Once again, budget ax hits UI

BY ALEX LANG
THE DAILY IOWAN

Yet another wave of across-the-board state budget cuts, designed to make up for a shortfall in state revenue, will cost the university $7 million, UI President David Skorton said on Oct. 10.

What specific effect that figure will have on the already-reeling university remains unknown, and Skorton had few specific answers to offer on Sunday.

"This is a difficult situation for all of us," he said about Gov. Tom Vilsack's 2.5 percent across-the-board cut to state agencies, unveiled late last week as a way to fight Iowa's revenue shortfalls.

'The cuts that we will have to make will affect lots of things. Anything we do to lower funding affects students.'

Skorton
UI president

The UI leader said he had no idea what departments the budget reduction would affect. Two possibilities for handling the cutbacks, he said, might include reducing accessibility of classes or the size of the faculty.

"The cuts that we will have to make will affect lots of things," he said. "Anything we do to lower funding affects students."

The latest state cut is "of course a serious blow" to the state's public universities that must be handled, said Regent Robert Downer. Tuition is one area that might be considered to help soften the sting from the budget cuts.

"It is something we are going to have to work on together that doesn't cause significant pain to one part, but causes a little bit of pain to everybody," he said.

Downer added that he hasn't talked to other regents about the possibility of changing the amount that tuition will increase next year. Increasing the tuition is an option for the regents, he said, but a move they would rather avoid.

He said the regents are of "one mind about the 2004-05 year that we can't have double digit increases."

While the regents might increase the proposed 8.3 percent in-state and 8.9 percent out-of-state tuition hikes, Downer said he does not expect to see those numbers reach double digits.

Regent Sue Nieland said she is not looking into raising tuition any more than the proposed rates, a stance she hopes the others will adopt.

"In the past two years, we made a concerted effort to keep [tuition] at a low level," she said. "I hope there are other ways to make up the difference from the cuts."

UI Student Government President Nate Green said it is important for university students to voice their opinions on the cuts because "it is our education."

"It is important because the staff and faculty want what's best for students," and they need student input to accomplish that, he said.

He said the cuts at Iowa State University and the University of Northern Iowa are still proportional to the UI because everyone is receiving the 2.5 percent state cut. ISU and UNI will face smaller cuts, though, because of their smaller budgets. Exact numbers for the budget cuts at those universities were not immediately available.

Skorton said he plans on meeting with student and faculty leaders this week to discuss the budget problems. He expects to have more information about the budget and where the cuts will hit in the upcoming weeks.

Sweating it out to aid local schools

BY ARNA WILKINSON
THE DAILY IOWAN

As most UI students slept soundly early Sunday morning, sophomore Willie Schultz and freshman Katie Welt were wide awake at 8:50 a.m.

The two stretched patiently in the chilly fall air, crammed in among 1,620 other people downtown, waiting for UI President David Skorton to kick off the community's annual Run for the Schools.

They didn't catch the signal to start, but as the crowd surged forward, they moved at a brisk pace, darting through the mob as it rumbled down Gilbert Street.

"Oh man, I think I am going to die," Welt said after the first half mile.

"Don't worry, the first 10 minutes are always the worst," Schultz said. "Do you know what's going to be on the Russian test next week?"

The conversation was typical for Team Russia, a group of UI students and faculty from the Russian department that formed in 1999 to raise money for the event. It was during their first-year Russian class that Schultz and Welt heard about practices the running team held before the race. They decided, as they had before with missionary and internship work in Ukraine, to use their language skills to help the community.

"I find myself writing in Russian for my other class notes just to practice," Schultz said as she ran

Firefighters flash their skills during open house demo

BY MEGHAN SIMS
THE DAILY IOWAN

It only took 15 minutes for Coralville firefighters to transform a blue compact car into a useless mass of metal and glass.

Using the "jaws of life" and other powerful tools, they removed the doors and peeled the roof back. With the car's interior accessible, they could efficiently remove "injured" passengers from what resembled a book left face up with its binding ripped out.

"We took our time today because we had some new people involved in the drill," said Coralville fire Capt. Bill Horning, helmet in hand as he motioned toward the wreckage. "In an emergency, speed is of the essence."

The Coralville Fire Department's four-hour open house on Sunday concluded a series of safety-awareness activities for National Fire Prevention Week. Visitors could enjoy the afternoon munching on popcorn, tattooing their arms with the department's seal, and venturing through the "smoke room," a simulator that teaches children how to react when smoke enters their bedroom.

The activities accompanied a service theme for the department, which is made up of 33 volunteers and two paid workers.

Mindi Drake, a four-year volunteer veteran, said the work is a way to contribute to the community.

"What better way to give back, you know?" she said.

Drake's husband and fellow volunteer, Todd, is one of two Coralville firefighters stationed in Iraq.

Suicide bomber blasts Baghdad hotel; 7 dead

BY RAJIV CHANDRASEKARAN
WASHINGTON POST

BAGHDAD — A suicide bomber detonated explosives packed in a car outside a Baghdad hotel housing Iraqi government officials and U.S. contractors Sunday, unleashing a wave of debris that tore through the hotel's crowded driveway and a busy commercial street.

At least seven people and the bomber were killed, and as many as 40 others were wounded in the midday blast at the Baghdad Hotel. The casualties included one member of Iraq's Governing Council and three Americans, according to U.S. military officials and hospitals that treated the injured.

The explosion transformed a bustling block in central Baghdad into a panorama of wartime devastation and deepened the unease many Iraqis have about security in the capital. Glass shards, pieces of twisted metal, and pools of blood littered the street. Battered and burned survivors, some missing limbs, screamed for help as acrid smoke from burning cars obscured rescuers. The force of the blast was so powerful that body parts were found atop nearby roofs.

The explosion was the seventh fatal car bomb attack on Iraqis and others cooperating with the U.S.-led occupation since early August, dealing another blow to American efforts to achieve stability in Iraq six months after the toppling of Saddam Hussein's government. Explosive-laden vehicles have struck U.N. headquarters in Baghdad twice, the Jordanian Embassy, two police stations in the capital, and the country's most sacred Shiite Muslim shrine. More than 135 people, almost all of them Iraqis, were killed those attacks.

Although U.S. officials have not identified a group believed to

Mideast politics fuels local event

BY MARY BETH LARUE
THE DAILY IOWAN

A panel of local scholars, professionals, and experts joined together on plywood benches at Public Space One, 6 1/2 S. Dubuque St., Sunday evening to discuss the politics of Israel and Palestine, U.S. involvement, and refugee compensation, among many other topics.

The event, sponsored by the James Gang, is the first installment of Public Politics — a series of events to raise awareness of, discussion about, and action regarding contemporary political issues locally, regionally, nationally, and internationally, the group says.

The event's moderator, Lauren McCarthy, said the discussion forums will connect with university events. A film, Divine Intervention, set in Israel and directed by a Palestinian, was shown in the Bijou Theatre the week prior to the forum.

Discussion began as speakers were introduced. Among them were Jeannie Sowers, a UI visiting assistant professor of political science, UI senior Amir Efrati, and members from People for Justice in Palestine, Hillel, Hawkeyes for Israel, the General Union of Palestine Students, and various community members and students.

"It's important to have a dialogue so people can hear the issues involved with it," said Steve Beckerman, a member of Hawkeyes for Israel for the past three years. "When these people read stuff in the news, they will have the correct interpretation."

What began as a calm discussion soon became heated as the controversial subject of "check points," featured in Divine Intervention, was introduced.

"The film had misrepresentations of check points," said Efrati, who visited check points this summer while working for the Jerusalem Post in Israel.

Discussion soon gave way to other issues including suicide bombings, the U.S. involvement, refugee compensation, and hypothetical solutions.

"The question is, where do we go from here?" Beckerman said. "How we got there has its relevance, but if we concentrate on that, we won't move forward."

In response, Osama Saba, who visited Palestine this summer, said, "Going to the future without knowing the past means you'll repeat the same mistakes."

Following the discussion, McCarthy said, "It created a lot of dynamic dialogue. While it didn't have as much audience participation as we hoped for, it would have been difficult considering the complexity of this topic."

The James Gang will hold Public Politics on Cambodia, Iraq, AIDS, the presidential elections, and the war on drugs.

Confab details hurdles for at-risk kids

BY SEUNG MIN KIM
THE DAILY IOWAN

Mental- and physical-health issues, poor housing and socioeconomic conditions, and unfamiliarity with the School District by new students emerged as the most prominent barriers facing district children at a community-wide conference at West High School.

Approximately 175 people discussed learning barriers, existing services, ways to add new services, and possible policy changes Oct. 11 at the "Removing Barriers to Learning: a Community Challenge."

Ted Stilwell, the director of the state Department of Education, compared the initiatives for at-risk youth to making a long-term investment in his keynote speech.

"There are kids who face a lot of challenges and need a lot of help and support, but those are the kids in whom optimism is the most renewed," he said. "When things are bleak on the economic front, it's a good time to think about that future."

Stilwell pointed out advances Iowa educators have made in the past several years, such as increasing all-day kindergarten programs from 24 percent statewide 15 years ago to 95 percent today.

According to district criteria, 20 percent of its students are considered at-risk, meaning they have one or more significant barriers that could prevent them from fully realizing their academic potential.

Information from the conference was collected and organized into eight categories: on-site care, staff development, community volunteers, funding, collaboration of resources, family resources, student assessments, and miscellaneous.

"I learned that we have more resources than I could imagine," said Superintendent Lane Plugge. "Now, we have to direct the families and kids to those resources."

School Board members and district officials will draft two documents to present at the Oct. 28 work session — a statement presenting background information leading up to the Oct. 11 conference and a compilation of data collected at the event.

They then hope to develop a resolution that will pinpoint the most prominent issues facing district students, and a concrete plan to eradicate them.

"We've seen results, but there is still a long way to go," said board President Lauren Reece. "But from what I heard from people, they were very pleased to have talked to each other."

2nd woman dies after stomach-reduction surgery

DES MOINES (AP) — A hospital that said it has performed 300 stomach-reduction surgeries in the last year will limit the number of surgeries performed after two women recuperating from the procedure died.

The family of a 49-year-old Des Moines woman told the Des Moines Register that she died Thursday, three days after a 45-year-old woman who had the same procedure died at Iowa Methodist Medical Center.

Both women, according to the family of the latest woman to die, had been in the hospital's intensive-care unit at the same time recovering from their surgeries.

On Oct. 10, the hospital announced that it has begun limiting the number of weight-loss surgeries, partly because of the risk to patients.

The hospital said most of the patients who have the surgery recover fully and have normal and healthy lives. Hospital leaders said their death rates from the procedures are within national norms, which run from 1 percent to 3 percent.

The family of the latest patient to die said the surgery was performed by Dr. Akella Chendrasekhar, who was one of two physicians handling most such cases at Iowa Methodist.

According to the Iowa Clinic, Chendrasekhar's employer, he has decided to stop performing the surgeries.

He was in India visiting an ill relative and unavailable for comment, a clinic spokesman said.

Jon Ferchen, a hospital spokesman, said on Oct. 11 he couldn't comment on individual cases or discuss whether there have been a recent spate of deaths linked to the stomach surgery.

He said patients receive extensive counseling before the surgery about the significant risks.

"We'd like to pass on our condolences to these families," he said. "Obviously, this is a difficult time."

Board to reach out to residents

BY MICHAEL DHAR
THE DAILY IOWAN

Iowa City residents will have a louder voice in the public schools, both among students and administrators, thanks to two new initiatives aimed at increasing community involvement.

Both programs — presented at the annual Iowa City School Board retreat — aim to educate local citizens about their schools and give administrators input from the community, board members said.

Board member Dave Franker suggested the formation of a committee composed of local residents that will help Superintendent Lane Plugge review facilities and determine new building needs. Such community involvement will make it easier to pass new construction programs when they come up for a community vote, including one in September, 2004 to renew or cancel the Physical Plant and Equipment Levy, Franker said. The levy, worth $3 million per year, provides all the district's repair and maintenance funds. Roughly 67 percent of that fund comes from the community-approved portion of the levy.

"People on the committee are going to begin to learn how the process works," Franker said. "That's important, because somewhere down the road, they're going to vote. And without that vote, we can't fix one more boiler."

The suggested plan was simply a draft meant to invite input, but Plugge will likely implement the program with a few changes, Franker said.

Committee members will serve one to three years at a time before rotating out, making it difficult to learn the intricacies of building needs and give Plugge much input, said board member Toni Cilek. The main benefit of the committee will come from the education members receive about school needs, said fellow board member Don Jackson.

"This is a way to create a public forum, and a way to network out into the broader community," he said. "They will take what they hear, and go out, and talk to other people."

The second program, presented by Plugge, would create a new volunteer mentor program at Kirkwood Elementary and one other school yet to be determined.

"Mentor programs have always been very important to me," he said. "It not only improves achievement, but it brings in the community."

Plugge said he hopes to create 50 student-community member mentor pairs. The programs would probably not begin until next year, said board member Pete Wallace. Training, the most expensive part of the program, will be paid for with existing funds, Plugge said.

ISU club explores the ties that bind

BY AMY LORENTZEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMES — Duane Long Jr. stood in front of a cluster of college students and showed them how to bind a pair of metal-studded wrist cuffs. Next, he demonstrated how to use a leather flogger by thrashing his arm with it. "This one stings. That one makes a thud," he said as he tested out the items.

Long, a senior at Iowa State University majoring in psychology, philosophy, and sociology, was leading a meeting of Cuffs, the university's discussion group for students interested in bondage, domination, sadism, and masochism.

The group, which formed in 2000, has received a little funding from ISU's Government of the Student Body and the rest through member fees and donations. Student government gets its money from an activities fee that every full-time student pays to the university, which has more than 600 student organizations ranging from the Girl Scouts to a fur-harvesters club. Approximately 27,000 students attend the school.

Cuffs' faculty adviser, William Robinson, a philosophy professor who came on board at Long's request, will admit the bondage, domination, and sadomasochism club isn't your typical student organization. But he defends Cuffs' role as an informational and social outlet for its members.

"[The Cuffs members'] particular interest is unusual, but so is skydiving or spelunking," said Robinson, a former cave explorer himself. "Maybe I have a little sympathy for people who have unusual [interests]."

Because of the nature of Cuffs, there was initial debate over whether to give the group money, said Casey Harvey, the vice chairman of the student government finance committee.

"I think they got funding in the end because it's really not [student government's] spot to tell people what they can and cannot do. Students do take part in those activities and could benefit from the education that Cuffs can give," said Harvey, who was not part of student government when Cuffs initially was funded.

Long said many students know about Cuffs, but there hasn't been much protest over the group. He did say some posters advertising meetings its first year were quickly torn down and had to be replaced.

Cuffs isn't the first such discussion group. Columbia University has one that struggled into existence approximately 10 years ago, and the State University of New York-Albany had one that received national media attention a few years ago when it first formed. That's when Laura Schlessinger, known as "Dr. Laura," blasted the now-defunct club on her radio talk-show. Faculty at Oberlin College in Ohio blocked a similar club from forming.

NIH gives UI Cancer Center $600K

The UI Cancer Center will receive $618,274 in funding this year as part of a five-year, $25 million program from the National Institutes of Health to advance research on cancer and aging.

The money will be divided among researchers, going to scientists who are engaged in research of both cancer and aging, said Robert Wallace, the Cancer Center co-director.

According to a press release from the NIH, people 65 years or older have an incidence rate of cancer that is 10 times higher than that of younger patients. The mortality rate for cancer is 16 times higher, and comes at a time when the number of people over 65 years old is increasing.

"Cancer is a disease of the aging and is increasing in magnitude as people live longer," said National Cancer Institute Director Andrew von Eschenbach. "Ending the suffering and death due to cancer by 2015 requires us to understand the behavior of cancer, responses to therapy, and the after-effects that are unique to the older patient."

Towers project faces second delay

Construction on the Plaza Towers complex in downtown Iowa City will likely begin a month later than anticipated because of problems with obtaining the necessary financing, said Marc Moen, the developer who is in charge of the enterprise. This is the second time funding has been delayed.

The tower project, which will ultimately cost $27 million, is Iowa City's latest urban-renewal venture; it will be located on Linn Street adjacent to the Sheraton Hotel and Public Library, the current site of a parking lot.

Moen refused to divulge information on why the financing could not be secured. It was originally scheduled to be obtained by July 15 but was pushed back to Oct. 8 after similar difficulties were faced over the summer.

Moen added that he expects the Iowa City Council to approve an extension for financing to be secured by Nov. 15. If this happens, construction will begin on Dec. 1, a month later than the original start date.

Plaza Towers will consist of two 14-story buildings containing luxury hotel suites, a grocery store, a convention center, a coffee house, a health club, rental units, condominiums, and on-site underground parking. The buildings will include glass facades, balconies for each residence, and roof gardens.

The projected completion date of Nov. 1, 2005, has not changed as a result of financing problems, Moen said.

Accused burglar pleads not guilty

An accused burglar who allegedly assaulted two people with a baseball bat filed a written plea of not guilty on Oct. 10 to charges filed in Johnson County last month.

Ronnie K. Matlock, address unknown, was charged Sept. 23 with first-degree burglary after he allegedly broke into an apartment and assaulted two residents with the bat, causing lacerations and broken bones.

Authorities arrived at the 1131 Third Ave. apartment shortly after hearing about a fight that had broken out.

The Floyd County Sheriff's Department has an arrest warrant for Matlock for failure to appear on a March 2001 driving-while-revoked charge.

Matlock has a previous record that includes a felony outside Johnson County, three operating-while-intoxicated charges, and six simple misdemeanors. He is being held at the Johnson County Jail on a $20,000 cash bond.

If you thought The Silence of the Lambs (1991) and Seven (1995) were morbid, guess again. Tattoo makes them seem like a trip to Grandma's house. This pretentious and plot-heavy German thriller is not afraid to get down and dirty, so much so that I felt like taking a shower when I got home from the Bijou. Let's just say it isn't the film you want to relax in front of after a hard week of midterms.

Director Robert Schwentke spends a murky hour and 40 minutes wallowing in unpleasantness and unrelenting gloom in this story of a reckless young cop (August Diehl) teamed with an aging, hard-boiled detective (Christian Redl). What police drama is complete without those two characters? The lead actors share barely any chemistry, and their performances are so muted that it becomes increasingly frustrating to get involved with their roles. Redl, as Chief Inspector Minks, is the stereotypical, stone-faced mentor whose cynical worldview was shaped by a dark past. His new rookie partner, Marc Schrader (Diehl), is naive and irresponsible but gradually learns a thing or two about his profession as their case progresses. It's a shame that the two are not explored beyond the surface, and their behavior is sometimes rather baffling.

Minks and Schrader are lured into the bizarre underworld of Berlin's tattoo connoisseurs after it becomes apparent that a serial killer is skinning his victims to collect the ornately tattooed portions of their body. There are two figures that the cops seem to hone most of their attention in on.

One is a mysterious woman named Maya (Nadeshda Brennicke), who looks to be the killer's next target. The other is a suspicious art dealer (Johan

I admired the bleak and stylish cinematography of Schwentke's punk film noir, but the movie just collapses under the weight of these ugly, depressing images. The story is weakened by a number of unclear twists and subplots that don't add up to much, and it quickly becomes boring because of the languid pacing. In spite of all the gore, deviancy, and excessive grisliness, Tattoo really isn't all that scary. However, audiences with a weak stomach will still want to steer clear.

Unlike the far superior Seven or The Silence of the Lambs, which the film consistently borrows from without apologies, this shocker fails to generate any interesting protagonists or memorable villains. While it may intrigue various cult audiences, most viewers will be completely put off by its cold, humorless detachment.

DROWNING IN DEATH CAB

Nicholas Wynia/The Daily Iowan

Like the near-capacity crowd that witnessed the Long Winters/Death Cab For Cutie show at the Union Bar on Oct. 10, lead singer Ben Gibbard's guitar was beaded with sweat at the end of the 90-minute set. Because, unlike a host of other bands willing to pose, cry, and scream as the trend commands, there was no distinction between the catharsis of Gibbard as an individual and the sweeping Pacific Northwest rock 'n' roll of Death Cab's music.

Suffused with confessions, sadness, and frustrations, the beauty of Death Cab's set didn't hinge on the sincerity of Gibbard's working through his mopey faux-depression. Through swirling, boundless guitars, humming keys, and propulsive rhythm, the band was a commanding presence that offset Gibbard's bared emotion — keeping the weight of his love-poem hyperboles and Morrissey paraphrasing from dragging him underwater.

Girls cried, hearts pounded, but most importantly, we did not roll our eyes.

ARTS

A real home for jazz

NEW YORK (AP) — Jazz at Lincoln Center will move next fall into its new home, the world's first arts complex devoted to jazz.

Wynton Marsalis, who will head the complex, said that for the first time "acoustics in a hall were designed for the sound of our music."

"In classical music halls, we have to play very softly for jazz to resonate," the Grammy- and Pulitzer Prize-winning trumpeter told the Associated Press on Oct. 9. "And it still comes out muddy."

On Oct. 18, 2004, Marsalis will help inaugurate the $128 million arts complex — the Frederick P. Rose Hall — which is under construction at Manhattan's Columbus Circle.

A half-dozen blocks below Lincoln

Center for the Performing Arts, it's part of the $1.7 billion twin-tower complex that will house the Time Warner headquarters, office space, a hotel, condominiums, a garage, and a shopping mall.

be responsible for the bombings, suspicion has fallen on Saddam loyalists and foreign Muslim extremists who flooded into Iraq over the summer. The attack Sunday occurred on the one-year anniversary of nightclub explosions in Bali and the three-year anniversary of the bombing of the USS Cole off the Yemeni coast — both of which were blamed on Al Qaeda.

Witnesses said the explosion came shortly after two X-shaped metal barriers near the hotel had been moved to admit a car, allowing a white Toyota sedan to speed through the entrance. As the Toyota swerved around a row of tall concrete barriers — intended to absorb the impact of an explosion — and sped toward the hotel's driveway, Iraqi guards fired four or five shots at the driver, who immediately detonated the bomb, witnesses and security officials at the scene said.

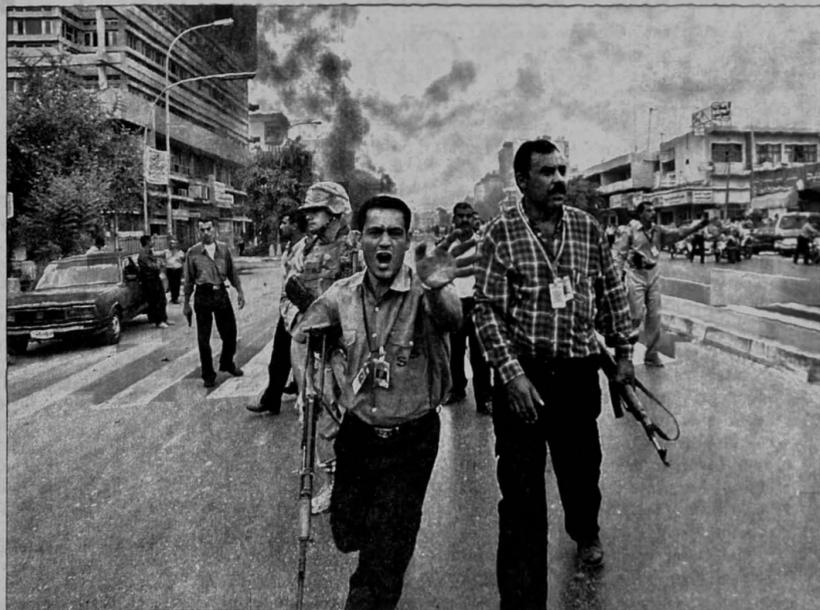

The car exploded before it made a right turn into the hotel's driveway, sending a bone-jarring shock wave along the sidewalk and the driveway to the hotel. The blast, which occurred shortly before 1 p.m., left a four-yard-wide crater in the road and toppled a half-dozen concrete barriers.

Ali Adel, a security guard at the hotel, said he shot at the driver. Moments later, he said, the car exploded.

"I shot him, and after that, the explosion came," Adel, whose face was bandaged, said at a Baghdad hospital where he was being treated. "I was in the face of the cannon."

He said the driver, who had a close-cropped beard, was the only occupant of the car.

Although only one vehicle exploded, a U.S. military spokesman said Sunday evening that investigators were examining whether a second car was involved in the incident, perhaps as a decoy intended to distract the guards. The driver of that vehicle also was killed.

Anja Niedringhaus/Associated Press

Armed Iraqis rush to the scene after a huge explosion rocked central Baghdad near the Baghdad Hotel on Sunday. The suicide bomber killed seven people.

"At this point, we don't know whether the second car was a bystander or whether it was part of the attack," said Lt. Col. George Krivo, the U.S. military's chief spokesman in Baghdad.

Some witnesses said a car drove the wrong way down the street in front of the hotel and sought to enter through the hotel's vehicle exit, although military officials and American security guards at the building could not confirm those accounts.

Within minutes of the explosion, the lobby was enveloped in pandemonium and covered in blood as the wounded were dragged in for first aid administered by American and Iraqi security guards. "Help!" one English-speaking guard said as he brought in a bloody colleague. "We need help right now."

In the parking lot, dazed survivors wandered about as gun-toting Iraqi guards, private American security specialists, and a small contingent of U.S. soldiers searched for other explosive devices in the billowing smoke. The crackle of a burning SUV initially frightened some guards into thinking they were under attack and prompted them to fire into the air.

Of the civilians who were killed, the body of only one was fully intact. U.S. military officials said 10 of the wounded were in critical condition. Several appeared to have lost limbs and suffered severe trauma.

The hotel houses five members of Iraq's U.S.-appointed Governing Council, several Cabinet ministers, and other Iraqis who are working with the occupation authority. A member of the council, Mowafak Rubaie, was slightly injured in the bombing. No other members of the Governing Council appeared to have been in the building at the time of the blast.

Several dozen Americans also live in the hotel, many of whom work for a private firm providing security services for the building. Some of the residents work for the U.S. government, but U.S. military officials and several residents of the hotel denied widespread reports that CIA agents are stationed in the building.

The private American security specialists, who are employed by DynCorp of Reston, Va., said measures they instituted to deter car bombs, including large dirt-filled barriers, kept the bomber from getting closer to the hotel. They said the car passed through the first entrance because workers had removed a large metal drop-bar gate to move it farther away from the hotel. As the car drove up, workers were jackhammering the road to install the new gate.

"It was perfectly timed," one American security guard said. "We were working on the gate today."

competition. His love for the firefighting family, he said, keeps him involved. A living legend at the fire house, the Briskey Cabinet Co. retiree prefers to talk about the newer members of the group.

"I like to see these young guys because they're the future," he said.

Asked about the dangers involved in fighting fires, he shrugged and said, "You don't think about what it's like, you just do it."

Bob Lange, an 11-year volunteer who assisted with the extrication drill at the open house, echoed Rummelhart's sentiment. When lightning struck a building complex in 1994, departments from all over the county were brought in to extinguish the fire. He and another firefighter were stranded on the roof, forced to wait atop the burning building until a ladder could bring them down.

"If it would have come down to it, we would have jumped to the tree next to [the building]," he said, dismissing the danger as he chomped on a toothpick. "They don't train you for that, you just do what you got to do."

Yet a decal in the back window of a Jeep Cherokee Sport in the station's parking lot, license plate "DOMN8," acknowledged a degree of risk in their work: "Firefighters walk where the devil dances."

along. "I think that the language is beautiful."

The bond they have formed with Russia emerged as they moved through the second mile. Stopping to walk when they felt the need, Welt and Schultz pushed for a burst of speed as they neared the finish line, crossing together. The sweat and pain were worth it as they met their teammates, who were waiting for each of the 17 runners.

All were dressed in the same gray T-shirts, which are designed every year to symbolize their commitment. This year, Lenin graced the front with an arm raised, telling his comrades to go save the schools.

"It's now like our uniform," said Irina Kostina, a lecturer in the Russian department. "Our students are very proud; when you walk through the city, you can recognize the others in the group."

Standing among her students, Professor Margaret Mills was one of the educators who ran in the race and motivated the team.

"There were a couple words of encouragement in Russian during the race," she said.

Race participants were also encouraged by the donations, which are divided and given to principals of all local schools. The schools then decide where to allocate the funds. Last year, the race garnered more than $2,500, said director Lori Riley, adding that she has appreciated Team Russia's involvement for the five years that the race has served as a fund-raiser for community education.

Rolling the dice in Coralville

Coralville city officials are asking residents to support a $60 million hotel and convention center project. One administrator has even claimed that not going forward with the project would result in more than $1 million in wasted city funds. That money was spent on consulting and other fees for planning the project. By pointing to these costs, officials are misleading residents and calling for the city to throw good money after bad.

The City Council election on Nov. 4 will likely be the only say residents and voters will have on whether the city should move forward with the project. The dire warning of the possible loss of $1 million spent studying and planning the project is an effort to coerce voters into supporting the incumbents, thereby indirectly supporting the project. This is faulty logic; but more importantly, moving forward with the hotel and convention center would mean even greater losses of city money and revenue.

The claim that residents must support spending $60 million to avoid wasting $1 million sounds like a car salesman's mantra that you must go home with a car and that you would be wasting time and money to do otherwise. Planning and studying a proposed project should not be distorted to voters as the equivalent of a "down payment." Other cities and companies could use the same reasoning after completing a feasibility study of their own favorite projects. They would claim the project must go forward regardless of the finding because doing otherwise would be a waste of money.

The hotel and convention center project itself will end up robbing the city of revenue. Extending tax-increment financing to pay for it would continue to keep potential property taxes out of the city coffers. The current tax-increment plan cost approximately $3 million in Coralville property-tax revenue in 2002.

The hotel's benefit to Coralville is dubious. Coralville residents will have to deal with continued loss of city income, and, unlike a new school or swimming pool, residents will not reap the full benefits. Out-of-town visitors will benefit the most. While the out-of-towners will shop and bring their money to Coralville, the number of potential guests is too risky of a variable. Without a major airport or tourist draw, potential draw such a facility would have by itself is questionable at best.

While the issue by itself isn't likely to be put directly before the voters, residents can still determine whether the project will go forward. The off-base warnings city officials offer are merely campaign rhetoric. It would have served them better to put the issue on a ballot rather than tie this ill-advised project to their own fate in November.

Bush administration tone deaf on Iraq

U.S. troops have learned that Iraqis greet a foreign occupation army with rocket-propelled grenades, not flowers. And that was before the latest slap: the proposed addition to the occupation forces of perhaps 10,000 soldiers from Iraq's former colonial master, Turkey. Washington is happy to have troops from a Muslim nation, but even members of the U.S.-appointed Iraq Governing Council are protesting. Misunderstanding Iraq's suspicion of its neighbors and the hatred between Turks and Kurds populating northern Iraq threatens to make security worse and rebuilding harder.

Turkish lawmakers refused prewar pleas to let the U.S. open a second front to invade Iraq from Turkish territory. Most Turks opposed the war and don't want their forces in Iraq. But an $8.5-billion U.S. loan to Turkey last month may have swayed Parliament, though Ankara denies any link.

Iraqis fear that the Turks will renege on promises to leave after a one-year deployment and will try to seize territory or attack Iraqi Kurds, who, the Turks fear, intend to join Turkish Kurds in trying to form an independent state.

Other nations, which wouldn't stir such concerns if they sent troops, have demurred because of Washington's failure to get U.N. support. The Bush administration's recalcitrance is costing the United States dearly. On Oct. 9, a rocket-propelled grenade hit a convoy and killed another U.S. soldier outside Baghdad; in the capital, gunmen fatally shot a Spanish diplomat, and suicide bombers killed at least 10 Iraqis. Giving the U.N. a political voice in Iraq could lessen anger at Washington and provide international legitimacy for Iraq's reconstruction.

Two weeks ago, Secretary of State Colin Powell expressed confidence that the U.N. Security Council would pass a U.S.-written resolution of international support for rebuilding Iraq. But Washington underestimated the opposition — the latest example of bad intelligence on matters Iraqi.

The White House has belatedly awakened to the problems, especially as its poll ratings plunge and the price of the Iraq occupation soars. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld testily said this week he was not consulted on the decision to give the White House and State Department a larger role in Iraq's reconstruction, until now solely under Pentagon command.

This rare public airing of differences among Bush officials should become a turning point: The U.S. should shift from military belligerence, going it alone, and lecturing global allies to employing diplomacy to get them into the Iraq mission. It's past time to deal with the insistence of U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan — who has lost 21 colleagues, including top aide Sergio Vieira de Mello, to violence in Iraq — that the world body and allies have a say if they play a role in Iraq. If Washington doesn't change, the U.S. role in Iraq could be even more lonely, costly, and bloody.

This editorial appeared in the Los Angeles Times.

Getting the java jingles

LAST WEEK, Starbucks' management finally figured out Iowa City runs on two liquids. One of them is coffee.

Robert and David Meyers knew this years ago. They are the owners of Terrapin Coffee, one of three independent coffee shops downtown. The brothers look and sound like coffee entrepreneurs: no suits, no ties, only solid flannel shirts with the name of their business embroidered on the breast pocket. They display their entrepreneurial spirit by drinking their product along with their customers, which serves to amplify their enthusiasm by the late afternoon.

SHAWN SLAVEN

I asked David how he felt about Starbucks. Instead of fear and intimidation, I found hope, respect, and pride.

"A lot of our success is built on their hard work," he said. It turns out he's right.

When Starbucks started its growth binge 10 years ago, specialty coffee accounted for approximately $1 billion of the $13.5 billion coffee business. Today, specialty coffee is an $8.5 billion market. The number of cafés has grown from 2,000 in 1991 to more than 14,000 today.

Shops such as Terrapin Coffee ride the wave created by the whale from Seattle. As the market grew for specialty coffee, Iowa City's independent shops put in the hard work to make it successful here. Now Starbucks has arrived, hoping to claim a share of what it helped create.

Despite the success of Iowa City's coffee shops, one would be hard-pressed to argue that Starbucks expects to dominate a huge, affluent coffee market. Iowa City's median household income falls far below the national average, and downtown sees far less retail traffic than the nearby Coral Ridge Mall. The Starbucks location is average — good for drive-up customers but poor in terms of pedestrian traffic. Judging by these criteria, revenue at the new Starbucks will fall below the chain's high expectations for stand-alone stores.

I ask David about this, and once again he clues me in to the answer. "A global brand in a college market is a sign of the times," he says.

Two other factors persuaded Starbucks to come here. First, Starbucks' management caught on to the size of Iowa City's tourist market. Those customers don't show up in population data, but they represent a lucrative market. Nearly 1 million out-of-town visitors spent $200 million in Johnson County last year. Starbucks is counting on those people coming to Iowa City for the university, hospital, or Hawkeye sporting events. The power of the Starbucks' brand will draw many of these people to a familiar cup of coffee when they walk out of the Sheraton.

The second reason relates to establishing a truly global brand among young people. Next semester, you will see plenty of green mermaids in class. And one day, you will be running late on Clinton Street, desperate for a quick latte. No matter how much you like the Terrapin, you'll pop in, pay your $4, and run to class. Chances are you will enjoy that "grande" latte. Starbucks expects you to keep that in mind next time you're in Chicago, home to 251 of its stores, or in Minneapolis, where Starbucks competes in a brutal coffee market with several large regional players.

Even if they don't buy a latte, thousands of students in the coveted 18-24 year-old demographic will walk by every year, representing free advertising for all 7,000 Starbucks. Every spring, 5,000 students leave Iowa City, many for large metropolitan cities with hundreds of Starbucks establishments. Then every autumn, 5,000 new students show up, and the cycle begins again. The marketing value of the Iowa City Starbucks may far exceed the store's financial profits.

Starbucks wants to serve you coffee around the world, but the Meyers brothers are happy to stick to Coralville and Iowa City. As I sip an incredibly strong espresso shot, David explains the fundamental difference between "independents" and Starbucks, while simultaneously brewing coffee, cleaning the bar, and sugaring pastries.

"Everything an independent does is for the customers," David says. "Everything it does is smart business." ■

An enlightened view

As a martial artist, I was thrilled to read Frank Klipsch's article (DI, Oct. 8) regarding aikido. I was disappointed, however, that he decided to lash out at his fellow martial artists with his description of "pre-adolescent hiyas." It seems a far better representation of the Way of Harmony to seek harmony with fellow martial artists rather than treat them with such disdain.

Unfortunately, an inherent disrespect for other arts is taught by many, if not most, instructors of martial arts. Strange behavior for those on the path of enlightenment.

Drinking and personal responsibility

The staff editorial "Make the late-night trek safe" (DI, Oct. 2) appeals to the university to provide an on-call shuttle service for students who need to get home safely at night.

While I certainly do not prefer to see intoxicated students behind the wheel, nor subject to the risks that face those who walk home alone or pass out at someone's apartment, I have no patience with the contradictions and hypocrisy in this and other weak arguments posed by proponents of students' right to consume.

Attend to the common line of argument: As college students, we're adults; we're responsible for ourselves, and, if we're big and strong enough to be sent into war, by god, we should be able to decide when and where we want to have a beer. And lest this point of view not be persuasive: It's in everyone's best interest that we have it our way, because if we aren't allowed to drink in public establishments where we can be monitored, we will go to free-for-all house parties where we'll be unable to stop from drinking ourselves into comas, unable to decide not to drive while under the influence, unable to resist the peer pressure of drug use in the back room, unable to control our predatory sexual behavior.

Students appeal for the respect and trust to which adults are entitled, yet assail their own credibility by arguing that someone else must take responsibility for them. They would do just as well to call mom or dad to arrange for chaperones and chauffeurs, threatening as they do that they are not resourceful or prudent enough to conduct themselves with accountability.

I'm old enough to remember the novelty of the alcohol industry's million-dollar advertising campaigns encouraging people to conduct themselves responsibly: Don't drink and drive; know when to say when; the poignant irony of Stevie Wonder imploping a group of youngsters to give the car keys to a persistent friend. Apparently, the point has been lost that the call for responsibility has always been about personal responsibility, not encouragement that a university administration, for instance, should spend limited time and resources establishing a taxi service for students who won't look out for their own welfare.

Many of the other Big Ten schools already have a SafeRide service, the editorialist argues, so why don't we? Perhaps because the administrators, the professors, the philanthropists, and the responsible students at the university — the majority of whom aren't making the late-night trek — have better ideas about what it means to "enhance" students' experience at the UI.

Doctors separate conjoined twins

BY LEE HOCKSTADER
WASHINGTON POST

AUSTIN, Texas — A team of doctors successfully separated 2-year-old Egyptian twin boys joined at the head Sunday, meticulously dividing and rerouting a thicket of shared blood vessels between their brains and clearing one major hurdle after 26 hours of surgery and a year of intensive preparation.

The twins, Ahmed and Mohamed Ibrahim, were reported to be in stable condition as surgeons continued working on them after their exceptionally risky separation at 11:17 a.m. Central Time Sunday. After the main stage of the operation, the neuro-surgical phase, plastic surgeons began a complex procedure to reconstruct the twins' skulls and close the wounds.

The surgery was expected to be completed by early evening, after which the boys were scheduled to remain in drug-induced comas for a week to reduce brain swelling.

Before surgery began, Children's Medical Center in Dallas, where the operation was taking place, would not give odds on the twins' survival, noting that "craniopagus twinning" — twins joined at the head — is the rarest form of conjoined twins and that few operations to separate them have been performed.

More than 50 doctors, surgeons, and other personnel worked in shifts on the Ibrahim twins starting early on Oct. 11. The team consisted of five neurosurgeons, two plastic surgeons, a pediatric general surgeon, and an oral surgeon, plus nine anesthesiologists, six pediatric nurses, six surgical technologists, four respiratory therapists, four anesthesia technicians, and support staff made up of engineers, pharmacists, clinical managers, pastoral care workers, and social workers.

Although the boys' brains were not joined or only minimally joined, they shared a dense network of blood vessels, possibly as many as 50 to 100, according to doctors' estimates before the operation. That heightened the already considerable risks that the operation would result in brain damage or death, not least from blood loss.

Nonetheless, their parents, from a small town 500 miles south of Cairo, wanted the separation to proceed, the hospital said.

2 Californias starkly shown in recall vote

BY RACHEL KONRAD
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Arnold Schwarzenegger is taking office with a clear mandate from millions of people in Southern California's suburbs and the state's vast interior, where 70 percent of voters favored recalling Gov. Gray Davis.

But liberals are mourning along the state's northern coast, particularly San Francisco, where 80 percent voted against the recall. In the city that nurtured beatniks in the '50s and hippies in the '60s, Schwarzenegger came in a distant second to Democratic Lt. Gov. Cruz Bustamante among the replacement candidates.

Some residents joke darkly about forming a separate state, with San Francisco as the capital. Others are surrendering to reality, moving from denial to acceptance of the Republican actor's impending move to Sacramento.

Oscar Grande is still "in shock" over the results of the Oct. 7 recall election, but the environmental activist takes comfort knowing his friends and neighbors feel equally disturbed by the Republican actor's lopsided victory.

"This is still San Francisco, and we're like our own little island from the rest of California," said the 30-year-old organizer in the city's Mission district. "The folks in the suburbs and the Central Valley were so pumped about him — it really blew me away."

Southern Californians voted overwhelmingly to oust the despised Davis and replace him with Schwarzenegger. Nearly three out of four voters in Orange County supported the recall, and Schwarzenegger received 64 percent of the replacement vote, soundly thumping Bustamante's 17 percent.

In San Diego County, home of Republican Rep. Darrell Issa, who spent nearly $2 million to launch the recall, 66 percent of voters favored getting rid of Davis.

"I feel upbeat for once," said Oceanside resident Rex Wait, 45, one of the 59 percent of county voters who picked Schwarzenegger.

Schwarzenegger won decisively not only in the Southern California suburbs that gave Richard Nixon his start in politics but across most of inland California, where the actor spent much of his two-month campaign.

Inmate uses sheets to escape prison

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. (AP) — An inmate who escaped down a 60-foot long rope of bedsheets removed a seventh-floor jail window without the aid of any tools, and similar windows are also vulnerable, the warden said Sunday.

Hugo Selenski, suspected in the murders of five people found buried in his yard, escaped Oct. 10 by climbing down a rope assembled from 12 prison-issue bedsheets, Luzerne County Correctional Facility Warden Gene Fischl said. Selenski remained at large Sunday.

The escape occurred about 9:30 p.m., near the end of a two-hour period during which individual cells are unlocked and inmates in the overcrowded maximum security unit are permitted to socialize.

Selenski, 30, and cellmate Scott Bolton walked into another inmate's unoccupied cell and removed the same window that was taken out in a failed 1990 escape attempt, Fischl said. The earlier attempt prompted the jail to weld windows to their frames, install bolts, and add a layer of wire mesh to the interior.

The warden speculated that the escape cell might have been selected because its window is adjacent to an L-shaped corner of the brick building that would be easier to descend.

Bolton fell from about five floors up during the escape and suffered broken bones and internal injuries. He was hospitalized in critical condition.

Luzerne County District Attorney David Lupas on Saturday vowed an around-the-clock hunt for Selenski.

Qureia to stay for three more weeks

BY MOLLY MOORE
WASHINGTON POST

JERUSALEM — The Palestinian Authority's week-old Cabinet agreed Sunday to remain on the job for three more weeks as an emergency administration in an effort to stave off the collapse of the feuding government, senior Palestinian officials said.

Prime Minister Ahmed Qureia, embroiled in many of the same internal squabbles that led to the resignation of his predecessor after four months in office, indicated he may not accept the post permanently at the end of the emergency period.

"The same government will continue for another 25 days," Qureia, also known as Abu Ala, told reporters in the West Bank city of Ramallah after closed-door meetings with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat and other senior members of his Fatah movement. "And after that there will be a new government and a new prime minister also."

Though Qureia declined to elaborate on the terse statement, his chief of staff, Hassan Abu Libdeh, said in a telephone interview that the new prime minister "could be Abu Ala or somebody else."

"We still have a crisis," said Saeb Erekat, a minister in the emergency government and the chief Palestinian negotiator. "Today was more of a damage control."

Sunday's meeting averted Qureia's threat to quit as head of the nine-member Cabinet but resolved few of the major disputes between Arafat and some of his most senior officeholders, said Palestinian officials who attended the session.

The internal political strife came as Israeli military forces continued their largest operation in the Gaza Strip in months. On Oct. 10, tanks and other armored vehicles, backed by attack helicopters, invaded the Rafah refugee camp on Gaza's border with Egypt. Israeli military officials said the troops' mission was to destroy tunnels used for smuggling drugs, weapons, and other illicit goods.

Afghanistan bans warlords from politics

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — The Afghan government banned warlords Sunday from taking part in politics, a move that would prevent some of the country's top leaders from participating in next year's pivotal elections.

The new law is seen as crucial to helping the country become a stable democracy, as Afghanistan has long been dominated by private militias whose rivalry kept the country at war for 23 years.

"Nobody with armed forces behind them can continue their political activities," Justice Minister Abdulrahim Karimi told a new conference Sunday.

The law, if enforced, is likely to affect several of the nation's leaders. The Northern Alliance, which supported Hamid Karzai in becoming president after the ouster of the Taliban in late 2001, is a collection of warlords — many of them provincial governors or national politicians.

Islamic summit to welcome Iraqi council

PUTRAJAYA, Malaysia (AP) — Delegates to the world's largest gathering of Islamic nations said Sunday that they expect to adopt a resolution welcoming the U.S.-appointed Iraqi Governing Council, but they will also call for Iraq's return to full independence and control over its oil.

If approved, the resolution would give another layer of legitimacy to the Iraqi body.

Meanwhile, a senior Palestinian official issued a statement Sunday saying Palestinians are entitled to fight Israel's occupation of their land by any means. He didn't elaborate, but in the past the Palestinian Authority has condemned suicide attacks.

The gathering of the 57 countries in the Islamic Conference, the world's biggest Muslim political grouping, is its first regular summit since the Sept. 11 attacks brought terrorism to the center of world politics. The weeklong meeting opened Saturday.

Philippines reports killing top terror suspect in shoot out

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Police reported killing a top bomb-maker for a Qaeda-linked terrorist group in a shoot-out Sunday, ending a massive three-month manhunt launched after his stunning escape from Philippine police headquarters.

If confirmed, the killing of Fathur Al-Ghozi, one of the most-wanted terror suspects in Asia, ends an embarrassing episode for President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo and gives her a victory in the war on terrorism just six days before close ally President Bush visits.

Police said the suspected demolitions expert for Southeast Asian terror group Jemaah Islamiyah was killed in a shoot-out with a joint police-military team. The military said it was trying to confirm the identity of the body recovered from the clash.

Bolivia slaps martial law on city

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — Bolivia's government imposed martial law on a city of 750,000 outside the capital Sunday after two weeks of clashes between troops and demonstrators angry about proposals to export gas. Sixteen people have been reported killed.

Martial law was declared in El Alto early Sunday, and soldiers manned major intersections. But the move didn't stop protesters, who repeatedly clashed with the soldiers and police trying to disperse them.

Roman Catholic priest Asensio Mamani said he saw three people killed in the clashes in his neighborhood, Senakata, on Sunday. Another priest, Modesto Chino, said two demonstrators were also killed in the Bolivian neighborhood.

Those deaths would bring the total killed to 16 in El Alto, a poor, industrial city 10 miles outside the capital, La Paz. The government had earlier reported that 11 people had been killed since the protests began.

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Boston College will join the Atlantic Coast Conference as its 12th member, guaranteeing the league a future football playoff game while landing another major television market.

The school had until Nov. 1 to accept the ACC's offer, but agreed in less than four hours after ACC presidents and chancellors voted unanimously Sunday to include Boston College in the league's expansion plans.

"This just adds one more excellent school to what now will be a 12-member mix," ACC Commissioner John Swofford said. "If you look at their graduation rates, B.C. will jump right into the higher echelon of our conference. They bring a lot on both fronts."

The Marlins' 4-0 victory puts Chicago's World Series dreams on hold

John Bazemore/Associated Press

Cubs second baseman Mark Grudzielanek can't get to a ball hit by Florida pitcher Josh Beckett in Game 5 of the NLCS in Miami.

Cubs' ace Mark Prior will take the mound Tuesday at Wrigley Field

BY BEN WALKER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Josh Beckett and the Florida Marlins put history on hold — at least for a couple of days.

With the Chicago Cubs set to clinch their first World Series trip in 58 years, Beckett buzzed Sammy Sosa in pitching a two-hitter and leading the Marlins to a 4-0 win Sunday in Game 5 of the NL championship series.

Ivan Rodriguez, Mike Lowell, and Jeff Conine homered, and the Marlins played the role of ultimate spoiler — at least to thousands of Cubs fans at Pro Player Stadium and millions nationwide — in closing their gap to 3-2 and sending the series back to Wrigley Field.

Even with nearly a century of failure in their past, the Cubs are not about to panic. At least not yet.

Mark Prior is set to start in Game 6 Tuesday night. If he's needed, fellow ace Kerry Wood would pitch Game 7 the next day as Chicago tries to reach the Series for the first time since 1945.

The Cubs already had

Beckett

Prior

made arrangements with the Marlins to use champagne chilling in the Florida clubhouse for a celebration, if necessary. It wasn't.

Instead, Florida had its bags packed for Chicago well before the game began. And the Marlins looked for any edge to prolong the season, as evidenced by their Sunday morning chapel service at the stadium.

"It was a little more motivational than usual, and we had a lot more people there," team chaplain Chris Lane said.

Not that the Marlins needed any extra help, not with Beckett on the mound.

At 23, the hard-throwing righty pitched the best game of his young career, striking out 11 and allowing only two singles and a walk. He shut down a Cubs team that had totaled 33 runs in the first four games of the series.

A night earlier, the Cubs romped, 8-3, and roughed up Dontrelle Willis. Having been run out of his own ballpark, the lively rookie was jogging around the stadium early Sunday, virtually unnoticed by fans in the parking lots. He had a big smile, and so did everyone else wearing teal-and-black a few hours later.

Only three times in LCS history and five times in World Series play have teams come back from a 3-1 deficit to win a best-of-seven series.

The Marlins got closer when Lowell hit a two-run homer in the fifth off Carlos Zambrano, and Rodriguez and Conine later connected.

When he batted in the eighth, Beckett drew a standing ovation from the towel-waving Marlins fans in the crowd of 65,279.

Then he went out and finished for the first complete game of his 51 starts in the majors. The two-hitter tied an NLCS record for fewest — A day of rain is just what the Boston Red Sox and New York Yankees needed to cool off the hotheads.

As showers fell Sunday, postponing Game 4, baseball and the police tried to sort out the troubles of the night before when fights on the field and in the bullpen could easily have triggered nastier problems in the stands and streets.

If baseball wants a soccer-style riot, all it has to do is let these two venom-spewing teams keep up their idiotic attacks on each other. The craziest of their fans will do the rest.

Cubs mania: May cause extreme excitement

To make things clear, I am a 100-percent, pure-bred heterosexual.

So if you're curious as to why I frantically hugged a table full of unfamiliar folks of the same sex at a local establishment last Tuesday night, I have a perfectly good explanation.

They were Cubs fans, too. My head hung low, resting against the bar as the Florida Marlins stood one out away from taking game one against Chicago, until Sammy Sosa jacked a two-run homer to tie it up in the bottom of the ninth inning.

I sprung out of my seat and, not knowing what to do next, began jumping up and down, hugging anyone wearing red and blue.

After a high-five gone bad, my nose began to drip blood onto my favorite Cubs shirt, but I remained calm and watched a few replays of the shot before tending to my injury.

Yes, these are exciting times.

Although the Marlins ended up spoiling Chicago's party that night, since then the Cubs have taken three of four games to go up 3-2 in the best-of-seven series, and my confidence level is high.

Call me overly optimistic, tell me to knock on wood, but the Chicago Cubs are going to the World Series.

Players experience ultimate challenge

BY DUSTIN DEENY
THE DAILY IOWAN

Ultimate Frisbee is not the most popular sport at Iowa. Most people probably don't even know that Iowa has an ultimate Frisbee club or even what the sport really is. But that is something the Iowa Hawkeye Ultimate Club is used to.

"The biggest difference is that most people don't even understand it," fifth-year member Michael Francis said.

Those who play know that it's actually a physically demanding sport that requires stamina, speed, conditioning, and the ability to catch and throw a Frisbee with extreme accuracy.

"It's a simple game on paper. It's basically just catch and throw, but obviously it gets a lot more complicated than that," third-year member Andrew Edwards said.

The sport is described as being a combination of soccer, football, and basketball. The field of play is similar in size to a football field, at 70 yards long and 40 yards wide with 25-yard end zones. The game is fast-paced, and players only stop to throw the disc.

"I ran cross-country and played soccer for 10 years. Those sports helped me the most," Edwards said.

Equipment for the sport is very minimal, basically requiring a flying disc. Teams must agree on the disc. The only other sanctioned rule regarding equipment is that teams wear jerseys or similar clothing.

Ultimate Frisbee is similar to football because players move the disc down field and score by catching it in the end zone. Instead of six-point touchdowns, however, they score one-point goals.

Ultimate is like soccer because the offense and defense are on the field together, running a lot. The offensive and defensive schemes are similar to those used in basketball. There are zone defenses and man-to-man defenses with a continuous

SAY WHAT?

Raja Bell, Utah Jazz

"Hard work will give them the chance to get better. If players work hard, they usually improve ... Will that add up to a lot of wins or a lot of losses? People say that it will add up to a lot of losses, but I don't think you try to go out and get better with the idea that you're going to lose. I've always believed that you try to win. Anything less than that, you're a loser."

— Jerry Sloan, Utah Jazz coach, on his job this season to transform a rag-tag roster of rookies and forgotten veterans into a team; preferably one that wins.

Hawkeye Sarah Dawson lunges for the ball during the first half of play against Michigan State, at Grant Field in Iowa City on Oct. 11.

Iowa falls to Michigan State

BY FRANK KLIPSCH
 THE DAILY IOWAN

There is a six-inch bloodstain on the green Grant Field turf approximately 15 feet in front of the Hawkeye bench. The crimson spot marks two things: The place where freshman Kelly Slattery took a stick to the face, and the place where momentum switched from the hometown Hawkeyes to the visiting Spartans, who scored three unanswered goals in route to a 3-1 victory on Oct. 11.

"It's all mental," said junior Sarah Wareh after the game. "We're well-conditioned, well-skilled; we just didn't play our game in the second half."

Despite a strong opening, Iowa was outshot, 19-5, on the day. The Spartans also dominated the penalty corner, forcing 14 opportunities to the Hawkeyes' three. The loss puts Iowa's record at 9-4 overall, 1-2 in the Big Ten.

The Oct. 11 game was high on transition. Slattery, a 5-4 forward from St. Louis, may be the best-conditioned athlete on Iowa's roster, and her ability to move quickly from defense to attack was a vital factor in the Hawkeyes' early success. Before she went down at the 13:15 mark of the first half (21:45 into the game), there was one series where the ball went nearly goal line to goal line four times.

Michigan State (10-3, 3-0) coach Michelle Madison, an Iowa assistant coach on the NCAA championship team in 1986, was asked to comment on the physical style of play that drew her Spartan team two player cards before the dust settled.

"Those were our first player cards of the season," she said, who added that it was great to be back in Iowa City. "I think what happened today was because players were fighting so hard and digging so deep."

Iowa appeared to be the aggressor for the first quarter of the game. Hawkeye sophomore Debbie Birrell cracked the ball from the left wing 7:22 into the first frame. A diving Dawson tipped the ball from the right side of the cage into the back of the goal to give Iowa a 1-0 advantage.

Forward Pattie Gillern tried to add another score quickly. The senior from Medford, N.J., made a steal, advanced the ball 20 feet ahead into the scoring circle, and blasted a shot toward the goal. But MSU goalkeeper Christina Kirkaldy made a nice kick save to leave Iowa with a one-point advantage.

After a break in play to attend to Slattery's injury and disinfect the field, the momentum began to switch in favor of the Spartans. Although Dawson managed a shot at the 8:20 mark, the most important shot came after an MSU penalty corner with just about a minute left in the half. Veerle Goudswaard, a junior from the Netherlands, directed a shot over the legs of diving Hawkeye goalkeeper Barb Weinberg.

The Spartans took control in the second half behind the play of Goudswaard, Annet Beerman, and Michelle "The Cheetah" Huynh-Ba. The quick Huynh-Ba, who picked up her nickname during high school in Delaware, picked up the second MSU goal with a diving tip-in of another penalty corner, guiding the ball through a six-inch gap between Weinberg's padded foot and the metal pole. Despite the loss, Weinberg played an impressive game, picking up seven saves. The continuing Spartan attack made a victory difficult.

"They just kept coming with more and more players," Weinberg said. "They've got good sticks, and they carry the ball well." The trio of Goudswaard, Beerman, and Jennifer Beeuwkes combined for 12 of Michigan State's 19 shots.

Iowa will be on the road for the next three games, against Ohio State on Friday, Ohio University on Oct. 19, and Northwestern on Oct. 26. Iowa's next home game will be against Indiana on Oct. 31. The final regular-season battle will be against Wake Forest at home on Nov. 2.

Bryant's defense team lives up to reputation for surprise

BY COLLEEN SLEVIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAGLE, Colo. — As dozens of reporters scribbled furiously in the tense courtroom, the first details emerged about the rape allegations against Kobe Bryant — graphic details of a friendly encounter that quickly veered out of control.

Then Pamela Mackey stood. She referred to the alleged victim six times by name and dropped a bombshell that drew gasps: Could the woman's injuries be "consistent with a person who had sex with three different men in the three days?" A frustrated, angry judge halted the preliminary hearing until Wednesday.

Legal observers say the move was vintage Mackey — a carefully crafted line of questioning designed for maximum impact and backed up by a thorough knowledge of the prosecution's evidence. Critics say she violated the spirit of laws designed to protect the disclosure of the sexual history of rape victims.

"She wanted the public to talk about the victim being sexually promiscuous and poison the jury pool," said Wendy Murphy, a former prosecutor and a professor at the New England School of Law. She thinks the tactic may have backfired and instead made people feel sympathy for the woman.

Mackey apologized for using the victim's name, saying she would write herself a note to stop. The judge offered her a muzzle instead.

The 47-year-old defense attorney has a reputation as a zealous advocate for her high-profile clients, including former Colorado

Avalanche goaltender Patrick Roy, whom she represented in a domestic-violence case in which charges were dismissed.

Karen Steinhauser, a University of Denver law professor and former prosecutor, said whether Mackey's question was ethical depends on whether she and partner Hal Haddon, 62, have evidence to support it.

"This law firm has never had a reputation for doing sleazy things. They've never had a reputation for doing unethical things," she said.

Colorado's rape-shield law generally prevents an alleged victim's sexual history from being discussed, but there are exceptions — including if it casts doubt on whether injuries may have been sustained during sex with someone else.

To raise the issue at trial, defense lawyers must file a motion explaining their reasons and a judge must find the information credible and relevant. Preliminary hearings, however, are not mentioned in that statute.

Mackey will face a difficult battle to persuade a judge to allow evidence of the accuser's sexual history at trial, legal analysts said. She would need to offer physical evidence or testimony from a medical expert or a witness with firsthand knowledge of the woman's activities.

"There is no question the case will be difficult. The rape-shield law was designed to prevent the sully of reputations of victims," former Denver District Attorney Norm Early said. "In this country we know that even prostitutes can be raped." Even if the defense finds evidence of numerous sex partners, convincing a judge of the relevance may be difficult because it might be trumped by blood from the alleged victim that prosecutors say was found on Bryant's T-shirt, said Wendy Murphy, a professor at the New England School of Law.

The preliminary hearing had been expected to be an easy victory for prosecutors because evidence by law must be considered in a light most favorable to prosecutors.

Larry Pozner, a former president of the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, said the prosecution made a tactical error by asking a detective about a nurse's conclusions regarding the woman's injuries.

Armed with two large binders of documents, Mackey then methodically asked the detective about the nurse's conclusions. Sometimes, she had to tell him which page to look at when he said he didn't recall.

Iowa still looking for win

BY NICK RICHARDS
THE DAILY IOWAN

The Iowa women's soccer team continued its winless streak over the weekend, losing to Wisconsin, 2-1, and tying Minnesota, 2-2. Iowa finished the weekend with a 3-9-2 record, 0-6-2 in conference play. Iowa has not won a game since a 3-2 overtime win against BYU Sept. 13, a streak of eight winless games. The tie against Minnesota was the second point Iowa has gained in the Big Ten race.

"We just can't get a break," said Iowa coach Carla Baker. The Hawkeyes' loss to Wisconsin was another in a long string of close defeats. Iowa countered an early Wisconsin goal with a goal at the 23rd minute from junior midfielder Kitty Montgomery, her first as a Hawkeye. Iowa and Wisconsin went back-and-forth in the second half until Wisconsin's Molly Meurer scored at the 72nd minute to put the game away. Iowa again had several opportunities to score but couldn't convert.

"I thought we played really well against Wisconsin," Baker said. "We were the better team. The student-athletes left it all on the field."

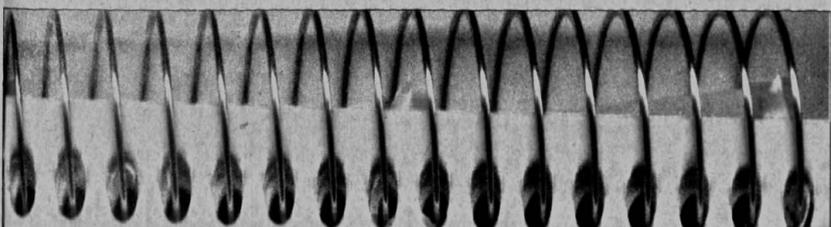

Iowa fell behind early to Minnesota when Becky Dellaria scored at the 18th minute for Minnesota. Her shot deflected off goalkeeper Britta Vogele. Iowa answered back early in the second half as sophomore forward Katelyn Quinn answered with a goal on a free kick at the 49th minute. Iowa took the lead at the 62nd minute. Freshman forward Lindsey Phillips received a pass on a two-on-one from fellow freshman Danielle Oswald to put Iowa ahead. Minnesota responded at the 82nd minute with a goal from Laura Hoppe. Minnesota outshot Iowa, 6-1, in the two overtime periods, but couldn't convert.

"Today, we definitely were the better team than Minnesota," Baker said. "We just weren't triggering when we had those opportunities. We were looking to pass the ball off, and that hurt."

Iowa will return to action next weekend with a road trip through Michigan. The Hawkeyes play at Michigan on Friday and at Michigan State on Oct. 19.

HAWKEYE NOTES

Men's tennis split singles at Invitational

The Iowa men's tennis team wrapped up play at the Wisconsin Invitational on Sunday with a 3-3 singles split with Nebraska and a 3-0 mock-dual victory over Marquette.

"It's hard to evaluate progress based just on wins and losses," Hawk coach Steve Houghton said.

Sophomore Parker Ross got his third singles victory of the tournament by beating Joreg Barthel of Nebraska by default. Sophomore Aaron Schaechterle also got his third win with a close first set tiebreak victory (7-6 [17-15]) and a 6-3 second set win over Nebraska's Tanner Gates. Sophomore Chaitu Malempati won over Nebraska's Jeff Nabity (6-4, 6-2).

"[Ross] has been playing No. 1 and No. 2 for us pretty well. He's taking some strides forward," Houghton said.

In doubles competition, Malempati and Ross beat Marquette's Creighton Macy and Hugo Leenders (9-7).

Schaechterle and freshman Walter Valarezo were victorious over Ricky Servoss and Eegis Vendrikas of Marquette (8-4). Freshmen Jonny Hoak and Ryan Reid played their first collegiate matches well, beating Ian Kawas and Tomeck Czernuszewicz (9-7).

"We played all freshmen and sophomores, and I told them they're all capable of being Big Ten players, but they also need plenty of work. The good news is that they realize they can play and know they need to keep working," Houghton said.

Volleyball fails to overpower losing skid

For two weeks now, Iowa has tried to power brake in an attempt to halt what has become a seven-match losing skid. Try as they might, the Hawkeyes continued their slide to the bottom of the Big Ten standings Oct. 10 with a road loss to No. 21 Wisconsin, 3-0.

The losing streak has now reached 21-consecutive games with the 30-24, 30-19, 30-23 Badgers sweep.

— by Kelly Beaton

While the Black and Gold performed solidly in games one and three, game two continued to be their downfall, much like it has been in the earlier losses. Iowa actually jumped out to a 7-3 advantage in the game, led by three kills by Laura Simpson, only to drop 27 of the final 39 points to trail two games to none for the seventh-straight intermission.

"If I could, I'd fix it," said Iowa coach Rita Buck-Crockett of her squad's game two struggles. "I think it's an overall level of performance. The breakdowns come in groups. We would gain two points on Wisconsin, then we would drop five in a row."

The Hawkeyes were again done in by an abundance of errors, as they totaled 30 as a team. Buck-Crockett said she saw some positives, however, such as the continued stellar play of Simpson and setter Jitka Stehnova. Simpson led the Hawkeyes with 14 kills while Stehnova led Iowa with a .444 hitting percentage.

"We hustled a lot," Buck-Crockett said. "Even though we didn't win, we saw improvement and that's all we can ask."

The Iowa women's golf team will be in Manhattan, Kan., today and Tuesday to compete in the 12-team Marilyn Smith/Sunflower Invitational on the par-72 Colbert Hills Golf Course. Teams will play 36 holes today and conclude with 18 holes on Tuesday.

Shooting for the Hawkeyes will be seniors Laura Holmes and Jennifer Reints, juniors Liz Bennett and Shannon Fleming, and freshman Virginia Bonfils. Bonfils is coming off her best finish of her young career last week at the Shoot-Out at the Legends. Bonfils' score of 223 was good enough for 20th place overall. Fleming shot her career-best round during the same tournament. Her second round score of 73 helped her to a 227 overall score and a tie for 31st place.

"We'd like to get a top six finish; that would be pretty good for us," coach Bobbe Carney said.

The team only had three days to practice before playing today's first rounds. Carney said that the players would be working a lot on their short game.

"We have daily practice to improve our individual skills. We need to find our weaknesses and work to eliminate them," Carney said.

Last week the Hawkeyes finished 12th at the Shoot-Out at the Legends.

Men's golf tees off at Xavier Invitational

The Iowa men's golf team will travel to Cincinnati today and Tuesday to compete in the Xavier Invitational. The 21-team tournament will be held at the par-71 Grizzly Tournament course at the Golf Center at King's Island. The teams will play 36 holes today and conclude with 18 holes on Tuesday.

Coach Terry Anderson will put a young squad on the course, playing three true freshmen. Jon Feldick, Bennet Hammerberg, and Todd Larson will get starts and try to improve on three last place finishes this year. Sophomore Robby Storm and junior Brian DeBuhr will also shoot for Iowa.

Last week, the Hawkeyes finished eight out of eight teams in the rain-shortened Jim Colbert Invitational in Manhattan, Kan. Hammerberg led Iowa with a three-round score of 150 good enough for 19th place. Hammerberg was the second Hawkeye to finish in the top 20 this year.

"We have the goal of shooting par or better during qualifying. And we have done that in qualifying and in practice, so we hope that will carry over. If it does, there is no reason why we can't be competitive," Anderson said.

Beckett's big game propels Florida allowed in a complete game. Beckett allowed only one ball beyond the infield before the Cubs got their first hit, a soft single by Alex Gonzalez with two outs in the fifth. Moises Alou also singled in the seventh. But Beckett's signature moment came in the fourth. A half-inning after Marlins rookie Miguel Cabrera was drilled in the left elbow by

Zambrano, Beckett got the whole ballpark buzzing. Beckett's first pitch in the fourth was a head-high heater to Sosa — tailing in toward him, too — that caused the slugger to duck and stumble backward. Sosa immediately sprang to his feet and took a couple of steps toward the mound, shouting and pointing his bat at Beckett. Plate umpire Larry Poncino and Rodriguez, the Marlins catcher, quickly sealed off Sosa to prevent big trouble as a few Cubs rushed to the top step of the dugout. Pudge patted Sosa on the back, trying to calm down his fellow All-Star while they stood several feet up the third-base line. While Rodriguez, Sosa and Poncino were sorting it out, Beckett calmly walked in from the mound and took a new ball from the umpire's bag. When play resumed, Beckett threw a pair of 98 mph fastballs and eventually struck out Sosa looking at a changeup.

Martinez charged $50,000

Fortunately, some baseball officials realize that Boston's Pedro Martinez was fined $50,000 Sunday, teammate Manny Ramirez $25,000, New York's Karim Garcia $10,000, and Yankees coach Don Zimmer $5,000 for their actions in Game 3 of the AL championship series. Commissioner Bud Selig told the clubs that "any future misconduct by either team will not be tolerated and will be dealt with severely."

Zimmer apologized for his role in the melee, fighting off tears. "I'm embarrassed for what happened last night," he said, his voice quivering and body shaking. "I'm embarrassed for the Yankees, the Red Sox, the fans, the umpires, and my family."

Red Sox President Larry Lucchino appealed for calm, asking fans in both cities to treat opposing teams with respect. That doesn't mean there will be any backing down by the players. "Was anybody right at any point yesterday? Probably not. Was anybody wrong — who knows?" Boston catcher Jason Varitek said. "Things should be just as intense tomorrow."

The ninth-inning brawl in the bullpen set a new low in the bitter history of these clubs. Contrary to what Varitek believes, everybody involved was wrong. Yankees pitcher Jeff Nelson acted like a thug in picking a fight with a Red Sox grounds crew worker in the pen, and Garcia took a misguided leap over the right field fence to join the fray.

The grounds crew worker, Paul Williams, had no business pumping his fist and waving a white rally flag to Red Sox fans. It wasn't just unprofessional of him, it was stupid to taunt the Yankees at close range. "I told him, 'If you're rooting for the Red Sox, why don't you go in their bullpen.' He jumped in my face and tried to take a swing at me," Nelson said after the game. On Sunday, he said he had nothing to apologize for, adding that Williams had been cheering the Red Sox in the Yankees' bullpen for three innings.

Lucchino backed Williams, and Red Sox spokesman Charles Steinberg tried to paint the worker as close to a saint, saying he's also a teacher who works with mentally disabled children. Sorry, that doesn't wash. Whatever good deeds Williams does by day, he put on an imprudent display on Oct. 11 and paid for it. He had cleat marks on his back and arm and was wearing a neck brace when he left the hospital Sunday morning. Williams readily acknowledged pumping his fist twice in the bullpen while clenching the rally flag, Steinberg said, but he claimed he was facing the fans, not the Yankees a few feet away.

"If that was in poor taste, or poor judgment, it certainly didn't warrant a beating," Steinberg said.

It surely didn't. Williams could have danced around the Yankees' pitchers and made obscene gestures in their faces and it still wouldn't have warranted a beating. The Yankees simply should have demanded that the police in the bullpen throw him out.

But that would have required some restraint and good sense, rare virtues when these teams meet.

Yankees President Randy Levine, meanwhile, demanded an apology from the Red Sox for the "disgraceful and shameful" events of the entire day.

Levine shouldn't hold his breath waiting for that apology. Asked about it, Red Sox Chairman Tom Werner said, "We certainly do take exception to his remarks."

The police, for their part, are looking for witnesses before deciding whether to press assault charges against the Yankees involved in the fight.

offense. "It's very involved; aspects of those sports are definitely a part of ultimate," third-year member Dan Kresowik said.

But unlike basketball, football, and soccer, ultimate Frisbee is a relatively new sport. The fan base is still limited, but that doesn't take away from the athleticism and excitement the players bring to the field.

"We take it pretty seriously. Players are in a lot better shape than people think. It's not just, 'Go out, smoke weed, and run around chasing a Frisbee,'" Francis said.

The idea of ultimate was formed in 1967 at Columbia High School in Mapelwood, N.J. A team was formed at the school two years later. The first college game was played between Rutgers and Princeton in 1972.

Ultimate has since been steadily growing ever since. Though its popularity among non-players is mostly non-existent in Iowa City, it has grown to become a world-renowned sport. The World Ultimate Championships started in 1983 in Sweden, and they have been held every two years since. It is estimated that there are more than 100,000 ultimate players in more than 30 countries; the Ultimate Players Association in the United States has more than 13,000 members.

But in Iowa, it still has that backyard mentality. "Basically, now it is still limited to friends and family and word of mouth," Kresowik said.

But despite the team's novelty on campus, the Iowa squad can play. In 2002, it made it to nationals, similar to the Final Four tournament in college basketball. The squad just missed it last year, when Iowa City hosted the regional tournament.

"[We] are one of the more elite teams in the nation. We train year-round and work out year-round," Edwards said.

Like most club sports, the ultimate club is coached by itself. The team practices three days a week at Hubbard Park and runs on the other days. Squad members get practice time in the bubble during winter and play smaller tournaments during the summer.

"That's such a big part of it, practicing, running, doing sprints, running long distances. And that's where our team is hopefully at," Francis said.

The ultimate team does get a little funding from the UI — $1,600 each year, which goes toward entry fees to tournaments. Although the university will sometimes allow the team to use school vehicles to travel, the team mostly packs into the members' cars, and they spend their own money to get to the competitions.

Recruiting is also becoming an aspect of ultimate. It wasn't long ago that teams would accept anyone interested in becoming a member. Now, that's not the case. The Iowa team looks for experience. And again, the members do it on their own.

"A lot of the premier [college] programs recruit people. And people will go to [college] for ultimate. Five or six years ago, people would come out and say 'I'll play ultimate. I've never heard about it, but I'll play.' But these days, you're always looking for really athletic people who have played. It's kind of a prerequisite," Edwards said.

only once has a team down three games to one come back to advance to the World Series.

And with pitchers Mark Prior and Kerry Wood prepared to take the mound in games six and seven, the Marlins are in more trouble than Don Zimmer was going after Pedro Martinez.

The two are a combined 5-0 in their 2003 post-season starts, and after a 4-0 loss on Sunday, you better believe the Chicago will be ready to play at Wrigley Field on Tuesday night.

How sweet it will be for Cubs to clinch a trip to the World Series for the first time since 1945 in front of thousands of screaming Chicago fans (although they could have accomplished that exact same feat in Florida).

Since last Tuesday night, the blood stains have washed out of my Cubs shirt, but the memories of an incredible run at World Series Championship are sure to never wash away.

Kansas City attacks Packers

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — For once, the Kansas City Chiefs' wild finish didn't involve Dante Hall.

Even with their star kick returner being kept out of the end zone for the first time in a month, the Chiefs overcame a 17-point fourth-quarter deficit to force overtime, then came out on top after a crazy closing sequence to beat the Packers, 40-34, on Sunday at Lambeau Field.

Here were the final three plays of the game, one right after the other:

- Cletidus Hunt blocked Morten Andersen's 48-yard field goal attempt with 9:09 left in OT to give the Packers (3-3) possession at their 39 and the wind at their back.

- On first down, Packers running back Ahman Green — who ran 26 times for 139 yards — fumbled the ball, and Kansas City recovered.

- Chiefs quarterback Trent Green threw a 51-yard touchdown pass to Eddie Kennison with 8:42 left in the extra period.

Simple as that, Kansas City improved to 6-0.

"First off, it doesn't tell me anything I didn't already know. There's a special profile about this team," Chiefs coach Dick Vermeil said. "At no time on our sideline did anyone think we'd lost this football game."

Free safety Jerome Woods, who had a 79-yard touchdown interception return in the fourth quarter, knocked the ball loose from Ahman Green. It bounced right into the hands of line-backer Mike Maslowski.

"It stuck in my arms," Maslowski said.

Panthers 23, Colts 20, OT

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Carolina found another way to remain unbeaten.

Instead of giving the ball to Stephen Davis and watching him rumble over defenses, they got a 47-yard field goal by John Kasay 5:34 into overtime.

A week after Peyton Manning led the Colts to a record-setting comeback over Tampa Bay, Indianapolis (5-1) could not come up with a second straight overtime win.

DeShaun Foster ran for 85 yards, and set up Kasay for the winning field goal, as the Panthers (5-0) are one of three unbeaten — Kansas City (6-0) and Minnesota (5-0) are the others.

Titans 38, Texans 17

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Steve McNair had a perfect quarterback rating in the first half, finished with a career-high 421 yards passing, and threw three touchdowns to Derrick Mason for Tennessee.

The Titans (4-2) also intercepted three passes, returning one for a touchdown, against the Texans (2-3).

Erron Kinney dropped McNair's first pass on the Titans' second play, but McNair completed his next 12, including TD passes of 32 and 46 yards to Mason for a quick 14-0 lead.

Cowboys 23, Eagles 21

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Add beating Philadelphia to the list of things Dallas can do under new coach Bill Parcells.

Randal Williams foiled a game-opening onside kick by returning it 37 yards for a touchdown and Billy Cundiff kicked a 28-yard field goal with 1:11 left as the Cowboys ended a six-game losing streak to their division rivals.

With a fourth-straight win, the Cowboys improved to 4-1 for the first time since 1995 and remain alone atop the NFC East.

Philadelphia (2-3) didn't lead until 4:14 left, when Correll Buckhalter broke off a 20-yard touchdown run. Down 21-20, the Cowboys responded as rookie Zuriel Smith took the ensuing kickoff 54 yards to the Philadelphia 40. Then Quincy Carter beat the blitz on third-and-7, lobbing a pass that Joey Galloway took 19 yards. A few runs later, Cundiff nailed the winner.

Dolphins 24, Jaguars 10

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Randy McMichael scooped up a fumble for the go-ahead score, Jay Fiedler ran interference for Ricky Williams, and defensive ends Jason Taylor and Adewale Ogunleye played superbly to help Miami (4-1) plunge Jacksonville (1-5) into a deeper hole.

Of course, losing is only one of the problems for the Jaguars.

The team was a source of national ridicule this week when punter Chris Hanson was lost for the season after he gashed open his leg while using an ax to chop the log coach Jack Del Rio put in the locker room to inspire the team.

The Dolphins committed 11 penalties for 149 yards and found themselves in a 10-10 tie deep in the game after rushing to a 10-0 lead in just 12 minutes. McMichael's TD with 11½ minutes left put Miami ahead 17-10, and the game wasn't secure until Sam Madison picked off Byron Leftwich and returned it 29 yards for a score with 1:28 remaining.

Saints 20, Bears 13

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Aaron Brooks threw two touchdown passes against one of the NFL's worst defenses to lead New Orleans.

Brooks connected with Joe Horn on a 6-yard scoring pass with 7:18 left for the clinching score as the Saints won for the second time in six games. The Bears fell to 1-4.

Browns 13, Raiders 7

CLEVELAND (AP) — William Green gained 145 yards on 26 carries, leading Cleveland to a rare and ugly home win over penalty-prone Oakland.

The Raiders (2-4) committed an NFL season-high 19 penalties — five on consecutive plays in the third quarter — and looked nothing like the team that represented the AFC in last year's Super Bowl.

Patriots 16, Giants 6

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — New York giveaways kept New England in the game for a half. Then Tom Brady and the rest of the Patriots took over.

Brady and Kevin Faulk led the Patriots to 10 points on their first two second-half drives and Richard Seymour played a dominant defensive game to lead New England (4-2) over the Giants (2-3).

Jockey great Bill Shoemaker dies at 72

SAN MARINO, Calif. (AP) — Bill Shoemaker, who rode four Kentucky Derby winners and for more than 40 years was a commanding presence in thoroughbred racing, died Sunday. He was 72.

Shoemaker died in his sleep at his suburban home near Santa Anita racetrack, according to longtime friend and trainer Paddy Gallagher. The Hall of Fame jockey had been paralyzed from the neck down since 1991.

"The doctors said it was natural causes," said Gallagher, an Irishman who was an assistant during Shoemaker's training career and then took over the barn when Shoemaker retired in 1997.

It was the second major death in horse racing this year. Johnny Longden, who won the Triple Crown aboard Count Fleet in 1943 and was the only jockey to ride and train a Kentucky Derby winner, died in February at 96.

Shoemaker broke Longden's record of 6,032 career victories in 1970 and held it until Laffit Pincay Jr. broke Shoemaker's mark in 1999. Shoemaker finished with 8,883 wins.

Shoemaker became paralyzed when his car veered off the freeway about 30 miles from Los Angeles. He continued training horses for another six years despite being in a wheelchair.

"I knew the last couple of years he was having problems," said retired Hall of Fame jockey Eddie Delahoussaye, who last spoke with Shoemaker four days ago. "Shoe never let on. He was a quiet guy, he kept a lot of things to himself. He never complained."

Only 4-foot-11, the superb athlete known simply as "The Shoe" throughout his career, rode for 41 years, most of them in Southern California, considered to be the most competitive circuit in America.

"He was one of the greatest human beings I have ever had the pleasure of knowing in my life," said retired jockey Chris McCarron, now general manager of Santa Anita. "Forget about his ability to communicate with horses, his compassion for people was second to none."

Shoemaker is survived by his former wife, Cindy, and only child Amanda.

Clijsters takes Porsche Grand title

FILDERSTADT, Germany (AP) — Kim Clijsters defended her No. 1 ranking by rallying to beat No. 2

Justine Henin-Hardenne (5-7, 6-4, 6-2) Sunday for the Porsche Grand Prix title.

Henin-Hardenne, who beat Clijsters in all-Belgian finals at the French Open and U.S. Open this year, was trying to move atop the WTA Tour rankings for the first time.

Instead, Clijsters held on to the spot she took from Serena Williams in August. It was just Clijsters' second victory in seven tries against Henin-Hardenne in 2003.

"Playing matches like this is what playing tennis is all about. It was so close," said Clijsters, who defended her title at the tournament and won a silver Porsche convertible.

"I enjoyed being in this situation. It's a bonus to be No. 1 for another week, but that's not the important thing to me."

This was the eighth time since the computer rankings began in 1975 that Nos. 1 and 2 met for the top spot. The last was when Williams beat her sister Venus in the 2002 U.S. Open final.

Before that, the world's top two female tennis players last faced each other with No. 1 in the balance at the 1995 French Open, when Steffi Graf beat Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario.

Clijsters and Henin-Hardenne have dominated the women's game in the absence of the injured Williams sisters. The Belgians are tied for the tour lead with seven titles this year.

Clijsters is the only player to reach No. 1 without having won a Grand Slam.

"I don't care what they say," she said. "Even if I stay the only No. 1 never to have won a Grand Slam title, then I'll be in the record books, won't I? That's good, too."

Gustafson wins LPGA Samsung World Championship

THE WOODLANDS, Texas (AP) — Sophie Gustafson eagled the first hole and birdied eight others en route to an 8-under 64 on Sunday, then overcame a rules dispute regarding one of her putts to win the LPGA Samsung World Championship.

The 29-year-old Swede finished at 14-under 274, two shots better than third-round leader Rachel Teske and Beth Daniel, who was one shot off the pace when play began Sunday at the Tournament Players Course at The Woodlands, just north of Houston.

Teske faded with bogeys on two of the final three holes.

Gustafson ran into a rules dilemma on the 14th green. After standing over a birdie putt, she backed off as the ball, on the edge of a slope, rolled on its own for several feet. An LPGA official allowed her to play the ball from the new spot and she made par, prompting questions whether she should have been assessed a penalty.

DUBOW ON FOOTBALL

Rick Wilson/Associated Press
Florida State quarterback Chris Rix fumbles the ball after being sacked by Miami's Jonathan Vilma and D.J. Williams on Oct. 11. Miami won, 22-14.

Oklahoma and Miami a cut above the rest

BY JOSH DUBOW
ASSOCIATED PRESS

This was supposed to be the weekend that tested college football's top teams. It sure lived up to its billing.

Six undefeated teams lost, showing that early success didn't make them championship contenders. Oklahoma and Miami, on the other hand, remained on the path to a meeting in the Sugar Bowl on Jan. 4, with the national championship at stake.

Halfway through the season, the Sooners and Hurricanes have set themselves apart from the rest of the nation.

"This was a great litmus test about where we are," Miami coach Larry Coker said after a 22-14 win over then-No. 5 Florida State. "We've seen a glimpse of what we can be. Now we've got to build from here."

Ohio State, Florida State, LSU, Arkansas, and Nebraska all failed their tests, leaving just five major unbeaten teams.

That Oklahoma is still in that group was no surprise. Bob Stoops' Sooners always handle Texas, even if this year's 65-13 beating was a bit more lopsided than expected.

"Our locker room wasn't anything overjoyous," Stoops said Sunday. "It was nothing overblown. It was very controlled, and it was a good win. It tells you guys we expect to win and that we expect a lot more."

"Beating Texas isn't the be-all to us; they understand there's more to do. We want to win championships."

The Sooners were poised to announce their return as a national power after winning their first five games by an average of more than 30 points.

The Hurricanes came to Tallahassee a seven-point underdog after needing a last-second field goal to beat West Virginia and missing leading rusher Frank Gore.

So what happened?

Miami dominated both lines of scrimmage, got a strong game from backup running back Jarrett Payton and showed why it has won 40 of 41 games.

"We're the team to beat," Payton said. "Until somebody knocks us off, that's how I feel. I don't think we get enough respect as a team. People talked about us all during the week, saying we were going to come in here and lose. We came in here to play."

Here's what the road ahead looks like for Oklahoma and Miami:

OKLAHOMA: The Sooners host No. 24 Missouri this week and have only one other game against a team ranked in this week's poll — on Nov. 1 against No. 23 Oklahoma State — before the Big 12 championship. Then again, the Cowboys have beaten the Sooners the past two years. In a down year for the Big 12 North, the Sooners should be fine if they can get past a meeting with Texas Tech and quarterback B.J. Symons on Nov. 22.

MIAMI: The Hurricanes have a much harder road, with the biggest test coming at No. 3 Virginia Tech on Nov. 1.

If the Hokies can beat the Hurricanes, they'll move into position to play the national championship. Virginia Tech also has to get by road games at West Virginia, Pittsburgh, and Virginia.

If only two of those unbeaten don't get through the regular season unscathed, the door opens to many one-loss teams, with No. 4 Georgia, No. 5 Southern California, and No. 8 Ohio State probably in the best position to go to New Orleans if they can win out.

The two other undefeated teams in Division I-A have their sites set on making any BCS bowl, not necessarily the Sugar Bowl. Notre Dame is the only team not in a BCS conference to play in one of the major bowls in the first five years of the deal.

But with pressure to open up access to the lucrative games, Northern Illinois and TCU are hoping for an invite if they can stay unbeaten.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

I want to reach out to Latinos and not just because of the vote. It's like, you know, that I feel sad by this situation, that someone is trying to make me look like I am anti-Latino, when I've done four movies in Mexico.

— California Gov.-elect Arnold Schwarzenegger during the recall campaign.
