the World Series. They have the best starting rotation in baseball, two or three power threats, and a slew of role players who are the prerequisite for any successful title run. But many times the Cubs have had all the tools, and many times they've failed. Few teams of late (the Texas Rangers being the most obvious example) have done so little with so much.

But now it appears the worm has turned. Starting pitchers Mark Prior, Kerry Wood, and Carlos Zambrano are the scariest three-headed monster since Cerberus, Sammy Sosa recovered from a toe injury and a suspension, and in the most shocking development of all, mid-season trades actually worked out.

Any good Cubs fan, though, is waiting for the other shoe to drop. There are only three games left, you say. What could possibly happen?

You fool. Sosa could go up to the plate with a bat made entirely of cork. Prior could get hit by lightning while sitting in the dugout. Dusty Baker could choke to death on a toothpick. Or, even worse, they could just blow it unspectacularly.

Heck, as tragic as Moises Alou getting run over by a truck would be, at least it would make the subsequent collapse understandable.

Hawkeyes gain aggressive victory

BY FRANK KLIPSCH
 THE DAILY IOWAN

The Iowa field-hockey team showed a flare for the dramatic in a sudden-death overtime victory against California at Grant Field on Thursday. Lauren Stiver broke the deadlock 2:36 into the extra frame to give the Hawkeyes an exciting 2-1 win.

On two different occasions, the referees stopped play to warn players about excessive contact. Two cards were issued in the last five minutes of regulation, one for each time California midfielder Nora Feddersen hit the turf in the game. Iowa's Lindsay Muller received the first card and Feddersen the second.

"It was a lot like a Big Ten-style of play," said Iowa head coach Tracey Griesbaum. "They beat us for the first time last year, so we knew they'd be tough."

The Hawkeyes continued to outshoot their opponents, almost tripling the shot total of the Bears, 23-8. Iowa also dominated in forcing penalty corners, 10-4.

Pattie Gillern didn't waste any time attempting the victory goal. But Cal's Erin Booth was called for a foul on the breakaway. The Hawkeyes' Stiver stepped up to the penalty stripe, 7 yards away from California goalkeeper Kelly Knapp and wristed a shot into the right side of the net.

"It was a great victory," Stiver said. "They were real physical in last year's game, so we expected them to play the same way here."

Margot McMahon and Sarah Dawson both had three shots on goal to lead Iowa in pressuring Knapp. Fellow Hawkeyes Margot McMahon and Miller also smacked four shots apiece.

Q&A

Trading jabs with the (former) enemy

Former Michigan State head coach George Perles, who coached at the school from 1983-94, thinks highly of this year's Hawkeye football squad. That's saying something, because the guy knows talent when he sees it. Perles had 50 former players selected in the NFL draft, including nine first-rounders.

Perles returned MSU to national prominence in the 1980s, leading the Spartans to the Rose Bowl in 1987. It was the school's first appearance in Pasadena since 1966, and earned Perles Football News Coach of the Year honors. Michigan State went to four-straight bowl games under Perles, winning two.

Perles is considered a defensive mastermind, and he was the architect of the Pittsburgh Steelers' "Steel Curtain" during their Super Bowls in the 1970s (1974-75, 1978-79).

The former coach now works as a CEO of the Motor City Bowl, which takes place Dec. 26 at Ford Field in Detroit. He spoke with DI reporter Kelly Beaton this week about his coaching career and the Hawkeyes' game with Michigan State.

DI: Who was your favorite player to coach?
GP: How about [former MSU running back] Lorenzo White? He could carry the ball 56 times a game. (Lorenzo White was fourth in Heisman voting in 1985 and 1987, earning All-American honors in '85. He had a school record 56 carries vs. Indiana for 292 yards on Nov. 14, 1987.)

DI: The Big Ten's kind of up for grabs right now. Take the Minnesota-Penn State game: it could go either way. Who do you like in that one?
GP: Minnesota's got everything going for it this year. [The Gophers] had a big year last year, and now they're playing well on defense. That'll carry them through.

DI: Finally, before I let you go, who do you think is going to win this week between Iowa and Michigan State? I think I know who you might favor in this one.
GP: Well, you know, that's interesting. One of my ex-players, Phil Parker, and one of my ex-coaches, Norm Parker, are with Iowa. So, I'd like to skip that one.

DI: What are your thoughts on Hayden Fry?
GP: Well, he was a great, great coach. He was a great friend, and he had great character. (Perles had a 4-5-1 record against Fry's Iowa teams.)

DI: What are your thoughts on what Kirk Ferentz has done with the Hawkeyes?
GP: He's built them from the ground up. I give him a lot of credit. He's done a great job.

DI: What was your biggest win against Iowa?
GP: The one in 1987. We came back and won that game, 19-14.

DI: What was your worst loss to the Hawkeyes?
GP: When we lost the ball on the 3-yard line to lose, 24-21 [in 1986].

DI: What are your thoughts on what Kirk Ferentz has done with the Hawkeyes?
GP: He's built them from the ground up. I give him a lot of credit. He's done a great job.

DI: Who was your favorite player to coach?

Hawks match Jazz offer, re-sign Jason Terry

ATLANTA (AP) — Jason Terry will remain with the Atlanta Hawks after the team matched the three-year, $22.5 million offer sheet the free-agent guard signed with the Utah Jazz.

"This is where I always wanted to be," said Terry, who averaged 16.1 points in his first four seasons. He spoke at a news conference Thursday with seven of the team's eight prospective new owners in attendance.

Terry said that he had been apprehensive about the future of the team before AOL Time Warner announced a deal on Sept. 16 to sell the Hawks, the NHL's Atlanta Thrashers, and operating rights to Phillips Arena for $250 million to an eight-man ownership group including Boston businessman Steve Belkin.

The sale still must be approved by the respective leagues. Belkin said the contract agreement with Terry was reached with the cooperation of Time Warner officials.

The 6-foot-2 Terry, who plays shooting guard and point guard, had a career-high average of 7.2 assists last season to go along with his 17.2 points per game.

"He exemplifies everything we like in our players, in his ability to play more than one position and his character on the court and off the court," Hawks general manager Billy Knight said.

Though Terry expressed a desire to complete his career with the Hawks, he said he was serious when he signed the offer sheet with the Jazz on Sept. 11.

"I think Utah is a great situation for any free agent to step into with the departures of Karl Malone and John Stockton," Terry said.

Steelers, Titans rivalry continues despite split

BY DAVE GOLDBERG
ASSOCIATED PRESS

When the NFL realigned, it split up Pittsburgh and Tennessee, a good old AFC Central rivalry dating back to the days when the Titans were the Houston Oilers.

No, they're not talking anymore about whether Mike Renfro had both feet down in the end zone in the 1979 AFC title game — although that was one of the plays that eventually led to instant replay.

But this remains a good rivalry, even if it's not played as often these days. Last season, the Titans beat the Steelers 34-31 in overtime to reach the AFC championship game, and the players know each other well.

Pittsburgh is favored by three points — home-field advantage in what shapes up as a defensive game.

"I think it's just us being coordinated and trying to eliminate the big things. Last week, there were only two plays over 14 yards. That was big," coach Bill Cowher says. Good rivalry. Close game. STEELERS, 17-16

Philadelphia (plus 3) at Buffalo

Buffalo's offense was stifled so badly in Miami it looked at times like the Eagles, who have scored just 10 points in two games. Eagles are still hurting in the secondary, which Drew Bledsoe will exploit. BILLS, 24-13

Kansas City (minus 3) at Baltimore

The Chiefs are the better team, but a 4-0 start is hard, even if you're good. RAVENS, 21-20

New England (plus 3) at Washington

San Francisco (off) at Minnesota

HAWKEYE NOTES

Soccer to take on Illinois, Northwestern

After a tie and a loss last weekend to Ohio State and Penn State, the Iowa women's soccer team will return to action for its first home game since Aug. 29, hosting Illinois and Northwestern this weekend.

Iowa is coming off the toughest road trip of the year — the Hawkeyes managed just one goal in the two games, tying OSU, 1-1, and then losing to Penn State, 4-0. Katelyn Quinn notched the Hawkeye goal, her fourth of the year.

Despite the losses last weekend, head coach Carla Baker remains upbeat.

"Last week taught us a great lesson of how we need to be prepared each and every weekend," she said.

Illinois is powered by forwards Tara Hurlless, Jessica Bayne, and Andrea Ridgeway, who have combined for nine goals in eight games. Junior Leisha Alcia won Big Ten Defensive Player of the Week after posting consecutive shutouts last weekend against Michigan and No. 20 Michigan State.

Northwestern is led by senior Aileen Guiney, who leads the team with three assists.

She has had a hand in three of Northwestern's nine goals this year. "With Illinois we expect a lot of athleticism, which we should be able to counter," Baker said.

"Against Northwestern, we have to contain Aileen Guiney. She is a workhorse."

Iowa will play Illinois today at 7 p.m. The Hawkeyes then will take on Northwestern at 1 p.m. on Sept. 28. Both games are at the Soccer Complex.

Men's cross-country travels to Gopher land

The Iowa men's cross-country team will travel to Minneapolis to compete Saturday in the Roy Griak Invitational. The 8,000-meter race will be run at the Les Bolstad Cross Course, and Hawkeye coach Larry Wiczorek said there will be a number of nationally ranked teams competing in the meet.

This will be the first meet in which the Hawkeyes have an opportunity to qualify for an at-large postseason bid. Schools qualify by placing first or second in their regions, but they can also be selected on an at-large basis by doing well against the top programs.

However, Wiczorek doesn't believe this meet has more significance than the others on the remaining schedule.

"All the meets we run in from here on out are important," he said.

Dan Trainor suffered a sprained ankle on Sept. 21 and will not be in action for the Hawkeyes.

Dan Haut and Micah VanDenend, who are also injured, will also stay home too.

Women's golf hits the greens at invitational

The Iowa women's golf team will be in action again this weekend, when it travels to Columbus, Ohio, to participate in the Lady Northern Invitational.

Teeing up for the Hawkeyes will be senior Laura Holmes, juniors Liz Bennett, Lauren Cole, Shannon Fleming, and freshmen Virginia Bonfils and Karla Murra. The tournament will be held on the par-72 Ohio State University Scarlet Golf Course and will feature every Big Ten squad.

"This will be a preview of the Big Ten championships... it's one of our most important tournaments of the year," Iowa coach Bobbe Carney said.

Volleyball to square off against Indiana

Iowa volleyball coach Rita Buck-Crockett is doing her best Emeril Lagasse these days in order to get her troops to "kick it up a notch."

The 5-4 Hawkeyes, fresh off a week of rest, will head to the state of Indiana for their first Big Ten action of the year, meeting Purdue tonight and Indiana on Saturday night. Both matches will start at 7 p.m.

"It's the next level," Buck-Crockett said about league play. "The games come quicker. It's our conference. It's just a lot more stuff to think about."

The Boilermakers and Hoosiers will offer some of the stiffest competition the Hawkeyes will face all year. Purdue enters tonight's play with a 7-3 mark, while Indiana brings a 7-4 mark into the weekend.

Purdue is led by junior Kim McCosha, who is averaging 4.06 kills per game and is fifth in the big Ten with a 1.33 blocks per game average, while Indiana is led by junior Christina Archibald, who's averaging 4.53 kills per game, good for third in the Big Ten.

"Purdue is a very good blocking team. It has a solid offense. It's definitely improved from last year," Buck-Crockett said.

"Indiana was very good last year, and it has a majority of its players back this year. It's getting better every year, just as we're getting better every year, so it'll be good competition for us."

— by Kelly Beaton

Iowa women's tennis to perform in first meet

The Iowa women's tennis team will compete for the first time this season when it travels to Greenville, S.C., for the Furman Invitational this weekend.

The Hawkeyes will be led by veterans, including seniors Deni Alexandrova and Jennifer Hodgman, along with juniors Gloria Okino, Jenny Schulte, and sophomore Chelsea Glynn.

"The players are ready, and we're off to a good start," Hawkeye coach Paul Wardlaw said.

Freshmen Hilde Jansman, Hillary Mintz, Megan Racette, and Hilary Tyler will get their first chance at collegiate competition this weekend.

"This is a fun group, but they're really talented and very spirited," Wardlaw said.

— by Dustin Deeny

Men's tennis head to Ball State Invitational

The Iowa men's tennis team will play in its first event of the year when it travels to Muncie, Ill., to compete in the Ball State Invitational.

Competing for the Hawkeyes will be senior Matis Jasicek, and sophomores Chaitu Malempati, Parker Ross, and Wheaton College transfer Aaron Schaechterle.

This will be the first event in more than a year for Jasicek, who missed all of last season with an injury. Freshmen Sebastain Delgado, Walter Valarezo, Scott Elwell, and Alexis Lebron will also compete.

"The fall is all about getting experience, particularly for the young guys," Hawk coach Steve Houghton said.

The tournament will include 18 teams from the Midwest.

"We'll know a lot more about the guys on our team once this weekend is over," Houghton said.

Cincinnati Reds' Willy Mo Pena (26) is safe at first as Chicago Cubs' Randall Simon stretches to take the throw on Thursday.

Cubs flub back into tie

CINCINNATI (AP) — Sammy Sosa climbed the career charts with two more homers, only to watch the Chicago Cubs let a big one slip away.

Sean Casey's homer capped a six-run sixth inning and rallied Cincinnati to a 9-7 victory Thursday night.

Sosa's two-run homer put Chicago ahead, 3-0, in the third and moved him ahead of Mickey Mantle into 10th place on the career list with 537. It also gave him 100 RBIs for the ninth straight season, the first time it's been done in the National League.

He rounded the bases again in the eighth on a solo homer.

Carlos Zambrano (13-11) couldn't hold the early lead.

Casey's two-run homer off Mark Guthrie made it 8-4.

Todd Van Poppel (2-1) gave up four runs in five innings, then left for a pinch hitter during the comeback. Chris Reitsma got the save.

Diamondbacks 8, Rockies 7

DENVER (AP) — Quinton McCracken hit a run-scoring single in the ninth inning to lead Arizona over Colorado.

Robby Hammock led the ninth with a walk off Brian Fuentes (3-3), advanced to second on a groundout, and scored on McCracken's two-out single.

Red Sox 14, Orioles 3

BOSTON (AP) — The Red Sox are back in the playoffs for the first time since 1999, looking for their first World Series title in quite a bit longer.

Derek Lowe held Baltimore to two hits over six innings, and Jason Varitek, Nomar Garciaparra, and Kevin Millar homered as Boston clinched the last spot in the AL playoffs by beating the Orioles.

The Red Sox have made the postseason 10 times since 1918 without winning a championship.

Blue Jays 10, Devil Rays 8

TORONTO (AP) — Carlos Delgado hit four home runs Thursday night, becoming the 15th player in major-league history to accomplish the feat in leading Toronto over Tampa Bay.

Delgado connected in four-straight at-bats. His record-setting shot came leading the eighth inning and tied it at 8. He connected on a 2-2 pitch from Lance Carter.

Royals 7, White Sox 3

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Carlos Beltran homered and drove in three runs, sending the Kansas City Royals past the Chicago White Sox.

Beltran's two-run homer off Dan Wright (1-7) combined with a sacrifice fly gave him 99 RBIs.

Brian Anderson (14-11) took a no-hit bid into the fifth. He went eight innings, giving up seven hits and three runs, with two walks and a strikeout.

Marlins 8, Phillies 4

MIAMI (AP) — The unaccustomed pressure of a playoff race has failed to faze Florida, as Philadelphia can attest.

The surprising Marlins completed a sweep of their three-game series with Philadelphia to clinch a tie for the NL wild card and eliminate the Phillies.

Astros 6, Brewers 1

HOUSTON (AP) — Morgan Ensberg hit two home runs, and Houston moved into a tie for the NL Central lead by beating Milwaukee.

Ensberg hit home runs in the fifth and seventh innings for his first two-homer game of his career. Craig Biggio gave the Astros a quick 1-0 lead off Doug Davis (3-1) with a leadoff homer in the first inning.

SPORTS

POSITION BY POSITION ANALYSIS

Pair of strong QBs will duel on field

BY NICK RICHARD
THE DAILY IOWAN

Quarterback: Both teams are led by solid quarterbacks. Nathan Chandler has only thrown one interception through four games. Chandler played well in his first big game against Arizona State, throwing for three TDs. Michigan State senior Jeff Smoker is playing well after a disastrous 2002 campaign that saw him suspended for the last five games after he admitted to drug abuse. Smoker tends to play well in big games. The one knock on him is that he has a knack for turning the ball over.

Chandler

Advantage: Push

Running back: Fred Russell has been the workhorse for the Iowa offense. He ran for 154 yards on 27 carries against what was supposed to be a good ASU defense. He must stay healthy for Iowa to have continued success. Michigan State starts Jaren Hayes, who has 338 rushing yards and two TDs this season. Hayes will need a big game for MSU to win.

Russell

Advantage: Iowa

Wide receiver: Iowa lost yet another offensive weapon, Ed Hinkel, to a groin injury. Iowa had to take the redshirts off James Townsend and Eric McCollum as a result of Mo Brown's injury, and both came up with big plays against ASU. Calvin Davis and Ramon Ochoa stepped up their games against ASU, and they will have to do the same against a weak MSU secondary. Smoker has a big go-to guy in Agim Shabaj, who has 20 receptions for 314 yards and three TDs. He is a big-play threat for the Spartans.

Advantage: Michigan State

Offensive line: This is where the game will be won. Iowa pounded a tough ASU run defense. The Hawks will have to do the same to an equally tough MSU defense. If they can duplicate last week's success against MSU, it could be a long game for the Spartan defense. The Spartans must open holes in the Iowa defense to run, otherwise they will become one-dimensional the same way ASU did last week.

Advantage: Iowa

Defensive line: Michigan State leads the conference in sacks with 17 through four games and rushing yardage allowed at just 41 per game. It must continue its strong pass rush to keep Chandler and the Iowa running game off-track. Keep in mind that MSU has these sacks against such teams as Western Michigan and Rutgers. The Spartans haven't faced an offensive line like Iowa's yet this year, including Notre Dame. Iowa will look for the same plan against MSU that it had against ASU: Use the four-man rush to disrupt Smoker.

Whitney Kidder/The Daily Iowan

Advantage: Push

Linebackers: Iowa linebackers Grant Steen, Abdul Hodge, and Chad Greenway are among the best trios of linebackers in the country. They have speed and strength, and they are sure tacklers. MSU hasn't seen speed like this at linebacker yet this year. Hodge and Greenway have combined for 32 tackles each of the last two games. MSU returns a strong linebacker corps of Ronald Stanley, Mike Labinjo, and Seth Mitchell. They are solid players but not the caliber of Iowa's linebackers.

Advantage: Iowa

Defensive backs: Iowa holds a big advantage here. Michigan State is allowing a conference worst 309.2 passing yards per game against weak opponents. MSU lost three starters from last year's secondary that ranked third in the Big Ten. MSU returns only free safety Jason Harmon. Iowa's secondary has been a strength this year after being a weakness last year. There is an outside chance that preseason All-American Bob Sanders will return to action this week after missing time because of an injury.

Advantage: Iowa

Special teams: Iowa and Michigan State have the two best special-teams units in the country. Iowa is second in kickoff returns, MSU third. MSU is first in punting, Iowa third. MSU punter Brandon Fields averages 46.8 yards per punt, while David Bradley averages 41.2 yards per punt. MSU kicker Dave Rayner is 12-16 on field goals, while Nate Kaeding is 4-4. The biggest difference is Iowa's blocked punts. Iowa has converted blocked kicks into points, while MSU hasn't blocked any kicks yet this year.

Advantage: Iowa

'The Year' for Cubs?

But if the Cubs don't suffer any serious setbacks, if they stay healthy, if they just go out there and lose to the Pirates (the Pirates!) at Wrigley, from what can we draw comfort?

You'd think that a second-place finish would be seen as a major victory for a team that never wins anything, but as we've seen, you're not thinking straight. Usually by late September — by late July, even — we don't have to worry about our Cubbies. They might finish as high as fourth, a mere 30 games out of first, and we can turn our attention to football. This year, we got another month of nail-biting wins and violence-inducing losses, all leading up to the inevitable heartbreak at the end. In short, the Cubs, usually a Yugo, are now a 747 — heading straight for a skyscraper.

So cut out tomorrow's standings, tape "Baseball Tonight," and grab an Old Style. You think this is The Year, and if that delusion carries you through the next three days, more power to you.

Me? I know better.

Hawkeyes the hunted

HAWKEYE FOOTBALL

best in the nation, and the Hawkeyes shut down ASU's vaunted passing attack in last weekend's 21-2 win at Kinnick Stadium. Stakes are higher now, and the Hawkeyes know all eight Big Ten teams will be gunning to knock off last year's co-champs. "I know everybody's going to be gunning for us because last year we were 8-0 in the league," said Johnson. "That's a good feeling to have; that makes you raise your standards and play harder every game."

E-mail/DI reporter Donovan Burba at donovan-burba@uiowa.edu

Defense, Weinberg still steady

FIELD HOCKEY

The Hawkeyes continued their strong defensive play as well; Iowa goalkeeper Barb Weinberg picked up three more saves on the year. The junior from Louisville kicked both feet out to her left at the 17:30 mark in the first half to keep the game scoreless following a California penalty corner.

After a scoreless first half, it didn't take Iowa long to fill up the scoreboard in the second. Dawson, a 5-7 junior from Berlin, N.J., took some advice and hit a rare backhand into the Golden Bear net at the 36:41 mark. (Each half is 35 minutes.) "I'd been working with [Coach] Carla [Tagliente] on that," Dawson said. "I hardly ever do that, but she said I should try it."

Iowa's lead didn't last long, however. A minute and a half later, the Bears' Jenna Long cracked a shot from the right side. Weinberg did the splits but couldn't stop the ball. Feddersen, who led Cal with four shots on goal, hit a redirect to light the scoreboard, 1-1.

Cal almost unknotted the score at the 19:30 mark. With the sound of Hawkeye football punter David Bradley booming punts on the practice field, the Golden Bears smacked a shot that was redirected into the air, over Weinberg and into the cage. Luckily for the Hawkeyes, the hard, plastic-coated ball was illegally advanced off a California player's foot. With some of the Berkeley fans and players yelling in celebration, Stiver retrieved the ball and passed it right back into play.

"They were a pretty fast team," said McMahon, a junior forward from St. Louis. "But we were definitely ready. I thought we held our position and transferred the ball well."

The Hawkeyes will need to keep their skills sharp for Saturday, when Penn State rolls into Iowa City to kick off the Big Ten season. The Nittany Lions will bring a 6-1 record to Grant Field for the game, which will start at noon.

"They're No. 6 in the polls and were in the Final Four last year," Griesbaum said. "It'll be a great way to kick off the conference schedule."

WASHINGTON STATE AT OREGON

In a week devoid of any compelling matchups, the Pac-10 battle between Washington State and Oregon is by default the biggest game. But while it may not seem exciting now, the outcome could determine the conference champion.

Oregon is coming off the biggest win of the young college football season, a 31-27 upset of Michigan. The win thrust the Ducks back into the spotlight after a disappointing 2002 and cemented Autzen Stadium's reputation as one of the toughest places to visit. The Ducks have all the momentum in going into conference play, and QB Kellen Clemens is playing with confidence. The sophomore hasn't thrown an interception yet this year, and he should go over the 800-yard mark by the second quarter. Samie Parker and Demetrius Williams give Clemens two dangerous targets.

Washington State may not have a big win under its belt, but it does have Matt Kegel. Kegel already has 1,038 yards passing, but his 5:3 touchdown to interception ratio is scary. However, the Cougars' secondary, featuring Virgil Williams and Don Turner (two INTs apiece), has potential to even up the turnover battle.

Both Oregon and Washington State hope to challenge the high-powered USC Trojans for the Pac-10 crown. Arizona State's loss to Iowa last weekend left the door wide open for several other teams to step up as legitimate contenders. The Cougars may have the better quarterback, but on Saturday the Ducks, riding a wave of momentum from last week and using a great home-field advantage, will prevail.

OUR STORY BEGINS

This weekend's football game at Michigan State sounds like the perfect opportunity for what may be the world's first traveling toga party, spanning four states and more than 400 miles. A straight shot will take at least seven hours, so put in the new Outkast CD or check out the Johnny Cash discography and a few books on tape from the library. The feeling of riding in an automobile through the heartland listening to The Crisis of Islam, by Bernard Lewis, while wearing a toga will be an enlightening one indeed. It may, in fact, be the epitome of Zen, the exact thing on Mona Lisa's mind while being painted by DaVinci. I've put together a few stops along the way to allow for as many memories as possible.

OK, so you haven't quite gotten out of town yet, but some people might be looking for a smaller road trip and this will provide a mini-version. Solon High School is the home of the Spartans, so attending their Homecoming on Friday night against Cascade might not pack as much excitement as the Hawkeye/Spartan affair, but it will give ample opportunities for toga party high jinks. Be aware of local laws and regulations involving statutory encounters as well as indecent exposure.

GARY, IND.

This just might be the missing piece in the puzzle: A traveling toga party through Gary. The best activity in town would be a brief appearance at one of Gary's world-renowned flea markets. To get to the closest one, hop off I-94 onto Ripley Street North. Before you can yell "Pledgemaster John 'Bluto' Blutarsky" 10 times, you'll be in a paradise. I do recommend staying in a group. There's a big difference between a traveling toga party and a single person in a bed sheet. And if you're looking for the easiest way to tell a fake Rolex from a real one, look at the second hand. A real 'Lex sweeps; the fake one ticks.

EAST LANSING

Finally. We're here! But, keep this in mind: In 1925, when Michigan Agricultural College became Michigan College, a contest picked "The Michigan Staters" to replace "Aggies" as the nickname. However, Lansing State Journal sports editor George Alderton didn't like it, so he renamed them the Spartans because, well, he felt like it.

Now, when people ask, "What's with the togas?" keep in mind history and say, "Well, we felt like it." The togas will probably blend in the best while tailgating — also known as parlaying — which is mostly done on the tennis courts of Wilson Street, one block south of the stadium. MSU's ticket office expects tickets to be sold out by Friday, so either use your Gary, Ind., flea-market goods to barter or find a place with some big screens. After the game, either change into a fresh toga, or flip it inside out like half-used underwear. Then keep North on Harrison until you hit Michigan Avenue. A right on Michigan will take you to Grand River and downtown East Lansing. All along Grand River are clubs and pubs galore. Don't forget that a toga makes a great makeshift teepee, a gigantic flag of surrender, and a perfect bedspread on the lawn of MSU President Peter McPherson.

ALAMO, MICH.

Would any road trip be complete without a stop at the Alamo? Of course not. And neither would a traveling toga party. The town that was, according to its Web site, "named after its township, which had been organized in 1838 and named for David Crockett and his comrades who so heroically defended themselves at the famous castle of the Alamo' in the revolt of Texas from Mexico" is as easy to find. Take Highway 222 in Kalamazoo County north for around 10 miles. Enjoy.

Iowa and Cub fans unite in a frenzy of support. If you decide to make the journey, you might as well spend the night; the trip will run a good two hours both ways. But it might be worth it. A game of limbo in front of the storied Wrigley Field sign should be enough to propel the teams to — dare I say — a pennant and national championship. Don't stop dreaming. Make the moment more special by persuading the person who operates the light-bulb display above the ticket window to write "Go Hawks!" And although I recommend going commando beneath the toga, be advised: Low-bending limbo positions + Windy City = possibly embarrassing.

ROAD TRIP

JOLIET, ILL.

We're young, we're free, we're American. What better way to appreciate our independence than by visiting a maximum-security correctional facility. To get there, take 53 North off I-80 to 30 East. Then cruise up 171 North and, Presto! Reality. I suggest a brief dance outside the gates or maybe a quick, friendly game of touch football. Some things to ponder on the excursion are the average age of the prisoners (27.5), the daily population (1,200) and the average cost per year per inmate ($23,441). Anyone wearing a toga who brings up the name Michael Focally in serious discussion of our prison systems will be honored with a lifetime of good karma.

DAVENPORT

You're now a good 55 miles on your way, and if you didn't make a pit stop, now's the time. Feel free to drop your laundry off at my mother's house, but don't be surprised if your underwear come back with an embroidered embellishment. Her favorites are cats and butterflies, but with proper suggestion, I'm sure she could sew on a nice Tigerhawk. If the town intrigues you, check out the linguistic phenomenon known as superpluralization. Here's an example: Road-tripper: "Do you know where I might find a good doughnut?" Davenport: "If a guy or gal woulds wants a good doughnut, then checks outs the Krispeys Kremes."

OUT OF THE PAST

Michigan State QB Jeff Smoker has dealt with his demons and is moving on

BY NICK RICHARDS
THE DAILY IOWAN

If Jeff Smoker could, he would erase 2002 from his memory.

So much promise, so much potential wasted last year in East Lansing. Michigan State was a dark-horse candidate to win the Big Ten last year. With players such as Smoker and All-American wide receiver Charles Rogers, it seemed like a smart pick.

Everything else, as they say, is history.

After a blow-out loss to California and a tough loss to archrival Notre Dame, everything fell apart for the Spartans, with Smoker in the middle of the decline. The Spartan quarterback, who developed a drug-abuse problem during the year, admitted the problem after a 28-7 loss to Minnesota and was suspended for the final five games of 2002.

In addition to Smoker's problems, head coach Bobby Williams was fired midseason, Rogers left school early for the NFL, and Michigan State tanked down the stretch, going 4-8. The team lost four of the five games Smoker missed.

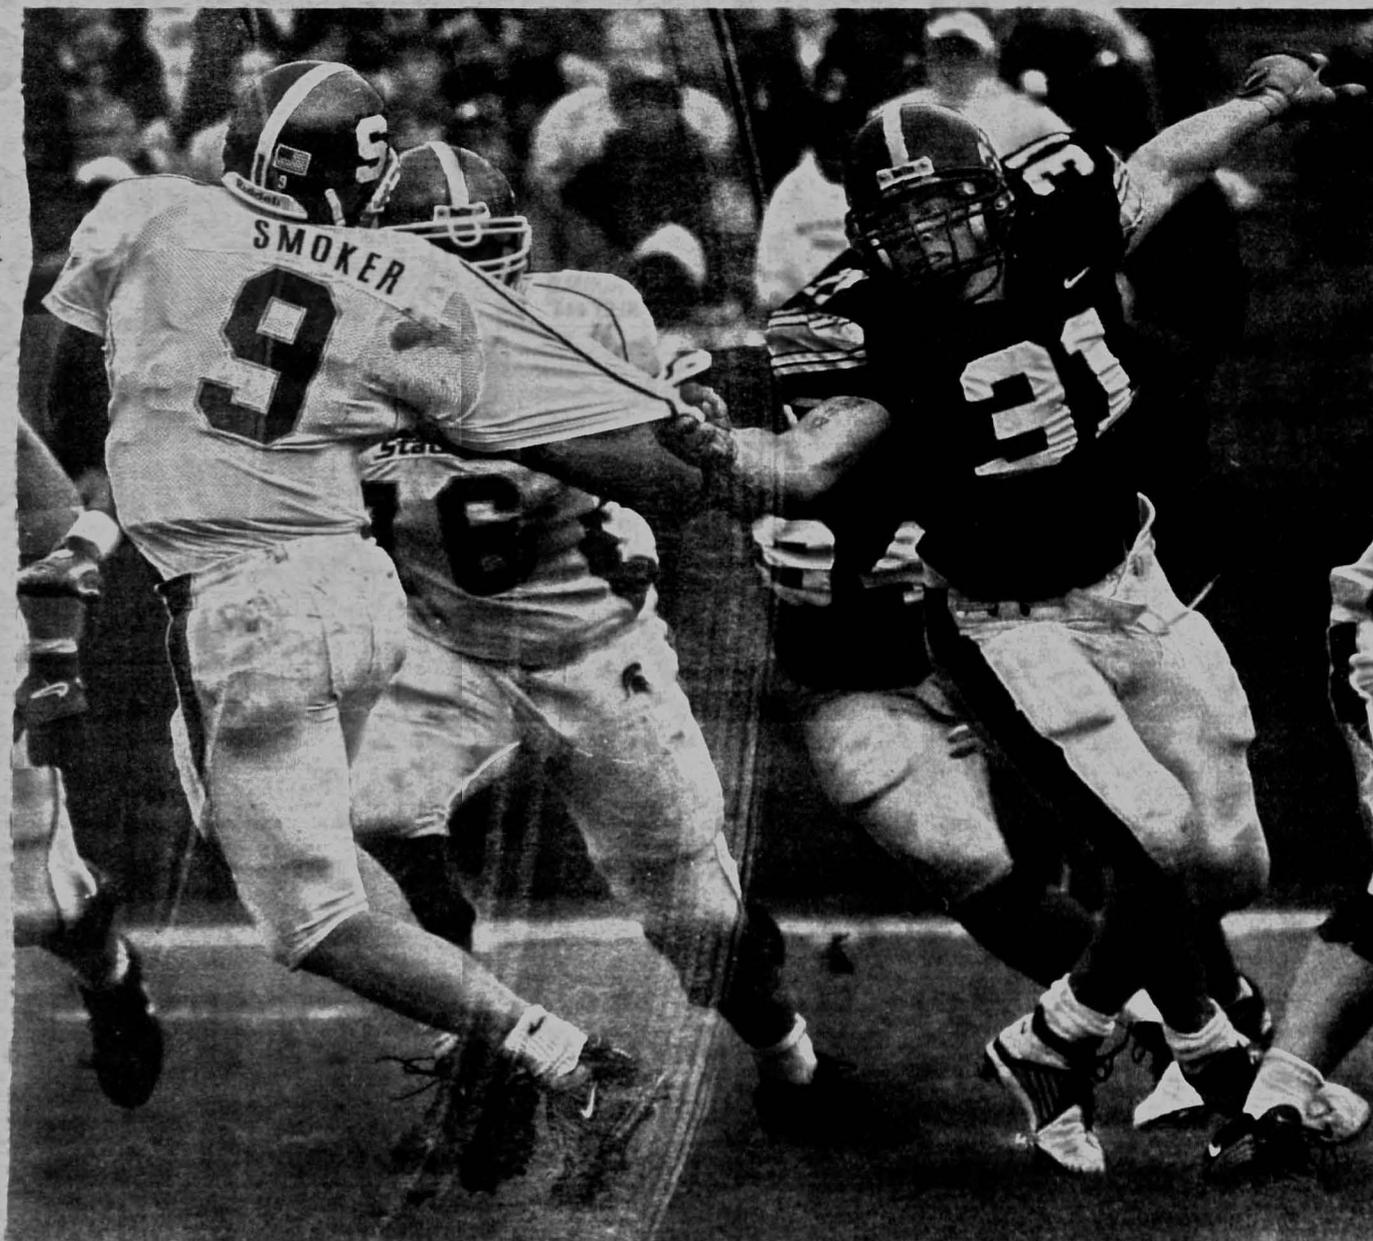

One of its losses in 2002 was a 44-16 thrashing at the hands of Iowa. Smoker wasn't his normal self in that game — the Iowa defense flustered him, and he threw for just 169 yards, one TD, and two INTs. One of Smoker's interceptions was returned 62 yards for a touchdown by Derek Pagel. After he fumbled, Smoker was pulled from the game. That defeat was a bitter pill to swallow.

"That was an embarrassing game last year," he said.

From that point, Smoker played just one more game. Afterwards, he admitted his substance-abuse problem and was suspended.

Smoker's career started with promise. Rated as a top quarterback by many recruiting gurus, he had an immediate effect on the Spartans as a true freshman, throwing for 1,365 yards and six TDs. He was named a honorable-mention All-American for his first-year performance in 2000.

As a sophomore, Smoker exploded onto the scene, throwing for 2,579 yards and 21 TDs. Over the last eight games of 2001, he completed 64 percent of his passes for 2,283 yards and 20 TDs. He finished the year with a 166.4 passer rating, the highest in Michigan State history and the third highest in Big Ten history. He went into the 2002 season as the top returning quarterback in the Big Ten.

After his disastrous 2002 season, Smoker went into rehab and is now a new man. He doesn't speak about his drug abuse, preferring to leave it in the past. When he rejoined the team, he was not allowed to compete for the starting job in the spring, but he beat out Damon Dowdell for it in the fall.

Despite all his off-field problems, Smoker is in sight of several Michigan State records. He already has broken school records for total offense and passing yards and is tied for the touchdown mark. He stands third in pass completions, second in pass attempts, and seventh in completion percentage.

Smoker has led Michigan State to a 3-1 record, including a big win at Notre Dame. He has put up good numbers this year despite the loss of Rogers, throwing for 931 yards, six TDs, and five INTs. He threw for 119 yards against Notre Dame while playing with a sprained big toe that affected his push-off on his throws.

"It's good enough to play and practice on, but it's still not 100 percent," he said. "It's getting better day to day. Hopefully, it won't be a problem this week."

He will face an Iowa defense that is one of the top in the nation, allowing just 8.2 points per game and 290 total yards per game. He expects a tough test this weekend.

"It will definitely be a challenge," he said. "They are just as good as last year. They are the best defense we have seen this year, including Notre Dame."

QBs examine others for style points

BY JASON BRUMMOND
THE DAILY IOWAN

Last season, Jason Manson had a front-row view of a quarterback he wouldn't mind imitating.

"It was very beneficial [watching Brad Banks]," the redshirt freshman said. "We have similar game styles. I could take some things that he did and use it as an advantage to me. That maybe will help us win games."

Manson and Iowa's Heisman Trophy runner-up have similar styles — both are mobile quarterbacks who want to make things happen and don't mind rolling out of the pocket to make plays. However, Manson would rather become his own quarterback than be compared with others.

"We have some similarities," he said. "The way he plays, I basically play like that. I just want to make my own name and not try to be in his shadow or anything. Hopefully, I can do that."

The Bloomfield, Conn., native said when he watches professional football games,

"The 'Manson Files' is a weekly feature exclusively written for Pregame — an examination of the season through the eyes of one player, redshirt freshman QB Jason Manson.

he analyzes various aspects. He started this practice when he started college football and credits studying film to the development.

"When I was in high school, I would watch the games to watch the games," he said. "Now, I'm trying to take more things from them. When you're watching film, you have to pay attention to close details, so you might as well pay attention when you're watching the NFL."

Iowa starting QB Nathan Chandler said there are a lot of people to learn from in the NFL. Growing up in Southlake, Texas, he was a Dallas Cowboys and Troy Aikman fan, who, Chandler says, is as "fundamentally sound as you can get." Chandler believes even though you watch players whom you want to be like, you still have to play the game your own way.

"You do the fundamentals as well as you can, but you also try to be a playmaker," the 6-7, 250-pound senior said. "You can work on those different aspects during practice, but during the game, you just have to take what is there."

Being a dual-threat quarterback, Manson looks more toward today's athletic quarterbacks as examples. He said Atlanta Falcons' Michael Vick and the Philadelphia Eagles' Donovan McNabb are his favorite players. He noted that Vick has a style unlike anyone else in the sport, so he watches McNabb for practical reasons. He carefully notes decisions they make in key situations.

"I try to see how much they actually run or the times when they do run — they just don't drop back and take off," Manson said. "When they run, most of the time, there is either nobody open, or they're running to make a better throw for themselves."

BACK IN THE DAY: OCT. 7, 2000

Ferentz brings in new attitude

BY KELLY BEATON
THE DAILY IOWAN

Since Kirk Ferentz's ascension to the Iowa football throne in 1999, the mantra in the Hawkeye locker room has been "Break the Rock."

The first chip was taken out of that boulder on Oct. 7, 2000, when the Hawkeyes knocked off Michigan State, 21-16, for their head coach's first Big Ten victory.

The Iowa upset was led by Kahlil Hill, who had a 90-yard kickoff return for a touchdown, which pulled Iowa within 16-14 late in the third quarter. The triumph was sealed when Kevin Kasper hauled in a 43-yard screen from Jon Beutjer for a late score.

Hill had 125 kick-return yards, and Kasper had five of his school season-record 82 catches, while Beutjer went 17-for-25 with 146 yards and one score. Iowa won despite being outrushed 286 yards to 85.

"This was certainly a great victory for our football team," an emotional Ferentz told The Daily Iowan after the game. "There were some plays that weren't that pretty, but the whole game was a Mona Lisa to me."

Ferentz's first Big Ten win at Iowa clearly came as a relief. As preposterous as it sounds now, the Hawkeye coach was under much scrutiny at the time: Iowa entered the game with a school-record 13-straight losses.

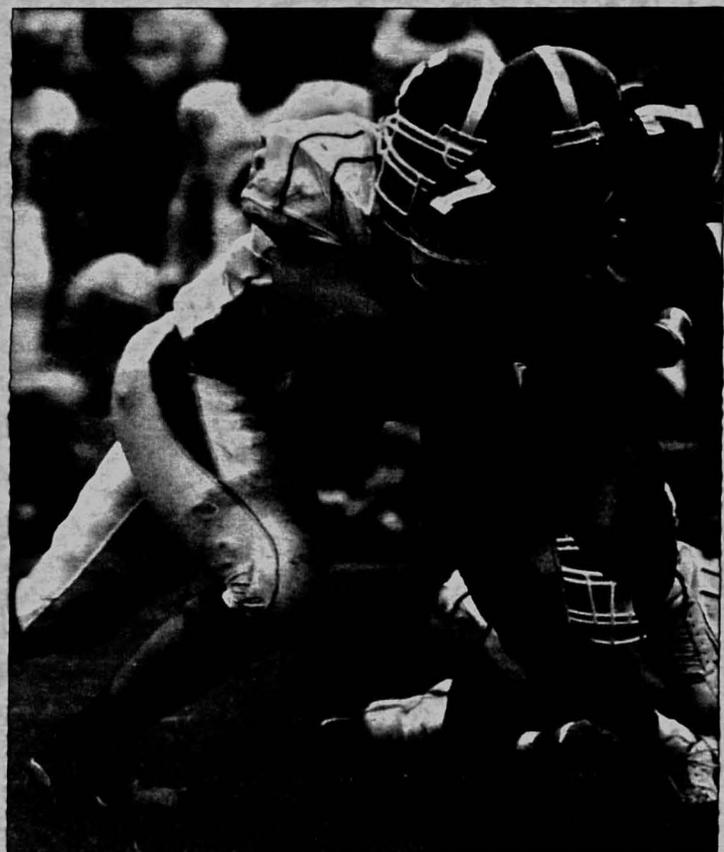

"For that group to stick together the way they did, those seniors — guys like LeVar Woods — will always be etched in my mind," Ferentz told the DI this week. "They kept us hanging in there, and then all of a sudden, some good things started happening."

"All their staff was crying in the locker room," said Woods after the game. "It's a great feeling for them to finally get a victory — a Big Ten victory."

It took the Iowa players and coaches awhile to get to the locker room for their postgame celebration. Hundreds of Hawkeye fans had to join them with a postgame party of their own on the Kinnick turf first.

"It reminded me of the time I went to a Pearl Jam concert," Woods said of the joyous mob. "I don't know how many hits my shoulder pads took, and all the rest of the guys were just getting swamped and couldn't breathe. It was great."

There were some plays that weren't that pretty, but the whole game was a Mona Lisa to me.

point/counterpoint

Is the Hawkeyes' defense the best one ever?

Facing this Iowa defense must be what it feels like to endure those horrible first dates of your adolescence. You squirm, try to figure out any way you can to get out of it, and count the seconds until it's over.

Just ask Ben Roethlisberger and Andrew Walter. They came to Iowa City bright-eyed and bushy-tailed, looking to polish their Heisman résumés, only to leave with faces transfixed with the pained, shell-shocked looks of prisoners of war.

Facing Norm Parker's defense will do that to you. Anywhere you turn, Parker's Posse can corral you. To your right, an Abdul Hodge forearm. To the left, like a blur, comes a Chad Greenway shoulder. And, if you should be fortunate enough to elude their grasp, chances are good you'll end up in a Matt Roth suplex.

To date, the Hawkeyes have yielded just 8.25 points per game, and they are fresh off an outing with Arizona State in which they yielded just 24 yards rushing.

In the contemporary era, only three Hawkeye defensive squads can hang with the 2003 edition. In 1991, led by Leroy Smith and John Derby, the Black and Gold tallied a school-record 61 sacks. The 1987 squad, anchored by Jared DeVries, surrendered 13.3 points per game for the year and in 1988, Lou King, Andre Tippett, and Co. gave up just 79.7 yards rushing per game, holding opponents to an average of 13.0 points.

While others may point to the '90s or '81 teams as being the cream of the defensive crop for Iowa, the 2003 edition will prove better than them all by year's end. The unit is loaded up front, in the middle, and in the secondary. Roth, Jered Clauss, Jonathon Babineaux, and Hodge are a brick wall of a line. Behind them lies a corps of linebackers legendary Hawkeye announcer Bob Brooks has referred to as the fastest he's ever seen in Iowa City — a group so sound, not even the rock-solid Kevin Worthy can crack the starting lineup. As for the secondary, on most Saturdays Parker can throw on the field an All-American-caliber safety (Bob Sanders), a guy with four career blocked punts (Sean Considine), and a corner who may very well break Nile Kinnick's school record for career interceptions (Jovon Johnson).

Perhaps I'm not the best authority on who the most punishing defense of all time was that has donned the Black and Gold. What I've written is really just words on a page. The indiscernible whimpers of opponents who have just faced the wrath of Parker's Posse tell you your answer.

I've been going to football games at Kinnick since 1989. While this might be the best defense I've seen at Kinnick, it still has a long way to go before we can call it the best in school history. The defenses of the late 1950s, 1981, and 1991 are some of the best ever to play at Iowa. All of them were talented, All-American laden squads.

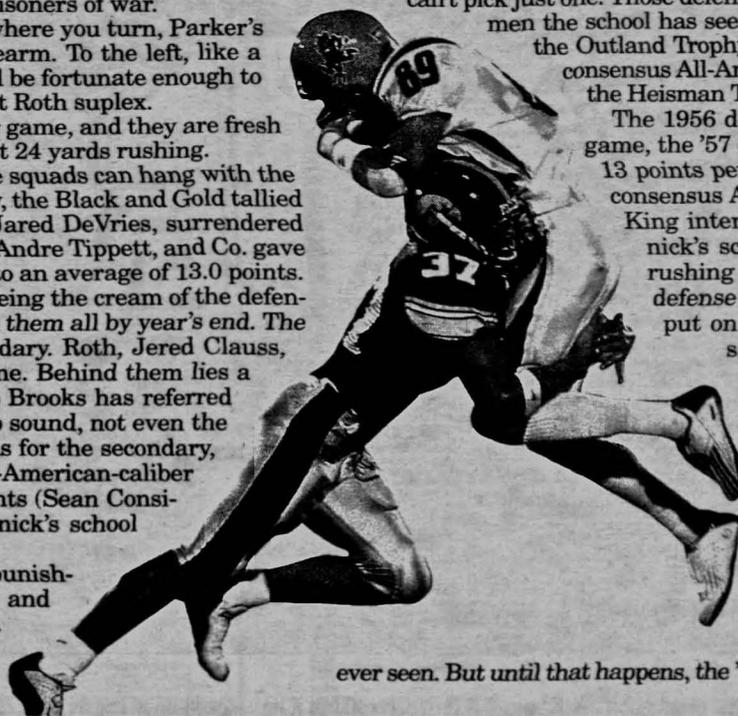

The defenses of the late '50s were some of the best in school history. Really, I can't pick just one. Those defenses featured two of the most-dominant line-men the school has seen in Cal Jones and Alex Karras. Both won the Outland Trophy (Jones in 1955, Karras in '57), both were consensus All-Americans, and both finished in the top 10 in the Heisman Trophy voting.

The 1956 defense allowed a whopping 8.4 points per game, the '57 defense just 12. The 1981 defense allowed 13 points per game. Andre Tippett, Hayden Fry's first consensus All-American, terrorized offenses, and Lou King intercepted eight passes, which tied Nile Kinnick's school record. That team allowed just 79.7 rushing yards per game, a school record. The 1991 defense featured All-American Leroy Smith, who put on a show for the entire season, making 18 sacks on the year, including five against Ohio State, both school records for a season and a game. The '91 defense allowed just 14.9 points per game.

While this year's defense also has the potential for All-Americans, we must remember that they have only played four games. The defenses of the late '50s, '81, and '91 all did it for an entire season. If this 2003 defense continues to destroy opposing offenses like the defenses mentioned above, then I will gladly say the 2003 Iowa defense is the best the school has ever seen. But until that happens, the '50s, '81, and '91 get the nod.

BY DONOVAN BURBA

There was a time, not so long ago, when a game against a mid-major was considered an automatic win for most teams in the Big Six.

Marquee programs rolled out the red carpet for MAC, WAC, and Conference USA teams; the hosts got an easy victory and revenue from ticket sales, concessions, and so on, while the visitors got a fat paycheck and maybe some television time. For years, the system worked. Sure, there was an occasional upset, but mid-majors stayed safely in the second tier.

The times they are a changin'.

Last weekend, three MAC teams served notice that that league, long a preferred whipping boy for the Big Ten and Big 12, is no longer one of college football's ugly stepchildren. Marshall, one of the few mid-majors to consistently draw national attention, went into Manhattan and knocked off No. 6 Kansas State. Toledo actually came from behind to beat No. 11 Pittsburgh, and Northern Illinois, which upset Maryland on opening day, went down to Tuscaloosa and stymied Alabama.

There are, to be fair, some pretty lousy mid-majors. For every Marshall and Louisville, there's a Buffalo and East Carolina. But bad teams are by no means exclusive to the "lesser" conferences. Duke, Indiana, Baylor, and Temple all play in Big Six conferences but couldn't beat some good high-school teams.

The emergence of mid-majors creates a sticky situation for the NCAA. The Bowl Championship Series, designed to definitively choose who should play for the national title, excludes non-Big Six teams from the game's biggest bowls unless one finishes in the top six in the final rankings. Six of the eight bids automatically go to the major-conference champions, leaving smaller teams to fight for two at-large bids.

Once Miami and Virginia Tech depart for the ACC in 2005, the Big East will be just as weak, if not weaker than the MAC. Yet under the current system, the Big East champion would still get an automatic spot. Does a 7-5 Boston College team deserve a BCS bid over a 10-2 Marshall squad? Of course not. But year after year, talented teams with good records end up playing in the GMAC Bowl in late December rather than on New Year's Day.

Even the elite mid-majors are admittedly still behind college football's cream of the crop. But weekends like the last one show that the gap is shrinking.

Big wins lead to better recruiting, and better recruiting leads to stronger programs. Some day soon, a once lightly regarded non-Big Six school is going to put together a program that can run with the nation's best. Here's hoping that by that time, the system will allow it the chance to strut its stuff when it matters the most — in January.
