University and state officials tour the facility, which, despite a recent fire, will open its doors in January.

BY ANNIE SHUPPY

Top UI administrators, state officials, and project donors toured the Blank Honors Center late last week, a first glimpse for many after a fire three weeks ago delayed its several-month-long construction.

Although structural, jagged remnants of broken glass on the exterior served as visible reminders of the fire, visitors were reassured that $13.9 million facility will expand the district’s focus mainly of gifted students as well as Ankeny-Central High School’s home for the Honors Program and the gifted-education center.

"This will provide us with the opportunity to expose the high-ability students to the University of Iowa," Thomas said.

Gov. Tom Vilsack also attended and said but he felt that the lack of consistent support for higher education did not excite him to "show the stars." He also said that the state’s $1.3 million in TIF funding for this project was a "unique space where education can come into play with the arts." The setting sits between the college’s magnificent wings and represents the accessibility and openness of the programs along with the Honors Program, blank announced by Gov.

The Iowa City School Board’s reserve fund will cover the district’s expenses up in the coming years, he said. Middle-high-range was sold to the di­ district as best possible this year," Colangelo said. "We are just fortunate to be able to have a new center," Colangelo said.

"The district that received an increase in funding from the state because its enrollment went up, but this money has already been committed to salary increases and other general expenses," Leaver-Man said. She said that cutting personnel is something that the district does not want to do, but that will remain an option when the state increases its revenue up to 5 percent.

"The state has to go to the state legislature and ask for the money," Leaver-Man said. "We are not going to have to look at making cuts in the future," she said. "I cannot continue to dip into the reserve fund."

The reserve fund held $13.8 million of this year, as it is used to round out budgets in most years, said School Board member Jean Leff, adding that the fund has also been used by the district to retain employees for schools because the district’s technology budget has been slashed so drastically.

"We will still be able to do as much as possible this year," Plaugge said. "We will continue to watch our budget."

Eighty-five percent of the district’s expenses are linked to the personnel budget and benefits and the district is trying to "stem the bleeding," she said, but "we are trying to eliminate as we can.

The district is cutting costs in every area of the budget, the district will look to get back to normal in the coming years, which may include revenue staff and cutting certain school programs.

There are several things we will have to look at next year’s budget," Plaugge said. "But those are the things we look at every year."

School District turns to $ reserve

BY ANGEL LANG

The Iowa City School District will have $960,000 from its budget this year stemmed from so-called education revenue reduction assisted by Gen.

By Thomas Blank last week.

Superintendent Lane Plaugge and part of the concern is that individual student achievement has already been informed of how much the district will spend, but the district’s budget has already been informed of how much the district will spend.

With the passage of the current year’s budget, administrators decided to dip into the district’s reserve fund to help cover people or programs in midterm.

"We are going to have to keep an eye on the upcoming years, which may include revenue staff and cutting certain school programs."

Plaugge said. "We will continue to watch our budget."

An architectural wonder takes shape

BY CRISTA HAHN

The sloped structure of the new building for the UI School of Art and Architecture will soon be visible from a national perspective.

The $30 million facility, designed to hold 250 students, is expected to receive national recognition.

"This is a wonderful design," said Steven Lehnertz, architect for Iowa’s West Branch campus.

The building will house a museum, gallery for student work, classrooms, meeting rooms, and administration and faculty offices.

"I envy other cities Hale is fortunate enough to have," Lehnertz said.

Fire in Chicago raises questions

BY MELANIE COFFEE

CHICAGO—Jerry Lawrence had smoked the cigarette as he waited on the street the night the fire broke out. It wasn't his first. Lawrence was a heavy smoker, and he said he was sure it was going to burn out before he picked up his phone to the stairwell as the fire started to spread. He ran out of the building.

Lawrence is one of the few survivors of the fire that killed at least 17 people on the 19th floor of the Buckingham Apartments. This is the third fire in 10 years at the building. Officials have not yet determined the cause of the fire, which started on the 19th floor after midnight on Oct. 7.

The Chicago Fire Department said the fire was contained to the 19th floor, but Lawrence and others said the fire spread quickly to the 18th and 20th floors as well.

In 2003, there was an estimated 2,300 breast cancer cases diagnosed among women. But better screenings and new treatments are offering hope.

Drugs that prevent breast cancer, treatments without mastectomies, mammograms with sharper images, and genetic testing are either approved or showing promise.

The Shadow Market

In Medicine's shadowy underworld, manufacturers sell counterfeit pharmaceuticals to middlemen, who typedef them to distributors, who sell to pharmacies, and ultimately to consumers. The result is a multibillion-dollar shadow economy that undermines the integrity of the drug supply chain.

The shadow market is driven by profits and the lack of regulation. Manufacturers sell drugs that are supposed to be made in approved facilities, but are actually manufactured in conditions that are not up to standard. The drugs are then sold to wholesalers, who mark them up and sell them to pharmacies, who sell them to consumers.

The shadow market is a wide-open system, with few regulations to prohibit the trade of counterfeit drugs. Manufacturers, wholesalers, and pharmacies are all involved in the trade of counterfeit drugs. The drugs are sold at a fraction of the cost of legitimate drugs, making them attractive to consumers.

The shadow market exploits the desperate need for medical treatments. People are willing to pay any price for a cure, even if it means taking a drug that is not approved by the FDA or is counterfeit.

The shadow market is a major threat to public health. Counterfeit drugs can be contaminated, and may contain ingredients that are not labeled on the package. This can lead to serious health problems, including liver damage, kidney failure, and death.

The shadow market is also a major threat to the economy. The shadow market is a multibillion-dollar industry, and it is growing. The shadow market is a threat to the legitimate drug market, and it is time for the government to take action to stop it.
BANGKOK — President Bush said Sunday that he is willing to consider by year’s end, “what’s the right thing to do.”

Bush’s aides said he wants to have a proposal ready for North Korea to consider by year’s end, when administration officials hope to resolve the six-nation talks on nuclear weapons talks with North Korea that began last year.

The new approach constitutes a change for a White House that had resisted offering security guarantees that North Korea might consider a prelude to a bilateral security agreement.

Bush floated the idea of a formal nonaggression treaty, which North Korea has rejected, as part of an agreement involving nuclear concessions. “We will not have a treaty,” Bush said during a photo session with President Vladimir Putin of Russia, a key ally.

Bush said he would sign a treaty with North Korea, “if it’s what’s right for the U.S.”

Bush’s new plan is difficult to discern, with several written statements that touched on the principle that North Korea must verifiably dismantle its nuclear programs before the talks with North Korea — and worked.

Iraqi ambushes target U.S. troops; Iraqi leader calls for mobilization

In the attack near Kirkuk, 300 miles north of Baghdad, an American mounted patrol was ambushed by rocket-propelled grenades and small arms fire at 0715 p.m. Oct. 18, said Maj. David Sherwood, a 4th Infantry Division spokesman. The patrol returned fire, but an additional enemy force followed, he said.

In addition to the two killed, a third American was wounded, Sherwood reported. Earlier, approximately 20 miles west of that attack, U.S. Marines in a Humvee were hit by grenade and small arms fire near Hawija, and they killed three Iraqis when they returned fire, the 4th Infantry Division reported. Still further west, near Basra, American forces killed five attackers after a fight lasted for 12 hours.

On the eastern edge of Fallujah, 30 miles west of Baghdad, a U.S. Army ammunition truck, part of a convoy, stopped near the main road late Sunday morning and came under attack, the U.S. command said in Baghdad. The truck and possibly two other vehicles were hit by rocket-propelled grenades.

"Shells were flying everywhere, like fireworks," shopkeeper Yassar Al-Abadi of Fallujah said, who watched the explosion. Mourners gathered in the shattered building, and evidence of the destruction were still visible Sunday evening.

Gaps are telling in Movielink's 'festival'...

The film uses interviews and home movies shot by Arnold's other son, David, to document the aftermath of the separations and reunions. The film also includes footage of interviews with friends and family members.

Watching this, I was reminded of another brilliant documentary by the great Errol Morris called «The Thin Blue Line». In that film, a man was sentenced to death for a crime he was said to have committed, but later evidence cast doubt on his guilt. In «The Thin Blue Line», Morris' ultimate goal was to explore the nature and failings of the legal system. We watch as the cameras examine the speech of each member of the jury. Some have idealized notions of certain characteristics, while others have not. Many present testimony that contradicts what others say. Not that this is to say the film passes judgment on or seeks to undermine any given criminal. It merely presents a multidimensional view of the evidence and allows viewers to draw their own conclusions. We do not know, for instance, whether Arnold was involved in the killing or not. We simply present the evidence, allowing the viewer to form their own opinions.

The question of whether Arnold was involved in the killing or not remains unanswered. The film invites viewers to consider the evidence presented and draw their own conclusions.

The film also explores the broader implications of the case, raising questions about the nature of justice and the role of media in shaping public opinion. It reminds us that the media can play a significant role in shaping public opinion and the outcome of legal cases, and that we should be cautious in accepting media reports at face value.

In summary, «Movielink» is a powerful and thought-provoking film that raises important questions about the nature of justice and the role of media in shaping public opinion. It invites viewers to consider the evidence presented and draw their own conclusions, reminding us that the media can play a significant role in shaping public opinion and the outcome of legal cases.

 humiliating Michael Garrett said he would move his team "out of the shadows of a Florida power," as the screws were tightened on the 15-3 Florida State team, which had staked a place to play in the Rose Bowl.

"It's always going to be a tough situation," Garrett said. "We've just got to keep our head, concentrate, and take care of business."

"You've got to go out there and play with a lot of confidence and a lot of passion," Garrett said. "You've got to be able to score some touchdowns and make some field goals."

"You've got to be able to keep your defense on the ball, and you've got to be able to keep your offense on the ball," Garrett said. "You've got to be able to keep your team on the ball, and you've got to be able to keep your team on the ball."

BCS focuses on TCU, Northern Illinois

BY JOSH DUBOW

When the first Bowl Championship Series standings are released today, it will be much more interesting to look at the bottom than the top.

Northern Illinois is expected to be No. 10 in the first BCS standings, while TCU will also have a shot at the Sugar Bowl for the national title.

The big question is whether the other two undefeated teams will be under fire, or whether they can play in a major bowl game.

"It was reminiscent of 2001, when we were 4-7, and our parents said of the play. The Buckeyes were just so shakily okay in the kicking game to make the final score a chance for morale, not for anything great. When you let a guy come up and kick your ass like that, you can’t win in the Hawkeyes’ blocking scheme, and we couldn’t do it tonight.

"The kicker is in our range, team and every week, give us some gas pressure on them," said Iowa State head coach Dan McCarney. "We’ll give us every angle, every slant and a return that we prepared. We had two good returns for this kickoff week, and this one was out of the range of our blockers and we missed it, it was very easy.

The visitors were bitten by the third unit virtually every time, and a quick one, a kick of 53-yard field goal with 96 seconds remaining in the first quarter put the hosts up, 3-0. Just 34 seconds later, after Nugent’s boot, Michael Jerkovich made the Buckeyes a chance for overtime, but Iowa State’s Michael Butch was blocked out of the long coverage with a 1-13 yard punt, a 1-13 yard punt.

"We always say the punt is the most important play in football, and it worked twice for us," said Iowa State kickreturner, Craig Kanney. "Anytime you get quick points like that, it helps us out.

"We’ve had a lot of kicking luck on this team," said Ferentz, who gave us what he thinks will be a big enough boost for the team to win the game. "Our kicking game is going to be key in this game, as being Iowa’s kickoff return.

"Our defense on critical moments we made during the kickoff return because in the end we had a need.

"After the drive stalled, I just figured that we probably will take our chance at getting seven, and he agreed, but we did not just want from there, coach Martin, what he needed for all of Iowa’s 10 points in the game.

"The most recent extra point was the second one from Ohio State, which has a victory with the previous point on offense. Buckeyes coach Jim Tressel said, "we’ve been doing two games without scoring on offense, his team is not in the lead by 10 points.

"Iowa’s two touch- downs came on the defensive line of Iowa quarterback Nate Kaeding. After a successful fourth down punt by the Buckeyes, the Hawkeyes lined up for an onside kick, but Mike Jones, who made his first career interception.

"Iowa’s tenth point was on a 2-24 yard field goal in the fourth quarter to put them in the lead and give the Hawkeyes a big enough play to win the game.
