The Cousin Arnold Show
When: 9-10 p.m.,
Wednesday
Where: Public Access TV

The television cameras glare at two naked dolls set in a provocative position and the empty Jack Daniel's bottles that sit on top of the desk for "The Cousin Arnold Show" — a live, censor's nightmare that runs every Wednesday from 9-10 p.m. on Public Access TV.

Behind the props sits Cousin Arnold, a.k.a. Andy Small, a middle-aged man who dances and takes a shot of Jack Daniel's while a caller sings a 36-word song, using the f-word as its only lyric. Small, faintly resembling a chubby John Travolta, thanks the caller quickly and hangs up.

"That was a prime example. You can say the f-word — we'll cut you off if you do — just as long as it's not in reference to 'f-ing,'" said Small, referring to a recent FCC ruling on television obscenity.

It's this type of humor that prompted PATV Director Rene Paine and board to recommend moving the show from 8 p.m. to its new time slot at 9 p.m., as of last week.

"The board wasn't too happy. There was one particular show on last season that I maybe got a little bit too drunk, and clothing was removed," Small said. "You got to have a certain taste to find me tasteful while naked, and I don't think it was the 8-9 group."

Paine said she agrees the show is "a little more appropriate to a later audience," although she noted that PATV has no power to censor its programming. PATV officials can encourage but not force the show's hosts to change their time slot or content, she said. In order to force a change, the Johnson County attorney would have to decide that the show was breaking federal laws, she said.

"YOU CAN SAY THE F-WORD, WE'LL CUT YOU OFF IF YOU DO — JUST AS LONG AS ITS NOT IN REFERENCE TO 'F-ING.'"
— Andy Small, "Cousin Arnold"

She said the hands-off approach is used because "true public access is about freedom of expression." She added that no viewers have yet complained about the show.

Aside from the FCC ruling, Small and co-host Josh Kennedy, a.k.a. "Monkey Boy," on Feb. 4 brought up pornographic websites, masturbation, the Paris Hilton sex tape, alien probing, and, of course, sexual orientation. "There's a theme that runs through the show: It's called make fun of Monkey's metrosexuality," Kennedy said with a chuckle.

IOWA CITY MURDER/SUICIDE Victims lived in 'tight-knit' group

BY TINA STEIN

Embroidery Royale, 2415 Heinz Rd., at 9:45 p.m. Feb. 7.

A neighbor of a man who police say shot his wife's boss and then killed himself was part of a "tight-knit" group of 17 middle-class homes in southeastern Iowa City.

An autopsy report that the Iowa City police released Monday night said Keith "K.C." Odle, 39, shot Mark Bean, 48, and then turned the handgun on himself. The bodies were discovered at Bean's business, Family and friends visited the Odle home on Dunuggan Court throughout the day on Monday. As hugs and tears were visible through the glass door of the suburban home, the motive has yet to be determined in what police say is an apparent murder-suicide.

UISG candidates

The battle for the Democratic presidential nomination isn't the only election this time of year. After returning the requisite 500-name petition Monday, the nominees for the 2004-05 UI Student Government executive branch were announced.

Running on the Giant Sloth ticket, which has won the last three UISG elections, are junior Lindsay Schutte for president, sophomore Jason Shore for vice president, and six student senators.

The opposition — which includes president and vice president hopefuls Chad Aldeman and Brittany Shoot — has not yet declared a party affiliation.

Neither Schutte nor Aldeman have formally served in UISG before, but Former "Daily Show" correspondent Mo Rocca will be one of the Lecture Committee's speakers this spring.

The University Lecture Committee anticipates both dissent and entertainment this semester with lineup of speakers that includes a once-condemned writer, a woman tagged as an FBI whistleblower, and a popular television satirist.

FBI Special Agent Coleen Rowley, former CIA analyst Ray McGovern, Satanic Verses author Salman Rushdie, and former "Daily Show" correspondent Mo Rocca are all slated to make appearances at the university within the next three months.

Committee members say they chose the eclectic group in the interest of bringing dialogue to campus.

"We try to enhance the spoken word through different perspectives," said Chad Aldeman, the committee's finance director.

The group learned Monday that McGovern would join Rowley, a UI law school alumna who was named Time magazine's 2002 Person of the Year, when she speaks on Feb. 22. Rowley is expected to Rushdie will appear at the UI on March 29 as the 2004 Distinguished Lecturer. Lecture Committee mediators director Carissa Swanstrom said she expects Rushdie's lecture to be "absolutely amazing" because of the relatively low profile he's maintained the past few years.

Following criticism from Muslims that The Satanic Verses was blasphemous, Rushdie was condemned to death by Iranian Ayatollah Khomeini in 1989 and was forced to go into hiding.

Committee members said they look forward to the various arguments he is likely to spark as he speaks about religion and current events pertaining to Islam, which ties into his new book, Step Across This Line.

Judge strikes down Iowa's law on sex offenders' residences

BY MEGHAN SIMS
THE DAILY IOWAN

A federal judge on Monday abolished an Iowa law that requires sex offenders to live 2,000 feet from schools and daycares.

Judge Robert Pratt ruled the law "unconstitutionally infringes upon the plaintiffs' 14th Amendment rights to substantive and procedural due process." He said it also requires sex offenders living in violation of the law to provide incriminating testimony against themselves, violating the Fifth Amendment.

The Iowa Civil Liberties Union had challenged the law, asserting it violated offenders' constitutional rights and, in effect, banished offenders from most cities and towns.

The law, applied to offenders who committed their crime before July 1, 2002, was unconstitutionally applied retroactively, Pratt ruled.

He concluded it did not violate the Constitution's agree against cruel and unusual punishment.

Contemplating the possibility of an offender living near childcare facilities, Sen. Jerry Behn, R-Boone, said, "it is cruel and unusual for predators to sit and look at all the temptation running around beneath them."

Refusing to explain his ruling, Pratt said, "We're the only branch of government that has to explain ourselves," adding, "It's really inappropriate for a judge to rule and then give an opinion about the ruling."

Behn was the lead sponsor of the bill passed in 2002 that ordered sex offenders live at least 2,000 feet from schools, daycare centers, and other childcare facilities. It was based upon an Alabama law — among the nation's strictest — demanding that in addition to living, sex offenders cannot work within 2,000 feet of schools.

"It sailed through the House, and it sailed through the Senate," Behn said, adding that the only proposed amendment asked that offenders live 3,000 feet away.

In ruling it unconstitutional,

Pratt made permanent a temporary restraining order issued last summer prohibiting the state from enforcing the law.

"We're obviously pleased that the injunction has become permanent," attorney Philip Mears said. He said he and other attorneys representing the sex offenders argued "whether people reoffend or not didn't have anything to do with how close they live to a school."

Before considering an appeal, Behn said he will analyze Pratt's 63-page ruling.

"It would be my intention to pursue [an appeal]. I mean, I don't want to just let it drop," he said.

Behn's concern is that the wrong people will be protected by this ruling.

"Here's my sentiment: The temporary inconvenience that these predators have to go through is nothing compared to the lifetime of pain these victims go through," Behn said.

Alleged victim testifies in HIV trial

BY SEUNG MIN KIM
THE DAILY IOWAN

A woman accusing an Iowa City man of failing to disclose his HIV-positive status before their 12 sexual encounters took the witness stand Monday, detailing her seven-month relationship with the person she knew as a "sweet" man.

The trial marks the second time 23-year-old Adam Musser will face a charge of criminal transmission of HIV. The trial was moved to the Jones County Courthouse in Anamosa, Iowa, because of pretrial publicity, the second time Musser has been granted a change of venue.

A jury of nine men and four women listened to the woman testify that she and Musser first had sexual intercourse on June 23, 2002, the same day she was introduced to him.

Before the alleged sexual encounter, Musser, the woman, the woman's sister, and her then-boyfriend spent time fishing before retiring to the woman's Coralville apartment to watch a movie.

After the woman's sister and her boyfriend left the bedroom, Musser began to pressure her into having sexual intercourse, she testified.

"I kept telling him no, but I finally gave up," the woman, now 18, said.

Their only method of contraception was the birth-control pill, which the woman said she was using to stabilize her menstrual cycle.

After a few subsequent non-sexual encounters, Musser and the woman decided to end their relationship, only to revive it in October 2002.

However, during the hiatus, a friend of the woman's sister, UI pharmacy student Elizabeth Murray, told the woman that Musser may be HIV-positive.

Murray testified that Musser called her in December 2000, upset and seeking support after he learned of his HIV status three months earlier. At the time, he insisted that he contracted the virus through oral sex, Murray said.

When the alleged victim confronted Musser, he denied her allegations.

"He said he didn't have HIV, and he didn't understand why Beth would go around saying that," the woman said.

Murray also confronted Musser, whom she had befriended in 1997. During the conversation, Musser denied knowing the alleged victim, Murray testified.

Upon Musser's alleged denial, he and the woman resumed their romantic and sexual relationship in October 2002, using condoms around half of the time.

A month after ending the relationship in January 2003, the woman received information that led her to believe that Musser was indeed HIV-positive, and she reported this to the Iowa City police.

In other testimony, Randall Mayer, an epidemiologist for the state Department of Public Health, said records show Musser tested positive for HIV two separate times in July 2000.

Mayer, who oversees all records of HIV tests administered in the state, said a false positive test is possible, but the chance of two tests registering a false positive would be 1 in 62 billion.

The trial is expected to conclude today. If convicted, Musser faces up to 25 years in prison.

Last month, a Vinton, Iowa, jury found Musser guilty in the first of four counts of criminal HIV transmission. He and lawyer Kelly Steele are in the beginning stages of an appeal; a hearing to debate the motion for a new trial will be held March 5 at the Johnson County Courthouse.

Union Bar employee files countersuit

A Union Bar employee who was sued for allegedly assaulting a patron denied those assertions and has filed a counterclaim against the individual who filed the suit.

John Lee Vasquez denies that he was working at the Union Bar on Jan.

22, 2003, when Nicholas Garwick, who filed a lawsuit in 6th District Court Nov. 4, alleged that Vasquez threw him out of the establishment and assaulted him, causing bodily injuries.

On May 20, 2003, Vasquez was arrested and prosecuted for assault causing serious injury, but the charges were dismissed on Nov. 14, Vasquez's petition states.

As a result of the "malicious prosecution instigated by Nicholas Garwick," Vasquez claims to have been deprived of his liberty and property, incurred lost earnings, and suffered humiliation. He is asking for compensatory and punitive damages against Garwick.

Vasquez also filed a cross-petition against Illinois resident Scott

Newman, a third-party defendant, contending that Newman intentionally assaulted and injured Garwick on Jan. 22, 2003. Should Vasquez be found liable in the action brought by Garwick, the petition states, he will have a right to compensation from Newman.

Christie Vilsack talks snacks

BY COLIN VAN WESTEN
THE DAILY IOWAN

Iowa first lady Christie Vilsack shared a snack with underprivileged students at Twain Elementary School on Monday, thanks to a regional nutrition program aimed promoting healthy eating habits.

The educational activity, organized by the "Pick a better snack" program, provides a variety of healthy snacks and nutritional information to parents and children.

Hills Elementary School also qualifies for the funding because more than half of the students are eligible for free or reduced-priced lunches. Twain, 1355 DeForest Ave., and Hills, 301 W. Main St., Hills, have used the money since January 2003 to provide weekly snacks and food education to children in preschool through fourth-grade, said Melissa Stahl, an ISU Extension nutrition educator.

In conducting the local program, she focuses on the simple notion that if students have the opportunity to try health foods, they might enjoy it.

"You got to be brave to try it," Stahl said, emphasizing the need for children to try new foods.

Jan Temple, an ISU Extension nutrition and health specialist for the Johnson County area, also appears on KCRG's morning newscast and KGAN's midday newscast once a month to provide healthy snack ideas for parents as another part of the program.

The program receives two-thirds of its funding, or $135,189, from the Iowa City School District and the Iowa State University Johnson County Extension Office. A branch of the U.S. Department of Agriculture matches half of that amount.

Vilsack, who sat in on today's snack time, applauded the program.

"[The kids] begin to realize they can like healthy snacks," she said.

Among the Twain second-graders' favorites were zucchini bars, broccoli, and spinach. As the regional director of the program, Temple hopes to widen parents' food options.

"If you have limited dollars for food, you don't want to buy things your children won't eat," she said.

Stahl brought Twain teacher Pam Johannes' class apples with a caramel whipped-cream dip and apple chips for snacks Monday.

After a 10-minute nutritional lesson, Vilsack read the second-graders an excerpt from Apple Wagon, which details the journey of a little girl who left Salem, Iowa, with her family in the 1800s and brought apple trees to Oregon. Vilsack has visited more than 250 schools statewide to take part in similar educational activities.

Utility activists question rate ads

BY WILLIAM MIKESELL
THE DAILY IOWAN

A proposal to hold Iowa City electricity rates at their current level until 2010, as advertised by MidAmerican Energy Co., is sparking concern among municipal-power advocates who say that zonal price differences could fluctuate and cause local charges to rise.

The Oct. 17, 2003, ruling by the Iowa Board of Utilities mandates that the kilowatt-hour rate cannot be raised without a corresponding drop in the other two zones so the total revenue for the company remains the same.

The annual residential electric rates for the east zone, which includes Iowa City and the Quad Cities, are the second highest of Iowa's three zones for the average residential use of kwh per year.

Despite its ability to increase rates to equalize the zones, MidAmerican officials say they will not raise their Iowa rates. But municipal-power advocates charge that the company is running a deceptive ad campaign.

"At best, it's a conscious effort to mislead the public, and at worst, it's not true," said Citizens for Public Power member Larry Baker. The group helped place a referendum for municipal power on the November 2005 ballot.

A study by Latham & Associates, a Cedar Rapids-based consultant firm, found that Iowa City residents could save more than $60 million in 25 years by switching to municipal power if MidAmerican were to raise energy rates 2 to 2.5 percent over that time.

MidAmerican officials dismiss claims that Iowa City would benefit from a municipal utility, saying that planning, purchasing infrastructure, and buying energy is expensive, and MidAmerican can take on larger risks because it can spread costs over a larger customer base.

Disparities among Iowa's three rate zones could occur if MidAmerican were so inclined, the utility board agreement states. The company can increase its rates if the return on its equity falls below 10 percent.

Board members also encourage the energy provider to even out zonal differences so customers from across the state are treated equally.

But MidAmerican officials say they are pulling down rates in the higher zones by decreasing rates in the higher-priced east and south areas, not by increasing them in the cheaper north.

"If anything would happen to the east zone rate, it would decrease," said Todd Raba, the senior vice president of MidAmerican's energy-delivery services.

When MidAmerican formed in 1995 following utility mergers, it maintained previous power prices even though they differed among the zones after consolidation.

"If the east zone is lower and [another] zone is higher, and they are equalizing rates, they could come before the board," said Chuck Seel, a customer service manager Iowa Utility Board.

A rate equality case, although rare, could be brought before the Iowa Utilities Board. The price discrepancy case between Alliant Energy customers in Cedar Rapids and Ottumwa last year resulted in more comparable rates.

"The board is interested in seeing rate equality," Seel said. But "the disparity in MidAmerican [rate zones] is not that sharp."

Officials P&D on buses, drugs

BY DREW KERR
THE DAILY IOWAN

UI President David Skorton, accompanied by Phillip Jones, the vice president for Student Services, met with students Monday night during their second P&D session to answer questions and address students' concerns. The first question of the night: Where is Jones?

The answer led directly to the first topic of discussion — snow removal. Jones was outside aiding a student who had slipped and fallen on ice outside Hillcrest Residence Hall. Skorton said the engineering department had researchers studying the bonds between ice and pavement.

The meeting, the second of its kind this year, drew just eight students, but Skorton remained optimistic about the program's effectiveness.

"We'll keep doing it. The numbers are no deterrent in this process," he said.

Skorton and Jones formally invited 500 UI students by mail, and a mass e-mail was sent out to allow as many students as possible the chance to engage in the discussion.

"The goal is to increase interaction with the students — to hear their views and concerns and to learn what they're thinking about. We're in 'listening mode' in these meetings," Skorton said.

Issues discussed last night ranged from green roofs to transportation concerns.

"I'm here to discuss the issue of busing on the East Side of campus," said UI student Katherine Ehm, who lives in the Alpha Chi Omega sorority house. "The buses stop running at 6:30, and women who return later are getting mugged and physically assaulted."

Jones said that because the sorority is privately owned, there was little the university could do about the problem. However, he did promise to look at the situation and get back to her later.

Kyle Fitzgerald, the president of Students for Sensible Drug Policy, came to discuss the residence-hall policy regarding students caught using marijuana in the dorms, which was drafted by Jones. The university's policy has zero tolerance for students caught with the drug.

"My concern is that students who get caught don't have a place to live," he said. "Also, there needs to be some treatment attached to the policy."

Jones responded to Fitzgerald's call for a more liberal drug policy by saying the current policy is a useful and necessary deterrent.

Other issues that came up included the inception of a new recreation facility, the effect of the 19-ordinance, and improvements to the Chemistry Building.

Mass. lawmakers deeply divided on gay marriage

BY JENNIFER PETER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — An Associated Press survey of Massachusetts lawmakers shows a Legislature deeply divided over a proposed constitutional amendment to ban gay marriage in the state where the nation's first legally sanctioned same-sex weddings could take place as early as May.

The 199 House and Senate lawmakers — all of whom are up for re-election in November — could take up the volatile issue at a constitutional convention as early as Wednesday.

The issue gained urgency last week when the state's high court declared that anything less than full-fledged marriage for gays in Massachusetts would be unconstitutional. The opinion put Massachusetts lawmakers at the center of a political maelstrom that is being closely watched across the country and could play a role in the presidential race.

All of Massachusetts' legislators were contacted by telephone and e-mail by the AP since last week's Supreme Judicial Court opinion, and 138 responded. Of those, 59 said they would oppose the constitutional amendment.

while 65 said they could support it. An additional 14 said they were undecided. Sixty-one did not respond.

There is probably nothing lawmakers can do to prevent the nation's first gay marriages from taking place May 17. The earliest the proposed amendment could end reach the ballot is November 2006.

That is because the proposal first needs to be approved by a majority of lawmakers in two successive legislative sessions. That means a revamped Legislature could take up the issue after next fall's elections.

Korb berates Bush on terror

BY TIM CRIMMINS
THE DAILY IOWAN

A national defense expert outlined alternatives to the Bush administration's war on terror Monday in a speech to the Iowa City Foreign Relations Council.

Lawrence Korb, a senior adviser to the Center for Defense Information, offered an audience of approximately 200 his criticism of the administration's doctrine of "waging preventive wars without [international] consultation."

"One school of thought [in Washington] stresses deterrence and containment over preventive wars," he said, adding that others advocate more money be spent on international aid, rather than the military, in order to prevent impoverished states from becoming havens for terrorism.

Korb, a Vietnam veteran, said the administration's policy is based on "American exceptionalism" and, more specifically, on military dominance and aggressive efforts to make the world more democratic.

At least one of those in attendance, UI freshman Kevin Hansen, was ambivalent about Korb's speech.

"He did a good job of pointing out the flaws in the Bush doctrine," he said. "But I was hoping for a little more reassurance about the way things were going. He just shed light on more problems."

On the other hand, UI junior and Desert Storm veteran Matthew Mills completely disagreed with Korb's criticisms.

"He doesn't know much because he hasn't been among [terrorism] where it's happening. Half of Americans don't know what terrorism is about," Mills said.

In a question-and-answer session, Korb also discussed the problem of using the U.S. military for "nation building," saying that during his November visit to Iraq, two Black Hawk helicopters crashed into each other, killing 17 soldiers.

"We found out they were chasing a bank robber," Korb said. Monday's foreign-policy speech, preceded by a luncheon, was the Center for American Progress senior fellow's second before the local foreign-relations council. Thomas Baldrige, the executive director of the group, said Korb will speak at Cornell College today.

The nonprofit council is dedicated to informing the university community about foreign relations. Past speakers have included former President George H.W. Bush and former Vice President Walter Mondale.

Local transit project goes cyber

BY MARK QUINER
THE DAILY IOWAN

Community members can now catch a glimpse of construction progress at the multipurpose Court Street Transportation Center via a live webcam broadcast from atop the Sheraton Hotel.

The webcam was installed approximately a month ago by Knutson Construction Services Inc. to promote the project, said Darin Knapp, the company's vice president.

"The webcam is not so much for security as it is for publicity," he said.

The transportation center, a $13 million project geared toward making intercity and local public transit more efficient, will house Greyhound and Trailways stations in addition to local bus stops. Eighty percent of the cost is covered by the federal transit fund, and the city will finance the remainder of the center, which is expected to be completed in the spring of 2005, Knapp said.

The center will also contain a parking ramp, daycare, bike racks, and lockers, said Ron Logsden, the Iowa City transit manager.

"It's good to coordinate the different modes of transportation into one facility," he said.

He noted that currently there are no daycares downtown at which people can drop off their children on their way to work, making it difficult to use city transit for that purpose. If people need to travel to the other side of the city to take their children to daycare, fewer people will use the transit system, Logsden said. The city is taking bids for the daycare.

City officials hope the transit center will bring more development to downtown's southern side. Logsden said the area lacks definition, something the center could help to create.

"[We want] public investment to spur private investment," he said.

Aristide backers fight back in Haiti

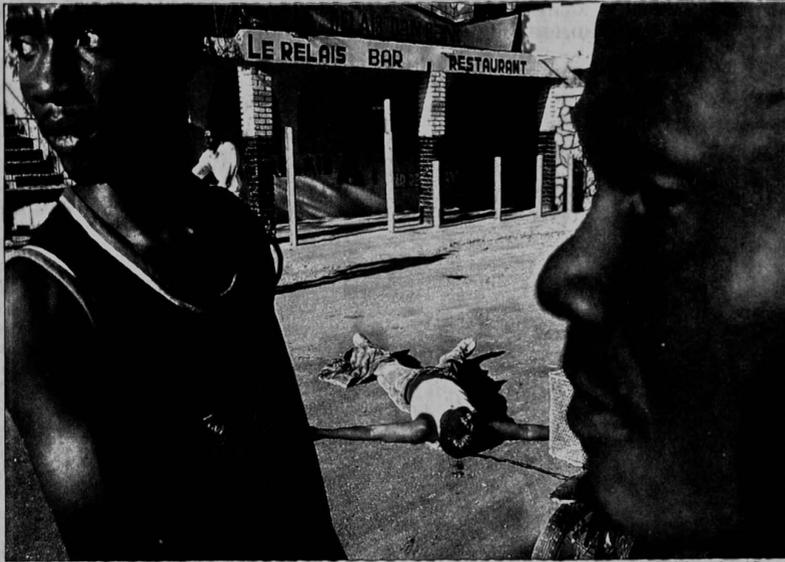

BY SCOTT WILSON
WASHINGTON POST

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — The government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide appeared to regain ground Monday in its effort to quell an armed uprising, retaking two of nearly a dozen towns seized by rebels seeking to force Aristide from office.

Government officials said the Haitian National Police, outnumbered and outgunned in recent days, had control of the central coast city of St.-Marc, which was captured by anti-government rebels two days earlier. Police also reoccupied the town of Grande-Goave along Haiti's southern finger with no reported casualties.

But the government faced a fresh assault in the north, where fighting erupted on the outskirts of Cap-Haitien, the country's second-largest city, which has remained relatively calm throughout a four-day armed insurrection. Rebels briefly seized the police station in Dondon, just outside the city. Officials said they were overwhelmed by a combination of police troops and members of a pro-Aristide militia, which has augmented the thinly stretched government forces in recent days.

"The population in both cities is for peace, safety, and security," said Yvon Neptune, Haiti's prime minister, in a telephone interview after visiting St.-Marc and Grande-Goave. "That's why the population has welcomed back the police."

But the mixed results underscored the challenges facing the police force as it attempts to put down the uprising, which began on Feb. 5 in Gonaives, Haiti's fourth-largest city. The battle is the biggest challenge to Aristide's rule since his second inauguration three years ago. Although the heart of the rebellion was confined to cities along Haiti's central coast, leaders of the armed group said Monday that as many as 11 police stations in scattered towns across the country have come under their control.

Aristide, a former priest, came to power after defying the Duvalier family, which was overthrown in 1986 following three decades of dictatorial rule. Aristide became Haiti's first freely elected president in 1990, only to be ousted nine months later in a military coup. The United States sent troops to Haiti in 1994 to restore his administration, resisted at the time by a paramilitary force sponsored by the ruling military junta. Aristide served out the remainder of his term, and he was re-elected in November 2000 on a populist pledge to lift up Haiti's downtrodden.

But groups opposed to his government have coalesced into a potent force against his cash-starved administration over the past two years.

Iraq suicide bomber targets allies of U.S.

BY MARIAM FAM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD — A man wearing an explosives belt blew himself up Monday outside the home of two tribal leaders who have cooperated with American forces. Two U.S. soldiers were killed while disposing of explosives in northern Iraq.

Three Iraqi guards were seriously wounded in the blast outside the compound of brothers Majid and Amer Ali Suleiman in Ramadi, northwest of Baghdad.

Witnesses said the brothers were receiving callers when a man approached the compound but was told to leave. He returned moments later and triggered the explosives, the witnesses said. The brothers are two of the city's most prominent tribal leaders who have worked with coalition forces.

Insurgents have repeatedly warned Iraqis not to cooperate with the Americans. The most recent threats were contained in pamphlets circulated in Ramadi and nearby Fallujah by a purported coalition of 12 insurgent groups.

Ramadi and Fallujah are located in the Sunni Triangle, a major center of resistance to the U.S.-led occupation.

The two American soldiers were killed in an explosion outside Sinjar near the northern city of Mosul during an operation to dispose of ordnance, said Brig. Gen. Mark Kimmitt, the deputy operations chief.

Five soldiers were hurt in the blast, according to a statement issued by the U.S. military's Task Force Olympia. The statement said the soldiers were moving mortar shells and rocket-propelled grenades from a storage area to a demolition point when the explosion occurred.

One of the soldiers was killed instantly. The second soldier died later of his injuries. Three of the injured were hospitalized in stable condition, and two others were treated for minor injuries and returned to duty.

The names of the two victims were withheld pending notification of their families.

Elsewhere, U.S. and Iraqi forces deactivated several rockets that were primed for launch along a road toward the city of Baqouba, about 35 miles northeast of Baghdad.

Also Monday, Defense officials in Washington said American forces in Iraq have detained one of the remaining most-wanted members of Saddam Hussein's government.

Muhsin Khadr al-Khafaji, No. 48 on the 55 most-wanted list, was turned over last weekend to U.S. troops in the Baghdad area, the officials said, speaking on the condition of anonymity. The officials did not say who turned him over.

Woman pulled from rubble in Turkey after one week

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — A critically injured 24-year-old woman was pulled out alive Monday after a week buried in the rubble of a collapsed apartment building — a dramatic rescue that came after teams heard her scraping her fingernails against shattered concrete and pleading, "Water, water."

Yasemin Yaprakci, covered in dust, was carried on a stretcher into an ambulance as relief workers applauded. The rescuers worked for four hours to free her feet, which were trapped under decaying bodies.

She was rushed by helicopter to a military hospital in Ankara, where she was in critical condition, suffering from gangrene, internal bleeding, and broken ribs.

"Her overall condition is not good at all; she has bleeding under her skin," Riza Saribabicci, the head physician of the Konya Numune hospital, said by telephone.

Relief workers found Yaprakci close to the entrance of the building, where rescue officials estimate 10 people were crushed as they tried to escape.

Yaprakci was given oxygen under the rubble as rescuers struggled to free her, furiously pulling pieces of concrete away with their bare hands.

Official warns of 2nd bird-flu outbreak

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — A Thai health official said Monday authorities should prepare for the possibility of a second outbreak of bird flu. Vietnam reported the region's 19th fatality from the virus that has ravaged poultry farms across Asia.

The World Health Organization, meanwhile, said China may already have human cases of bird flu, although the country hasn't reported any. It said while the government has been sharing information about known outbreaks, it might not be aware of everything happening in the country.

"WHO feels it is conceivable that there may be human cases, given the extent of the outbreaks in poultry," said Dr. Henk Bekedam, the agency's Beijing representative.

The comments come after a weekend report on state television said China has "not yet discovered any cases of humans catching the disease."

Malaysia, which has so far remained free of the disease and restricted poultry imports from affected countries, also cleared a 40-year-old pet-store owner and bird breeder of fears he caught the virus. He was quarantined on Feb. 7 when he displayed flu symptoms.

Health authorities in Cambodia are unlikely to know if a 24-year-old woman suspected of having bird flu died from the disease because there were apparently no blood samples taken from her while she was hospitalized, said Sean Tobin, a WHO medical epidemiologist in Phnom Penh. The woman died at a hospital in Vietnam on Feb. 6 after falling ill in Cambodia, and she was cremated soon after her death.

Using the grand jury a sage move

Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White's decision to submit the investigation of North Liberty Police Chief Jim Warkentin's fatal shooting of 24-year-old Kyle Wasson on Aug. 28, 2003, to a grand jury is a wise move. However, the decision is more or less standard operating procedure. Most fatal police shootings are reviewed by grand juries, and this investigation should not be mistakenly inferred as an implication of any wrongdoing. While White wouldn't comment on why he turned the investigation over to the seven-person panel, the decision likely had as much to do with who determines whether criminal charges should be issued as it does whether charges will be issued.

Determining whether criminal charges should be brought against a law-enforcement official involved in a fatal shooting is a Catch-22 for a county prosecutor. Police and prosecutors work on the same side of the legal system. If a prosecutor cleared a law-enforcement official of all wrongdoing in a thorough and objective investigation, that attorney would still likely face public criticism for defending an institutional ally in prosecuting crimes. Some attorneys might let such pressures influence their decisions, either coming down harder on police officers, or, not wanting to handicap those who uphold the law, go easy on police officers. While these are broad (and extreme) generalizations, the grand jury avoids these scenarios.

The grand jury is composed of impartial citizens. The members are able to examine all available evidence and interview witnesses who may be reluctant to talk to the police in order to reach their decisions. Sometimes, much of the information on which they base their decisions whether to clear or indict an individual isn't made public. It is a component that is used to strengthen the fairness of the judicial system.

The details of the events leading to Wasson's death are unclear. White released reports of the incident based on Iowa State Patrol scene investigation and Warkentin's statements. They show Wasson was apparently armed with a .40-caliber pistol at the time the altercation occurred, but he wasn't in possession of it when he was fatally shot. The reports also state that Wasson had methamphetamine, pseudoephedrine, and cocaine in his system at the time of his death. These are only a few pieces of a larger puzzle a grand jury will examine. The decision the panel reaches, however popular or unpopular, is likely to be fair and certainly based on more information than will be available to the public.

Remember Florida, vote Kerry

John Kerry's wins in Iowa, New Hampshire, Arizona, Delaware, Missouri, New Mexico, North Dakota, Michigan, and Washington vaulted him to the front of the pack of Democratic candidates running to be their party's nominee for president. Even though George W. Bush has the power of the presidency and tons of campaign cash, Kerry is proving he is electable.

The last few days before the Iowa caucuses, Kerry appeared more relaxed and seemed to enjoy campaigning. The key to a Democratic win in November is getting the base to the polls and registering new voters. The effort to defeat Bush will motivate Democrats to unite behind their candidate. They won't forget the 2000 Florida vote.

Paul L. Whiteley Sr.
Louisville, Ky., resident

Dishonesty, thy name is Bush

Bill Clinton was called a draft dodger all throughout his presidency because he went to college instead of Vietnam. To call George W. Bush a deserter because he failed to show up for required National Guard drills for a full year may be exaggerated, but it is still more accurate than calling Clinton a draft dodger.

The primary reason that Bush's military record is at issue is that he has made it an issue. He used his military service to justify dressing up in a flight suit and going off to an aircraft carrier ("Mission Accomplished!"), and at the time his administration did its best to imply that he not only flew the plane but personally landed it. Officials never said so outright, but they were coy enough to encourage speculation and confusion. So, Bush himself made an issue of it — and, now the issue is honesty. He's been caught in another lie. William Turnipseed, the retired general who commanded the Alabama unit where Bush was supposed to show up at the time, told the Boston Globe in 2000 that Bush never appeared for duty there. Bush's military records, obtained by the Globe, show that in his final 18 months of military service in 1972 and 1973, Bush did not fly at all. And for much of that time, Bush was unaccounted for. For a full year, there is no record that he showed up for the periodic drills required of part-time Guard members. Is "deserter" too strong a word?

Maybe, but then what do you call it?

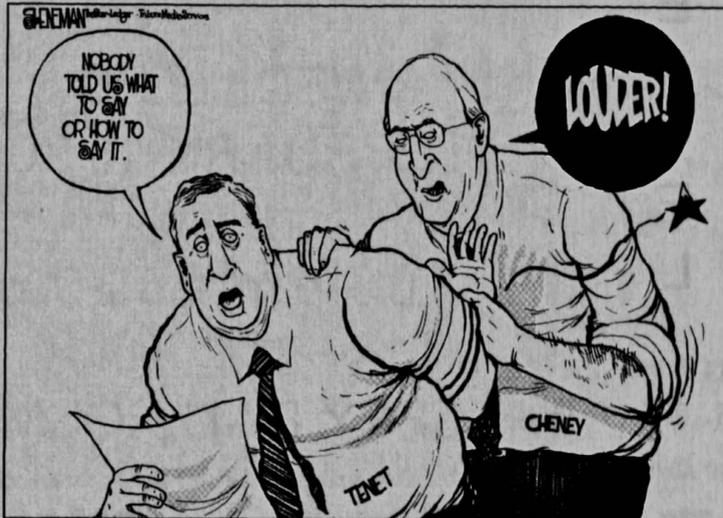

Yes, eventually he managed to get an honorable discharge, but could it be because he was the son of a very important and influential man?

Bush presents himself as an honest, straight-shooting guy who can always be trusted. The reality is exactly the opposite. Bush's main talent, as far as I can tell, is his ability to look straight into a television camera and lie. His military service record is just one example. Whether it's the economy, the war, his military record, or anything else, it's clear that we have a president who has a problem telling the truth.

The boob behind the curtain

FOR THOUSANDS and thousands of years — probably since the first couple plopped down in a wild vegetable patch after a rough day of chasing rabbits for food and the woman said, "You know, honey, we could grow some of these ourselves instead of chasing damn rabbits all day" — probably for all those ten thousand years, television has been known as the boob tube.

Well, OK, maybe not. Maybe, in these postmodern, fractured-sense-of-plot-lines-and-time times, it just seems like that long.

So naturally, I guess, we could trust a pop star to deliver us into a whole new era of boob tubism.

The brouhaha that erupted (8.4 on the Richter scale) after Janet Jackson's moment of national exposure was hilarious, especially to anyone who's lived in Europe. For instance, on German prime-time TV (at least when I lived in Berlin in the '90s), full-frontal nudity of both sexes seemed as common as the sun rising in the East.

Not exactly a hot topic of conversation. But here in America, one brief flash of a breast, and you'd think that the very foundations of the Republic were crumbling. Who are these people who were so outraged, and when are they going to get a life?

Or at least something approximating a life. Sheesh. If these people had invented the wheel, it would have been square.

Speaking of boob tubism, one week after the Janet jambalaya, there was the Cowboy in Chief on "Meet the Press," pontificating on the lack of Iraqi WMD and the lack of intelligence.

You gotta admit, Dubya explaining the lack of intelligence is a sight to behold. It's perfect for the boob tube.

Bob Herbert, writing in the New York Times, said this week that the Cowboy needs a truth squad to follow him around and clean up his misstatements. Better make that a truth army.

For instance, one of my favorite moments in the "Meet the Press" interview came when Dubya defended himself against critics who say he's lost control of the federal budget: "If you look at the appropriations bills that were passed under my watch, in the last year of President Clinton, discretionary spending was up 15 percent, and ours have steadily declined."

Um, not exactly. In fact, utterly untrue. Federal discretionary spending in the last two fiscal years has grown by more than 25 percent. In the '90s, under Clinton, the increases averaged 2.4 percent per year.

Of course, there are many moments of high humor in the Bush budget — so many, it's hard to know where to start.

For instance, the Cowboy released the budget on the same day the Senate was closed because ricin was discovered in a mail room. In that budget, Dubya eliminated funding for a research program on how to decontaminate buildings attacked by toxins.

Nice timing, huh?

The budget projects a deficit for fiscal 2004 of $521 billion. Two years ago, when the Cowboy was taking a machete to taxes, he projected a fiscal 2004 deficit of $14 billion. Hmmm.

But my favorite part of the budget is what the Cowboy in Chief did to election reform. We all remember the disaster that was the Florida "vote" in 2000, right? Well, after that fiasco, Congress passed the Help America Vote Act; when Dubya signed it, he said, "When problems arise in the administration of elections, we have a responsibility to fix them."

Nice words. But the Bush budget provides only $40 million of the $800 million that had been promised for election reform.

Not only that, but Dubya has been starving the Election Assistance Commission, which is in charge of administering the act. This year, for instance, the commission will get only $2 million for operating expenses instead of the $10 million it was due.

Does the Cowboy in Chief think that he needs another fiasco in Florida to get re-elected?

Or does he think the country is fixated on boobs? ■

Learning to play through the pain of drumming

Nicholas Wynia/The Daily Iowan

Abdala Faye of Senegal teaches drum lessons to Shawn Thomas of Iowa City on Tuesday at Uptown Bill's Small Mall.

BY JULIE K. THROM
THE DAILY IOWAN

With every slap, I felt a sharp pain searing through the pads of my fingers and the fleshy part of my hand. The side of my thumb was starting to turn a scary shade of purple. My knuckles had doubled in size. However, I enjoyed the numbness that followed; I knew I earned it.

I had spent the last hour pounding away on an African drum called a djembe. Carved out of the African wood ngalaman, the inside is hollowed out and designs are chiseled on the outside. The top of the drum is covered in goat skin stretched tight and secured in place with rope.

At first a little skeptical, I spent the first part of the drumming class watching African drummer and instructor Abdala Faye as his hands flew effortlessly and expertly up and down and in and out on the drum, making it look and sound flawless. He produced a myriad of sounds, ranging from the deep bass produced at the center of the drum to the sharper, hollower sound of the edge, as his head moved in perfect time to the beat.

Faye, however, was modest about his skills both as a teacher and as a drummer.

"I'm not going to pretend to be a master," he said. "I'm not a master. I'm going to teach what I know."

For 45 minutes, I scrutinized his hands, his motions, the foreign words that went along with each hit of his hand as he taught fellow student Shawn Thomas. Faye would demonstrate the sounds, the point of contact on the drum, and then he and Thomas would play in unison. At times, Thomas would imitate him almost in perfection. Other times, he would shake his head in frustration.

"I just lose it after awhile," Thomas said after the two attempted a roll, in which each hand alternately hit the edge of the drum as fast as possible.

Eventually, curiosity consumed me, and I grabbed the smallest drum so it could fit comfortably between my legs. I hesitantly smacked the middle of the goat skin and winced when the weak noise hit my ears; it sounded nothing like what I had been observing. Faye smiled patiently as he slightly cupped his hand to show me the proper positioning and waited for me to mimic him. He slapped at the heart of the drum, allowing it to bounce and talk back to him in a deep, sexy voice. I attempted the same; the drum barked at me. I still didn't get it.

"Sometimes, you already have the rhythm," he said. "Just let your hand go."

Originally from Senegal, he went through intensive training to learn to play the African drums. Beginning early in the morning, he would spend approximately three hours a day learning techniques, such as where to place your hands, at what angle, and how far apart your fingers should be in order to produce the appropriate sounds. All the practice has permanently numbed Faye's hands to the point where he doesn't notice pain at all, but he agreed that in the beginning, it is excruciating.

"Drumming belongs to anyone who is willing to sacrifice blood," Faye said. "The most important thing is technique — how to play, how to put your hands on the drums, how to beat it, how to create and distort sounds. Then you can create your own music."

In 2001, Faye came to the United States shortly before 9/11 on a grant for painting. He settled in Iowa City, where he now displays his art locally and owns an African shop in the basement of Uptown Bill's Small Mall, 401 S. Gilbert St., where he teaches his African drumming class on Tuesday nights.

It's the technique of drumming that he wants to share with others. Technique is the only thing he said he feels he could teach people; the rest, he said, is up to them.

"[My teacher] used to tell me that it's all in the soul," he said. "No matter where you go, which instrument people play, try to be in touch with your soul. That's how I play."

So there I was, pounding away, endeavoring to see deep into my soul, and I ended up beating out all of my frustrations instead. It became a release from school, the fight I had just had with my boyfriend, and my daily mundane routine. When I screwed up, I looked hopelessly at Faye, and he would stop, explain again, and try to put me back on track. I beat the hell out of the drum that night, and loss of use in my fingers for almost three days proved it.

For the most part, the pain has subsided. My bruised, swollen fingers have returned to their normally chubby state, fully functional again. As for my drumming skills, those are just going to take a lot more time.

each claim some informal involvement with the organization. Aldeman was the finance chairman for the UISG-funded University Lecture Committee, and Schutte worked against the 21-ordinance by speaking at City Council meetings.

Lack of student-government experience does not translate into a shortage of leadership for Schutte, who served as president of Gamma Phi Beta for a year.

At present, she is the head of operations for 10,000 Hours.

Schutte said the reason she is running is that she loves nonprofit organizations and sees UISG as the ultimate example.

"We are able to send students places, as well as change the community and the future," she said.

Aldeman is running to offer students an alternative that boasts increased accountability and accessibility.

"This is a positive campaign for change," he said.

"We want to be the group that students can come to first with a problem."

Party platforms have not yet been disclosed, but Schutte and Shore agree that their party intends to be the students' voice.

Despite having three former Sloth Party members on her ticket, Shoot said the opposing party is following outdated traditions that have led student needs astray.

"We need new ideas. We need to sit down and say, 'What would you like us to do today?'" she said, noting that her ticket intends to be an advocate for student groups.

The Giant Sloth ticket includes a diverse group of senate nominees, including former UISG President Nick Klenke as well as Sarah Sauber, the president of College Republicans, and Jacek Pruski, the co-director and founder of 10,000 Hours.

Also running for the senate are Ellen Jackson, Elijah Edwards, and Russell Dixon.

"The thing that sets our ticket apart is that we have unified a lot of different groups," Schutte said. "We are idealistic, but we are also realistic."

"We need new ideas. We need to sit down and say, 'What would you like us to do today?'"

Aldeman's ticket includes graduate students Kristen Gast and Thomas Kroeger, as well as undergraduates Ryan Roerman, Rowan Swanson, Carissa Swanson, and Ariana Gum.

Campaigning will begin at midnight on Feb. 15, and the nominees must follow strict guidelines to ensure a fair campaign.

Because of the tight regulations, Schutte said, her campaign will rely heavily on face-to-face communication.

Aldeman agreed, noting the importance of getting out and meeting students.

McDonald's worker charged with theft

A former McDonald's manager was charged on Feb. 6 with depriving her employer of more than $1,000 over a five-month period.

Julie Jane Bobzin, 22, Coralville, faces a second-degree theft charge for allegedly misrepresenting the number of hours she had worked at McDonald's, 618 First Ave., between Sept. 1, 2003, and Jan. 20.

Court records show that Bobzin was employed as a manager at McDonald's when the main office discovered that in the pay period ending Jan. 24, the defendant was scheduled for 19.33 hours of work. However, it was entered into the system as 60.27 hours of work.

During an interview, Bobzin allegedly admitted to illegally increasing her payroll hours to more than she had actually worked, beginning around Sept. 1. Total loss to McDonald's was estimated at $1,348.42.

Bobzin was released on her own recognizance.

Moscow mourns 39 blast victims

BY ANNELI NERMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Flags with black ribbons flew at half-staff over government buildings and TV stations canceled all entertainment programs Monday as Moscow mourned the victims of the deadliest attack on the city's subway.

A bomb ripped through a subway car packed with commuters during rush hour on the morning of Feb. 6. The explosion, which President Vladimir Putin blamed on Chechen rebels, killed 39 people and wounded more than 100. It also heightened fear in the Russian capital, where some 8.5 million people rely on the Metro system daily.

Vyacheslav Ushakov, a deputy chief of the Federal Security Service, said on Monday that investigators believe the explosion most likely had been triggered by a suicide bomber, the Interfax news agency reported.

Some Russian media speculated that the death toll was higher than officially announced. They based their calculations on the number of people typically crammed into subway cars during rush hour — from 150 to 200, they said — and comments from unidentified morgue workers. But authorities stuck to the toll of 39.

Hawks take on streaking Purdue

BY FRANK KLIPSCH
THE DAILY IOWAN

The Carver-Hawkeye Arena scoreboard was still lit up, four days later, with the final numbers from the starting lineups from Iowa's loss to Ohio State on Feb. 5.

Jamie Cavey's career-high of 33 was up there, as was the scoring half of Johanna Solverson's first career double-double — 17 points and 12 rebounds. Next to Jennie Lillis' No. 50 were the 13 points that moved her up two spots on the career scoring list to No. 5. Despite Kristi Faulkner's 16 points, which gave the starting five a grand total of 79 compared with Ohio State's 64, the Hawkeyes were defeated, 93-82.

As the scoreboard's light bulbs are reset to zeros, Iowa coach Lisa Bluder will tweak her squad before today's 7:06 p.m. tip-off against fifth-ranked Purdue. "Our defense has got to be a lot better," said Bluder at the team's weekly press conference on Monday. "Controlling the boards is going to be essential, and being able to break the press without turning the ball over is going to be instrumental to us."

The Boilermakers are a veteran squad riding a 10-game winning streak. Four of Purdue's five starters are seniors, led by Shereka Wright, a preseason All-Big Ten forward who recently topped the 2,000 career-point plateau, and Erika Valek.

Bryant to miss 7th-straight game

MIAMI (AP) — Kobe Bryant had stitches removed from his right index finger Monday, but he sat out most of practice and is expected to miss his seventh-straight game when the Lakers play the Heat.

Team trainer Gary Vitti said he removed approximately 15 stitches from a cut that sent the Los Angeles guard to the injured list Jan. 30.

Bryant, who declined to talk to reporters, took some shots left-handed and worked on ball-handling, coach Phil Jackson said. Jackson said chances are slim Bryant will play today in the sixth game of the Lakers' seven-game trip.

In place of Bryant against Miami, rookie Luke Walton may make his second career start, Jackson said.

Bryant was expected to rejoin the team on Feb. 5 in Philadelphia but failed to show.

WILLIAMS TRIAL

Judge asks jurors about coverage

SOMERVILLE, N.J. (AP) — Opening statements in the manslaughter trial of former NBA star Jayson Williams were delayed Monday as potential jurors were questioned about their exposure to news coverage of the case.

Williams on trial

Asked if they had seen or been told of recent media reports, more than a dozen of the 61 remaining members of the jury pool raised their hands.

Superior Court Judge Edward Coleman said some other pool members had to be interviewed about news broadcasts that took place after they joined the group early in the process.

COLLEGE FB

Florida recruit charged with battery

MIAMI (AP) — An arrest warrant was issued for Miami's top recruit on Monday, accusing him of violating his probation while on a recruiting visit to Florida last month.

Willie Williams, 19, has been charged with misdemeanor battery by state officials in Gainesville after a woman said he hugged her without permission. That charge spurred the issuing of an arrest warrant in Broward County, where Williams is on probation for pleading no contest to felony burglary in 2002.

Williams' 18-month probation term was to end Wednesday. He now may face up to five years in prison, the maximum on the burglary charge, plus an uncertain future with the Hurricanes.

"I am not talking to the officials at Miami at this point. I know they are taking a wait-and-see attitude," said Paul Lazarus, Williams' attorney.

Weathering on

Iowa's starting five will see abundance of minutes for remainder of season

BY DONOVAN BURBA
THE DAILY IOWAN

When the Iowa Hawkeyes staggered off the floor on Feb. 7 after a grueling 84-82 double-overtime win over Indiana, the team's starting five, each of whom played at least 45 of the game's 50 minutes, looked like weary prizefighters exiting the ring after a 15-round donnybrook.

That's a look that may be repeated as the season goes on. With seven games to play before the Big Ten Tournament, starting with Wednesday's tilt with Wisconsin in Iowa City, the Hawks (12-8, 5-4) are within striking distance of the conference's top spot, and that makes every minute important. Chances are, the quintet of Jeff Horner, Brody Boyd, Pierre Pierce, Glen Worley, and Greg Brunner will be on the court for the vast majority of those minutes.

The increased workload on game days (Wednesdays and Saturdays) makes the other days even more crucial. Practices are less intense, as is weight training between games.

"Those guys know that they're going to be on the floor a lot, and I think what they do between games, we know we're Wednesday to Saturday, taking Sundays off all the time, and obviously, with not having a lot of depth, we're not going five-on-five (in practice) hardly any," said coach Steve Alford on Monday. "So it's about staying sharp and preparing the way we want to prepare but then knowing you have an awful lot to give on Wednesday and Saturday."

Sharpshooting Horner hot beyond the arc

BY KELLY BEATON
THE DAILY IOWAN

Cue the music from The Good, the Bad and the Ugly: Clearly, there's a new sheriff in town.

He goes by the name of Jeff Horner.

The 6-3 sharpshooter continued to leave the Iowa faithful drooling with his 17-point, 10-rebound, six-assist performance, which he punctuated with a game-winning bucket in Iowa's 84-82 double-overtime victory at Indiana Feb. 7.

Horner was tabbed Big Ten Player of the Week on Monday for his heroic efforts in ousting the Hoosiers.

"It feels pretty good, but my teammates are as much a part of it as I am, and they did a great job of coming through on Saturday, and everybody just played his heart out," said the Mason City, Iowa, native, who played

Alford praised Horner

49 out of a possible 50 minutes in the game. "I think I'm more tired today than I was yesterday."

The sophomore has surpassed the 20-point mark in five of Iowa's last eight contests, and he has been especially smoking from beyond the arc, hitting on 62 percent of his 3-balls last week.

Iowa coach Steve Alford said Hawkeye fans can expect to see more of the same in the years to come as Horner continues to evolve his game.

"I think Jeff will be somebody that continues to get better every season because I know how hard he works," said the fifth-year Iowa coach. "He's a relentless worker. He's the first one in and the last to leave."

"I thought he had an outstanding freshman season, other than shooting the basketball. We all knew he could shoot the basketball, he just had a lot on his plate last year. With Pierre being out, he had an enormous amount of pressure on him. And now, he's got a lot of pressure on him again this year."

Keith Srakocic/Associated Press
Pittsburgh wide receiver Larry Fitzgerald announced Monday that he wants to be eligible for the NFL draft in April.

Heisman runner-up will enter NFL draft

BY CHARLES SHEEHAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBURGH — Larry Fitzgerald finally made the decision everyone expected: to enter the NFL draft.

The Heisman Trophy runner-up said on Monday that he would forgo his collegiate career at Pittsburgh to turn professional. His announcement came four days after he was declared eligible for the draft.

Fitzgerald, who will turn 21 in August, is projected to go early in the draft. Though the receiver played just two seasons with the Panthers, that was enough time for him to break several school and NCAA records.

"The main reason people come to college is to better your chances of making a living, and I think that my two years that I've had here, I've given myself a good opportunity to make a good living ... for myself and to support my family," Fitzgerald said.

He petitioned the NFL to allow him to enter the draft despite only two seasons of play. Fitzgerald left the Academy of Holy Angels in Richfield, Minn., midway through his senior year in 2001 and transferred to Valley Forge (Pa.) Military Academy to boost his grades for college.

The NFL cleared the way for Fitzgerald to enter the April draft because he is three years past his senior year of high school.

"I'm very confident in my ability," he said. "I know there are going to be skeptics, and there are going to be people out there criticizing this and criticizing that, but all-in-all, I know I can play the game of football."

The league's decision on Fitzgerald came on the same day a federal judge ruled running back Maurice Claret could also turn pro.

In that Feb. 5 ruling, the judge said NFL rules regarding its draft violate federal antitrust laws. The ruling overturned the league's rule barring players from being eligible for the draft before they were out of high school for three years.

The 20-year-old Fitzgerald was dominating last season. He finished a close second to Oklahoma quarterback Jason White in voting for the Heisman Trophy, nearly becoming the first sophomore to win the award.

SPORTS 'N' STUFF

Are All-Star games worth watching?

When Major League Baseball changed its rules last year to give the All-Star game some meaning, people were up in arms for weeks.

In hindsight, it was probably a solid move. Giving a league home-field advantage for the World Series means nothing when the All-Star game is played, but months down the road, it might pay off.

Generally, I hate watching the NBA. It's boring on TV; if we're not looking at some celebrity in the stands picking his nose and hearing about how he attends every game because he can afford the asinine price of the tickets, we're being treated to the boredom of every drive ending in a dunk or 3-point shot.

No one plays defense, and rarely do teams really have to work for the ice that glitters from their earlobes.

I'm only watching the All-Star game for the trio of KG, Kobe, and Yao in the West, and if Shaq gets in to do some posterior work, double bonus points. It'll be cool to see Tracy McGrady and Paul Pierce in the East, and maybe Allen Iverson will live up to his gangster reputation. It's sad that Carmelo and LeBron didn't make the rosters, but they're the only reason people go to the Cavs and Nuggets games, anyway.

The ending will be as predictable as New Year's Eve celebrations — the West will win. Los Angeles will profit from another basketball game's worth of eating, drinking, and parking, and I will probably be satisfied with my NBA viewing until the playoffs.

— by Roseanna Smith

All-Star games are as important to sports as the Bush daughters are to world peace.

This isn't to say there is no redeeming value to the superstar displays. An advantage is surely gained when people who simply watch to catch Michael Jordan in Hanes' commercials get a greater familiarity with the talent on display day in and day out.

Granted, some of the most amazing feats in physical movement this side of Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon have occurred in the old dunk contests between the gold necklace sporting "Air" Jordan and "The Human Highlight Film" Dominique Wilkins.

And seeing Spud "Don't call me Iowa volleyball coach" Rita Buck-

Crockett Webb make his 5-6 body do a 180-degree double-pump reverse dunk was certainly my generation's equivalent of watching a man land on the Moon.

The spectacles that are All-Star weekends have overly inflated their respective games to meaningless circus sideshows.

Except for Major League Baseball, which decided to give its game some real meaning this past season, these are the only conditions under which current events should continue:

For hockey, keep the skills contests, which show us ignorant ones what it takes to compete at the highest level, but think of adding a couple more relevant events. For one, a no-holds-barred fighting free-for-all. The NHL offices are probably already considering this one.

Basketball should certainly add a style show in which players have to wear a uniform, any and all accessories, and then freestyle rap.

And for football, which actually had a pretty enjoyable, defenseless game on Sunday, let's see the cast from "Playmakers" actually playing a game.

Drive, He said to Labonte

BY PAUL NEWBERRY ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — When Bobby Labonte takes the green flag in Sunday's Daytona 500, he'll be racing for victory — and the Lord.

The hood of Labonte's car is both a shameless movie plug — The Passion of the Christ, coming soon to a theater near you — and some new-style proselytizing for the Gospel.

Yes, witnessing has moved from the revival tent to the fast lane. "It's a chance to get the word out," Labonte said about the ad on his car. "Someone who is curious about Jesus and has never been saved sees the race and says, 'Hmmm, I'd like to see what that's about.' ... Maybe we can change their minds."

NASCAR racing and the Christian faith have often worked hand-in-hand, from infield services for drivers, crewmen, and officials to the pre-race invocation to the annual break in the schedule for the Easter holiday.

Now comes a car promoting The Passion of the Christ, a soon-to-be-released movie that already has drawn lavish praise from conservative clergy — including the Rev. Billy Graham — but angry denunciations from Jewish groups fearing it will stir up anti-Semitism.

For Labonte, it was a no-brainer to plug Mel Gibson's film on the No. 18 car, especially because the movie focuses on the seminal event in the Christian faith — the crucifixion of Jesus.

"I know how much it has impacted my life and my family's

Worley closes in on 1,000 career points

Alford suggested that with Iowa's roster down to just seven scholarship players and two walk-ons, Horner's respites on the bench will remain few and far between.

Make room for Glen

Senior power forward Glen Worley has his sights set on joining the elite company in Iowa's 1,000-point club. The Iowa City native sits at 997 career points after pouring in 20 during Iowa's win over Indiana.

With just three points in the Hawkeyes' next outing, at home versus Wisconsin Wednesday night, Worley would become the 35th player in Hawkeye history to surpass the mark.

"It's definitely a great moment, to be considered in the great class of people," the 6-7 senior said. "It wasn't something I thought of until I got off the bus after the game and Steve Roe told me about it. It's definitely a great class to be in."

Reggie Evans was the last Hawkeye to net more than 1,000 points in his Iowa career. The power forward tallied 1,054 points at Iowa despite playing in just 69 games in two seasons after transferring from the juco ranks.

Reiner update

The situation with injured center Jared Reiner is still touch-and-go, said Athletics Department officials. The senior big man is slated to undergo a CT scan on Feb. 12, "and they'll go from there," said Roe, a spokesman for the Sports Information Department.

Reiner originally underwent surgery to relieve a stress fracture in his right foot on Jan. 16, when the team decided he would be held out of action until at least the end of the regular season.

A native of Tripp, S.D., Reiner has had to endure some ribbing from exhausted teammates of late, while he sits along with a pair of crutches on the team's bench. The Hawkeye coaching staff has gotten in a few jabs as well.

On Reiner traveling with the team, "I told him, 'If you're going to eat at the training table, we're going to get something out of you,'" Alford quipped on Monday.

The roof is on fire

Clear a path, and make way for Tom Izzo and his band of dead-eyes.

Michigan State came within sight of an NCAA record for shooting accuracy in its 84-70 win at Ohio State on Feb. 7. The gang in green and white shot a staggering 81 percent in the first half of its conquest in Columbus, and the team could have broken the NCAA's all-time single game accuracy mark of 81.4 percent (set by New Mexico in 1985) if the Spartans hadn't missed their last four shots of the game. The club connected on 33-45 field goals for the game.

"I think we're coming off the best shooting performance we've ever had since I've been at Michigan State," Izzo said. "I'm not sure — when you're banking shots in — that that's even fair."

In their shooting gallery performance, the Spartans became just the fifth team in Big Ten history to connect on 73 percent or better from the field. "We seem to be moving the ball better and passing the ball better," added the Spartan coach, who notched his 200th career coaching victory in his squad's 89-72 victory over the Hawkeyes on Feb. 4.

Gopher gloom

Dan Monson and the Minnesota Golden Gophers have fallen on hard times of late. After a promising start to his career in Minneapolis, the fifth-year UM coach has seen his squad slog to a 8-13 overall mark this season, which includes an 0-9 conference mark, good for last place in the league. The slump marks the Gophers' worst stretch in conference play since the squad lost its final 16 Big Ten contests to end the 1986-87 season.

"So far we have just not played at the level of the other schools in the league," Monson said Monday. "We've got one of two things [we] can do; either cash it in, or keep working at it, and I think this group is still working at it."

Iowa used just two bench players against Hoosiers

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Alford also changed his clock-management strategies, saying he's more likely to call more time-outs in the first half in order to give his team a breather. In the second half, his goal is to have three time-outs at his disposal with 10 minutes remaining.

Iowa used just two bench players against the Hoosiers, but Alford also expressed his concern that extended bench time might leave such backups as Ben Rand and Kurt Spurgeon unprepared should they need to hit the floor.

As the fifth-year coach pointed out, the Hawks are an injury away from having to rely on inexperienced backups down the stretch.

"We've got to continue to keep [the bench] sharp," said Alford. "We've spent a lot of time talking about that, putting them through extra stuff [in practice] because they haven't logged a lot of minutes to this date. It only takes one of those five [starters] getting in foul trouble ... we're a sprained ankle away, a thigh bruise away to where those guys have got to be ready to go."

The starters, too, seem well-aware that as they go, so goes Iowa's season, and they have no intention of catching a breather on the court when the clock is ticking.

"You get that two-minute rest every four minutes, so you kind of play yourself [hard] for that four minutes every time, because you know you're going to get that two-minute break," said Worley, referring to the automatic media time-outs that stop play four times each half.

Alford dismissed concerns about his team's durability come March, when all the minutes might start to take their toll on the Hawks. After breaking out the "one game at a time" cliché, he then sagely pointed out that his players "know there is no March if they don't do what they need to do here in late February."

Following the Feb. 18 game at Ohio State, Iowa goes an entire week without a game, and Alford said for the first time in his Iowa coaching career, he'll give his players two days off in a row.

Until then, the battle rages on.

"The time you get a rest is dead balls and free throws ... other than that, you're going full-bore the entire time," said Brunner, who played 45 minutes against Indiana. "Of course it's going to be tough — you're running so much and banging in the post all the time. It's real tough, but you have to do it; it comes with the territory."

"Shereka Wright is an incredible athlete," Bluder said. "She is hard to defend because she drives so well, gets to the free-throw line so often. She posts very well, too."

The Hawkeyes and Boilermakers both played Ohio State in their last meetings. Purdue defeated the Buckeyes, 57-54, on Feb. 8. En route to the 2,000-point milestone, Wright finished with a game-high 19 points while Valek added 17 points and four assists.

Ultimately, Lillis and the Hawkeyes want to reach the NCAA Tournament, a goal they were denied a season ago.

Although postseason predictions in early February are as lasting as snow piles in the sun, collegierpi.com has the Hawkeyes picked as a No. 11 seed in the East Region. Iowa ranks 46th in the latest RPI rankings and 43rd in strength of schedule. On the other hand, Purdue is ranked fifth and 18th, respectively.

"Beating a ranked team on our home floor would be big for our program," Bluder said. "Big for the rest of the season."

Adu bids adieu to normal life

BY JASON LA CANFORA
WASHINGTON POST

BRADENTON, Fla. — Freddy Adu rose at 7 a.m. Monday, and, like millions of other teenagers across the United States, scrambled to get dressed, eat a quick breakfast, and then catch the bus to school. After another normal day of classes, Adu, 14, began his new after-school job at 4 p.m., and any similarities between him and his peers ceased.

Adu had his first official training session with D.C. United since being taken as the first overall pick in the Major League Soccer draft last month and signing the league's largest contract, worth approximately $500,000 a year. Adu resides in Bradenton with the U.S. under-17 national team and attends a nearby school, with classes set to conclude next month. The start of his rookie season is less than two months away.

United is training in Bradenton for the next few weeks to make it easier for Adu, whose family emigrated from Ghana to the Washington area in 1997, to maintain his schedule. This will be his first time on the field with Peter Nowak, the club's new coach.

"I really just want to earn the respect of my teammates," Adu said when asked about his expectations. "I can't wait to get out there on the field with them and just play hard. I want to play hard, and keep my mouth shut, and kind of work my way into things. I have to earn that right, and let my play do the talking, and hopefully, I'll earn the respect of my teammates, and then we'll take it from there."

Adu, who has represented the United States in the under-17 and under-20 world championships, trained last weekend with the men's national team at the request of coach Bruce Arena.

"He didn't look out of place, that's for sure," Arena said. "For a 14-year-old kid, he looks great, but that doesn't matter anymore; nobody cares how old he is when he steps on the field now. ... I think he's a great kid — he's very talented, and if he has the right attitude and D.C. United has the right attitude, he's going to be a very good one."

news you need to know

Starting in March, changes will be made to the rules for Hawk ID passwords. Students will be required to change their passwords at least twice a year and choose passwords that are difficult to guess. These changes are for students' protection, the protection of the institution, and to help satisfy regulatory (Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act, Gramm Leach Bliley Act) issues.

When passwords near their maximum age, students will receive a daily e-mail message with instructions to change their passwords, until they change them or the passwords expire. When students use the self-service change tool, it will prompt them to select a different new password if they enter one that is too easy to guess or has been used before. The new tools for Hawk IDs are at <http://hawkid.uiowa.edu>.

horoscopes

Tuesday, February 10, 2004 by Eugenia Last

- ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your emotions will get the better of you if you are impulsive. Take time to think about what you are going to say to the person who is upsetting you. Being pushy will only escalate the problem.
- TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You can make advances you have been pushing for if you are practical in your handling of business dealings. You can profit financially through promotions and the presentation of your ideas. Take care of your health.
- GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Activities involving youngsters will be successful and bring you greater popularity. Travel should be on your agenda. Get together with people who stimulate you mentally.
- CANCER (June 21-July 22): Someone you live with or are close to will be difficult to handle today. You may have to back away from a situation that appears to be impossible right now.
- LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your ability to inspire others will bring great results today. Love and romance can be yours if you are affectionate with someone who has captured your heart.
- VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Remember what you used to regard as fun and exciting, and consider reintroducing these activities into your life. Don't let it cost you more than what you can afford.
- LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Relationship problems may surface if you aren't careful with how you handle someone you love. You may be suspicious that deception is involved, but you will probably be overreacting.
- SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You can make all sorts of changes if you really want to turn things around in your life today. You must start to do the things you enjoy and spend time with the people who inspire you the most.
- SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may not want to take on additional responsibilities, but you will probably be forced to. Do what you can, but not at the expense of ruining your own health. Take money matters seriously.
- CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): This is not the time to push a partnership to the limit. Someone you are close to may be feeling vulnerable right now, and if you are not attentive, your relationship could easily take a turn.
- AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You will pick up a lot of information just by observing how your peers react to the situations going on around them. The lessons you learn today will benefit you professionally.
- PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Make some plans to socialize. Your ability to adapt will be to your advantage.
