Carver-Hawkeye Arena vibrated with more than 100 singing voices on April 10 during the Grand Entry of the 15th-annual UI Powwow.

The arena, a maze of fluorescent red, orange, yellow, and green regalia, was alive with dancing as toddlers, women covered in small metal cones, and men with graying hair moved to the beat of American Indian drums.

More than an hour later, Wisconsin native Terrylee Hindsley peered over a metal railing at the male dancers competing below. The 18-year-old high-school student, whose love for the "women's fancy" grew by watching her older sister perform, competes in approximately 20 weekend powwows from March to late fall.

"I learned how to dance when I started walking," Hindsley said, her long dark hair braided into pigtails, the crown of her head adorned with white feathers. She later added: "The thing that brings our family together is the church and the powwows."

Her handmade outfit — crafted over more than a four-month period — included leggings, a shawl, indigo beaded earrings, and calf-high beaded moccasins.

But Hindsley, whose family comes from the Ho-Chunk tribe, admits she's nervous about competing in the 18- to 44-year-old "women's fancy," a modern Native American dance that mimics a butterfly's movements. Other dance competitions included the men's traditional, Southern, fancy, and grass genres and women's traditional, fancy, jingle, and Southern.

Around the arena, dozens of vendors stood laughing and talking with customers, a multicultural collection of American Indians, UI students, Iowa City residents, and Harley-Davidson motorcyclists.

"As Indians, this is a way of life," Jamie Fari, who comes from a South American tribe, said as he stood near his table, which was covered in turquoise jewelry, clothing, and pipes.

But not all vendors came from American Indian tribes. Tommy Lee, whose background is predominantly Irish, said he found American Indians are "more for real" after living with several communities for nearly a decade.

His long, graying dark brown hair tied in a loose ponytail, Lee sold handcrafted flutes, several carved from Western cedar shaped in the form of a loon.

"Their life is very simple," he said. "They have a lot of problems, but what culture doesn't?"

UI to stiffen standards for admissions

BY DREW KERR
THE DAILY IOWAN

High-school seniors ranking in the bottom half of their graduating classes will have a harder time gaining admission to the UI beginning in 2005, when the university plans to raise its automatic-admissions index score from 90 to 95.

The change, announced recently in letters to Iowa high-school guidance counselors, is a response to poor retention rates among the lower-half ranking students from freshman to sophomore year, said UI Director of Admissions Michael Barron.

A state Board of Regents report says that last year, 91 percent of UI freshmen in the top 10 percent of their classes returned for their sophomore year compared with just 68 percent in the 30th to 39th percentile.

"The whole issue is not just getting in but staying in," Barron said.

Iowa City West High guidance counselor Amy Kanellis said the UI needs to consider all factors when assessing lower-half retention rates, including financial constraints and the university's overwhelming size as reasons for leaving.

The university's Admissions Office statistics show that 7 percent — 314 students — of the fall 2003 freshmen class was made up of students ranking in the lower-half of

UI 1 of 43 schools victimized in Ill. trademark scheme

BY GRANT SCHULTE
THE DAILY IOWAN

An Illinois company that makes recreation-room equipment stole the UI's Tiger Hawk logo and plastered the image on dart cabinets it was selling in one of the largest operations of trademark violation in that state's history, a recent indictment shows.

The university was one of 43 schools and 18 businesses nationwide allegedly victimized by American Family Products and its owner, Donald C. Musser receives 25 years in HIV case

BY SEUNG MIN KIM
THE DAILY IOWAN

Asilent Adam Musser learned late last week that having sex with a woman without telling her he was HIV-positive — a crime likened to "attempted murder" — could now cost him the next 25 years of his life.

Sixth District Judge Robert Sosalla rejected pleas for a suspended sentence on April 9 and gave the 23-year-old the heaviest prison sentence allowed under state law, with credit for the 419 days he has already served in the Johnson County Jail. Musser, technically eligible for parole at any time, was also assessed court fees.

"This case is akin to attempted murder," Sosalla said before handing down the sentence. "It deserves the same type of punishments."

Musser, who did not speak during the hearing, shook defense attorney Kelly Steele's hand and patted his back. Steele had asked unsuccessfully for a suspended sentence, pointing out Musser's "positive" traits — among them, his efforts to help with laundry and his support for

Iraqis bring down U.S. chopper, killing 2

BY SEWELL CHAN AND PAMELA CONSTABLE
WASHINGTON POST

BAGHDAD — Insurgents shot down a U.S. Army attack helicopter Sunday near Baghdad, killing its two crew members, as American commanders maintained an uneasy pause in offensive operations against guerrillas in the flash-point city of Fallujah.

Twelve other U.S. troops were killed in combat April 9 and 10, the military announced. On April 9, four 1st Armored Division soldiers were slain in separate attacks in Baghdad and four 1st Infantry Division soldiers were killed in attacks in Camp Cooke, north of Baghdad, and in Bayji, 110 miles northwest of the capital. On April 10, four Marines were killed in western Anbar province, where three Marine battalions have encircled Fallujah, the most populous town in the province.

Meanwhile, the top U.S. military commander in Iraq, Lt. Gen. Ricardo Sanchez, said the current level of 129,000 U.S. troops in Iraq was adequate. "We clearly showed some weaknesses here in the last couple of weeks, and we are retackling the problem with greater intensity," he said on NBC's "Meet The Press."

Sanchez also said the refusal of a new Iraqi army battalion to fight in Fallujah "did uncover significant challenges" in the Iraqi security forces.

"We knew that there were going to be some risks that we were taking by standing up security forces quickly, and we also know that it's going to take us a while to stand up reliable forces that can accept responsibility for both the internal and the external security of the country," Sanchez said.

The AH-64 helicopter was shot down near Abu Ghraib, a western suburb of Baghdad, around 11 a.m. The town sits on a major east-west highway that has become one of the most dangerous roads in the country. Two days earlier on the same highway, insurgents killed a U.S. soldier and an Iraqi driver and kidnapped an American contractor during an ambush of an Army fuel-truck convoy.

The Army sent soldiers to recover the helicopter and the bodies and deployed units of the 1st Armored Division and 1st Cavalry Division to try to secure the highway.

Insurgents detonated numerous explosives on April 10 on three overpasses along a major highway near Baghdad, military officials disclosed, in what appeared to be an attempt to slow military supply convoys

Bush blasted on environment

BY ARNA WILKINSON
THE DAILY IOWAN

Journalist and professor Osha Davidson condemned the environmental policies of the Bush administration as he spoke to an intimate group on April 10 for the UI Nonfiction Writing Program.

The UI alum spoke passionately in the EPB's Gerber Lounge to an audience of approximately 40 colleagues, former students, and community members, detailing the methodology of environmental protection used by the Bush administration — concepts reflected in his articles for Rolling Stone magazine this year and Mother Jones in 2003.

"A lot of people have the feeling that George W. Bush is not an environmental president, but they don't know the specifics," he said.

Citing the "largest and most important environmental problem" of global warming, the former UI guest professor delved into the administration's censorship of scientific information, the slashing of environmental agencies' budgets, and "putting the right people in the right places" for government positions.

"To Bush, science is not as important as ideology, and the driving ideology is big business," he said. "It's like the foxes are guarding the hen house."

The New Jersey native recalled spending a week in Alaska at the Tongass National Forest — the largest temperate rain forest in the world — for an article published in the Feb. 5

Davidson
Journalist and Professor issue of Rolling Stone.

"It's just phenomenal — the trees are truly amazing," he said, after describing grizzly bears and other wildlife the park is known for.

Tongass was opened for commercial logging in December 2003 after its exemption from the Roadless Conservation Rule, a legislative act implemented in 2001 to prevent road construction in national forests.

For Davidson, this is just another case of the Bush administration "rolling back 30 years of environmental law" to favor industry.

"He is exuberant, outraged, and interested in exposing wrongs, but also very optimistic," said UI journalism Professor Judy Polumbaum, adding that his fervor has always been a part of his writing. "He wants to change the world for the better by being a journalist."

UI graduate student Jebediah Reed, a former student of Davidson's, said he felt the impact of Davidson's dedication in the classroom but thought it may have been lost on the audience.

"It's too bad that he was kind of stuck preaching to the choir," Reed said. "I don't think that it's possible for me to be more anti-Bush."

CITY

Students push for lower voting age

IOWA CITY (AP) — Students at City High are trying to build statewide support for a movement to give 17-year-olds the right to vote in School District elections.

The voting-permit project is a long-term effort started about two years ago in Jeanine Redlinger's state and local government class.

"That's something we're still trying to keep alive," she said. "We've got a ways to go with that. We've got to get that spread out beyond here, or it's never going to go anywhere in Des Moines."

The project has garnered support from area officials and local state lawmakers. Last year, students submitted the plan to the Legislature, but they were told they needed to bolster more statewide support.

Matthew Murphy, 17, said there are some instances where 17-year-olds are considered adults.

"I just think if 17-year-olds can pay taxes and get a job, they should have a say in our government," he said.

Murphy said the voting-permit drive is focusing only on school elections to lessen potential opposition, and, he said, because "the School Board directly affects us."

The group working on the project this trimester plans to participate in a voting rally in the City High parking lot on May 1. B.J. Dibbern, another student working on the project, said the goal is to generate interest among younger students who can take up the cause down the road.

"I'm not going to be 18 before any of the elections," Dibbern said. "But it seems like a good idea to get it started for other people before they turn 18."

Bush acknowledges 'tough week'

BY DANA MILBANK
WASHINGTON POST

CRAWFORD, Texas — President Bush, after Easter prayers for the safety of U.S. troops, acknowledged Sunday that it has been a "tough week" in Iraq and said it was difficult to know when the violence would subside.

Bush, on a trip from his ranch to nearby Fort Hood, said he was praying daily for fewer casualties in Iraq, where nearly 50 Americans have been killed in an uprising over the past week. But Bush said he saw no need for more troops and characterized the violence in Iraq as the work of "a few people" and "violent gangs."

"It was a tough week last week, and my prayers and thoughts are with those who paid the ultimate price for our security," Bush told reporters after praying with the families of soldiers now in Iraq. Asked if the violence would ebb soon, he replied: "It's hard to tell. I just know this: that we're plenty tough, and we'll remain tough."

Bush's appearance at Fort Hood, which has lost around 10 soldiers in the past week, was his first departure from his ranch in five days. In that time, U.S. troops have been battling an insurgency by Sunni Muslims in Fallujah and Shiite Muslims in Baghdad and elsewhere. Hundreds of Iraqis have been killed, several Westerners have been taken hostage, and some Iraqi security forces have turned against the U.S.-led coalition while some members of the Iraqi Governing Council have criticized the military action.

L. Paul Bremer, the U.S. administrator in Iraq, said on Sunday there was a "crisis" in Iraq. "There is a lot of poison still in the society, and it's got to come out," he said in an interview on Fox News Sunday. "And, frankly, it's better that it comes out now rather than later. It would have built up even more danger, I think, later."

Bremer made the round of Sunday political shows, arguing that the violence in Iraq was limited to a few thousand militants. While he said he was confident that the United States would turn over authority to Iraqis on June 30, he said he did not know what that Iraqi government would look like. "Well, that's a good question, and it's an important part of the ongoing crisis we have here now," Bremer said when asked on NBC's "Meet the Press" who would be empowered in Iraq.

Bremer defended his decision to shut down the newspaper of radical Shiite cleric Muqtada al-Sadr, which precipitated much of the violence.

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations committee, added his voice to those calling for an increase in U.S. troops in Iraq, saying forces there are "stretched" and "we probably need to send more."

But Lt. Gen. Ricardo Sanchez, the commander of U.S. forces in Iraq, said there was no need for more troops. "The forces we have on the ground are adequate, with the management of the redeployment," he said on NBC. There are approximately 130,000 U.S. troops in Iraq, but that number can be temporarily increased by delaying the return home of some troops as replacements are rotated in. The military had planned to reduce the number to 115,000 this summer.

Sanchez acknowledged that the coalition has "significant challenges" in its efforts to build Iraqi security forces, many of which have refused to fight the insurgents.

On a rainy Easter morning at Fort Hood, home to the 1st Cavalry Division, Bush met with 11 soldiers injured last week in Iraq. He awarded 10 Purple Hearts and emerged red-eyed from the hospital on the base. The White House refused requests from several reporters to witness Bush's appearance at Fort Hood. The one newspaper representative allowed to attend said Bush was "grim and somber" and appeared "strained under the sudden and immense weight of the presidency."

"Today, on bended knee, I thank the good Lord for protecting those of our troops overseas, and our coalition troops and innocent Iraqis who suffer at the hands of some of these senseless killings by people who are trying to shake our will," Bush told reporters.

Bush: No specific threats pre-9/11

BY DAN EGGEN
WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — President Bush said on Sunday that a memo he received a month before the 9/11 attacks did not contain enough specific threat information to prevent the hijackings and "said nothing about an attack on America."

In his most extensive public remarks about a briefing he received Aug. 6, 2001, titled "Bin Laden Determined To Strike In US," Bush also said he "was satisfied that some of the matters were being looked into" by the FBI and CIA that summer and that they would have reported any "actionable intelligence" to him.

"I am satisfied that I never saw any intelligence that indicated there was going to be an attack on America — at a time and a place, an attack," Bush told reporters after Easter Sunday services in Fort Hood, Texas. "Of course we knew that America was hated by Osama bin Laden. That was obvious. The question was, who was going to attack us, when, and where, and with what."

Bush agreed with a reporter who characterized the memo as containing "ongoing" and "current threat information." But he added that if the FBI or CIA "found something, they would have reported it to me ... We were doing precisely what the American people expects us to do: run down every lead, look at every scintilla of intelligence, and follow up on it."

Bush's comments came a day after the White House reversed its long-standing objections and declassified the 1½-page memo, part of the President's Daily Brief, in response to a demand from the commission investigating the 9/11 attacks. The document has moved to the center of a continuing furor over the administration's actions during a period of unprecedented terrorism warnings in the summer of 2001 amid allegations by former counterterrorism coordinator Richard Clarke, who has said the Bush White House largely neglected terrorism issues until the attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon.

Commission Chairman Thomas Kean, a former Republican governor of New Jersey, said in an interview this weekend that he will push for declassification of another specific President's Daily Brief related to Al Qaeda that was delivered to former President Clinton, raising the possibility of heightened public scrutiny of the previous administration's response as well.

One Democratic commission member said on Sunday that the release of the August 2001 document will renew a push by some members to gain access to scores of similar intelligence memos provided to Bush and Clinton over the past six years, including approximately 40 others from the Bush administration that mention Al Qaeda or bin Laden. Restrictions set by the White House meant that only three of the panel's members read any of the briefs directly, while the rest of the members relied on a 17-page summary screened by the White House.

"I am satisfied that I never saw any intelligence that indicated there was going to be an attack on America — at a time and a place, an attack."

— President Bush

"One of the things that the release of this [President's Daily Brief] does is reveal the importance of them in general," said commissioner Bob Kerrey, a former Democratic senator from Nebraska. "If the American people really want to get a full analysis of what happened, these [briefs] are an important part of this landscape ... We need complete access to all of them."

The 2001 memo declassified late on April 10 reported that the FBI had information that Qaeda operatives had been in the United States for years; that they might be planning a hijacking in the United States and targeting a building in lower Manhattan; that the FBI had 70 investigations underway related to bin Laden; and that a caller to a U.S. Embassy in May 2001 said a group of bin Laden supporters was in the United States planning attacks with explosives.

Honors GPA to rise

The UI Honors Program will raise the minimum GPA requirement for recognition from 3.2 to 3.33 to focus more heavily on honor students who take advantage of the program's benefits.

Alice Fulton, the program's director, said honors students who hold a GPA above the 3.33 mark tend to participate more heavily in the program than those below the mark.

The hike, which will take effect this fall, applies to all departments with honors programs.

Research shows that very few students falling below the 3.33 GPA requirement go on to graduate with honors, Fulton said.

Each department was asked to discuss its GPA requirements, though some operating under the heading of University Honors Program chose not to. Some departments' minimum GPA requirements are higher than the 3.33 requirement.

Students in these departments can remain members of the Honors Program, but they are unable to graduate with honors in the major.

Man charged after alleged sex with 6-year-old

A Coralville man was in custody this weekend after he allegedly convinced a 6-year-old girl to give him oral sex on several different occasions.

Melvin Dennis, 27, was arrested April 9 and charged with second-degree sexual abuse. According to court records, during an interview with officers, Dennis allegedly admitted to persuading the girl to "make contact between her mouth and his genitalia on various separate occasions" at his Coralville apartment over the last two years.

The alleged victim made similar statements, according to court records. Dennis also allegedly touched the young girl's genitalia "in a sexual manner," according to court records.

Dennis, who was being held in the Johnson County Jail on a $25,000, cash-only bond, has been ordered not to have contact with the girl.

The second-degree sexual abuse charge, filed because the girl was under the age of 12, is a Class B felony punishable by a maximum of 25 years in prison.

Riverside man charged with sexual abuse

A Riverside man was charged with third-degree sexual abuse on April 9 after a 13-year-old girl told police that they had sex on one occasion.

Police issued a warrant April 6 for 18-year-old Kemper Joseph Spears after an alleged Feb. 16 incident when police pulled his vehicle over on a hunch that a 13-year-old missing juvenile was with him.

The girl had a hickey on her neck, which she said Spears gave to her, court records state. She also allegedly told officers that she and Spears had had sex once.

Spears also told officers that he knew the girl was a juvenile who attended Northwest Junior High School, court records show. He was being held in the Johnson County Jail on a $15,000, cash-only bond, and he has been ordered not to have contact with the alleged victim.

Performing a sexual act with a person 13 years of age is third-degree sexual abuse, a Class C felony in Iowa. If convicted, Spears could face up to 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Davenport Marine killed in Iraqi fighting

DES MOINES (AP) — Another Iowa Marine has died in hostile fire in Iraq, the Department of Defense said Sunday.

Cpl. Michael Speer, 24, of Davenport was killed on April 9 in the Al Anbar Province, west of Baghdad, the department said.

He was assigned to the 2nd Battalion, 2nd Marines, 2nd Marine Division, 11 Marine Expeditionary Force, based in Camp Lejeune, N.C.

A telephone message left late Sunday afternoon for officials at Camp Lejeune wasn't immediately returned.

Attempts to locate members of Speer's family late Sunday were unsuccessful.

He was one of at least a dozen soldiers killed on April 9 and 10, Defense officials said.

He was the 12th Iowan to be killed in Iraq.

Some to find tougher UI admissions their high-school graduating classes.

Barron was quick to point out that students not automatically admitted to the UI are given the opportunity for individual review — a process that allows a student to write a personal statement and produce two letters of recommendation for admissions officials.

"[Personal review] gives us a holistic view," he said. "There is no formula for success."

Barron did not expect applications or admissions figures to drop as a result of the more stringent standards.

Cedar Rapids Xavier High School senior Tommy Schulte thinks the measure will dampen the hopes of some seniors, adding that he knows some high-school juniors who are already looking elsewhere because they are not confident they will be admitted to the UI.

Schulte, who will be a freshman at the UI next year, did not rank in the top half of his graduating class but scored well on his ACT and was admitted — something someone in his position might not be able to accomplish in 2005.

"I think it's especially hard for those students who attend competitive schools or take harder classes," Schulte said.

"They are going to turn down a lot of potential." The 18-year-old said taking advanced courses in high school resulted in a lower class rank, and the higher standards may deter some students from taking harder courses.

Kanellis agreed, saying she felt students may begin to focus on grades rather than the "enjoyment of learning."

Barron said he hopes students will get the message that they have to work hard to put themselves in a good position when applying to the UI.

other inmates. More introspective than before, Musser has become one of the jail's most trusted inmates, Steele argued.

"Adam has learned some things," he said. "He has been reading the Bible and doing positive things." Steele also argued for a new trial, which Sosalla overruled because the "verdict was not contrary to the weight of evidence."

Steele contended that a lab report used as evidence in the January trial should not have been admitted because it lacked "expert knowledge" and was "hearsay."

Plus, he contended, Benton County was still within the readership area of local press — therefore making it unlikely that his client would receive a fair trial. Musser has jumped to courthouses in five counties because of change-of-venue orders prompted by a prosecutor's statements to reporters. "We feel that the defendant was denied a fair trial," Steele said.

He added later that an appeal is possible, but he would have to discuss it further with Musser. An appeal bond is set at $100,000.

Musser's victim — a Swisher woman — was not present at the sentencing. She has not tested positive for HIV, Assistant Johnson County Attorney Anne Lahey said.

Lahey said she felt the sentence was fair, given the nature of the crime. "We feel it was a just and appropriate verdict under the circumstances," she said.

Musser was first arrested in January 2003; he has since been charged with four counts of criminal transmission of HIV. He has been convicted of three charges, and he will go on trial today in Iowa County on the final count. It was the fourth change of venue granted in the high-profile case since December 2003.

His sentencing for the two other convictions, returned in February and March, is scheduled for May.

after a police raid uncovered at least $100,000 worth of knock-off merchandise.

"There are few things more important to a college or university than its name," Will County State's Attorney Jeff Tomczak said in a statement announcing the charge.

"Unauthorized use of that name deprives the school of the ability to control how it markets itself to prospective students as well as fans of its athletics teams."

UI lawyers and those who license the school's trademarks, meanwhile, said they had known about the six-month investigation since March.

"It's irritating when you see things like that out there," said Dale Arens, a program associate for Hawkeye intercollegiate athletics who works with the 500 businesses licensed to use Iowa emblems.

"It's discouraging. You know, companies that put effort into stealing from others would be ahead a lot faster if they just tried to make an honest dollar."

flourishing, he said. Annual revenue for Hawkeye gear and apparel topped $800,000 last year, a strong recovery from a few years ago, when students preferred Abercrombie & Fitch or Old Navy T-shirts, he said.

Arens, who ran the university's Hawk Shop for 16 years before taking his current job, said he asked to see the items only so he could better spot lookalikes in the future. The university will then destroy the merchandise to honor existing business deals, he said.

"I have a partnership mentality with all of those companies that are out doing things the right way — with integrity, with class," he said.

"If we were to do anything else with [the items], it basically would undermine everything they do with us."

UI Senior Associate Counsel Gay Pelzer said she learned about the alleged counterfeiting when a prosecutor called to ask whether the pseudo-Hawkeye merchandise found in the raid should be destroyed or sent to Iowa City.

The university appears to have grounds for a lawsuit against the company, but it will not likely involve itself as long as all pseudo-Hawkeye merchandise is forwarded to the university and then destroyed, she said.

Repeated attempts to contact Bruno at his office and home were unsuccessful, as were calls to relatives who work for the company.

Touting itself as the "preferred manufacturer and supplier to the billiards industry," the company also claims on its website to have specialized in lights, accessories, and college logos for more than 30 years. Four sentences later, the same ad says the company has been in business for 25.

U.S. and insurgents hold uneasy cease-fire and choke off traffic around the capital. U.S. officials said none of the overpasses was destroyed.

Sporadic fighting persisted in Fallujah, where U.S. commanders suspended offensive operations April 9 and asked rebels to honor an across-the-board cease-fire April 10. The Marine Corps, which has reinforced its siege with a third battalion, set up assistance centers outside the city for residents displaced by the fighting. An estimated 60,000 residents have fled the city, 35 miles west of Baghdad, during lulls in combat.

A group of Sunni Muslim leaders from the Iraqi Governing Council met with city leaders late on April 10 and announced a tentative agreement to halt the week-long fighting between 2,500 Marines and a smaller but well-armed force of urban guerrillas.

"The enemy forces in some cases are attacking, in some cases just taking potshots," said Army Brig. Gen. Mark Kimmitt, the military's top spokesman in Iraq.

Hayne Palmour IV, North County Times/Associated Press
Marine Lance Cpl. Ryan Kateley on Sunday sits in the corner of a living room of a house that he and fellow Marines have been holding for several days in the northwest side of Fallujah, Iraq.

The military was uncertain whether poor coordination or defiant resistance accounted for the continued fighting, Kimmitt said.

Paul Bremer, the U.S. administrator of Iraq, described the offer as a preliminary step toward ending hostilities. "At the moment, we're just trying to get the cease-fire in place," he said on ABC's "This Week."

Marines used the relative lull in fighting to strengthen their positions in Fallujah and fortify the cordon they erected around it last week. The Marines reported "a significant number of enemy dead" and arrests of 20 insurgents. Also Sunday, a Marine AH-1W Super Cobra helicopter fired rockets and missiles, knocking out two anti-aircraft sites, the military said.

"I don't consider this a traditional cease-fire," said Lt. Col. Brennan Byrne, the commander of the 1st Battalion 5th Marine Regiment. "I am still authorized to do everything necessary to defend Marine units."

Marine officials have allowed convoys of ambulances and trucks with medical supplies to enter the city since April 9 but continued to insist that almost all the casualties were insurgents.

In the town of Baqubah, northeast of the capital, where 47 insurgents and two Iraqi police officers were killed April 9, insurgents continued to harass the 1st Infantry Division. Mortars were fired in different directions, and tracer fire streaked across the night sky. F-16 fighter jets flew low over the town. The division estimated that it had suffered one dead and 14 wounded in the fighting and estimated that it had killed 54 insurgents.

Four gunmen and two Iraqi police officials were killed in separate attacks on police stations in the northern cities of Mosul and Kirkuk, news agencies reported.

Military officials cautiously declared that they have quelled most of the violence from followers of Muqtada al-Sadr, a Shiite Muslim cleric who has posed the most serious challenge yet to the U.S.-led occupation of Iraq.

American admits giving U.S. passenger records

WASHINGTON (AP) — American Airlines became the third U.S. airline to acknowledge giving passenger records to the government, sparking denunciations from privacy advocates.

The world's largest airline said late on April 9 that in June 2002, it shared approximately 1.2 million passenger itineraries with the Transportation Security Administration and, inadvertently, four research companies vying for contracts with the agency.

Fort Worth, Texas-based American said it agreed to provide the agency with the information "because of the heightened interest in aviation security at the time and American's desire to ensure its passenger and crew safety" following the 9/11 attacks, in which two of its planes were hijacked.

In 2002, American's privacy policy did not expressly prohibit sharing passenger data with the government, said a spokesman. Today, it does. The passenger data were turned over to Transportation Security by Airline Automation Inc., a revenue-management technology provider hired by AmericanThen, at the behest of Transportation Security and without American's consent, Airline Automation shared the passenger data with the four research companies — HNC Software, Infoglide Software, Ascent Technology, and Lockheed Martin, American spokesman John Hotard said.

David Coburn, a Washington lawyer representing Airline Automation, disputed American's claim that it did not authorize any sharing of the data beyond Transportation Security.

Russian mine blast kills at least 42

BY STEVE GUTTERMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

OSINNIKI, Russia — The coal-blackened faces of exhausted rescuers and the red-rimmed eyes of anxious relatives told a grim story of disappearing hope Sunday, a day after a methane blast tore through a Siberian mine, killing at least 42 miners.

Five miners remained missing in the latest disaster to strike Russia's hard-scrabble coal country.

The blast occurred early on April 10 approximately 1,840 feet down in the Taizhina mine in a coal-rich strip of western Siberia called the Kuzbass.

On Sunday, emergency officials plotted rescue and recovery strategies at one end of the mine's Soviet-era administration building, which is topped by a red star, while grieving relatives sat or milled nervously in a rundown auditorium dominated by a painting of a strong, smiling miner carrying flowers.

"They told me to wait," said Tatyana Fatykhova, 34, whose husband, Rashid, was underground when the blast occurred. "They've pulled up some bodies, but they haven't identified them yet."

Her husband's name was not on the list of identified victims posted by the stairwell.

The head of a government commission created to deal with the disaster, Sergei Ovanesyan, said it was "practically impossible" that any of those still missing would be found alive.

"Most likely, they will all be corpses," he said.

Of the 42 missing, 36 bodies have been retrieved, and 29 have been identified, said officials overseeing the recovery effort.

More than 600 miners work at the mine in the city of Osinniki, according to ITAR-Tass. Taizhina opened in 1998 but was built on the foundation of a closed mine, and the equipment shown on Russian television stations appeared to be rundown.

Rescue workers dug underground toward the blast site from two sides — Taizhina and an adjacent mine in Osinniki, a sprawling community of ramshackle homes and crumbling, derelict buildings set amid barren hills streaked with snow.

A handful of rescue workers discarded oxygen tanks and lit up cigarettes after a shift underground.

Asked if there was hope of finding anyone alive, one of the rescuers shook his head to mean "no." The men refused to talk about the conditions underground, but the Interfax news agency said the area was filled with carbon dioxide, and Ekho Moskvyy radio said work was hampered by heavy smoke.

Deputy Prosecutor General Valentin Simuchenkov said the blast occurred after the concentration of methane gas in the mine increased by roughly 10-fold in a short period of time.

Investigators will try to determine what made the methane level increase so quickly and what triggered the blast, Simuchenkov said, adding that an earthquake or the shifting of coal plates were among the potential causes of the buildup.

A criminal investigation was opened into suspicions of safety violations, he said.

Accidents are common in the Russian coal industry, but the April 10 disaster was the deadliest in the Kuzbass since 1997, when a methane blast at a mine in nearby Novokuznetsk killed 67 people.

At Taizhina, approximately 1,850 miles east of Moscow, one miner was killed in September 2002 when the roof of a ventilation shaft collapsed.

The April 10 blast occurred the day before Easter, the most important holiday for Russia's predominant Orthodox Christian faith and a time when families gather to celebrate.

Heading back into town on a bus, a worker at the adjacent mine scoffed at the notion that following safety rules would prevent disasters at Russia's dilapidated mines, saying much of the equipment is decades old and "should just be thrown away."

The miner, who called himself Alexei but refused to give his last name for fear of repercussions, said he tries not to think about the risk his job entails.

"If you think about it too much, you get a different job," he said.

Some allies a coalition of not-quite-so willing

Iraq 'is a battle we have to fight, a struggle we have to win.'

— British Prime Minister Tony Blair, in defense of his decision to send forces to Iraq.

BY JOHN DANISZEWSKI
LOS ANGELES TIMES

LONDON — This month's upsurge in violence in Iraq is putting intense pressure on America's chief allies in the war, with political leaders who have sided with the Bush administration facing stinging criticism from opposition parties, newspapers, and street demonstrators.

But for the most part, leaders of allied countries are hanging tough and talking back to their detractors, arguing that there is nothing to be gained and much to lose from retreating at such a critical time.

Iraq "is a battle we have to fight, a struggle we have to win," British Prime Minister Tony Blair declared Sunday in defense of his decision to send forces to Iraq.

"Were we to fail, which we will not, it is more than 'the power of America' that would be defeated," Blair wrote in the Observer newspaper Sunday. "The hope of freedom and religious tolerance in Iraq would be snuffed out. Dictators would rejoice; fanatics and terrorists would be triumphant. Every nascent strand of moderate Arab opinion ... would be set back in bitter disappointment."

Blair's commentary came against the backdrop of increasingly gloomy assessments of the state of the war in Iraq, where coalition forces find themselves in a two-front battle involving radical elements of both Sunni and Shiite branches of Islam.

The coalition death toll in the first 11 days of April has risen to more than 60, including one Ukrainian and one Salvadoran. Since the war began nearly 13 months ago, the alliance has lost more than 100 non-American troops, 59 of them British, according to unofficial estimates.

Abductions of foreigners in Iraq have also surged in recent days, raising the stakes for coalition partners.

Approximately 35 countries have offered some type of military assistance in Iraq, but for most the contribution is largely symbolic. Only a handful of states have been willing to send as many as 1,000 soldiers; Britain has committed 11,000. By contrast, the United States aims to keep 120,000 troops in place, and the number is currently closer to 130,000 as new troops rotate in.

Even the contributions of staunch allies look at risk as the military situation deteriorates. British Foreign Minister Jack Straw candidly told a BBC radio audience this week that "the lid of the pressure cooker has come off." Blair's Labor Party has always been divided about the war, with former Labor ministers Robin Cook and Clare Short now among the government's sharpest critics.

"There is a growing feeling here of what the hell are we doing in there and how are we going to get out," British member of Parliament Eric Illsley, a Labor backbencher, told the Sunday Telegraph.

The chief editor of Poland's mass-circulation Fakt newspaper sounded a similar note, saying it now looked as if Poland's 2,500 troops in Iraq were being used to quell popular dissent rather than to liberate the country.

No-Fly List weeds out the innocent

Innocent American citizens are being falsely detained, searched, and interrogated at airports across the country, according to a class-action lawsuit filed by the American Civil Liberties Union on April 6.

It's because of a classified "No-Fly List" kept by the federal government in an effort to deter and capture terrorist suspects who attempt to board flights in the United States. Everyday travelers have been targeted — including a minister from Washington state and an attorney from Illinois — whose names match or are similar to the ones on the list. In some cases, they have been publicly searched and threatened with arrest. The federal government has not as yet given an explanation for why these names are on the list, nor has it given any procedure by which the names may be removed and the problem corrected.

It is appropriate that the ACLU be involved in this situation because civil liberties are clearly what is at stake here — the ability of citizens to travel from place to place without undue hindrance. This is one example of how freedom has been compromised by terrorism threats. Although we aren't willing to give up driving gas-guzzling vehicles to fight the war on terror, we're willing to allow unnecessary government intrusion. The system obviously carries major flaws if the list is snagging people who are anything but terrorists simply because they share a name, or one that sounds the same, of an individual who is on the list. Furthermore, those who are stopped at airports are given no indication of why they are viewed suspiciously, and it's up to them to prove that they aren't terrorists — in front of their friends, colleagues, and/or children. It's like being arrested without being informed of the charges and being presumed guilty until proven innocent.

The other problem with this initiative is that it's only used part of the time. Those whose names are listed on the lawsuit against the Transportation Security Commission and Department of Homeland Security say that they are only occasionally stopped at airports, not every time. What use is this No-Fly List if it is not consistently enforced? Innocent people are being stalled when airport-security personnel refer to the list, while the real terrorists may very well coast through checkpoints when they do not.

This is a system that cries out for reform — not just so that it doesn't snag innocent people but so that those who are falsely placed on the list have an avenue for fixing the problem — specifically, knowing why their names are there and how to get them removed.

and profits over people, and politics before policies. I don't believe Bush and his friends give a hoot about you, me, the common man, and domestic or world opinion. They seem to care only to empower themselves and enrich their financial backers.

The wealthy — especially the very rich — are stuffing their pockets with Bush's largesse. Our leaders are secretly closing the doors and drawing the shades of government in the most isolated and unresponsive administration since Watergate. The White House attacks anyone who speaks out: adeptly manipulating our major media, silencing critics, and spinning the public to believe otherwise. I am shocked by what I'm seeing from here.

Citizens and students, you may agree or disagree — but please talk to your friends about these critical issues; more importantly, please vote. I fear we are heading into dark times for our once "representative" democracy.

that any connection between Saddam Hussein and terrorists was a complete fiction in the first place and thoroughly discredited by now — for people who make the effort to inform themselves. Has she uncovered a connection I'm unaware of?

I'm also unfamiliar with the country that she refers to as "terroristland." Is that supposed to be some sort of cute comment about Iraq? It sounds like a cross between baby talk and gung-ho military claptrap, and it does not suit the gravity of the situation we and the Iraqis (and the rest of the world) are in right now. It also smacks of racism. I'm sure there are a number of Iraqis attending the UI who read this article and found yet another poorly informed, small-minded set of assertions (that hold no water) about their country — no surprise.

When you use your position as a recently returned service person to make assertions like these, you do a great disservice to yourself and the rest of the world.

The U.S. ends with cease-fire

Has Bush gone mad to suggest a cease-fire? This is only done when one is in a position of weakness. He is telling the terrorists that, although we are not weak, we are weak-willed. He should be leveling Fallujah, not asking for a cease-fire. Bush is not living up to the Bush doctrine. He is showing the terrorists that he lacks integrity. They will know that we won't defend ourselves. I fear that this is the end of the United States.

Talking about the mess

The recent news that President Bush was briefed (while vacationing) about an impending attack in the United States before 9/11, despite denials to the contrary, didn't surprise me in the least.

I'm a common, conservative, patriotic man. I work hard, pay my taxes, try to keep the family and house afloat. I'm writing because I have never felt so strongly about a subject before.

In the short span of three years, Mr. Bush's record is a dismal failure beyond California: Our jobs are disappearing, the federal treasury is being looted and bankrupted, we have lost our goodwill standing in the world, and the condition of the military, economy, education, Social Security, veteran's benefits, constitutional rights, Medicare, and energy resources are suffering. Our air and water are dirtier, our forests are thinner, our states are reeling from unfunded mandates, and our young are dying in unnecessary wars for oil. Our foreign policy is a mess; Iraq is a mess. This administration has chosen corporations

Birth of a nation

NOT EVERY NEW FATHER gets space in the local newspaper to brag about his new daughter, so I would be a fool to pass up this chance. Ten days ago, my wife gave birth to Adelaide Marie, who, if you don't mind me saying, is perfect in every way. If you have yet to discover the joys of parenthood, check it out. You won't regret it.

When we found out my wife was pregnant last summer, we immediately made an appointment at the UI Hospitals and Clinics family-practice clinic. The people there took great care of us, and the dozen appointments we had there in nine months assured me that we were getting the best prenatal care for our little one.

SHAWN SLAVEN

When my wife went into labor, we arrived at the maternity ward about 4 in the morning and were immediately whisked into our labor-and-delivery room. Two doctors showed up regularly to check in and evaluate, and the nurses were helpful and attentive.

After Adelaide was born, we received the same great treatment from the postpartum staff. Throughout the entire process, I was impressed with the quality of the facilities and people at UIHC, and I am eternally grateful to everyone who helped us. Thank you especially to Dr. Allison Cole, Dr. Wendy Shen, Dr. David Bedell, and our favorite nurse, Mary Strang.

After having a couple of days to reflect on our great care, I felt bad for the women and babies in our country who are not so fortunate. All babies deserve the top-notch prenatal and postpartum care we received at UIHC. Yet every day, millions go without health-care coverage, either because they can't afford it or don't take advantage of coverage for low-income families.

Is this a problem we are unable to solve as a country? Is it too expensive? Too controversial? Can our politicians not hammer out a way to make sure all babies receive quality care?

Sen. John Kerry's health-care proposal claims we have a "moral obligation" to cover America's children. He's right, and I hope the winner of November's election realizes that. Kerry's plan proposes to enroll children into a health-care plan automatically when they enroll in school. I'd go one step further and enroll them right when they are born. We just spent more than $500 billion to give old folks cheap prescription drugs. If we can spend that kind of money on old folks, I think we can patch the holes in our health-care system for our least-fortunate children.

I had no complaints about our hospital stay, but we did show up two weeks too early for the opening of the new maternity ward. The new ward has increased capacity and security, modern design and technology, and comforting amenities new mommies will appreciate, such as a TV with a DVD player, a Jacuzzi (very important for laboring mommies), and a futon for the new dad.

In February, the state Board of Regents were given a tour of the new ward. Regent David Neil objected to the DVD players, saying he found it "hard to justify the need for DVD players during a time of financial distress."

Mr. Neil, I appreciate your commitment to cutting costs. Students wind up footing the bill for millions in university waste every year. However, DVD players in the hospital comfort and educate new mothers and fathers. And as I have discovered, such seemingly self-explanatory tasks as changing diapers and breastfeeding are in reality, quite complicated. I think it's great that nurses will be able to provide DVDs to teach moms and dads the basics in the comfort of their own postpartum room. Maybe nurses could even lend new parents a Spongebob Squarepants or Jimmy Neutron DVD so they can get a preview of the modern tot culture.

The price of those DVD players at Best Buy: $169.99, or, assuming UIHC officials pay retail, around .03 percent of the overall budget for the new maternity ward. Here's a tip, Dave: If you don't know what you're talking about, keep your mouth shut. ■

Splintering off a sequel

BY WILLIAM SMITH
THE DAILY IOWAN

Since the days of Pong II, sequels have been the one constant in the video-game industry. One glance inside a video-game store will reveal a deluge of sequels, remakes, or the latest chapter in a franchise. The very essence of a video game revolves around repeating the same tasks over and over, so it's no surprise that sequels are consistently the top sellers. An original game operates like a commercial test run that hooks unsuspecting gamers and forces them to buy the follow-up on opening day.

Tom Clancy's Splinter Cell: Pandora Tomorrow, which is available for the Microsoft Xbox and the PC, is a sequel to Clancy's Splinter Cell, and it delivers the same experience as its predecessor. While the new online multi-player mode increases the value of the sequel, it is disappointing the developers didn't fix the flaws that plagued the first title. A few modifications could have graduated Splinter Cell from a good game to a classic.

The game centers on Sam Fisher, a top-secret operative who foils terrorist plans in service of the U.S. government. Fisher is a stereotypical, amoral tough guy who cares more about following orders than he does about human life. The developers wisely constructed Fisher as a graying 50-year-old spy with a family, injecting him with a bit more personality. The character also benefits from some excellent voice acting by Michael Ironside, whose deadpan delivery is often hilarious. Most people will remember Ironside from the Paul Verhoeven films Total

VIDEO GAME REVIEW

Tom Clancy's Splinter Cell: Pandora Tomorrow

Recall and Starship Troopers.

The convoluted plot involves a typical terrorist leader threatening the world with a biological weapon. The story is fleshed out well and feels like it could come from a Clancy book, but most players will probably lose track of it halfway through the game. The real appeal behind Splinter Cell has always been the stealth-oriented game-play. As in the previous title, Fisher must stick to the shadows and incapacitate guards before they realize what hit them.

Unfortunately, a lot of this sneaking involves unforbearing trial-and-error game-play.

Unlike the Metal Gear series, Splinter Cell doesn't allow much room for mistakes. Although players will occasionally find opportunities to dispatch guards creatively, the game has a very linear and scripted feel that punishes overly curious gamers with certain death. It is up to players to figure out how the programmers want them to proceed, and the frustration that ensues will send more than one controller sailing toward the TV screen.

The major flaw that diminishes the fun of Splinter Cell lies in the imprecise aiming. In an attempt to make the game more realistic, Fisher's aim is extremely erratic if he isn't sitting perfectly still in a crouched position. However, players will find that their bullets miss targets at point-blank range, even if Fisher isn't moving. The developers overcompensated in their attempt at realism, and there is no excuse for not correcting this problem in the sequel. The use of overtly stupid enemies can be forgiven (and Splinter Cell has a lot of them), but flawed play mechanics cannot.

Despite all of these problems, Splinter Cell is still as addictive as it was a year and a half ago. The original title was a highly acclaimed blockbuster that has a huge fan base, so those players hoping for more of the same won't be disappointed. The Splinter Cell series isn't the Metal Gear killer that overzealous game critics were hailing it as in 2002, but it is the best alternative for those who crave more stealth action.

No Secret TV

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Victoria's Secret is dropping its nationally televised fashion show this year, at least partly because of criticism following Janet Jackson's breast-baring faux pas at the Super Bowl.

Ed Razek, the chief creative officer for the Columbus-based chain, said on April 10 that the main reason for the decision was so the company can look at new ways to promote the brand. Still, he said, "we had to make the decision probably six to eight weeks ago when the heat was on the television networks."

The announcement came less than three months after the Jackson uproar and a week after federal regulators proposed $495,000 in fines against Clear Channel Communications for sexual material on the Howard Stern show.

The televised fashion show has generated criticism in the past from groups complaining about supermodels strutting about in skimpy underwear.

'Passionate' box office

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Many Christians made The Passion of the Christ a part of their Easter weekend, lifting the crucifixion saga back to the top box-office spot with $17.1 million.

Mel Gibson's bloody retelling of Christ's final hours raised its domestic total since opening on Ash Wednesday to $354.8 million, passing The Lord of the Rings: The Two Towers for the No. 8 spot on the all-time domestic charts, just behind Jurassic Park.

The Passion had been No. 1 its first three weekends, then fell back in the pack for the next three before claiming the top spot again.

"That's unprecedented. I've never seen that before. The Passion is just rewriting box-office history," said Paul Dergarabedian, the president of box-office tracker Exhibitor Relations. "This is a holy day, and this movie is tailor-made for a weekend like this. It's not just a movie. It's a religious experience for many people."

Weird Al's parents found dead

FALLBROOK, Calif. (AP) — The elderly parents of Grammy-winning recording artist Weird Al Yankovic were found dead in their home, apparently victims of carbon-monoxide poisoning, officials said.

Nick and Mary Yankovic were found dead on April 9 in their suburban San Diego home by relatives who were worried because they had not seen the couple in a while, said sheriff's Sgt. Conrad Grayson.

Paramedics found Nick Yankovic, 86, in a chair in the front living room. His 81-year-old wife was on the bathroom floor.

A wood fire had been set recently in the fireplace, Grayson said. "The house was full of smoke when they opened the door," Grayson said, adding that the family members found the fire closed.

Weird Al Yankovic, 44, had no comment during a performance in Mankato, Minn., on the night of April 10.

Before the show, a graphic projected on the screens at the back of the stage dedicated the evening to his parents, KTOE-AM reported.

'Trying to turn a program around, I've told these guys throughout the year, it's not going to be easy.' — Iowa coach Jack Dahm

Hawks come up short in hunt for win

Iowa falls, 2-1, to visiting Michigan for its seventh conference loss of the year.

BY KELLY BEATON
THE DAILY IOWAN

As dozens of elementary-age kids spilled out onto the Banks Field turf to scour the playing surface in a postgame Easter Egg hunt, the Hawkeyes were in a less-than-festive mood Sunday afternoon.

To start the day, the Iowa squad witnessed their starting center-fielder, L.J. Mims, suffer a broken nose after a bunt attempt deflected sharply off his bat and into his face in the first. They extended their scoreless-innings streak to 17.

And, after a wild sequence in the top of the ninth, the Black and Gold saw their decidedly black and blue afternoon end in a 2-1 loss to Michigan.

The Hawkeyes (8-19, 1-7) dropped three of four games during the weekend set.

"Trying to turn a program around, I've told these guys throughout the year, it's not going to be easy," said first-year Iowa coach Jack Dahm. "You've got to go out and earn it."

After the two clubs' pitching staffs dueled to a 1-1 tie through the first eight innings Sunday, Michigan (15-12, 5-3) did the decisive damage with two outs in its last at-bat. Wolverine first baseman Kyle Bohm started the rally when he spanked a liner to right field for a base hit, setting up what would prove to be the decisive play of the game.

Iowa centerfielder Matt Wooldrik, who replaced the injured Mims in the first inning, couldn't quite navigate the wind on a fly off the bat of A.J. Scheidt, and when the ball popped out of his glove after a diving attempt, Bohm, off and running with two outs, was able to wheel around third and score the go-ahead run,

Derby picture even more cluttered

NEW YORK (AP) — Bobby Frankel is at it again, working wonders with a 3-year-old colt from his home base in California.

This time, Master David is the horse Frankel hopes will end his Kentucky Derby drought. The Hall of Fame trainer is 0-for-6 at the Derby, but at least he's got another shot on May 1.

Master David didn't win his first race in more than two months, but his promising runner-up effort to Tapit in Saturday's Wood Memorial at Aqueduct was proof enough he carries the necessary credentials to end up as the Derby favorite.

WRESTLING

Williams wins title; Mocco second

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Nearly two months after Iowa assistant coach Joe Williams stepped down from his position with the Hawkeyes' coaching staff, the former Iowa wrestler and coach took a step closer to the Olympic medal stand by winning the 163-pound freestyle title at the U.S. wrestling championships on April 10.

Williams decided former Iowa State wrestler Joe Heskett in the 163-pound final, 4-0.

Steve Mocco, a national champion for the Hawkeyes in 2003, finished runner-up to Kerry McCoy in the 264.5-pound freestyle class. McCoy won his fifth-straight national title by winning five bouts by either fall or shutout.

Lee Fullhart, a four-time all-American at Iowa from 1996-1999, toppled Cael Sanderson on April 10. Fullhart spotted three-time U.S. national champion Sanderson a two-point lead early in the bout, and then rallied for a 5-2 win in the 185-pound freestyle class. Sanderson, the 2003 world silver medalist and four-time unbeaten NCAA champion, won his last two national titles by beating Fullhart in the finals.

Other former Hawkeyes to finish in the top seven included Mike Zadick (runner-up at 132 pounds), Mike Mena (6th at 121), Doug Schwab (6th at 145.5), and Wes Hand (7th at 211.5).

The top eight in each style at Olympic weight classes qualified for the Olympic trials May 21-23 in Indianapolis.

TENNIS

Roddick puts U.S. in Cup semifinals

DELRAY BEACH, Fla. — Closing with a record 152 mph serve, Andy Roddick beat Jonas Bjorkman in straight sets Sunday to clinch a U.S. victory over Sweden in the Davis Cup quarterfinals.

Roddick

Roddick rallied in a won in straight sets grueling first set, then set down a weary Bjorkman to win (7-6 [3], 6-4, 6-0), giving the Americans an insurmountable 3-1 lead in the best-of-five series.

The Americans will host a semifinal Sept. 24-26 against Belarus, which swept Argentina, 5-0, in Minsk.

"It's a chance to take this dream one step further," Roddick said. The Americans are aiming for their first title since 1995.

Mickelson no longer 'the best player to never win a major'

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Finally! Phil Mickelson's agonizing pursuit of a major ended Sunday at the Masters when he made an 18-foot birdie putt on the final hole, a spectacular conclusion to a back-nine duel with Ernie Els.

Gone is that ugly streak of being 0-for-42 in golf's biggest events. Gone are questions about Mickelson's game and whether it could stand up to the scrutiny of a major championship.

He delivered a command performance to the very end, with two birdies on the final three holes for a 3-under 69 that gave him a one-stroke victory over Els.

The putt curled into the back of the hole, setting off an enormous cheer. Mickelson jumped and thrust his fists, then kissed his ball when he plucked it from the cup.

"Oh my God!" he said as he walked off the green and into the arms of his wife and three children.

Until Sunday, he was known as the best player to have never won a major.

Now, he's simply one of the best in the game.

His awesome skills were on full display along the back nine at Augusta National, and they had to be. Els was flawless, making two eagles in his round of 67 that looked as though it

But Mickelson was more determined than ever.

He rattled off three-straight birdies to stay in range, caught Els with a 15-foot birdie putt on the 16th and then had the stage to himself on No. 18.

Despite a half-dozen close calls in the majors, Mickelson had never come to the final hole with a share of the lead. He never had the final say.

On this day, he refused to let his chance get away.

"I just couldn't believe that ball fell in there," Mickelson said.

Mickelson, who shot a 31 on the back, finished at 9-under 279. Mike Weir, whose victory last year made him the first southpaw to win the Masters, slipped the green jacket on the most famous Lefty in golf.

It was a bitter end for Els, who now knows how Mickelson has felt all these years. The big South African did nothing wrong over the final 12 holes, salvaged four crucial pars along the way

K.J. Choi holed a 5-iron from 220 yards on the 11th hole for eagle, kept his hopes alive with a 40-foot birdie putt on the 13th but wound up with a 69, three shots behind.

Tiger Woods was long gone before the fireworks started. He made a double bogey — his third of the tournament — on the 13th hole and shot 71, leaving him 11 shots out of the lead in a tie for 22nd, his worst finish ever at the Masters.

Valarezo
Won No. 3 singles

The Hawkeyes fell, 5-2, to 42nd-ranked Northwestern on April 9, followed by a 4-3 loss to Wisconsin on April 10 at the Klotz Tennis Courts. Iowa is now riding a 10-match losing streak, but Houghton noted that it was better than the team's pair of shutouts a week ago at the hands of Michigan and Michigan State.

"I think in a lot of ways we're getting better, but it's not necessarily showing up on the scoreboard," he said. "In some ways, I was much happier this weekend than last weekend, but obviously, we need to win some matches, too."

The Hawkeyes nearly did just that in their dual against the Badgers. After losing the doubles point, Iowa won two singles matches with two matches remaining to be played. Freshman Walter Valarezo dropped the first set, 6-3, in the No. 3 singles competition but recovered to win a 7-6 (8) tiebreaker in the second set. After giving up an early 5-2 lead, the 6-1, 150-pound Guayaquil, Ecuador, native battled back to win the third set (7-6 [2]).

With the score knotted 3-3, meet point came down to Matis Jasicek's No. 6 singles match. The senior lost (6-3) in the first set and then captured the second set with a 7-6 (5) victory. Jasicek tied the final set score 6-6 to force a tiebreaker but lost (7-6 [2]).

"I have to give the guys credit," Houghton said. "After all of the losing we've gone through, they still keep going at it hard."

In addition to Valarezo's victory in the No. 3 singles match, sophomore Chaitu Malempati and freshman Jonny Hoak earned wins in

Klitschko's future unknown after shocking loss

BY TIM DAHLBERG
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS — Wladimir Klitschko better get used to working in his brother's corner during fights. It might be the only future he has left in boxing.

With his chin exposed yet again in a shocking knockout loss to a journeyman boxer, the Ukrainian once thought of as a future heavyweight champion now must decide whether he will ever fight again.

Klitschko's more immediate plans are to be in the corner when his brother, Vitali, fights for the WBC title against Corrie Sanders on April 24. But the hopes the two brothers had of becoming heavyweight champions at the same time probably ended in the fifth round April 10 against Lamon Brewster.

Klitschko's own trainer said before the fight that Wladimir should retire if he lost. Few who saw him collapse under an onslaught from the unheralded Brewster would argue the point.

Klitschko was taken to a hospital for a precautionary brain scan after the fight on the recommendation of a ring doctor who was alarmed at what she saw as the fifth round drew to a close in the fight for the fringe WBO title.

The scan proved normal, but there was nothing normal about the way Klitschko was stopped in a fight he had dominated for four rounds. Two left hooks by Brewster midway through the fifth round turned the bout around, and he went down for a second time after the bell sounded to end the round.

Brewster was on his stool getting ready for the sixth round as Klitschko tried to get his 6-foot-6 frame off the canvas. It took agonizingly long, and when he did, he was so wobbly that referee Robert Byrd had no choice but to stop the fight.

"He couldn't take care of himself," Byrd said. "I tried to get a response out of him but there was none. I've never stopped a fight like that before."

It was the second knockout loss in the last four fights for Klitschko, who won the 1996 Olympic gold medal and was once thought of as the better of the two boxing brothers.

Klitschko was as much as a 9-1 favorite against Brewster, who hadn't fought in more than a year. But, aided by a bet by promoter Don King on Brewster, the odds had shortened considerably by fight time.

Klitschko admitted to some doubts about his ability before the fight, saying he hoped to prove himself.

"Do I belong in the champion's league or am I just good enough for the first league?" he asked.

Brewster gave him the answer after getting knocked down in the fourth round only to turn the fight around with a pair of left hooks that left Klitschko defenseless on the ropes.

IOWA SPORTS BRIEFS

Hawkeyes sweep four in softball

Not only did the Iowa softball team remain perfect in conference play with four wins this past weekend, the Hawkeyes didn't even give up a run in two games each against Indiana and Purdue.

Lisa Birocci took a perfect game into the seventh inning in the weekend's final contest, against the Boilermakers, and only an infield hit by Angela Knight to lead off the last frame kept Birocci from perfection.

The near-perfecto was a fine coda for Birocci, who picked up all four wins for the Hawkeyes and struck out 28 batters. Fellow hurler Ali Arnold started one game against each opponent, and she, too, proved tough for both.

Coach Gayle Blevins pointed to the contrast between Birocci's speed and Arnold's movement as one reason the duo was so successful. "Their styles are dramatically different," Blevins said, "and that makes it tough for the other team to adjust from one to the other. That's a huge adjustment to make, as this weekend showed."

Purdue's defense helped Iowa on Sunday. In the first game, three of Iowa's six runs scored on errors, and in the nightcap an error by outfielder Staci Falzon allowed three runs to score. Iowa won that contest by a score of 4-0.

Indiana also gave Iowa a good matchup on April 10, as the Hawkeyes escaped with a 1-0 win in Bloomington. Amanda Hentges drove in the game's only run with a single.

"We've won some games big, but we've had to scratch and claw, and the second games against both teams were like that," Blevins said. "Winning tight games helps give us better composure and gives us the belief that we can do what we need to do."

Track wins four events in Botts Invitational

The Iowa women's track and field team fought through the elements to make another strong showing this past weekend, taking four events in the Tom Botts Invitational on April 10-11 in Columbia, Mo. The Hawkeyes could've had a better weekend, but the event was cut short because of inclement weather.

"It was a good weekend," said Iowa coach James Grant. "Unfortunately, the weather wasn't very cooperative. We left before the meet was over. But those people that competed really braved the elements and competed well."

Weather caused the cancellation of several events on the weekend, but the Hawkeyes still managed to record five collegiate-best times. Senior Michelle Lahann barely missed the regional qualifying time on the second day, running a 2:10.30, 1/100 of a second short. Concluding the second day for the Hawkeyes were wins in the 200 meters by senior Kyndra Middleton and the 400-meter relay team.

On the first day of competition, senior Sarah Arens won the 3,000-meter steeplechase, the first time she had run the event this year, winning the event with a collegiate-best and regional-qualifying mark of 10:38.31. Tiff Pedersen, Angie Hensel, Erin O'Hern, and Becca Franklin also set collegiate-best times on the first day.

Men's golf finishes second to last in invite

The Iowa men's golf team finished 17th in an 18-team field at the Boilermaker Invitational, April 10-11 at the Birck Boilermaker golf complex.

The hometown Boilermakers were victorious, winning the tournament's three rounds from start to finish, posting a final score of 9-under par 855. Iowa shot a 919 (plus 55).

Erik Feldick led the Hawkeyes with a 7-over par 223, which earned a 33rd place finish. The top overall individual score at the 72-par Kampen Course was from Colorado's Kane Webber, who fired a 10-under 206.

The five Hawkeyes finished 33rd, 52nd, 56th, 87th, and 90th. Feldick's second-round score of 73 was the lowest for Iowa. Feldick, Todd Larson, and Cade Pleggenkuhle all shot opening rounds of 74.

Webber's three rounds were 71-69-66.

No. 32 Iowa women's tennis falls twice

After sweeping the state of Michigan last weekend, the women's tennis team dropped their first back-to-back losses in Big Ten play this season. No. 32 Iowa fell to No. 66 Wisconsin, 5-2, in Madison on April 10, and No. 9 Northwestern, 6-1, on Sunday.

This weekend's matches moved Iowa to 11-6 overall (4-3 Big Ten). Iowa coach Paul Wardlaw was satisfied with his team's effort but believed that the squad's inexperience may have caught up with it.

"I think on [April 10] against Wisconsin, we were a little too emotional in terms of our youth," he said. "We needed to do a better job of responding to the tougher situations." The Hawkeyes came out of the gate slowly against the Badgers, losing all three doubles matches. Iowa also lost four of the six singles matches. Hillary Mintz and Chelsea Glynn were the only victorious Hawks.

Sunday's meet against Northwestern started in a similar fashion: Iowa doubles lost all three spots. The meet showcased the No. 2-ranked doubles team in Cristelle Grier and Jessica Rush, who defeated Mintz and Megan Racette (8-5) at No. 1 doubles.

Iowa's only point was earned by Deni Alexandrova in No. 5 singles. "It's good to know we can play with a team like Northwestern," Wardlaw said. "The next step is to figure out how to beat a team like Northwestern."

Rowing finishes 10th

The Iowa rowing team finished 10th at the George Washington Invitational this past weekend, scoring 16 points.

The U.S. Naval Academy took first place in the 17th-annual event with 65 points. For Iowa, the Varsity 8, 2nd Varsity 8, and Novice 8 all finished in the top 3 in their events. The Varsity 8 finished third in its event, losing to a Tennessee team ranked 11th nationally. In the 2nd Varsity Eight, the Hawkeyes took third with a time of 6:59.81, finishing behind USC and Tennessee.

Coach Mandi Kowal was proud of her team's effort.

"I was really happy with our long style racing," she said. "Overall, the whole group learned a lot from the experience, and it will only help us when we get into the next races."

their respective singles matches. Malempati won (6-3, 6-2) in No. 2 singles, and Hoak won (7-6 [5], 6-3) in No. 4 singles.

"The past couple months have not been so great for me, so it was definitely a good win," the 6-1, 170-pound Malempati said, who won his second match of the spring season. "Hopefully, it can continue for the rest of the season."

Against Northwestern, freshman Sebastian Delgado highlighted the loss by winning his No. 1 singles match (6-4, 6-3) in only his third match at the top position. Also a Guayaquil, Ecuador, native, he now leads the team with five dual meet victories and two conference wins.

Delgado told Houghton that it was his best collegiate match, and the 23-year Iowa coach agreed.

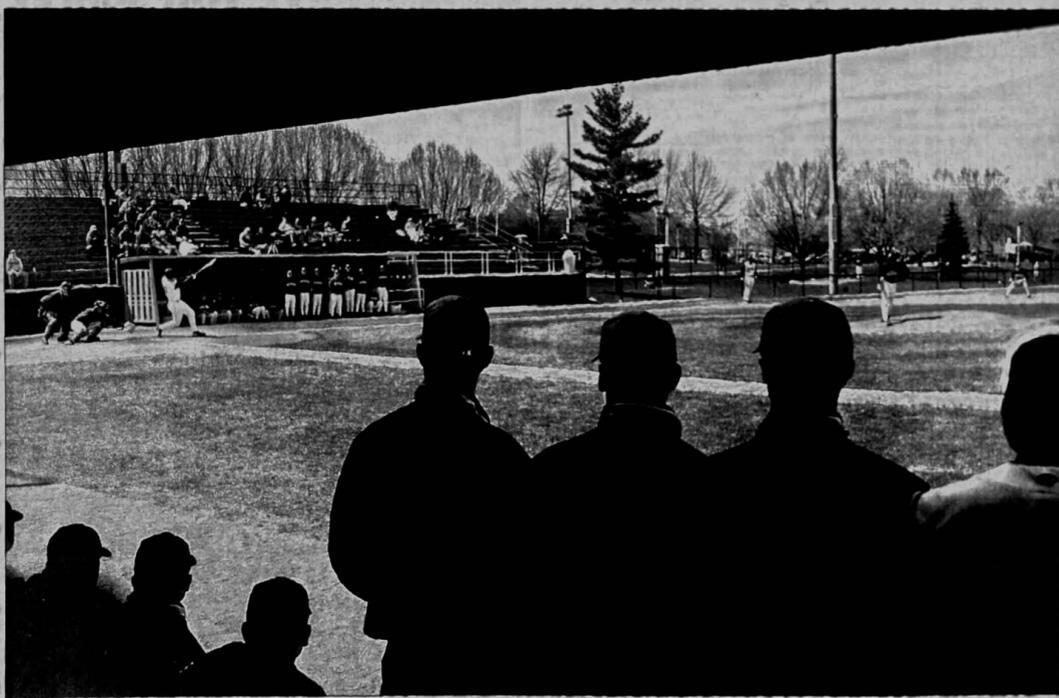

"The guy he beat [Tommy Hanus] is really one of the Big Ten's players," Houghton said. "He played real well physically, but I just thought he was determined to win that match. I just thought he fought through it better than his opponent did really."

Jasicek won the No. 6 singles match (6-4, 7-6 [5]) against Northwestern.

Iowa (3-13, 0-7 Big Ten) has three Big Ten opponents remaining on its regular-season schedule before it competes in the conference championships in East Lansing, Mich., April 29 through May 2.

"I think it's a matter of continuing to work hard and giving 100 percent in practice," Malempati said. "Eventually, the results are going to come for us. I think we just need a little bit more confidence and experience."

Mike Best gets a base hit as the Hawkeye dugout looks on early in the game Sunday.

Iowa bats quiet in loss

putting Michigan up 2-1. Scheidt ended up at third after an error on the relay throw to the plate by Iowa shortstop Jeff Gremley, but he was stranded.

"It's real disappointing right now," said a downtrodden Woodruff afterwards. "From my perspective, I had a chance to come in and help the team out, and I didn't do it ... I was playing deep and trying to keep him from getting a double. It just caught up in the wind, and I misread it."

Mike Best led off the Iowa half of the ninth with a base hit up the box. However, the Hawkeye threat was subdued when pinch hitter Justin Petty bunted too hard back to the mound on a sacrifice attempt, allowing Michigan reliever Phil Tognetti to field the ball and whirl around and get the force out on pinch runner Jason White at second. Following a fielder's choice by Andy Lytle and a fly out to center by Jeff Gremley, the Hawkeyes had endured their third loss in a span of 26 hours.

After a winning a 6-5, 13-inning thriller April 9 on a two-out RBI single by Kevin Sunderman, the Hawkeyes were shut out in both ends of a twin bill the next day, by scores of 6-0 and 4-0.

"I think our guys just need to relax at the plate and look for their pitch," said Best, who had two of just five Iowa hits on Sunday.

"Right now, we're kind of swinging at a lot of sliders down in the dirt."

The Wolverine pitching staff handcuffed Hawkeye hitters April 10 and Sunday, allowing just 13 hits and one run in 23 innings.

"They got us to chase the ball in the dirt," Dahm said, echoing his first baseman's observation. "We've just got to learn not to swing at the slider. I always say, 'Lay off the low spin.' Their pitchers did a good job, though."

"I think our pitchers did an outstanding job too," he added.

Iowa's quiet bats spoiled a solid performance on the mound by Iowa starter Andrew Hansen, who scattered seven hits and allowed just one earned run in seven innings. Dahm called the effort "outstanding," though did call into question the concentration of the senior hurler, who plated Michigan's first run of the game when he walked Michigan's Chris Getz with the bases loaded in the top of the fourth.

"We'll bounce back," said the Iowa coach. "It's part of the learning process."

As Iowa looks to rebound, it may be forced to do so without a key cog — Mims — in its attack. The speedy sophomore may be sidelined for the Hawkeyes' upcoming clash with rival UNI, at home on April 14.

"He definitely needs stitches," Dahm said. "He ripped it open. We're just going to have to wait and see what the doctors say ... They're not going to be able to tell us anything for a few days because it's so swollen."

While his squad may be without a main weapon of its arsenal, the skipper remained confident that his Hawkeyes, with a little work in the batting cage to re-groove those swings, can bounce back.

"I'm disappointed that we lost the ball game today, of course, but our guys battled. We'll get a good practice on Tuesday and get some swings in, and hopefully, that'll prepare us for Wednesday."

THE LEDGE

WHAT WE WERE DOING FOR EASTER

By Jesse Ammerman

- Gaining eight pounds.
- Waking up on bathroom floor, putting clothes back on, cleaning vomit in time for parents' arrival.
- Resurrecting the leftover pizza from Friday night.
- Finding that the last 15 years have given us the increased speed, muscularity, and agility needed to make us a stronger competitor in Easter egg hunts than when we were actually 6 like all those suckers we just laid waste to.
- Learning the hard way that when it comes to impromptu dancing and flashes of nudity, our fellow churchgoers really have no sense of humor at all.
- Shouting at grandmother that if she was going to labor over a meal for hours, she could have at least taken a moment to make sure it would fit within the parameters of our revolutionary South Beach diet.
- Discovering that eggs can be used for something besides throwing at the RA's door.
- Listening to the wife explain that, even in a pinch, empty Easter baskets are no substitute for an actual toilet.
- Beginning to think that this Easter Bunny character must live in the same bunker as Santa Claus and Saddam's weapons of mass destruction.
