IOWA CITY MURDER/SUICIDE Shooter depressed over domestic ills

BY SARAH FRANKLIN

More than 200 mourners gathered at a local church Tuesday to remember Keith "K.C." Odle - a man whose bonds with God "are not easily broken" — three days after he killed a neighbor with a .44-magnum handgun, then turned it on himself.

Friends and family wept at St. Thomas More, 405 N. Riverside Drive, as the Rev. Walter Helm described Odle as a family man who hunted, fished, and loved nature while maintaining a strong faith. Odle, who worked at Oral B Laboratories, died 19 days short of his 40th birthday.

The shooting took place at Embroidery Royale, 2415 Heinz Road, and was reported by Odle's wife, Mary, who was in the shop at the time of Bean was shot in the mid-torso area and died as a result of the wound. Police said Keith Odle then turned the gun on himself and died of a single shot to the head. Mary Odle, who was in the shop, called the police. "She called in and told us her husband had shot Bean and then shot himself in the head," Krei said.

Jury convicts man of in 2nd HIV charge

ANAMOSA — An Anamosa jury found Adam Musser guilty Tuesday of failing to inform a sexual partner that he had tested

After two hours of deliberation, the eightman, four-woman jury convicted Musser, 23, of criminal transmission of HIV. Dressed in a blue turtleneck and khakis, the Iowa City resident showed no emotion as the unanimous decision was read.

The victim, a Coralville woman, tested positive for HIV last month, attorneys said as the trial concluded. Documents regarding her HIV-status were filed in 6th District Court in Johnson County on Feb. 3.

Seated in the front row at the Jones County Courthouse, the 18-year-old covered her tearful face and laid her head on her sister's shoulder as the verdict was read. Later, she and Assistant Johnson County Attorney Anne Lahey, who also shed a few tears, Musser, meanwhile, turned to face his softly crying mother after most observers had left the courtroom. He held her hand, and they hugged as family, friends, and defense attorney Kelly Steele looked on. Musser faces up to 25 years in prison; his sentencing has not been set.

Suicide bomber hits Iraqi police, killing at least 55 people

BY CHARLES DUHIGG LOS ANGELES TIMES

ISKANDARIYA, Iraq — A suicide truck bomb exploded outside a police station south of Baghdad on Tuesday morning, killing at least 55 people and injuring more than 50 others, many of them job applicants and pedestrians. The explosion was the third-worst bomb attack in Iraq since President Bush declared the end of major combat in May. At least 164 Iraqis have been killed in suicide bombings directed at police and political figures in the past two weeks. Four more Iraqi police officers were killed Tuesday in Baghdad, police officials said.

U.S. officials said they believed the truck that blew up Tuesday contained 500 pounds of explosives.

"Bodies were like sticks covering every part of the ground," said Lt. Col. Abdul-Raheem Saleh, 48, commander of the Iskandariya police station.

The blast came as a team of U.N. experts was visiting Iraq to study the feasibility of direct elections in the spring, and one day after the U.S. military confirmed the interception of a letter it says was written by a terrorist operative seeking Al Qaeda's assistance in inciting further violence in Iraq. Military officials say they believe the letter, seeking to provoke warfare between Shiite and Sunni Muslims, was written by Abu Musab Zarqawi, a Jordanian suspected of having ties to Al Qaeda.

Recent attacks, ranging from suicide bombings in the Kurddominated north Feb. 1 that killed 109 to Tuesday's bombing in this mixed Shiite and Sunni area, emphasize the wide reach of the insurgent threat and the continued vulnerability of government and political offices. Many of the victims of the Iskandariya blast were young men lined up to apply for jobs as police officers. Witnesses said two vehicles sped toward the two-story police station surrounded by low sandbag walls about 9 a.m. as the applicants waited for the station to open. One of the vehicles, a red truck, suddenly braked and exploded, leaving a hole in the asphalt and destroying at least a dozen cars.

One woman and a child were among those killed, said doctors at the Iskandariya hospital. Several of the victims were decapitated. Doctors expect the death toll to rise.

"We were lining up, waiting to submit our papers when I heard an explosion and was thrown through the air," said Thamer Talib Saudi, 22, whose ear was torn off by the blast. "When I woke up 10 minutes later, the American troops were there, and I was surrounded by dead bodies as far as I could see."

Local police in this town of 120,000 said they believed the attack was the latest attempt by insurgents to undermine plans to transfer sovereignty to a provisional Iraqi government by June 30.

Seminar scheduled for profs, black athletes

BY PHIL DAVIDSON THE DAILY IOWAN

The UI Center for Teaching will host a seminar intended to help professors work more closely with black student-athletes who are concerned about their academic experience at the university, the UI's director of the panel in charge of athletics announced Tuesday.

The seminar, to be held April 30, was created in response to interviews the UI Board in Control of Athletics conducted with black student-athletes last spring, said Charlotte Westerhaus, the director of the UI Office for Equal Opportunity and Diversity.

"We were pleased to find that they were vastly concerned with academic performance," she said.

An additional impetus for the seminar was an article printed in the Oct. 10, 2003, edition of the Chronicle of Higher Education, "Black Athletes and White Professors: a Twilight of James picked out a 10-pound duck, named it Peepers, and coached it to victory in his first attempt against more than 130 opponents in the Avoca Quack-Off, one of the country's most popular duck races.

On Jan. 31, Avoca, Neb., a town of just 270 in the southeastern corner of the state, nearly quadrupled its population as almost 1,000 people from all over the country arrived for a $10 day of duck racing benefiting the local Fire Department.

Set up on a tennis court, the ducks race from service line to service line between seven 3foot-high fences breaking the court into six lanes.

Some veteran coaches supply their own ducks, but newcomers like James, who is studying microbiology, often rent one for $5 from local farmers who bring livestock trailers full of quacking racers.

"Peepers was not like a typical mallard duck. He was bigger and all white except for a black spot on his back and some red on his face," James said. "There was a bunch of weird ducks in there, and Peepers looked a little different, so I went after him." James became interested in the Quack-Off after a friend from Nebraska, 29-year-old Tim O'Brien, told James about his fun experience the previous year with duck racing. This year, like the 23 before it, charter buses and RVs spilled into town, unleashing a spate of tailgaters sporting duck hats and other thematic apparel to weather subzero temperatures.

Despite the cold weather, spectators quickly caught onto Peepers' duck-defying

"He was the fastest nice duck I ever saw," O'Brien said. "Last year, I had a duck that was meaner than hell he would bite and scratch.'

The inception of the Quack-Off dates to 1980, when a couple of friends hanging out in a local bar began reciting stories of Canadian ice fishermen who raced ducks while waiting for a bite, said event organizer David Seay. The group decided to make it a tradition after holding its own match shortly thereafter.

Q&A with

Dt. Can you describe how successful your "P&D" conversation sessions with students have been?

Skorton: I think eight students showed up [Monday], and we had a really good dialogue for more than an hour. It would have been terrific if more students could have come, but I'm committed to continue to do these because I always learn something by listening to what students are concerned about. I always walk away with questions, and by answering those questions, I learn more about the student experience.

Dt. How do you feel about differential tuition, either on the upper versus lower classmen level or for different Skorton: In general, I have not been supportive of differential tuition. It has always been my concern that students will choose a major based on tuition costs. On the other hand, it is obviously more expensive to have an education in certain disciplines. I'm keeping an open mind, but I don't want to push people away from a subject based on costs.

Dt. What relationship do you see with the UI and the lowa Child project?

Skorton: I've been on the board of Iowa Child for quite some time now, not as a member of the university, but as an individual citizen. Since the very beginning of being on the board, I've taken the position the university should not, and would not, take a formal stand on a project that doesn't directly involve the university.

Dt. What is the most important issue you will be working on with the new student government leadership?

Skorton: The most important thing in my opinion is a process issue. The leadership should feel that I am accessible to them directly. [It is] very important that they feel like they can pick up the phone and call me. In terms of specific issues, certainly fuition will be an Issue. I think might turn out to be an issue.

Password policy changes

BY SARAH FRANKLIN THE DAILY IOWAN

Beginning in March, UI students, faculty, and staff will have to change their Hawk ID passwords at least once every six months as part of the university's effort to beef up computer security.

The new rules, put in place to comply with federal privacy laws, will also prevent people from reusing old passwords, said Jane Drews, the university's Information Technology Services security officer.

When the changes go into effect, students who have had the same password for more than six months will receive an e-mail notification daily for 10 days. The automatic message will contain instructions for changing the password and a link to do so. If students do not respond to the e-mail within 10 days, they will be locked out and have to go to the ITS website to change their passwords.

Other changes include a new feature that will lock accounts for 15 minutes after five failed login attempts within a 15minute span.

Hawk ID passwords will have to be changed at least once every six months, beginning in March.

Individuals who have had the same password for more than six months will receive an e-mail notification daily for 10 days.

The new self-service tools mean students, faculty, and staff can manage their own passwords, and they will not have to call the ITS help desk to change or reset their passwords.

Drews said the changes were implemented for a number of

"One goal is to make the rules consistent everywhere. Some had expiring passwords; some didn't," she said. "Engineering expired every four months, dentistry every three months, and the liberal arts never expired."

The changes were also made to increase password security. Drews said the university sees several cases of unauthorized access to student accounts each month.

"We are trying to protect against identity theft," she said. "There is a lot of personal information that can be accessed with a password."

Hawk IDs are used for a number of programs including ISIS, university e-mail, payroll information, WebCT, and Blackboard.

First-year dental student Amy Riffel said she is glad the university is trying to protect students from identity theft, but she added that changing the password twice a year is a pain. "Maybe once a year would be better," she said.

Hawk ID passwords are required to be six characters long and include at least two numbers.

Drews suggests students think of an event or a favorite song lyric and then use the first letters of each word of the phrase to make a password. E-mail DI reporter Sarah Franklin at: sarah-franklin@uiowa.edu

Dean hopeful likes student input

BY JEFF WALLACE THE DAILY IOWAN

The seventh and final candidate for the UI College of Law dean stressed the importance of interaction with students on Tuesday less than two weeks before the search committee submits its top choices to UI President David Skorton.

"Students are a very good source of ideas," said Maureen O'Rourke, the associate dean of academic affairs at the Boston University Law School.

One of her main goals as the UI law-school dean is to require law professors to review and broaden their curricula periodically, taking suggestions from students. She hopes student input may be gained from town meetings between students and faculty or occasional breakfast meetings with students, which is similar to a program held at Boston University.

"If there is something more the law school can do for students, I'd like to hear about it," she said.

Rachel Mummey/The Daily Iowan Law dean candidate Maureen O'Rourke speaks at the Boyd Law Building on Tuesday.

"The students live it. Their only agenda is to improve the school." For some students in attendance, O'Rourke's plans were not enough to get them excited. "I liked her a lot. She was very specific, but she lacked vision," said UI law student Tom O'Brien.

To bring more students to the school, O'Rourke suggested improving the law school's website to make it more attractive to prospective students. In addition, sending faculty beyond

Iowa borders and dispatching letters to law firms and judges not located in the Midwest could help raise awareness and the status of the UI, she said.

"With Iowa, it could be a goal to try to move it to the upper tier of law schools," she said.

Originally a Yankees fan from New York, O'Rourke said she needed to get out of Boston before the Red Sox finally won a world series. And, she said, she would enjoy the slower style of life in Iowa City. Her academic credentials include stints as visiting professor specializing in copyright law at the University of Victoria in British Columbia, Canada, and La Trobe University in Melbourne, Australia. Now that all the candidates have come to campus, the search committee plans to narrow the pool to two or three and give that list to Skorton by mid-February

Iowa City School District representatives warned School Board members Tuesday night to expect more local schools on the No Child Left Behind 'watch list" next year.

The state Department of Education is projected to add City and West High Schools to its 'watch list" if the schools do not raise the reading and math proficiencies of special-education students as well as those receiving free or reduced lunch, said Pam Ehly, the district's director of instruction. Students in those chools must meet state proficiency standards to avoid the list, she said. The Education Department's garning comes on the heels of news that Southeast and Northwest Junior High Schools had been placed on the list last month. The list is employed as a courtesy notice to schools that they could become "schools in need of assistance" - part of a ederal list to be issued in August, said state Education Department spokeswoman Kathi Slaughter.

The department cautions, however, not to draw school performance conclusions from list designations.

Lane Plugge Iowa City school

"To say we are in the 80th and 90th percentile in the nation consistently and say we are in need of special assistance is a mismatch," Ehly said.

School Board member Dave Franker said the test-reliant system is having a negative influence on education districtwide.

We actually placed tests [in English] in front of kids who can do no more than write their names [in English]" just to comply with requirements, Franker said. "That's the educational practice we find ourselves in."

Northwest and Southeast were placed on the list because the subgroups of special-education and students receiving free and reduced lunches did not meet state reading and math goals. The federal legislation requires proficiency levels in special-education students, students receiving free and reduced lunches, minority students, and English-language learners, said Iowa City School Superintendent Lane Plugge.

To qualify as a subgroup, the school must have 30 or more students meeting state standards for that subgroup. Many small Iowa schools opt out of these requirements because they have fewer than 30 students in the subgroups, Slaughter said.

"Students are all human beings, and you can not force everyone to be at the same achievement level no more than you can force everyone to run the 100-yard dash at the same speed," she said.

The state Education Department reports 10 percent of Iowa schools and more than 13 percent of the state's school districts are on the watch list.

Feds retreat on Drake subpoenas

BY RYAN J. FOLEY ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES - After a nationwide outcry, federal prosecutors on Tuesday withdrew a subpoena asking Drake University to turn over a list of people involved in a November antiwar forum, as well as subpoenas ordering four activists to testify before a grand jury.

Across the country, the subpoenas raised concerns among peace activists and civil-liberties advocates that the government and debate with a McCarthystyle witch hunt.

Brian Terrell, the leader of the Catholic Peace Ministry and one of the four called before the grand jury, broke the news to cheering protesters outside the U.S. Courthouse.

"We made them want to stop, and we have to make sure they never want to do this again," he told a crowd of approximately 100 attending a noontime rally.

The subpoenas were withdrawn after U.S. Attorney was attempting to stifle dissent Stephen O'Meara did not resist motions to quash them. U.S. District Judge Ronald Longstaff then lifted a gag order that had prohibited Drake University employees from discussing the case.

The development came one day after O'Meara issued a statement acknowledging the investigation, saying its focus was on alleged trespassing at the Iowa National Guard headquarters in Johnston on Nov. 16, when 12 people were arrested during an antiwar protest.

Al Overbaugh, a spokesman for the U.S. Attorney's Office, said the investigation was not over, but he could not comment further.

As part of the probe, prosecutors had served a subpoena last week asking Drake University to turn over the names of participants in the forum, which was held the day prior to the Guard protests.

It also requested campus security records about the forum, sponsored by the Drake chapter of the National Lawyers Guild, which included sessions on nonviolence training and the war in Iraq.

Bush's Guard records released

BY KEN FIREMAN NEWSDAY

WASHINGTON — The White House, seeking to end a controversy over President Bush's Vietnam-era military record, released documents Tuesday showing Bush received pay and retirement credit for 41 days of National Guard duty in 1972-73 but not definitively settling the question of whether he had reported for duty after a transfer.

White House officials asserted that the newly discovered records demonstrated Bush had fulfilled his responsibilities as an Air National Guard member and that political adversaries who have accused him of shirking his duties were wrong.

"The president was proud of his service in the National Guard," said White House spokesman Scott McClellan. "He fulfilled his duties. He was honorably discharged. I think there are some ... trying to twist the facts for par advantage in an election year."

But critics said the records did not prove to a certainty that Bush had actually reported for duty in Alabama in 1972 after being allowed to transfer there from Texas so he could work on a political campaign.

"The handful of documents released today by the White House creates more questions than answers," said Democratic National Chairman Terry McAuliffe, who helped revive the controversy recently by accusing Bush of going "AWOL" in 1972. "The fact remains that there is still no evidence that George W. Bush showed up for duty as ordered while in Alabama."

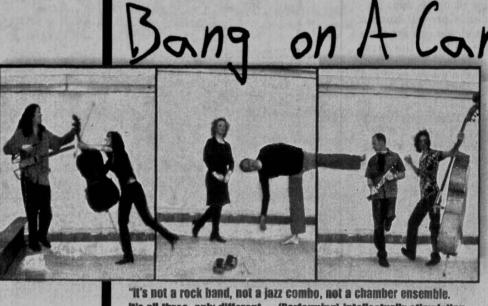

And McClellan was extremely careful in his statements about what the new records proved and what they did not. He repeatedly told reporters that the records showed "the days on which he [Bush] was paid for his service" and thus "verify that he met the requirements necessary to fulfill his duties."

But when asked if the documents proved that Bush had served in Alabama during the six months in 1972 when he had transferred there, McClellan replied: "No. I think if you look at the documents, what they show are the days on which he was paid, the payroll records, and which we previously said, that the president recalls serving both in Alabama and in

McClellan also acknowledged that White House officials have not been able to find anyone who served with Bush and could attest to his service in Alabama. If they had, McClellan said, "obviously, we would have made people available."

An accompanying memo from Albert Lloyd Jr., a retired National Guard lieutenantcolonel who reviewed the records at the White House's request, was equally careful in its phrasing.

Lloyd wrote that the records show Bush had "a satisfactory year for retirement/retention' in both 1972 and 1973 and had therefore "completed his military obligation in a satisfactory manner" but did not address whether Bush had actually reported for duty in Alabama.

Musser gets 2nd HIV conviction

The unanimous decision followed a morning of testimony during which Steele used people close to Musser to paint his client as a truthful man.

"We're obviously disappointed," Steele said.

Lahey said prosecuting the case was difficult because she did not have a lot of material and evidence to make her case. "We're very pleased, and it was hard, but we have to do the best we can," she said.

"Sometimes, [Musser's] testimony did not help him out." Musser, who is expected to stand trial twice more on HIV- transmission charges later this year, testified Tuesday that both sides of sexual encounter had to be heard.

Many points in his testimony conflicted with the woman's claims - most significantly in Musser's allegation that he did indeed disclose his HIV status to the woman the day they met.

"I made a smart remark and said, 'Don't get too close, you might get AIDS," Musser said while recounting details from his first conversation with the victim. "Her mouth dropped open, then I told her I was HIV-positive."

Musser also insisted that he used a condom during their first sexual encounter. The woman said the only contraceptive they used that night was a birth-control pill.

He was convicted on his first charge of criminal HIV transmission in January by a Benton County jury.

He filed a motion for a new trial Jan. 27, for which a hearing will be held March 5 in Johnson County.

Lahey, in her closing rebuttal, pointed out the flaws and inconsistencies in Musser's defense, even calling portions of his testimony "ludicrous."

"No one here has the right to play Russian roulette with someone else's life," Lahey said. "It isn't a case of buyer beware ... it is so much more serious than that.'

Seminar to aid profs, black athletes

Uncertainty," which was passed out to the UI Faculty Senate at its meeting Tuesday.

In the article, a professor at Louisiana State University writes about his failure to develop a teaching style that would encouraged a black female student-athlete in his class to participate in discussion and nurture her literary abilities.

The author suggests that athletes - especially blacks may grow up in an environment and face challenges in college that make them less likely to interact with white professors outside of class.

"The article so much mirrored the comments by [the Athletics Board] executive committee," Westerhaus said.

"We are trying to aid the faculty by giving information about what it's like to be a student-athlete on campus."

Included in the seminar will be a discussion by Fred Mims, a UI associate athletics director, on what it means to be a student-athlete on full scholarship, said Ana Diaz-Arnold, the Athletics Board chairwoman. They also plan to discuss the difficulties studentathletes face balancing their class work with athletic responsibilities.

Westerhaus said she expects a good turnout at the seminar. At last week's Faculty Council meeting, Faculty Senate President Margaret Raymond encouraged all council members to attend and bring colleagues from their departments.

History Professor Katherine Tachau said the Chronicle article was disturbingly familiar. The idea for the seminar was "terrific," she said, because she thinks it's extremely difficult for white professors to overcome the institutional racism so prevalent in contemporary culture.

"As professors, we have to be constantly vigilant to improve our ability to think of each student as an individual," she said. "Anything we can do to make the university a welcoming community for students who want to be here is worth doing.'

UI grad student ducks out in Neb.

Coaches drop their ducks and chase the feathered competitors toward the finish line, following a foghorn to signal the start.

"You can egg your duck on and give it pep talks, but you can't touch him," James said.

Ducks commonly turn around inches before the finish line, running between their coach's legs, only to run back toward the start. James said he had to scare Peepers across the finish line a couple of times before he got the hang of it.

By 4 p.m., Peepers had already trampled the competition in the first three rounds. In the final round, he faced Portable 11, Red Peters, and Ice Duck for the championship.

KERRY TAKES TENNESSEE & VIRGINIA PRIMARIES

Once again, Kerry cruises

BY DAN BALZ AND MICHAEL D. SHEAR WASHINGTON POST

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., cruised to victory in Virginia and Tennessee on Tuesday night, according to partial returns, adding the first Southern states to his growing string of primary and caucus victories as he continued to run away with the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

greatest strength, and Howard Dean was still winless after the first 14 events of the nominating season, with the exception of the District of Columbia primary, where no delegates were chosen.

Some of Kerry's rivals had vowed even before the polls closed Tuesday to continue their candidacies regardless of the outcome. But pressure was mounting on the field - particularly on Clark - to quit the race as party leaders sought to shift the focus to President Bush and unify Democrats to prepare for the general election.

The Massachusetts senator trounced his opponents in Virginia, winning 52 percent of the vote with 99 percent of the precincts reporting. Edwards was in second, at 27 percent. Clark (9 percent), Dean (7 percent), Al Sharpton (3 percent), and Rep. Dennis Kucinich, D-Ohio (1 percent), were well back.

Speaking to his supporters at a victory rally at George Mason University in Fairfax, Va., Tuesday night, Kerry underscored the breadth of his campaign's winning streak. "Once again, the message rings out loud and clear," he said. "Americans are voting for change - East, West, North — and now in the South."

Ignoring his rivals and looking ahead to the general election, Kerry used his victory speech to criticize Bush for leaving the country weaker, taking aim in particular at the president's economic record. Asserting that administration officials have "failed to tell the truth about the economy," Kerry said, "From Missouri to Wisconsin to Ohio, from the heartland to both coasts, the wreckage of the Bush economy

Aide: Stewart altered stock message

NEW YORK (AP) - With an investigation looming, Martha Stewart sat down at her assistant's computer and altered a record of a message left by her stockbroker about ImClone Systems stock, the assistant testified Tuesday.

Stewart immediately stood up and ordered the message restored to its original wording, Ann Armstrong said.

The original message read: "Peter Bacanovic thinks ImClone is going to start trading downward." It reflected a call by Bacanovic on Dec. 27, 2001, the day Stewart sold her 3,928 shares in the company.

Armstrong testified Stewart saw the message roughly a month later, on Jan. 31, 2002, and replaced it with the words: "Peter Bacanovic re imclone."

"She instantly stood up, still standing at my desk, and told me to put it back to the way it was," the assistant testified at Stewart's stock-fraud trial in federal court.

Armstrong told jurors she was "startled" by Stewart's conduct and that she had never before altered a message in the log, which Armstrong maintains at Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia, Stewart's media company.

Bird flu hits 2nd Delaware farm

DOVER, Del. (AP) — Officials responded to a new discovery of bird flu Tuesday by ordering a quarantine of 80 farms and the slaughter of 72,000 more chickens. The swift action was aimed at averting more bans on U.S. exports.

The second case of disease was found in a commercial flock of roaster-type chickens in northern Sussex County, at least five miles away from the farm where the first flock tested positive last week.

The chickens at the second farm were killed Tuesday afternoon, said Delaware Secretary of Agriculture Michael Scuse.

Perdue Farms said it had destroyed the 72,000 chickens to prevent the spread of the disease. The company said the flock was believed to have been infected by a nearby flock of chickens that was raised for the New York City live markets.

BOSTON — Gay-rights activists, conservative leaders, and media from around the globe converged on the Massachusetts Statehouse for a historic session today in which lawmakers will take up a constitutional amendment to ban same-sex marriage.

As the hours ticked down, Senate leaders feverishly sought a middle ground, proposing a compromise that would ban same-sex marriage but establish civil unions.

"We should not engage in a divisive, all-or-nothing debate that may end by eliminating all rights for same-sex couples,"

Democratic Senate President
Robert Travaglini and Republican Senate Minority Leader
Brian Lees wrote fellow lawmakers Tuesday.

The compromise prompted almost immediate criticism, including from House Speaker Thomas Finneran, who called it "highly inappropriate" to use an amendment to craft legislation or pass new law — such as one establishing civil unions.

The gay-marriage issue has created an unprecedented spectacle at the Capitol: As many as 4,000 spectators and 300 media members are expected to attend the start of the constitutional convention, and a furious lobbying effort was already under way.

Christian conservatives used a dolly to haul in more than 18,000 petitions signed by citizens from across the country urging lawmakers to pass the amendment.

Meanwhile, children of gay couples traveled to the Statehouse to plead with the Senate president "not to write discrimination into our Constitution."

"Tve never seen anything like this," said Charles Rasmussen, a spokesman for Finneran, a Democrat who supports the amendment. "And I'm told this building has never seen this kind of scrutiny from the national media that anyone can remember."

Aides testify in Plame affair

BY CURT ANDERSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A federal grand jury investigating the leak of an undercover CIA officer's identity has heard testimony from at least four current and cations aides, people familiar with the probe said Tuesday.

Press secretary Scott McClellan and Adam Levine, who formerly worked in the press office, testified before the panel on Feb.

6. A deputy in McClellan's office, Claire Buchan, said she appeared former White House communibefore the panel on Jan. 30.

Mary Matalin, a Republican consultant who headed Vice President Dick Cheney's communications office until December, confirmed that she testified on Jan. 21.

A number of other current or former officials have been interviewed by the FBI, including President Bush's top political adviser, Karl Rove, communications chief Dan Bartlett, former spokesman Ari Fleischer, Cheney Chief of Staff Lewis "Scooter" Libby, and Cheney spokeswoman Cathie Martin, said two sources who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Like the others, McClellan would not describe his testimony, telling reporters repeatedly that only the investigators could release details

"The president directed everybody at the White House to cooperate fully in the investigation. I, obviously, want to do my part to cooperate," McClellan told reporters.

Fleischer, in an e-mail to the Associated Press, also referred all questions to the Justice Department. Officials there and at the FBI would not comment on the case.

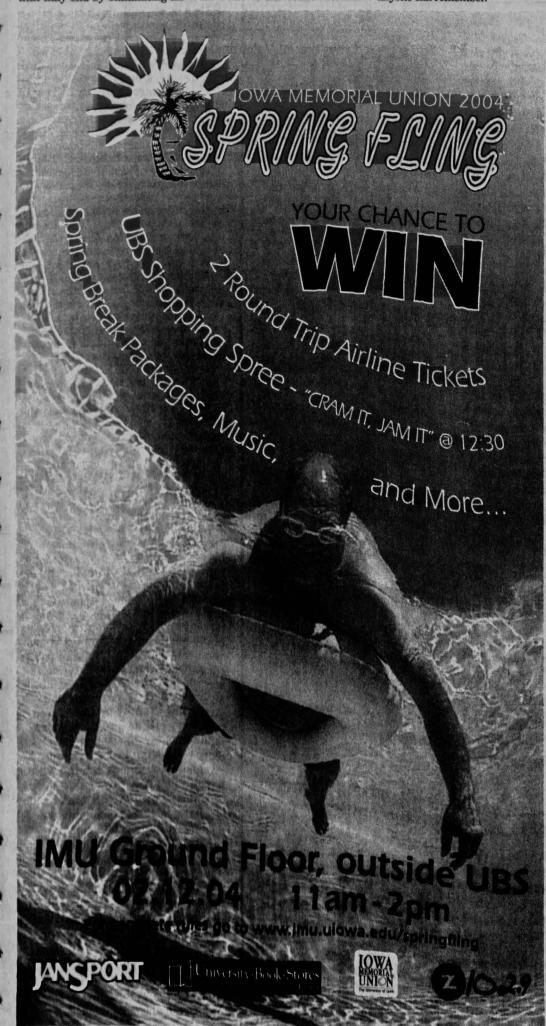

Investigators want to know who leaked the name of CIA officer Valerie Plame to syndicated columnist Robert Novak, which Novak disclosed in an article published July 14. Questions have been raised about whether the leak was timed to discredit assertions by Plame's husband, former Ambassador Joseph C. Wilson, that the Bush administration had exaggerated Iraq's nuclear capabilities to build a case for war.

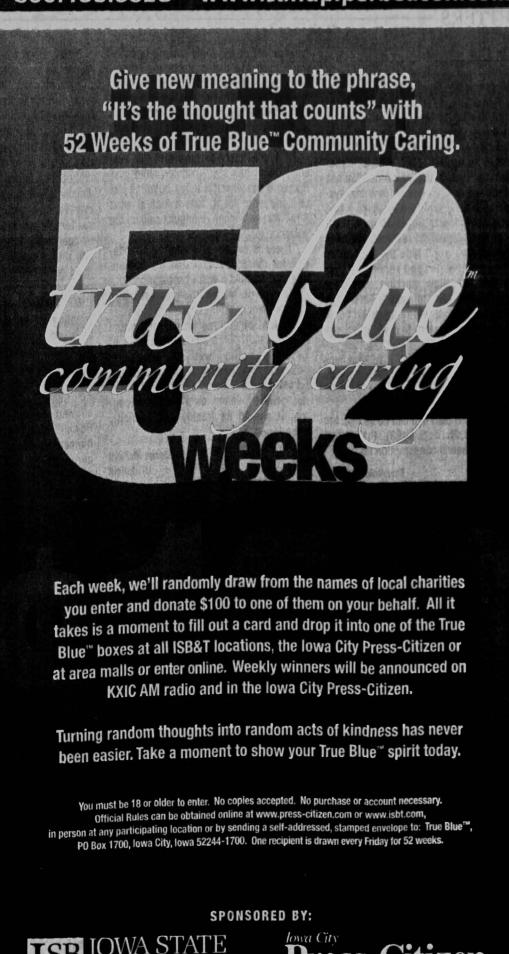

Wilson now is working as a foreign-policy adviser to Democratic presidential candidate John Kerry and has made several campaign appearances for the Massachusetts senator.

Whoever leaked the name could be charged with a felony under the Intelligence Identities Protection Act, which makes it a crime to reveal, knowingly and intentionally, the name of a covert operative.

The senior Democrats on the House Judiciary and Government Reform committees questioned in a letter to Bush on Tuesday whether White House aides were being as forthcoming as they should be. They said most staffers have refused on the advice of counsel to sign Justice Department waivers aimed at releasing journalists from promises to protect confidential sources.

Contradiction as official policy

BUSH'S WEAK CASE FOR RE-ELECTION

While President Bush has spent ample time following the Democrats around the country, campaigning for re-election, his comments lately have given voters little reason to keep him in office.

Amid accusations of being AWOL in the National Guard and lying to the American public about the weapons of mass destruction in Iraq, Bush remained as confusing and contradictory as always during the "Meet the Press" segment Sunday on NBC.

On Tuesday, White House officials released payroll records demonstrating that Bush in fact did get paid for his service in the Guard. However, spokesman Scott McClellan admitted that the records do not specifically show that the president reported for duty. Bush's response to reports of his first-lieutenant evaluation showing that the future leader had not been seen during 1972 is a simple, "They're just wrong."

On Sunday, Bush also discussed the commission he set up to investigate possible intelligence failures. His decision not to testify is suspicious in the least, and when Tim Russert asked him if he would testify, Bush seemed surprised. Russert also brought up Tony Blair's similar commission, which will report the findings in July, compared with Bush's committee, which will not report until March 2005, five months after the presidential election.

Bush defended his decision to go to war by amending his 2002 statement that America and other governments have "no doubt that the Iraq regime continues to possess and conceal some of the most lethal weapons ever devised" to a much less dramatic "Saddam had the capacity to make weapons." Even if voters can overlook the blatant untruth Bush may or may not have known he was telling, can we really be sympathetic to such a huge intelligence mistake under his watch?

In the 2000 election, Bush said, "I don't think our troops ought to be used for what's called 'nation-building.' " Now, however, his tune has changed. He claims that he should be re-elected because he wants "to lead this world toward more peace and freedom."

Bush also touted his economic record - "the economic stimulus plan that ... I asked Congress to pass ... is making a big difference." That explains the unemployment rate rising by a third in the first three years of Bush's term, signifying a loss of 2.2 million jobs, and the $281 billion surplus falling to a record-setting $521 billion deficit in fiscal 2004. While the president cites the stock market and 9/11 as the major reasons for these numbers, the American voters should feel comfortable placing trust in our president to lead us during times of "tremendous stress," and with Bush's record, this is just not possible.

One of Bush's greatest broken promises from the 2000 campaign is that he would be "a uniter, not a divider." When Russert asked him about it, he said, "I must tell you it's tough here in Washington, and frankly, it's the biggest disappointment that I've had so far of coming to Washington."

For us, too.

'Tis the season ...

Mass confusion surrounds our tax code and is beginning to stimulate the debate to reform our tax system. Reform plans go from a minor overhaul of the income tax to completely abolishing it.

What we need is a fair, simple, transparent tax system that any American can understand at a glance. A new tax system that would end late-night sweating over endless forms and allow us to trash our shoe boxes full of receipts. We need a system that won't hide the tax burden in the cost of goods and services, a system that will allow working people wage earners - to take home their entire paychecks, with no deductions. We need a tax system that will eliminate post-April 15 anxiety over whether we will be one of the unlucky 34 million people who are assessed a civil penalty by the IRS each and every year or who receive the dreaded audit notices.

There is one plan that can do all that, the FairTax (HR 25 & S 1493), the perfect vision of a federal consumption tax.

The real FCC

There is a big misconception about what the First Amendment says about the separation of church and state. Here is the First Amendment:

Tear down this wall

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances.

The only mention of church and state is that Congress can "make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

The only thing I see "outlined in the First Amendment of the Constitution" is a 16word statement that protects the church from the government and not the other way around. That is what it has always said and continues to say to this very moment in history, which may come as a surprise to some people.

Thus, one could surmise that this vital amendment has been misinterpreted over the years into what it is today, but don't just take my word for it. Take a look at what Chief Justice William Rehnquist said on the subject:

"There is simply no historical foundation for the proposition that the framers intended to build a wall of separation."

He goes on to say "the greatest injury of the 'wall' notion is its mischievous diversion of judges from the actual intentions of the drafters of the Bill of Rights ... The 'wall of separation between church and State' is a metaphor based on bad history, a metaphor which has proved useless as a guide to judging. It should be frankly and explicitly abandoned."

FCC Chairman Michael Powell has been a very busy man lately. Janet Jackson's breast was clearly more than he could handle. He immediately launched an FCC investigation to discover how a breast found itself bouncing around his airwaves, which are usually reserved for gratuitous acts of violence and the corporate reconstruction of our reality. How many millions of our tax dollars is Powell going to squander on his hunt for the cause behind the outing of one of Janet's top agents? Maybe he could hire Kenneth Starr to sniff around Janet's drawers for oh, lets say 50 million or so ...

Does Powell really imagine that Americans are depraved enough to see the glimpse of a mammary gland as more dangerous to the welfare of the United States than Powell's own recent efforts to dismantle our First Amendment rights? The damage done to the people by his weakening of the already insufficient limits on media monopolies is far more pernicious than Janet's televised anatomy lesson could ever be. How strange that a human breast can turn Powell into such a raging moralistic tiger, and yet the selling of our airwaves into the hands of a few monster corporations leaves him purring like an overstuffed

Mr. Powell, we don't want our only windows on the world controlled by the likes of Rupert Murdoch and Clear Channel. You and your FCC have blatantly betrayed America's trust in appointing Fox as guardian of the henhouse of America's information. Yes, Janet showed her baby bottle. But it is you, Mr. Powell, who has disgracefully exposed himself by shamelessly unzipping your corporate fly and relieving yourself all over our First Amendment. Mr. Powell, you are the one who should be investigated — for corruption in using your FCC post to help foster mega-media monopolies and destroy the laws ensuring the people's right to an unabridged free press and free airwaves.

Kerry's march on the South

John Kerry has said he can win the presidential election without the South, and many have scoffed at the idea of a Massachusetts senator carrying any states below the Mason-Dixon Line. At the time of this writing, however, CNN had projected Kerry as the winner of the Virginia and Tennessee primaries.

If Southerners are willing to look past John Edwards' and Wesley Clark's regional affiliation to see Kerry's experience, perhaps they will look past Bush's party affiliation to see his woeful record as president.

The cable channel, which produced the infamous Super Bowl halftime show, will now air videos from artists such as Britney Spears, Maroon 5, and Blink 182 only Admittedly, I don't really like fantasy, and that's simply a matter of taste, but what bothers me is that a movie such as American Splendor, which actually deals with reality and lays bare the tiny, universal struggles of real life so articulately, is deemed a "fringe" or "indie" film, while a movie with dragons, and beautiful princesses, and invisibility not only grosses the most revenue of the year but will probably also win the industry's highest critical award.

In five years, everyone will own the Lord of the Rings trilogy on DVD with nine hours of bonus footage that will more clearly explain the intricate trade relations among tribes before the rise of the dark lord Sauron, provide detailed maps so fans can study the geography of Middle-Earth and feature language guides for those who wish to learn elvish; and $\mathbf{I} - \mathbf{I} - \mathbf{will}$ be the one who has to go to the "cult" section of the video store to find a copy of American Splendor. Apparently because I am interested in the story of a man with a 9-5 government job and difficulty keeping track of his keys, I am just a few steps away from ritualistically sacrificing humans and goats in large flaming wicker statues. I understand that one function of the movies is to provide a form of escapism, but when I watched Return of the King, I just realized that I wasn't just escaping everyday life but all sense of comprehension of plot. All I really understood was that the good guys, led by the son of a former ruler, fought seemingly random battles continuously and without much discernible provocation against a dark and mysterious band of enemies who were cast as pure evil and whom the audience was told to be in constant fear of.

To me, that doesn't sound like escapism — the only difference between Return of the King and cur-rent events is that the civilizations involved in Lord of the Rings went through the trouble of creating a multilateral fellowship. Much has already been made about the desire of the public to view simplistic goodversus-evil battles in times of political ambiguity, and these stories seem to be more amenable to fantasy. It's comforting to see the bad guys being literally manufactured from fiery pits as faceless demons made from tar and coal and even more comforting to see a ragtag group of charismatic, shining white, horse-riding good guys offing them.

Although true to life, it's more discomfiting to witness an individual dealing with the dehumanizing aspects of capitalism, industrialism, and modernity in a skillful and subtle film, which is part of the reason that American Splendor was relegated to art houses and received recognition primarily in smaller film festivals.

It makes sense — it's just that I guess I never thought that the kids who were really into Dungeons & Dragons and Renaissance festivals would ever have the power to make me feel like an alienated freak.

The Big Bounce When:

The Big Bounce, which refers to the rush one feels after pulling off a scam, would have been more appropriately titled The Big Letdown. This film, unlike such crime capers as Ocean's Eleven, has no rush. It tries to hard to be cool and surprising, but it is formulaic and predictable.

The story centers on Jack Ryan (Owen Wilson, The Royal Tenenbaums), a master of petty crimes who moves to Hawaii after a run-in with the law. He finds a job in construction with Ray Ritchie (Gary Sinise, Apollo 13), a real-estate developer building a resort despite opposition from the natives. He loses his job quick-

Instead, Jack gets a job with District Judge Walter Crewes (Morgan Freeman, Bruce Almighty) and, despite warnings, gets mixed up with Nancy Hayes (virtually unknown Sara Foster), Ray's mistress. Nancy has a penchant for bad boys, and she involves Jack in a plan to steal a large amount of Ray's money. Jack is never sure whether he is a part of the scam or a patsy.

Unfortunately, the audience knows. When the "surprising' twists and turns come at the end, no one is shocked. Director George Armitage (Grosse Pointe Blank) and writer Sebastian Gutierrez (Gothika) have little experience and not a hit movie between them. Their biggest mistake may have been to set the movie in a

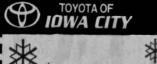

Hawaii, where the stunning vistas are the real scene steal-

The movie does boast an impressive array of actors, but they are bogged down by a bland script. Wilson is charismatic and charming as usual, but as the co-writer behind the 2001 gem The Royal Tenenbaums, we would expect him to avoid stinkers like this. The same goes for such talents as Freeman, who performs fairly well despite the pitiful role he inhabits. Sheen and Sinise, although both talented actors, are given little to do and turn in sterile performances.

The worst, however, is Foster, making her feature-film debut. The casting director would have been wise to consider that perhaps there was a reason that this pretty face has never made the leap from model to actress. Although it may not be entirely her fault. Nancy is a gratingly annoying character whose attitude is meant to be charming and spunky but comes off as childish and bratty. We are supposed to believe that Jack falls for her mischievous ways, but all we really believe is that he falls for the former Guess model's body and face. In the end, the only good scam is the one the movie pulls on the

The DVDs strike back

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Star Wars fans will finally get the Force-feeding they've been asking for.

The original three Star Wars films among the most anticipated on DVD — will be released in the digital format Sept. 21 in North America, Lucasfilm Ltd. and 20th Century Fox announced on Tuesday.

A price for the package and international release dates were to be revealed later.

The original Star Wars movie from 1977 — now titled Star Wars: Episode IV — A New Hope because of the newer prequels — will be compiled in a four-disc collection along with the follow-ups The Empire Strikes Back and Return of

"For all the fans who've been watching VHS and wearing out tapes, this will be a leap into hyperspace," said Jim Ward, a Lucasfilm marketer and DVD executive producer. The fourth disc will contain bonus features, including what the companies described as "the most comprehensive feature-length documentary ever produced about the Star Wars saga" and archive footage from the making of all three films.

They were re-released in theaters in "special edition" versions in 1997 that included touched-up effects and some new scenes.

Aristide loyalists vow to fight

BY IAN JAMES ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAP-HAÏTIEN, Haiti -Armed loyalists of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide set up blazing barricades Tuesday, vowing to attack rebels leading a bloody uprising that has spread to at least 11 towns and cost 42 lives.

Brandishing pistols, bands of drunken youths manned barricades and threw rocks at passing cars in the northern port city of Cap-Haïtien. They said they were protecting the half-million residents of Haiti's second-largest city, a former Aristide stronghold where support has dwindled as poverty increases

"The opposition doesn't want to deal with Aristide, so we know we are going to have to fight them," said Jesner Jean, 28, pacing along a barricade of boulders and garbage.

Roadblocks have prevented food deliveries to tens of thousands of hungry Haitians, the U.N. World Food Program warned from Geneva, and fuel tankers also were blocked. Some gas stations have run out of fuel.

Police have regained control in three of the 11 towns, but the unrest has taken a heavy toll.

Aristide partisans were searching for rebels but also lashed out at members of the opposition coalition in Cap-Haïtien.

Remy Charlot, 44, said Aristide militants gutted his restaurant overnight. "Because I criticize the government, that's why they burned my restaurant," he told the Associated Press. "They came inside. They poured gasoline on all my stuff, and they burned it."

After sporadic gun battles Monday, police regained control of the port city of St.-Marc, 45 miles west of Port-au-Prince, and nearby Grand-Goave. At least two men were shot in St.-Marc, and another was allegedly shot and killed by Aristide supporters, who left the headless body at the roadside.

French assembly bans Islamic scarves

BY ELAINE GANLEY ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — France took a decisive step Tuesday toward banning Islamic head scarves in public schools, with lawmakers overwhelmingly backing the government's drive to preserve French secular traditions from Muslim fundamentalism.

The ban on religious attire in classrooms, which also includes Jewish skullcaps and large Christian crosses, was approved, 494-36, despite protests and criticism from around the world. The measure goes early next month to the Senate, where there is little opposition.

The ban was expected to take effect in September. Applying the law could be the real test: Critics say it's too vague and will inflame anti-French feelings among the nation's large Muslim minority.

But the bill got far more than the 288 votes needed to pass in the 577-seat National Assembly a measure of its popularity within France, demonstrated repeatedly in public opinion polls.

The Republic and secularism are strengthened," said Prime Minister Jean-Pierre Raffarin, hailing "the magnitude of this vote."

French leaders hope the law will quell debate over head scarves that has divided France since 1989, when two young girls were expelled from their school in Creil, outside Paris, for wearing the head coverings. Scores more have been expelled since then.

The bill stipulates that "in schools, junior-high schools, and high schools, signs and dress that conspicuously show the religious affiliation of students are forbidden." It would not apply to students in private schools or to French schools in other countries.

Sanctions for refusing to remove offending apparel would range from a warning to temporary suspension to expulsion.

The government argues that a law is needed to protect France's secular traditions and to ward off rising Islamic fundamentalism.

OPEC to cut oil production

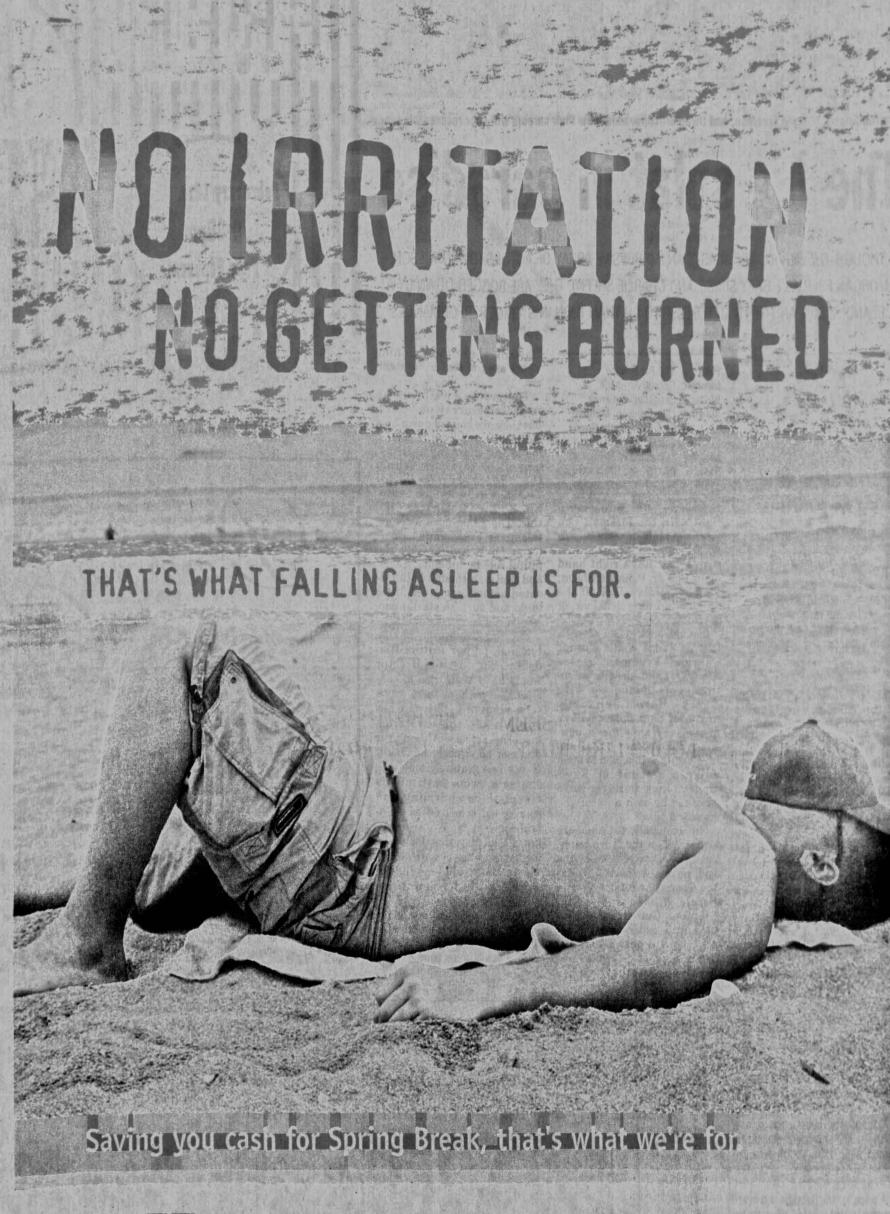

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — OPEC decided Tuesday to cut its excess production of crude immediately and lower output quotas by 1 million barrels a day effective April 1 - a surprise move that could mean prices for gasoline and oil will remain high.

The organization expects the combined cuts will reduce actual production by approximately 10 percent — 2.5 million barrels a day.

OPEC agreed to the two-stage reduction in output to try to keep oil prices stable when warmer weather erodes demand in the major importing countries.

The oil group has often urged its members to comply better with their agreed quotas, but its decision to make an additional cut in its official target of 24.5 million barrels was unexpected.

"As time goes on in the second quarter, we will see a drop in demand that will affect prices. If we don't do anything, there will be oversupply in the second quarter of about 3 million barrels [a day]," OPEC President Purnomo Yusgiantoro told reporters at a government-run convention center in Algiers.

NBA

James may stage All-Star surprise

CLEVELAND (AP) - LeBron James plans to watch the NBA's dunk contest - for now.

James was not among the four players the league announced Tuesday will take part in the event during All-Star weekend in Los Angeles. But the Cleveland Cavaliers' star rookie has been hinting at a possible surprise appearance.

Citing a sprained right ankle that sidelined him for three games, James recently turned down the NBA's invitation to be in the dunk contest. James could reconsider, however.

"I don't know," he said. "I'll think about it. There are a lot of people who want me to do it."

If James does decide to participate, the league would probably welcome him.

Golden State's Richardson will try for a thirdstraight dunking crown against Boston's Ricky Davis, Denver's Chris Andersen, and Indiana's Fred Jones. No player has won three slam-dunk contests since the competition began in 1984.

The 76ers fired Ayers on the team 21-31 and 1½ games behind the Boston Celtics for the Eastern Conference's final , playoff berth.

Assistant Chris

Ford will take over on an interim basis. "Some things I was looking at, I just was not comfortable with," general manager Billy King said. "We're going to be aggressive and see if we can do something to change the roster. We still expect every player to play hard, be pro-fessional, and play the right way."

He said he is willing to make trades that could help the 76ers make the playoffs. The deadline for deals is Feb. 19.

Death at Daytona ruled accident

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) The death of a worker at Daytona International Speedway was ruled an accident Tuesday, although a federal official was looking into whether labor safety standards were violated.

Roy H. Weaver III, 44, was killed instantly Sunday when a car driven by paraplegic driver Ray Paprota crushed him while traveling 100-plus mph during a caution period. Weaver was on the track collecting debris from an earlier accident.

Daytona Beach police said the death was an accident, final toxicology reports. But the Speedway and the Dash Series will continue to investigate, officials said.

"We want to know what happened and prevent it from ever happening again," Speedway President Robin Braig said.

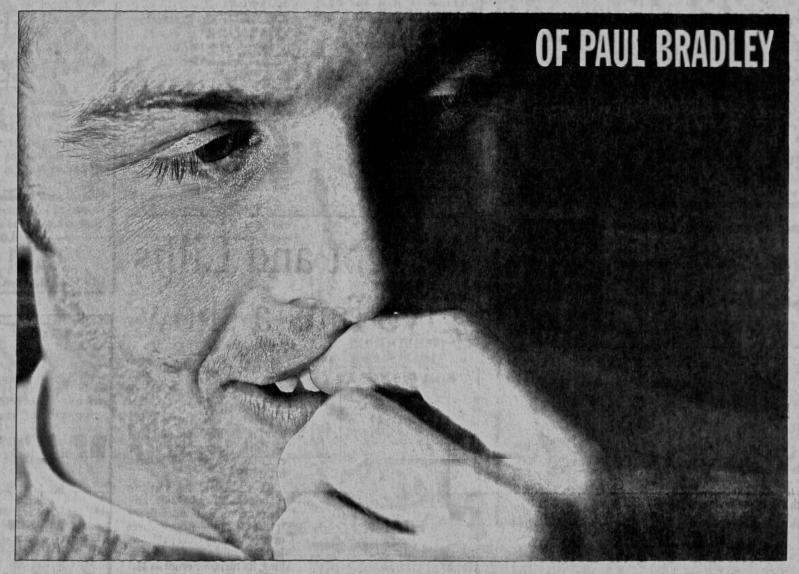

THE CHANGING FACE

HE DOESN'T SEEM TO BE BOTHERED BY THE FACT THAT IT LOOKS LIKE MIKE TYSON USES HIM AS A PUNCHING BAG.

In fact, it's all worth it to him. But what gets to Paul Bradley the most is the staring.

The Iowa sophomore wrestler has grown accustomed to the weekly additions of bumps, bruises, cuts, black eyes, mat burns, and cauliflower ear (an ear deformed by repeated blows), thrown in with the occasional loss of blood and teeth, but only a select few know what he endures

"It's kind of weird. You'll go to class on Mondays, and people look at you kind of funny and see the cuts on your face," the 184-pounder said. "You know they wanna ask you what happened, but they never do. It's kind of awkward. You just want to tell them, but you never end up doing it." When Bradley does get to talking about his battered body, he addresses the positive side.

As for the torn tendon in his right pinkie finger? "It's not too bad because I guess I don't really use my pinkie anyway when I wrestle. The cuts and burns that grace his face? "There's nothing really I can do about it." And the cauliflower ear? "I guess it's just part of the sport." For how beat up he is, Bradley is surprisingly upbeat. When trying to recall the last time he's been injury free, he began to laugh. Wow, um. To tell you the truth, I can't even really remember," he said.

STORY BY BRIAN TRIPLETT PHOTOS BY AMANDA MAY

The injuries have been so persistent that he has learned to take them in stride. It's actually the mental toughness that challenges him the most.

"I don't think it's too tough to tolerate the pain," he said. "I think more mentally, like just being exhausted, is more tough for me to get through than just taking cuts here and there."

Stripper parties confirmed at Colorado

DENVER (AP) - Already mired in a scandal that includes rape allegations, the University of Colorado suffered another blow Tuesday when an adult-entertainment company confirmed that football players hired strippers for recruiting parties as recently as two weeks ago.

Steve Lower, the president of Hardbodies Entertainment Inc. in Denver, said athletes at Colorado and universities around the country have been paying strippers to entertain recruits for years.

"It's a tradition, like throwing a bachelor party," he said.

Lower said students or athletes at the University of Houston, Rice University, University of Northern Colorado, and Colorado State University also have hired his

Officials at most of the schools did not return calls seeking comment. "If this is true, it is a violation of what we teach them and tell them," Colorado football coach Gary Barnett said. Houston Athletics Director Dave Maggard said he and football coach Art Briles were not aware of any strip parties.

Wright and Lillis give fans a show

FRANK KLIPSCH

Shereka Wright is a 5-10 senior from Copperas Cove, Texas. A sleek moving swing forward, she wears her black socks pulled high up to her knees, a strip of athletic tape on her left wrist, and a black headband over her dark hair.

Jennie Lillis is a 6-1 senior from Des Moines. She wears no visible socks, pulls her blonde hair back, and accessorizes with nothing more than a sub-tle dab of black mascara along the edges of each eye. Different in style, similar in substance, the two court leaders are the heads of their Voltrans, the spinach-popping Popeyes that general their troops and deliver the knockout blows. The two were on display, head to head, for the 3,105 in attendance and thousands more watching the telecast at home. The all-American candidate and two-time all-Big Ten Wright showed a cool flair for doing just about everything there is to be done on a basket-ball court in the first 15 minutes of play. Purdue's leading scorer ran ahead of the pack on breaks, shot leaning jumpers off the dribble, and maneuvered through the block with a confidence not usually seen from the shortest forward on the floor.

As a tentative hush fell across Carver, the Boilermakers steamed out to a 12-point lead, threatening to rock the Hawkeyes to sleep before half. But Lillis was in no mood for a nap.

With two minutes to play, Lillis nailed a soft turnaround jumper from the right baseline. On the next possession, Lindsay Richards answered Lillis' courteous scream for the ball and Iowa's statistical top dog made good, pivoting on her left foot, leaning and extend-ing, falling to the floor and kissing a five-footer off the window that drew a foul call. Then, with the crowd's fervored pitch signaling the swinging momentum, Lillis yelled for the ball again after a Hawkeye offensive rebound and let the 20-footer fly. As leather tickled twine, Lillis jumped into the air twice, each time pumping her fist with enough intensity to concuss a person with a metal skull. As the half drew to a close, Lillis hounded Wright along the 3-point line.

Wright's shot fell meekly short of the black-painted lane as Lillis checked her lip for crimson, looking for a referee to eyeball. halftime. remained in front, 42-38, still keeping its full-court press trump card hidden somewhere up coach Kristy Curry's sleeve. Iowa's Achilles heal was throbbing; its turnover count at 11. Wright began the second half the same as the first, yanking a steal and dribbling the length of the floor for the lay-in; she picked up an easy, weak-side offensive rebound for another bucket; she swatted a teetering Kristi Faulkner down onto the parquet like Karch Kiraly does a volleyball into the sand.

At times Lillis and Wright looked like a pair of old-time prize fighters, leaning their sculpted bodies against one another for support, commanding the attention of the crowd, giving a brief lull to the exciting ebb.
Wright: a basket and harm;

Lillis: quick turn and bank. Purdue 54, Iowa 45, with 13:46 to play. Wright: down low. Wright: down low with the foul. Wright: jump stop cross with the kiss. With more than a quarter to play, she already had 26, while Lillis paced Iowa with 15.

Lillis became the career leader in free throws with seven minutes to play, the second shot of the bonus cut Purdue's lead to nine. Wright, on the other hand, steadily moved beyond the 2,000-point plateau that she reached in her last game.

Like a good screenplay, the suki suki is in the subplot. Purdue freshman Katie Gearlds played the role "simply mar-velous," finishing with 32 points, 12-16 shooting, including 4-4 from the 3-point arc. She couldn't help but let out a laugh after nailing a 3 to give her team a 12-point lead with just over four minutes to go.

Iowa's Crystal Smith popped a 3 of her own following a patient possession for her team. But before the people in the crowd could clap anyone else's hands, Wright was already sprinting the length of the floor, drawing a foul before the gaze of the cheering fans could return to the court.

Although a great battle well worth the price of admission, Wright and Gearlds, with their combined 66 points, got the best of the Hawkeyes and Lillis, her pumping heart still visible on her sleeve.

At age 15, as a sophomore at South Tama (Iowa) High School, Bradley's front right tooth was knocked from its socket late in the second period of a match. Why wasn't forfeiting an option? It was the sectional finals match, so he had to finish it to go on to districts, he explained.

He had the option of getting a permanent tooth implanted, but he didn't see that as very practical.

"I just decided to go with the partial until I'm done with college," said Bradley, who can move the tooth out of place with a swipe of his tongue. "I

Bradley's appearance does not represent the average Iowa wrestler, though. In fact, some of his injuries are his own doing. His style of leading with his forehead causes irritation, which leads to the skin busting open

"It's just how he wrestles," Iowa coach Jim Zalesky said. "He's been like that ever since I've seen him. ... He looks like he's one of those old professional wrestlers. He's always got that bleeding going on.' With the exception of the first meet of the season, Bradley has gotten his head taped before every match to help contain the bleeding, although that doesn't always work.

While wrestling at home against Northern Iowa, his match against Eric Pedretti was stopped for "blood time" on four occasions, including one in which Bradley, who ended up capturing the victory, was stitched up by trainer Matt Doyle right beside the mat.

"He's kept pretty busy when it comes to me," Bradley said. "Other than getting my pinkie

He said he has gotten so used to getting cut open during matches that it has almost become a part of his wrestling strategy, and it doesn't affect him during his matches.

After competing in the 197pound and heavyweight classes as a redshirt freshman last season, he trimmed down to wrestle at 184 pounds this year, and he holds an 18-6 record thus

As for goals, he aims to become a national champion at Iowa, and he says he expects to be one this year. The resilient wrestler is also trying to build himself into a crowd favorite, and he showed signs that he is on his way to achieving his goal with a rousing victory over Nate Mesyn during the Hawkeyes' meet against Michigan State on Feb. 1.

After Bradley took down his opponent as time expired in overtime, with blood seeping through the tape on his forehead and the "BRADLEY" tattoo on the top of his back peeking through his singlet, he immediately faced the crowd at Carver-Hawkeye Arena and flexed his arms at the fired-up audience.

Fans of all shapes, sizes, and sexes appreciate Bradley and his work ethic.

His mother told a story about a young girl who colored a picture of a sun and gave it to him after the Penn State meet.

"She told me I was her favorite wrestler, and I thought that was pretty cool," said Bradley, who now has the picture hanging from his refrigerator. "I'd say I was pretty flattered."

Times such as those are what makes all the beating and bleeding worth it to him.

"It crosses your mind sometimes, not being a wrestler, but then you go back to remembering getting them big wins on Sunday," he said. "Winning a big match like that in front of your home crowd, there's nothing like it.

"The satisfaction you get out of wrestling, it's unattainable from anything else."

After six years of leaving his family for seven months out of each year, Earl knows his days of learning foreign tongues will come to an end soon, however. He yearns to be home in Iowa City more and more these days. And whom he misses most from the Iowa community may just propel him to his new career foloverseas pro leagues (Earl said lowing his playing days.

"I miss Coach [Tom] Davis, man. I haven't had a coach — that as far as the overall coaching package — has measured up to him," Earl said. "I just miss the coaching, Tom Davis' outlook on coaching and the way he saw the game, and the way he let the players develop their game."

Earl and Davis - Rodell, that is - have long spoken about the possibility of coaching together someday. Rodell, the current head coach at Laramie County (Wyo.) Community College, nearly landed Earl an assistant job this year, but budgetary limits nixed that plan. A job will likely pop up again though, and the offer remains.

Whenever Acie's done playing, "If it wasn't for e-mail, it. there's always going to be a spot would get very lonely," said Earl, who corresponds with his wife and three children in Iowa for him with me because he has so much basketball experience, and that's going to make me a better coach too," Rodell said.

Earl has other post-retirement options, as well. He has his own Quad Cities-based record label, Venom Productions, along with a clothing line. Nevertheless, Earl said, his next career pursuit could very well involve his buddy Rodell and his longtime mistress, the game of basketball.

"Probably in a few years, man," Earl said, "you'll see me and him together on a bench." E-mail DI reporter Kelly Beaton at:

Wallace traded to Hawks

ATLANTA (AP) — The last time the Atlanta Hawks traded for a notorious malcontent from the Portland Trail Blazers, no less - the results were less than acceptable.

Maybe things will work out better with Rasheed Wallace.

Wallace, a volatile forward who was suspended for seven games last season for threatening an official, and reserve Wesley Person were sent to the Hawks late Monday night for Shareef Abdur-Rahim and two other players.

In the 2000-01 season, Wallace set the NBA record with 41 technical fouls. He is earning $17 million in the final year of his contract, and he had indicated that he did not want to re-sign with Portland.

Lillis' 23-point effort not enough

well into the night, as long as it took for Iowa to survive.

But she can't take away the Boilermakers' win with her words, just as she couldn't with her 23-point effort.

In the first half, Lillis scored after Purdue turned the ball over on a shot-clock violation. Crystal Smith picked Sharika Webb, and Lillis got a second lay-up only to be fouled by Erin Lawless to turn the three-point play. Becca McCann picked up a big rebound, Lillis missed a shot, but Smith grabbed the board — one of her six in the game — and Lillis converted what appeared to be an almost effortless 3-pointer.

But the big ending was Kristi Faulkner's 3pointer to send Iowa into its locker-room confident at a 42-38 deficit after a long, hard struggle.

After the Hawkeyes opened the second half with Johanna Solverson's rebound, Jamie Cavey cut the Boilermakers' lead to two points with a lay-up. A flurry of fouls landed Cavey at the line with 18:42 remaining, and she converted one to land the Hawkeyes within one point. From there, though, the struggle was fruitless.

Iowa coach Lisa Bluder said that as with Iowa's loss last week to Ohio State, the problem was defensive.

"We started the second half with some good defensive stops, we didn't convert as many baskets as we'd have liked, and we didn't take advantage of the first four minutes of the second half."

Though Iowa trailed the remaining minutes of the second half with as many as 12 points, the 3,000-plus fans didn't notice because of the backand-forth physical play. Shereka Wright and freshman Katie Gearlds hurt the Hawkeyes the most, scoring 66 of Purdue's 90 points. After scoring no points in the Boilermakers' win on Feb. 8 over Ohio State, Gearlds launched 32, converting all four of her shots from beyond the arc, and seeming never to falter. On the night, she missed just four shots.

After the game the former Miss Indiana Basketball was surprised by her performance, beginning with a 3-pointer in the corner.

Sometimes I don't feel I get the respect I should get," she said. "I was able to knock down some shots. I caught a hot hand and kept shooting it."

Purdue coach Kristi Curry said she was proud of Gearlds' performance.

"I think she's felt for a while that she doesn't want to do too much," Curry said. But she needs to understand, and I told her this the other night when we were sitting out in front of the gym under a tree, she needs to take control and do what she does, what she was brought here to do."

Wright penetrated Iowa's defense from all angles, pitching in 34 points and converting on eight of nine from the free-throw line.

Smith helped the Hawkeyes on defense as predicted, upsetting Purdue for two steals, 10 points, and four assists.

As Lillis talked about the team's Thursday road game against Wisconsin, it seemed the loss didn't take as much out of her as it put fire back in.

"You want to get back on the floor as quick as you can after a loss," she said.

Alford and Ryan share some problems

BASKETBALL

Wade's suspension was reduced to two games by the university's appeals committee, so he'll be back in uniform tonight. Iowa appears to have the momentum coming into tonight's matchup after an intense, emotional 84-82 double-overtime win over Indiana on Feb. 7. The loss of four players to various pitfalls made the victory even sweeter, a feeling that isn't lost on Ryan.

"Steve [Alford] is going through some of the same things that I've experienced as a head coach with numbers of scholarship players for whatever reason, and they played hard, and they played smart, and they got something done," said the third-year coach. "We know that's what we're going into on Wednesday, and we can't change our game plan or doing anything different because of the good feeling they have going into the game coming off a positive."

news you need to know

Starting in March, changes will be made to the rules for Hawk ID passwords. Students will be required to change their passwords at least twice a year and choose passwords that are difficult to guess. These changes are for students' protection, the protection of the institution, and to help satisfy regulatory (Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act, Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act) issues.

When passwords near their maximum age, students will receive a daily e-mail message with instructions to change their passwords, until they change them or the passwords expire. When students use the self-service change tool, it will prompt them to select a different new password if they enter one that is too easy to guess or has been used before. The new tools for Hawk IDs are at http://hawkid.uiowa.edu.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Partnerships may take a few twists and turns today. If you don't get the response you are looking for, back off and rethink your game plan. Be patient, and stick to the truth. TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Work-related events and meetings should turn out well if you are well-prepared. Someone may try to block you or stand in your way, but your excellent ideas for making extra money can be put into play today.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You can make some personal changes today that will make a difference to the way you look and feel. Although the alterations will turn out exceptionally well, the expense may be far greater than you expected.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Problems are likely to develop at home if you aren't prepared to accept the unexpected. Complaints are likely to arise, but don't bother arguing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You'll attract romantic partners today if you go to a function conducive to meeting new people. Communication and travel should be your intent.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Watch your spending habits today. Don't go over budget on a project even if it is important. Your reputation may be on the line.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Don't hold yourself back today. You must interact if you want to make things happen. You will be highly creative and must put your talent to work for you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It is probably better to get things out en rather than worryin being up-front, you stand a much better chance of resolving any unfortunate circumstances.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You will have a way with words that will influence those you talk to. Be careful not to exaggerate or make promises that you can't keep.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not share your intentions with others today. Someone may be trying to undermine you. Don't ruffle feathers when dealing with loved ones.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): This can be a terrific day if you get out and discuss your plans. Sharing your interests and your concerns will lead to all sorts of new ideas as well as a possible partnership. PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You may have to deal with some financial, legal, or health issues today. Prepare to take care of any matter that pertains to an older relative. By taking on this additional work, you will be highly rewarded in the end.

NEW WAYS TO MAKE YOUR RÉSUMÉ STAND OUT

By Jesse Ammerman

- · When sending a résumé by e-mail, try a subject line other than "LoseWeightFast4Free" or "Add 3 Inches - Find Out How!"
- Employers tend to agree résumés would be less of a hassle to sort through if more of them had Barbie stickers like yours.
- · Be careful; what works for 50 Cent may not work for you. So take it easy on the foul language and flagrant gunplay boasts.
- · When you've finished typing and printing a copy, go through the text carefully with your crayon and correct all errors before handing the résumé out.
- · List specific previous jobs, If you consistently assembled the zestiest chalupas on your shift, be sure to say so.
- · Vivid action terms can serve to enhance your profile, even if they're not real words. For example. describing yourself as the "EXXXtreme District Manager from 1998-2001" could prove to employers that you have just the sort of edge they're looking for.
