Regents to bump tuition 8.3%

BY J.K. PERRY
THE DAILY IOWAN

It's that time of year again — when leaves change color, the World Series is right around the corner, and tuition increases are on the forefront of the state Board of Regents' agenda.

Regents decided on Thursday to send a proposed 8.3 percent undergraduate tuition increase for fiscal 2005 to vote at their November meeting.

The consensus at the IMU Richey Ballroom among all the key speakers was in favor of the increase. University presidents, student presidents, and regents all supported the proposal.

Keeping the increase in single digits was important to the regents, but the increase may not leave enough room to properly compensate for the salaries of those working at the UI — a move that could strain the quality of education in the future, said UI President David Skorton.

"Our job is to figure how salaries will come out of the budget without hurting the quality of education," he said. "We'll just have to work our way through it."

Student-government leaders are feeling the pressure the newest increase entails. Regent Robert Downer expressed his approval of the student leaders' continuing efforts to work towards quality education in the face of student objections to another increase.

Downer
regent

"In a perfect world, I would concur with [student objections]," he said. "But keeping up the quality of institutions is important. They are the future of our state — there is no question about it."

The future workers of the state will continue to heft gobs of cash onto the altar of tuition, following a trend the UI and other Iowa institutions have felt amid the state's budgetary crisis. Tuition increases have been higher than ever in recent years, evidenced by a 7.2 percent increase in 2001-02, 18.5 in 2002-03, and 17.6 this year.

In dollars per student it will cost resident undergraduates an additional $360 per year in 2004-05, while nonresident undergraduates will face an increased burden of $720. Among resident and non-resident graduate students the price tag will increase $450 and $900, respectively.

Issues that the regents considered in its proposal included: reductions in state support, enrollment changes, market competition rate, affordability and accessibility, and return on investment.

OWI program draws scrutiny

BY ALEX LANG
THE DAILY IOWAN

A program designed to curb jail overcrowding and counsel first-time drunken-driving offenders faces renewed scrutiny as county officials question its oversight by a local community college.

Concerns about Johnson County's use of the 48-hour program coordinated by Kirkwood Community College arose after the county attorney recommended a review. The recommendation came after participants in the program were caught with alcohol while attending the program in June 2002.

At issue is whether the county should play a more active role in the program to address security concerns, curriculum, and general administration.

The county has offered the program in lieu of jail time for first-time offenders since 1999. Those convicted of operating while intoxicated and who had a blood-alcohol content of less than 0.15 when arrested are eligible, pending a judge's approval. Currently, the county has no role in overseeing the program.

"Several hundred" of the 1,200 people prosecuted for OWI enroll in the Kirkwood program each year, said Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White.

Having the convicted drivers go to a class opens a lot of jail space and saves the county approximately $60 a day in jail costs. The cost to those in the program, $290, is "substantially more than the cost to the county to put someone in jail," White said.

If the supervisors were to add a law-enforcement officer to oversee the program it would cost more money for the program. Officials have not determined where this money would come from, said Johnson County Supervisor Terrence Neuzil. One option is to raise the price of the program.

As the alternative course continues, there is much discussion over how much an administrative role the county should have in the program, Neuzil said.

White estimated that 80 to 90 percent of those in jail have some sort of a substance-abuse problem. Classes such as the one offered at Kirkwood allows them to fight the problem, he said.

In 2000, voters rejected a plan to build a new jail in Johnson County, forcing the county to give alternative sentences and move inmates to other jails. The county has spent more than $1 million moving inmates to different facilities.

President's house gets a rehab job

BY CRISTA HAHN
THE DAILY IOWAN

Although it is not apparent from the street, a $2.9 million renovation of the UI president's residence, 102 Church St., has been underway for three weeks.

Planning for rehabilitation of the 1908 house began as soon as former UI President Mary Sue Coleman announced she was going to Michigan in May 2002, said Rod Lehnertz, the UI architect and project manager. "We can't ignore buildings because the eventual cost to fix things after ignoring them for many years is much greater than providing repairs on a regular basis."

By the state Board of Regents' rules, the UI president must live in the residence; the first floor of the house is part of the university, Lehnertz said.

The UI Foundation hosts fund-raising events on the first floor, said Susan Shullaw, the foundation's vice president for communication. The university asked the foundation to raise $1.8 million

U.N. stamp of approval on Iraq aids U.S.

BY PAUL RICHTER
LOS ANGELES TIMES

WASHINGTON — The U.N. Security Council resolution on Iraq won't bring Washington much of the aid or troops it covets. Yet in return for a vague promise to broaden international control, Washington has won a politically valuable U.N. blessing to continue reshaping the country.

The resolution approved on Thursday means the United States can describe the occupying troops under its command as a "multinational force." And an Iraqi government that was hand-picked by Americans now has official U.N. recognition as the entity that "embodies the sovereignty" of Iraq.

To be sure, Russia, France, Germany, and Pakistan have made it clear that the resolution did not go far enough to persuade them to contribute troops or money.

But the U.N. stamp of approval means that some allied governments facing antiwar opposition at home — including the British — now have political cover that will make it easier for them to help out.

Significantly, the U.N. blessing is also likely to open the way for international institutions such as the World Bank to contribute. That establishment is considering whether to lend billions to Iraq, but its rules prohibit it from doing so unless the government is recognized to have legitimacy.

An international donor's conference that is to be held in Madrid, Spain, next week probably still won't attract the tens of billions in pledges that the United States would like to see committed to the reconstruction over the next few years.

But had the resolution failed, the fund-raising prospects would have been far worse — and the risks of political embarrassment much higher. France and Germany have now agreed they will at least attend.

The resolution also pays a political dividend for President Bush at home.

Group slams Coke's rights record

BY MICHAEL DHAR AND SARAH FRANKLIN
THE DAILY IOWAN

The anonymous "Coke Kills" graffiti dotting the Pentacrest got a face and a voice Thursday at a rally protesting the UI's contract with Coca-Cola.

Approximately 30 people gathered in front of the Old Capitol to raise awareness about Coca-Cola's alleged human-rights violations in Colombia and elsewhere. The event, organized by UI Students Against Sweatshops, featured political speeches, radical cheerleading, and a sidewalk diagram of an angry student throwing away a Coke can.

"What do you buy, and what does it say, and whom does it kill?" members of the UI Radical Cheerleaders chanted to the cheering audience. "We don't think twice; we just buy. That's what makes these policies fly."

The university renewed a five-year contract with Coke in May that gives the soft-drink giant a vending-machine monopoly on campus. University convenience stores can sell non-Coke products, but the Coke reserves a certain amount of shelf space. No other companies bid for the contract, which brings the university approximately $400,000 a year, counting 50 percent of profits, said Mary Jane Beach, a UI assistant vice president for Finance.

"This comes down to a few simple facts," said UI graduate student and SAS member Ned Bertz. "The university does not have the right to choose what I drink ... and if a company has gross human-rights violations, I think it's a pretty clear choice not to support it."

SAS members want to encourage a university-wide boycott of Coke products as part of a national movement led by United Students Against Sweatshops. Critics say the soda giant has cooperated with paramilitaries, allowing them to kidnap, torture, and kill union leaders in bottling plants.

However, the company contends that the paramilitary groups have acted alone, according to a statement on its Web site. "Nevertheless, if either our company or our bottling partners learned of any such misconduct at bottling plants, we would be equally committed to taking decisive action," the statement reads.

Coke's violations are just part of a bigger trend in corporate abuses in Third World countries, speakers at the rally said, adding that boycotting a well-known company such as Coke will alert people of larger issues.

Amnesty International member Maria Hope told audience members the story of Colombian union leader Isidro Gil, who was shot and killed inside a Coke bottling plant in 1996. Afterwards, other plant workers were ordered to "voluntarily" sign a letter promising they would not participate in unions, she said.

Coca-Cola has assured university officials that all Coke products sold on campus come from plants in Minnesota and are made by American workers, Beach said. The university approached the company after hearing SAS members' concerns earlier this year.

"No one has shown that Coca-Cola is guilty here," Beach said. "I know personally that Colombia is a very violent place. If there are issues to address, the university will address them."

Income from the UI's Coke contract has gone toward new library furniture, student recreation services, and the university's recycling program.

Man files motion to drop HIV charges

An Iowa City man who allegedly failed to inform women with whom he was intimate that he was HIV-positive has attempted to have charges dropped.

Adam Musser, 22, filed a motion in 6th District Court in Johnson County on Thursday to dismiss each of the four criminal-transmission-of-HIV counts against him.

Musser was charged July 9 with a fourth count of criminal transmission of HIV. He allegedly had unprotected sexual intercourse with a young woman on two occasions and failed to tell her that he was HIV positive.

Three other women filed similar complaints on Jan. 9, March 7, and April 9. Musser allegedly engaged in a six-month relationship with a 23-year-old Coralville woman and failed to tell her he had the virus. The woman learned he was HIV-positive when North Liberty police arrested him.

Musser was arrested Feb. 14 on warrants for a probation violation relating to a June 23, 2002, domestic-abuse incident and a warrant for unlawful transmission of the HIV virus.

Four separate trial dates had been set for Oct. 20, Nov. 3, Nov. 20, and Jan. 12. Musser is being held at Johnson County Jail without bond.

Supervisors will fund Senior Center

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors decided Thursday to give $75,000 to the Iowa City Senior Center, 28 S. Linn St., to pay such general expenses as utility bills and maintenance.

Supervisors agreed to fund the center despite questions about how the money would be spent. The supervisors would like to have a broader role in overseeing the center's operations, Supervisor Terrence Neuzil said, possibly by appointing community members or themselves to its advisory board.

After the county terminated an agreement with the center in 2000 that had funded the facility, the center had to institute a membership fee to help pay for costs. The county has decided to give money to the center, though not as much as before 2000.

The money will not offset the center's existing membership charges, Neuzil said.

The center provides activities and classes for citizens older than 50 years old to continue their education.

Amoco demolition will wait on Starbucks

Plans to demolish a vacant downtown Amoco gas station are being put on hold until remodeling for a national-chain coffee shop is completed next door, said developer Marc Moen.

Marc Moen, the owner of the vacant Amoco station at the intersection of Burlington and Clinton streets, said he originally planned to turn the property, which has been vacated for almost a year, into a laundry facility. He said he changed his mind when Starbucks proposed building a coffee shop at another of Moen's properties, which formerly housed Karlberg Tan, 228 S. Clinton St.

The Amoco property will temporarily be used as a parking lot for construction vehicles while the neighboring property is remodeled.

Moen said he will wait to demolish the gas station until his firm completes construction of its newest endeavor — the $27 million Plaza Towers complex near the Iowa City Public Library, 123 S. Linn St., which is expected to open in 2005.

Moen said he plans to build an eight- to 10-story structure on the Amoco property. He said he wants to demolish the vacant building to "clean up the corner."

Official: High tech answer to hunger

DES MOINES (AP) — U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Ann Veneman said Thursday that scientific advancements in agriculture are key to solving world hunger.

"The application of science and technology, along with supportive policies, can help achieve our goals by raising agricultural productivity in an environmentally sustainable way," said Veneman, who spoke to the World Food Prize International Symposium on World Food Day.

Most important is to "harness the technological information that already exists" and get it to developing countries, she said.

"We must find ways to help farmers tap into that pipeline," said Veneman, among the international leaders brought together for the annual symposium in an effort to build alliances to end world hunger.

Veneman said hunger causes political and economic instability and affects 800 million people around the world. The Bush administration will work to cut that number in half by 2015, she said.

"Even one hungry person is unacceptable," Veneman said. "That one person is someone's child, mother, or father ... We must always remember that human face."

She said biotechnology is one way to boost food production, creating crops that are resistant to pests and climate extremes and are fortified with nutrients.

Bush, Arnold put on a lovefest

BY MIKE ALLEN
WASHINGTON POST

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. — President Bush shared a stage here Thursday with Gov.-elect Arnold Schwarzenegger for the first time since the state's historic recall election, rekindling questions on whether the new celebrity governor can help put California in play in the 2004 presidential election and whether the president will help bail Schwarzenegger and the state out of their massive fiscal problems.

Their first meeting offered few clues to the future. The two men appeared publicly after spending around 45 minutes in private, praised one another as friends and allies but never came close to addressing the issues that will be at the heart of one of the most intriguing political relationships in the Republican Party.

Bush made no promise of federal aid to the nation's most populous state in his public comments, and Schwarzenegger later told reporters he had made no specific requests for assistance, preferring, he said, to start "just building our relationship" in their first meeting.

The mood was light and friendly when they were on stage. Schwarzenegger said California has "no greater ally" in Washington than the president. Bush joked about how much they had in common. To laughter in the audience, the president said, "We both married well. Some accuse us both of not being able to speak the language. We both have big biceps. Well, two out of three isn't bad."

In reality, although they share the Republican label, the two are in many ways political opposites. Schwarzenegger is a fiscal conservative but social moderate, while the president is strongly conservative economically and on such issues as abortion and gay rights. Still, many Republicans hope the two men can come together in a mutually beneficial relationship.

Eric Draper, White House/Associated Press

The stakes are huge for Bush and his party. California hasn't voted for a Republican for president since Bush's father won the state in 1988. Since then, the state has tumbled rapidly into the Democratic column. Although the president made a late run at the state in 2000, he won just 42 percent of the vote against Al Gore, losing by almost 1.3 million votes.

Schwarzenegger's victory in the recall election that drove Democratic Gov. Gray Davis from office helped to awake a moribund and fractious state Republican Party, which holds no statewide offices and is in the minority in both chambers of the state Legislature.

Some GOP activists say Schwarzenegger's election gives

Bush fresh hope to compete for the state's 55 electoral votes next year. At the very least, they say, the Democratic nominee may have to spend precious money and time in a state that he or she might have been able to take for granted.

These strategists argue that Schwarzenegger could become a powerful symbol of a more moderate party, making Bush's conservative message more attractive to swing voters. Bush kept a conspicuous distance from Schwarzenegger during the recall campaign, in part because he might have hurt the actor's efforts to appeal to moderate voters and also because some presidential aides feared the novice candidate might do something embarrassing.

Dan Schnur, a Republican consultant in the state, said women and Latinos, especially, were likely to be more receptive to Bush after turning out for Schwarzenegger.

"A whole swath of California voters had simply stopped considering Republican candidates as a relevant part of the political discussion," Schnur said. "Now, there's a larger audience available for Bush during his reelection campaign."

California Republican Chairman Duf Sundheim said that "in all the areas where we need to grow, including immigrants and union members, Arnold did well and has a natural affinity."

But there are any number of reasons why Schwarzenegger's election may not provide Bush with easier access to the California electorate. Schwarzenegger must close a budget deficit estimated at a minimum of $8 billion but one that is likely to be much larger than that. If he fails to fulfill his promises to put the state's fiscal house in order, any possible voter backlash could be aimed directly at the Republicans rather than the Democrats.

GOP leader asks for stable-tuition plan

BY MIKE GLOVER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES — House Speaker Chris Rants has proposed a plan that would guarantee tuition stability for incoming freshmen at public universities in the state.

"They would not be subject to wild swings in tuition," Rants, R-Sioux City, said Thursday.

Under his proposal, an incoming freshman at a public college would be guaranteed that tuition would remain the same for the four-year college program.

Not only would that allow students and parents to plan for financing college, it would give a huge incentive for students to complete college within the four-year stretch, Rants said.

"We want to make sure that when people start school their freshman year, they can count on a stable tuition all four years," he said.

His proposal is modeled after laws in Michigan and Illinois. The Illinois law took effect in June and freezes tuition for incoming students. At Michigan State University, tuition cannot grow faster than the rate of inflation, under a measure adopted in 1994.

House Minority Leader Pat Murphy, D-Dubuque, and Senate Minority Leader Mike Gronstal, D-Council Bluffs, called it a thinly veiled attempt by Rants to get the monkey off his back.

"If Speaker Rants wants to create tuition stability for students attending the three state universities, then Republicans ought to adequately fund the universities," Murphy noted.

"Instead, the Republicans, led by Speaker Christopher Rants and Majority Leader Stewart Iverson, have continued to cut state funding to the universities, resulting in the higher tuition the speaker now claims he deplors," Gronstal said.

Rants said he was issuing his proposal because the state's budget crunch has put enormous pressure on public colleges, which have seen tuition grow by up to 50 percent in the past few years.

"How can families plan for the future when a double-digit tuition increase might be lurking around the corner?" he said.

He submitted his proposal to the state Board of Regents, but he also said lawmakers will examine the issue when the next session of the Legislature convenes in January.

"These past few years have placed an enormous burden on family budgets and we need to stabilize tuition in order to help students focus on what is really important — their studies," he said.

The issue is complicated because a sour economy is putting continued pressure on the state's budget, and Rants conceded his proposal would put additional pressure on the regents to make better long-term forecasts of their financial needs. Lawmakers would negotiate with higher education officials over details of any package that's eventually approved, he said.

"We will make sure this does not harm out universities and we will work together with them to ensure that our No. 1 need is met — a quality education for our students," he said.

Higher education has been one of the biggest targets during the past few years of state budget cutbacks, in part because many lawmakers argue that the regents can offset state spending cutbacks by increasing tuition.

Curses — baseball playoffs roil ratings

BY DAVID BAUDER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Faced with the extraordinarily popular baseball playoffs on Fox, rival networks have cried uncle and pulled several original series episodes and replaced them with reruns.

CBS and NBC shelved new editions of "CSI: Crime Scene Investigation" and "Friends" — television's most popular drama and comedy — on Thursday because the New York Yankees and Boston Red Sox were playing the deciding game of the American League championship.

A night earlier, NBC yanked

"The West Wing" off its schedule, replacing it with a "Law & Order: Criminal Intent" rerun and no explanation to viewers.

Fox's broadcast of the deciding game of the National League championship between the Florida Marlins and Chicago Cubs on Wednesday was seen by an estimated 26.5 million viewers, according to Nielsen Media Research. It was the highest-rated league championship game in at least 10 years.

"We're all running into the buzz saw of baseball," said CBS spokesman Chris Ender. "For all the talk of the Cubs and Red Sox being cursed, the broadcast networks are being cursed. This is clearly wreaking havoc with the rollout of our new season."

Last week, all the broadcast networks — except for baseball-dominated Fox — had smaller audiences than the same week in 2002.

CBS planned an original episode of "Survivor" Thursday, followed by reruns of "CSI" and "Without a Trace." NBC's entire Thursday schedule was in reruns. ABC stuck with its schedule of original series.

Television networks generally have fewer original episodes of comedies and dramas than there are weeks in the TV season. Financially, it makes little sense for them to use those originals on nights when their ratings are clearly going to suffer.

The risk lies in alienating viewers who were just getting used to their favorite shows again after a summer of reruns.

NBC's postponement of "The West Wing" Wednesday bewildered and angered many viewers.

The episode promoted for this week will be on next Wednesday, said NBC spokeswoman Rebecca Marks. "We are still giving viewers the opportunity to watch their shows," she said. "For people who are torn, we feel like we are helping those viewers."

CBS News also said it was replacing an original edition of "48 Hours Investigates" with a rerun on Saturday — when the World Series opens.

The postseason participation of the Cubs and Red Sox — two teams with large fan bases that haven't won a World Series in nearly a century — is fueling the popularity of baseball this fall.

Interestingly, NBC is betting that the World Series will not be as popular as the playoffs, now that the Cubs are eliminated. NBC had been planning to air several reruns next week so as not to compete with the World Series, and now will replace them with originals.

Fox executives made no secret that they were openly rooting for the Cubs. The Cubs have more fans than the Marlins, and their long championship drought was a more compelling story for casual fans.

Researchers at Initiative Media estimated that a Cubs-Red Sox World Series would generate a 16.7 average TV rating, while a Marlins-Yankees World Series would only get a 12.4. That's a difference of more than 4 million households tuning in or turning off, a significant impact on Fox's business.

Although the Yankees are in the nation's largest media market, many viewers outside of New York are tired of the team because of its recent run of success, an Initiative analysis said.

Zen power chords splashed with humor

BY RICHARD SHIRK
THE DAILY IOWAN

Stuart Davis could be the wittiest self-ordained monk to ever rock power chords. Shaven-head bald, and as devoutly Buddhist as he is devoutly rockin', he is a man bringing spirituality through rock 'n' roll and rock 'n' roll through spirituality. Now, with his latest album, Bell, in tow, the original Punk Monk will bring his finely tuned pop-sense, razor-sharp wit, and a fanatical legion of fans to the Yacht Club on Saturday.

Both tactful and accessible, Bell follows the formula that has made Davis an underground pop-star for more than 10 years — an ample supply of clever lyrics, a keen sense of humor, and more crunchy guitar than most Soto Zen Buddhists are willing to crank out.

Admittedly, mixing rock music and theological doctrines is usually a great formula for bad music. But just as Richard Thompson's Islamism is always a subtle adornment to his superb songwriting, the charm of Davis' albums and his live performances lies in his understanding that a healthy mix of sincerity, Elvis Costello covers, humor, and tongue-in-cheek attitude is sometimes the only way to talk about the more serious facets of life (and afterlife).

Written conceptually around the idea of the dakini — the celestial women of Buddhist texts such as the Jataka — Bell is an album recorded with a watchful eye on the pompous meter. Compared with last year's pre-emptively posthumous The Late Stuart Davis, Bell might be a bit weightier, but it hasn't lost any wit. The most staid songs — "Ara Belle," "Original Face," "Smoke," and "Flower of a Zero"

— are played with enough passion and humility to sweeten the usual terrible taste that a song containing "mercy," "the Mystery," and "lightning" within five lines will usually conjure.

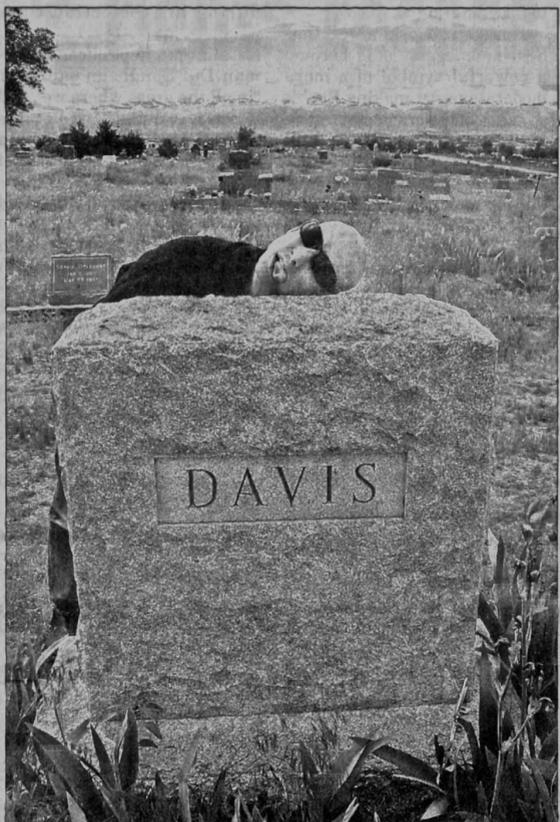

The more complex and straight-faced moments succeed in being just as disarming as Bell's more laid-back moments. After all, not every singer/songwriter can wrap a song around an etymologically corrupt rhyme of "Bodhisattva" and "Prada" (in "Sexy Messiah") or turn the sinister porn 'n' carnival gypsy-rock of "Wizard" into a deadpan comedy. Somewhere in between lie "Karma Pyre" and "Dharma-Drama," songs that span the middle ground with chugging riffs and Davis' Buddha-centric lyric play.

Playing somewhere around 150 to 200 shows yearly in North America and Europe, Davis' live appearances have created a base of devoted, if not devout, fans. Under the moniker Punk Monks, the followers are more than just a source of moral support when it comes to recording, releasing, and marketing Davis' albums.

Bell is the fourth-consecutive disc to be released on Dharma Pop, a label staffed and funded entirely by volunteer Punk Monks. Aside from funding Dharma Pop through investments in future projects, Davis' followers act as promotional street teams, sell merchandise at shows, and maintain the label's Web sites.

So why are these Davis disciples willing to follow the man around the country and buy shares in his work?

"Musically, he's amazing. He's probably the best songwriter I've ever heard and had the honor of seeing play," said Toni Wilson, a UI

Even the gravest of matters have a bright side for folk-rocker Stuart Davis, who will appear at the Yacht Club Saturday in support of his new CD, Bell.

senior and Punk Monk who has seen Davis 30 times since she first heard his music in 1999. "He just has a way of telling stories in his songs that are so human. You can connect to them so well. Personally, he's just a really great guy; he's really outgoing."

"If you ask any of Stuart's fans, they would probably say the same thing — there's something about his music and who he is that you can't quite put a finger on. You know it when you're around it and you hear the music. It's just unbelievable."

Believable or not, the charming secularism of Bell might be a bitter vitamin pill to wash down with herbal tea. But with a sense of humor, the best Hüsker Dü guitar riffs ever to be played by a bald Zennie, and a mighty songwriting ushinisha, it's hard not to don the Punk Monk garb and reach for the hem of Davis' flowing, transcendental popster robes.

IRAQ

Amid a debate about the administration's request for an additional $87 billion for Iraq, critics from both parties have been pushing the White House to do more to round up international help. Opinion polls show a large majority of Americans share this view.

"The administration has needed to look like it was trying hard to share the burden," said James Lindsay, the director of research at the Council on Foreign Relations and a former member of the National Security Council.

Now, Bush can say he's tried. And if other countries don't come through with pledges, he can argue that it is not his fault.

If the World Bank is contributing big loans, Bush has a stronger argument for limiting the U.S. contribution to grants, so as not to burden the new Iraqi government with additional debts.

The resolution also marks an important victory for Secretary of State Colin Powell in his long debate with hard-liners in the administration.

Powell and his allies have shown that he could, in fact, win valuable support from the United Nations without sacrificing much control over how the United States runs Iraq.

Meanwhile, the countries that opposed the United States on the war are hoping that the resolution offers the first step, if only a small one, toward a true internationalization of control over the country.

They did not win a firm timetable for elections and a final transfer of real power, as they had wanted. Nor was the United Nations given as large a political role as they had sought, although Secretary-General Kofi Annan will contribute toward the creation of an Iraqi Constitution.

Even so, countries such as France, Germany, and Russia wanted the reconstruction effort to succeed.

"Nobody, especially the Europeans, can be interested in seeing a destabilization of Iraq and the entire Middle Eastern region," said Günter Pleuger, Germany's permanent representative to the United Nations.

These council members came to the view that they would have more influence in Iraq by supporting the resolution than opposing it.

Moreover, Security Council members were worried that a continuation of the yearlong battle over Iraq was taking its toll on the council itself. In their view, the continuing hostility of the United States was "threatening to destroy the function of the United Nations," said one U.N. official.

SHERWOOD

Tom and Doris Woodruff, who divide their time between living in a shack made of old barn lumber topped with corrugated steel and a home in Davenport.

The land is rife with hiking trails snaking across the property, which were built so that the Woodruffs and others can garner a better understanding of the area and its trees. Although Sherwood Forest is privately owned, the Woodruffs have purchased insurance so that the land can be accessible to the public.

A graduate of the UI who holds numerous engineering degrees, Tom Woodruff is a master woodland manager. Much of the information he has gathered about the forest was learned through groups that study the area, some of which have ventured here from the UI and Iowa State University.

However, it doesn't take an expert to enjoy a day in the woods. A hike through Sherwood Forest on a warm, breezy Indian summer day with Tom Woodruff proved to be an educational and beautiful experience.

Clad in jeans, a wool shirt, and camouflage hat, he gets excited talking about the bountiful array of trees (Osage, ironwood, and cherry, among others) that have made his property their home. Overhead, the canopy explodes into the yellows, oranges, and reds of fall.

On the main thoroughfare, Scales Bend Wagon Trail, some of the area's history can be surmised with a careful eye. Settlers in the area hauled limestone and wood, creating deep trenches formed by the passing of wagons.

Also along this trail is an old well, where a bench bearing Tom Woodruff's granddaughter's name, Kia, is placed to mirror her character — "quiet, reflecting, and studious."

Many other benches engraved with names, including one displaying the names of two sons-in-law, are also strategically placed in the trail system.

"Dan and Mike were sleeping with my daughters, so I decided the only place to put them was next to the outhouse," said Woodruff, a move that he said still ruffles some feathers.

A turn east onto Beaver Cove trail opens on a less-dense stand of trees where the morning sunshine bursts upon the trail. This path leads to the Coralville Reservoir, where cliffs and fossils stand at water's edge.

Brian Glenister, a UI professor emeritus of geoscience, brought his students to this area before his retirement in 1997. The shallow marine corals exposed in the flood of 1993 include portions of a vertebrate that is over 40 feet in length.

"The shallow marine tropics offer a fantasy of geological history," said Glenister, adding that the fossils provide "good clean fun."

The vantage point at the edge of the cliffs gives an awe-inspiring view of the reservoir, where ripples in the water caused by the breeze reflect the sun's light in the foreground, and stands of brightly colored trees paint the background.

In all, there are eight trails in and around Sherwood Forest, which can be accessed from a gravel parking lot off Scales Bend Road. There is a remarkable outhouse decorated with pinups of other outrageous latrines, and when a long sit is required, a copy of Nancy Reagan's My Turn hanging on a hook has to suffice for reading material.

To explain the lay of the land, Tom Woodruff has posted signs that can be found at trail heads and at junctions pointing out various paths.

On the path of life, he maintains his land the way he does his existence: "You got to make things better than you found it."

from alumni and friends, she said, adding that so far, the foundation has raised close to $400,000.

"It's a challenge always [to raise money], when the UI has other needs, like student tuition, but it's on our list," Shullaw said. There are 14 other construction projects on the foundation's agenda, but she remains optimistic that the foundation will meet its planned goal.

Even though all of the money has not yet been raised by the UI Foundation, construction will not be halted, Lenhertz said.

"Ultimately, it needs to be paid back during construction," he said. "The university will support the budget until the UI Foundation makes its plan."

The oak floors are being scraped free of glue that once bonded carpet by McComas-Lacina Construction.

UI President David Skorton has not yet moved in, but he will when the rehab work is completed — expected in early August 2004.

Inside the walls of the mansion, electrical wiring and heating and cooling piping are going to be torn apart and redone.

"The piping has always been a patch-together system," Lenhertz said. "Some of the piping is the building's original from 1908."

Visible rehabilitation will include restoration of the floors on both the first and second stories, a new two-story garage, and a catering addition.

Unlike some student abodes, Skorton will be able to decorate as he pleases.

"I don't think they'll take away his deposit in the end," said superintendent of construction Jeff Price.

Explosion hits Iraqi pipeline

BAGHDAD (AP) — An explosion damaged part of the main pipeline running from Iraq's northern oil fields on Thursday, forcing a reduction in the amount of oil available for export.

In Irbil, 200 miles north of Baghdad, police shot and killed the driver of a car packed with 220 pounds of explosives as he approached the police ministry office, the U.S. military said.

The vehicle did not explode, U.S. officials said. Irbil residents contacted by telephone from Mosul said the driver carried an Iraqi identification card issued in Baghdad giving his age as 19. Last month, a car bombing in Irbil killed three people and injured four American intelligence officers.

It was unclear whether the pipeline explosion near the city of Hadeetha, 125 miles northwest of Baghdad, was caused by saboteurs, a senior Oil Ministry official said on the condition of anonymity.

He said the explosion ripped open part of the main pipeline linking the northern oil fields to the al-Doura oil refinery and the Mussayab power plant. The oil in the pipeline was earmarked for domestic use.

To maintain domestic supplies, the official said exports from the southern oil fields will be reduced by 80,000 barrels a day to make up for the shortage from the northern oil fields.

U.S. stonehearted on medical pot

As nations such as Canada edge closer to decriminalizing marijuana possession, it seems archaic that the Bush administration would try to prevent doctors from recommending it to some of their patients or even talking about its potential medicinal benefits.

It's hard to ignore evidence of the drug's healing abilities. There are many advocacy groups supporting marijuana's medical effectiveness, and, conversely, there are groups who say pot has no rehabilitative effects. However, for the Bush administration to push for legislation requiring doctors to be investigated and punished by federal regulators for recommending marijuana to their patients is akin to Galileo's ex-communicating for saying the Earth revolved around the sun.

Thankfully, the legal system recognized the dangers presented by the Office of National Drug Control Policy's plan and issued a ruling that protects the doctors.

On Tuesday, the Supreme Court refused to hear the case. In October 2002, the Bush administration had appealed the ruling by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals that the federal policy violated the free-speech rights of doctors and the "principles of federalism."

Of the nine states in the 9th Circuit, seven — Alaska, Arizona, Hawaii, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington, in addition to California — authorize the medical use of marijuana. While states have authority to issue licenses to practice medicine, the Drug Enforcement Administration issues licenses to doctors to prescribe drugs that they need. Though doctors can be punished if they help patients obtain the drug, they are now free to discuss the subject.

The government's threats against doctors who prescribe marijuana did not begin during Bush's presidency. In 1996, immediately after California voters approved a medical-marijuana initiative known as the Compassionate Use Act, the Clinton administration warned doctors that recommending marijuana "will lead to administrative action by the DEA to revoke the practitioner's registration."

A 1999 report conducted by the Institute of Medicine presented scientific evidence confirming that marijuana had therapeutic value for patients with certain conditions. The institute is a nonprofit organization that was commissioned by the White House to perform a "comprehensive review" of marijuana's medical benefits and health effects.

"For patients who do not respond well to other medications, short-term marijuana use appears to be suitable for treating conditions like chemotherapy-induced nausea and vomiting or the wasting caused by AIDS," said the co-principal investigator John Benson, the dean of the Oregon Health Sciences University School of Medicine, in an institute news release.

Bush administration officials may have moral reasons for believing marijuana's medical use is problematic. However, they should leave it to the doctors to decide what's good for ailing patients.

The selling of the new Jacksons

The federal Treasury is now spending 1.5 million $20 bills — that's $30 million, twice the cost of the Louisiana Purchase — just on advertising to teach Americans about its new $20 bill. Hey, 20's are good, but with the federal and state deficits and all, we'd listen up for a couple of 5's. And come to think about it, what's to learn about $20 bills after you see the 2 and the 0? Except maybe that none of us ever feel as if we have enough of them.

For employed people, the $20 bill has become the currency workhorse of the United States — standard issue at all ATMs, widely used and accepted abroad, even in place of local currencies, and, naturally, most often counterfeited. Officials deemed a new bill, even one that costs 7.5 cents each to print, as useful and an expensive education effort as necessary to prevent misunderstandings. Last time the U.S. altered bills, in 1996, many cashiers, foreign businesses, and domestic vending machines didn't get the message about new and old both being good.

The new 20 is a little different. Jackson still doesn't look like the first president born in a log cabin, the first to marry a divorcee, or the first nominated at a national convention. But his portrait is no longer framed in an oval. And the bills are multi-hued to help foreigners who've previously handed out 20's as $1 tips. Oops. Officials explain that the United States is joining the world in having different-colored money for different denominations. Next thing you know they'll be selling soft drinks in two-liter bottles.

The new 20 still shows the seventh president with that familiar "Lion King" mane of hair — the "before" part of a Supercuts ad. Or maybe the general born in South Carolina ran out of gel on a 19th-century bad-hair day and the steam-powered hair dryer stuck on the hot hurricane setting.

What's most different on the new $20 bill is pretty much hidden — a new watermark and security thread hidden in the paper. Which makes you wonder why we need to spend 1.5 million of them announcing all this. Who needs to know the counterfeit countermeasures unless you're a genuine counterfeiter, in which case an expensive alert about what needs careful copying is most thoughtful and helpful? How many 20's will that cost?

This editorial appeared in the Los Angeles Times.

LETTERS

Safe trip home a right for all

I am writing in response to Michael Christofferson's letter to the editor (DI, Oct. 13) commenting on the appeals to the university to provide an on-call shuttle service for students who need to get home safely at night. He claimed that he was tired of the students' contradictory argument to treat them like responsible adults yet take responsibility for them when they want to get home at night. He also claimed that the majority of "responsible students" do not have to make the late night trek home in the first place.

Although some of the activities that are taking place at night may be illegal depending on one's age, that is not the issue here. Adopting an attitude of the tune of "well, they should not be out that late in the first place so it is their own fault if they get mugged, abused, raped, etc." is, in itself, irresponsible as a citizen. The fact is, it is unnecessary for anyone to feel unsafe walking home in this city, regardless of where he or she is coming from.

The other Big Ten schools have SafeRide services because they realize that the risk of abusive crime after dark is very real at college in general, and they are not judging people based on their opinion of what a so-called "responsible" student should be doing. The act of providing the service is not directly condoning any activity of any sort. It is simply ensuring people a safe means of getting home at night.

Clark no waffler

Lately, much has been made about Wesley Clark's "flip-flop" on his position concerning the conflict with Iraq. But there was no flip-flop. Clark supported a resolution for further examination of the risks and benefits of a conflict with Iraq. He did not support a resolution by Congress "declaring war" on Iraq.

Clark is extremely intelligent; he is also thoughtful, in that he thinks completely through a plan before carrying it out (see the conflict in Kosovo as evidence). He considers a particular issue rationaly before deciding on a course of action. This is obviated by his early resistance to taking definitive stands on campaign issues. Rather than being accused of "flip-flopping" at a later date, he chose to keep broad his response to specific issues.

Clark supported a proposed resolution to take the Iraq issue first to the United Nations. He believed that after a proper discussion on the world stage, a better decision could be made by our representatives. This was the resolution proposed to Congress and the one he supported. It was not the resolution that was passed. Instead, the resolution approved by Congress gave free rein to our president and resulted from a compromise between prominent Democrats (among them Dick Gephardt) and the dangerously pro-war Republican administration. The members of Congress were called on by their constituents to take action in Iraq and perhaps never realized what the repercussions of their decision would be.

Clark would never have supported the resolution as it was passed, and to this tenet he has fervently held. Wesley Clark is, above all things, NOT a "flip-flopper."

For whom the cell tolls

AMERICANS ARE OBSESSED with privacy. Even in the wake of 9/11, when the government introduced legislation to combat future terrorism, the ACLU and other opponents were up in arms to defeat the Patriot Act. Yet, many things that used to be private have become public.

Everywhere you turn these days, you are inundated by the tsunami of people talking on the phone. Gone are the days when phone conversations were private and their contents jealously guarded. Gone, too, are the days when teenagers, the largest leisure users of the phone, grabbed the line on the first ring and locked themselves in their rooms until other members of the family pleaded for some access.

BODE OLAKANMI

The cell phone has changed private phone conversation as we know it, and they have intruded into every aspect of our daily lives. Cell-phone users voluntarily lose their privacy; in fact, they seem to advertise their activity in public. For no useful reason, individuals make themselves available to anyone with their cell-phone numbers. The sing-song beeping of cell phones breaks silence everywhere: In theaters, at important meetings, on the plane, in libraries, and at church services, people must remind cell-phone wearers to turn them off temporarily.

In the pre-Woodstock days, when water and air were clean, sex was considered dirty but private. The combined cultures of unrestricted sex and unlimited drugs in the '60s removed the veil from sex and ushered in the baby-boomer expression: "Make love, not war" — not only a slogan, but a creed.

Initially, such sexual expression was limited to heterosexuals. Soon, homosexuals started to "come out of the closet." Today, except in commercials, the sexual revolution has almost nothing to do with heterosexuality. As usual in America, the only interesting things are the unusual, the fringes and the outrageous. Thus the only flamboyant sexual expression today is the gay/lesbian/bisexual lifestyle. And it is an "in-your-face" kind of expression. Whereas gay men contend that they should not be judged by their sexual orientation, many go out of their way to accentuate only the sexual aspect of their identity. Sexuality has come out of private and into the public arena. With the possibility of gay marriage a subject of recent debate, sexuality is bound to remain public for a long time.

Until recently, music on car stereos was strictly for personal enjoyment. The volume and kind of music depended on an individual's taste and did not force anyone else to listen. With the introduction of subwoofers, bystanders have been subjected to the music of those driving by. Sometimes, a whole neighborhood must endure the sounds made by someone who has no concern for the area's sleeping babies. The Iowa City government, which was notably distressed by porch couches, informed me that excessive noise is against city ordinances. Yet, I have seen Iowa City police drive behind a car playing loud subwoofer music without taking any action.

The feverish competition among cell-phone manufacturers and distributors ensures that the problem will only get worse. Subwoofer installers and used-car dealers will make sure that subwoofers get bigger and louder. Because many people with subwoofers have realized that they need cars with bigger engines to support so much noise, perhaps subwoofers will rejuvenate the market for the gas-guzzlers of yesterday, and young people will suddenly discover the benefits of their grandfathers' Buicks. Maybe someday, the beauty pageants will include the gay/lesbian/bisexual. After all, it's all in the public domain. ■

Children rescued from Nigerian labor camp

BY VIRGILE AHISSOU AND GLENN MCKENZIE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

COTONOU, Benin — Their bodies scarred by beatings and their hands callused from breaking rocks, 74 boys as young as 4 received medical treatment Thursday after their rescue from Nigerian granite quarries where they were forced to work as virtual prisoners.

Following their rescue — only the second of its kind in West Africa — the children told authorities that over the previous three months at least 13 other boys died, succumbing to exhaustion, disease, hunger, and abuse, officials said.

"We would break the stones, and the men would come take them away in trucks," one boy told the Associated Press. Skinny, filthy, scratched, and heavily scarred, the boy looked no more than 10.

The children, many just high with bare chests showing white scars, hung from the windows of the buses that authorities used to return them from Nigeria to Benin, where they had been taken by traffickers and sold as child labor.

Authorities in Benin assembled the children — none older than 15 — in a soccer stadium in the capital, preparing them for the return to their families. Officials prevented reporters from questioning them in detail about their experiences.

In Nigeria, granite pit bosses buried the dead children in shallow graves near the quarries, said Kemi Olumefun, whose Nigerian women's charity helped rescue the children after receiving tips about the brutal conditions.

Child labor and labor-trafficking are common across West Africa — while mass operations to rescue the victims are extremely rare.

Under an accord signed in August, the neighboring countries are cooperating to find and return children who have been forced into grueling and dangerous labor.

The first rescue under the pact came Sept. 27, when authorities brought back 116 children who had been put to work in the granite quarries of southwest Nigeria.

Three of the children died later at a camp where Nigerian authorities brought them before repatriation, Olumefun said.

Most of the children worked at a granite quarry near Abeokuta, the hometown of Nigerian President Olusegun Obasanjo.

Intervention by the governments may stem from increased international attention to child labor, said Frans Roselaers at the International Labor Organization in Geneva. The attention includes boycott threats of Ivory Coast cocoa, often harvested with the help of trafficked children.

"We've noticed that the governments in West Africa have increased commitment to eradication of the root causes of child trafficking and labor," Roselaers said.

"They weren't that much aware or focused on it before. They felt the heat of being denounced for having unacceptable labor practices," Roselaers said.

Nigerian police believe at least 6,000 children from Benin alone still labor in the country's granite pits in the southwest.

On Thursday, Benin sent teams back across the border into Nigeria to find them, Benin Families Minister Latoundji Lauriano said.

Nigerian police returned the 74 children to Benin late Wednesday. The boys told social workers that quarry operators were gone when police arrived to free them.

In Cotonou, the port capital of Benin, social workers and health workers scrubbed the children and gave them clean clothes and injections to prevent disease.

"The children must be washed, dressed, and allowed to rest a little before social workers can start interviewing them to find their parents and return them to their families," Lauriano said.

The children's parents had put them in the hands of labor traffickers for as little as $35, said Philippe Duamelle, an official with the United Nations Children's Fund in Cotonou.

breaking stones with mallets, said Olumefun, whose group, the Women's Consortium of Nigeria, tended to the children immediately after their rescue.

Some had been working in the quarries up to four years, she said.

"They were subjected to work and very harsh conditions. You can imagine a 7-year-old boy being compelled to crush a lorry-load of gravel. They were poorly fed," Olumefun said. "And in the process, some of them fell sick and died."

Palestinians make arrests in bombing of U.S. convoy

BY JOHN WARD ANDERSON AND MOLLY MOORE
WASHINGTON POST

JERUSALEM — Palestinian police arrested several members of a small, radical group in the Gaza Strip early Thursday, and officials were questioning them about their possible involvement in the attack on a U.S. diplomatic convoy Wednesday that killed three American security guards, a Palestinian security official said.

The official, who would not agree to be quoted by name, said the suspects were members of the Popular Resistance Committees, a group of disaffected former members of larger Palestinian organizations. The group was responsible for planting massive roadside bombs in the Gaza Strip a year ago that blew up three of Israel's 60-ton Merkava tanks in separate incidents, killing seven soldiers.

The U.N.'s Middle East envoy, Terje Roed-Larsen, said it was "an ominous sign that the scope of terrorist activities is broadening" but that it was "encouraging that Palestinian security forces arrested people in Gaza today." However, he said, "it remains to be seen if they are the perpetrators."

A senior Israeli military official said that "all the lines point to the Popular Resistance Committees — they seem to be the best candidate."

The official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said the bomb used in Wednesday's attack probably contained more than 200 pounds of explosives. "This is their expertise. This is what they do all the time. These huge explosive charges come from their lines of production," he said.

The arrests came as an FBI team arrived in Israel to investigate the bombing, which was the first fatal attack on U.S. citizens since the beginning of the 3-year-old Palestinian intifada. A U.S. Embassy spokesman said the FBI agents "will work with whoever can help them investigate the incident. In practice, I think that will mean working with both sides."

The three men who were killed were private security guards from DynCorp, a military contractor in Reston, Va., hired to protect U.S. Embassy personnel when they travel into the West Bank and Gaza Strip. They were killed when their Chevy Suburban drove over a large bomb buried in the road near the Erez border crossing with Israel. A fourth security guard in the car was seriously injured.

The silver Suburban — with white diplomatic plates — was not marked but was identical to the vehicles routinely used by U.S. diplomats. As a result, many analysts have concluded that the bombing was a deliberate attack on Americans.

Several Western diplomats here said they were concerned that the attack could represent a broadening of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. A European diplomat said that all embassies and international groups would have to review their travel policies to the Palestinian territories, because "if something like that can happen to the Americans, it can happen to Europeans or anybody."

Recalling the bombing of U.N. offices in Baghdad two months ago, which killed more than 20 people, the diplomat said that "people were surprised when a bomb blew up U.N. headquarters, and everyone said, 'But they're there to help.' To some people, that doesn't matter very much, and that doesn't matter very much, and that doesn't matter very much, and that doesn't matter very much."

The Palestinian security official refused to say how many members of the Popular Resistance Committees were arrested in early morning raids in the Jebaliya refugee camp in the northern Gaza Strip. Reports by the Associated Press and Reuters put the number between three and seven. Security sources said several of the men tried to flee when police arrived, and a brief gun battle erupted.

The committees emerged shortly after the start of the intifada. Led by Jamal Abu Smahadana, the group was formed principally of castoffs and other disaffected militants previously aligned with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat's mainstream Fatah political organization, although the group also has former members of Islamic Jihad and Hamas. According to Israeli intelligence officials, some members are current and former members of the Palestinian security forces.

The senior Israeli military official said the link with Palestinian security forces suggested that Palestinian police, who operate a checkpoint on the Gaza side of the Erez crossing, may have tipped off members of the Popular Resistance Committees that the U.S. vehicles were entering the Gaza Strip.

"I have no doubt whether [the attackers] knew exactly what they were doing and knew in advance exactly what they were going to do," he said. "I am sure some people in the Palestinian police knew in advance that this car was coming. Its arrival was coordinated through the Palestinian Authority ... so there may have been some leakage from the Palestinian police."

Saeb Erekat, a senior official in the Palestinian government, said he was "sick and tired of theories" to these conspiracy theories, both from the Israeli side and from the Palestinians, "some of whom said Thursday that the bomb may have been planted by Israeli agents."

"We have an investigative committee and are fully cooperating with the American side ... so let's let the investigation speak for itself," Erekat said.

Soon after Wednesday's bombing, an anonymous caller told the Agence France-Press news service that the Popular Resistance Committees had carried out the attack. The group later released a statement denying that it had carried out the attack and denouncing the U.S. veto of a U.N. Security Council resolution Tuesday that would have condemned Israel's construction of a fence around the heart of the West Bank.

All of the major Palestinian militant groups — including Islamic Jihad, the al-Aqsa Martyrs Brigades, and Hamas — denied responsibility for the attack. In statements and interviews, officials from some of the groups said they were fighting a national and territorial campaign against Israel that did not involve the United States, even though the United States often acted in favor of Israel and against Palestinian interests.

The significance of those denials, said George Giacaman, a Palestinian political scientist, is that virtually everybody recognizes that the bombing was not in the Palestinians' interest. "There's no public support whatsoever for an operation like this," he said.

WORLD

Out of the box

LONDON (AP) — David Blaine is getting ready to leave his box.

The American magician is approaching Sunday's end to a 44-day fast-cum-vigil in a dangling plastic case.

The 30-year-old, who previously has been buried alive and encased in a block of ice, says the feat is both the hardest and "the most beautiful" thing he's done.

It has undeniably captured the imagination of Britons. Over the past six weeks, onlookers have reacted with a pungent mix of support and ridicule, while commentators puzzled over whether the stunt offered tasteless spectacle or spiritual insight.

Brian Keenan, who was held hostage in Lebanon for 4½ years, wrote in the Guardian newspaper that people were "drawn to this half-naked man hoisted in the heavens. We eat our hamburgers and ice cream in part wonder, part homage, part adoration."

The same paper's theater critic, Michael Billington, judged that "this strange public confinement ... acquires something of the unresolved ambiguity of art." But in the Independent, columnist Terence Blacker condemned the "creepy" Blaine as part of a disturbing trend toward entertainment that "tweaked the public's sadistic impulse."

ISU player suspended for second time

AMES, (AP) — Iowa State basketball player Jackson Vroman, arrested early Thursday on a drunken-driving charge, was suspended from the team for the second time in five months and his return was in question, coach Wayne Morgan said.

Vroman, a 6-10 senior, was suspended in May after being charged with possession of marijuana. That suspension, mandatory under the Athletics Department's code of conduct because it involved drugs, later was lifted.

"I can't fully express my disappointment in Jackson," Morgan said. "Jackson has let down his teammates and supporters of our basketball program. He has jeopardized his future at Iowa State University."

ISU police stopped Vroman at 2:20 a.m. Thursday after the car he was driving was seen weaving back and forth across the center line, police Capt. Gene Deisinger said. Officers also learned that the license plate on the car, owned by a passenger riding with Vroman, had expired.

Vroman failed a sobriety test at the scene but refused to take a test to determine his blood-alcohol content, Deisinger said. He was booked at the university police station, then held the rest of the night at the Story County Jail in Nevada.

Officers also charged Vroman with driving on the wrong side of the street and driving without a vehicle registration.

Depending on the length of his suspension — or if Vroman doesn't return — Iowa State could start the season without two of its top three players. Starting point guard Tim Barnes is academically ineligible for the first semester. Barnes was arrested for drunken driving and possession of marijuana in June.

A LITTLE TOO LATE

Agency says it found steroid 'conspiracy'

(AP) — Several track athletes tested positive for a steroid that until recently was undetectable and now face suspensions that could bar them from the 2004 Athens Olympics, the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency said Thursday.

Chief Executive Officer Terry Madden called it a widespread "conspiracy" involving chemists, coaches, and athletes that was brought to the agency's attention by an anonymous tip.

He said the inquiry began in June and has expanded to other U.S. professional sports, but wouldn't give specifics. He also refused to give details about the athletes or say how many tested positive for the steroid, known as tetrahydrogestrinone, or THG.

"What we have uncovered appears to be intentional doping of the worst sort," Madden said in a statement before his conference call from agency headquarters in Colorado Springs, Colo.

"Rather, this is a conspiracy involving chemists, coaches and certain athletes using what they developed to be 'undetectable' designer steroids to defraud their fellow competitors and the American and world public who pay to attend sports events."

Tale of the Tape: Iowa vs. Ohio State

BY NICK RICHARDS
THE DAILY IOWAN

Quarterback: Iowa quarterback Nathan Chandler has been steady, if unspectacular. The senior has thrown 11 TDs to just three INTs, a good ratio for a first-year starter. Ohio State senior Craig Krenzel, who is very much like Chandler, has found his play hampered by a sore elbow. Krenzel is a heady player and can hurt you with his arm and legs, much like Chandler. Whoever takes care of the ball will give his team a huge advantage.

Advantage: Push

Running Back: Fred Russell has been Iowa's catalyst so far this season, running for over 100 yards in the last three games. Russell is second in the conference in rushing, at 121.0 yards per game. He needs to have a big game for Iowa to win. The possible additions of Jermelle Lewis and Albert Young will give Iowa much-needed depth and versatility at the position. Ohio State has been weak on the ground without star running back Maurice Clarett, who was suspended for the season for multiple NCAA violations. Maurice Hall and Lydell Ross have stepped in for Clarett. Both have struggled taking the spotlight. If Hall and Ross don't pick it up and give Ohio State some sort of running game, the Buckeyes will be in trouble against a good Iowa defense.

Advantage: Iowa

Wide Receiver: Iowa will be without Mo Brown, who will miss his fourth game with an ankle injury. Ed Hinkel will return from a groin injury, which gives Iowa's offense a big boost. Ramon Ochoa and Calvin Davis must continue to make strides to take the pressure off of the running game. The X-factor could be tight end Erik Jensen, who made some big catches against Michigan. Ohio State features a set of wide receivers equal to Michigan's. They are all big and fast. Michael Jenkins has been Ohio State's best weapon offensively with 27 receptions for 389 yards and 3 TDs. Drew Carter has been a good second option, catching 16 passes for 240 yards and 1 TD. Don't forget Chris Gamble, who is still a dangerous weapon for the Ohio State offense.

Advantage: Ohio State

Offensive Line: This will be the key to the game. Iowa's offensive line did a terrific job against the Michigan D, allowing Fred Russell to go for 110 yards against a good run defense. The offense might be without starting center Brian Ferentz, who injured his knee in practice this week. The injury to Ferentz means Eric Rothwell could start at center, and true freshman Mike Jones could get significant time at guard with David Walker, who returns from injury. Ohio State's offensive line was supposed to be a strength going into the season, but it has struggled without a star running back. The group has looked slow as the team ran for

Big Ten leads weekend slate

Forget about Separation Saturday. If you haven't noticed yet, this weekend could paint a much clearer picture of the Big Ten. There are only three games this weekend that feature a ranked team versus a ranked team; all are in the Big Ten.

Let's start with the Hawkeyes. No. 9 Iowa faces No. 8 Ohio State in the BCS spotlight game of the week. Whoever loses is out of the Big Ten race; that much is obvious. But the other two games are just as important. No. 12 Wisconsin faces No. 15 Purdue. Both of those teams have yet to lose a Big Ten game. The winner will have the upper hand in the conference.

Then there is No. 18 Michigan State versus No. 19 Minnesota. Both teams have one loss in the Big Ten. The loser is destined to the Sun or Alamo Bowl, the winner may still spend New Year's in Pasadena.

So let's throw a scenario out there. It does not matter whether Wisconsin or Purdue wins; that team will control the Big Ten. Of course, that is assuming Michigan State loses. If the Spartans win, there will be a two-way tie for first. At best, after this weekend, there will only be one team atop the conference.

But the race for Pasadena could very well be even tighter than it is right now. The winner of Iowa-Ohio State will be 2-1. The loser of Wisconsin-Purdue will have one loss as well. And if Minnesota beats Michigan State, both teams will have one loss. That means either the Badgers or the Boilermakers will stand alone. We'll all also assume Michigan will slaughter Illinois.

If this occurs, there will be a five-way tie for second place. And you can bet whichever team is in first place, whether alone or in a two-way tie, it will have all the pressure on its shoulders.

But the pressure these teams feel this week may be heavier than that. The Big Ten is by far the closest race among Division I-A football. And of course, that means the conference is having yet another "down year." Sense the sarcasm.

Yankees advance in thriller

Bill Kastroun/Associated Press

The New York Yankees' Jason Giambi watches his fifth-inning solo home run off of Boston Red Sox pitcher Pedro Martinez in Game 7 of the American League Championship Series on Thursday in New York. The Yankees won, 6-5, in 11 innings.

BY RONALD BLUM

NEW YORK — Wow, what a shot!

Aaron Boone set off bedlam in the Bronx on Thursday night with a leadoff home run in the 11th inning to give the New York Yankees a 6-5 victory over the Boston Red Sox for a trip to the World Series and their 39th American League pennant.

Boone, who didn't start Game 7, homered on the first pitch from knuckleballer Tim Wakefield, who had two wins in the series and was making his first relief appearance.

The Yankees had been five outs from losing, when Jorge Posada blooped a tying two-run double off a tiring Pedro Martinez in the eighth inning.

New York will start the World Series at home on Saturday against the Florida Marlins, who beat the Chicago Cubs in a Game 7 on Wednesday night.

New York trailed 4-0 in the fourth inning and 5-2 in the eighth as Roger Clemens made an early exit in what looked to be the final game of his storied career.

But the Yankees bounced back, rekindling all those painful memories that have haunted so many Red Sox fans — thoughts of Bucky Dent, Bill Buckner, and decades of New York domination.

For the Yankees, who haven't won the World Series since 2000, this was their fifth pennant in six seasons.

These old foes played 26 times this season — a baseball first — and it went extra innings. Yet, the final words of the ultimate chapter revealed it was the same old story, one that the Red Sox perennially curse: pinstripes in the World Series, despair back in Boston.

Only the names change in the annual fight between New York and New England, never the result.

Alford relying on senior leadership

BY DONOVAN BURBA
THE DAILY IOWAN

Two seasons ago, Iowa coach Steve Alford turned to his talented seniors to lead the Hawkeyes. Things didn't quite work out as planned, as team chemistry broke down and Iowa staggered to a first-round loss in the NIT. This year, Alford again expects upperclassmen to lead — and a repeat performance seems unlikely.

"[We have] five seniors, four of whom have an enormous amount of experience," said Alford at Thursday's media day. "When you look throughout the Big Ten, I think that's the one edge that we're going to play on all year."

Glen Worley, Sean Sonderleiter, Jared Reiner, and Brody Boyd all have played extensively over the past two (and in some cases three) years, and finally emerged late last season as a cohesive unit. All four increased their scoring numbers last year, but their leadership on and off the court is another valuable asset.

"[We're] just making the younger guys understand every day that they have to go 100 percent," said Worley of his responsibilities as a senior. "It's a tough grind, but it's something that [they] have to go through."

The team's newfound depth

also should serve as motivation, particularly for underclassmen. Last year Alford generally stuck with a seven-man rotation; this year, he has 13 faces from whom to choose. While the fifth-year coach admitted his four seniors will get the most minutes, he also anticipates heavy competition for playing time.

This year is also the first in which every Hawkeye is an Alford recruit, and that's another reason he's not worried about

HAWKEYE NOTES

Lencioni, Wilkerson injured in practice

The injury bug hit the women's soccer team again this week as the Hawkeyes prepare for a road trip through Michigan for matches with Michigan and Michigan State. Iowa, which is riding an eight-game winless streak, will go into play this weekend without key reserve midfielder Natalie Lencioni and senior forward Courtney Wilkerson. Lencioni should be back for the Michigan State game, while Wilkerson is doubtful for the weekend.

"We're still fighting the adversity of injuries," said Hawk coach Carla Baker. "It seems to be kind of a never-ending thing."

Michigan has struggled so far this year, going 3-5-6, 2-2-4 in the conference. Michigan graduated eight of its top 11 players from last year's squad. The Wolverines are led by goalkeeper Megan Tuura, who has two shutouts so far this season; her 0.55 goals against average leads the Big Ten.

Michigan State, with a record of 8-6-0 and 3-5-0 in conference play, returns a strong team led by forward Tiffany Laskowski. As a team, Michigan State is fourth in the conference with 25 goals.

"Michigan is a good team that's also facing its own set of adversity because it graduated eight of 11 starters from last year," Baker said.

Iowa plays Michigan Friday at 3 p.m., then goes to Michigan State for a match on Oct. 19 at 11 a.m. The Hawkeyes will return home next week for matches with Wisconsin-Milwaukee and Northern Iowa to finish the season.

Cross-Country teams to travel to UNI meet

The Iowa men's and women's cross-country teams will travel to Cedar Falls to compete in the Pre-National Cross-Country Meet on Saturday at the Irv Warren Memorial Golf Course/Byrnes Park on the University of Northern Iowa campus. The men's 8,000-meter race will begin at 11:40 a.m., and the women's 6,000-meter race will begin at 12:55 p.m.

The men's program is ranked No. 34 in the nation and sixth in the Midwest Region by the U.S. Cross-Country Coaches Association.

The meet Saturday will consist of 75 teams from across the nation and two separate races, which will be split into competitions based on team rankings.

"Most of the top teams [in the nation] are competing in the meet," Hawkeye coach Larry Wiecek said. "The objective is to beat good teams outside our region that will eventually qualify for the NCAA championships."

Wiecek said he knows his team is capable of succeeding with the runners it has; it's a question of whether the team members believe in themselves.

"I still think we can accomplish our goals [we set at the beginning of the season]," he said.

The women's program is coming off an impressive performance at the Willamette Invitational on Oct. 4, and the team hopes to build off that as it prepares for the stretch run of the season.

Senior standout Sarah Arens will miss her second-consecutive meet this weekend because of an injury.

She had been the team's top runner

in the first two meets. However, her absence has coincided with the arrival of true freshman Nikki Chapple of Melbourne, Australia, who was the top Hawkeye at the Willamette Invitational.

Anderson knows the team will need to run its best race.

"We've looked good in training, and we are prepared to run our best," he said.

Iowa women to start season at home

The Iowa women's swimming team kicks off its season on Saturday, when the Hawkeyes host Kansas and Northern Iowa. The meet will start at 2 p.m. at the Field House swimming pool; it is the first of four events the school will host this season.

Coach Garland O'Keeffe, who is starting her third season as the Hawk coach, has compiled a career record of 18-16, including 6-12 in the Big Ten. Last season, Iowa finished eighth at the Big Ten championships, and two members return with All-American honors — diver Lisette Planken and swimmer Jennifer Skolaski.

The program looks to build off its success of last year, and the team is eager to get the season underway.

"We're all very excited about this meet," O'Keeffe said. "Everyone is ready to get started, even though it is a week earlier than usual. There's going to be a lot of good competition there on Saturday, so it should be fun."

Opinion on Buckeyes' offensive offense

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Everyone's got an opinion on why Ohio State's offense is so offensive.

Some think it's a matter of putting everything together.

"We're still kind of trying to find that niche where we get that chemistry going and we keep the defense off the field and get some sustained drives," receiver Michael Jenkins said.

Some think it is nothing in particular.

"I don't think there is any one aspect of the offense you can point to and say, 'No problem,'" quarterback Craig Krenzel said.

And coach Jim Tressel believes it comes down to matching talent with aptitude.

"We're trying to find out what it is that we're best suited for from the personnel we have playing," he said.

The Buckeyes' inefficiency and ineptitude on offense finally caught up with them last Saturday in a 17-10 loss at Wisconsin. It's a problem that must be addressed before the No. 8 Buckeyes' game Saturday against No. 9 Iowa. Both teams are 5-1 overall and 1-1 in the Big Ten.

Ohio State has failed to score 21 points in nine of Tressel's 32 games. His conservative approach paid big dividends last season with an active and aggressive defense that frequently supplied big touchdowns or great field position.

Chicago Cubs left fielder Moises Alou reacts after reaching into the stands unsuccessfully for a foul ball hits by the Florida Marlins in the eighth inning during Game 6 of the National League championship series on Tuesday at Wrigley Field in Chicago. Cubs were unable to get a fan interference call. Some fans blame that play for the Cubs' loss that evening. The Marlins went on to win Game 7 on Thursday in Chicago.

Cubs — bewitched, bothered & be-goated

ANOTHER BASEBALL AUTUMN CAME AND WENT TOO SOON

BY JIM LITKE
AP SPORTS COLUMNIST

CHICAGO (AP) — Wait till next year, around the middle of January, when a foot of snow has cooled tempers and covered the wounds, and 15,000 people in the same shade of blue gather in a downtown hotel ballroom.

Wait till next year, when all they will want to talk about are the Cubbies.

But not now.

Not with the memory of coming so close still so fresh. Not with the patches of red and brown peeking through the faded green ivy on Wrigley Field's outfield walls reminding them of yet another baseball autumn that came and went too soon.

Thousands more wandered aimlessly up and down Clark Street, pausing to gaze at the televisions inside the bars. But all of them knew no amount of staring was going to change the news: Marlins 9, Cubs 6 in a Game 7 that never should have been necessary.

There were 39,574 witnesses inside the park — three fewer than the night before, one of them a 26-year-old youth baseball coach who tried to catch a foul ball and inadvertently unleashed the mother of all curses on a franchise that already endured a century's worth.

Even the manager who told his ballplayers all season to unlearn that history and ignore all those heartaches was feeling the weight of them now.

"You're always disappointed when you get that close," Dusty Baker said. "But that's how life is, sometimes. It doesn't always go your way. A lot of things went our way this year.

"It just didn't go our way at the end."

It's the same lesson that binds generation after generation of Cubs players to one another, from Hack Wilson to Ernie Banks to current ace Mark Prior, and all of them to their fans.

Prior got his first real taste of how deep that shade of Cubby blue courses in the veins of the city last January at the Cubs' annual winter convention.

The 23-year-old, who grew up in San Diego, slogged through the snow and freezing temperatures to make an appearance and couldn't believe the size of the crowd and the warmth he found inside.

He recalled that moment earlier this week, the day before he started Game 6 with the Cubs ahead, 3-2. He had a chance to propel them into the World Series for the first time in 58 years.

"Being a Cubs fan," Prior said, "has, I guess, been tough throughout the years."

But as it turned out, his education was just beginning.

Carrying a 3-0 lead into the eighth inning and just five outs from the clinching victory, Luis Castillo hit a foul ball down the left-field line that a fan named Steve Bartman tried to snare. He beat Cubs outfielder Moises Alou to the ball by a fraction of a second, but it turned out all the opening the Marlins would need.

Florida rallied for eight runs in the inning, setting up Wednesday night's showdown. A shaking city tried to calm itself most of the day by balancing all the talk about curses with the name of the pitcher who would take the mound: Kerry Wood.

Wood, after all, had never lost to the Marlins, and better still, he'd already won one sudden-death ball game this month, taking out the Braves in Game 5 of the division series.

Not just that — Prior and Wood had followed one another in the Chicago rotation 17 times over the last two seasons, and the Cubs lost both games exactly once.

Being the Cubs, of course, it happened a second time in the most important game the team played in six decades.

"We came here down 3-1 against their two best pitchers, maybe two of the best pitchers in the National League," Florida's Jeff Conine said. "And we beat them both the last two days. We shocked everybody."

Everybody except Cubs fans. Hundreds lingered in the old ballpark long after the final out, applauding the team that had taken them along on another thrilling ride, even though it ended at an all-too-familiar dead end.

At the end of Row 9 down along the left-field line, a 27-year-old lifelong Cub fan named Matt Dunham sat in the fateful seat where a night earlier Bartman, another lifelong Cubs fan, wrote a new chapter in the team's long and sorry saga.

"I was devastated watching last night," Dunham said. "It was the first time I ever gave credence to the curse in my life."

The curse he was talking about wasn't Bartman, but the one he replaced. In 1945, tavern owner William Sianis put a hex on the Cubs when he and his goat were turned away from a World Series game that year. The Cubs, ahead two games to one at the time, lost the Series and haven't made it to another one since.

After the Marlins made certain of that, someone asked 72-year-old manager Jack McKeon, who attends church every day no matter what town he's in, whether the Lord was looking out for the Cubs.

"He," McKeon said with a soulful pause, "is probably trying to find that goat."

This being Chicago, he shouldn't have much trouble rounding up help.

Cub fans curse latest disappointment

BY DON BABWIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago Cubs manager Dusty Baker insists there's no curse on his team.

But 75-year-old Dorothy Stott has been around a lot longer than Baker, and her memory goes back further than Tuesday night, when a fan's hands got between Moises Alou's glove and a fly ball with the Cubs five outs from making it to the World Series.

She can tell you about the ground ball that rolled through Leon Durham's legs in 1984 and took the Cubs' hopes of getting to the World Series with it. Or the way the Cubs took an insurmountable lead in the 1969 pennant race and, well, surmounted it.

And she knows all that happened after a local tavern owner put a curse on the team in 1945 when he was not allowed to bring his pet goat into Wrigley Field during what turned out to be the last World Series the Cubs ever played.

"I never thought of a curse, but I always said they had bad luck," said Stott, who lives a few blocks from Wrigley. "Bad luck is a curse, so, yeah, there really must be something."

Others think so, too.

"I think they're somehow jinxed, I really do," said Ian Mulford, 42, who took his 11-year-old son, David, to Wrigley on Wednesday night when the Cubs lost to the Florida Marlins, 9-6, in the final game of the NL championship series. "Something keeps cropping up and something keeps happening to them."

For her part, Mari Merrell, 30, of Aurora said this year's strange event came during the eighth inning of the sixth game, when fan Steve Bartman deflected a ball that Alou was about to catch for the second out of the inning.

"The billy goat is gone," she said. "Now we have the curse of the moron."

Many fans, though, said the failure to win the NL series after taking a commanding 3-games-to-1 lead — or to win the sixth game after taking a 3-0 lead into the eighth inning Tuesday night — had nothing to do with a real goat.

Nor, they said, did it have anything to do with Bartman, who was vilified by some Cubs fans after he deflected the ball.

"It seems like that was just one little small thing," said Vern Lemke of Plainfield, who was at Wednesday night's game.

only 69 yards against Wisconsin. Ohio State is averaging only 117.5 yards per game, tenth in the conference.

Advantage: Iowa

Defensive Line: Both teams feature good defensive lines. Iowa is led by ends Matt Roth and Howard Hodges. Roth leads the conference in sacks with 6.5, while Hodges is tied for fifth with five. Jonathan Babineaux and Jared Clauss have given Iowa two good run-stuffers up the middle. Iowa is allowing only 82.5 yards per game on the ground, fourth in the conference. Ohio State is led by All-American end Will Smith. Darrion Scott and Tim Anderson anchor the middle. Anderson is an Outland Award candidate, while Scott is a Lombardi candidate. Ohio State is allowing only a conference and nation-best 59.7 yards per game on the ground. However, the unit looked extremely vulnerable against Wisconsin, who gained 141 yards on the ground without star back Anthony Davis.

Advantage: Push

Linebackers: Iowa has the best group of linebackers in the conference. Chad Greenway and Abdul Hodge are first and third in the conference in tackles per game at 11.3 and 10.3 respectively. One can't forget Grant Steen, who is solid against both the run and the pass. Ohio State had to replace two linebackers going into the year, and the third, Robert Reynolds, will not play this week after the choking incident against Wisconsin quarterback Jim Sorgi. Ohio State is led by sophomore A.J. Hawk, who is fourth in the conference with 9.7

tackles per game. The unit will have to pick up the slack to stop Iowa's running attack.

Advantage: Iowa

Defensive Backs: Iowa's defensive backfield was torched by Michigan, but part of that was due to the fact that Jovon Johnson and Ma'Quan Dawkins went down to injury. Johnson will be back against Ohio State, but Dawkins is likely done for the year with knee trouble. The unit as a whole will have to step up, or Ohio State's big receivers could have a field day. Chris Gamble leads an Ohio State secondary that has improved over last year's unit. Ohio State is giving up 217.7 yards per game through the air. Gamble shuts down one side of the field. Ohio State is green at safety where Will Allen and Nate Salley are first-year starters. Allen was Ohio State's third defensive back last year, and has two interceptions this year. His picks have come at the right time for OSU. He returned one pick 100 yards for a touchdown against San Diego State, and intercepted Bowling Green's last pass in Ohio State narrow 24-17 win.

Advantage: Ohio State

Special Teams: Ohio State might be the one team in the conference with special teams equal to Iowa's. The game could come down to who plays the best special teams. Nate Kaeding and David Bradley are countered by Mike Nugent and B.J. Sander. Kaeding won the Groza Award last year while Nugent was a finalist. Kaeding is 8-8 on field goals this year, while Nugent is 8-9. The game could come down to field position. Sander is averaging 43.1 yards per punt, good for third in the conference. Bradley is averaging 41.7 per kick, sixth in the conference.

'Down year' in Big Ten? Not if you've been watching

What isn't understandable is why most people think the Big Ten is subpar, simply because there isn't a clear-cut winner. There isn't a national-championship probable. There isn't a team in the Big Ten that would dominate most teams in the nation. If that makes for a "down year," then who knows what makes for exciting football.

There is no other conference that can come close to matching the drama of the Big Ten. Hopefully, this weekend will open the eyes of the nation to what college football is all about. It's not about being No. 1. It's not about being able to beat Miami. It's not about winning the Heisman. It's about winning your conference, taking the bragging rights away from decade-long rivals, and knowing that Iowa can beat Michigan, Ohio State, and anyone else that may stand in the way of a back-to-back Big Ten championship.

It seems, these days, dominant teams are all too concerned about winning a national championship. Understandable. But those teams seemed to have lost the pride of winning their conference. Maybe it's because they have become accustomed to winning so many. Maybe a conference championship is just not enough.

No team in the Big Ten, in my opinion, has ever taken the conference championship for anything less than what it is. Especially Iowa.

So don't even mention bowl games now. Don't mention Heisman talk. And come Monday, don't even come close to getting excited about the BCS rankings. There is still a month and a half of incredible Big Ten football. And it all starts Saturday.

Hawkeyes deeper than last year

an implosion of team chemistry. "We built relationships in recruiting with all these guys. The 14 guys that we have on our team now, they're all guys we recruited, and not just recruited, but built relationships with them from their junior year [in high school] on," Alford said. "I think that makes a big difference. They understand our system, they understand the coaching staff, [and] they understand what we want done on and off the floor."

Iowa's depth manifests itself most in the backcourt, where Pierre Pierce, back after red-shirting last year (see related story), joins Boyd, Jeff Horner, and newcomers Mike Henderson and Ben Rand. Those five must fill the void left by last year's scoring leader, Chauncey Leslie, who contributed 15.8 points per game. The depth also means Iowa will have fresh legs down the stretch, where the Hawkeyes struggled last year.

"I really feel that towards the end of the game [the depth] is going to help out a lot because you're not going to be playing 40 minutes a game like we did last year," said Horner, whose 140 assists in 2002-03 set a freshman school record. "To have Mike Henderson come in, he and Pierre are going to be able to use the dribble-drive to get a lot more open shots."

Alford refused to name a starting lineup, noting that there's still plenty of time for things to change before the team's regular-season opener on Nov. 23 against UNC-Asheville.

Top 10 story lines

1) How improved will the team be?

The Hawkeyes should have a much deeper bench this season. The addition of Nick DeWitz, Mike Henderson, and Ben Rand along with the return of Pierre Pierce and Ereik Hansen should make this Iowa attack more potent. If they make the transition into the program smoothly, a bevy of wins could follow.

2) The Pierre Pierce situation

Remember Michigan State fans chanting "99 bottles of beer on the wall" at Brody Boyd in Lansing? That was in reference to a mere drinking violation. Fans at opposing Big Ten venues are sure to be more vicious in their treatment of Pierce, who was accused of sexual assault last fall. Whether Iowa fans as a whole accept Pierce's return with open arms still remains to be seen.

3) Is Alford on the hot seat?

According to some preseason publications, the Hawkeye boss is under the microscope this season. After a two-year absence from the NCAA Tournament, fans are getting restless. Alford's squads have never finished better than 7-9 in Big Ten play. He addressed his job security at media day, openly saying "the seat has never felt cool to me" due to the fact coaches make increasingly large salaries these days, which heightens expectations.

4) Can the seniors step up?

Four's first recruiting class at Iowa — Jared Reiner, Boyd, Glen Worley, and Sean Sonderleiter — return for their final campaigns in the Black and Gold. Reiner must be more aggressive offensively, Worley must prove he can stay on the floor for 30-plus minutes, and Boyd and Sonderleiter must provide energy off the bench. How this group fares could determine the Hawkeyes' fate this year.

5) Fresh off a trip to Australia

After flying to Australia for a five-game tour over the summer, the Hawkeyes came back with an improved sense of confidence after going 4-1. Pierce looked to have regained his pre-layoff form, leading the squad with an average of 20.8 points a game while shooting nearly 51 percent from the field. Jeff Horner, Boyd, Reiner, and Worley all looked strong as well, as each averaged over 12 points per game on the trip.

6) Who can replace Chauncey Leslie as a scorer?

Pierce looks to be the first option, coming off his stellar showing in Australia. His slashing style should help ease the loss of Chauncey Leslie, who garnered many points on drives to the basket. Horner's expected to step up his point production, a weakness a year ago. His pedigree as a prolific high-school scorer suggests Horner's a better shooter than he showed last year. Worley and Reiner will also need to shoulder a larger load on the offensive end than last year, when they averaged 10.9 and 9.7 points respectively.

7) Can Glen Worley quit teasing fans?

Worley endured a roller-coaster year in 2002-03, as he showed flashes of brilliance on occasion, such as against Michigan State Jan. 1, when he tallied 29 points. He was often saddled by foul trouble; however, fouling out on 12 separate occasions.

8) How will conference slate tough non-conference slate?

The Hawkeyes' non conference slate reads like a who's who of college coaching. Matches with Louisville in Indianapolis Nov. 29, Texas Tech Dec. 22, and at Missouri Jan. 3 may decide the Hawkeyes' post-season fate. Even with losses versus these foes, Iowa's RPI would get a boost.

9) Alford-Davis, Round 1

The two speak highly of each other, but this could become a huge rivalry. Davis has enlivened Drake's fan base in Des Moines, and Alford won't want to lose in-state recruits due to losses to Davis, the Black and Gold's all-time winningest coach. Round one of this highly anticipated bout comes Nov. 22 at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

10) Can the Hawkeyes heat up from the outside?

A year ago, the Hawkeyes shot 29 percent from 3-point land, which was last in the Big Ten. Boyd worked hard in the off-season to improve on his 30.9 percentage from a year ago, and the effort looks to have paid off, as he shot 45.2 percent on 3-point goals in Australia. Horner also shot lights-out down under, hitting 50 percent of his 3's. Henderson should help in this department as well.

Welcome to the big time

Iowa Mens' basketball season has begun

BY KELLY BEATON
THE DAILY IOWAN

Mike Henderson sighed, put his hands to his face, and looked to the heavens flashing a smile straight out of a Colgate commercial.

"I can't even think right now," said the exasperated freshman with a laugh.

Welcome to the Big Ten, rookie Henderson and three other newcomers to the Black and Gold got their initiation into life as Division-I basketball players amid a barrage of questions from the mass of huddled writers, reporters, and T.V. crews at the Iowa men's basketball media day Thursday at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

Despite admitting to being a bit flustered after answering two hours' worth of questions, throughout most of the day Henderson, along with fellow first-year Hawkeye Ben Rand, displayed an air of self-assuredness notably absent from most freshmen.

"They're so competitive, and that's what I like," said Iowa coach Steve Alford. "They carry themselves with good confidence. They don't look like freshmen. They look like guys that have been here a few years."

Indeed, the two freshmen looked like they can more than withstand the rigors of Big Ten play already. Henderson is a sculpted, 6-2, 190 pounds, Rand, a towering 6-6 gunner with the steely gaze of a player who doesn't look like he'll shy away from many big shots.

"That's something you usually have to battle as a freshman is 'You're too small, or too thin, or too weak,'" said Alford. "These guys have good body makeup to them."

Henderson, a Waterloo-native, said after a summer of hard work in the Iowa weight room, "I'm really pumped; this is something I've been looking forward to for a long time," he said.

"I came in earlier this summer, and Bill Maxwell really got me on the weights," said the former Waterloo East Trojan. "I feel pretty solid right now."

Rand has the frame to shoot over defenders, and he is a player who can flourish in Iowa's motion offense, according to Alford.

"This system is going to be great for me. It's a lot of catch-and-shoot, a lot of coming off screens," said Rand, who averaged 23.5 points per game as a senior at Rochelle (Ill.) High School. "I think it's a great system for making shooting guards successful."

Two other Hawkeyes will earn their first playing-time at Iowa this season, Nick DeWitz, a sophomore transfer from Utah Valley State Community College, and Ereik Hansen, who's returning to Iowa City after a one-year stint at Kirkwood in Cedar Rapids. The two should offer Iowa valuable size in the front-court.

They're so competitive, and that's what I like. They carry themselves with good confidence. They don't look like freshmen, they look like guys that have been here a few years.

Steve Alford
Iowa coach

"Nick gives us something we haven't had, and that's a [big] shooting guard that can play inside and outside," said Alford.

DeWitz comes to Iowa City as a highly regarded transfer who was nominated for the McDonald's All-American team as a senior at Dobson High in Mesa, Ariz. "I try to be as versatile as I can be. I think shooting is one of my strengths, being 6-8," said DeWitz, who averaged 10.4 points per game on the Hawkeyes' summer tour in Australia.

While DeWitz offers a new-found option of a lengthy player who can score from anywhere on the court, Hansen brings a defensive presence the Hawkeyes have lacked in previous years, according to Alford.

"He had a great experience at Kirkwood. He set all sorts of single season shot blocker," said the fifth-year Iowa coach. "Like DeWitz, he gives us something we haven't had, which is a shot blocker. He runs the floor very well. He can really ignite a lot of fast break opportunities for us with his shot blocking presence."

If these newcomers need advice for how to handle being thrown into the Big Ten fire, they need look no further than sophomore Jeff Horner, who played serious minutes as a true freshman last season, starting all 31 games.

"They're going to have rough spots this season; everybody goes through it," said the 6-3 guard, who logged an average of over 35 minutes per game a year ago. "They need to keep their heads up because one time or another, everybody's going to go through a slump, and we need to be there for each other to help each other through it."

While the elder statesmen on this Iowa outfit are quick to lend a helpful hand to their less experienced teammates, senior center Jared Reiner said they make sure to show the new guys who's running the show as well.

"They carry our bags when we travel, that's about it," said Reiner. Then, with a smirk, he jokingly addressed the Hawkeyes' hierarchy. "They don't even need to ask. They know who's boss."

The other battle on the court

Technically, Iowa begins the regular season on Nov. 23 at home against UNC-Asheville, but for one Hawkeye, the biggest test comes six days later. On that day, Pierre Pierce will take the court in front of opposing fans for the first time since pleading guilty to assault causing injury in November 2002. How the guard will play is uncertain; that he will be attacked mercilessly by enemy fans is a given.

College basketball fans, in particular students, are notorious for attacking opposing players for the smallest of transgressions. Iowa's Brody Boyd and Sean Sonderleiter were the subjects of derisive chants last season after run-ins with the law involving alcohol and marijuana, respectively. Never mind in both cases the actual player's involvement was questionable — such subtleties matter little to fans when they smell blood in the water.

Now Big Ten students have the ultimate target: an accused rapist. Again, it doesn't matter that Pierce pled guilty to a lesser charge; the stigma of sexual assault will hang over his head for his entire Iowa career. But the Westmont, Ill., native, no doubt knows this, and while he can't stop the heckling fans, he can learn to ignore them.

"[Rude fans] are something you've got to deal with playing basketball as it is," the sophomore said. "You can't really control what fans have to say. You just have to go out there and let your game talk."

Any player knows that the best way to silence critics is to play well, and Pierce, who averaged 7.1 points per game as a freshman, believes he's better than he was two years ago. He spent his redshirt year working out and practicing with the team, and this summer he played in the Prime Time League in North Liberty. But the biggest sign of improvement came when the Hawkeyes traveled to Australia in August. Playing against older, more experienced foes, the 6-4 Pierce averaged 20.8 points and 4.8 rebounds per game.

Before he could travel to Oz, though, Pierce had to complete the 200 hours of community service that came with his plea bargain. He worked with the Salvation Army in Iowa City, an experience he says he was glad to do. But the whole sordid affair helped Pierce help himself, too.

"The situation is unfortunate that it happened, it's a situation that I'll never forget, and I think I've learned and matured better as a person and through all of this," said Pierce. He credited his teammates, coaches, and fans with supporting him through the tough times, and the feeling is mutual.

"God knows he could have just left us and said negative things about us, but he was with us on the road and when we were here, always encouraging us in practice," said teammate Glen Worley. "He was here every day. The only thing different was when we stepped through that tunnel, he wasn't there."

Now when Pierce comes out of the tunnel, even at Carver-Hawkeye Arena, he'll be wearing a big bull's-eye on his back. How he reacts may very well dictate the direction in which Iowa's season goes. For the moment, anyway, he's got no worries.

"[We're] going into Illinois, Michigan State, and Michigan," he said. "If you're concerned with what's going on in the stands, I don't think you're in the right sport."

PART 7 OF 7-PART SERIES

Ice Hawks: the frozen chosen

BY JUSTIN KENNY
THE DAILY IOWAN

The Coral Ridge Ice Arena entertains more than just novice ice skaters and would-be Oksana Baiuls. Four months out of the year, the rink forgets its somber, non-threatening identity and becomes a hard-nosed surface of slapshots and shoulder checks.

Welcome to the world of the Iowa Ice Hawks — a little-known but highly motivated hockey club that boasts a 21-member roster including representatives from Iowa, Illinois, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Florida.

All players are current students at the University of Iowa (a requirement to be in the club), pay their $500 a year dues, and give up a large majority of their weekends to play the game they love while proving to everyone that college-level hockey does exist here in the state of Iowa.

According to coach Larry Bloom, a former and founding member of the club, the Ice Hawks got started in the mid to late-70s. A group of local hockey enthusiasts got together, collected money, and traveled around playing teams from Grinnell, Wartburg, Illinois State, and Bradley College.

With no professional rink, the team was forced to travel everywhere they played while holding practices at the pond located near Hancker and Park Road.

The club, however, did not become officially recognized by the UI until about 20 years ago when they began receiving assistance from the Student Government and Recreational Services.

They've certainly come a long way since then, joining the ranks of the ACHA (American College Hockey Association), jumping from Division III to Division II, and contracting their own ice arena for league games.

And the Ice Hawks aren't done yet.

Recreational Services coordinator Ray Beemer said the Ice Hawks received $1,350 from Rec. Services this year. UI Student Government also aids club sports like the Ice Hawks.

Although the money the team receives annually from Student Government and Rec. Services is appreciated, Bloom believes that with more and better community and university support, the sky is the limit for the Ice Hawks.

He says the club is really "shooting for D-I status" and indicated that financing is the only thing holding the Hawks back.

Without the opportunity to travel extensively and play in higher-quality tournaments, the team has been unable to play the upper-level clubs consistently, which has hindered them from earning the coveted D-I status.

Senior player and coach Peter Strauch said he has watched the interest and talent level rise immensely in recent years and would like to see this trend continue.

However, he stressed that he is a little bit frustrated at times by the lack of knowledge about the Ice Hawks around campus.

"We'd really like to go full university status, but no one knows who we are," senior goalie Kevin Harter said.

"I went into The Den last week and asked if they had any Iowa hockey hats, and the guy goes, 'Iowa has a hockey team?'"

The team gears up every year in late September with tryouts. Games start up in early October and come to close around the first week of February. This fall was no exception; the Hawkeyes faced off with DePaul on Oct. 3.

The team practices together Wednesday nights at the Coral Ridge Ice Arena.

Ice Hawks Fast Facts

Requirements to be in club:

- Must be a UI student
- Pay $500 yearly dues
- Sacrifice numerous weekends

Fast facts:

- Ice Hawks started in the late-70s
- Club officially recognized by UI in 1980s
- Ice Hawks receive only $1,350 from Recreational Services

To get involved:

- Contact Mick Coleman, club president, 561-271-5729 or Larry Bloom, 214-926-1440
- www.uiowa.edu/~icehawks

In addition to the regular slate of games this year, the team has also tentatively scheduled a doubleheader with the Iowa State junior varsity club at the Cedar Rapids Ice Arena on Jan. 30-31, 2004.

Bloom plans to make this a paid attendance game and hopes it will give both clubs an opportunity to showcase their talents and get the Ice Hawk name out.

Anyone interested in becoming involved with the Ice Hawks may contact Mike Coleman, the club president, at 561-271-5729 or michael-coleman@uiowa.edu. Larry Bloom, the coach and coordinator of business affairs, can be reached at 214-926-1440 or via his e-mail, larryebloom@comcast.net. In addition, the Ice Hawks' Web site, www.uiowa.edu/~icehawks, includes their current roster, schedule, and team links.

horoscopes

Friday, October 17, 2003

by Eugenia Last

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You will be in a restless mood. You will want to avoid any trouble that may be brewing at home. Expect an older family member to be a bit of a burden.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Travel to reunite with friends or relatives. Everyone will appreciate your kind gestures and will share secret information with you that will be valuable at a later date.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Get your thoughts down on paper today. You will have some very clever ideas that could lead to profits. Focusing on work and on networking will pay off.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Proceed down new avenues that will better satisfy your needs. You may have to make some changes to your living arrangements if someone does not agree with the choices you are making. Do what's best for you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You can make money with property deals or investments that do not involve other people. Refusing to talk about a personal problem will only lead to greater trouble. Clear the air.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Introduce yourself to new people who are attending the same function you are. Your openness and honesty will be refreshing and partnerships can be formed.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Don't waste your time trying to persuade others to do things that interest you. Follow your own path. This is a perfect day to socialize with people who share your thoughts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): This is a great day for love. If you are single, you will soon find someone you relate to. If you are in a relationship, take time to nurture what you've got.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Don't be fooled by a fast talker who wants you to engage in a joint financial venture. Don't intervene in someone else's affairs, or it may end up costing you in more ways than one.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An opportunity to make money or a career move is apparent, but it will require some concessions. Relationships with people who are much younger or older will open your eyes to a new way of doing things.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Make some alterations in your direction. If you aren't happy about your current position, it is up to you to initiate change. Focus on your monetary goals.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You will be able to fulfill your dreams if you turn your attention to hobbies and creative endeavors. Your restlessness can be what propels you to make positive changes.

Who's got the better defense: Iowa or OSU?

Legendary Paul Bryant once let a young coach by the name of Hayden Fry in on the secret to winning football games. He told the Texas native that if you have solid defense, the worst you can come out with is a tie. Both Iowa and Ohio State have relied heavily on their defensive units the past two years, but it's the Black and Gold's that has been more valuable.

The two schools' statistics are nearly mirror images. The Hawkeyes surrender 37.5 yards more per game but hold opponents to 2.4 points less. The Buckeyes have possibly the most impressive run defense in the nation, allowing fewer than 60 yards a game, and they have forced 14 turnovers. Yes, Ohio State does have a slight statistical advantage, but then again I value stats as much as Rush Limbaugh does Black History Month.

I put much higher value on big-game performance and coming through in the clutch. Ohio State lacks in this category significantly, while Iowa has been potent. When Miami (Ohio) and its Heisman-hopeful quarterback Bo Roethlisberger came into town, fans fretted over his arm. He was picked four times in the game and didn't get his team into the end zone.

When the Buckeyes played their first real game last week against Wisconsin — they couldn't pull out a win. The Badgers were even without top running back Anthony Davis, and starting quarterback Jim Sogi left in the third quarter after a defensive player blatantly choked him after a play.

The Hawkeyes arguably have the two hottest linebacker commodities in the conference in super sophomores Chad Greenway and Abdul Hodge. The tandem rank first and second in the Big Ten in tackles, respectively, and give the Hawkeyes speed and talent at the position that the school has never seen before.

Iowa may give up yards, and it may give up some points now and then, but the Hawkeyes are gamers. They use the "bend, don't break" mentality to perfection by playing aggressive, in-your-face football. When the schools step on the field Saturday, Iowa's fence will prove to be the sturdiest.

— by Jason Brummond

Despite losing to Lee Evans and Wisconsin on a 79-yard touchdown pass, and losing loads of talent from last year, Ohio State still has the best defense in the conference.

Is there ever a year when the Buckeyes don't have a ton of talent on defense? Ohio State is strong overall, which happens because two new safeties and linebackers are broken in every year. The Buckeyes rank first in the conference in total defense with 277.3 yards per game — good for 10th in the country. They allow 15.7 points per game, third in the conference, 2.4 points behind Iowa.

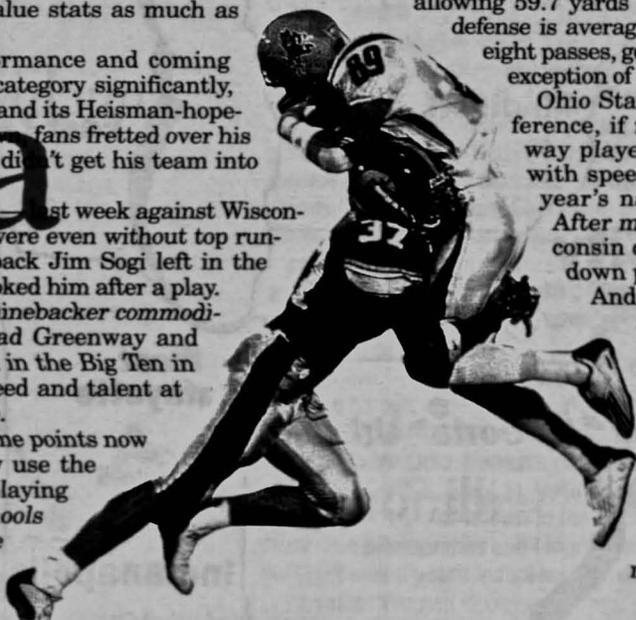

The heart of the defense is the run. The Buckeyes lead the conference, allowing 59.7 yards per game. While Ohio State's pass defense and efficiency defense is average, so is Iowa's. However, OSU is tough, having intercepted eight passes, good for third in the conference. All of those numbers, with the exception of pass-efficiency defense, are equal to or better than Iowa's.

Ohio State's defense features some of the top players in the conference, if not the nation. The defense starts with the best three-way player in the country, O. J. Gamble, a shutdown corner with speed and strength. He learned to play defense during last year's national title run, reaping on instinct and athleticism. After mastering it, he can shut down one side of the field. Wisconsin didn't even throw to Gamble's side until the long touchdown pass to Evans.

And Gamble is just the start. Will Smith, a preseason All-American, ranks fourth in the conference with 5.5 sacks. Will Allen and teammate A.J. Hawk are tied for sixth in the conference with 2 interceptions each. Hawk is fourth in the conference in tackles.

If it hadn't been for a sound defense, Ohio State wouldn't have won 19-consecutive games and the national title. Its offense wouldn't have allowed it. Until Wisconsin's game-winner in Madison, Ohio State's defense made the big plays when it had to. My head and heart say Iowa has the better defensive unit, but the numbers point toward the Buckeyes.

We all know Maurice Clarett won't be in the Buckeye Scarlet and Gray this Saturday (not to say the Hawkeye defense wouldn't be up for the challenge). But keeping the guy's accomplishments and current situation in What screams youth more than a good old, flaming bag of poop? Answer: nothin'. All you need for this stinky prankster classic is a paper bag, preferably brown, and a properly digested meal, hopefully high in fiber. Just fill 'er up, twist the top, leaving a little opening for some air, and get to flaming. Obviously, Urbana is full of the perfect flaming poop bag recipients, but if the mind draws a blank, here's an idea: Jon Andrew Beutjer of Savoy, Ill., right next to Urbana. Driving around and finding the spot should also provide ample opportunity to prepare the brown bag.

PEORIA

On the way to Columbus: Enjoying the good, sensible fun of Halloween inside a zoo makes for the perfect celebration of childhood. The Hall-Zoo-Ween at Glen Oak Zoo (309-686-3365) is open on Friday from 5:30-8:30 p.m. In addition to walking the Haunted Trail and going through a "spooky" maze, there will also be storytellers, magicians, and clowns. Although the description leaves out beer bong, which implies they should be brought by the revelers, there will be carnival rides, food, and complimentary candy.

On the way back from Columbus: Those crazy Uhlmans are at it again. On Sunday, from 11 a.m. until dusk, there will be a Punkin' Chuckin' contest at Uhlman's Pumpkin Farm between Pekin and Morton, Ill. Whether participating or checking out the hardware, which includes hydraulic pumps and huge slingshots, this will provide the perfect opportunity to mix the intellectual and the childish. See physics, mechanical engineering, and a little bit of calculus hurl whole pumpkins from here to splatsville.

COLUMBUS

Extra Tidbits ... The first person to ever be referred to as a Buckeye was Col. Ebenezer Sproat in 1788. Sproat, a 6-4 man of "large girth and swashbuckling mannerisms," led a legal delegation at the first court session in the Northwest Territory of Marietta. The Indians, impressed by his stature and manner, shouted "Hetuck, Hetuck," which meant Buckeye.

Besides the game On Outkast's The Below, André 3000 wants to know what club all the good girls are at. The sentiment is also the same as when the Prince of Zamunda from Coming To America, Akeem Jafir (played by the same actor of Joe, the policeman from the "What's Going Down" episode of "That's My Momma," as well as Randy Watson of Sexual Chocolate) asks Clarence, the barbershop owner, where he can find a good, clean girl. Clarence's answer: "a church, there's definitely good girls at the church, or, at a library, or this place I'm going tonight, the Miss Black Awareness Pageant" is one long answer. The wise barber, once punched in the stomach by "Dr. Martin Luther the King," forgot to mention the Ohio Women's Hall of Fame. The spot at 145 S. Front St. features some of the tallest shorties known to the Buckeye State. See photographs and biographies of the most recent year's inductees, as well as a video "Women in Ohio's History."

What is a Buckeye? A small, shiny, dark brown nut with a light tan patch that comes from the official state tree of Ohio.

Bars, Hotels, and Tickets It's Homecoming, so don't expect to get a place to stay unless you've already reserved it or, like Col. Sproat, you're a person of large girth and swashbuckling mannerisms. Dayton, Ohio, is approximately 40 miles away, so consider getting a place there on your way into Columbus.

Parking and Tailgating Pay attention to temporary traffic signs as the police tend to make two-way roads into one-ways for game days. There is plenty-o-parking around the Horseshoe, 14 public lots in all, each charge $10 per automobile.

INDIANAPOLIS

If the kid in you is getting too rambunctious and the adult too concerned with time and gas mileage, check out the NCAA Hall of Champions in downtown Indianapolis. There are two events taking place, and both move nicely along the naive-to-enlightened axis. The first, "Gridiron 101," runs from 9-10:30 a.m. The other event is the "Taste of Tailgating Chef Series" from 11 a.m.-1 p.m. To stuff thy face to incapacity is human; to season and marinade is divine. The RCA Dome, Conseco Field House, mall, State Museum, and National Institute for Fitness and Sport are all downtown, so have fun and, as always, learn.

IF ONLY THIS WERE TRUE

BRIAN TRIPLETT
Sportswriter

The debate of whether Ohio State would have remained undefeated had it faced Iowa last season can only be settled in the minds of those who care to reflect on the matter, but had this extremely fictitious account that is intended only for entertainment purposes taken place, it would have put the argument to rest.

After leading his Ohio State Buckeyes to a perfect 14-0 regular-season mark and a berth in the national championship game in 2002, coach Jim Tressel wasn't satisfied.

Because of the biggest flaw in scheduling history, his Buckeyes would never have the opportunity to test their skills against the other Big Ten powerhouse — the Iowa Hawkeyes.

Or so we thought. Following his team's 14-9 victory over Michigan in the last game of the regular season on Nov. 23, Tressel met with Ohio State Athletics Director Andy Geiger to discuss his concerns.

"I told Andy, 'Somehow, some way, we've got to schedule a game with Iowa this season,'" Tressel said.

After a phone call to Iowa

Brad Banks may have won the Heisman if the Hawkeyes had played Ohio State in 2002.

Athletics Director Bob Bowsby, Geiger sealed the deal. The Buckeyes were to face the Hawkeyes on Nov. 30 to determine who truly was the Big Ten's best.

"We've just got to take it one game at a time," Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz said after agreeing to face Ohio State.

To keep things fair, Ferentz and Tressel agreed to play at a neutral site, and after a few minutes of discussion, the two coaches agreed to square off on the blue-colored turf at Bronco Stadium in Boise, Idaho.

"We just both really like the color blue, so it was an easy choice," Tressel said about the decision.

Although Boise State was preparing to face Iowa State in the Humanitarian Bowl on Dec. 31, Broncos coach Dan Hawkins saw no problem in lending his team's field to the two schools for a night.

"If we were playing a better team, like say Iowa, I would be concerned," Hawkins said. "When's the last time the Cyclones even won a game?"

Throughout the week leading up to the game, Tressel motivated his team by hanging up signs in the locker room, including one that read "Let's get lucky one more time."

With finals coming up, the Hawkeyes kept busy in Boise by studying in their hotel rooms.

When Ohio State freshman running back Maurice Clarett was asked if his team was doing the same, he had a surprised look on his face.

"They make them do their own work at Iowa?" Clarett said.

The Hawkeyes jumped out to an early 14-0 lead with two Brad Banks touchdown passes, but the Buckeyes quickly battled back to tie the score.

Iowa fans expressed their disapproval when the referees failed to see that after every

Ohio State tackle, the Buckeyes choked the Hawkeye players.

The Hawks kept their composure, however, and Banks ran in for two second-half touchdowns to put the game out of reach.

"Maybe this wasn't such a good idea after all," Tressel told reporters following the game.

After the BCS reconfigured its rankings, the Hawkeyes were invited to the Fiesta Bowl to take on undefeated Miami in place of Ohio State.

Banks couldn't stop smiling as he accepted his Heisman Trophy award at the Yale Club in New York on Dec. 14, and he said he never could've done it without his teammates.

Without the help of any blown calls in the Fiesta Bowl, the Hawkeyes went on to defeat Miami and claim the title of national champions.

Ferentz declined an opportunity to coach in the NFL, saying he was a Hawkeye at heart.

Van Allen shooting propels emotions in OSU win

Nov. 2, 1991
Iowa 16, Ohio State 9

BY KELLY BEATON
THE DAILY IOWAN

Football is a game of emotion. People hit you. You get mad. You play harder. Anger is a good thing on the gridiron.

Playing with a heavy heart, in a state of shock, is a whole other story.

That's the burden the Hawkeyes played with Nov. 2, 1991, in Columbus, Ohio.

Just hours before the 11th-ranked Hawkeyes were to take on No. 13 Ohio State, head coach Hayden Fry broke the terrifying news to his squad. Three UI professors and one graduate student were shot and killed by Gang Lu, a physics graduate student, in Van Allen Hall. A university administrator (who later died) and a UI student who worked in her Jessup Hall office were also shot by Lu.

"We found out the night before," said Paul Burmeister, a backup quarterback in the Ohio State game. "At dinner, Coach Fry told us about it. It was strange for me, because my mother worked in the building where a couple people were killed. She worked in the president's office, and I was sure something was going down close to there. Everybody was really shook up and affected."

Much thought was put into whether the game should be played, but because the Hawkeyes had already traveled to Columbus, the school decided to meet its obligation to the Big Ten.

An emotional Fry addressed his squad with a passionate pregame speech. He urged his players to give their all for those whose hearts ached

Coach kept talking about, if we could just give the folks back home a couple of hours of enjoyment to take their minds off the tragedy, then we'll have done a great thing. We were a close team anyway, but that seemed to make us even closer.

Paul Burmeister, Iowa backup QB great thing. We were a close team anyway, but that seemed to make us even closer."

In tribute to their fallen peers back in Iowa City, the Hawkeye squad stripped their helmets of all gold decals, leaving them completely black.

Iowa jumped out to a 7-0 start led by quarterback Matt Rodgers, who scored on a 1-yard sneak to start a day in which he completed 20 of 27 passes for 258 yards before leaving the game with a sprained ankle late back in Iowa.

"That was when coach was at his best," said Burmeister.

"Coach kept talking about, if we could just give the folks back home a couple hours of enjoyment to take their minds off the tragedy, then we'll have done a in the third quarter.

Ohio State followed Rodgers' touchdown with a Carlos Snow 2-yard run midway through the second quarter, tying the game at 7.

Iowa countered Snow's score with the play of the game late in the first half. Rodgers connected with tight end Alan Cross on a screen to the right flat, which led to a 61-yard romp through the Buckeyes' secondary to make it 13-7. While OSU's Greg Smith blocked Jeff Skillet's ensuing extra point, the Hawkeyes rode a wave of momentum into the locker room they wouldn't relinquish, as they withstood a couple of late Buckeye drives to take a 16-9 victory.

The win was just the second for Iowa over Ohio State since 1960.

"That was a really chaotic time. The occasion was really grim," said George Wine, who was Iowa's sports information director at the time. "The game itself was a really great one."

If you'd gone to Vegas in August and laid down a bet that neither Ohio State nor Michigan would be first place in the Big Ten after three conference games, chances are you'd now be cashing in. Other than a few lucky gamblers, though, the biggest beneficiaries are Wisconsin and Purdue.

The Badgers finally found a way to stifle Ohio State, and Barry Alvarez's team looks to recover from a shocking loss to UNLV on Sept. 13. Lee Evans sat out last season after tearing his knee in the spring, but this fall, he has picked up where he left off as the Big Ten's premier wide receiver. His 596 receiving yards lead the conference, and gives QB Jim Sorgi the most explosive of deep threats; Evans already has catches of 99 and 79 yards. Sorgi reportedly has recovered from a dirty play that kept the signal-caller on the sidelines for much of the second half.

Purdue doesn't have a big win yet this year (beating Notre Dame no longer counts) but the Boilermakers, too, recovered from an early loss to surge back in. Since losing to Bowling Green in the opener, Joe Tiller's squad is outscoring opponents, 162-51. QB Kyle Orton may not have huge numbers, but the spread offense is designed more for a short, quick passing attack. Jerod Void, Jerome Brooks, and Brandon Jones have done a solid job filling in for suspended running back Joey Harris, combining for 934 yards and 11 TDs.

The conference season is still young, but a win would put the victor in the driver's seat for the Big Ten crown — for at least a week, anyway.

Iowa bowl prediction	Outback: Florida on New Year's Day	Alamo: Remember it?	Outback. Like I called in August.
Best current Iowa LB?	Greenway: in on every tackle	Hodge: Best hitter after Sanders	Greenway. Corrals RBs like cattle
Buckeyes: stumble or spiral?	Stumble; defense will keep them close	Stumble: They still know how to win	'02 an aberration. Like the '01 Bears
Cubs fan's fault?	He's so guilty.	It wasn't me.	Looks suspiciously like Donovan.

Pregame routine same for Manson, others

BY JASON BRUMMOND
THE DAILY IOWAN

The preparation leading up to Saturday's game is invaluable. Teams use the days to fine-tune offensive plays and defensive schemes and to scout and prepare for the upcoming opponent. However, each individual has a unique way of readying himself, depending on his position and place on the team.

The chances that third-team quarterback Jason Manson will get into a game aren't very high, but he still practices and prepares as if they were. Through practice, he keeps a close eye on senior Nathan Chandler and true freshman Drew Tate. He watches film and studies the opposition's defense.

"I just try to prepare like Nate and Drew prepare," he said. "You never know what's going to happen. Basically, I prepare like I'm going to play, and I do that every week."

The 6-1, 185-pound signal-caller said he doesn't get a significant amount of repetitions during practice. The majority of them come during a drill called "Nine on Seven" — the offense without wide-outs and the defense without its secondary.

"The 'Manson Files' is a weekly feature exclusively written for Pregame — an examination of the season through the eyes of one player, redshirt freshman QB Jason Manson.

The rest of his learning comes from what he refers to as "mental reps." He watches Chandler and Tate and sees if he can make the checks in his head as he witnesses the play unfold.

Despite his lack of practice time, he feels he would be ready go if called. He has to be. The redshirt freshman said that kind of situation occurred last weekend, when Wisconsin's starting quarterback, Jim Sorgi, went down and the backup came in during a critical part of the game. Injuries can happen at any time in football, and the next man must be ready to fill the void.

He said he pays close attention during the course of a game and has to know what is going on at all times.

"When I'm on the sidelines, I see some of the things [developing], and I'm pretty confident if I went onto the field I could see it just as clearly," he said. "I think I'd be ready to play if they threw me in there."

When he was in high school, Manson was a three-year starter at quarterback, leading his team to a 32-2-1 record. He threw for more than 7,200 yards in his career, including 89 touchdown tosses.

In 2002, Manson knew he was going to redshirt, but he said this year it has been more difficult to watch because he thought he had a chance to be in the mix for playing time. However, he's aware that his time will come.

"I'm used to being out there, and being the guy who is going to call the plays and the team in and out of the huddle," the Bloomington, Conn., native said. "I just got to try to make the best of my opportunities when I get the chance."

ABOLISH CONFERENCE RESTRICTIONS

Until Sunday, Baylor had a firm grip on the award for Unlikeliest Member of a Major Conference for its role as the Big 12's developmentally-disabled stepchild.

All that changed, though, when Boston College, like Baylor, a religiously-affiliated institution, joined such paragons of virtue as Miami, Florida State, and Virginia Tech in the ACC.

The move gives the ACC the 12 teams necessary to hold a conference title game, but it also renders the Big East essentially meaningless.

Even with its current lineup, the conference is by far the weakest of the Big Six, and next year it will be without its only two teams with realistic BCS bowl hopes. The ACC can now compete with the Big Six and Big Ten as the nation's strongest league.

Unfortunately, the aftershock of the shift could affect several conferences, as the Big East looks to do some plundering of its own, most likely from the MAC, Conference USA, and WAC.

Who knows what those changes will do to not just the BCS picture, but the college football landscape as a whole?

So to prevent the further decimation of the conference system by money-induced moves, I'd like to propose a radical solution: Abolish it altogether.

Sure, sure, the vocal alliance of purists and traditionalists would have a fit, crying over the loss of long-standing rivalries and conference association.

Under a non-conference system, though, the Huskies (or whoever) wouldn't have the burden of a mandatory weak conference schedule. Think you can run with the big boys? Here's a whole season to prove it.

There's something to that, of course; even I feel a great deal of affinity for the Big Ten and all its members. But let's look at the plus side: no locked schedules, no playing the same opponents over and over again, and no whining about a BCS system that excludes mid-majors.

Each team could schedule whatever schedule it wanted; schools would have to weigh the value of an easy win against the importance of playing a strong schedule. Surely some would decide to go for 10 or 11 wins a year and schedule nothing but the Buffalos and SMUs of the world.

But with a modified BCS system in place, still taking into account schedule strength, polls, and computer rankings, such teams would doom themselves to second-rate bowl games.

Inevitably, top teams would be forced to schedule the bulk of games against one another, to stay on top of the rankings. Put yourself in, say, Miami's shoes. Would you rather play Florida State in a high-risk, high-reward game, or Rutgers, and risk slipping even if you win?

There would be mismatches, as contenders scheduled patsies in early season tune-ups, but the back half of the schedule would be, for those interested in making a run at the title, far more compelling.

Finally, those mid-majors that perennially complain about being shut out of the BCS would have the chance to put money where their collective mouths are. Northern Illinois, for example, beat three Big Six teams, but even if the Huskies run the table, they have as much of a chance at getting into the Sugar Bowl as Zim did when he went after Pedro.

Under a non-conference system, though, the Huskies (or whoever) wouldn't have the burden of a mandatory weak conference schedule. Think you're good enough to run with the big boys? Here's a whole season to prove it.

In the end, the conference system will never be overthrown; the cabal of conservatives is too powerful and, frankly, has a good point about preserving college football tradition.

But until the kinks are worked out of the current system, one that allows fluid movement between conferences and excludes dozens of teams, abolition remains the one way to solve all of college football's problems in one fell swoop.

You'll thank me later.
