Lonny Pulkrabek toasts his victory in the Democratic primary for Johnson County sheriff after speaking to supporters at Gus' Food & Spirits in Coralville on Tuesday night.

Pulkrabek crushes Slaughter

DONOVAN BURBA
THE DAILY IOWAN

Lonny Pulkrabek easily defeated Keith Slaughter in Tuesday's Democratic primary for Johnson County sheriff, and he will now face Republican candidate Steve Snyder in the Nov. 2 general election.

"I'm just so proud to be the Democratic nominee for sheriff this fall," Pulkrabek told a raucous crowd of supporters at Gus' Food & Spirits in Coralville. "I had a lot of help in this campaign, as you can tell by looking around the room.

"We put together a plan two years ago, and I guess I stuck my neck out there, but there are several others out there who stuck their necks out, too."

Pulkrabek finished with 61 percent of the vote, taking 5,208 tallies to Slaughter's 3,323. Dan Moen, a Johnson County elections deputy, said the sheriff's race in particular was a highly contested race that helped generate voter interest.

Election results were greeted with chants of "Lonny! Lonny!" and "There's a new sheriff in town" at Gus', but the scene was somber at Pleasant Valley Golf Club, the site of Slaughter's election party.

The first poll numbers, which showed Slaughter trailing significantly, elicited a dismayed groan from the current chief deputy's followers. Even the slightest narrowing of the margin brought hopeful

Sullivan edges O'Donnell in supervisor race

BY ALLISON FREDERICK
THE DAILY IOWAN

Tuesday's Johnson County supervisor primary to determine the nominees for the upcoming Nov. 2 election turned into a hotly contested race between City Councilor Mike O'Donnell and Rod Sullivan for the final spot. After it was all over, Sullivan won by a mere 129 votes.

While the two challengers sweated the results, Board of Supervisor incumbents Terrance Neuzil and Pat Harney calmly waited for the poll numbers to return before their eventual commanding wins.

"It's time to get specific," said Neuzil, who received a final tally of 5,055 votes. "We've still got November, and there's no letting up. I'm looking forward to my blisters healing, getting some sleep, and eating dinner with my wife."

Harney, who garnered 4,620 votes, said the overwhelming distance between the incumbents and remaining candidates is indicative of county residents' support for the current board.

After bargain, council backs new Iraqi gov't

BY PETER SLEVIN AND ROBIN WRIGHT
WASHINGTON POST

UNITED NATIONS — The U.N. Security Council moved beyond its bitter fight over the U.S.-led invasion of Iraq Tuesday to deliver unanimous support to a new Iraqi government and a vow to help steer the country toward democratic elections next year.

By a 15-0 vote, the council endorsed a resumption of Iraqi control over the nation's political and economic affairs for the first time since the fall of Saddam Hussein. The U.S.-dominated military occupation of Iraq will formally end on June 30, although 160,000 foreign soldiers will remain to battle insurgents.

The vote on the latest Iraq resolution opened the door to a fresh, if uncertain, stage of the Bush administration's project to remake Iraq. After months of insisting on control, the White House calculated that Iraqi leaders backed by a more united international community could turn back the militant opposition that has beset the occupation.

President Bush, preparing to host leaders of the world's most industrialized economies in Sea Island, Ga., hailed the vote as a "catalyst for change." He called it "a very important moment in seeing that our objective is achieved."

In a spirit far different from that of 18 months ago, leaders from Russia, Britain, and Germany followed with hopeful words after reaching final compromises on a resolution designed to strengthen the interim government and show skeptical Iraqis that the United States will no longer dominate Iraqi politics.

"Without any exaggeration, I would state that it is a major step forward," said Russian President Vladimir Putin, who opposed the invasion of Iraq. But he added, "Naturally it will take quite a long time before the adoption of the document will have any impact on the real change on the ground in Iraq."

Kidnapping story just that, police report

BY NICK PETERSEN
THE DAILY IOWAN

A woman who called police from the trunk of her car claiming that she had been kidnapped fabricated the story, Coralville police said Tuesday.

Serina M. Molina, 25, told police that a masked man took her from her apartment in Wheaton, Ill., forced her into the trunk of her Ford Focus, and drove 200 miles west to Coralville before abandoning the car.

Police found Molina in the parking lot of the Park Place Apartments, 1526 Fifth St., by tracing her 10:04 p.m. cell-phone call to a cellular tower in Coralville and searching the area for more than an hour. Deputies from the Johnson County Sheriff's Office assisted Coralville police in the search.

Coralville Police Chief Barry Bedford said Molina eventually confessed to making up the story.

"Within 15 to 20 seconds of arriving [at the Park Place Apartments], I thought, 'This doesn't sound right,'" he said. "It wasn't fitting like it should."

During the investigation, police noticed several bits of information that were inconsistent with Molina's original account of the event. Bedford said it was odd that she would wait three hours to call police, adding that she was in good condition when they found her, which would be unusual after spending so much time in the trunk of a car.

"With the type of heat we had [Monday] and the four-and-a-half-hour time frame she was in the trunk, we would have been expecting severe dehydration," Bedford said. "But our primary responsibility is to the victims, and we have to pursue it with the belief that they are telling the truth."

10,000 Hours to get bigger

BY TRACI FINCH
THE DAILY IOWAN

Between Ultimate Frisbee summer league and vacation trips to Wisconsin, the schedules of the UI students in charge of the second-annual 10,000 Hours show would be busy enough.

Add on expanding the organization statewide and 10,000 Hours Director Amanda Styron, who took over for UI alumni Mike Brooks and Jacek Pruski in May, is looking at a booked summer.

"We want to expand volunteer recruitment outside of Johnson County," she said in a phone call from Madison, Wis., where the fifth-year UI senior is spending time with her family.

Last year, people from all over the Midwest called 10,000 Hours officials trying to get tickets to the May 2 Ben Folds performance, but people could only snag them if they had volunteered at least 10 hours in Johnson County, said Mark Kresowik, the group's director of volunteer coordination.

This year, hours worked in as many Iowa counties as "logistically possible" will count toward a ticket, which is an overwhelming yet rewarding feeling for Styron.

Kresowik, who plays for the UI Ultimate Frisbee team, said the change in policy means that anyone who volunteers for 10 hours would be able to attend the concert.

"We've always wanted to expand, but we wanted to start the first year with something that we could handle," Styron said, adding she hopes to keep the show in the IMU, even with a larger crowd.

In order to get the job done, Styron, Kresowik, Dan Kimball, the group's director of event production, and Tyler Lechtenberg, the director of marketing and public relations, hired approximately 15 UI students and alumni to work for the organization.

Styron's plans to meet once a week this summer are far ahead of where the project was last year at this time. Last summer, Styron, Pruski, and Brooks were just developing the infrastructure and putting together connections with different volunteer organizations, Brooks said.

Incumbency carries day in Iowa

BY DAVID PITT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES — Incumbent lawmakers handily defeated opponents in early results in Tuesday's primary election, and a six-way race among Democrats in Iowa House District 68 on Des Moines' East Side was left unresolved.

None of the half-dozen candidates received at least 35 percent of the vote. In such cases, the nomination is made through a special convention of the precinct committee members whose precincts lie within the district.

Rick Olson led the pack with 30 percent of the vote, and Gerald Overman received 24 percent. Marc Wallace had 22 percent and Daniel Flaherty, 19 percent.

Scott Howard had 3 percent of the vote and David Stanley 2 percent.

Rep. Lance Horbach, R-Tama, easily defeated challenger Richard Vander Mey of Traer with 73 percent of the vote to seek a fourth term. No Democrats have stepped forward to run in the central Iowa House district.

Rep. Ed Fallon, D-Des Moines, handily advanced to November to run for a seventh term after defeating primary opponent Paul Lay with 90 percent of the vote. No Republican challenger has announced intentions to run. Rep. Kevin McCarthy, D-Des Moines, survived a primary challenge with 74 percent of the vote to advance to November to face Republican Steven Paul Pritchard. McCarthy is seeking a second term.

Incumbent Democrat Jo Olson of Des Moines will launch a fall campaign against Joe Granadette, who defeated Norm Pawlewski, 65-35 percent.

Kerry camp asks for Vilsack columns

BY RYAN J. FOLEY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES — Aides to presidential candidate John Kerry have asked for hundreds of newspaper columns written by Iowa Gov. Tom Vilsack, one of the Democrats whose backgrounds are being checked as Kerry ponders a running mate.

Vilsack wrote the weekly "Mayor's Moments" column for the Mount Pleasant News from 1987 to 1992. He became mayor of the southeastern Iowa town of 8,700 people after a gunman opened fire during a City Council meeting in 1986, killing Mayor Ed King and wounding two others.

Kerry is expected to announce his choice for vice president before the Democratic National Convention, scheduled for July 26-29 in Boston. Several Democratic officials familiar with the selection process have told the Associated Press that background checks have been made for Vilsack, Missouri Rep. Dick Gephardt, Sen. John Edwards of North Carolina, and others they would not identify.

A former trial lawyer who was elected governor in 1998 and re-elected in 2002, Vilsack was considered by some to be a policy wonk as mayor, one who liked to explain the city's challenges to its citizens. The newspaper column urged people to participate in government, to appreciate the arts, and to recycle more often.

"The city has a very important and very expensive decision to make in the very near future about garbage," begins a column from 1990.

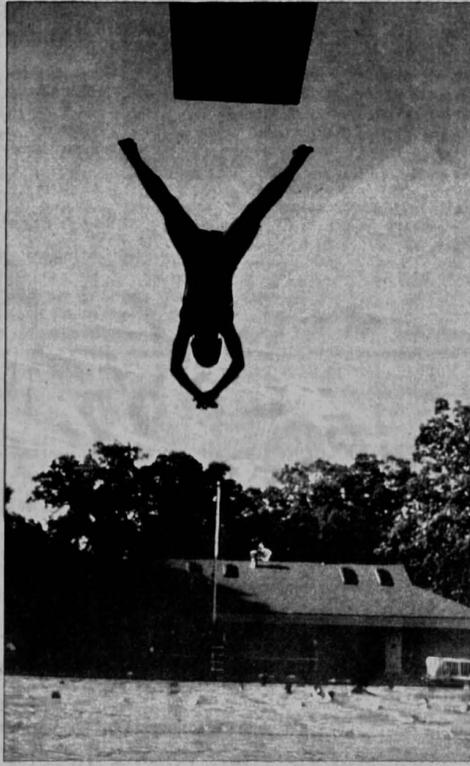

In it, Vilsack seeks public opinion on a proposal to charge residents for each bag of garbage the city picked up instead of a flat fee. He wrote that the fee system, in place to this day, would encourage citizens to recycle, "which saves money, and it saves the environment."

In another column from that year, Vilsack explains to young couples how they can afford to become homeowners. "You might be better off being willing to accept a lot less today with a smaller home and wait awhile before moving up to a larger home," he advised. "My parents used to tell me that inch by inch life is a cinch, but yard by yard life is hard."

The Kerry campaign sought copies of the public writings of Vilsack and his wife, Christie, said James Sisco, a Mount Pleasant retiree who is active in local Democratic politics.

"They wanted everything that he wrote," Sisco said. "I went through microfilm until I was bleary-eyed and did that."

Spate of vandalism hits NE Iowa City

Vandals have hit northeastern Iowa City over the past two days, slashing tires and damaging business signs and yard lights, Iowa City police report.

A total of 11 complaints have been filed with the police about the mischief.

One complaint was filed after three pop-bottle bombs allegedly exploded in the 100 block of North First Avenue. Police were unable to be reached for any comments regarding the complaints.

The incident is currently under investigation. Anyone with information regarding the incidents is asked to call the police at 356-5275.

Nichols, Iowa, man pleads guilty to assault

A 19-year-old man pleaded guilty to charges of assault causing injury on May 28 after being charged with first-degree burglary in connection with a February 2004 incident.

Mark Eugene Ball, of Nichols, Iowa, was arrested after he and 22-year-old Robert Eugene Kilburn of Muscatine allegedly broke into a Lone Tree home and assaulted numerous people.

Court records show that Ball punched one person in the mouth, causing a deep laceration to the lower lip. Kilburn allegedly choked one of the residents, and numerous others also sustained injuries including abrasions and bruises, records show.

When police arrived at the residence, they reported they encountered a fight, although both Kilburn and Ball had already fled the scene.

Assistant Johnson County Attorney Jo McCarty said the assault charge was more appropriate because "he actually did assault someone."

Assault causing injury is a Class C felony that is punishable by up to 10 years in prison and a fine of $500-$10,000.

Kilburn has not yet pleaded to the charges, McCarty said.

Police officer in crash on way to accident scene

An Iowa City police officer was involved in an auto accident Monday afternoon while en route to a call about another crash.

At 4:36 p.m., Officer Matt Huber was responding to a personal-injury car crash with lights and sirens activated when he approached the intersection of Capitol and Prentiss Streets.

A silver car made a left turn in front of Huber, causing the officer to maneuver his patrol car to avoid an accident. In doing so, he struck a car driven by Heather Ann Cody of Washington, Iowa. Cody's car was stopped at the intersection on Prentiss Street.

Cody, 23, complained of pain but declined to be taken to the hospital by Johnson County paramedics, who responded to the accident.

Iowa City police Lt. Sid Jackson, said Huber was not hurt in the accident.

The driver of the silver car stopped at the scene but left soon after without speaking to anyone.

To boldly go where few have gone before — opera

BY PETER MADSEN
THE DAILY IOWAN

When most people think of opera singers, they picture a robust woman with blond braids jutting out from under a Viking helmet. From what Karla Goettel can discern, these people have never seen an opera — but she doesn't hold it against them.

"Opera is so much more than fat, screaming people," said Goettel, a petite soprano. Throughout her career in opera, she said, she has received her share of playful chiding about her small frame. A finalist in the National Opera Association Auditions, Goettel has assured those in doubt that she has a large voice and that opera's reputation resides octaves above public notions.

Yet not everyone has been in earshot. Thus, in 1982, Goettel conceived of the program "What in the World is Opera?" which bears the same name as the instructional handbook she wrote the same year. The program is a marriage of concert and lecture to help audiences better appreciate the art form. Goettel, along with members of the Cedar Rapids Opera Theatre's Young Artists, will meet with the public at the Iowa Children's Museum, 1451 Coral Ridge Ave., Thursday, from 7-8 p.m. Admission is free.

"Opera is the musical description of emotion," said the UI alumna, who has a degree in vocal performance. "In operas, people are always killing each other, falling in love, or getting married for the eighth time — it deals with very strong emotions."

While touring the country and taking roles in a number of acclaimed productions, Goettel is often asked to present "What in the World is Opera?"

PROGRAM "What in the World is Opera?"

When: 7 p.m. Thursday
Where: Iowa Children's Museum,

Admission: Free

The program breaks down the elements piece by piece, beginning with the music. Then comes the blocking, or stage direction, which is later meshed with orchestral contributions, and finally the dancing. Members of Young Artists troupe, some of whom will be featured in the upcoming production of Mozart's Le Nozze di Figaro (The Marriage of Figaro), invite those in attendance to stand in for actors and dancers. Although participants aren't obligated to dance or sing, the onstage presence will help them conceptualize the complexity of an opera performance, said Daniel Kleinknecht, the executive director and conductor of the Cedar Rapids Opera Theatre.

He said his company offered Goettel, also a board member, the facilities to house her program. They decided to work with the Iowa Children's Museum in order to expand the troupe's audience to Iowa City and neighboring communities.

"Opera deals with universal principals, yet opera is unfamiliar territory for most people, parents and child alike," said the conductor, who holds a degree from the UI, among other institutions. "Classical music is a hard sell for most people, and that's something that we hope to change."

Recalling the Army-McCarthy hearings, TV's 1st D.C. circus

BY FRAZIER MOORE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The Army-McCarthy hearings in the spring of 1954 have been called "the first great made-for-TV political spectacle," and under hot TV lights in a jammed Senate caucus room, this Washington miniseries hit its boiling point 50 years ago.

The unforeseen war of words the afternoon of June 9, 1954, marked the live-on-TV downfall of an era-defining demagogue, Sen. Joseph McCarthy, R-Wis. And it sealed a symbiotic bond between government and television that has grown only stronger in the half-century since.

McCarthy headed the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. His ferocious inquiries, while popular with an anxious public, were denounced by critics as a communist witch-hunt. His taste for smearing the targets of his anti-communist campaign, whether guilty or not, spawned the term "McCarthyism."

But despite his previous use of televised speeches and news conferences to win support from the commie-fearing electorate, McCarthy was, ironically, about to be undone by TV's exposure during this, the 30th of 36 days of broadcast hearings into "red influence" in the Army.

"Until this moment, Senator, I think I never really gauged your cruelty or your recklessness," erupted Joseph Welch, a Boston attorney representing the Army, as he lit into McCarthy. The watching world gasped. No one talked that way to "Tailgunner Joe."

But Welch had been interrupted during his cross-examination of Roy Cohn, a key McCarthy aide. Butting in, McCarthy had accused Welch of trying to "foist on the committee" a young attorney from his own law firm who had communist ties — or so McCarthy said.

Welch was near tears of righteous outrage at McCarthy's attack.

"Let us not assassinate this lad further, senator," said Welch, about to earn himself entry in Bartlett's Familiar Quotations: "Have you no sense of decency, sir, at long last? Have you left no sense of honor?"

After Welch's dressing-down and a burst of applause from the gallery, the rattled McCarthy turned to Cohn and said, "What happened?"

This is what happened: The spell of indomitability that TV helped create for him had been broken for all to see, while it happened, on coast-to-coast TV.

From that moment on, McCarthy lost his standing with the public. Charging him with abuse of his legislative powers, the Senate censured him a few months later. In May 1957, he died at age 48 of liver failure.

Media scholar Ben Bagdikian covered the hearings as a reporter for the Providence Journal-Bulletin of Rhode Island.

"McCarthy was an important part of post-World War II history as television became a major instrument of American politics, with all of its sins and advantages," said Bagdikian, now 84.

The hearings, he adds, "were the first demonstration of how melodrama in politics was made for television. The hearings were great drama, and television ate it up."

As the first nationally televised congressional inquiry, it set the stage for TV-political co-productions to come, including the Watergate, Iran-Contra, and Thomas-Hill hearings. In each case, the enabling presence of TV cameras did more than cover the event. TV also drove it.

Like Watergate's Sam Ervin or Iran-Contra's Oliver North, the Army-McCarthy hearings boasted a colorful cast of characters, none more so than McCarthy and Welch. As any viewer could see, they were a study in contrasts: the erudite, patrician Welch versus McCarthy, a roughneck who gloried in his lack of refinement.

"I felt that if the public could see just how McCarthy operated, they would understand just how ridiculous a figure he really was," the late ABC network President Leonard Goldenson wrote in his 1991 memoir, explaining his decision to air the hearings gavel-to-gavel.

It was a great day for the nation, in most people's eyes — and great TV.

Axing the museum wrong way to go

Tucked away in the General Education Task Force Report lies a recommendation to eliminate funding for the UI Museum of Natural History, located in Macbride Hall. While university President David Skorton announced that funding would not be cut for the museum in fiscal 2005, it is still in line for the chopping block in upcoming fiscal years. This would be a serious loss for the university and the community at large. We feel that the $118,000 spent on the museum each year is an insignificant amount well-spent on this invaluable resource.

The recommendation reads as follows: "The Natural History Museum has not had a strong connection with the educational or research missions of the university for some time." This could not be further from the truth. Every semester, classes ranging from evolution to introductory biology file through the museum. This provides students with an opportunity that cannot be found in textbooks, the Internet, or lectures: the ability to compare and contrast the actual structures of tools, artifacts, and animals from across time. Losing this resource would deprive students of a chance to consolidate what they learn in class with the world outside the classroom. Furthermore, the museum has several research collections and is working on building a new display for the giant sloth remains that were found here in Iowa.

Ten thousand schoolchildren visit every year and are given tours by volunteers. While these are not university students, they are an important part of the community. As a state educational institution, the UI has a duty to those schoolchildren. While the guidelines given to the task force involve cutting programs that primarily serve individuals outside the university, we must keep in mind that taxpayer money supports the university. The museum provides an irreplaceable service to the people of our state. Though they are not yet paying thousands of dollars in tuition, these children and their parents pay taxes, and we have a duty to do what we can to enhance their education.

Finally, the museum is of significant historical significance. Its webpage rightly brags that "the UI Museum of Natural History... is the oldest university museum west of the Mississippi River and the second-oldest museum of any kind in the West."

Unlike many possible sources of budget cuts, eliminating funding for this facility would be irreversible. Cuts to many programs, while painful, can be undone in the future. Once the museum is gone, it cannot come back. We urge university officials to realize the importance of this long-standing educational resource and to reconsider proposals to eliminate it.

Fatigue setting in with the Iraq adventure

Even its critics once believed that the Bush administration stood for something in Iraq: creating a stable, reliable ally in the Middle East. Trying to do so may have been right or wrong, brilliant or foolhardy, but it seemed to be the objective of American policy. However, Washington's passivity over the past week while the now-defunct Iraqi Governing Council anointed a good number of its members as the nucleus of the new transitional government calls into question whether there's anything left that can rightly be called American policy.

The White House may not yet be ready to cut and run, but it sure looks as though it has cast its moorings loose in Iraq.

Not so long ago, the idea was that with U.N. help, a nonpolitical governing body could be put together to prepare the country for elections next year. Whoops! Now it's got a governing body composed of politicians who are preparing themselves for elections next year.

President Bush was still talking heroically on Wednesday about Iraq, but his real attitude seems to be that whatever causes the least trouble for the time being is fine with him. Yet it's abundantly obvious that the first thing Iraq's newish leaders will have to do to establish credibility is to pick careful fights with the United States. It's still not clear how much sovereignty they'll really have, and finding out will be a contentious and potentially explosive process.

The American military has taken advantage of the switch to announce that it will stop trying to seek out and destroy enemies and will instead endeavor to provide security. That may be the least bad option: It may stop stirring up so much opposition, and it could result in fewer people getting killed, but it will open the door to freelance militias that could be Iraq's biggest headache in the not-too-distant future, and a ready source of exportable terror.

Is the Washington of George W. Bush tiring of the adventure in Iraq? After the prison scandal and the Ahmad Chalabi intelligence scandal, has the gung-ho gone?

Sadly, this is not a game in which you can pick up your ball and go home. Washington will have to be patient with a new government that is sure to be long on posturing and short on gratitude, and even then it will be a good outcome if things just don't get worse. The president should stop telling Americans they're on a historic mission; it's evident his own administration no longer has its heart in it.

Sanity & stem cells

I must confess that I'm glad to hear that former President Reagan has died. I say this not to be mean-spirited but rather out of a compassionate concern for him and his family. Alzheimer's disease is a fate worth than death. In its final stages, according to the Alzheimer's Association, "the patient is totally inactive, bed-bound, and has no awareness of her or his environment."

Long before this stage, Reagan, like millions of other victims of the incurable disease, could no longer recognize someone as dear to him as his wife. They could not spend the end of their years reminiscing about their lives together. While the death of a former leader is always a sad event for our nation, we lost Reagan years ago to the depths of Alzheimer's.

KATE MCKIERNAN

We need to take this opportunity, as a nation, to re-evaluate our policy on embryonic stem-cell research. There is no guarantee that the research will be able to provide us with miracle cures. Still, there is the very real possibility that cures and treatments Alzheimer's, Parkinson's, diabetes and spinal cord injuries could come out of it. The federal government should do everything in its power to promote such research.

There is a general mistrust of embryonic stem-cell research, mostly fueled by misunderstanding what exactly it entails. The only way to counter this is through education and understanding of what the research actually is and what it is not.

First, it involves the destruction of 5- to 6-day-old human embryos, not aborted fetuses. The embryos at this stage could fit on the head of a pin. Women don't even realize they have been pregnant if they miscarry at this stage. This happens in nature regularly for numerous normal reasons.

Second, no new embryos need to be created in order for the research to go forth. Embryos are created by artificial-fertilization clinics to help infertile couples initiate pregnancy. Whenever this is done, many more embryos are created than are ever used.

Third, such embryos are going to be destroyed. Once the couple decides they are done having children, the frozen and unused embryos are incinerated. Imagine being a cow breeder. A customer orders 1,000 cows. Once the cows are bred, a customer changes her or his order to 600. What can be done with the other 400 cows? Should the cows be sold or slaughtered for other uses, or should the cows be killed because they supposed to go to that particular customer?

I understand that many who oppose this research come from the anti-abortion rights camp, believing that these embryos are human lives and are not to be destroyed. But they are frozen and about to be destroyed. The procedure is more comparable to organ donation than to abortion. Those opposed to abortion should fervently support this research. These small balls of cells have the potential to save and improve the quality of lives.

Despite so many of our legislators being doctors who should understand these basic ideas, their policies are influenced by an ill-informed populace that makes up their constituencies. It is up to the informed public to write these legislators and demand that they support this research.

Nearly one-third of Americans know someone with Alzheimer's disease. One in 10 over age 65 suffers from the disease, and nearly half of those over 85 do. Alzheimer's affects everyone on a personal level, and it is but one example of a public-health problem that could be addressed by embryonic stem-cell research. Each of us should demand that the government take action on this possible counter to a growing public-health threat.

It is only right for our nation to honor a president who has passed away. We should honor Reagan with a Reagan Center for Stem Cell Research. ■ applause, but even that lightened as Slaughter's chances dimmed.

"I guess I really didn't think we were doing that bad of a job until this election, and we found out otherwise," Slaughter said. "We have a very good sheriff's office here in Johnson County. I put 28 years in, and it took a lot of you to make it what it is. I don't want to see anything happen to it."

Overcrowding at the Johnson County Jail was a key issue in the race, with both Democratic candidates supporting early release programs and electronic monitoring. Pulkrabek also advocated adding a detoxification center to the jail and noted that the facility simply needs more space.

Pulkrabek stressed his desire to mend the rift within the department that developed as the campaigns heated up.

"Now we've got to start the healing process," he said as law-enforcement officers present murmured approval. "Our department is divided, and we need to heal, and we need to grow."

He stressed the importance of working with other departments but said that ultimately, his employees must come first.

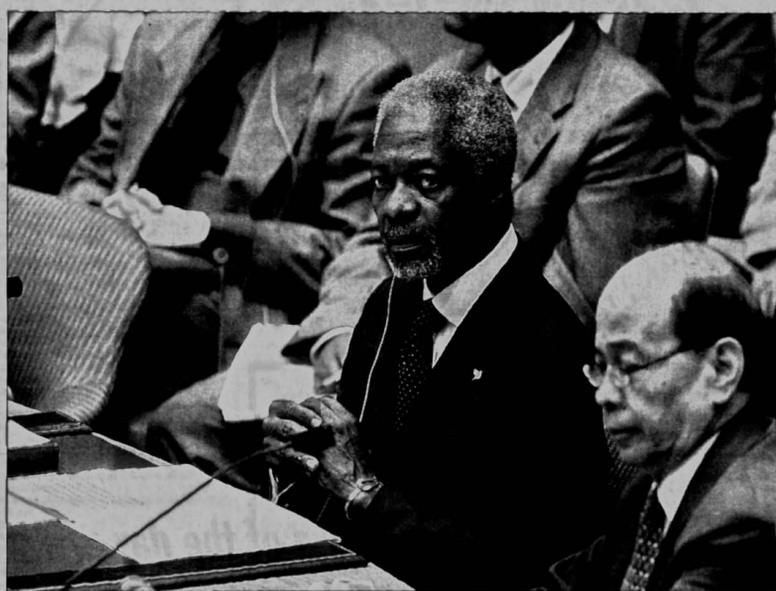

"We have to remember to start with our employees, with fair and equitable treatment," he said, adding that it "doesn't matter" anymore who employees supported in the election.

Republican Snyder, a general contractor and owner of Snyder Construction, ran unopposed.

"We're going to get down to work now that we know who we're running against," he said. "I'm a firm believer that when all the issues come out, the voters will choose me."

"We're satisfied. This is something the residents of Johnson County wanted," Harney said.

At the Mill, 120 E. Burlington St., drumrolls and applause echoed in the back room as the Sullivan crowd reacted as the 58th and final precinct reported in.

"I had a feeling it would be pretty close," Sullivan said. "I'm very pleased with the results. Tonight was pretty nerve-racking, but I'm relieved it's over."

South of Iowa City at the Pleasant Valley Golf Course, O'Donnell supporters were somber after the results.

"We ran strong and hard, and it's definitely not over till it's over," O'Donnell said.

Voter turnout around campus was expectedly low, said Dan Moen, a Johnson County elections deputy, the result of most students being out-of-town for the summer. Overall, he said, "With over 8,500 [total] votes, that's considered a pretty good turnout on the Democratic side compared to other years."

In addition, Mike Kemp, a poll worker at Quadrangle Residence Hall, said the summer heat made it challenging to generate interest in local politics.

"It's tricky to determine turnout numbers because more and more people voted early," he said. "A lot of people find it more convenient because they can get it taken care of up to a month ahead of time."

Democrats returned 2,257 early countywide ballots, the highest in the last three county primaries. Precinct 5 (Currrier) chairwoman Linda Yanney, who has worked Election Day polling for more than 15 years, said there were a substantial number of early voters across town.

"It means additional opportunity for people to cast their votes without having to worry about taking time to get to a site or finding parking," she said.

"Having locations like university residence halls open to the public is important, although it's hard to tell if students have been voting."

Although voters can easily change party affiliation at the polling stations, the requirement to declare allegiance to the Democrat or Republican Parties could have accounted for the lack of student participation, Kemp said.

"Because a lot of students are registered as independent, most don't bother to take the time," he said.

Senior Rob Melcher has been taking the time to cast his ballot since his freshman year at the UI. He said he feels bad when he does not vote.

"It's everybody's personal choice to vote, but I just feel like it's my civic duty," he said.

Security Council backs Iraq plan

IRAQ

British Prime Minister Tony Blair, Bush's closest ally in the coalition that deposed Saddam, said, "We all now want to put divisions of the past behind us and unite behind the vision of a modern and stable Iraq that can be a force for good, not just for Iraqis, but for the whole region and thus the whole world."

The Bush administration considers the Security Council vote a victory, particularly after failing to win U.N. support for the March 2003 invasion. It took five versions and a battery of U.S. concessions to make the vote unanimous — and to produce it on the American schedule, before the G-8 summit meeting began Tuesday night.

With each version, the resolution delivered more assurances of Iraqi authority over Iraqi affairs and more precise details about how the U.S.-controlled occupation would end. Compared with recent diplomatic battles, this one went smoothly, diplomats on all sides said Tuesday.

Bedford said he did not think Molina left her apartment with the intent to fake her own kidnapping. "She had several personal issues that she got caught up in," he said. "She started driving west, got off the interstate, and came up with the story to justify what happened."

Police charged Molina with making false reports to authorities, a serious misdemeanor. It is punishable by up to one year in prison and can carry a maximum fine of $1,500.

Molina requested an attorney and entered an automatic plea of not guilty Tuesday morning during her initial appearance in the Johnson County Courthouse.

She was being held at the Johnson County Jail on Tuesday evening on a $650 cash-only bail.

Starting earlier is one way to make it "bigger and better," Kresowik said. "Last year, there was just a couple of us around, and we just kind of winged it."

He added that the expansion and improved structure will ensure the project's longevity after the original creators are gone.

The team hopes to start publicizing next year's event during Weeks of Welcome in August, Kresowik said, but participants could have started logging hours for the next concert as soon as Ben Folds pounded out his last note in the IMU Main Lounge.

Kresowik said the organization will select a performer for the next show in early 2005.

Summit opens on upbeat note

SEA ISLAND, Ga. (AP) — President Bush and other world leaders showcased a new harmony on Iraq on Tuesday as they met at their annual summit, but prickly issues remained over both Iraq and Bush's plan to promote democracy across the wider Middle East.

A social dinner Tuesday evening marked the formal opening of the summit, but Bush first had one-on-one meetings with Japanese Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi and the leaders of Canada, Germany, and Russia.

POINT/COUNTERPOINT

Will Mark Prior win 10 games this season?

Mark Prior's return from the DL should give the Chicago Cubs the lift they need in the last two-thirds of the season. Prior, who pitched great in his outing at Triple-A Iowa, looked in mid-season form last week. Giving up only two singles, he didn't give up any runs and struck out eight in six innings with no walks. Last year, in his first full major-league season, he finished third in National League Cy Young Award voting, with a 2.43 ERA and 245 strikeouts. Of the 30 games he started, he won 18, roughly five games better than the average National League starter and an astounding 60 percent success rate.

In his rookie campaign two summers ago, he won six of 19 starts, joining the big-league rotation in late May. Since then, he has matured on the mound showing more command and stamina. And, oh yeah, he still has a mid-90s fastball, lethal curve, and arguably the most flawless delivery in the game.

This year, Prior should pitch approximately 20 games. So if he is as brilliant as he was last year, winning the same percentage, he'll get around 12 wins. But by the time the Cubs are done, he'll have even more.

If you take that in account with Sammy Sosa returning from the DL and an offense that will inevitably heat up with the summer, Prior will be back to his Cy Young-contender status.

The biggest question mark regarding how many wins he will get this season isn't Prior himself, it's the Cubs' worse-than-shaky bullpen, the same bullpen that is home to Joe Borowski. The closer is the culprit who cost Prior a win in his debut against the Pirates last week, which resulted in a Cub loss.

Even with Joe Blow in the pen, I project Prior will still end up with around 16 wins, five of which will come in October.

—by Ted McCartan

For all the glitz and glamour of Mark Prior — the blazing fastball and the sequoia-like legs — the 23-year-old has proven to be about as indestructible as a house of cards thus far in 2004.

Not one but two injuries felled the 6-3, 230-pound pitcher in early spring — his right Achilles and right elbow — causing the phenom to miss the North Siders' first 52 ball games.

While most Cub fans salivated in anticipation for Prior's quick return to the mound in May, it was with good reason the Chicago brass treated his injuries so delicately. After all, the Achilles tendon was the Achilles' heel of a Greek god, for Heaven's sake (oddly enough named Achilles), and right elbow ailments tend to be trouble when they belong to the appendage you use to rip 90-mph sliders.

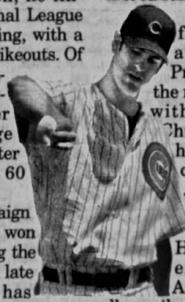

The way the USC alum uses his lower body as the engine for his powerful pitches adds to concern over the Achilles injury, especially considering righties use their right foot to push off the mound.

All this should cause the Cubs to treat Prior with caution throughout the rest of the season. Assuming the Reds fall back to reality in their rightful place towards the NL Central's cellar, and Dusty Baker's boys stay within striking distance of Houston and St. Louis, Prior likely won't be pushed. Even a slight setback in his health will probably result in a skipped start or two.

It's well-established that the Cubs treat most infirmities with caution, as evidenced by Greg Maddux's quick hook from a recent outing with the slightest of muscle strains.

Look for Prior to just miss out on a double-digit win total but be fully ready and rested by the time the games truly matter — in October.

the Hawkeyes. In the 400 hurdles, Peterson's time is ranked 22nd out of the 26 competitors, including Florida senior Rickey Harris, who was the runner-up in the event last year. The men's shot put field features defending champion Carl Myerscough of Nebraska. He has the leading throw in the country — 20.69 meters, 1.75 meters ahead of Kemeny. The defending champions in the discus and hammer throw, Hannes Hopley of Southern Methodist University and Lucas MacKay of Georgia, both return, making the road tough for Daufeldt and Hamilton.

"It's a tough group, no doubt," Wiecek said.

While Williams will battle Richards for the 400 title, Arens will have her hands full in the 3,000-meter steeplechase. Arens, who has the 25th-best time with a 10:30.31, has to face defending champion Kassi Andersen of Brigham Young University, who runs the race at a blistering clip of 9:44.68. Roach will have to jump against Jessica Johnson of Arkansas and Chaunte Howard of Georgia Tech, who finished 2-3 in last year's championships.

"It's pretty much wide open in the high jump. It can be anybody's event," Grant said.

Regardless of how the Hawkeyes do, the NCAAAs are some one of the best times for Wiecek.

"It's one of the highlights every year," he said.

Karrie Webb hits out of bunker on the 16th hole during the final round of the Kellogg-Keebler Classic on Sunday at Stonebridge Country Club in Aurora, Ill. Webb made five birdies in her final-round 67 to finish 16-under 200 and hold off Annika Sorenstam and two others to win.

Sorenstam struggles to stay #1 in the LPGA

BY DOUG FERGUSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILMINGTON, Del. — Goals are still hard to find for Annika Sorenstam.

Challengers are not.

The LPGA Championship was supposed to be the second stop on her way to the Grand Slam. Having accomplished just about everything else in women's golf, Sorenstam went searching for motivation and settled on a goal of winning all four majors in the same year. No professional, male or female, had ever done that.

Instead, Sorenstam had her worst tournament of the year in the first major. She tied for 13th in the Kraft Nabisco Championship, which only raised more questions about how soon the 33-year-old Swede would call it a career.

But since that crushing loss, a familiar motivation has returned. With so many young faces starting to emerge on the LPGA Tour, Sorenstam still wants to show everyone who's the boss.

"Yes. You got it," she agreed Tuesday before a practice round at DuPont Country Club.

It appears — for now, anyway — that she has some serious competition.

The winner at the Kraft Nabisco was Grace Park, a 25-year-old who has threatened to become a star the last five years and is just now starting to play to her potential.

Park closed with a 67 in the final round last year at the McDonald's LPGA Championship and lost in a playoff to Sorenstam. Along with winning her first major, Park has three other runner-up finishes and a third this year.

Se Ri Pak, who has been trying to keep up with Sorenstam the last three years, won the Michelob Ultra Open at Kingsmill and earned enough points for the Hall of Fame, despite being only 26.

Lorena Ochoa, the 22-year-old from Mexico, won her first LPGA event this year and has finished out of the top 10 only twice in nine tournaments. And a victory last week by Karrie Webb, the 30th of her career, might be a sign that she is ready to renew her rivalry with Sorenstam.

That's something Sorenstam has been lacking — a rival.

As the LPGA Tour heads into the heart of its schedule — three majors in the next eight weeks, along with the $2.1 million Evian Masters in France — Sorenstam no longer has such a firm grip on the top.

She has a $135,000 lead over Park on the money list, a slim margin considering Sorenstam won't play nearly as many tournaments this year. She leads Park by a mere 2.58 points in the Player of the Year race.

"When you get close on the money list, player of the year, I want to be the best," Sorenstam said.

She is still driven by the majors.

Despite 51 career victories, she has won only six majors — as many as Webb, one fewer than Juli Inkster. She would like to finish with 10 majors, although that would be five short of the record held by Patty Berg.

Winning one for the little guy

BY ALAN ROBINSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAMPA, Fla. — For the last 10 years, there was no room for the little guys in the Stanley Cup finals.

The list of champions was a familiar mix of big-budget and top-talent teams: Detroit (three times), New Jersey (three times), Colorado (twice), Dallas, and the New York Rangers.

There were plenty of stars and familiar story lines, but not much unpredictability. Can the Devils win again with their trap? Is this Scotty Bowman's last Cup? Is Patrick Roy the best goalie ever? Brett Hull, are you here again?

The newly minted champion Tampa Bay Lightning changed all that, and in an interesting bit of timing, did so just as the other small- and mid-market teams head into the NHL's labor talks looking for a much better deal.

Under general manager Jay Feaster, just three years removed from running a minor-league team in Hershey, Pa., and coach John Tortorella, who was passed over by bigger franchises, the Lightning developed a plan to compete and stayed with it.

The only surprise was how fast it all came together, just a year after the Lightning won a playoff series for the first time.

"I still can't figure it out, how quickly it happened for us," Tortorella said after a Cup-clinching 2-1 victory over Calgary in Game 7 Monday night.

Goalie Nikolai Khabibulin, once so erratic he was seen as more of a problem than a solution, thinks he knows what did it: doing nothing.

Lakers win game 2 in OT, 99-91

BY CHRIS SHERIDAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Kobe Bryant came through in the clutch, saving the Lakers at the end of regulation and carrying them in overtime.

In the type of performance that cemented the star's status as one of the great performers in NBA history, Bryant tied the game with a 3-pointer late in regulation and helped them pull away for good at the start of overtime to lead the Los Angeles Lakers past the Detroit Pistons, 99-91, on Tuesday night in Game 2 of the NBA Finals.

Seconds away from facing a 2-0 deficit with the series headed to Detroit, the Lakers evened it at a game apiece behind Bryant's 33 points and seven assists.

The teams will go at it again Thursday night, each having earned a greater level of respect for their opponent. The Lakers now realize more than ever that the Pistons are anything but a pushover, while Detroit now knows that no victory is ever secure when the ball can end up in Bryant's hands for the biggest shot of the game.

Shaquille O'Neal added 29 points for the Lakers, six of them coming in the extra period as Los Angeles improved to 7-0 in overtime games during the regular season and postseason.

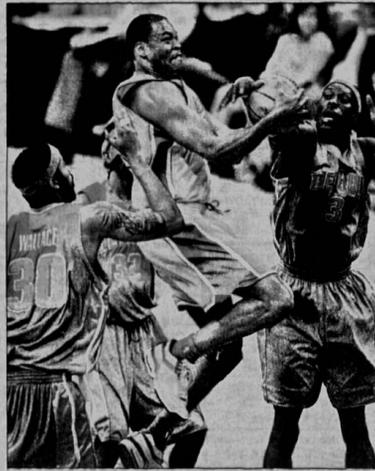

One of those victories came on the final night of the regular season at Portland when Bryant hit a buzzer-beating 3-pointer to force overtime, then won it at the end of the extra period with another 3 to give the Lakers the Pacific Division title.

This time, things looked fairly hopeless for the Lakers as they trailed by six points with less than 40 seconds left in regulation. But O'Neal converted a three-point play and Chauncey Billups missed a runner for Detroit, giving the Lakers a last shot.

Naturally, the ball went to No. 8. And naturally, Bryant drilled it over Richard Hamilton in the final seconds before running back to the bench to chest-bump teammate Devean George as Detroit called timeout to set up a last shot.

Rasheed Wallace let Tayshaun Prince's inbounds pass slip through his hands, and the clock expired without the Pistons attempting a final shot.

The momentum was squarely on the Lakers' side by then, and Los Angeles outscored Detroit 10-2 in the extra period to even the series.

Ohio State fires O'Brien

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Ohio State fired basketball coach Jim O'Brien on Tuesday, saying the program committed NCAA violations under his watch that included giving money to a recruit to send to his family overseas.

At a news conference on campus, Athletics Director Andy Geiger said Aleksandar Radojevic was given $6,000 five years ago. Radojevic, from Serbia and Montenegro, was later ruled ineligible because he had been paid to play basketball in Europe.

"We consider these matters to be very severe," Geiger said. "I am troubled that a rule was admittedly violated and it took five years to find [out] about."

Geiger said he asked O'Brien whether he knew that he violated NCAA rules.

"He admitted he knew that it did," said Geiger, who didn't disclose the source of the money.

O'Brien received a letter Tuesday morning informing him he was fired, he said in a statement.

Fla. State athlete dies from aneurysm

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Florida State basketball player Ronald Pierce died early Tuesday, apparently from an aneurysm that may have resulted from a genetic disease that typically affects tall people.

A friend called 911 early Tuesday morning and said Pierce, 19, was breathing strangely and couldn't be awakened at her off-campus apartment. She was taken to Tallahassee Memorial Hospital, where she died, police said.

Preliminary results from an autopsy indicated that Pierce, who was the tallest player on the Seminoles at 6-5, died because of a ruptured aorta that was caused by an aneurysm, which may have been caused by the hereditary disorder, Marfan syndrome. A final report may take months.

University spokesman Rob Wilson said he did not know if school officials were aware that Pierce had Marfan syndrome.

Belmont gets highest TV ratings since '81

NEW YORK (AP) — The ratings for Smarty Jones' failed Triple Crown bid at the Belmont Stakes were the highest for the race since 1981.

NBC's coverage of Birdstone's upset on June 5 drew an 11.3 rating with a 26 share, 19 percent higher than the 9.5 with a 23 share that last year's race got when Empire Maker ruined Funny Cide's attempt at the Triple Crown.

The ratings were the highest since the 1981 Belmont, when Pleasant Colony's unsuccessful Triple Crown bid got a 12.6 with a 36 share.

The coverage, which ran from 5:28-7:19 p.m., was also the week's highest-rated network program. The rating peaked with a 15.8 with a 35 share from 6:30-7 p.m., the time during which the race was run.

NBC's coverage of the three Triple Crown races — the Kentucky Derby, the Preakness, and the Belmont — averaged an 8.3 rating with a 20 share. That's up 22 percent from last year's 6.8 with an 18 and is the highest since 1989, when Sunday Silence's Triple Crown try generated a 9.1 with a 26 share.

Seven qualify for NCAA track finals

BY NICK RICHARDS
THE DAILY IOWAN

For the Hawkeyes, this weekend's NCAA outdoor track and field championships, starting today and running through Saturday at the University of Texas-Austin, has the potential to be a big weekend for men's coach Larry Wiecek and women's coach James Grant. Seven competitors — seniors Brad Daufeldt and Russ Peterson, junior Ken Kemeny, and sophomore Adam Hamilton for the men, and seniors Shellene Williams and Sarah Arens and freshman Peaches Roach for the women — will represent the Hawkeyes in Austin.

"I think they are all excited, on top of their games, and I'm looking forward to a good weekend down at the University of Texas," Wiecek said.

All of the performers are looking to become All-Americans, which would add to the growing list Wiecek and Grant are accumulating at Iowa. Wiecek has coached 23 All-Americans since taking the helm 17 seasons ago, while Grant is looking for his second All-American in his eight years at Iowa.

"I think all of them could be All-Americans, and all of them could be in the top eight," Wiecek said. "It's a real good group of guys that we are taking down there, and our expectations are pretty high."

At the NCAA regional competition held May 28-29 in College Station, Texas, Kemeny and Daufeldt both automatically qualified in the shot put and hammer throw, respectively, by placing in the top five of their event. Kemeny finished fourth with a throw of 61-41/4, while Daufeldt finished fourth in the hammer with a toss of 205-4. Daufeldt also qualified in the discus. Hamilton, who qualified in the hammer with Daufeldt, and Peterson qualified as wildcards. Peterson narrowly missed an automatic qualifying spot, placing sixth at regionals in the 400-meter hurdles.

Williams set a school-record in the 400 meters at the NCAA regional meet, placing fourth with a time of 52.41. Arens placed second in the 3,000-meter steeplechase with a time of 10:39.31, and Roach took fifth in the high jump with a leap of 5-10 1/2. While Grant shares a similar goal with Wiecek (that the women will return to Iowa City as All-Americans), he knows his competitors will have to do better than their regional marks to compete against a terrific field.

"In Shellene's event, I think the favorite has to be the winner last year, [Texas sophomore] Sanya Richards," Grant said. "Anything can happen in the championships, though."

Perhaps the most important aspect for both programs is the help the Hawkeyes will get on the recruiting front from having the participants.

"That's the ultimate I think for college athletes, to participate in the NCAA's," Wiecek said. "We have four good guys going down there. Two of them are seniors [Daufeldt and Peterson], but two of them return, so that will give us a couple of guys who can talk about it and give a taste of it to the rest of our athletes next year."

However, the competition will be tough for

'Bulldog' ready to take bite out of the big leagues

BY KELLY BEATON
THE DAILY IOWAN

Nate Johnson had a nice little day planned yesterday. A Rotary Club speaking appearance, followed by a round of golf in Pella.

Then, around 11:30 a.m., the Phillies called. All of a sudden, the day got a whole lot better.

The former Hawkeye pitcher will take the mound for Philadelphia's short-season A-ball affiliate in Batavia, N.Y., later this month after getting selected in the 20th round of Major League Baseball's 50-round draft Tuesday. Johnson said he agreed to a signing bonus of $1,000 and expects to sign a contract with the club on Thursday.

"I'm really excited," he said. "I was pleasantly surprised at the 20th round. I'm thankful to the organization for believing in me."

I just want to go there and give it all I've got."

The Oskaloosa, Iowa, native was a first-team All-Big Ten selection in 2004 following a senior campaign in which he went 6-4 with a 3.36 ERA. The 6-0, 210-pounder led the Big Ten in innings pitched this spring with 96 2/3 and displayed superb command of his pitches, striking out 73 while handing out just 16 bases on balls.

Despite the fact Johnson's stature is less than ideal for professional baseball, Iowa coach Jack Dahm said he wasn't surprised at how high he was chosen.

"Nate was throwing the ball as well as anybody in the Midwest towards the middle part of the season," said the coach, who just completed his first season in Iowa City. "A lot of [scouts] started coming out and seeing him."

"The Bulldog," as he was referred to by teammates, earned respect in the clubhouse for both his intensity on the mound — evidenced by Johnson's five complete games in 2004 — and his willingness to offer advice to the Hawkeye pitching staff's numerous underclassmen.

"I don't think we can replace him," said Hawkeye pitcher Ryan Dupic, a sophomore-to-be.

"We're just delighted. If there's anyone who deserves a shot in the big leagues, it's him."

Who replaces Johnson as ace of the Iowa staff will be a major question for the Hawkeyes heading into next season. The departing senior was on the mound for 30 percent of Iowa's victories during its 20-35 campaign this spring.

While Dahm loses his ace, he may have another coming in next season. Heralded Cedar Rapids Kennedy lefty Danny Bales was not drafted — as had been predicted by many prognosticators — ensuring that he will wear Black and Gold next March. The prep senior was named Gatorade's Iowa Player of the Year recently.

The Iowa coach said pro squads passed on Bales in the draft because of his strong desire to attend the UI and because "his velocity didn't go up this year like maybe the pro scouts wanted to see."

Bales regularly throws between 83 and 86 miles an hour, while scouts usually prefer prospects that hit the upper 80s on the radar gun. Dahm said that while Bales and junior-to-be Austin Steward (1-5, 5.21 in 2004) both stand a decent chance of replacing Johnson as Iowa's No. 1 starter, every member of the rotation will need to step up his game for the Hawkeyes to make up for the loss of Johnson.

Johnson thinks his former teammates have what it takes to continue turning the program around under Dahm. And he'll be watching what happens at Banks Field from afar.

"I was just fortunate to play one year under [Dahm]," Johnson said. "It was an honor."

"I'm excited to see what lies in the future for Iowa baseball. I see a lot of future draft picks coming out of Iowa."
