Local pharmacy focuses on patient needs

BY MARK QUINN

Mike Stein, a pharmacist at NaVid Pharmacy in Coralville, removes drugs from heart medication bottles that are no longer needed, before getting rid of them.

The practice of pharmacy, through personal service, is a practice of past masters that can no longer be undervalued. Pharmacy currently is subject to regulation under the state or federal government, but regulations are not intended to destroy the practice of pharmacy. Rather, regulations are intended to ensure that patients can receive high-quality care.

Woman files harassment suit

In a lawsuit filed on Monday, the supervising pharmacist of the University of Iowa Health System filed a lawsuit against her former employer. The lawsuit claims that the pharmacist was subjected to harassment and discrimination.

The alleged incident occurred on October 1, 2020, when the pharmacist was driving in the hospital parking lot. According to the lawsuit, the pharmacist was followed by another vehicle, and when she began to drive away, the other vehicle continued to follow her. The pharmacist eventually parked her car and walked inside the hospital, where she reported the incident to authorities.

The lawsuit states that the pharmacist was subjected to harassment and discrimination, including verbal abuse and medication errors. The pharmacist is seeking unspecified damages for emotional distress and punitive damages.

Lawmakers talk business regulations

The Iowa Senate was scheduled to debate a comprehensive business regulations bill on Wednesday. The bill, which was introduced by Senator Joni Ernst, would have the potential to impact small businesses and promote economic growth in Iowa.

The bill would create a Business Regulatory Commission to oversee and streamline the regulatory process. The commission would consist of representatives from various state agencies and would be tasked with reviewing and revising existing regulations.

The bill also includes provisions to limit the number of new regulations that can be enacted each year and to require businesses to be notified of changes to existing regulations.

The Senate approved the bill on a 29-7 vote, with Republicans in favor and Democrats opposing. The bill now moves to the House of Representatives for consideration.

IOWA

Bill gives tuition to immigrant students

Iowa Governor Kim Reynolds has signed a bill into law that will provide tuition assistance to qualified students who were brought to the United States as children. The bill, known as the Dream Act, will provide tuition assistance to students who meet certain eligibility criteria.

The bill, which was passed by the Iowa Legislature earlier this year, will provide tuition assistance to students who meet the following criteria: they must be residents of Iowa, they must have been brought to the United States as children, and they must have graduated from an Iowa high school.

The bill will provide tuition assistance to students who attend public universities and community colleges in Iowa. The assistance will cover up to 50% of the tuition costs for eligible students.

The bill was sponsored by Senator Mauree Turner, a Democrat from Des Moines, and Representative Bruce Tuckman, a Republican from Cedar Rapids. The bill was supported by a majority of state lawmakers.

The bill will take effect on July 1, 2023, and will provide tuition assistance to students for the first time since 2014. The bill will provide assistance to an estimated 18,000 students per year.
STATE'S Mammogram rate 'stagnant'

52.7 percent of eligible women in Iowa got mammograms in the past year

BY MELANIE S. WELTE

DES MOINES — Betty Grandspur, a radiologist, makes the case for mammography, especially at age 40.

The problem is not where the women are but how they are getting there, Grandspur said. "If we are getting there, we are getting there at a very slow pace."

The figures are from the Iowa Foundation for Medical Care, which tracks Medicare claims for the Medicaid program.

"By the time a woman reaches age 40, particularly the younger women, they haven't had the opportunity to get mammograms," Grandspur said. "But breast cancer is a young woman's disease."

The foundation's analysis of the state's diagnostic rate shows that only 80 percent of women ages 40 and under ever received a mammogram within the past year.

"If we don't put caps and get the doctors the right to challenge insurance rate reform, they won't have the means to help bring public awareness and get more women to the doctor," Grandspur said.

For women her age, she said, "It's just in the opposite time. The risk of developing breast cancer in a young woman is much higher.

"Women every year should believe breast cancer is a young woman's disease."

The solution, she said, is to provide doctors the tools to fight breast cancer.

"We need to get awareness and get more women to get a mammogram. There's work to be done with some 2,000 primary care physicians across Iowa to encourage their patients to start a mammogram," Grandspur said.

Iowa House passes medical malpractice laws

BY DAVID PITT

DES MOINES — The House overwhelmingly passed a bill Wednesday that sets a cap on non-economic damages, such as pain and suffering, in medical malpractice lawsuits.

The bill, which passed 50-34, has greeted doctors with rapturous applause in Des Moines lobbies in recent weeks.

Doctors, who have lobbied for the cap, claim rising medical malpractice rates have forced them to limit their practices and to raise fees.

Trial lawyers claim the cap will deny them the ability to collect what they say is their just compensation, which some courts裁定 is against public policy.

Bill sponsor Rep. Louie Hagen, R-Kirkwood, introduced the bill on behalf of a coalition of doctors, including several former colleagues.

President of the Iowa Medical Association, Hagen said it's a "good day for Iowa patients and doctors." He said, "I believe we've done a good job of making this law workable in Des Moines."

Iowa Iranian to resume unemployment benefits

By Ali Akbar Darefari

TEHRAN, Iran — Iran said Wednesday it is resuming unemployment benefits for laid-off workers in a development seen as giving the Islamic Republic a major victory in its long-standing dispute with the United States.

The move is expected to help ease the economic strain on the country, which has been hit hard by international sanctions imposed over its nuclear program.

The United States, which sanctions Iran's nuclear program, has been forced to reduce its spending on the program and is now in talks with Iran's neighbors about how to resolve the conflict.

The names of the dead, both civilians and military personnel, were read out loud in the ceremony.

No place for partisan politics

Both Bush and the Democrats should cooperate with investigative commissions.

The commission investigating the 9/11 attack is on its way. From the Bush administration and then House Speaker Dennis Hastert agreed to extend deadlines, giving the time to create a report worthy of the most destructive act of terrorism ever committed on American soil.

On Thursday, the commission received another boost. President Bush, who had previously threatened to veto legislation to fund questioning of only an hour, now says he won’t impose a veto and is including another $250 million.

We applaud Bush’s cooperation, although we wish he had been more forthcoming. The extension is a critical step toward the creation of a report worthy of the most destructive act of terrorism ever committed on American soil. But with the commission’s funding in limbo, we might lose an opportunity to assess the nation’s response to the terrorist attacks of 2001.

This is not to say that the Bush administration, which has been more than willing to investigate the attacks of 9/11, is not fully committed to finding out the truth. We know that the Bush administration didn’t tell the truth about Iraq, and we know that the Bush administration is still trying to cover up the truth. We know that the Bush administration is not willing to allow the public to see the evidence of the Bush administration’s role in the 9/11 attacks.

Spring break in the ER, instead of on the beach?

There's no view of the beach and the food is terrible. You don't want your spring break to end in an emergency room.

Yet every year, that's where more and more students are winding up. Alcohol poisoning. Car wrecks. Falls from balconies. Fistfights. Rape.

Why? Statistics show that half of male students, and 40 percent of females, drink on spring break until they vomit or pass out. The average male student consumes 18 drinks daily. The average female downs 10.

The alcohol and tour industries are urging you on with free beer, all-you-can-drink parties, booze cruises and endless happy hours. Don't fall for it. Enjoy a fun, safe spring break. And remember. Nobody looks good in a hospital robe.

Bonds' injury not as serious as feared

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Barry Bonds isn't as injured as feared. A right shoulder strain, which could sideline the five-time batting champion for two to three weeks, isn't as severe as initially thought.

"I really think it's a good sign," coach Jody Conradt said. "I think [the shoulder] was all right. It was a strain out of the batting cage but it was nothing too serious at all."

Bonds was examined by an orthopedic surgeon on Tuesday after straining his right shoulder during batting practice Monday. But the Giants star, who missed Monday's game against Detroit, said he will walk out of the batting cage Wednesday, according to a team spokesman.

"It's not a big deal," Bonds said. "I just want to get through today."

Bonds' name was not on the Giants' injury list Tuesday. However, if he were to miss any games, he would be replaced by an unspecified player from their minor league system or by a call-up from Triple-A San Jose.

Iowa coach Steve Alford and his Hawkeyes have tasted the sweet success of a Big Ten Tournament crown after capturing the top prize in a four-game run in 2001. On Friday, Alford will return to the state where he is regarded with near legendary status as he and his Hawkeyes try to capture the magic once again.

By Donald Burda • The Daily Iowan

The depleted Hawkeyes, who have been using a seven-man rotation since January, do benefit from a first-rate lineup, which gives them an extra day to rest and prepare for the Wolverines.

With the depleted roster, he said, "I think it's a big plus." He said forward Chris Whaley said the same thing. "The day before will definitely help people get healthier and give us an extra day to prepare for Michigan." Because Iowa has been short-handed for a few tournaments, Alford practices have generally been low-key as possible as not to wear out the few starters, all of whom have been playing 30-40 minutes each game for much of the Big Ten season.

"The coach isn't planning on changing that approach," said sophomore forward Greg Brunner of the grueling task.

Few can question Alford's ability to lead his teams for the tournament. His 8-3 record and .727 winning percentage are both best among Big Ten coaches, and, perhaps not surprisingly, he emphasized that good shooting teams have a better chance of winning. The Hawkeyes were 21 of 33 (63.6%) from the field against No. 4 Utah, No. 21 Minnesota and Wisconsin this season.

"You go into the tournament, the tournament field features several tough obstacles," said associate head coach Mike Turner. "I think we're not going to be as talented as we've been in years, but I think we're going to be as tough and as close to what we've done in years as possible." Our whole program, slogging through a disappointing season, is looking to make a deep run. Our fans are excited, our players are excited, and I think we've just got to do it."

"We've got to step up our game," added forward Glen Worley about the extra day. "The depleted roster we have, I think it's really a big plus. We had forward Chris Whaley say the same thing. "The coach isn't planning on changing that approach," said sophomore forward Greg Brunner of the grueling task.

"You go into the tournament, the tournament field features several tough obstacles," said associate head coach Mike Turner. "I think we're not going to be as talented as we've been in years, but I think we're going to be as tough and as close to what we've done in years as possible." Our whole program, slogging through a disappointing season, is looking to make a deep run. Our fans are excited, our players are excited, and I think we've just got to do it.

"We've got to step up our game," added forward Glen Worley about the extra day. "The depleted roster we have, I think it's really a big plus. We had forward Chris Whaley say the same thing. "The day before will definitely help people get healthier and give us an extra day to prepare for Michigan." Because Iowa has been short-handed for a few tournaments, Alford practices have generally been low-key as possible as not to wear out the few starters, all of whom have been playing 30-40 minutes each game for much of the Big Ten season.

A college basketball tournament is a series of games played among collegiate basketball teams. The tournament generally proceeds in a single-elimination format, with the winners advancing to face higher-seeded teams until a champion is determined. The tournament is typically held during the spring of each year and is the culmination of a season of college basketball. The most prestigious and longest-running tournament is the NCAA Men's Division I Basketball Tournament, also known as March Madness. The tournament is broadcast on various television networks and attracts a large viewership.

Vietnam, we hardly knew ya

With Cellar Door, San Francisco singer/songwriter John Vanderslice crafts another conceptual LP, this time about the dissolution of domesticity in the face of national trauma.

BY RICHARD SHIRK

Reverberating through the tissue of intoxication, Vietnam’s impact on the mentalized lives of suburban war and a frightening presence just buttress the surface of everyday life. The country’s postwar disputes, the domestication of muddy antecedents and the unsettling continuum thread through the Cellar Door album, the latest in a string of largely conceptual LPs from San Francisco musician John Vanderslice.

In contrast to the surf rock of Thin Lizzy and the psychedelic narratives of The Byrds, the California-based singer/songwriter’s four tracks - “White Plains,” “Cellar Door,” “San Francisco” and “Time” - reflect a somber, subdued and distanced mood.

In the liner notes for the album, Vanderslice’s diaries describe his journey from the war-torn southern California of his youth to the cold andplr Debbie Downer, a former tenant of the Woodside home, relates imagery of the Vietnam era.

Vanderslice is in a holding cell, bruised, but in Bongwriting and BOngs’ “You Were My Song” and Death.

Looking at music through the glass greyly yet remarkably imaginative album commer cially, instead of fighting the copyright laws and listeners' legal battle over the use of the Beatles' music, the resulting use of the Beatles' music, the result is a fascinating album that seems to make much more sense.

We were pretty amazed at what we heard and the result is a fascinating album that seems to make much more sense.

The idea is amazingly simple, but the execution is quite complex. The ability to see the whole world through the glass greyly is a fascinating exercise that seems to make much more sense.

The record at the heart of the controversy over The Grey Album is an infinitely interesting album that seems to make much more sense.

It would be easy to paint Hidalgo as a living legend, when in fact the horse never reached the shores of Hollywood. But I doubt many in the audience, especially the kids, would know that. It's an exaggeration to say that Hidalgo is still being hailed as a living legend. When the news reached the ears of the Hollywood Walton family, they knew how to do it without the horse. They were simply going to make a movie based on the 1991 film Hidalgo.

The film was directed by Joe Johnston, who knows how to do it right. The story of the horse is based on the true story of the horse, and the horse, Hidalgo, himself is not needed to kill it. Hidalgo, Hopkins, and Mortensen are best known as the horse and the two leads, respectively.

Mortensen is best known as the horse and will probably have a better chance to become an actor. He's got the part of the horse, and he's got the horse. The film is set in the 1860s, when the horse was a slave in the south. But thanks to the mother lode of all movies, it's a horse movie.

Hidalgo is a horse, and he's got a horse. But the horse, Hidalgo, is not needed to kill it. The horse, Hidalgo, himself is not needed to kill it. The horse, Hidalgo, himself is not needed to kill it. The horse, Hidalgo, himself is not needed to kill it.

Out of ***

As a child, I remember watching reruns of the original series and turning it into a miniseries. It was a show that was on TV every week. But thanks to the mother lode of all movies, it's a show movie.

Unfortunately, most of the sight gags and one-liners that are referenced throughout Starsky & Hutch have already been seen by audiences in the movie's trailer. One can hear the hollow echoes of the soundtracks and the visual effects as the horse is riding through the city.

The only winight spot in Starsky & Hutch is the horse, whose ultra-cool Huggy Bear is the only character that seems to be celebrating the 70s. The horse is the only one who can make the original series and turns it into a miniseries. It was a show that was on TV every week. But thanks to the mother lode of all movies, it's a show movie.

Starsky & Hutch is another movie that is not worth seeing. The horse is the only one who can make the original series and turns it into a miniseries. It was a show that was on TV every week. But thanks to the mother lode of all movies, it's a show movie.
