CITY PRIMARY CUTS FIELD OF HOPEFULS NEARLY IN HALF.

BY ALEX LANG

The race for four Iowa City City Council seats was cut nearly in half Tuesday, ousting five hopefuls and one incumbent from a citywide pool of 14 candidates.

Leading the council's at-large primary vote was Bob Elliott with 60 percent, followed by Dee Vanderhoef with 43 percent, Brandon Ross at 27 percent, and Steve Soboroff, who culled 21 percent. Voters were allowed to choose up to two candidates.

Regenia Bailey received 55 percent of the vote in the District C race. Dean Shannon, who received 28 percent, also landed a spot on the ballot in the Nov. 4 general election. Incumbent Irvin Pfab lost his seat in the primary. "This was the first time I've run for a government office," Elliott said. "It is very humbling to have people say that they want you." Crediting her victory to experience on the council, Vanderhoef said that it was very gratifying to garner

Although George Etre dropped out of the race for the Iowa City City Council on Monday night, his name remained on Tuesday's primary election ballot, and he received 2 percent of the vote.

He said he dropped out of the race because he was concerned that his busy schedule would not allow him to put in the effort that the council deserves.

"It just got to be a little too time-consuming," he said, adding that he is not as passionate as some candidates on all the issues. "I'm not really into campaigning, shaking hands, and kissing babies."

Johnson County Auditor Tom Slockett said Etre's name appearing on Tuesday's ballot was "not all that unusual," adding that it has very little effect on the auditor's

There have been four elections in the past 10 years that have had candidates drop out yet remain on the ballot and garner a few votes.

Two candidates who dropped out of elections in 1994 had their names remain on ballots. John Deeth dropped out of the Coralville City Council race, and Mark Libants dropped his candidacy for the lowa Legislature.

Despite dropping out, Libants still received 2,837 votes. In 2000, Dick Brown bowed out of the race for Johnson County supervisor and received 624 votes, narrowly losing to Myron Smalley by only 31 votes. In 2001, Jacob Felderman dropped out of the Iowa City City Council election and received 46 votes.

Etre said his candidacy was not about acquiring a seat on the council but rather using his name recognition to get students involved in the elections.

"People will be surprised by the student impact on this election," he said, adding that he plans to endorse a candidate following the primaries.

Watch out, freshmen — you could wake up to a whole new heftier you in 12 weeks if you're not careful.

A study done this summer by David Levitsky, a professor of nutritional sciences and psychology at Cornell University, has found that first-year students gain an average of 4.2 pounds during the first 12 weeks of school — almost 11 times more than 17- and 18year-olds normally gain and 20 times more than the average American adult.

Those 4.2 pounds could add up to 15 after only one year hence the expression "Freshman 15," well-known to college students across the country, describing the extra 15 pounds freshmen may gain over the course of their first year.

Levitsky's study showed that partaking of the fare at all-youcan-eat dining halls accounts for 20 percent of freshman weight gain. Other causes included the number of evening snacks consumed, the number of weekend meals, and the consumption of junk food.

Anne Harkins, the Burge Dining Hall manager, said she is aware that such facilities could contribute to the Freshman 15.

Calif. selects Arnold

BY ERICA WERNER ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES - Californians banished Gov. Gray Davis just 11 months into his second term and elected action-hero Arnold Schwarzenegger to replace him Tuesday - a Hollywood ending to one of the most extraordinary political melodramas in the nation's history.

Voters traded a career Democratic politician who became one of the state's most despised chief executives for a moderate Republican megastar who had never before run for office. Davis became the first California governor pried from office and only the second nationwide to be recalled.

Early tallies showed the recall favored by 1,019,874 voters -57.5 percent — and opposed by 755,375, 42.6 percent.

Other early returns had Schwarzenegger ahead with 862,217 votes, Democratic Lt. Gov. Cruz Bustamante with 482,376, Republican state Sen. Tom McClintock with 200,970, and Green Party candidate Peter Camejo with 25,916.

Schwarzenegger prevailed despite a flurry of negative publicity in the campaign's final days, surviving allegations that he had groped women and accusations that as a young man he expressed admiration for Adolf Hitler.

The 56-year-old Austrian immigrant - the husband of television journalist Maria Shriver - finds himself in charge of the nation's most populated state with an economy surpassed only by those of four countries.

Schwarzenegger promised to return the shine to a Golden State beset by massive budget problems and riven by deep political divisions.

Voters faced two questions whether to recall Davis, and who among the other candidates should replace him if he was removed. They chose to get rid of the incumbent and put Schwarzenegger in his place.

Approximately seven in 10 voters interviewed in exit polls said they had made up their minds how they would vote on the recall question more than a month before the election.

Edwards attacks Bush on jobs

BY ANNIE SHUPPY THE DAILY IOWAN

CEDAR RAPIDS - Sen. John Edwards remains confident about his bid for the Democratic presidential nomination in a dwindling candidate field despite a lessthan-stellar outlook in the polls.

Responding to a question about Monday's announcement that Sen. Bob Graham, D-Fla., has dropped out of the presidential race, Edwards, a Democrat from North Carolina, was quick to note that he intends to charge forward with his own campaign.

"Bob Graham is good man and a friend of mine. It's unfortunate for him that he will no longer be campaigning," Edwards told The Daily Iowan. "I feel good about how my own campaign is going. I feel very encouraged." A Sept. 20 Newsweek poll put Edwards at 6 percent nationally among the Democrats, with Gen. Wesley Clark, former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean, and Sen. Joe Lieberman, D-Conn., leading the pack. But a poll released Tuesday by the American Research Group put Edwards first in South Carolina by 9 points.

The former trial lawyer also said he could not predict whether the current nine-candidate pack of Democratic hopefuls will continue to narrow, describing the campaign dynamics as "unpredictable."

"I see us making progress and continuing to have momentum," Edwards said before stepping into his campaign van, which was headed to Tipton.

In a speech to roughly 150 activists in Cedar Rapids, Edwards focused his attacks on Bush, declining to criticize his fellow Democrats. He addressed his concerns about extra tax breaks for multinational corporations that, he says, have moved jobs overseas.

Nicholas Wynia/The Daily Iowan

Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., campaigns for the Democratic presidential nomination on Tuesday evening in Cedar Rapids.

"We ought to give tax breaks to American companies that will keep jobs right here," Edwards said in his slight Southern drawl.

The University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill graduate also touted his plans to restore funding for after-school programs and make higher education affordable through his College for Everyone initiative. He also discussed ways to address America's nursing shortage, repair the shortcomings of the country's health-care system, and hold pharmaceutical companies accountable.

The drug companies "are absolutely crippling people," he said. "We've got to stand up to these industries for the American people.'

Emily Lundquist, a Luther College senior who plans to attend the Jan. 19 Democratic caucuses, said she was disappointed that Edwards did not address the global AIDS problem, adding that the pandemic is a "huge national-security issue." However, she said, she appreciated Edwards' commitment to education.

"The only candidate talking about [AIDS] right now is Bush," Lundquist said. "Td like to hear the other candidates talk about what they're going to do without being asked first."

Another student, UI freshman Lindsay Keller, said she has followed Edwards for the past two years and remains a committed supporter. She cited economic recovery and health-care issues as strengths in his campaign.

Kim Rubey, Edwards' Iowa press secretary, said the candidate will return to Iowa for campaign swings next week and the following week, noting that the state is an important component of Edwards' overall strategy.

"We're making a lot of progress, and we want to build on that," Rubey said.

UI lecturer nominated for national award

BY MEGHAN SIMS THE DAILY IOWAN

A UI College of Education lecturer who doubles as a West Liberty substitute teacher was nominated by more than a dozen people, among them prominent athletics and student leaders, for a state award that could lead to national recognition for his achievements.

Mitchell Kelly, who has undergraduate, master's, and doctoral degrees from the UI, is a candidate for the Carnegie Foundation Professor of the Year Award, an annual distinction given to one college instructor in each of the 46 participating states.

If selected, the 39-year-old has a chance to win one of four national awards, which includes a $5,000 prize and an expense-paid trip to the November awards ceremony in Washington, D.C. But he remains modest about his nomination, crediting his students for his

Hospitals and Clinics. And his nomination for the award, from former Iowa wrestling coach Dan Gable, underscores his time as a walk-on for the team

Other nominations came from Iowa football coach Kirk Ferentz, whom he met when teaching the coach's son and several Hawkeye players, and former Ul Student Government President Nick Klenske.

The Council for Advancement and Support of Education and the Carnegie Foundation established the Professor of the Year Award in 1981 to recognize outstanding teachers dedicated to teaching, students, and innovative instructional methods. It remains the only national program to commend college and university professors for their teaching efforts. No teacher from any Iowa school has won the award.

WHAT SETS MITCH APART IS THAT HE REALLY GETS TO KNOW THE STUDENTS, AND HE REALLY CARES ABOUT THEM.

- THOMAS ROCKLIN, KELLY'S CHAIRMAN

Part of Kelly's humility stems from his history as a high-school teacher in West Liberty, where he taught while taking master's degree courses at the UI. When the educational-psychology department became short-staffed, his adviser offered him his current teaching position, which he originally declined.

"But then he said, 'We need you,' and when your adviser g like that, you can't say no," Kelly said.

The best aspect of teaching, he said, is the people he has met. He said he tries to know each of his 250 students' names and emphasizes an intimate, personal atmosphere in his 50student lectures.

One student, the granddaughter of the CEO of the Arlington Race Track, invited him and his family to an Illinois horse race, where they presented a first-place trophy to the winning jockey. "To be in the winner's circle and present a trophy, that's pretty fun," he said. Thomas Rocklin, the chairman of the educational-psychology department and another nominator, has known Kelly since he was a graduate student.

"What sets Mitch apart is that he really gets to know the students, and he really cares about them," he said.

Award winners at the state level are scheduled to be announced by the end of the month; national winners will be awarded in late November.

DENVER - A federal appeals court on Tuesday leared away a hurdle that has kept the government from fully cracking down on telemarketers who contact people on the national do-not-call list.

The 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals temporarily blocked a lower court order barring the Federal Trade Commission from enforcing the registry of more than 50 million numbers.

The court questioned the conclusions of U.S. District Judge Edward Nottingham of Denver, who said the list violates the telemarketing industry's free-speech rights by barring calls from businesses but not charities.

The Supreme Court has held that there is undoubtedly a substantial governmental interest in the prevention of abusive and coercive sales practices," the appeals court said.

The court also noted Congress had found some telemarketing calls "subjected consumers to substantial fraud, deception, and abuse.

FTC Chairman Timothy Muris called the ruling a victory for American consumers and said his agency will return to enforcing the list. The Federal Communications Commission had stepped in at the last minute to handle enforcement, allowing the registry to take effect last week.

Nottingham's ruling had forced the FTC to shut down an that allowed people to register new numbers with the list and file complaints against telemarketers. FTC officials say it will take at least a day to get it up and running again.

THIS IS NOT A CASE WHERE GOVERNMENT IS ACTING ON ITS OWN BUT AN ACTION ONLY AFTER THE CONSUMER OPTS IN AND SIGNS UP

> - ED KAHN, ATTORNEY

The court fight isn't finished. The appeals court said the FTC can run the registry while a challenge from telemarketers winds its way through the courts. Oral arguments were scheduled in Tulsa, Okla., on Sean Gallagher, an attorney who represents the American Teleservices Association and two telemarketing companies, said he was disappointed by the appeals-court decision but refused to call it a defeat.

"This does not reverse the judge's ruling that the law is unconstitutional," he said.

Ed Kahn, a Denver attorney specializing in constitutional law, said Nottingham ignored the fact that FTC rules already allow consumers to put their phone numbers on charity no-call lists.

The list has been the subject of at least two major court challenges by the telemarketing industry. A federal judge in Oklahoma said the FTC lacked the authority to create and enforce the list, a ruling made moot when President Bush signed a hastily passed law clarifying that authority

It was Nottingham's ruling that had been closely watched because of the constitutional issues. His decision crippled the FTC's ability to fully punish telemarketers and kept it from sharing information about the list, hindering the FCC from enforcing it.

The FTC also had to stop providing the list to telemarketers, meaning they were free to call listed numbers without fear of reprisal.

The 10th Circuit has consolidated the appeal of Nottingham's decision with two related challenges - a case brought against the FCC by Denver telemarketers and the FTC's appeal of the ruling in Oklahoma. Arguments in all three cases will be heard at next month's hearing in Tulsa.

Attorneys for telemarketers argue the FTC has not shown charitable calls are different from commercial calls. They also said the First Amendment rights of telemarketers need to be protected.

Dean touts parent program

DES MOINES (AP) - Howard Dean is calling for a $200 million effort to intensively screen new parents to make sure they are up to the task of raising children.

His proposal, modeled after a program he developed as Vermont governor, calls for a visit with each mother who gives birth in the state while in the hospital, offering a home visit if they choose.

"A lot of the ills of the school system is because we don't send kids to school ready to learn," he said in a conference call with lowa

The visits are designed to spot the need to improve parenting skills, identify emotional problems, and plug parents into nutrition and other services.

"We visit, in the hospital, every mother in the state who gives birth, whether she's the richest or poorest,"

Dean said. Mothers then are offered the option of a home visit by a community-based agency.

"Most of the families don't need help," he said. "The ones who are really in trouble get help early on."

He cited a 43 percent decline in child-abuse cases in Vermont since the program has been put in place. The cost of the program is small, and the money flows directly to the communities that want to participate, he said.

AMES - An Iowa State University center focusing on public health has been designated as one of 12 specialty centers nationally to focus on addressing emerging health threats.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention named the ISU College of Veterinary Medicine's Center for Food Security and Public Health a Specialty Center in Public Health Preparedness for Veterinary Medicine and Zoonotic Diseases.

Zoonotic diseases can be transmitted between animals and people.

The Specialty Centers for Public Health Preparedness Program is a coordinated national effort that focuses on improving public-health workers' and clinicians' ability to address current and emerging public health threats. It was established in 2000.

The 12 specialty centers are based at academic institutions and concentrate on education and training. They provide public-health education, information, and training to support preparedness for bioterrorism, disease outbreak investigations, and "I feel very good," Ross said. "But we haven't won yet."

For many candidates, the campaign trail will resemble the primary. Elliott said he plans on speaking at more forums and continuing to spread his name.

"Our plan in the next month is not that different: We will try to get more volunteers and try to get more people registered to vote," Ross said. "And maybe try to get a little bit of sleep, but not much." Vanderhoef, meanwhile, said she will hold more coffee gatherings in the next month to inform voters about her platform

In District C, Bailey said she plans on talking to more residents and continuing to get her ideas out to people.

With 10 percent of the vote, UI senior Rachel Hardesty was not able to move past the primary, but she remained upbeat.

"I'm happy I came out here and hopeful I influenced other people to get involved in local politics," she said.

In the precincts located on the UI campus, Quadrangle and Currier Resident Halls, Hardesty received a much higher proportion of the vote - 25 and 23 percent respectively.

"I hope that students realized the benefit of having a student, someone who could represent them on the council," she said.

She added that she plans on endorsing a candidate or two in the future, but she has not decided on whom.

Voter turnout was lower than in the 2001 city primary, dipping from 13.2 percent of registered voters to 10.7 percent.

polling places through the day. By late afternoon, Terri Car-baugh, a spokeswoman for the secretary of State, said a turnout of 60 percent appeared likely, higher than the 50.7 percent who voted in last November's gubernatorial election. It would be the highest percentage to vote in a gubernatorial election since 1982.

Re-elected last year with less than 50 percent of the vote, Davis fell victim to a groundswell of discontent in a state that has struggled with its perilous financial condition.

As colorless as his name, Davis was also known as a canny politician with sharp elbows. Once chief of staff to Gov. Jerry Brown, he rose through the political ranks as a state assemblyman, controller, and lieutenant governor, before becoming governor in 1999.

By contrast, Schwarzenegger's political inexperience seemed a virtue to many voters.

The actor's improbable rise to political power played out before a rapt international audience. He announced his candidacy in August on "The Tonight Show With Jay Leno" after aides said it was certain he wouldn't run.

The campaign included a parade of bit players among the 135 candidates, including Hustler publisher Larry Flynt, former child actor Gary Coleman, a publicity-hungry porn actress

Seth Bailey and Sarah Arens, his fiancée and UI cross-country runner, met at the IOC internship, where their friendship grew through their 5 a.m. swimming sessions where he trained for a place on the paralympic swim team and helped her rehab a broken leg.

"Seth and Sarah had a true, solid love," said Tom Bailey, adding, "They helped each other."

Arens recounted a trip the two took to Colorado to collect a memorial to Ben Arens, Sara's brother, who died in 2001. "Seth helped me to come to peace with Ben's loss. He helped me trust that Seth himself was in good hands."

Adding that he never wanted to draw attention to himself, Arens said Seth Bailey managed to conceal the fact that he had a prosthetic leg from the others at the IOC for weeks and that he had been in treatment for his cancer as recently as May.

"Seth was always more concerned about other people," Tom Bailey said, as he recalled his son distributing stuffed animals to children in the oncology ward at the UI Hospitals and Clinics while he was a patient there himself. "He always had a smile on his face."

Seth Bailey's mother, Jackie Bailey, remembered her son's advice: "Live each day in love, and enjoy every minute of it."

He was most satisfied with the simple pleasures of rural life such as playing with the dogs on the family farm, baking holiday cookies with his family, and sitting on the porch swing, Jackie Bailey said.

She also recalls that immediately after coming out of amputation surgery, Seth Bailey told his parents that he wanted one of their outdoor dogs to come into the house. The family's golden retriever, Cassie, spent five years as an indoor dog because of Seth's persuasion.

"Seth had a knack of getting what he wanted," his mother said, adding that his persistence was also manifested in his athletic pursuits.

Arens said that only three months after his amputation, Seth Bailey was invited to be on the U.S. paralympic ski team.

One artifact at the visitation was a leather jacket reserved for Olympic athletes that Tom Bailey said was given to Seth Bailey by the CEO of the U.S. Olympic Committee and was signed, "To Seth Bailey, a true Olympian."

a trend of students requesting healthier food over the past several years as a result of student worries about falling victim to extra pounds.

UI junior Katie Yanda said that when she came to the university, she was worried about how college life would affect her body. "I tried to fight the urge of ordering Papa John's at two in the morning with my roommates," she said.

UI sophomore Lauren Bruckner beat the poundage by working out all the time. "I tried hard not to gain weight because I saw so many people that it happened to," she said.

U.S. appeals Moussaoui ruling

BY JERRY MARKON
WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — Federal prosecutors Tuesday appealed a judge's ruling that dismissed much of their case against terrorism suspect Zacarias Moussaoui, making it clear that the government is intent on keeping the case in the civilian criminaljustice system rather than moving it to a military tribunal.

U.S. District Judge Leonie Brinkema in Alexandria, Va., on Oct. 2 had barred the government from presenting evidence that Moussaoui played any role in the 9/11 attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon and had ruled him ineligible for the death penalty. She said Moussaoui could still be tried on charges of participating in a broad Qaeda conspiracy to attack the United States and could be sentenced to life in prison.

Government officials said after Brinkema's ruling that all options were being considered in response, including the possibility of removing Moussaoui from the civilian courts and moving his case to a military tribunal.

But after a series of high-level meetings, prosecutors this afternoon filed a one-page notice of appeal with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit. It said only that they are appealing Brinkema's ruling under the federal law governing the use of classified information in criminal cases and that evidence Brinkema is excluding "is a substantial proof of a fact meteric!" to the case.

of a fact material" to the case.

Officials said on Tuesday that while the military option remains on the table, it was not seriously discussed in recent days. They said the decision to appeal had taken several days, in part because prosecutors were surprised by Brinkema's ruling and had to analyze it. Both sides in the case had expected Brinkema to dismiss the charges against Moussaoui and then to delay the effect of the ruling pending a government appeal.

"The notice of appeal makes it crystal clear that this is staying in the criminal-justice system," one government official said.

Brinkema's decision to bar the death penalty and some of the evidence came after several months of back-and-forth legal briefs and rulings about Moussaoui's access to three highranking Qaeda detainees. Prosecutors told Brinkema they would defy her order allowing Moussaoui to question the detainees and await her sanctions. Those sanctions turned out to be a heavy blow to the government's case. Much of the evidence centered on Moussaoui's alleged role in the 9/11 attacks, and Justice Department officials have made him a symbol of the need to extract punishment for the hijackings that killed nearly 3,000 people.

In court papers filed late Tuesday, prosecutors asked the court to expedite its consideration of the appeal and to hold oral arguments the first week of December. They also sought permission to file longer-than-usual legal briefs explaining their position because of the case's complexity.

The decision to appeal means that the major constitutional issues at stake in the Moussaoui case, which pit a defendant's right to interview witnesses who can help his case against the government's national-security concerns, will be heard again by the Richmond-based appellate court. The court in June dismissed an earlier government appeal in the case but only on procedural grounds.

WASHINGTON — In an undercover operation run in the shadow of Mideast peace talks, the FBI secretly sent money to suspected Hamas figures to see if the militant Palestinian group would divert it from charitable purposes to terrorist attacks, according to interviews and court documents.

The counterterrorism operation in 1998 and 1999 was run out of the FBI's Phoenix office in cooperation with Israeli intelligence and was approved by Attorney General Janet Reno, FBI officials told the Associated Press.

The money, usually just a couple of thousand dollars, was sent to suspected terror supporters during the operation as the FBI tried to track the flow of cash through terror organizations, the agency said in a rare acknowledgment of an undercover sting.

"This was done in conjunction with permission from the attorney general for an ongoing operation, and Israeli authorities were aware of it," the bureau said.

The FBI said the money was given through one of its operative's charities to see if it would be diverted for terrorism, and the amounts were kept small so it couldn't be used to fund a major attack. Court testimony indicates in one case a Hamas figure used the sting money to help orphans.

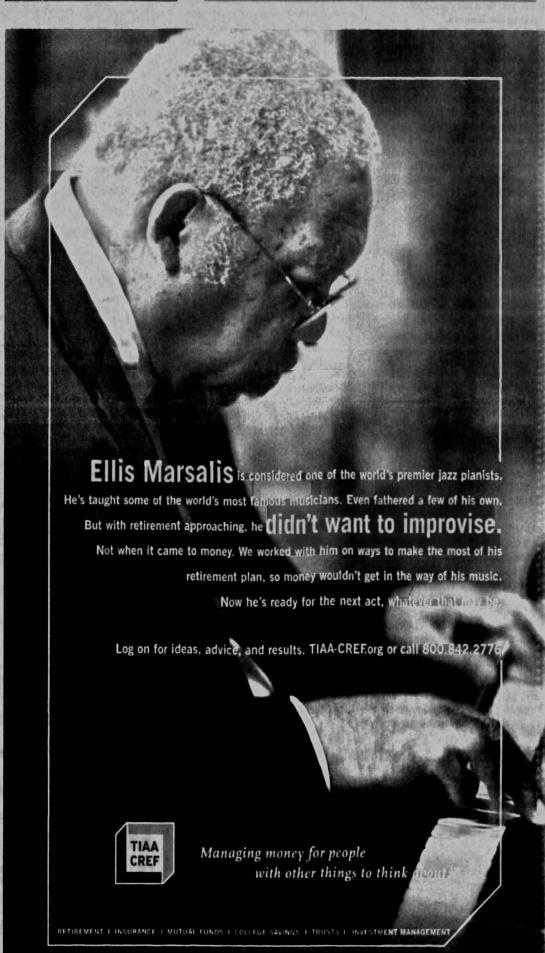

One of the FBI's key operatives, who had a falling out with the bureau, provided an account of the operation at a friend's closed immigration court proceeding. AP obtained and reviewed the court documents.

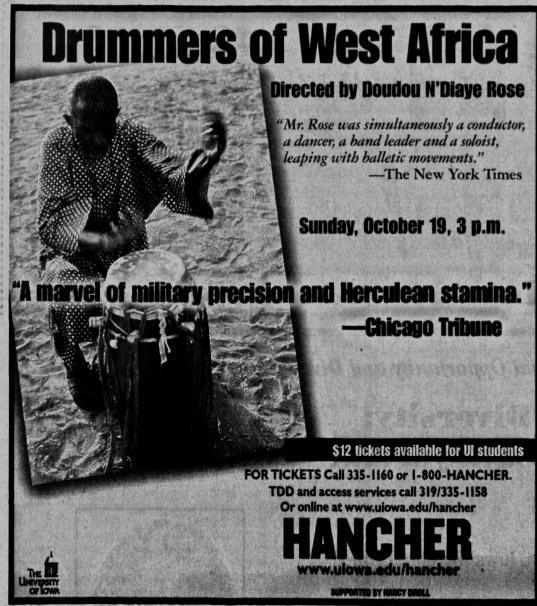

Arizona businessman Harry Ellen testified he permitted the FBI to bug his home, car, and office, allowed his Muslim foundation's activities in the Gaza Strip to be monitored by agents, arranged a peace meeting among major Palestinian activists, and gained personal access to Yasser Arafat during more than four years of cooperation with the FBI.

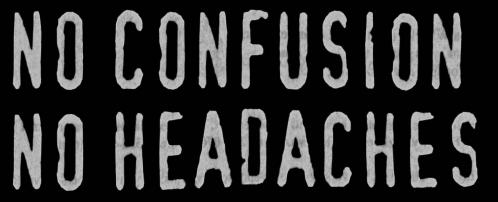

Ellen's FBI handler in the late 1990s was Kenneth Williams, an agent who later became famous for writing a pre-9/11 memo to FBI head-quarters warning there were Arab pilots training at U.S. flight schools. The warning went unheeded.

Ellen, a Muslim convert, testified he was taking a trip to the Gaza Strip to bring doctors to the region in summer 1998 when Williams asked him to provide money to a Hamas figure.

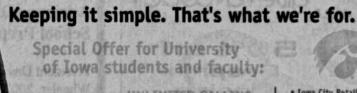

Williams wanted "the transfer of American funds to some of the terrorist groups for violent purposes," Ellen testified to the immigration court in a closed June 2001 session.

Bush has doubts on nabbing leaker

BY DANA MILBANK
WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — President Bush said Tuesday that he had "no idea" whether the administration officials who exposed the identity of an undercover CIA agent would be identified, as the White House counsel's office sorted through responses from Bush aides to the Justice Department's request for phone records and other documents.

"I don't know if we're going to find out the senior administration official," the president said in response to a reporter's question. "Now, this is a large administration, and there are a lot of senior officials. I don't have any idea."

Bush said he is eager to discover the identity of those who disclosed the name of CIA operative Valerie Plame, who is married to former Ambassador Joseph Wilson, a prominent administration critic on Iraq. Her identity was first published in a July 14 column by Robert Novak.

Bush said that "everything we know the investigators will find out" but told reporters: "I have no idea whether we'll find out who the leaker is — partially because, in all due respect to your profession, you do a very good job of protecting the leakers."

White House officials faced a deadline of 5 p.m. Tuesday to present to the counsel's office any documents that could be related to the Justice Department's criminal investigation. Bush's spokesman said White House lawyers would sort through the documents to determine which are relevant and which would be turned over to Justice. The White House must turn over all information by Oct. 17, with intermediate deadlines before then.

At the briefing, White House spokesman Scott McClellan repeated his categorical denial that three prominent White House officials — Bush's senior adviser Karl Rove, Vice President Dick Cheney's Chief of Staff Lewis Libby, and National Security Council official Elliott Abrams — had leaked the information or authorized leaks, saying that he had spoken directly to the officials.

But McClellan and Bush did not rebut reports that White House officials were spreading damaging information about Wilson and his wife. Wilson has said that was done to retaliate against him for continuing to publicize his conclusion, after a 2002 mission for the CIA, that there was little evidence Iraq had sought uranium in Africa in order to develop nuclear weapons.

Newsweek, in its current issue, reported that Rove referred to Plame as "fair game" in a discussion with Chris Matthews, host of MSNBC's "Hardball." Bush, asked about the "fair game" comment, replied by discussing the leak investigation. McClellan, in his briefing, also sidestepped several questions about the "fair game" remarks.

A legal source close to the case said White House officials are not panicked about the investigation because they believe that even if officials revealed Plame's name and occupation to reporters, they may not have known she was undercover or may not have intended to expose that fact.

"Someone probably did screw up," the source said. "But in terms of a violation of criminal law that could lead to a criminal indictment, that seems pretty far-fetched."

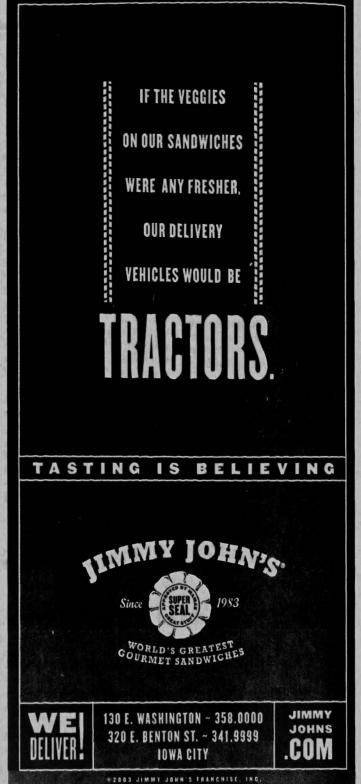

The confidence is based on the wording of the criminal statutes involving the disclosure of classified information. "Even if this information was disclosed when it shouldn't have been, the statute has very strict requirements about the level of knowledge and intent that a person has to have in order to violate it," the source continued. "You would have to intend to blow the cover of an undercover CIA officer."

Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., who has led Democrats' calls for a special counsel to lead the investigation, complained about the White House's procedures — although two former Clinton aides said it is standard for the counsel's office to review all materials before turning them over to investigators.

"I am very troubled by the fact that the White House counsel seems to be a gatekeeper, and I want to know what precautions Justice is taking to ensure that it gets all relevant information from the administration," Schumer said.

Canada expands medical pot access

TORONTO (AP) — An appeals court expanded the ability of patients to obtain medical marijuana but affirmed that possession by non-patients remains a crime.

The decision Tuesday resolved a dilemma faced by the federal government: how to follow a court order to enable patients to get marijuana for treatment while also keeping the possession of pot by others illegal.

With a looming court-imposed deadline to create a supply system for patients, the government in 2001 started registering qualified patients and authorizing them or other designated people to grow pot for medicinal use. Several hundred people have registered with the federal government to use marijuana for medical purposes ical purposes.

Subsequent court challenges invalidated marijuana-possession laws so patients could not be prosecuted for obtaining their medicinal pot. The government this year also started supplying marijuana it grew in an underground mine shaft to registered patients, but many complained about the quality of the pot and the bureaucracy of the system.

On Tuesday, the Ontario Court of Appeals declared unconstitutional those provisions in the federal Marijuana Medical Access Regulations restricting licensed growers of medical marijuana from receiving compensation, from growing the drug for more than one qualified patient, and from pooling resources with other licensed producers.

The ruling gives so-called compassion centers more leeway to grow and supply medical marijuana.

Because the government medical marijuana program was now valid, the ruling said, marijuana prohibition laws also were constitutionally valid.

"This narrow remedy would create a constitutionally valid medical exemption, making marijuana prohibition ... immediately constitutionally valid and of full force and effect and removing any uncertainty concerning the validity of the prohibition," said a court synopsis of the ruling.

The ruling found that forcing patients to grow their own pot or break the law by buying it on "the black market" was unfair.

Since the attack on the reputed Islamic Jihad training camp in Syria on Sunday, the regional conflict has already escalated with shooting and mortar fire across the border between Israel and Lebanon, where Syria is the main power-broker.

N. Korea nixes Japan

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) -North Korea dealt a blow Tuesday to prospects for further multilateral talks aimed at curbing its nuclear-weapons development, saying it will not allow Japan to participate in any new dialogue because it is untrustworthy.

Japan firmly rejected the North Korean position, saying it had a role said at a regional summit in Bali. Although North Korea frequently issues belligerent statements, often as a way to gain leverage over its adversaries, its latest assertion complicates efforts by the United States

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) - A practical male contraceptive could be a step closer after researchers said Tuesday that trials prevented pregnancies among 55 couples using it for 12 months.

The treatment stops sperm production by using implants of the male hormone testosterone under the skin and injections of the female hormone, progestin.

significant step forward that builds on many years of related research.

Previous studies have shown that a combination of testosterone and progestin can switch off sperm production in men. The latest study is the first to measure the effect on preventing pregnancy.

The U.S. government-funded trial sponsored by Virginia-based familyplanning organization CONRAD, successfully and reversibly turned off sperm production in the men who took part, said Rob McLachlan, the director of clinical research at Prince Henry's

Institute of Medical Research in Sydney. CONRAD often funds medical studies outside the United States and works closely with the World Health Organization, which is interested in finding new contraceptive

Depo-Provera® Contraceptive Injection

medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

DEPO-PROVERA® Contraceptive Injection (medimovingoesterone acetate injectable suspension, USP) This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against HIV infection (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases.

What is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection is a form of birth control that is given as an intramuscular injection (a shot) in the buttook or upper arm once every 3 months (13 weeks). To continue your contraceptive protection, you must return for your next injection premptly at the end of 3 months (13 weeks). DEPO-PROVERA contains medroxyprogesterone acetate, a chemical similar to (but not the same as) the natural hormone progesterone, which is produced by your ovaries during the second half of your menstrual cycle. DEPO-PROVERA acts by preventing your egg cells from ripening. If an egg is not released from the ovaries during your menstrual cycle, it cannot become fertilized by sperm and result in prepanacy. DEPO-PROVERA acts by preventing your egg cells from ripening. If an egg is not released from the ovaries during your menstrual cycle, it cannot become fertilized by sperm and result in prepanacy. DEPO-PROVERA also causes changes in the lining of your uterus that make it less likely for pregnancy to occur. How effective is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

The efficacy of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection depends on following the recommended dosage schedule exactly (see Flow often do I get my shot of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?). To make sure you are not pregnant when you first get DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive injection, your first injection must be given ONLY during the first 5 days after childbirth if not breast-feeding and, if exclusively breast-feeding, ONLY at the sidth week after childbirth if not breast-feeding and, if exclusively breast-feeding, ONLY at the sidth week after childbirth in the breast-feeding and, if exclusively breast-feeding, ONLY at the sidth week after childbirth in the breast-feeding and, if exclusively breast-feeding, ONLY at the sidth week after childbirth in the breast-feeding and, if exclusively breast-feeding, ONLY at the sidth week after childbirth in the breast-feeding and if exclusively breast-feeding. It gives both the lowest expected rate of pregnancy (the rate expected in women who use each method exactly as it should be used) and the typical rate of pregnancy (which includes women who became pregnant because they forgot to use their birth control or because they did not follow the directions exactly).

What are the risks of using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

Linegular Mensrual Bleeding
The side effect reported most frequently by women who use DEPO-PROVERA for contraception is a change in their normal menstrual cycle. During the first year of using DEPO-PROVERA you might have one or more of the following changes: irregular or unpredictable bleeding or spotting, an increase or decrease in menstrual bleeding, or no bleeding at all. Unusually heavy or continuous bleeding, however is not a usual effect of DEPO-PROVERA and if this happens, you should see your health-care provider night away. With continued use of DEPO-PROVERA bleeding usually decreases, and many women stop having periods completely.
In clinical studies of DEPO-PROVERA 55% of the women studied reported no menstrual bleeding amenormea) after 1 year of use, and 68% of the women studied reported no menstrual bleeding after 2 years of use. The reason that your periods stop is because DEPO-PROVERA causes a resting state in your ovaries. When your ovaries do not release an egg monthly, the regular monthly growth of the lining of your uterus does not occur and, therefore, the bleeding that comes with your normal menstruation does not take place. When you stop using DEPO-PROVERA your menstrual period will usually in time, return to its normal cycle.

Zibone Mineral Changes

2. Bane Mineral Changes

Use of DEPO-PROVERA may be associated with a decrease in the amount of mineral stored in your bones. This could increase your risk of developing bone fractures. The rate of bone mineral loss is greatest in the early years of DEPO-PROVERA use, but after that, it begins to resemble the normal rate of age-related bone mineral loss.

Studies of women who have used different forms of contraception found that women who used DEPO-PROVERA for contraception had no increased overall risk of developing cancer of the breast, ovary uterus, cervix, or liver. However, women under 35 years of age whose first exposure to DEPO-PROVERA was within the previous 4 to 5 years may have a slightly increased risk of developing breast cancer similar to that seen with oral contraceptives. You should discuss this with your health-care provider.

AUnexpected Pregnancy:

Because DEPO-PROVERA is such an effective contraceptive method, the risk of accidental pregnancy for women who get their shots regularly (every 3 months [13 weeks]) is very low. While there have been reports of an increased risk of low birth weight and neonatal infant death or other health problems in infants conceived close to the time of injection, such pregnancies are uncommon. If you think you may have become pregnant while using DEPO-PROVERA for contraception, see your health-care provider as soon as possible.

5.Allergic Reactions

Death Cab for Cutie brings its indie-pop to lowa City tonight in support of its new album, Transatlanticism.

Getting so much closer

BY ALISSA VAN WINKLE THE DAILY IOWAN

Whether near or far, personal distance not only makes the heart grow fonder but yields emotions of always wanting to be closer.

"People feel so far away from each other regardless if you're right next to them," Nick Harmer, bass player for Death Cab for Cutie, told The Daily Iowan.

Death Cab, which will appear in Iowa for the first time tonight at the Union Bar, is spreading its ideals of personal distance with the band's newest recording, Transatlanticism.

the band's previous record, The Photo Album, focused on the distance between objects, Transatlanticism focuses on the distance between people.

"We're excited to be back on tour," Harmer said. "We haven't been on a big national tour for over a year, and we get to see old friends."

right next to you - distance is a feeling with this album. Yearning for closeness can happen when people are gone and even when they're right here.

The cover art of Transatlanticism, by friend Adde Russel, features a bird tied up in string.

"A bird is free to fly," Harmer said, "and this organic image lets us all see the idea of distance come into play."

Transatlanticism seems to be broken into an album-like structure, with sides A and B. The song "Transatlanticism" breaks up the disk with its crescendo: "The distance is quite simply too much for me to row/it seems farther than ever before/I need you so much closer.

The Death Cab personnel, signed to Barsuk Records, have been playing music together since 1997. The quartet from Bellingham, Wash., consists of Gibbard (vocals), Chris Walla (guitar), Harmer (bass), and Michael Schorr (drums). Gibbard recorded 25 demos for Transatlanticism, but the 11 songs that appear on the album are the ones that "the band gravitated towards," Harmer said.

- Gibbard's emo-electronic side project, the Postal Service, has received critical acclaim, and Walla has produced albums for Hot Hot Heat and the Velvet Teen.

The Death Cab boys take pretty good care of themselves nonetheless. Harmer recalls times when the band barely made enough money for gas and talked of driving to closed fastfood restaurants in hopes of getting free food. Now, they have their first bus with a kitchenette in which eating garden burgers is a habit. The new food craze for this quartet is fried tofu dogs with peanut butter, because of Walla's and the sound guy's strict vegetarian lifestyles.

The quartet is traveling with label-mates and good friends the Long Winters, which is touring in support of its new release When I Pretend to Fall. Winters is led by John Roderick of Western State Hurricanes and Sean Nelson of Har-

NEW YORK (AP) — Twisted Sister frontman Dee Snider, whose "We're Not Gonna Take It" has become the anthem for Arnold Schwarzenegger's campaign, says the actor-turned-politician actually inspired that hit 1984 record.

The heavy-metal star only met the would-be California governor for the first time on Sunday, when they appeared together at a rally. But Snider's been a fan for decades.

Twisted Sister's 1984 best-selling album, Stay Hungry, was inspired by a Schwarzenegger book Snider read in the early 1980s. Schwarzenegger also starred in a 1976 movie with the same title.

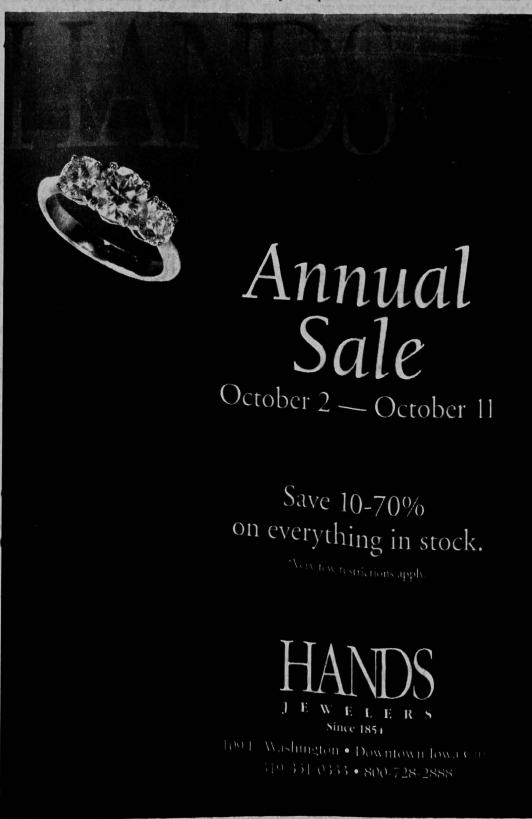

"It motivated me," Snider said Monday. "I dedicated the song on the album to him."

After the album sold millions, the group sent Schwarzenegger a commemorative plaque. So when Schwarzenegger's campaign contacted Snider for permission to use "We're Not Gonna Take It," Snider, who wrote the tune, didn't hesitate to say yes.

Judge correct in Moussaoui case

U.S. District Judge Leonie Brinkema of Alexandria, Va., offered federal prosecutors a taste of their own medicine when she handcuffed the case against Zacarias Moussaoui, the alleged "20th hijacker" in the 9/11 terrorist attacks and the only person charged in open court for involvement in the attacks. The judge found that Moussaoui could not get a fair trial after the prosecutors defied her order that other captive terrorist suspects be allowed to testify that he was not part of the attacks. Brinkema barred prosecutors from linking Moussaoui to 9/11 attacks and prohibited prosecutors from seeking the death penalty. While the indictment still contends that Moussaoui is a member of Al Qaeda, it falls short of the opportunity for the Bush administration to publicly hold someone accountable for the attacks. which claimed more than 3,000 lives.

The prosecutors contend that allowing Moussaoui's defense team access to the other terrorist detainees would compromise national security, while refusing to do any compromising of their own. They asserted that Brinkema's order made them choose between the safety of the nation or allowing a known terrorist to go free.

However, barring evidence connecting Moussaoui to 9/11 while preserving the charge that he is a member of Al Qaeda (which Moussaoui does not deny), ensures that he could still serve a life sentence in prison. This move negates the prosecutions' complaints and exposes the Bush administration's main concern in this case: publicity.

While federal prosecutors still have a number of options in prosecuting Moussaoui, an open civilian trial provides an opportunity to have someone face the victims and relatives of those killed in the 9/11 attacks while dramatic footage of the destruction is replayed in the courtroom. Prosecutors will likely appeal the decision to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, but that court could uphold Brinkema's deci-

If prosecutors were mainly concerned with punishing Moussaoui, they could have initially gone with one of those options — a military tribunal. Unlike civilian court, the government would have complete control over the proceedings and punishment. However, such a tribunal would be closed, and government prosecutors would be denied their opportunity for a public proceeding.

As it stands, the indictment accuses Moussaoui of nothing he hasn't stated on the record himself (for which he could get life in prison); but most importantly, prosecutors won't be able to bring their dramatic 9/11 evidence in the court room while barring Moussaoui's only means of defense to that evidence.

If the U.S. government wants to enact a dramatic public display, it should follow the proceedings of due process, including orders from the presiding judge. Brinkema's maneuver deftly deflects the prosecutors' claims that she was putting them in a no-win situation and forces them to decide whether or not they'll play by the legal system's rules in order to get their show.

Good readers make for good citizens

On Oct. 1, a second trial run of the USA Today Collegiate Readership Program went into effect on the UI campus.

A selection of five local and national newspapers — USA Today, the New York Times, the Chicago Tribune, the Iowa City Press Citizen, and the Des Moines Register — are available every day through the service.

According to a recent report by the National Conference of State Legislature, only 40 percent of 15-26 year-olds could name which party controls Congress. The study found that this age group lacks "knowledge necessary for effective self-government."

By providing college students with access to these newspapers, the UI can attempt to alleviate this embarrassing problem and educate in ways not possible in the class-

The newspapers can be picked up in the dorms, IMU, Hillcrest and Burge cafeterias, and several academic buildings. Students will be more likely to grab a copy on their way to class if the papers are right in front of them; also, plenty of them will want to read while eating if the newspapers are next to cafeteria tables.

Stingy students, excited at the prospect of getting anything free, may pick up a daily just for the heck of it and become more aware of the wider world while waiting for class to start.

The location and inexpensiveness of this service are not its only enticing qualities; the variety is well-chosen. With its popular journalism school, the university will see many of these majors pick up a copy of the New York Times. Many students come from Chicago and its neighboring areas, so Windy City natives will be grateful for the opportunity to keep up with home issues.

The trial run is set to last a month, but hopefully, the UI Student Government will choose to keep the advantageous readership program permanently in November.

Personally, I'm pulling for Davis. Now, before you lambaste me as yet another bleeding-heart liberal pundit who snuggles up with trees on his nights off, let me just say that my reasoning is not motivated by partisan leanings of any sort but rather by California law. Under the provisions thereof, should Davis survive the recall, he would be granted at least six months' reprieve before new recall petitions can be circulated. Any successor to Davis, conversely, could be up for recall almost immediately, thus hijacking American journalism yet again.

Because I'm endowed with neither the power to see the future nor a functional time machine, it behooves me to utilize this, the medium of the past, to address the past, for, as the old saying goes, those who do not study the past are doomed to repeat

Part of the fascination with the California recall no doubt lies within its novelty. As a general rule, the American political system does not lend itself to easy removal of public officials from offices to which they were elected. Treason, bribery, and, of course, perjury are impeachable offenses for all civil officers of the United States. Provisions for removal on the behest of popular frustration, however, are far less common.

Though 18 states allow for gubernatorial recall, in the history of the United States, only one state governor has met this fate: North Dakota Gov. Lynn Frazier, nearly 80 years ago. Like Davis, Frazier was beset with economic downturn in his state—crop prices declined, exacerbating the debt of farmers, who formed the majority of the population. Scandals associated with quasi-socialist programs spearheaded by Frazier were played up by his political rivals, and in October 1921, he was recalled by a slim margin.

Though a successful recall of Davis would constitute a political rarity, efforts to recall California governors are anything but rare. Every governor of California since 1968 has faced a recall effort; as some might remember, a previous attempt to recall Davis was made in 1999, but the requisite petition failed to gain enough signatures.

I suppose it could be argued, then, that the Davis episode is but the culmination of a long-standing California tradition. Legal recalls, proponents say, allow the electorate to hold their officials to a greater standard of accountability. Detractors point out the inherent lack of democracy in allowing a relatively small portion of the electorate to force an election in which the next governor of California could be elected by a small plurality of the votes cast.

No governor, or, for that matter, no politician, can avoid irritating a significant segment of her or his constituents; Gray Davis most assuredly did not write the book on the subject. Regardless of the results of the recall vote, sooner or later the American media will be co-opted by another.

Bush a disaster

No matter how the Bush administration, conservative Republican pundits, and rightwing talk-radio hosts try to spin it, the war in Iraq is not a success. It was a huge error for President Bush to take the United States to war against Iraq without United Nations Security Council backing. We are now reaping the consequences of that mistake. The "arrogance of power" Bush administration believed it could go it alone.

Following Sept. 11, 2001, Bush's tough talk and statements to the nations of the world, such as "You are either for us or against us," only increased the growth of our "ugly American" image. Bush fooled us during the 2000 presidential campaign by calling for a foreign policy based on humility. Our improvised march to war is only being outdone by the improvising that is now going on in postwar Iraq. The Bush doctrine of pre-emptive attacks is a disaster.

Turkey OKs troops to Iraq, but Iraqi panel resists idea

BY LOUIS MEIXLER ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANKARA, Turkey - Parliament voted overwhelmingly Tuesday to give the government permission to send Turkish peacekeepers to Iraq, but members of Iraq's interim council opposed the move, a sign of the problems Washington faces as it tries to assemble a peacekeeping force.

The United States has been pressing Turkey for months to send what would be the first major Muslim contingent of peacekeepers, a deployment that would enhance the credibility of the American-led force in Iraq by demonstrating Muslim support.

Turkey's Parliament voted 358-183 to allow the government to dispatch troops, a move top officials said would improve ties with Washington and help give Turkey a say in the future of Iraq.

"An Iraq that is in peace, that is on good terms with its neighbors, an Iraq that is stable is in Turkey's interests," Foreign Minister Abdullah Gul said.

In Washington, White House spokesman Scott McClellan applauded the Turkish vote, saying: "We welcome that decision and we will be working with Turkish officials on the details of their decision."

Secretary of State Colin Powell expressed his appreciation to Gul in a telephone conversation, saying that the United States would work with Turkey and Iraq on putting it into effect, a senior U.S. official said on condition of anonymity.

The motion gives the government the power to send troops, but it provides no details as on when, where, or how many soldiers would be deployed. Those matters are expected to be worked out in talks with Washington that could take weeks or even months.

Antiwar demonstrators march to the headquarters of Turkish Prime Minister Recep Tayyip Erdogan's party in Ankara on Tuesday, protest-on developments." The 15-member U.S.-appointed Governing Council of Iraq met at about the same time as the Turkish Parliament.

"After long deliberations, we reached consensus on issuing a statement opposing the arrival of Turkish troops," said Mahmoud Othman, a Kurdish member of the council. "The council already has said it does not want other foreign troops in the country."

He said, however, that the release of the statement was delayed for a time Tuesday, apparently because of pressure from the U.S.-led Coalition Provisional Authority. The council is likely to defer to the United States on issues involving security.

Gul dismissed the Iraqi council's action.

"Members with Kurdish origins thought that way, but in the end they decided that it wouldn't be right," he said when asked about the statement.

But Gul also seemed to address some of their concerns.

"Turkey has no secret designs over Iraq," he added. "We won't be going there to prolong the occupation — on the contrary, to

Council members have repeatedly said that they would prefer if peacekeepers are not sent from neighboring countries.

The Turkish Ottoman Empire ruled today's Iraq for approximately 400 years until World War I. For some 15 years, Turkey has fought Turkish Kurdish rebels who now have bases in the Kurdish areas of northern Iraq, a fight that killed 37,000 people.

off the area, and more Americans and Iraqi protesters converged on the scene. As the midnight curfew approached, however, the standoff eased, with the Americans pulling back most of their forces. Shortly afterward, the protesters began leaving the area,

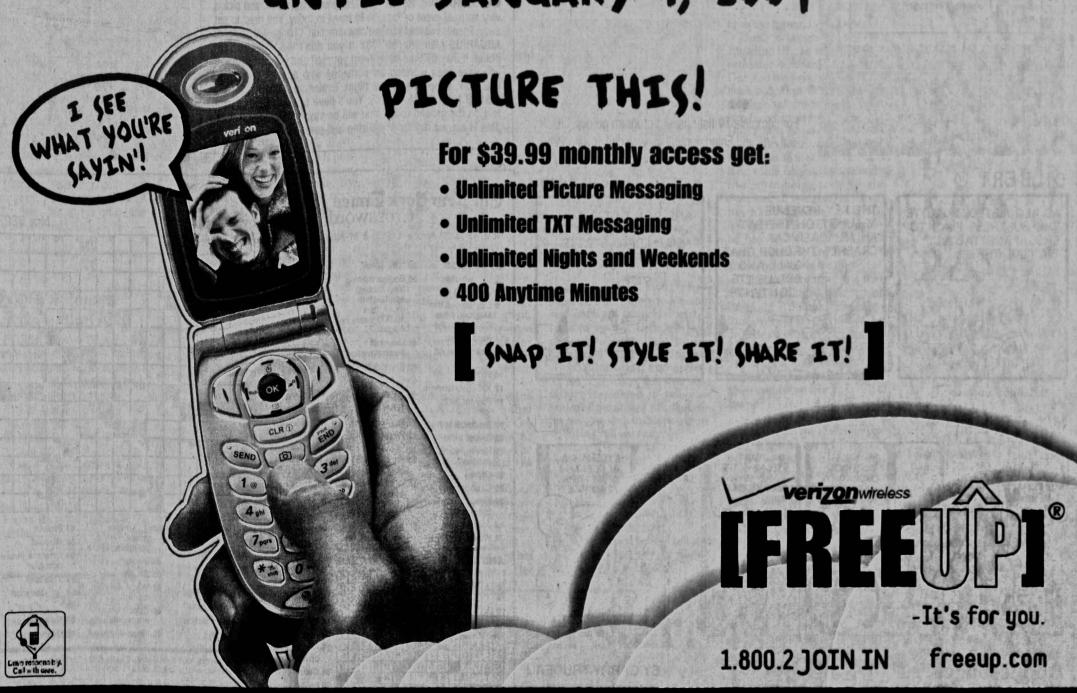

L. Paul Bremer, the U.S. administrator for Iraq, said the trouble in the capital did not reflect a turn for the worse.

The lowa football program looks like it may be receiving its 10th 2004 prospect very soon. New Jersey running back/defensive back Kenny Cattouse told the Asbury Park Press he plans on committing to Kirk Ferentz's Hawkeyes as early as this week.

The 5-11, 195-pound Keyport native rushed for 2,200 yards and 27 touchdowns last season as a junior. He said out of all the schools that came after him, lowa was the most persistent.

"I have just been waiting for the right time to announce it," Cattouse told the Press. "Since my sophomore year, they have been interested. They sent me my first letter and kept sticking with me. They're the team that wants me most."

Judge sides with IU in Knight lawsuit

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A judge on Monday sided with Indiana University in Bob Knight's breach-of-contract lawsuit over his firing as the school's basket-ball coach three years ago.

Monroe Circuit Court Judge Kenneth Todd granted the university's motion for summary judgment, effectively dismissing Knight's lawsuit without a trial.

"The university from the start has said that it followed the provisions of the contract and fulfilled its obligations, and the court has agreed," school spokeswoman Jane Jankowski said.

Messages seeking comment from Knight's attorney, Russell Yates, were left at his office and home in Denver.

DETROIT (AP) — Detroit Lions rookie wide receiver Charles Rogers broke his right collarbone in practice Tuesday and is expected to miss at least a month.

Rogers, the No. 2 overall pick in the draft, got tangled up with cornerback Dre' Bly and was taken to a local hospital.

"It looks like it is going to be a matter of weeks before he is going to be able to return," coach Steve Mariucci said.

Rogers leads the Lions with 22 receptions for 243 yards and three touchdowns in five games.

Unique UI sport teaches harmony

BY FRANK KLIPSCH THE DAILY IOWAN

There's a fierce transition from 6:28-6:32 p.m. on Mondays and Wednesdays in S511 Field House.

In approximately 240 seconds, the matted, multipurpose room transforms from a shrill echo box for high-pitched, preadolescent "hi-yas" into a calm, quiet, contemplative dojo. By 6:35, only the air being circulated through the room's ventilation system can be heard as the members of the University Aikido Club begin their session.

Aikido is a martial art that differs from nearly every other sport practiced and played in American culture. Instead of pitting two adversaries against one another in an attempt at victory, aikido seeks to develop harmony and connection between opponents. Therefore, although aikido builds confidence and self-defense ability in its practitioners, its goal is to do so without causing harm to others.

causing harm to others.

The evidence of teaching a martial art with intentions for harmony can be overheard as head instructor Diana Harris works with a younger student. The red-headed Harris, who works in computer services and support in the College of Engineering, has a small smattering of gray hairs to indicate her 17 years of experience. She started at the UI in 1989.

"And now," says Harris, demonstrating a maneuver while straddling her prone student, "I'm going to push her elbow into her face." Then Harris smiles while looking at the rest of her eight kneeling students, "which isn't a very ki thing to do."

The ki Harris refers to is the

The ki Harris refers to is the second of three characters that compose the name aikido. The first, ai, means harmony. Ki refers to spirit or energy. The final character, do, means the path, the system, or the way.

Aikido was born in 1925 out of a discussion between Morihei Ueshiba and a Japanese naval officer who taught fencing. In the well-documented story, Ueshiba, known by his followers as O-Sensei (The Great Teacher), was challenged by the officer to a match and promptly attacked with a wooden sword. O-Sensei was not only an expert at jujitsu (unarmed combat), kenjutsu (sword fighting), and sojitsu (spear fighting), he was also deeply immersed in religious and philosophical studies. O-Sensei reacted to his weaponwielding adversary without violence: He won the match by evading the officer's onslaught until the attacker dropped to the ground from exhaustion.

In the study of aikido, learning to fall is just as important as learning to throw.

"Ryan learned how to roll real fast," said participant Lisa Martincik about a relative newcomer to the group, Ryan Dux.

a sophomore from Roselle, Ill., is in his second semester of learning aikido. As Dux and his partner, Martincik's husband, Dan Crawford, work through ushiro tekubitori - a two-hand grab from behind -Dux's face becomes a colorful contrast of yin and yang. His bright-red face offsets his blond hair while he gauges the end of the move being done to him. Just before the pain of having his hand and wrist twisted behind him like an origami pretzel becomes too great, he lightly taps the mat, letting his partner know the move is complete.

"There's no routine or kata in aikido," said third-year student Reginald Williams. "Because of this, every situation is new and provides a growing or cleansing experience." Williams, who described his background before aikido as strictly aggressive, said he no longer is driven toward confrontation.

When two participants come face to face in the standing position, known as tachi waza, a flurry of moves usually ends with one person being thrown to the side. More experienced students tuck and roll to the mat smoothly, not making a sound, but younger student's body will make a loud whap as it smacks

Hawkeyes refuel in bye week

BY JASON BRUMMOND THE DAILY IOWAN

A little time off and back to the fundamentals.

That's what Iowa's week looks like without a game on Saturday. Coach Kirk Ferentz wants his players to relax a little bit this week, but he is confident they will handle it well. He thinks they truly received a break with how their bye week fell into place this year, and he hopes it rejuvenates the squad. "We've shortened everything down - practices, meetings, all those kinds of things. I want the guys to feel like they're getting a little bounce back after this week's over," Ferentz said.

Iowa quarterback Nathan Chandler thinks the offense is still in a position to improve during the season. The unit is striving for more consistency and getting off to a better start in games, he said. The Hawkeyes will arguably face their toughest defense on Oct. 18 against the Buckeyes who are surrendering a conference best 273 yards per game, including a minuscule 43.4 rushing yards. Chandler is thankful to have two weeks to prepare for the task at hand.

They're a great team, and they have a really great tradition. It's to our benefit that we get to have this extra time to prepare," the Southlake, Texas, native said.

Last year, the two schools did not step on the field together, and the Hawkeyes and Buckeyes shared the Big Ten title. Senior Bob Sanders said there wasn't a time during the 2002 season when he thought about playing Ohio State, but after the season concluded, he thought it could have been interesting.

"Maybe at the end of the year when things were all said and done and over with," the 5-8, 200-pound strong safety said. "It was like, what if we could have played those guys and really see who was the best, but you never know."

Injury updates

Ferentz said a decision on sophomore cornerback Jovon Johnson, who hurt an ankle against Michigan on Oct. 4, will be announced next week. Redshirt freshman Ma'Quan Dawkins is awaiting the results of a MRI, but Ferentz said it looks like an ACL injury, and he doesn't think the Hawks will be able to get him back. Wide receiver Ed Hinkel wouldn't be able to play this weekend if there were a game, but he should be ready to go against

Ohio State. Mo Brown has made significant progress from his knee injury, suffered Sept. 13 against Iowa State, and the Hawkeyes will make a more definite decision next week.

Running backs Jermelle Lewis and Albert Young are close to returning, and Ferentz has been pleased with Lewis' rapid progress. Guard David Walker could have played against Michigan, Ferentz said, and he will be ready against the Buckeyes.

True, fresh, & talented

Ferentz said he is not worried if the true freshmen's playing time diminishes when the team returns players from injuries, adding it would be a good program to have. Iowa has played six true freshman this year — Drew Tate, A.J. Johnson, Champ Davis, James Townsend, Eric McCollom, and Scott Chandler. Ferentz has been very impressed with how the young talent has blossomed.

"The thing we're seeing is continual growth and progress out of those guys — that's all you can ask for. Some of those guys did some things that we never would have envisioned a month ago, so it's pleasing."

Sailing is not exactly a mainstream sport in Iowa. That doesn't stop nearly 25 UI students from traversing the Midwest taking part in the sport they love, however. The Iowa Sailing Club's schedule got underway recently with a race in the Midwest's Fall Fury, where the group placed eighth out of nine teams. The club played host for the first time this season last weekend at Lake Macbride, placing fourth out of 19 teams. The DI's Kelly Beaton spoke recently with UI senior Jennifer Springsteen, who has served as a captain of the squad over the last year, about the sport, her club, and the horrible burden of possessing the last name Springsteen, among

Daily Iowan: How are you guys doing so far this year? Jennifer Springsteen: We just hosted our home regatta called the Davis Cup. We did a lot better, but of course, we were in our home water and our own boats. We have two weekends off, then we're traveling to Indiana. Some of our teammates are going to Lake Geneva, where the University of Wisconsin is hosting a lasers regatta. And Indiana University is hosting a Flying Junior Regatta, which [uses] the typi-cal boat sailed in the Midwest.

DI: Do you guys feel like sailing is an underappreci-ated sport at the UI? JS: It's hard to say because we're a club sport at the university, so we don't have varsity privileges. We don't have huge monetary support or exposure. But, I like it because we run everything ourselves. We decide what competitions we compete in and when we practice. It is kind of frustrating when people don't even know about the sailing team. We would like to have more exposure, because getting more members to join is always Being from Iowa, not that many people know how to sail. At the University of Minnesota and Wisconsin and Michigan, these kids grew up sailing their whole life and go to college knowing they want to sail. For us, we're starting with a lot of newcomers.

DI: Are you looking for new members?

JS: Our club is open to students, staff, and public at the university. It's a pretty big club, and it owns all the boats and pays for all the equipment. The university pays for all our gas money when we travel and our registration fees, and every little bit helps because it is a very expensive sport. We were very lucky to get Rec Services and the UISG to allocate funding for us. We have a Web site at www.uiowa.edu/~sail.

DI: Judging from your Web site, you look like a pretty fun-loving group. What's your attitude as a team?

JS: We want to encourage people to learn how to sail and become competitive racers, but we're big on social aspects, too. We're all a very close group; we always do everything together. Because it's such a small group, we're a lot closer.

DI: How do you guys get pumped up before a race?

JS: When we travel to a regatta race, it's a very big social event. We have all the schools meet up Friday night at one of their homes, and we'll get together and hang out. Then, the next morning, we get up at like 7 a.m. and drag ourselves out to the lake. Basically, what motivates us is everybody you see that weekend. you'll see the other weekends throughout the season. So, you're really good friends with every other sailor throughout the Midwest.

People don't realize it, but it is a pretty physical sport, because the boats that we sail are only 14 feet long. When you get wind blowing up to 25 mph, it's all you can do to keep that boat down and keep it from capsizing questions. Who is a celebrity people say you look like? JS: I don't know; I don't get that one very often. I just get a lot of crap for my name being Springsteen (laughing).

DI: All right, "Boss,"

what's your biggest pet

JS: On the team, they call me the mom. A lot of people promise they're going to do stuff and never follow through. That just drives me nuts, because as a team you have to work together.

DI: If you could have any superpower, what would it

JS: (laughing) Unending energy. I don't know.

DI: If you struck it rich, what's the first thing you'd JS: A new car, because mine was destroyed by the sailing team putting boats on there. A new house, a dog, and a degree. DI: What's a reality show you would like to star on? JS: I'm hooked on "The Bachelor," but I don't know if I would actually want to be on that. I think "The Real World" would be fun. DI: What's your favorite

JS: My favorite words are probably, "You're right."

DI: What are your words of wisdom?

JS: Don't be afraid to try things, and don't worry so much about what people think.

DI: Any other final words? JS: Overall, the sailing team is not all about "Let's sail all the time and not do anything else."

That's a good thing about it not being a varsity sport. You put in whatever you want, and you get out of it whatever you invest. We just go out there to have fun. E-mail DI reporter Kelly Beaton at:

and townies can all dance on both sides of the gamefield line, rooters and rooted-fors, teammates and fans, vicarious winners and the aforementioned

There are currently 26 club sports at the UI, said coordinator Ray Beemer. These range from the men's volleyball and rowing teams to table tennis, synchronized swimming, tae kwon do, and chess. Check out the whole list of club sports offered on the Internet at recserv.uiowa.edu/sportsclubs, where you can also find student representatives for each one. Some teams are more recreational than fiercely competitive.

"First and foremost, we're a student organization," Beemer said. "So the neat thing is that the clubs are selfadministered, self-motivated, and self-supported."

Although non-students are encouraged to compete, 51 percent of the team - and the team representative - must be students. So feel free to recruit as many Frankthe-Tanks and Blues as possible.

Just make sure there are still more people who actually go to class or at least pay to be on a list that allows them to go to class.

The $24,000 Recreational Services budget that funds club sports derives from a portion of the student-activities fund. Individual sports receive anywhere from $1,600 to $300. Students contribute to this in the form of a $4 activity fee on their Ubills. (The University ofMichigan, by contrast, charges a whopping $18.)

Although there's a lot of variety among the club sports offered this year, ranging from those that hold tryouts to gauge experience and ability to those that encourage newcomers, the beauty of it all might be in the ability to start brand-new sports.

Say you and some friend are masters at throwing javelins while hopping on pogo sticks.

Or maybe you have a passion for unicycles, bowling, and ice-fishing. Well, combine them with some rules, objectives, and some kind of point system, and you may have yourself a club sport. Maybe even the next hot college trend. Is it really that much crazier than tossing a leather ball into a peach basket?

Well, actually it is, but you get my point.

Every club sport starts by gaining recognition as a student organization by the Student Activities Board. This process involves submitting an application with an organizational constitution. Although there is a little work involved, it's not nearly as much as finding out what happened on one particular wild and crazy night at the Lodge and Spa at Cordillera in Edwards, Colo., or establishing a democracy in a violently overturned Mideast country. All the forms you need are at the Rec Services Web site.

So get out there, sports fans. Play on.

Merry Pranksters vs. Evil Empire

BY LAURA VECSEY BALTIMORE SUN

NEW YORK - Their first goal should be to take this American League Championship Series all the way to a seventh game, for the sheer drama and to reverse that abrupt 1999 ALCS loss to the Yankees.

Five games and out isn't going to cut it this time for a Red Sox team that narrowly lost the season series to the "hated" Yankees, 10-9.

Their second goal should be to win it.

Otherwise, when will it ever end for Red Sox Nation?

Oh, the light and lively Red Sox of 2003 will make you seriously doubt they feel the slightest burden of history, the "Curse" and all the bad karma directed their way from George Steinbrenner's Evil Empire.

"I'm evil sometimes," Derek Jeter said with a smile Tuesday as the Yankees greeted their greatest rival at the, uh hum, House That Ruth Built.

On the eve of this anticipated showdown, the cool Jeter could not help but admit he does not play scared in October. Like Reggie Jackson before him, Jeter said you hear enough people talking about what a winner you are in the postseason, you tend to believe it.

The Sox and October? Please, must we bring that subject up again?

Some pundits and historians and keepers of the Red Sox crypt of heartbreak like to go all the way back to Babe Ruth, that Red Sox pitcher who won the last World Series for Boston in 1918 before being traded away to the Yankees for Broadway production money

Some still harp on poor Billy Buckner, as if he should have been out there against Ray Knight and Mookie Wilson and those 1986 Amazin' Mets.

George Nikitin/Associated Press

Boston Red Sox's Kevin Millar celebrates the 4-3 victory over the Oakland Athletics in game 5 to clinch the American League Division playoffs on Monday.

There's really no need for that kind of stretch. Remember, it was only back in '99 that the Sox fell victim to Yankees second baseman Chuck Knoblauch's phantom tag on Jose Offerman. It was a crushing out that killed a Red Sox rally and was later admitted to be a blown call by umpire Tim

Who needs the curse of the Bambino when you've got the curse of Knoblauch to more immediately exorcise?

Maybe it is the cumulative effect of all those barren World Series years and all those cold, rocky miles of New England selfdoubt that have given rise to this year's goofy version of the BoSox.

They are the anti-cursed or at least they are acting the part. I mean, look at them! They're buzzed or bald, including junior general manager Theo Epstein and manager Grady Little. Grown men wielding razors inducted the top brass into their Ugly Army, shaving down the GM and field general after clinching their ALCS berth.

"Hence the cap," said Epstein, who decided he hasn't been this bald since in utero. "I had more hair when I was born.' That's the point, apparently.

We're the ugliest team going to take the field. We're idiots. It's a good thing I'm married, otherwise I don't know where I'd go from here," said majorleague instigator Kevin Millar.

When they're not shaving each other - except for Johnny Damon and Nomar Garciaparra, who has to stay pretty for his wedding next month to soccer star Mia Hamm — the Red Sox are bouncing at home plate like a gelatinous mass after every David Ortiz or Todd Walker homer.

'We're a team. No offense to our wives or kids, but we don't want to go home. These guys really like hanging out together," Derek Lowe said.

They're gesturing so wildly in Little League-like euphoria that the Oakland "Who's Jinxed Now" Athletics accused the Sox of showboating and obscenity. But tell us, Miguel Tejada, who vowed that Lowe will pay for those alleged obscene antics: How else was Lowe and the anti-cursed Sox supposed to celebrate that stunning pair of freeze-frame sliders that Chris Singleton and Terence Long stared at, sealing the Red Sox's Game 5 win and sending them off to prove they can finally beat the Yankees?

"It was a fist pump. It wasn't a flip-off. I hope it was just their frustration coming out, but that's all they were talking about after a game like that? apologized. It wasn't directed at anyone," Lowe said

Of course, despite a crosscountry plane ride that Epstein called "the best red-eye" ever flown, Lowe was more than happy to stand at his locker in the bowels of Yankee Stadium for an hour.

"This is what you work so hard for in the off-season. We're going on adrenaline," said Lowe, who had every right to enjoy the spoils of his sterling relief performance in the Red Sox ALDS victory.

But how long will they feel like the anti-cursed? The A's were hampered after ace Mark Mulder went down and then Tim Hudson had to leave Game 4 after one inning. The Red Sox were able to call on Lowe to do what the suspect Boston bullpen couldn't do: close out the clinching victory.

Even this crew of Boston Merry Pranksters knows what they're up against with the Yankees, who have four aces in Mike Mussina, Andy Pettitte, Roger Clemens, and David Wells, not to mention Jose Contreras and Mariano Rivera in the bullpen.

stormed back when Rodriguez, rookie Miguel Cabrera, and Juan Encarnacion homered in a five-run third.

Braden Looper pitched the 11th for a save, giving the Marlins a win and a nice omen. The last 10 teams to win the NLCS opener have reached the World Series.

And it was a good decision up until Slammin' Sammy took his final swing. Sosa tied it with a no-doubt drive, taking a signature hop after he connected off Urbina.

Game 2 of the best-of-seven series is Wednesday night with Brad Penny pitching for Florida and Mark Prior going for the Cubs.

Kavadas digs deep to defend Hawkeyes' court

BY KELLY BEATON THE DAILY IOWAN

Remember Whack-A-Mole? You know, the sadistic little game at Chuck E. Cheese where hyperactive kids mash plastic rodents with a mallet every couple of sec-onds? That, in a nutshell, is what being a libero in volleyball is like.

Nobody knows this better than Iowa junior Pam Kavadas.

Watching her roam the middle of the court for the Hawkeyes, looking to deny any and all kill attempts by opponents, is a study in hyperactivity. One second, she lunges left and digs out a vicious spike, the next, she's barrelrolling right to get a hand on the wayward dig of a teammate.

The Hawkeyes (5-9) are struggling of late, in the midst of a fivematch losing streak, but as Kavadas exemplifies, it isn't because of a lack of effort. The Hawkeyes will look to get back in the "W" column today against Minnesota (9-7), beginning at 7 p.m. at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

Iowa coach Rita Buck-Crockett says she counts on the libero position being "the heart-beat of the team." Kavadas doesn't disappoint her.
"It's all about reactions, getting the ball when it's coming at you," she said.

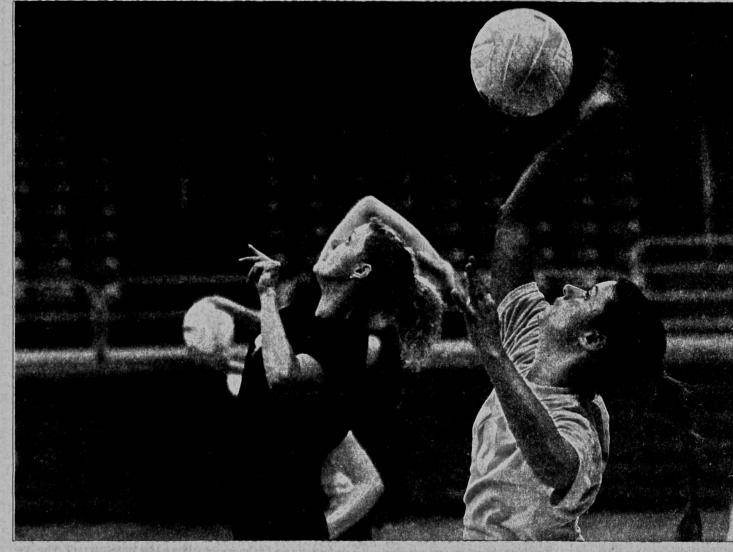

Getting to volleyballs that are spiked at 95 mph usually requires a player to do a full-out, face-first dive on the hardwood court. Which raises the question: Where are all Kavadas' blackand-blue marks?

"I've been doing it so long that I think I've learned how to do it without hurting myself," said the 5-6, Roselle, Ill., native. "I've definitely still got bruises all over; I just hide them really well and pretend they're not really there," she adds with a laugh.

Kavadas has gained near-legendary status with the Iowa staff for never visiting the Hawkeyes' training room despite playing for all but about two serves a game.

"She does have her pains, her injuries, but it's going to take something really bad to keep her out," said Buck-Crockett, who pointed out she herself was like that during her Olympic playing career.

Coaches do instruct players

on how to dive for balls safely, but training can only do so much in the heat of the battle.

"There's definitely technique, but when we're playing teams, balls are coming at you so fast you'll do anything to get them up, even if you're hurting yourself," Kavadas said. "It's a barrel-roll. You do that or an overthe-shoulder to get yourself up so you're ready for the next ball that's coming at you."
She has played deep server in the past, but serving just doesn't fit a player who's known for her down-and-dirty style of play. The position also makes her more of an authority figure on Carver's court.

"I like being the libero, because I do have a lot of control of the back row, I can help peo-ple out, and they can look to me when they need help," she said.
"I definitely do feel like a leader. A lot of the time, I do try to talk and help everybody out, because that's what we need, is someone to try and take charge."

lowa's Pam Kavadas serves the ball during a practice drill at Carver-Hawkeye Arena on Tuesday morning.

If getting a serious, takecharge kind of leader is the recipe for Iowa success, then the Hawkeyes are about to cook up a whale of a win-streak. Number 10 fits the bill in all areas.

"She takes everything she does very seriously on the court," said Buck-Crockett. "She takes her game very seriously. You may be making a joke or something; she's not laughing. I call her FBI, because she wants to be an FBI agent. She's like that."

Tonight, two of the best liberos in the Big Ten will square off, when Kavadas clashes with Minnesota's Paula Gentil. The Gophers sophomore leads the conference with 4.73 digs and has been circled on the Hawkeyes' game plan.

"She's probably the No. 1 libero, and Pam's probably the No. 2 libero" in the conference, Buck-Crockett said.

As for the rest of the Minnesota roster, Iowa must yet again deal with a formidable front row. "They're a big team with big jumpers," Buck-Crockett said. "Most of them are touching over

In Big Ten play, Minnesota ranks first in kills average with 18, assists with 16.21, and digs at an average of 16.43. How well the Hawkeyes hold up under the barrage of the Gophers frontline will likely be the key to the match, Iowa's coach concluded. "They hit, they hit, and they hit. So we need to withstand E-mail DI reporter Kelly Beaton at:

Alstott placed on injured reserve

BY FRED GOODALL ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAMPA, Fla. - Tampa Bay running back Mike Alstott was placed on injured reserve Tuesday night with a neck problem that may require surgery.

Buccaneers general manager Rich McKay said the season-ending injury, which has bothered the six-time Pro Bowl fullback for about three weeks, is not believed to be career-threatening.

"In looking at it today and talking to the doctors, the safe way to go is to shut Mike down," McKay said. "It should not affect his career. He should be able to return, based on where it is and what it is. But it is something that more than likely will require surgery."

Alstott started Monday night's game against the Indianapolis Colts, despite sitting out two days of practice to undergo tests last week. He rushed for 1 yard on three carries and had two receptions for 25 yards before leaving in the second half. McKay said the Bucs are not sure when Alstott originally hurt his neck. It's also unclear when he aggravated the injury in the overtime loss to the Colts. The eighth-year pro was examined by specialists last week and cleared to play after traveling to Pittsburgh for more tests on Sunday. The exact nature of the injury has not been revealed. "I would say it's a disc. But if you get beyond that, I'm lost," McKay said, adding that no date has been set for

No word if Bryant will waive hearing

BY TIM DAHLBERG ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAGLE, Colo. — Attorneys in the Kobe Bryant case huddled with the judge Tuesday but didn't answer the biggest question: Will the NBA star waive his preliminary hearing to keep potentially damaging evidence from being heard publicly?

That decision might not be made until minutes before Thursday's hearing, where prosecutors will present evidence they say proves Bryant raped a young hotel worker in his room at a mountain lodge on June 30.

Though everyone involved in the case has been silenced by a gag order, many legal analysts expect the defense to waive the preliminary hearing and acknowledge there is enough evidence for a judge to order a trial.

"If they have the hearing the public is going to hear basically all the details of what happened that night and it's going to be told from the prosecution's perspective," said Karen Steinhauser, a former prosecutor and law professor at the University

"There's a lot of unfavorable evidence going to be brought out in public."

Another reason for waiving the hearing is that the defense has little to gain, said Denver defense attorney Dan Recht.

"There's no way the defense will win a preliminary hearing. No way. None," Recht said.

Even if the hearing is waived, Bryant must appear Thursday in front of Judge Frederick Gannett for a bail hearing. Bryant, free on $25,000 bail, would also at some point have to appear in another court to enter a plea to the sexual assault charge.

Bryant was in Hawaii this week, where the Los Angeles Lakers were training and playing their first exhibition games.

The basketball star's attorneys met earlier in the day with prosecutors and Gannett for more than an hour, discussing what a court spokeswoman called logistical issues. Exiting the courtroom, Gannett wouldn't comment, other than saying the issue of waiving the preliminary hearing was not discussed.

Attorneys were to meet with the judge once more Thursday, just 45 minutes before the hearing, to resolve other issues. At that point, defense attorneys could move to waive the hearing and take their chances at trial.

Prosecutors planned to bring a sheriff's detective to the stand at the preliminary hearing to discuss the investigation and the conclusions reached by a nurse who examined Bryant's accuser.

"The vast majority of the time defense attorneys waive the hearing," Steinhauser said. "They don't stand to gain a whole lot by having it."

Cyclones to take on Texas Tech record-setting offense

BY CHUCK SCHOFFNER

ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMES — Forget the opposition. Iowa State has lost threestraight games and, to the Cyclones, that's all that matters.

That those winning opponents

— Iowa, Northern Illinois, and Oklahoma — all are in the Top 25 and have a combined record of 15-1 is little consolation.

"A loss is a loss," punter Tony Yelk said. "Nobody at the end of the year is going to care whom we lost to. When you're playing a competitive sport at any level, a loss feels just as bad as any other loss, no matter what team you're playing."

Iowa State (2-3, 0-1 Big 12) does not face a nationally ranked team this week, but playing at Texas Tech on Saturday night hardly is a break. The Red Raiders (4-1, 1-0) lead in the nation in passing, scoring, and total offense.

Still, given a choice between playing top-ranked Oklahoma, which beat Iowa State, 53-7, on Oct. 4, and Texas Tech, the Cyclones will take Tech anytime.

"This is a big game for us," Yelk said. "Obviously, we need one bad. That's no secret." A loss is a loss. Nobody at the end of the year is going to care whom we lost to. When you're playing a competitive sport at any level, a loss feels just as bad as any other loss,

no matter what team

you're playing. Tony Yelk, ISU punter

Iowa State began the season by beating Division I-AA Northern Iowa, which hasn't lost since, and Ohio University. Kicking game blowups hurt the Cyclones in a 40-21 loss to Iowa, now ranked 14th, and they led No. 16 Northern Illinois with 10 minutes left before losing, 24-16.

Then came the Oklahoma blowout, but even in that one, Iowa State was competitive for a while. Late in the first half, the Sooners led only 9-0.

"We still have a good team around here," wide receiver Lane

Danielsen said. "We haven't lost to any slouches. We've got to give credit to the teams that beat us. They did a good job. We've got to keep going out there and playing hard, and hopefully, things will start going our way."

The feeling this year is vastly different from last year, when the Cyclones were 5-1 and ranked 11th nationally at this point. But coach Dan McCarney said the attitude is still good.

"I don't sense finger-pointing, moaning, complaining. I sense let's do whatever we've got to do," he said. "Their eyes are on me. They're at attention. They're wide-eyed. They want to learn and they want to get better.

"Nobody in this program's gone in the tank. If they have, they sure haven't been around me. I haven't seen it."

The Cyclones would get a lift this week if defensive tackle Jordan Carstens could play. He missed the Oklahoma game because of a knee injury. Starting defensive end Jason Berryman left after the first series of that game with a knee injury, but McCarney said he's OK and definitely will play this week.

ISU receivers take trip to see Wallace

AMES, Iowa (AP) — Iowa State had just lost to Oklahoma 53-7 and the team's losing streak had grown to three. There was only one thing to do — hit the road.

Wide receivers Lane Danielsen and Jack Whitver and a friend hopped in the car about 2 a.m. Sunday and drove to Green Bay to watch the Packers against the Seattle Seahawks, where former ISU quarterback Seneca Wallace is playing.

"I talked to him Monday before the Oklahoma game," Danielsen said Tuesday.

"I just asked where they were playing, and he said Green Bay. I said I'd never been there, and he said, 'I'll get you tickets.' So we decided to go up there."

The three watched Wallace warm up and talked to him after the game, which the Packers won 35-13. Wallace, Seattle's No. 3 quarter-back, did not play.

"It looks like he put a little weight on," said Danielsen, who was Wallace's favorite target last season. "It looks like he's a little stronger"

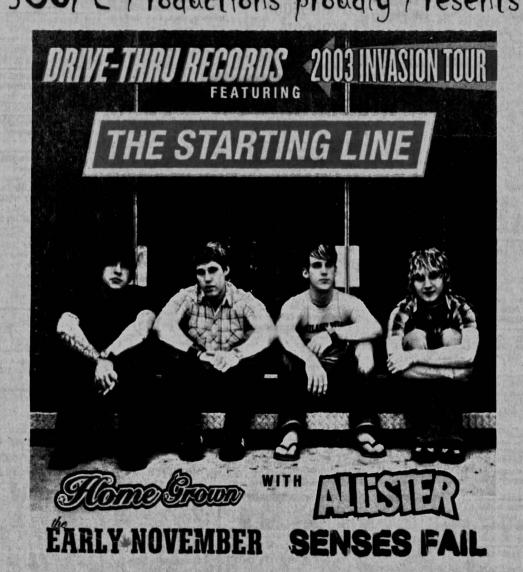

Danielsen said it was the first

NFL game he had attended. He also said Wallace gave them some advice.

"He told us to keep after it, that we're a good team, we've lost to some good teams and we don't have anything to be ashamed of," Danielsen said. "He said we can get some wins
