ASIDE FROM THE BIG GAME, SUPER BOWL ADVERTISING GRABS THE ATTENTION OF A GROUP OF UI GRADUATE STUDENTS

Jamie Kearney taunts New England fans Mimi Marini and Matt Hill at Buffalo Wild Wings on Sunday night after the Patriots missed their second field-goal attempt in the Super Bowl. Patriot fans, of course, had the last laugh when Adam Vinatieri nailed the game-winner.

THE DAILY IOWAN

While many UI students merely watched the Super Bowl on Sunday night for pure enjoyment, a group of UI graduate students took the NFL championship game's commercial viewing to a new level by rating the TV spots as part of a marketing-class project.

Approximately 16 students in the UI M.B.A. program huddled around a television in graduate student Eric Julstrom's living room to take part in a survey organized by Baba Shiv, an associate professor of marketing who teaches Advertising and Promotion Strategy.

The students were instructed to rate the best and worst ads, which cost around $2.2 million per 30 seconds of airtime, from both an entertainment and business standpoint. To analyze from the business point of view, the students determined each advertisement's effectiveness divided by expenditure.

"The ad's got to promote the brand," Julstrom said. "The goal is to try to build brand equity."

Sitting across from the fireplace, M.B.A. student Andres Ayala said the Super Bowl experience is similar to the World Cup mania in his home country of Colombia, save for the advertising campaigns.

"[Advertising] doesn't exist," he said. "This is totally new to me and really exciting."

Two advertisements that sent the room into an uproar were a Budweiser spot in which a nagging wife

UI students are finding that small things such as smoking a cigarette, taking a shower, and going to class are little more difficult. As they gear up to battle frigid weather, the coldest winter in three years is attacking their lives inside and outside their homes.

Jeevan Khullar's life sped up with the below-normal temperatures because he does not have a car. The UI senior was not wearing a coat on Jan. 30, insisting that his five layers of clothing kept him warm.

"I walk really fast, and I rub my face all the time so it doesn't freeze," he said. "The cold is going to get you — it is going to get you bad."

UI junior Brenna Griffin was also trying to handle the cold by staying inside at night.

"I'm from Iowa, but I spent last semester in Costa Rica," she said. "I am not quite sure if my body has adjusted yet."

Previous Januarys and Februarys have been warmer than this, said state climatologist Harry Hillaker.

"Just over three years ago was the last time that we had weather this cold," he said.

KCRG meteorologist Josh Baynes also noted it was colder than usual.

"Over the past five years, we've had a similar cold snap during this time, but the temperature is definitely below average," he said.

The cold has created problems for UI junior Matt Farrell, tearing apart his house and making it difficult to use water. His pipes froze last week, leaving him with no hot water and a continuous trickle of cold water.

"They tore a hole in my roommate's wall to get to the water shut-off valve if the pipes burst, and heaters have been set up all over to keep the pipes warm," he said. "I have no idea who is paying for everything."

Amid the attempts to combat winter weather, he is getting tired of the low temperatures.

"I hate the cold, and I am never living here again," he said. "All humans should move near the equator."

The UI Hospitals and Clinics has seen an increase in cold-related health problems, said Eric Dickson, the director of emergency medicine.

The most common are hypothermia, frostbite, and carbon-monoxide poisoning, he said.

"Alcohol sets you up to get hypothermia because you don't know how low your core body temperature is. Smoking is linked to frostbite in the fingers and toes," he said.

Prof unearths untold stories of black GIs in World War 2

BY MARY BETH LARUE
THE DAILY IOWAN

Speaking with passion that riveted audience members for more than an hour on Jan. 30, an associate history professor and self-described "Army brat" resurrected recognition for the unrecognized black heroes of World War II during a lecture in the Jefferson Building.

Kimberley Phillips, a professor at the College of William and Mary in Williamsburg, Va., told an audience of 30 that her studies show that white mainstream journalists largely ignored the international honors and medals black men received during World War II.

Her lecture, "Fighting for Democracy: Black Military Stories about World War II," was the fifth of nine to be held this year. The series is commemorating the 50th anniversary of Brown v. the Board of Education of Topeka, the landmark U.S. Supreme Court case that signaled the end of segregation in public places.

"We are bringing in people from different fields for different perspectives," said Lauren Rabinovitz, the chairwoman of the UI American-studies department. "We are trying to keep alive what the Brown decision meant in terms of principles."

"The Brown decision was the most important legal decision of the 20th century, and the Department of American Studies is spending a year seeing what the decision has meant for the present."

Standing against the backdrop of a 1942 Life magazine photograph of five black soldiers waving an American flag, Phillips described the military's influence on American life. The magazine suggested that black men in the military were treated as equals, even though they didn't deserve it, she said.

Few clues in death of woman

BY CHRISTINA ERB
THE DAILY IOWAN

Investigators have made little progress in the investigation of the death of a 90-year-old resident of an Iowa City nursing home, according to Iowa City police officials.

Alice Sutton died of exposure to subzero temperatures outside Bickford Cottage, 3500 Lower West Branch Road. The overnight low on Jan. 30 was minus-8 degrees Fahrenheit.

Sutton reportedly left the secured building during the middle of the night and was discovered outdoors by a nursing home employee the following morning around 8:30 a.m.

An avid fan of crossword puzzles and books, Sutton was discovered by the side door of the facility with "her hat, coat, and purse," said her son, Fred Sutton of Coralville.

Fred Sutton said on Sunday that he will wait for an official police report before deciding whether to take legal action against the nursing home.

Bickford employees declined to comment Sunday.

Schools saying hola, not bonjour

DES MOINES — More Iowa high schools are offering Spanish instruction even as the number that offer French and German courses is dropping because of declining enrollments and budget cuts, school officials said.

A growing demand for Spanish-speaking skills has prompted the surge in that field. But some school officials are worried that cutbacks in other language offerings could limit students' choices and knowledge of other cultures.

"We know we need to get students ready for a multicultural society," said Dan Frazier, the superintendent of the western Iowa A-H-S-T district, which is phasing out German.

"We realize the globe is shrinking. Yet because of budget constraints, we're being forced to cut those very things we know are important," he said.

Of 322 districts that responded to an informal survey by the Des Moines Register, 320 offered high-school Spanish. French is taught in 74 districts, and German is taught in 59.

Other languages are far less common. Latin is taught in three districts, Italian in one.

Though increasingly relevant worldwide, no Iowa high school offers Arabic.

Approximately 52 percent of Iowa's 152,147 high-school students took a foreign language in the 2002-03 school year, according to the Iowa Department of Education.

Among that group, 80 percent took Spanish — up from 60 percent in the 1985-86 school year.

Enrollment in French fell during the same period. In 1985-86, 27 percent of all foreign language students took French; last year, 12 percent did.

Ellen Butler, a junior at Roosevelt High School in Des Moines, said she chose to take Spanish over five other choices because she thought it would have the biggest advantage in her future.

"I think in the very diverse place we live, it's really important to be able to relate to other people and be able to talk with them," she said.

Iowa requires high schools to offer four-consecutive years of one foreign language but sets no graduation requirements. None of the Iowa high schools surveyed required students to take a foreign language in order to graduate.

Change of venue sought in HIV case

The lawyer for an Iowa City man accused of knowingly transmitting HIV to four different women is again arguing for a change of venue, contending that the case has generated too much press coverage for the defendant to have a fair trial.

While holding up photocopies of three newspaper articles — two from the Iowa City Press-Citizen and one from a publication near Vinton, Iowa — defense attorney Kelly Steele argued on Jan. 30 that information regarding his client, Adam Musser, 22, has made it impossible to find a jury pool that has not heard about the case.

"Vinton is a small community, and so rumors, speculations, and gossip travels quickly," he said.

Musser, who was initially charged with four counts of criminal transmission of HIV, was found guilty on the first count by a Vinton jury earlier this month.

Assistant Johnson County Attorney Anne Lahey kept her comments during the 15-minute hearing brief, saying that the state does not feel as if there is sufficient reason to move the trial again.

Steele added that the Gazette in Cedar Rapids covers a 50-mile-radius area, requesting that the trial be moved outside of that jurisdiction.

Judge L. Verne Robinson did not issue a ruling on the motion.

Musser is scheduled to go to trial Feb. 9 in Vinton on the second charge of HIV transmission. He is accused with failing to inform a 23-year-old Coralville woman about his HIV status while in a six-month relationship.

Musser also filed a motion for a new trial last week in his guilty verdict, indicating the beginning steps of an appeal, Steele said.

"We had a basic disagreement with a lab report that came in," he said.

SEATS driver gets OWI classes

An Iowa City man charged with driving a local transit bus while inebriated will attend a two-day seminar on drunk driving in lieu of his originally assigned two-day jail sentence, his lawyer said on Jan. 30.

Sixth District Court Judge Sylvia Lewis originally sentenced Myron Smalley to two days in jail and a $500 fine, but he will now attend a weekend workshop on drunken driving at Kirkwood Community College in addition to the fine.

Smalley, 47, 4418 Dane Road S.W., was convicted on Jan. 25 of operating while intoxicated after being found operating a SEATS vehicle with a blood-alcohol level between 0.24 to 0.265 in early December 2003.

Coralville police reports show officers found Smalley disoriented and with slurred speech after he attempted to back a SEATS bus out of the garage and scraped a concrete pole. The accident caused $1,000 in damages to the vehicle.

Smalley also admitted to drinking vodka before getting behind the wheel of the 1995 Ford Aerotech bus, according to police records.

Smalley, who defense attorney Michael Kennedy said was fired from SEATS soon after the incident, filed a written plea of guilty on Dec. 22, 2003.

Deferred judgment in church-arson case

An Iowa City teenager accused of breaking into and setting fire to a local church and school received deferred judgments on both counts on Jan. 30.

Christian McConnell, 19, 4226 Napoleon Lane, was charged with third-degree arson and third-degree burglary in connection with a June 2002 incident. He and co-defendant Seth Weese allegedly broke into Grace Community Church and Heritage Christian School.

The duo then allegedly stole pennies meant for a fund-raiser and set fire to the building, causing more than $500,000 in damages.

McConnell, after eluding police for more than a year, was arrested Sept. 8, 2003, when he turned himself in to authorities.

He filed a written plea of guilty in December 2003 after having pled not guilty earlier.

"We're pleased with the end result and happy that he can move on with his life," McConnell's lawyer, Davis Foster, said on Jan. 30.

Dean rips Kerry for lobbyists' $

BY JONATHAN FINER AND JIM VANDEHEI
WASHINGTON POST

PHOENIX — Howard Dean unloaded on Jan. 31 on front-runner Sen. John Kerry, calling the Massachusetts senator a "Republican" with an "appalling" reliance on money from corporate special interests and lobbyists.

Dean, trying to position himself as the anti-Kerry candidate, told reporters here: "I'm outraged by a candidate who says that he's against the special interests and then find out he's taking more special-interest money than anyone else in 15 years."

Dean, the former governor of Vermont, based his latest attack on a report in the Jan. 31 Washington Post detailing how Kerry received more lobbyist money than any other senator over the past 15 years. "It turns out we got more than one Republican in the Democratic race," Dean said, in a swipe at Kerry and retired Gen. Wesley Clark, who voted for President Bush's father.

"I think Gov. Dean has, in the course of this campaign, made a number of comments that he's had to apologize to other candidates for, and I would respectfully suggest that that may be just one more of them," Kerry said to reporters during a stop in Oklahoma City.

Kerry, coming off back-to-back wins and breaking away in several key Feb. 3 primary states, said: "The only people that have contributed to my campaigns to the United States Senate are individual Americans. Now are some of those individual Americans lobbyists? Yeah, sure. They haven't gotten anything for it. Those guys have never, ever, ever gotten anything."

Behind the scenes, the Kerry campaign moved aggressively to paint Dean as the captive of special interests. Aides distributed a nine-page document titled "Dean's long history of ties to corporate lobbyists," which accused then-Gov. Dean of holding secret meetings with industry representatives, nuzzling up to Washington-based lobbyists, and holding shares in Vermont utilities.

Four days before Tuesday's showdown in seven states, Kerry is trying to fend off attacks from Democrats and Republicans alike, nail down key endorsements, attract money, and position himself to lock up the nomination as early as this month. With a huge press and staff entourage, Kerry is running like a front-runner, often avoiding direct confrontation with his rivals and relying on key allies to aggressively lobby members of Congress and top state officials to join his team, Democrats said.

Sen. John Edwards of North Carolina, who many Democrats consider the biggest threat to Kerry, began his day with an enthusiastic crowd of several hundred in Albuquerque, where New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson, a Democrat, told him, "Senator, your momentum is incredible." Richardson, slated to be permanent chairman of the Democratic National Convention in Boston this summer, is officially neutral and has found something to praise each time any of the candidates has visited his state.

Though both men disclaim any such interest, their names figure prominently in speculation for the vice presidential slot on the ticket. Edwards pointedly told the Albuquerque audience, "I am running for president, and I intend to be the nominee," then added teasingly, "There might be something bigger in this man's [Richardson's] future. And maybe sooner, rather than later."

Edwards salted his standard "two Americas" stump speech with enough local references to please the audience, noting in his denunciation of "predatory lenders" that "in New Mexico, the average family spent $1,700 on interest and penalties on credit cards" and contending that his economic program would "lift 100,000 New Mexicans out of poverty."

Picking up where former candidate Rep. Dick Gephardt of Missouri left off, Edwards launched a new 30-second ad on trade in South Carolina and Oklahoma.

Bush accepts panel on WMD intelligence

BY DANA MILBANK
WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — In deciding to back an independent review of the intelligence regarding Iraq's weapons of mass destruction, President Bush is acknowledging what he cannot say publicly: that something was seriously wrong with the allegations he used to take the nation to war in Iraq.

Most everybody in a position to know has agreed that a huge mistake has been made.

"We were almost all wrong," David Kay, the former chief U.S. weapons inspector in Iraq, testified last week.

"In this case, there's no question that there was an intelligence failure, in some form or another," Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., a member of the Intelligence Committee, said on Fox News Sunday.

"Clearly this is not the immediate threat many assumed before the war," is how Charles Duelfer, Kay's replacement, put it a few months ago when he noted "the apparent absence of existing weapons stocks."

The White House said Sunday that Bush will sign an executive order to establish the review.

But the president, and top White House officials, remain resolutely agnostic in their public utterances. "I want to know the facts," the president said on Jan. 30, admitting no flaw in the weapons allegations. "And I want to know exactly. I want to compare what the [Iraq Survey Group] finds with what we thought going in."

Why the reluctance to state what appears increasingly obvious as Kay spent the past 10 days dashing prospects that significant weapons stockpiles would be found in Iraq? While the tactic may appear to be obtuse, there is a real strategy behind the Bush response — and one that has been used before, to great effect.

Bush aides have learned through hard experience that admitting error only projects weakness and invites more abuse. Conversely, by postponing an acknowledgment — possibly beyond Election Day — the White House is generating a fog of uncertainty around Kay's stark findings and potentially softening a harsh public judgment.

"They aren't giving up," Hans Blix, the former chief U.N. weapons inspector in Iraq, said recently. Blix's failure to find weapons of mass destruction before the war was ridiculed by the administration. "They all prefer to retreat under a mist of controversy rather than say, 'I'm sorry, this was wrong,'" he said.

Of course, Bush and his top aides are as aware as anyone — and acknowledge as much in private — that Kay's remarks of the last week have dispelled remaining hope that the intelligence might prove correct. While some in the White House favor having Bush admit publicly that the intelligence was flawed, a high-ranking Republican source said such a step is not yet contemplated.

EDITOR WANTED

An aggressive, talented individual is sought as editor of The Daily Iowan, Iowa City's largest newspaper, with an editorial staff of more than 60 young professionals, an editorial budget exceeding $300,000 and circulation of 20,000. The board of Student Publications Incorporated and the publisher of The Daily Iowan will soon interview candidates for the position of editor for the term beginning June 1, 2004 and ending May 31, 2005.

The editor of The Daily Iowan must have strong journalistic abilities, skills in management and a clear sense of editorial responsibility. The board will weigh heavily scholarship, previous newswriting and editing experience (including working at The Daily Iowan or another daily newspaper), and proven ability to lead, organize and inspire a staff.

Applicants must be enrolled in a UI undergraduate or graduate degree program. Candidates must submit completed applications and supporting materials by noon, Friday, February 27, 2004.

Muslim pilgrims stampede; 244 dead

BY KARL VICK
WASHINGTON POST

MINA, Saudi Arabia — A stampede outside the Saudi Arabian city of Mecca on Sunday left at least 244 Muslim pilgrims dead, the largest loss of life in years during an annual religious gathering in which vast crowds often overwhelm efforts to control them.

The stampede occurred on a narrow bridge crowded with white-clad worshippers making their way to hurl stones at pillars where Muslims believe the devil appeared before the biblical patriarch Abraham. Those approaching from behind eventually pushed down pilgrims closest to the pillars, causing panic and a stampede so intense that it took police a half-hour to reach the dead and injured, officials said. At least 200 persons were treated, some for serious injuries.

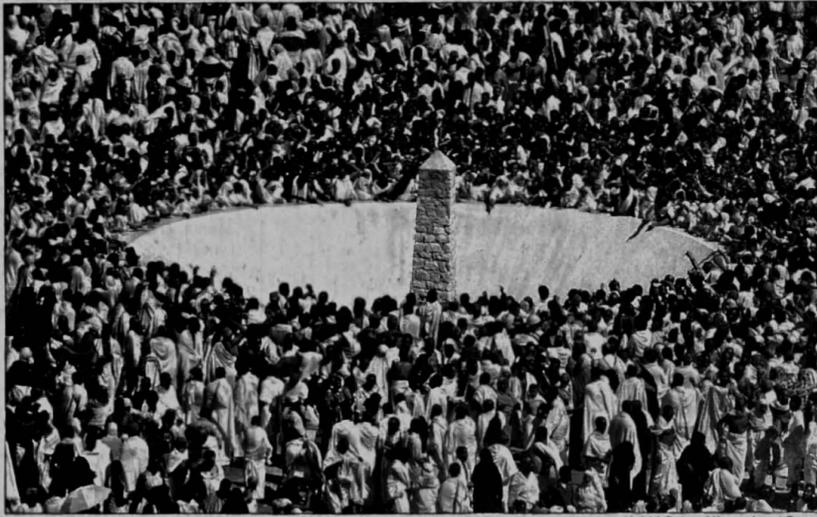

"There was more than 400 meters of people pushing in the same direction," said Iyad Madani, the Saudi minister for haj, the pilgrimage that all Muslims who can afford it are asked to make at least once in a lifetime. Officials estimated 2 million people made the pilgrimage this year.

"All precautions were taken to prevent such an incident, but this is God's will," Madani said.

The death toll was the highest since 1997, when 340 pilgrims were killed in a fire in their tent city in Mina, on the road from Mecca, Islam's holiest city, to Mount Arafat. Sunday's tragedy also occurred in Mina, where pilgrims gather on the tiring final day of the pilgrimage to symbolically stone the devil after a night spent in prayer.

Last year, 14 pilgrims were fatally trampled during the pilgrimage. In 2001, a stampede claimed 35 lives. In 1998, the death toll was 180. In 1990, 1,426 pilgrims were crushed in a pedestrian tunnel in Mecca.

"Think of 20 Super Bowls altogether," said Khaled Maeena, Muslim pilgrims on Sunday perform a symbolic stoning of the devil as they throw pebbles at a pillar in Mina, just outside the city of Mecca, during the annual Muslim pilgrimage in Saudi Arabia.

the editor of Arab News, a Saudi newspaper published nationwide. "A life is a life, and we cannot afford to have these things happen. But it's 2 million people confined to a very narrow arrow, for quite some time — three days. It's not a joke."

Saudi officials emphasized that they have become students of crowd control as a result of administering an event unique in the world. Admission to the haj from abroad is by permit, allowing the Department of General Statistics to produce the exact number of foreign nationals officially participating in this year's pilgrimage: 1,419,706.

Brig. Mansour Turki of the Saudi General Security Forces said approximately 10,000 general security officers were deployed Sunday in the area of the stampede.

Support staff is assigned to help the throngs cope with the desert sun, handing out ice water and umbrellas. Saudi Boy Scouts stand by with maps to assist pilgrims who invariably get separated from their groups in a sea of worshippers identically clad in the simple white garments that pilgrims are obliged to wear, to erase distinctions between rich and poor.

Officials designate guides and interpreters to steer foreign pilgrims through the rituals of the haj. And because certain annual bottlenecks — including the bridge leading to the devil's pillars — have proved to be dangerous in the past, foreign pilgrims were assigned specific times to set off, in hopes of staggering the crowds over several hours.

Madani said the huge throngs early Sunday resulted in part from the half-million Saudi pilgrims who swelled the ranks, overwhelming efforts at crowd control. Some of the Saudis, he said, may not have been authorized to participate. Reports said many of the Saudi worshippers carried belongings that became obstacles when the panic erupted around 9 a.m.

Officials said many of the dead were Saudi citizens.

The disaster overshadowed a sharp denunciation of terrorism delivered on Jan. 31 by Saudi Arabia's highest ranking cleric in a sermon in Arafat.

"Islam seeks moderation," said Abdul Aziz bin Abdullah Al Sheik, who holds the title of Saudi Arabia's grand mufti, or leader of its Sunni branch. "Those who deviate from moderation and try to incite Muslims against their rulers are seeking discord and anarchy through destruction, terrorism, bombings, and shedding the blood of Muslims and those under the protection of the state."

"Islam has forbidden violence in all its forms," the mufti said, speaking near the mountain where the prophet Muhammad delivered his final sermon. "It has forbidden hijacking airplanes, ships, and other means of transport and has forbidden all acts that would undermine security."

Minister: Israel will target militant heads

BY JOSEF FEDERMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — The leaders of violent Islamic groups are targets for assassination, Israel's Defense minister said Sunday, raising the possibility of a further escalation in the three years of Israeli-Palestinian bloodshed.

Shaul Mofaz issued the threat in response to a declaration by the spiritual leader of Hamas, Sheik Ahmed Yassin, that the group plans an all-out effort to kidnap Israeli soldiers.

"The statements of Yassin just emphasize the need to strike the heads of Hamas and the Islamic Jihad," Mofaz told the weekly meeting of the Israeli Cabinet, according to an Israeli official who attended the meeting.

The statements by Mofaz and Yassin threaten to inflame an already violent confrontation that has led to the deaths of more than 3,500 people on both sides during three years of fighting.

Last week, Israel killed eight Palestinians in a shootout in Gaza City, while a Palestinian suicide bomber killed 11 people in Jerusalem. Hamas took responsibility for the bombing, a day after a claim from the Al Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades, loosely linked to Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat's Fatah movement.

Sunday was a Muslim holiday, and Hamas officials were not available to react to Mofaz's comments.

During more than three years of violence, Israel has carried out many attacks aimed at leaders of Hamas and Islamic Jihad — often prompting a violent response.

In September 2003, Yassin narrowly escaped an Israeli air strike in the Gaza Strip.

But Israel has greatly reduced the number of targeted killings in recent months. Last month, Mofaz's deputy, Zeev Boim, retracted comments calling for Yassin's assassination, saying later that no decision had been made.

Hamas, responsible for dozens of suicide bombings over the last three years, also appeared to have scaled back its activities until a Hamas female suicide bomber killed four Israelis at a Gaza-Israeli checkpoint Jan. 14.

Yassin encouraged kidnapping Israeli soldiers a day after Israel released 400 Palestinian prisoners as part of an exchange with the Lebanese militant group Hezbollah for a businessman and the bodies of three soldiers.

Yassin said it has become extremely difficult to capture soldiers, apparently trying to explain why Hamas has failed to free the 7,000 Palestinian prisoners in Israeli jails.

Also Sunday, Israeli troops riding jeeps and a tank raided the town of Jericho for the first time in months, killing a Palestinian militant. The fighting forced many residents to stay inside at the start of the four-day Muslim holiday of Eid al-Adha.

The military said troops entered the town to arrest fugitives planning an attack. In the ensuing shootout, one fugitive was killed and another wounded.

There were no Israeli casualties, and the army withdrew in the afternoon. Three houses were destroyed, Palestinians said.

berates her husband for watching television and a Sierra Mist ad featuring a kilt-wearing bagpiper (comedian Patton Oswald) who receives some relief from a fire hydrant during a parade. After seeing the bagpiper hovering above the hydrant, a child tells his father, "That's just wrong."

"It's amazing, actually, how even commercials with animals and children really reinforce traditional American male gender roles," said Bonnie Rough, a grad student who attended the party as a guest. Rough, who accused the Sierra Mist commercial of homophobia, said many companies were taking risks by including classic stereotypes in their advertisements.

Elsewhere in Iowa City, football fans gathered in bars, sipping beer and munching on appetizers as they watched the game.

At Buffalo Wild Wings Grill & Bar, Old Capitol Town Center, it was difficult to discern which team patrons were rooting for after the Patriots' touchdown in the second quarter produced neither cheers nor boos.

"I'd like to see Carolina lose because the Packers should be playing," said Ted Peetz, who drove in from Mount Pleasant to watch the game because his satellite television blocks out local channels.

"It's an event that you have to check out," UI senior Tom Mammaing said he was watching the game for more financial reasons.

"I made a bet with a friend," said Mammaing, who was rooting for the Patriots. "The element of money puts a whole new factor on the game."

At Malone's Irish Pub, 121 Iowa Ave., a more lively crowd made it evident which squad students were supporting.

UI sophomores Sara Preston and Mickey Zawilla were dressed in homemade Carolina Panthers jerseys sporting the name of their favorite player, running back Stephen Davis.

Preston said the women were rooting for the Panthers because their friend goes to the University of North Carolina. She said Davis had a rough start, but they expected more out of him in the second half.

"He's the best," Preston said. "But we also love Tom Brady, only because he's hot."

Professor tells of unsung black heroes in WW II

"When blacks entered into a public narrative, they did so in a very stereotypical way," Phillips said. "In response, black print culture exploded in this era and reached a vast audience."

A question-and-answer session following the lecture inspired at least 10 inquiries about black roles in the war.

"Were there black photographers present during World War II?" one audience member asked. Yes, Phillips said, though they weren't given as much access as their white counterparts. And all photographers were discouraged from taking pictures of black men in battle or at award ceremonies.

Lecture-goers said Phillips presented the issue in a tactful manner.

"She has made us aware of an area that has been suppressed," said Beth Mentzer, a history teacher at Kirkwood Community College.

"She has presented the information in a non-threatening way, not placing blame on any one person or institution."

"I wonder if someone who isn't a self-described 'army brat' or black could do as well, because others may have trouble accessing the information."

The next "Cultural Frameworks for Civil Liberties" lecture will take place on Friday at 4 p.m. in the Becker Communication Studies Building.

The speaker, George Lipsitz, a professor of American studies at the University of California-Santa Cruz, will speak about the failures and consequences of Brown 50 years later.

would be glad to talk about her, but because it's under investigation we cannot," said an employee who refused to give her name.

Alan Fairbanks, the senior vice president of operations for the Olathe, Kan.-based EB Y Realty Group, said "Bickford has functioning alarms at every exit." The organization owns and operates 27 nursing homes across the Midwest — including Bickford.

On the night of Alice Sutton's death, the alarms did not sound. However, Fairbanks said, the facility has a keypad entry system that allows relatives and employees to enter and exit the premise without activating the alarm.

Fred Sutton said his mother did not know the access number to the facility and had no documented diseases affecting her mental abilities.

"All are alarms were working properly," Fairbanks said. The alarms were inspected both by nursing-home employees and by an independent inspector, he said.

Fairbanks said all employees were interviewed and nobody saw Sutton leave the building on the night of her death, adding that she was never caught wandering around at night before this incident.

Fairbanks said he plans on traveling from Kansas to Iowa City to personally follow up the investigation today in an attempt to understand the Jan. 30 events.

"That is the one question we have not yet been able to determine," he said, adding this is the first situation of such magnitude the company has experienced. "The one question we may never know [the answer to]."

"It was a tragic accident," Fairbanks said. "The friends and family are in our prayers."

Blasts rock U.S. allies in Iraq

Patriotic Union of Kurdistan, which are among the best-organized and staunchest U.S. allies in Iraq. Both groups supported the invasion that toppled President Saddam Hussein and put their large militias at the service of U.S. commanders.

The attacks in the crowded auditoriums at the KDP and PUK headquarters came on the first day of the celebration of Eid al-Adha, the festival commemorating the Koran's account of Abraham's willingness to sacrifice his son Ishmael at God's command.

The blasts were the first major strikes in Iraq in which the assailants employed means similar to those used against Israelis by Palestinian suicide bombers. Most suicide bombings in Iraq have involved explosives packed into cars or trucks.

The dead included Sami Abdul Rahman, the deputy prime minister of the Kurdish north. The KDP regional director for Irbil, the city's mayor and his deputy, and the chief of police also died. The PUK dead included the top representative for Irbil.

"It was an attack by terrorists, Al Qaeda and Ansar al-Islam," said Iraqi Foreign Minister Hoshiyar Zubari, who is also a member of the KDP.

Iraqi and U.S. officials have long suspected Ansar, a Kurdish Islamic fundamentalist organization, of providing logistical support for foreign fighters and Iraqi insurgents. They have suggested the group has ties to Al Qaeda and has particular expertise in suicide bombings.

Sunday's bombings were precisely timed to detonate at 10:30 a.m., when large crowds gathered at both headquarters and pressed into the small auditoriums as they wound in a large line to greet the dignitaries.

The bomb at the KDP headquarters exploded first, followed moments later by the explosion at the PUK building. One U.S. military civil affairs officer had just left the KDP building when that blast went off, Kurdish officials said.

The Homeland Security smokescreen

Some measures may be a bigger pain than they're worth

On Jan. 5, the Department of Homeland Security initiated the United States Visitor and Immigrant Status Indicator Technology, or US-VISIT, program. It requires fingerprinting and photographing all foreigners, including students, entering the United States on a visa. Visitors from certain countries are flagged for heightened scrutiny, and specific areas of study, such as bioengineering and nuclear engineering, are earmarked as "sensitive" majors. This new policy delayed many students' re-entry to the United States after the recent semester break, and it has drawn some global criticism.

By October, Homeland Security officials will require every visa holder to have either a machine-readable passport or some method of biological identification, such as fingerprints, retina scans, or even under the skin tattooing to enter the country. The plan is just another in a long line of examples of poorly directed resources and infringements on civil liberties that do little to actually make the country safer.

Homeland Security says the program's goal is to develop an expansive antiterrorism database by tracking the estimated 28 million people who enter the country on visas each year. It will also give visitors a dubious glimpse of our post-9/11 nation. For some, the perceived intrusion is already outweighing the prestige of an American education.

Tracking foreign visitors is an important part of keeping this country safe from terrorists. However, using stricter, more intrusive tracking techniques doesn't necessarily make a better database, nor does it address the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services' lack of manpower. What good is a database if there's no one to look at it? The resources used to biologically tag visitors would be better spent staffing immigration, inspecting cargo shipments coming into the United States, or shoring up border security. It doesn't matter how many million visa holders are tagged when thousands are streaming into the country bypassing immigration.

When a 20-year-old college student planted box cutters and other dangerous items aboard Southwest Airlines jets (where they remained for five weeks despite a signed e-mail to federal authorities detailing what he had done), Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge said the department had "learned a valuable lesson" that could be applied across the country. Unfortunately, that lesson seems to have been lost or forgotten. No changes were made to the invasive, and obviously ineffective, window-dressing airline security. The new international-visitor policy is in-line with the attitude that showier security measures that infringe on civil liberties somehow make up for security failures of the past.

A good first step in fighting rape

The Rape Victim Advocacy Program recently launched a high-profile campaign intended to address the growing problem of sexual assaults, date-rape drugs, and other violent behavior directed against women in Iowa City. Operated through the efforts of volunteers, the endeavor includes six bars in the downtown area and implements the use of signs, printed napkins, and outdoor graffiti to convey messages reminding bar patrons and pedestrians about the issue. It is accompanied by similar activism on the part of the Iowa City Anti-Violence Project, which was started in response to a growing number of hate crimes and amount of violence last year.

The owners of the establishments participating in the initiatives — the Summit, One-Eyed Jakes, Joe's Place, the Sports Column, College Street Billiards Club & Deli, and Bo-James — should be commended for the proactive measures they have taken against the crimes that can occur at places where alcoholic beverages are prevalent. Some members of the community have criticized the program, suggesting that the messages are unnecessary and that it is a wasteful — and in some cases, illegal — use of public space.

However, if there is a better plan to combat the problem, hopefully someone will devise it soon. There were 15 sexual assaults reported from July through September of last year involving the use of date-rape drugs, according to RVAP. That is equivalent to the number that was reported for the entire preceding year, meaning that this is a crime that is rapidly growing in intensity and in need of some decisive action. Officials and volunteers with RVAP have expressed great optimism regarding potential for the success of this campaign, as they should. People who visit local bars or simply walk on the Pedestrian Mall downtown will be reminded that a problem exists and, hopefully, be more cognizant of what measures need to be taken to address it. The messages that have appeared — "consent is sexy," "men can end rape," or simply "stop rape" — are catchy and will remind bar patrons to watch their drinks and be more conscious about the amount of alcohol they consume and the people with whom they associate.

In the wake of last week's incident in which a 22-year-old woman was allegedly kidnapped and sexually assaulted in Iowa City, the severity and frequency of this type of crime has become all too apparent. To prevent future occurrences like this one, we first need to make sure that we — and those around us — are aware of the problem. RVAP and the Anti-Violence Project have taken a solid first step in raising that awareness.

Ad decision not so 'super'

It's that time of year: the Super Bowl. Or as I, and I'm sure many others, like to call it, the "Advertising Bowl." Every year I am excited to see all the new, funny, and creative commercials. What I like the most, though, is discussing the best commercials with coworkers, family, and fellow students the week after. Unfortunately, this year, none of us who watch so closely could see the one ad many, including me, were greatly anticipating.

The commercial is the winner of MoveOn.org's "Bush in 30 Seconds" ad contest, which was chosen by average people and celebrity judges such as Jack Black, Janeane Garofalo, Eddie Vedder, James Carville, and Al Franken. CBS's CEO chose to reject the ad, "Child's Play," which depicts children working in adult jobs such as a factory worker, dishwasher, and garbage collector. At the end of the commercial, it simply says "Guess Who's Going to Pay off President Bush's $1 Trillion Deficit?" I was extremely disappointed when I heard that the ad will not be aired, but then I became angered when I found out additionally that an advertisement from People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals has also been denied air time.

There has been an outpouring of opposition in the last week in politics and the media. MoveOn.org put a full page ad in the Wednesday New York Times, the Boston Globe and San Francisco Chronicle both printed editorials about CBS's decision on Thursday, and a number of politicians have written to CBS about the issue. I hope that while people watched the "Advertising Bowl" this year, they thought a little about the politics behind it and whose voices were not heard.

A naturally infuriating prayer

Re: A Republican Prayer? (letter by Mike Thayer, Jan. 30).
 Thayer asserts in his letter that "one really has to wonder why" Democrats are furious over a prayer read at the Arizona House of Representatives. Aside from the fact that the prayer, which Thayer cites, includes such heavily conservative ideas such as "We have endorsed perversion and called it alternative lifestyle" (one can only assume "perversion" is meant to ridicule and demean any non-heterosexual, non-male dominated, non-Christ-worshipping family), "We have rewarded laziness and called it welfare" (because everyone on welfare must be lazy, right?), and "We have killed our unborn and called it choice," the prayer also includes direct references to a Christian god, "Search us, O God ... cleanse us from every sin ... In the name of your son, the living Savior, Jesus Christ."

So, gee, I don't know for sure, but maybe Democrats are angry because the prayer, read at a state-sponsored legislative function, makes direct reference to a specific religion and seeks to endorse that religion's point of view, thus violating the separation of church and state as outlined in the First Amendment of the Constitution.

I was offended just reading the letter in print. I, and probably most of the Democrats who are "furious" over said prayer, don't mind if people pray, even if state legislators pray. But I would appreciate it if they did it on their own time, quit trying to shove their faith in my face, and stopped trying to pass laws at a state or federal level, such as the proposed amendment defining marriage as a bond between a man and a woman, that are so clearly related to a particular religion's ideas of morality.

Upperclassmen already paying more

When I read about the idea to raise tuition for upperclassmen, I thought, "Gosh, that's the worst new idea to deal with the budget I've ever heard." But on second thought, I guess my tuition has almost doubled since I arrived here in 2000, so maybe it wasn't a "new" idea to raise costs for the upperclassmen after all. How are people supposed to plan how they are going to pay for college with these kinds of things going on?

Making the most of college

MY EYES CLOSED. Right in the middle of class, the professor making eye contact with me, my pupils went all wanky and magnetic and slid toward each other, and only when I managed to pull them rightwards did the prof break his gaze. I think he wanted to make certain that I was OK, in the sense that I wasn't going to actually pass out, and that I indisputably knew he'd seen it happen, despite my baseball cap.

Did I ever.
 And while I spent class periods of one course the following semester irreverently pondering whether the professor looked more like a grasshopper or a preying mantis, I never went to class when my eyes were in danger of crossing. In that spirit, and as it's a new semester, I've got a few tips about being a better student — not a good student, necessarily, but a better one.

ALLISON HEADY

Don't go to class when you shouldn't.
 This includes when your eyes might cross but also when you still can't walk straight to your toothbrush at 9 a.m. Hangover is generally manageable, unless vomit is involved, but still-drunk is always, always a NoGo. And when your cough sounds like a car minus the muffler, that's also a NoGo.

Otherwise, go to class.
 Yes, it's damned cold out, and you'll be peeling off coats, scarves, and sweaters for three minutes after you take your seat. But wouldn't you rather be able to play hooky when the weather finally gets nice and you really really really need a break from cramming? Or yes, you might not be quite up on the material, OK, maybe it's more like you're a few weeks behind, but being in class will be more help for that than making ramen and channel surfing.

Be decent to your teachers.
 Give them respect, if they deserve it. If they don't — and some of them won't — give them decency, whether they're full-on professors, TAs, or associate adjunct visiting blah-blah. Especially if the course is a prereq or a GER where it feels more chore than opportunity (possibly for them as much as you). Example? If you have to give written reasons why you missed class "X" number of times, avoid writing that your eyes would've crossed or that you had Secret Service detail. Be politely honest, a euphemism if there ever was one.

If you don't know, ask.
 Strip mine your education, and not out of any altruism. People from my Professor Preying Mantis to Dr. Phil invoke altruism as a reason to request help — i.e., "someone else probably has the same question/problem," and you should thus seek help because it will benefit not only you but also someone else. Bull. What do you care about the millions of other viewers or the 300 other anonymous students in that auditorium with the windows painted black? Do it for yourself, if not because you care about the actual material (you won't always), then because you want contributions to your student-loan debt to go to a good cause, not a pointless one. And because after your hookup situations evolve beyond the Union or the Column, you'll have something to make small talk about.

Learn the rules.
 That way, you can either work within them or avoid them, as needed. Learn that if your course material is on two-hour library reserve, checking that material out two hours (or less) before the reserve section closes will let you hold onto it overnight. That Zephyr's has low-priced self-serve copies and sheet feeders, which can make copying loose-leaf stuff easy. That you need to take some upper-level courses relatively early on so you can cozy up to full professors — because you will, for one reason or another, need letters of recommendation someday, and no matter how good a teacher a grad student might be, only letters from Ph.D.s count. ■

What is a house exactly? Webster's says it's a building that serves as living quarters for a family or a few families. For the characters in Vadim Perelman's House of Sand and Fog, however, it represents something much more.

The best-selling novel by Andre Dubus III is the basis for this bleak drama, which focuses primarily on two central characters. Jennifer Connelly plays Kathy Nicolo, a woman recovering from abandonment by her husband, as well as battling addiction to alcohol and cigarettes. She wakes up to find herself being evicted from her house as a result of unpaid taxes. Once she's out on the street, her only comfort comes from a married cop named Lester Burdon (Ron Eldard).

Massoud Amir Behrani (Ben Kingsley in an Oscar-nominated role) is the other primary figure in the story. After Kathy's house is put up for auction, he quickly buys it with the intent of fixing-up the property and then reselling it. His hope is that, with the money, he can move to a bigger and better house with his wife (Shohreh Aghdashloo, also Oscar-nominated) and son (Jonathan Ahdout). Kathy tries to persuade Behrani to sell back the house and, of course, he refuses.

I hesitate to describe the story in too much further detail because the less you know, the better. I will say, however, that a few twists and subplots complicate matters, causing a chain reaction of grief and tragedy. The film does not end happily, nor should it, but it ultimately becomes over-the-top to see all this misery increasingly piled on this helpless group of characters.

One aspect I found to be particularly interesting is how the film explores what the house means to both Kathy and Massoud. The house is all Kathy has. It was left to her by her father, and her happiest memories lie within its old walls. Massoud, on the other hand, looks at the house as an opportunity to achieve the American Dream for him and his family.

Also strapped for cash, he works two jobs to provide a comfortable home and put away extra money for his son's college education. Possession of Kathy's house is the first step in his plan for his family's future. Massoud previously worked in his native Iran as an air-force colonel under the shah, but the is absolutely spectacular as Massoud, once again proving how versatile he is. Equally impressive is Connelly, who possesses that rare combination in Hollywood of beauty and talented, daring ambition.

Unfortunately, the film itself is not nearly so flawless as the acting. The last third is quite suspenseful and involving, but the first two acts have an air of emotional distance (not unlike last year's Master & Commander: The Far Side of the World and Cold Mountain). It's initially difficult to warm to the movie's icy core, thanks largely to the slow pace and heavy melodrama. Moments of great cinematography aren't completely absent, but this self-conscious imagery only adds to the film's aloofness. And the title is just too pretentious for my blood.

House of Sand and Fog is worth staying with, though, because it becomes more than just a standard soap opera. Perelman shows us an extreme case of what happens when two people refuse to compromise, and the powerhouse performances make it an effective parable.

E-mail D/I film critic Will Scheibel at: leonard-scheibel@uiowa.edu

Though the acting is flawless, House of Sand and Fog as a film is not.

Behranis were forced to flee after the shah was overthrown.

It would have been easy for the filmmakers to demonize a party and paint either Kathy or Massoud as a one-dimensional bad guy. Instead, both characters emerge as sympathetic, multilayered characters with real fears and desires, one no worse than the other. Kingsley

Dracula: Pages from a Virgin's Diary

To fuse Bela Lugosi with Mikhail Baryshnikov is no small feat, but in Dracula: Pages from a Virgin's Diary, Canadian director Guy Maddin and the Royal Winnipeg Ballet are up to the task in a film that revels in its eccentricity and embraces its two facets — film and dance — as art.

A silent black-and-white rendition of the Bram Stoker's story seems a bit out of place in our over-the-top and gratuitous world of vampire movies. From Wesley Snipes' superfluous Blade series to last year's over-stylized Underworld, Hollywood seems hell-bent on force-feeding audiences Gothic blood-sucking archetypes from Transylvania.

Maddin's film, in essence, becomes a reaction to the Hollywood vampire norm. His tale strips Stoker's Dracula to its barest core, infusing it through dance with a living eroticism. Maddin suggests that ballet is itself a silent film telling a tale without words — relying instead on the faces of its actors to emote feelings of love, pain, and tenderness. The coupling here of dance and film adds a new dynamic to the now clichéd story of Dracula and brings the legend back from the land of mediocrity.

As original as Dracula: Pages from a Virgin's Diary feels, it still remains remarkably close to Stoker's original 1897 novel. Innocent Lucy Westernra (Tara Birtwhistle) falls under the spell of the traveling vampire Count Dracula (Wei-Qiang Zhang), whose visit to England seems to be more pleasure than business.

When Lucy is bitten on the neck by Dracula, doctor extraordinaire Van Helsing (David Moroni) goes about attempting to save her from the clutches of evil with the help of blood transfusions, garlic, and a lot of crosses.

Dracula lasts a brief 75 minutes but brings to the screen a myriad of images that prove to be as effective as most films twice as long.

The film's second act follows the love affair of real-estate agent Jonathan Harker (Johnny Wright) and Mina Murray (Cindy Marie Small) as they fight against the lord of the undead. Harker, who plays a much larger role in the novel than he does in Maddin's film, is allowed to mature into more of a tortured rape victim than ever before. The dance between Harker and Mina elates in a sexuality that is both tormented and amorous without ever feeling strained. This dichotomy would be difficult to approach in most filmic endeavors, but here it is displayed brilliantly.

The ambiance of the film relies heavily on its use of grainy film and lens filters that hark back to the 1922 vampire film Nosferatu. Maddin seems more than comfortable with this comparison; he even pokes fun at the silent films of yore with humorous placards that relate what is being spoken in the film. The tongue-in-cheek nature of some of Dracula does not take away from its artistic mission but instead adds to the inventiveness of the film.

Dracula: Pages from a Virgin's Diary lasts a brief 75 minutes but brings to the screen a myriad of images that prove to be as effective as most films twice as long. Maddin places an importance on every frame of his film, and we are blown away by the cinematic mastery of the entire piece. There truly is art in film, and this Dracula displays it in full black-and-white regalia.

OLYMPIC QUALIFIER

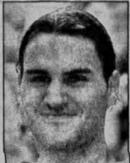

Williams wins gold at Olympic qualifier

(AP) — Iowa assistant wrestling coach Joe Williams wrestled to a gold-medal finish at the first Olympic qualifier in Slovakia on Sunday. Williams and Chris Bono (Iowa/Sunkist Kids) qualified for the final two men's freestyle weight classes. Williams (Iowa City, Iowa/Sunkist Kids) won the gold medal with a 3-0 win over 2003 Pan American Championships gold medalist Ivan Fundora of Cuba. Williams, a 2001 world bronze medalist, posted a thrilling 4-3 quarterfinal win over Krystian Brzozowski of Poland before defeating Armenia's Arayik Gevorgyan, 9-4, in the semifinals. Against Brzozowski, Williams fell behind 3-0 on points scored off of Williams' throw attempt. Williams fired back with four second-period points to earn the win and qualify the United States for the 2004 Olympic Games at his weight class of 163 pounds. "I am glad I qualified the weight class. Now I can focus on making the Olympic team and realizing my lifelong dream," Williams said.

Cavey had 21 points and Faulkner added 19 as the Hawkeyes (12-7, 6-2 Big Ten) scored the last 11 points, including nine from the foul line, in their fifth-straight win. The Spartans (16-4, 6-3) were allowing 53.6 points per game before surrendering a season-high total. They also shot just .310 from the field and .133 from 3-point range.

Vinatieri's final-second field goal lifts New England to second Super Bowl title in three seasons

BY EDDIE PELLIS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — What curse, Boston? Glitz and glitter off the field, a sensational game on it — this may have been the best Super Bowl Sunday of them all. Adam Vinatieri kicked a 41-yard field goal with four seconds left to lift the New England Patriots to a 32-29 victory over the Carolina Panthers.

These were supposed to be boring, defensive-minded teams, but this one wound up feeling as much like a backyard game between brothers as the biggest game of the year.

The teams went back and forth, back and forth, scoring 37 points over the last 15 minutes, with big plays coming from the most likely and unlikely of sources. Mike Vrabel, an unheralded linebacker, caught a touchdown. Before that, Jake Delhomme and Mushin Muhammad hooked up for an 85-yard pass, the longest in Super Bowl history, to give the Patriots a brief 22-21 lead.

Vinatieri had surely been here before. Two years ago, he kicked the game-winner in New England's 20-17 win over the St. Louis Rams to give the Patriots their first championship. By many accounts, that game was the most exciting Super Bowl ever. Now, that's up for debate, something of a surprise considering these were two teams who prided themselves on defense, slugging it out, and a relatively humdrum style of play. Their dramatics gave the 85 million or so Americans who watched the game plenty to talk about around the watercooler today. Something more, that is, than the commercials, singers, and stars that make the Super Bowl not just a game but America's biggest unofficial holiday. Beyoncé and P. Diddy showed up and shared the stage with the two Super Bowl teams, who played in a gleaming new $450 million stadium with a retractable roof. Janet Jackson

Please, no more 'Brady Bunch' jokes

BY BARRY WILNER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — Tom Brady is getting quite a collection of playoff wins and Super Bowl MVP trophies. The New England quarterback has won all six of his postseason games, including two Super Bowls in three years. He threw for 354 yards and three touchdowns Sunday in leading the Patriots past the Carolina Panthers, 32-29.

Brady also made up for a critical interception in the Carolina end zone by guiding the Patriots to a go-ahead score with 2:51 remaining.

"We realized we had done it so many times this year," he said about coming back. "We knew we could come up with the plays."

When the scrappy Panthers came back to tie it, Brady engineered a 37-yard drive in the final minute. His 17-yard completion to Deion Branch on third-down — against a shockingly soft defensive alignment — set up Adam Vinatieri's 41-yard field goal to win it with 4 seconds remaining.

In all, Brady was 32-48,

Hawks silence Lions

BY DONOVAN BURBA
THE DAILY IOWAN

Who needs big men, anyway? With Jared Reiner hurt and Sean Sonderleiter AWOL, the Hawkeyes may only have one player taller than 6-7 left on the roster, but Iowa more than made up for the lack of height with its outside shooting in a Jan. 31 77-58 win over Penn State (9-9, 3-4). The Hawks shot an amazing 71 percent from the field in the first half, including 10 3's, and the Nittany Lions never threatened.

Leading the way once again was guard Jeff Horner, who tied an Iowa record by nailing all six of his shots from beyond the arc. The sophomore led the Hawks with 20 points and dished out eight assists. Iowa coach Steve Alford praised his point guard's performance, which came just three nights after a dismal three-point, five-turnover game at Michigan.

"He's guarding as much as he can guard, he's playing 38 minutes, and now his offense has kicked in to the point where he's tying Iowa records," Alford said. "Sometimes, it's all about his first pass, his first assist. If he gets an assist before he gets a turnover, I think that probably affects him."

Horner wasn't the only one with a hot hand in the first half, though. Horner and fellow guard Brody Boyd each were a perfect 3-3 from downtown, and Pierre Pierce and Glen Worley had two each, as well. Penn State didn't make a field goal until 6:08 into the contest. Iowa went into the locker room up 45-22 and even outrebounded the much larger Nittany Lions, 21-19.

Sonderleiter's future with team questionable

BY KELLY BEATON
THE DAILY IOWAN

Many elements of sports prove to be overrated once the whistle is blown and the game actually starts.

Steve Alford's squad better hope depth proves to be one of them in the remainder of the season.

The Hawkeyes' roster has been worn nearly threadbare after a whirlwind two weeks that has seen Iowa lose Jared Reiner to stress-fracture surgery and Mike Henderson and Nick DeWitz to academic ineligibility.

Sonderleiter out indefinitely

"Iowa's shooting touch was exceptional, but equally as surprising was how many open looks the Hawkeyes saw. Horner, Boyd, and Worley all had several seconds to set and shoot from 3-point land.

"I think we did a good job of screening, and cutting, and things like that," Worley said. "Our offense has been good the whole year — it's just been a defense problem."

"It gets kind of contagious, guys hitting shots," said Pierce, who finished with 17 points and six assists. "And when you hit shots, you want to get back and play good defense, and in the first half we did a good job of doing that."

The 6-4 Pierce was given the daunting task of guarding Penn State's leading scorer, Jan Jagla. Pierce has had tough defensive assignments before, but at 7 feet tall, Jagla made for an interesting matchup.

"We thought Pierre could get into [Jagla], body him, pressure him, play a physical game with him, instead of allowing him to shoot the spot-up shot and do some of the things that I think he would rather do on the perimeter," Alford said.

Alford's strategy paid off, as Pierce held Jagla to 11 points on a dismal 5-17 shooting.

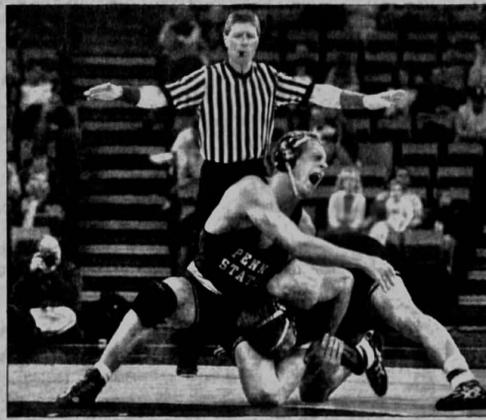

"I just tried to get up into him, because he could probably just shoot right over me," Pierce said. "I tried to keep a hand up in his shooting pocket and make him drive."

On several occasions, Jagla simply threw the ball in the general direction of the hoop, and in one memorable sequence, the Nittany Lions were whistled for two consecutive shot-clock violations, which they followed up with an air ball the next time down the floor.

The visitors rallied late, led by guard Marlon Smith's 20 second-half points, but Penn State never got within 16 after the break.

"The second half [we] decided to go and compete, but it's too late," said Penn State coach Ed DeChellis, who hasn't won a conference road game in 19-straight tries. "You're down 20-some against a very good basketball team on the road, you're going to have a very hard time making up those points."

Hawkeyes dominate Big Ten opponents

THE DAILY IOWAN

The Iowa wrestling team captured a pair of convincing victories over Penn State (23-11) and Michigan State (31-6) this weekend at Carver-Hawkeye Arena, and they may have a pink towel to thank.

Following a loss to Oklahoma State earlier in the season, Iowa coach Jim Zalesky began the custom of slapping his wrestlers with a pink-colored towel if they weren't showing enough intensity during practice, meaning they would have to take a seat in the bleachers and watch their teammates compete.

Prior to this weekend's competitions, the entire squad was pink toweled, and that may have just done the trick.

"They're not kidding when they bring that out," Iowa sophomore Paul Bradley said following the Michigan State victory. "I know it sounds funny, but you got pink toweled, you're not very happy sitting on those bleachers watching your teammates compete. He sat our whole team down just the other day, and we don't like it. I think that's really starting to push us in the room even harder."

Bradley's intensity was apparent in Sunday's meet when he flexed his arms to the 4,572 fans in attendance after defeating the Spartans' Nate Mesyn on a takedown as time expired in overtime.

"I really think it was a breakthrough match with me coming down to getting that

Elway, Sanders elected to Pro Football Hall of Fame

HOUSTON (AP) — The stirring comeback and spectacular escape were unnecessary this time around. John Elway and Barry Sanders were elected into the Pro Football Hall of Fame without a sweat.

As expected, two of the NFL's most dominating and exciting players made it in on Jan. 31 on their first attempt.

Elway, the king of the comeback, and Sanders, the master of escape, cemented their status among the all-time greats. They were joined by Bob Brown and Carl Eller.

"Until you said no way, or I was in the locker room taking my uniform off, I was going to try to find a way to win it," said Elway, the winningest quarterback in NFL history with 148 victories.

"I want to tell every guy I played with, 'Thanks,'" he said.

Elway played in five Super Bowls, losing the first three then winning two in a row as his 16-year career wound down. Sanders was the first player to rush for 1,000 yards in his first 10 seasons, leading the league four times. In 1997, he was co-MVP with Brett Favre after rushing for 2,053 yards, only the third player to exceed 2,000 yards in a season. He ran for 100 yards or more in 14-consecutive games.

Sanders retired at 31, in his prime, calling it "the right time."

"When I think about the Hall of Fame, it seems like that's something that happens to someone else," Sanders said. "You think Dick Butkus, Walter Payton, names of that light. To be here, I truly feel, in some ways a little out of place."

Speaking about himself and Elway, he said: "They saw something that was unique in us, something they might not see on any old Sunday."

What was unique was that Elway and Sanders made the extraordinary look easy.

"When the game was on the line, he was like Michael Jordan," said Dan Reeves, who coached Elway in Denver's three Super Bowl losses. "He wanted the football. In those situations, I don't know if I know anyone that did a better job."

That's not how life in the NFL began for Elway.

Though he was the top pick in the 1983 draft, he was benched at half-time in his first NFL game — and really didn't mind.

"I said, 'Auntie Em, take me home,'" Elway recalled. "I don't want to be here any longer, staring at Jack Lambert drooling spit."

Elway led the Broncos on 47 fourth-quarter winning or tying drives, including the famous 98-yard march that helped Denver win the 1986 AFC Championship in Cleveland. He was the 1987 league MVP, and he will be the only Bronco in the Hall of Fame when he is inducted this summer.

Iowa men fall to No. 4 Oklahoma

BY NICK RICHARDS
THE DAILY IOWAN

In a match that could have national-title implications, the third-ranked men's gymnastics team fell on Jan. 31 in the Field House to two-time defending national champion and fourth-ranked Oklahoma, losing to the Sooners, 217.50-214.55.

The men received several good individual efforts, winning four of the six events and the all-around competition, but they looked sluggish overall as a team. "I'm a little disappointed," said Iowa coach Tom Dunn. "We do some really hard things on the floor exercise, and we hit them all last week. Today, we hit very little."

The Hawkeyes started the meet with the floor exercise and quickly found themselves in an early hole. The floor team, ranked third in the country, struggled with its consistency, putting up a score of 35.900, more than a point lower than the team put up last weekend against Nebraska. "We need to work on our consistency," Dunn said. Highlighting Iowa's performance was junior Linas Gaveika, who won the pommel horse with a 9.275 and the bar with a score of 9.650. His first-place finishes propelled him to the all-around win with a score of 53.925. The all-around score set a school record, breaking the old mark of 53.5 he had tied earlier this year. Sophomore Michael Reavis also turned in a solid performance, winning two events, the vault and the floor exercise. His score of 9.55 on the floor broke the school record set earlier this year by fellow sophomore Michael McNamara. Despite those wins, Iowa struggled with team depth and consistency. The Hawkeyes had only three other gymnasts finish in the top three of any event. Iowa was still in the meet with the parallel bars and the horizontal bars remaining, but lost both. The top two Hawkeyes on the parallel bars, senior Matt Metzger and Reavis, both missed their routines. "We were in the meet at that time," Dunn said. "We needed a good parallel bars and horizontal bar, and they beat us on both of those events."

Iowa also lost the services of junior Kenny Lin, who had been a steady performer on the rings; he injured his leg in practice early last week. Lin had set the school record on rings earlier in the year and placed third in the event against Nebraska last week. While the team struggled, Dunn remained upbeat. "It's still January," he said. "We just need some technical refinement right now."

The team will return to action Friday for the Winter Cup Challenge in Las Vegas. Iowa's next meet in the Field House is set for Feb. 21 against Illinois. E-mail DI reporter Nick Richards at: nick-richards@uiowa.edu

IOWA WOMEN'S GYMNASTICS

Iowa dominates NC State
The eighth-ranked GymHawks put on another strong performance on Jan. 31, dominating North Carolina State, 196.775-193.725. Iowa won every team and individual event and finished with a team score that was the second-best score in school history. The Hawkeye vault team also finished with the second-best score in school history, scoring a 49.375. "We made a difference in landings," said Hawkeye coach Larissa Libby. "We executed in the air and paid more attention to detail. That was the biggest difference between this meet and the Michigan meet."

Senior Stephanie Gran, coming off Big Ten Gymnast of the Week honors against Michigan, turned in another stellar performance, winning two events, tying for another, and winning the all-around competition. Gran won the uneven bars with a score of 9.90 and the floor exercise with a 9.95 mark. On the balance beam, Gran and fellow senior Alexis Maday tied for the win with a 9.90. Gran's winning score of 39.65 in the all-around competition tied a school record and set a career-high for Gran. "Stephanie obviously did a good job, tying the school record," Libby said. "But I don't think one person stood out."

Ben Roberts/The Daily Iowan

Hawkeye forward Glen Worley drives through the paint on Jan. 31 at Carver-Hawkeye Arena. Worley's roommate, Sean Sonderleiter, has taken an indefinite leave of absence from the team.

Now Iowa can add one more name to the list of the MIA: Sean Sonderleiter.

The senior center from Des Moines left the team over the weekend, citing personal problems.

After missing a mandatory team film session on Jan. 29, Sonderleiter told Alford he needed to take some time away from the team.

"I've only spoken to him on Thursday," Alford said after Iowa's game with Penn State. "He's trying to handle his issues, and obviously, we were preparing for a game, so I really have nothing else left to report."

Sonderleiter's mother, Kathy Sonderleiter, told The Daily Iowan on Sunday that her son is still enrolled as a student at the UI and will be in class today. She added that there are many elements that added to his deciding to step away from the Hawkeye program, but she would not elaborate.

"It's personal," she said. "I really don't know. It's multifaceted."

Alford has left the door open for the 6-9 senior to return to the team, but Sonderleiter's return appears doubtful.

"I don't know if I expect to see him in uniform," said Iowa guard Jeff Horner following Iowa's 77-58 victory over Penn State on Jan. 31. "We have to prepare as if he's not going to come back."

Along with the coaching staff, no Iowa team members had spoken to Sonderleiter since his departure from the squad as of their game with Penn State. Roommate Glen Worley said he has neither seen nor spoken to Sonderleiter since Iowa returned home following a contest at Michigan on Jan. 28.

"Guys have tried to get in touch with and make sure everything's all right with him," said Iowa guard Pierre Pierce.

One of Sonderleiter's sisters passed away last August, and that may have played a part in him needing to take time away from basketball.

"Our hearts go out to Sean; we hope everything goes well with him," Worley said. "We wish the best for him, but we have to move on."

Sonderleiter had been earning significant minutes in the wake of Reiner's surgery on Jan. 16, making his departure even more puzzling. The Des Moines native played 33 minutes against Michigan. He was leading the Big Ten in field-goal percentage (73.1 percent) and averaging 5.4 points and 4.4 rebounds.

The most recent defection from Iowa's roster leaves the Hawkeyes with just seven scholarship players.

"It's a big loss. It seems like we're being hit every time," Pierce said in the wake of the Hawkeyes' dismantling of the Nittany Lions. "Guys just have to step up their play on the rebounding side, on the defensive side, and on the offensive side. We just need to keep stepping up our play overall, and just keep playing like we did tonight."

"It's definitely a big surprise, but I think we've got a group of guys now who can rally around that and play tough and play hard like we did tonight."

last takedown and not giving up anything," said Bradley, who was one of the nine Hawkeyes to record a victory against Michigan State.

"I was pretty pumped up. I was dead tired, but it felt great to really give these fans something they deserve from the Iowa wrestling program."

Bradley showed aggressiveness early on in the match by grabbing Mesyn's leg and dragging him back towards the center of the mat where he recorded a takedown.

"I think we're being more aggressive," Zalesky said. "I think we're fighting harder and I think we're winning the tough matches and that's what you want to see this time of year."

Redshirt freshman Mark Mueller, who competed for only his fourth time this season in place of Cole Pape at 165 pounds, won his second match in a row in bold fashion.

With 1:45 remaining in the third period, Mueller, who was up 10-0 on Mike Escobedo, began screaming after he felt a pop in his left knee. After a brief injury time-out, Mueller battled out the remainder of the match on one good leg and recorded a 10-1 victory.

"Scoring points was going to be difficult, I knew that," Mueller said. "I was just going to hold on to get the win I guess."

With only three regular season meets remaining, the Hawkeyes are glad to get a boost of confidence.

"I think it really brings us together," said heavyweight Ryan Fuller, who recorded his first victory in four attempts. "It really shows us that we can be a dominant team."

Bonus points:

While a majority of the Hawkeyes will have a 12-day break from competition, senior Luke Eustice will compete at the 38th-annual NWCA all-star dual tonight at the UNI-Dome in Cedar Falls. The 125-pounder will face Michigan's Mark Moos, whom he defeated 13-3 last week in Ann Arbor.

SUPER BOWL

was there, too, and CBS apologized when another star, Justin Timberlake, tore off part of her top at the end of the halftime show and exposed her breast.

Shortly after that, a streaker came to the middle of the field and delayed the start of the second half. He was leveled by New England linebacker Matt Chatham, then hogtied and arrested by Houston police.

It was strange stuff, but it would wind up as barely a blip on this game.

Surely, the TV ratings will hold up. CBS knew the Super Bowl was the gold standard of the Nielsen Ratings, but when a game is as close, and taut, and exciting as this, the numbers get even better.

Those who watched it all saw New England win its 15th-straight game, a single-season streak matched only by the 1972 Miami Dolphins, who went 17-0.

The Patriots went ahead 21-10 early in the fourth quarter, and the game looked routine. But the Panthers, their offense nearly dormant for three quarters, marched down for a touchdown to pull within 21-16, missing the 2-point try that would have made it a 3-point game.

After getting the ball back, Delhomme saw Muhammad streaking free down the sideline and threw a beautiful, arcing pass that hit him in stride — six more points for a 22-21 lead.

But the fun was just getting started. Brady calmly led the Patriots down for a go-ahead score, to Vrabel, the linebacker who lined up on offense, ran a short pattern and made a nice, two-handed catch with the grace of a receiver. Carolina scored, then after a short kickoff, it was Vinatieri's turn — again. He split the uprights and more than made up for a pair of misses earlier in the game.

The finish and the exciting game were befitting of the party that surrounded it.

One survey showed Americans nearly double their consumption of cocktail franks during Super Bowl week and spend $5 million more than normal on tortilla chips.

Most of that is consumed in front of the TV, where an estimated 100 million viewers would get the best view of the commercials that have become the most anticipated moments of the Super Bowl. CBS sold 30-second spots for an average of $2.3 million.

Brady completes clutch throws

with 5-yard touchdown throws to Branch and David Givens and a 1-yarder to, of all people, linebacker Mike Vrabel, who reported as a tight end.

It was a more masterly performance than in 2002, when Brady, then a first-year starter, helped New England upset St. Louis 20-17. Vinatieri also won that game on a late field goal, from 48 yards.

"I think each game is different," Brady said. "To win this the way we did is incredible, unbelievable. A great all-around game.

"I don't know how I do it." And just as against the Rams, Brady made clutch throws throughout the final quarter in taking New England to its 15th-straight victory.

Indeed, he made sure the interception by Reggie Howard with 7:38 to go did not cost New England the championship. Carolina turned that pickoff into an 85-yard touchdown pass from Jake Delhomme to Muhsin Muhammad, the longest play in Super Bowl history.

With Carolina on top 22-21, Brady went 6-8 on a 68-yard drive. He converted two third downs on the series with perfect passes, then found Vrabel in the front portion of the end zone.

After Delhomme rallied Carolina again and the first overtime in Super Bowl history loomed, Brady and New England got a break. John Kasay's kickoff sailed out of bounds, giving the Patriots the ball at their 40 with 1:08 left.

Brady had two 13-yard completions to Troy Brown, leading to the 17-yarder to Branch when the Panthers played a conservative defense.

IOWA SPORTS

Women's tennis rolls

The Iowa women's tennis team remains on a roll after defeating a frustrated Drake squad, 7-0, on Sunday. The Hawkeyes set the tone early by winning all three doubles matches.

At the No. 1 spot, Meg Racette and Hillary Mintz defeated Annali de Bruyn and Zorana Stefanovic, 8-0. Deni Alexandrova and Anastasia Zhukova took down Rebekah Thomas and Eveline Rusdianto at 8-0 as well. Jennifer Hodgman and Hilary Tyler did their part at the No. 3 spot, defeating Cheen Alkhatib and Izele Van Blerk, 8-3.

Iowa's rout continued in the singles, winning all matches in straight sets. Racette won (6-0, 6-2) against de Bruyn at the No. 1 spot. Mintz triumphed at No. 2 over Stefanovic (6-4, 6-0), while Tyler did the same winning 6-0, 6-1 versus Thomas.

At the No. 4 spot, Anastasia Zhukova made an outstanding debut, defeating Eveline Rusdianto (6-1, 6-1). Alexandrova won a near flawless match 6-0, 6-1 against Cheen Alkhatib, while Hodgman won by default (4-1) against an injured Izele Van Blerk.

Hawkeye coach Paul Wardlaw believes that the key to the season-opening victory was capturing all the doubles matches. This is a big improvement considering that the Hawkeyes won only two doubles points during last spring's season.

"It was a good start in the doubles. What was impressive is that we didn't relax going into the singles," Wardlaw said. "I was pleased with the intensity that we got."

on Sunday afternoon at the Recreation Building.

Iowa coach Steve Houghton said the team showed improvement over the previous weekend's dual meet, and he hopes the Hawkeyes continue to get better. The Gophers are traditionally one of the elite teams in the Big Ten, and he was pleased his team was competitive.

"Minnesota is definitely one of the top teams in the conference, and it competes at the national level, too," Houghton said. "Considering all that, I thought we played a really tough match."

"I think we really took a big step forward from last week. We played a much better team and played a much closer match."

Iowa (0-2) was led by freshmen Jonny Hoak and Ryan Reid in both singles and doubles. Hoak won in the No. 3 singles match (6-3, 6-4) over one of the conference's top recruits, Houghton said. Reid earned a victory in the No. 6 singles match (6-4, 3-6, [11-9]) in his first match since coming off an injury.

The duo also banded together to win the No. 3 doubles match. Hoak and Reid accounted for all three of the Hawkeyes' wins and team points.

Houghton was impressed with his team's all-around effort and hopes its high intensity continues.

"I've been telling our guys all week long that it can be done, but you have to start with the mindset," he said. "That was the important thing — we weren't intimidated by them at all. That goes a long way toward being successful."

Track teams crown individual champs

The men's track and field team crowned three individual champions this weekend at the UNI Invitational in Cedar Falls. Senior Derrick Burks won the 60 meters for the second time this year, posting a 6.87. Senior Brad Daufeldt won the weight throw with a 59-9½. Junior Tony Rakaric won the mile with a time of 4:17.83. Included in those three champions were 19 top-five finishes.

"We had a lot of guys step up this weekend," said Iowa coach Larry Wiecezorek. "I would like to have seen a little bit more, but we're starting to see more of that consistency."

Perhaps the most encouraging time was senior Zach Digney's, who set a personal-record in the 60 (6.94) and a 21.86 in the 200 meters, which tied him for ninth all-time in the 200 meters. Both of Digney's times placed him second in his events.

"Maybe our best performer of the meet was Zach," Wiecezorek said. "That 200 was the best performance of the day for us."

Freshman Rob Long also placed second in his event, running a 1:21.48 in the 600 meters. Junior Matt O'Hollern placed second in the 800 meters, running a 1:57.37.

"We need more people to step up like Zach Digney did," said Wiecezorek.

The women's team, competing in both the UNI Invitational and the Illini Invitational in Champaign, won an event in each. The women placed fourth at the Illini Invitational, scoring 51 points, while host Illinois won the event with 160 points. In addition to their two individual winners, the women had 13 top-five finishes.

Senior Shellene Williams won an event for the third-straight week, taking the 60 meters at the Illini Invitational. Her time was a collegiate-best 7.50. Freshman Chloe Millward won the 800 meters at the UNI Invitational, winning with a time of 2:24.07.

Both teams return to action next weekend, heading to Lincoln for the Husker Invitational on Saturday. The field includes 19 teams.

Hawkeyes fall to Big Ten foe

BY JASON BRUMMOND

Abby Van Maaren participates in the women's preliminary 100 butterfly at the Field House last season.

The Iowa women's swimming team was faced with a lot of emotions on Sunday. The team didn't return from Evanston, Ill., where it took on Northwestern, until late on Jan. 31. Sunday was Senior Day for four team members, and the Hawkeyes' head coach — Garland O'Keefe — was not present because of a family emergency.

However, the emotional whirlwind did not propel the Hawkeyes to upset conference opponent Minnesota on Sunday at the UI Field House. The Hawkeyes lost, 172-127, in their dual-meet finale, after being defeated by Northwestern, 163-128, on Jan. 31.

"We put together our strongest lineup, and both meets were going into as heavy underdogs," assistant coach Marc Long said. "We really wanted to put [Northwestern and Minnesota] on the ropes as long as possible — we weren't going to make it easy for them — and I thought we did that."

Against Minnesota, the Hawkeyes were led by junior Jennifer Skolaski, senior Christie Hooper, and strong performances in the relay events.

Skolaski swam to three first-place finishes — the 100 backstroke, 500 freestyle, and the 200 individual medley. Hooper collected a victory in the 200 freestyle and earned third place in the 100 freestyle.

The Hawkeyes collected first and third-place points in the 200 medley relay and second and third in the 200 freestyle relay.

Individual results against Northwestern were not available.

Sunday was the last meet for Iowa seniors Michelle Bagi, Lisa Haunz, Hooper, and Jackie Molzahn. The quartet were members of O'Keefe's first recruiting class at Iowa.

"They really stepped it up," Long said. "They love this old pool, and it was nice to at least give a good performance in the pool. It would have been nice to get them a win, but they've been great for the program. All of them having contributed in many different ways."

With the pair of losses, Iowa drops to 3-7 overall and 2-5 in the Big Ten. The Hawkeyes have been defeated in five-consecutive dual meets. Iowa will not compete again until Feb. 19-21 in Minneapolis at the Big Ten championships.

"It's frustrating to lose a meet and rely on a moral victory, but these are two of the top programs in the Big Ten," Long said. "All things considered, I'm happy with the individual swims heading into the Big Tens."

Iowa men down Missouri

The Iowa men's swimming team defeated Missouri on Jan. 30 in Columbia, Mo., to improve its dual-meet record to 8-3. Hawkeye coach John Davey said it was a difficult environment and facility to compete in.

"I was pleased with the result," Davey said. "We had a little bit of a tough time at the beginning of the meet — it's a tough pool to swim in. They definitely have the home-advantage down there."

Junior Andrei Ciurca led Iowa by swimming to first-place finishes in the 100 and 200 backstrokes. Tomasz Dzedzic won the 100 butterfly, and Cameron Dye earned a victory in the 500 freestyle. Davey said Mariusz Muras' 200 butterfly and Trevor Haley's 400 individual-medley victories were the best performances of the meet for the Hawkeyes.

"We did the job we had to do, and there were some exceptional swims," Davey said. "On the whole, we were pleased, and we can move on to next weekend now with our last dual meet."

WHAT THE HOWARD DEAN CAMPAIGN IS DOING TO SOLVE FINANCIAL WOES

By Jesse Ammerman

- Paying staffers with Powerball tickets and smokes from this point forward.
- Offering bootleg Paris Hilton tapes for only $29.95 at Dean Web site.
- Sharing vision — and plasma — for America at donation centers nationwide.
- Out: shooting the breeze with smarmy talk-show hosts.
- In: chewing pig entrails for cash on "Fear Factor."
- Replacing latest campaign manager with Taco Bell shift supervisor found in Joplin, Mo.
- Trading in "like new" campaign bus for bitchin' '91 Ford Aerostar.
- Recycling cans in all seven states with primaries this Tuesday.
- Celebrating second-place finishes with Pabst instead of champagne.
- Looking into these high-rolling "special interest" groups that Bush and Kerry are so crazy about.
- Replacing Dean with more bankable star, such as Hilary Duff or Ashton Kutcher.
- No more frivolous extra toppings on orders from Pizza Hut.

quote of the day

One grant pays people to watch pornography and drink alcohol before watching pornography.

horoscopes

Monday, February 2, 2004 by Eugenia Last

- ARIES (March 21-April 19): You can make some personal changes that will ensure a better future. A different group of people will have a lasting effect on your approach in the future. Adaptation will equal something very special.
- TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Someone may try to persuade you to invest in something that is not to your advantage. Focus more on what you are doing currently rather than looking for easy money.
- GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You are likely to have the wrong impression about someone. Don't jump to conclusions. Ride out the storm, and you will not encounter the discord of jealousy or thoughtlessness.
- CANCER (June 21-July 22): Don't let everyone in on your secrets. The more you reveal, the more you will have to worry about in the future. The changes you make may not be liked by everyone.
- LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You can enjoy the company of the people you meet if you get involved in organizations you believe in. Your leadership qualities will not go unnoticed, and you will be admired for your tenacity.
- VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): This is not the day to ruffle feathers or get involved in something you can do nothing about. You will face opposition no matter which way you turn. Interfering be a waste of time and energy.
- LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Learning and interacting with knowledgeable people should be your goal. The more you can do with others, the further ahead you'll get. The possibility of striking up a good connection looks promising.
- SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You may not be on top of your money matters today. Make sure you have the funds before making a big-ticket purchase. Don't be too proud to accept sound advice.
- SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You can expect to face all sorts of little problems today. Don't push your luck when dealing with others. Complaints can be expected, and patience will be needed.
- CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): How you deal with your colleagues will be the barometer for your success. Your confident approach to everything you do will bring you added popularity.
- AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Brainstorm with friends. Experiment with your looks, and you will improve your image and gain plenty of attention. Romance will be calling.
- PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Proceed with caution, especially if you have to work alongside others. You are likely to face some problems with a loved one. Changes made today will be costly.
