Copter crash in Iraq kills 31 U.S. troops

The cause of the wreck is under investigation, but officials say the pilot may not have been able to navigate through a sandstorm

BY CAMERON W. BARR AND KARL VICK
WASHINGTON POST

BAGHDAD — A Marine Corps transport helicopter crashed during a sandstorm in western Iraq early Wednesday, killing 30 Marines and a Navy sailor in the deadliest single event for U.S. forces since they invaded Iraq nearly two years ago. Four more Marines and two soldiers died in attacks, bringing to 37 the U.S. toll for the day.

U.S. military officials said the CH-53E Super Stallion helicopter went down near Rutbah, a town approximately 220 miles west of Baghdad, in volatile Anbar province, at 1:20 a.m. Defense Department officials in Washington said the pilot may have been unable to navigate through the sandstorm. Officials said the cause was still under investigation.

At a news conference in Washington, President Bush expressed his condolences and said that word of the helicopter crash "is going to be very discouraging to the American people. I understand that." He added: "But it is the long-term objective that is vital, and that is to spread freedom."

In Washington, Pentagon officials warned that the Iraqi elections would be followed by a period of political uncertainty and continued insurgent violence. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and Gen. John Abizaid, the chief of the U.S. Central Command, said they expected continued insurgent attacks after the election.

IC WOMAN ASCENDS BOXING HEIGHTS

BY ALEX LANG
THE DAILY IOWAN

After starting boxing as little more than an exercise routine, Iowa City native Emily Klinefelter has moved up the ranks to become an Olympic hopeful and one of the top female boxers in the world.

Earlier this year, Klinefelter, 20, was named the top amateur female boxer in 2004 by the Women's Boxing Archive Network. The marketing and Spanish major found out about the award when she saw her name on the organization's website.

"I was surprised when I first heard about it," she said. "Looking back, I think I've earned it."

For the second-straight year, she finished the year ranked No. 1 at 110 pounds by USA Boxing. It was also the second-straight year she finished with more ranking points than any other boxer.

However, when she first started her career less than four years ago, few people saw her as a future national champion.

"I don't think people knew at first that she would be," said Adam Pollack, Klinefelter's manager and coach.

BUDGET CUTS

Skorton details cuts in 15 areas

UI President David Skorton announces $2 million in budget cuts in the hopes of raising faculty salaries and limiting tuition increases

BY SAM EDSILL
THE DAILY IOWAN

In an effort to increase faculty salaries and limit tuition increases, UI President David Skorton announced Wednesday a total of $2 million in budget cuts spanning 15 departments, including Student Health Service and Information Technology Services.

The cuts will hit the General Education Fund, whose revenue is mostly composed of state funds and tuition; they will take effect July 1.

Skorton chose the cuts based on recommendations made last spring by a 22-member task force assigned to slice $12 million over a three-year period from the General Education Fund.

Money saved will be reallocated to faculty salaries as part of a new state Board of Regents program to increase state funds for higher education, said Steve Parrott, the director of University Relations.

"The main thing we're going to focus on is replacing faculty positions that have been lost and raising average salaries," he said.

The UI ranks in the bottom third of Big Ten and other peer institutions in average faculty salary, and the new program would help the school get back into the top third.

UI attempts to rein in dreaded grade inflation

A new grading curve implemented at Princeton to keep grade inflation in check raises questions at the UI

BY KATIE TROTSKY
THE DAILY IOWAN

Several years ago, graduating accountant majors from the UI had a problem, but they did not know it.

According to many of their employers, the new accountants had terrible writing skills, a flaw the new grads never spotted in college because of their high grades. Lola Lopes, the UI associate provost for undergraduate education, said this is an example of how the trend of grade inflation in colleges across the nation can hurt students.

"Grade inflation postpones the day of reckoning when students really discover where their skills are as opposed to what they need to be," she said. "When students find out about mechanical and logical problems in the workplace, it is the wrong time to be getting that feedback."

LA suicide attempt derails trains, killing 11

At least 11 people killed and more than 180 injured in suicide attempt

BY MICHAEL MUSKAL AND JESUS SANCHEZ
LOS ANGELES TIMES

GLENDALE, Calif. — A man intent on committing suicide left his car on a railroad track in Glendale near downtown Los Angeles Wednesday, where it set off a collision that derailed two commuter trains, killing at least 11 people and injuring nearly 200, authorities said.

Police arrested a man who they said would be charged with homicide in the crash that left train cars mangled and seared. Debris including seat cushions, bloody towels, and luggage discarded by fleeing passengers littered the area.

A southbound commuter train heading to downtown Los Angeles hit the Jeep Grand Cherokee parked on the tracks, said Glendale Police Chief Randy Adams. The train then apparently crashed into a northbound Metrolink commuter train, and a stationary Union Pacific freight train was hit and knocked off the tracks, officials said. The investigation was continuing.

Grad students rock Chile by radio

BY CHRISTINA ERB
THE DAILY IOWAN

Chilean students 5,000 miles away are tuning into "Sesiones KRUI," a hour-long radio show hosted by UI graduate students Marcelo Mena and Oscar Vega.

The DJs, natives of Chile, made UI history when they aired the university's first internationally syndicated radio show earlier this month.

Designed for the Universidad Católica de Valparaíso station, on the coast of Chile's central region, the program airs American independent music every Thursday night.

The fourth show airs in Chile today, featuring music from such bands as Hood and the High Llamas.

"I thought of the show out of the blue," Mena said. In the next four days, he became a father and recorded his show. In tribute to his child's birth, he includes indie lullabies on each show.

"This type of music captures a loyal audience," Maria Teresa Anguita, the director of the Chilean radio station, wrote in an e-mail to The Daily Iowan. The show, she wrote, is the only one in a region that broadcasts primarily popular, rock and pop Latin.

"We are exposed to music way faster than anyone else in Chile; we are the forefront," Mena said. The pair also hosts "Coup de Style," a weekly show for a UI audience that showcases an ethnically varied musical selection.

The syndicated program has let Mena and Vega reconnect with their home communities. Their childhood friends from Valparaíso and Viña de Mar regions have already contacted them about the new show.

"For me, it's great because when I play music, I think of them. It's a way to talk to my friends," Mena said.

"I have an [American] accent. I hate to admit it," Vega added, noting that he and Mena often slip and speak English occasionally.

Mena and Vega record the show in Spanish and post it on Mena's website, where Anguita downloads it. In 2004, KRUI moved into its new state-of-the-art recording studios on the third floor of the IMU—a move, Vega said, has made it easier for the pair to record.

Although the two eventually plan on living in different regions of Chile, they plan to continue making music shows as a unit.

"Who would have thought 10 years ago you could send a show by e-mail?" Mena said, adding that future technology will provide them both with enough resources to produce the show from separate locations.

"We plan to continue to DJ as long as we are still hip and don't sound like classic rock DJs."

"We listened to the precursors of the shows today. We hope 15-year-old kids are listening to us and will remember us and learn to love indie rock."

"And become rock stars," Vega interjected with a rolling laugh.

Ex-student pleads guilty in trash fire

A former UI student scheduled to stand trial earlier this week for first-degree arson pleaded guilty to a lesser charge Wednesday.

Jeremy Arickx, 19, was sentenced to one year of probation for the reduced offense of reckless use of fire for igniting some trash in Hillcrest Residence Hall in May 2004. Three trash barrels caught fire around 2:14 a.m. in the trash room.

Witnesses saw Arickx, who lived in C510 Hillcrest during the 2003-04 school year, entering and exiting the trash room within a minute of an alarm sounding.

The fire followed two other suspicious Hillcrest fires in early 2004.

Arickx's accomplice, Christopher Remily, pleaded guilty to the same reduced charge on Jan. 14, four days before he was scheduled to go on trial. Arickx's trial had been set for Monday.

Insurance lawsuit dismissed

A lawsuit involving an insurance company that refused to pay benefits to the parents of a teen who died in a car crash has been dismissed, according to court records.

The decision came despite a November 2004 ruling in favor of David and Marian Koozmann, whose son, Keith Koozmann, 19, died in a car crash. After his death, the couple tried to collect underinsurance coverage benefits from IMT Insurance Co.

Judge Amanda Potterfield agreed last fall with the Koozmanns' claim that their son was considered a resident of their household because he was receiving support from his parents for educational, living, and transportation expenses, among other reasons. Also, although Keith Koozmann was living in an apartment at the time of his death, he had planned to move back into the Koozmann household.

Court records state that the Koozmanns dismissed the lawsuit against IMT Insurance Company and also Springfield Agency Inc., with prejudice.

Calls to David O'Brien, the Koozmanns' attorney, were not immediately returned Wednesday.

Sioux City businessman Bob Vander Plaats (left) is greeted by former state Rep. Steve Sukup after speaking at a news conference Wednesday at the Statehouse in Des Moines. Vander Plaats announced a list of high-profile activists who will provide key support for his second bid for the Republican gubernatorial nomination. He claimed an organizational and financial edge over his potential rivals, none of whom have formally announced their campaigns. Vander Plaats sought the GOP nomination in 2002, narrowly losing to Des Moines lawyer Doug Gross. He pledged to run a positive campaign, both in a Republican primary and in the general election if he wins the nomination. "I want to give Iowans something to vote for, not something to vote against," he said.

Group that honors women looks for donations to continue cause

BY CLARE PIERSON
THE DAILY IOWAN

The committee that organizes the annual Celebration of Excellence and Achievement Among Women is the latest organization plagued by budget cuts, and members are seeking donations to ensure that the event will continue.

The Celebration Organizing Committee used e-mail to solicit an unspecified amount of money last week from UI deans, directors, and departmental officers for the event's operating costs, which are approximately $3,000. The panel has yet to receive a donation, said Laura McLeran, the head of the group.

The Jan. 20 e-mail said, "We feel strongly that we should continue to provide this as a free event to the university community, but we cannot use scholarship funds to meet expenses."

The event, this year scheduled for March 29, recognizes accomplished women in all areas at the university, from researchers to minority students approximately eight awards at the annual event. Kroon said WRAC has always supported the celebration financially and has helped organize the event. It will continue to do so this year, she said.

Although the committee has not yet received any official donations, McLeran said she is hopeful because it's still early and the UI community has come through in the past with generous donations. The university community has celebrated women's achievements with the event since the mid-1990s, with attendance growing steadily each year.

"The event will always be free, regardless of our financial situation," McLeran said.

"We may just need to restructure the event based on our resources."

Last year's Distinguished Achievement Award went to Linda McGuire, an associate dean of the College of Law, and Kay Gfeller, a UI music professor.

— Linda Kroon, a staff member at the Women's Resource and Action Center

"[The event] is important because it upholds women's achievements for the entire university community to acknowledge and provides role models for others who can follow in their footsteps," said Linda Kroon, a staff member at the Women's Resource and Action Center, which hands out approximately eight awards at the annual event.

Kroon said WRAC has always supported the celebration financially and has helped organize the event. It will continue to do so this year, she said.

UIHC, Old Capitol, workshop seek regent OK for renovations

BY SEUNG MIN KIM
THE DAILY IOWAN

Patients admitted to the UI Hospital and Clinics and their visitors will soon enjoy a new service center that officials hope will ease traffic as people enter and leave the 769-bed complex.

Pending final approval by the state Board of Regents next week, construction will start on the UIHC Patient and Visitor Services Center, a $4.4 million project that will separate the hospital's admitting and discharge areas.

At present, both services are located in the main entrance lobby, an area that includes the Carver Pavilion and the south wing of the general hospital.

"We think that having separate space for each function would make things run much more smoothly for patients," UIHC spokesman Tom Moore said.

The project will renovate roughly 21,000 square feet in the Carver Pavilion's first floor to pave way for patient admitting services, a gift shop, patient- and guest-relations services, and a seating area.

Hospital officials hope to break ground on the center, funded primarily by the hospital's building-use funds, this spring; completion is slated for the summer of 2007.

Officials also unveiled designs and descriptions of the Old Capitol renovation project's final phase for the regents Wednesday. The outline detailed two museum display areas that will showcase the 164-year-old building and spotlight different university academic areas.

The year-long renovations are expected to begin this spring, as long as fund raising for the $1.35 million project is successful. UI officials launched a $2 million fund-raising campaign in December to fund renovations for the widely recognized landmark, which was once the state's Capitol.

A blaze caused by a construction worker's torch scorched the facility on Nov. 20, 2001, destroying the dome and tower and damaging the interior walls, ceilings, floors, and furnishings and causing $5 million in damages.

The first two phases of the renovation, which included reconstruction of the dome, cupola, and bell tower and interior improvements, have been completed at a cost of approximately $7.4 million.

If regents approve the design and budget next week, the university will be able to begin construction, regent communications specialist Barb Boose said.

UI officials will also ask the regents to approve a $225,000 increase in the budget for the renovation of the Dey House, the home of the Writers' Workshop. The $2.69 million project — a free-standing, two-story addition to the 148-year-old building — will begin in March pending regent approval. It is expected to be completed in a year.

Senate confirms Rice after rancorous debate

After being Bush's national security advisor for four years, she becomes the first black woman to hold the post of secretary of State

BY ANNE GEARAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Condoleezza Rice won confirmation as secretary of State Wednesday despite blistering criticism from Senate Democrats who accused her of misleading statements and said she must share the blame for mistakes and war deaths in Iraq.

The tally, though one-sided at 85-13, was still the largest "no" vote against any secretary of State nominee since 1825.

Separately, a Senate committee narrowly voted to send Alberto Gonzales' attorney general nomination to the full Senate. And Jim Nicholson and Michael Leavitt won confirmation as the new secretaries of veterans affairs and health and human services respectively as President Bush's second-term Cabinet began to fill out.

Rice, Bush's national-security adviser for four years and perhaps his closest adviser on the war and terrorism issues that dominated his first term, becomes the first black woman to be America's top diplomat. She succeeds Colin Powell, a former Army general who clashed privately with some of the strongest hawks in Bush's inner circle.

Although Rice's nomination was never in doubt, Democrats mounted a lengthy and biting protest that showed she will not immediately match Powell's collegial relationship with Capitol Hill.

Democratic senators denounced Rice's job performance and truthfulness. Most criticism focused on Rice's role planning for war and explaining the threat posed by Saddam Hussein. Some accused her of avoiding accountability for the absence of weapons of mass destruction in Iraq. Others said she seemed unwilling to acknowledge errors in planning or judgment.

"In the end, I could not excuse Dr. Rice's repeated misstatements," Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., said of his vote against Rice.

Durbin said Powell had been "a voice of moderation," and he expressed "hope that the responsibility of leadership will inspire Condoleezza Rice to follow his example."

2 UI buildings place in state's top 50

Carver-Hawkeye Arena and the Iowa Advanced Technologies Laboratory are included in a photographic exhibit and 112-page catalogue that will travel through Iowa

BY ELAINE FABIAN
THE DAILY IOWAN

Two UI buildings, Carver-Hawkeye Arena and the Iowa Advanced Technologies Laboratory, have been named among the state's top 50 buildings of the 20th century, according to the Iowa chapter of the American Institute of Architects.

Beginning in January 2003, the Iowa chapter began receiving nominations for the state's best buildings of the century, which totaled about 300.

The institute narrowed the nominations down to 125 and then placed them before a five-person jury that included former Iowa Gov. Robert Ray and Bob Broshar, the former national president of the institute.

The jury selected the top 50 buildings based on the buildings' societal and cultural impact. In addition, the jury selected the top five buildings of each decade and the No. 1 building of the century. Stephens Auditorium of Iowa State University was named the top building of the century.

"There has been a lot of excitement going around about it," said Suzanne Schwengels, the executive vice president of institute in Iowa.

Neither Carver-Hawkeye (1980s) nor the Advanced Technologies Lab (1990s) was named one of the top five in its decade. UI officials, however, are honored to have two buildings on campus named among the top 50 buildings of the century.

"These are two of many buildings that we are proud of," said Rod Lehnertz, the director of Campus and Facilities Planning. "While we are happy those were part of the list, there are many other UI buildings we feel are of quality design."

Designed by Caudill Rowlett Scott Architects & Durrant, Carver-Hawkeye was completed in 1983. Since then, the building has served as home for the men's and women's basketball teams, as well as some wrestling, volleyball, and gymnastics events.

"The Carver-Hawkeye Arena has always been celebrated as a top quality project," said

Lehnertz, saying the arena was built with the support beams above and outside the roof, which keeps it from having to use as much heat. "It is an innovative use of land and natural energies."

The Advanced Technologies Lab, perhaps better known (if somewhat inaccurately) as the Laser Center, was built in 1992 by Frank O. Gehry & Associates and Herbert Lewis Kruse Blunck Architecture. It is used by the College of Engineering and Department of Chemistry and was the first of its kind.

"Frank Gehry is as renowned an architect as there is today, and having him build on campus was great," Lehnertz said. "This building was one of the first that he had done of this style. It marked a change in his architectural design."

In honor of the buildings, a photographic exhibit of the top 50 buildings will travel through Iowa. Accompanying the exhibit will be a 112-page catalogue of the display.

Gonzales nomination moves ahead despite opposition

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate Judiciary Committee divided along partisan lines advanced Alberto Gonzales' nomination as attorney general to the full Senate Wednesday despite Democratic complaints that he is too close to President Bush to be effective as the nation's top law-enforcement official.

"It's hard to be a straight shooter when you're a blind loyalist," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y.

Republicans muscled Gonzales' nomination through the panel on a 10-8 party line vote and are expected to use their 55-44 advantage to confirm him there next week at the earliest.

Bush had urged lawmakers earlier Wednesday to "promptly act and confirm Judge Al Gonzales. He'll be a great attorney general."

"The political theater, delays, and attempts to obstruct this outstanding nomination are now one step away from their rightful conclusion: an up-or-down vote on the Senate floor," said Sen. John Cornyn, R-Texas, after the committee vote.

The party-line vote for Gonzales mirrored the vote four years ago for current Attorney General John Ashcroft, who is still a lightning rod for Democratic criticism. "Even voting against him [Gonzales], he's a significant improvement over the attorney general we have there now," said Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del.

Regents nearly ready on M.B.A. tuition proposal

The state Board of Regents is expected to complete work on a 14 percent tuition increase for students in the UI Master's of Business Administration program during its monthly meeting next week.

The nine-member board asked the university to consider applying the same percentage increase for all students regardless of residency in November.

The original proposal had called for an 11.8 percent increase in resident tuition for M.B.A. students and an 18.3 percent hike for their non-resident counterparts.

Under the new proposal, resident students would pay an extra $1,470, and nonresidents would dole out an additional $2,698 during the next academic year, according to the regent's docket released Wednesday.

Last month, regents approved a roughly 4 percent tuition increase that also asks for a $40 million supplement annually for four years from the state Legislature. The plan is pending approval by state lawmakers.

Ex-gymnast pleads guilty in porn case

A former Hawkeye gymnast pleaded guilty Monday to charges of sexual exploitation of a minor after downloading child-pornography images in 2003.

Paul Francis Summers, 24, was arrested April 16, 2004, after admitting to police officers he had downloaded some child-pornography images when he lived in Hillcrest Residence Hall the year before.

Officers found approximately 20 images of a male minor either posing in the nude or simulating sex acts that the three-time Iowa letter-winner downloaded in May 2003.

According to court records, Victoria Cole, the prosecuting attorney, recommended that Summers receive a suspended sentence, meaning he will not serve any jail time if he completes a psychosexual evaluation and treatment.

Summers, a Broken Arrow, Okla., native, requested a deferred judgment.

When reached by telephone Wednesday afternoon, Summers said he had no comment.

Bush asks for patience from Americans on Iraq

Ron Edmonds/Associated Press

President Bush tells reporters on Wednesday that he is leading the nation toward an honorable goal in Iraq and across the world during a press conference in the White House press room.

The American death toll in Iraq is above 1,400, and the war is costing taxpayers more than $1 billion per week

BY TERENCE HUNT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush pleaded for Americans' patience Wednesday on what he conceded was "a very discouraging day" of death and violence for U.S. troops in Iraq. He urged Iraqis to defy terrorist threats and vote in Sunday's elections. Bush held a White House news conference hours after more than 30 American troops perished in a helicopter crash in western Iraq and insurgents killed five others in the deadliest day yet for U.S. forces. The deaths pushed the American toll above 1,400.

Unwavering in the course he has set, Bush pledged: "We'll have the troop levels necessary to complete the mission. And that mission is to enable Iraq to defend herself from terrorists — homegrown or terrorists that come in from outside of the country." He made it clear that Iraq is nowhere near ready to handle its own security, and he talked about U.S. involvement over the next year.

Four days before Iraq's elections and a week before his own State of the Union address, the president grappled with pointed questions about the war's heavy price and growing doubts that a stable, democratic Iraq will ever emerge. In money alone, Iraq is costing taxpayers more than $1 billion a week.

Democrats registered their unhappiness with Bush's handling of Iraq in the Senate's 85-13 vote to confirm Condoleezza Rice as secretary of State. It was the strongest negative vote against a secretary of State at least since World War II.

Bush said Americans are not alone in their qualms. Iraqis are "losing a lot of people" in bombings and assassinations, he said, and "some are feeling intimidated" about threats against voters. Moreover, Bush said: "The Iraqi people are wondering whether or not this nation has the will necessary to stand with them as a democracy evolves."

Irv "Gotti" McGriff, founder of the hip-hop music label Murder Inc., is being charged with drug dealing, racketeering, and three murders

Gangster rap keeps it real in NYC

BY MICHAEL WEISSENSTEIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — In an industry built on tough talk, the hip-hop label Murder Inc. made hundreds of millions of dollars as it blurred the line between the studio and the street.

Founder Irv "Gotti" Lorenzo named his company after a crime syndicate. He borrowed his nickname from a Mafia don. And the impresario behind platinum-selling superstars Ja Rule and Ashanti made no secret of his friendship with one of New York's most notorious drug lords.

Prosecutors charged Wednesday that the criminal image was all too real. Gotti was led from the FBI's Manhattan office in handcuffs as he was charged with laundering more than $1 million in drug profits from Kenneth "Supreme" McGriff's multistate crack and heroin operation.

"They don't call it gangster rap for nothing," said Frederick Snellings, special agent in charge of the FBI's New York criminal division. "It's pretty clear that the image isn't accidental."

McGriff, already in prison on a gun violation, was charged with drug dealing, racketeering, and three murders.

Federal prosecutors said Gotti, his brother and business partner, Chris Lorenzo, and their associates accepted frequent deliveries of McGriff's drug cash at their Manhattan offices. In exchange, Gotti cut McGriff more than $280,000 in business and personal checks and paid for tens of thousands of dollars worth of his travel and hotel costs, prosecutors charge.

Recording in a studio dubbed "The Crackhouse," Murder Inc. has sold approximately 20 million records behind Ja Rule and Ashanti, who were not charged in the indictment. Ja Rule's current album, R.U.L.E., peaked at No. 7 on the Billboard chart. Ashanti is appearing in the movie Coach Carter, which debuted atop the box office list two weeks ago.

The company, owned partly by Def Jam, a subsidiary of Universal Music, has made approximately $200 million since it was founded in 1997, according to a source familiar with its operations who insisted upon anonymity.

Ja Rule's manager and at least seven other Gotti and McGriff associates also have been charged in the case.

Gotti and his brother were released on $1 million bonds Wednesday afternoon after pleading not guilty in federal court in Brooklyn. Gotti's lawyer, Gerald Lefcourt, said the brothers had been unfairly targeted for trying to help a respected figure from the rough Queens neighborhood where they grew up.

"I grew up poor from the streets, so I have friends, whatever, like that. So I don't look bad at them for thinking ill things about me," Gotti said as he left court. "No way, in any way, shape, or form have I done anything wrong, except make great music that the people seem to love, and that's all that I'm guilty of."

McGriff, 45, was founder of the Supreme Team, once one of the city's most violent drug crews. Investigators charged Wednesday that he revived his lucrative — and deadly — drug operation after he finished serving about nine years for drug conspiracy in 1997.

McGriff's lawyer, Robert Simels, said his client told him from prison Wednesday that "it's a shame that people who tried to help him in a legitimate way are involved in defending themselves in a criminal case."

Spacewalking astronauts find mystery goo

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Leaving the international space station unattended while they stepped outside, the two crewmen hooked up a robotic arm Wednesday and found some kind of gunk on the spacecraft's vents that might explain the frequent breakdowns in its air-supply equipment.

Spacewalkers Leroy Chiao and Salizhan Sharipov did not make all of the electrical connections on the experimental mini-arm tight enough and had to redo part of the job, but they managed to get full power flowing with just minutes remaining in their 5½-hour outing.

"Everything's perfect," Mission Control radioed.

"Well, thank God, thank God," came the reply. Before going back inside, they were advised: "Take a breather."

During their 225-mile-high excursion, the spacewalkers also inspected the station's vents and found a large patch of dark, oily residue and a white, honeycombed substance. It was not immediately known what the substances were.

The space station's Russian oxygen generator has broken down repeatedly, and engineers have speculated its vent might be clogged or corroded. The air-cleansing equipment also has a history of malfunctions.

In Baghdad, Gen. George Casey, the commander of U.S. troops in Iraq, told reporters in Baghdad that U.S. and Iraqi forces were making gains against the insurgency, estimating that 15,000 militants had been killed or captured in the previous 12 months.

The pace of violence increased Wednesday in advance of Sunday's parliamentary elections. Insurgents attacked offices of political parties, destroyed schools that were to be used as polling places, and set off bombs in several parts of the country. Eleven Iraqis died in attacks and two insurgents died when their car bomb exploded prematurely, the Associated Press reported.

"There probably are more of them," the diplomat said. "The number of attacks would suggest there's somewhat more, but not a lot more."

The diplomat said the election will serve as a test of the insurgents' capacity because they have repeatedly vowed to disrupt the balloting. "If they had any more to give, in terms of volume, they'd give it now."

The Partnership for Transformation and Excellence Plan, which is being reviewed by the state Legislature, could provide as much as $40 million for each state university through a matching funds system. In addition, Parrott said, the universities would agree to keep tuition increases close to the rate of inflation, which is near 4 percent.

Parrott said he is optimistic about the plan's chances for approval.

"It seems to have gotten a good reception," he said. "We're keeping our fingers crossed."

Meanwhile, UI departments are finding ways to meet the budget cuts through a combination of reducing costs and consolidating services.

Steve Fleagle, the interim assistant vice president for Information Technology, said the department, which is facing $275,000 in reductions, will discontinue the student computer loan program, which dates to 1986.

"It's been a good program, but since then, there have been a large number of alternatives," including loan options through banks, computer vendors, and retailers, he said.

The number of UI computer loans has dropped from 900 per year in the program's early years to 400 per year recently.

He attributed the drop to more students bringing computers to campus as well as the large number of computer labs available.

Facilities Management utilities director Glen Mowery said his department plans to increase energy-consumption awareness and improve energy efficiency in university buildings.

The department will begin efficiency improvement by fixing obvious problems, such as keeping air conditioning off in a building when it isn't in use.

"We're going after the low-hanging fruit first," Mowery said.

He added that further building improvements would focus on long-term savings over the next 20 years. "We're in this for the long term," he said.

Despite having the largest funding cuts at $500,000, he said, the numbers were "absolutely" attainable.

Schools take aim at grade inflation

GRADE INFLATION

Beginning this academic year, Princeton University implemented a curve designed to keep grade inflation in check. The new university-wide curve allows a maximum of 35 percent of students to receive A's in each course.

The UI is concerned about grade inflation—the Tippie College of Business adopted new grading guidelines in spring 2003—but Lopes doubted whether the entire university would adopt a measure as strict as Princeton's.

"[The Princeton regulation] would cause conflicts that don't need to be there," she said. "Will Princeton see students not helping other students?"

In the fall of 1995, the average UI undergraduate GPA was 2.814. By the fall of 2004, that average had risen to 2.957. During the same period, Lopes said, standardized test scores basically remained the same.

Because employers recognize grade inflation, she said, experience is more of a priority when making hiring decisions.

"It gets so it doesn't mean very much to get an A if everyone is getting them," Lopes said. "We want your GPA to mean something."

The business school's grading guidelines for undergraduates give A's to 20 percent of students in core courses, 30 percent in required courses, and 40 percent in electives. The curve is only recommended, except in the finance department, where it is required.

Nancy Hauserman, the business school's associate dean for the undergraduate program, said she does not get the sense that students are more competitive with one another under the new guidelines. One of the main issues students have is when they receive around 80 percent of points but only receive a C when they think they deserve a B, she said.

"I remind them that at least 70 percent of the class scored higher than they did," Hauserman said.

Among students, there is still a misconception that a grade is automatically based on a percentage of points, she said. Rather, the emphasis is on how students perform compared with their peers—and professors use individual discretion.

"Several of us who teach the large classes that students take before they enter the business school are considering not using the guidelines because we think there are too many A's under the guidelines," Hauserman said.

Man charged after fight with deputy

A man who injured a sheriff's deputy while fleeing the Johnson County Courthouse Tuesday morning turned himself in to the Johnson County Jail on Wednesday night.

Barry M. White was booked on charges of forgery, interference causing injury, and escape from custody, according to a press release from the Johnson County Sheriff's Office.

White entered the courthouse Tuesday to obtain court documents, but workers discovered there was a warrant out for his arrest, according to the Associated Press.

Sheriff's Deputy Greg Richardson attempted to arrest White, AP reported, but the 20-year-old broke free, injuring Richardson in the process.

White posted a $26,000 surety bond Wednesday night and was released.

Aborted suicide try in LA derails two trains

Adams identified the suspect as Juan Manuel Alvarez, 25, of Compton, adding that he had attempted suicide before.

Alvarez, who was identified by witnesses at the scene, was detained there and appeared to have superficial self-inflicted injuries unrelated to the crash.

Distraught and remorseful, Alvarez told police he had left the vehicle and watched the derailment, Adams said. The suspect was put on a suicide watch.

Alvarez was held on 10 counts of murder, Adams said, although formal charges are lodged by the district attorney's office. Alvarez, who will be 26 on Feb. 26, had previous drug arrests, Adams said.

It is too early to say exactly what those charges will be, District Attorney Steve Cooley said, but they could include multiple counts of murder, with special circumstances based on the number of deaths and nature of the crime. Key to the legal case, Cooley said, "is the intent of the individual when he drove onto the tracks."

1 month after tsunami, people struggle to rebuild their lives

BY TINI TRAN

GALLE, Sri Lanka — Sri Lankans on Wednesday lit candles and chanted prayers for the dead to mark one month since the tsunami, and mourners on a Thai island launched two new fishing boats in a first step toward rebuilding the devastated local fleet. On the hardest-hit Indonesian island of Sumatra, there were no memorials, but children went back to school and the empty desks of dead classmates.

A month after killer waves swept away more than 140,000 lives and ravaged coastlines around the Indian Ocean, survivors quietly remembered the tragedy and carried on with the struggle to rebuild their lives. But behind the public grieving was a deepening sense of frustration at the slow pace of recovery efforts.

"We have not received any assistance yet," read a banner strung between plastic tents housing survivors in Sri Lanka's southern city of Galle.

Candles and multicolored Buddhist flags lined a highway hugging the coast of Sri Lanka, where nearly 31,000 people died and 1 million were displaced by the Dec. 26 tsunami.

Today was the first day of the new school term in Aceh; officials estimate that the tsunami destroyed between 700 to 1,100 schools. The government says around 1,750 primary school teachers are dead or missing.

In Indonesia, where at least 96,000 died, there were no government or religious events to mark the day. Instead, officials said a proper remembrance was to send children back to school for the first official day of class since the tragedy.

Many students in ravaged Aceh province, however, returned to find their schools filled with mud and debris, with books, computers, and other materials strewn everywhere. And many of their friends and teachers were gone forever.

Cheney vows U.S. support for Yushchenko

BY DEB RIECHMANN

KRAKOW, Poland — Vice President Dick Cheney voiced his support Wednesday for Ukraine's new president, and his bright orange tie — symbolic of Viktor Yushchenko's "Orange Revolution" — drove home the message.

Dick Cheney
vice president

"The world has been inspired by the remarkable images emanating from Ukraine in recent months," Cheney said at a cultural center in Krakow, Poland, where the two met during a heavy snowstorm. "We have watched as Ukrainians, by the hundreds of thousands, converged on Kiev's Independence Square to preserve their freedom and safeguard their right to determine the destiny of their nation."

He said the Ukrainian people have shown the world the "unstoppable power of the popular will."

election, faces a delicate juggling act, pushing for democratic reforms and aligning Ukraine with Europe while keeping fruitful relations with Russian President Vladimir Putin.

On Monday, Yushchenko smoothed relations with Putin in Moscow. On Wednesday, he stood side-by-side with Cheney at dual podiums to publicly express mutual support.

Yushchenko mentioned Russia, along with the United States, the European Union, and Poland, as strategic partners, but he and Cheney refrained from saying anything that might have provoked Putin, who will meet with President Bush during his trip to Europe next month.

"We want to pursue the processes of liberalization and democratization in all aspects of life that are so badly needed in Ukraine and other Eastern European nations, shoulder-to-shoulder with our partners," said Yushchenko, his chalky complexion scarred by the near-lethal dose of dioxin he ingested during the campaign.

"After the Orange Revolution, the country and the nation have changed," he said. "Not only do we have an independent country, we have a free country — a country capable of pursuing new, independent, and responsible policy."

Initially, the two leaders were scheduled to have a brief meeting and then eat dinner. But their meeting lasted more than an hour — more than twice as long as scheduled — and they skipped dinner.

Cheney is on a three-day trip to southern Poland to celebrate the 60th anniversary of the liberation of the Nazi death camps at nearby Auschwitz and Birkenau. The vice president's remarks with Yushchenko and, earlier, at a reception with Holocaust survivors echoed President Bush's inauguration day call to overcome tyranny and foster democratic reform across the world.

"We must face down hatred together," Cheney said. "We are dedicated to the task at hand and we will never forget."

On Jan. 27, 1945, Soviet troops liberated the death camps, where between 1 million and 1.5 million prisoners — most of them Jews — perished in gas chambers or died of starvation and disease. In all, 6 million Jews were killed in the Holocaust.

Cell-phone drink specials don't help city's booze problem

Technology has truly revolutionized our society, not least in the world of communications. A hundred years ago, it was touch-and-go whether a telephone would even allow you to talk to someone and be understood. Now, you can carry your phone around in your pocket and use it to play video games, send e-mail, take pictures, manage your stock portfolio, and yes, talk to people. So we suppose it was inevitable that you would be able to use the phone to help get drunk, too.

While we are impressed by the creativity of the two UI students who provide the service whereby cell-phone owners can find the latest drink specials through the magic of wireless Internet, we wonder if they might have been better advised to stick with the cab and delivery numbers that the service also provides.

Certainly, drink specials were not exactly a secret before; the students credit UILife.com, which offers detailed breakdowns of drink specials (as part of a considerable array of information for the student wishing to get drunk) to anyone who can spare two minutes at a computer to find them. And, of course, the bars advertise their specials themselves in The Daily Iowan. This would raise the question of why anyone would need to have the specials available on her or his cell phone in the first place, if our fast-paced society needed any reason besides, "It's easier." To that we simply say, "Open the newspaper for five seconds."

For the nighttime revelers who find themselves downtown with a cell phone but no computer or newspaper, having a selection of drink specials at their fingertips should provide an excellent way for them to maximize their drunkenness while minimizing effort and expense. But this, of course, is the problem: For years now, city councilors have been pushing for an ordinance keeping those under 21 out of bars altogether, citing problems with underage and binge drinking as their reason.

The city's patience may be running out. In 2003, it nearly approved a 21-only ordinance and agreed to a 19-only compromise with the promise of revisiting the issue after a year. This fall, it agreed to put off the issue again, but not permanently. With the clock ticking down and an Alcohol Advisory Board searching for alternative ways of reducing excess, there could be better times to introduce a new way to encourage getting drunk on the cheap.

In fairness, Leah Cohen, the owner of Bo-James, 118 E. Washington St., and co-chairwoman of the Alcohol Advisory Board, told the DI that she was at least conflicted about the idea. (Nonetheless, a day-by-day breakdown of Bo-James' drink specials has found its way onto UILife.com.) Indeed, with no safeguard to prevent underage students — and those of any age who are prone to overindulge — from this new easy access, it hardly seems helpful in reducing excess.

It seems like every week there's news about alcohol. If the City Council can't be convinced that you can successfully reduce underage drinking without going 21, then the city will eventually go 21 — or at least the issue will keep coming up, and we'll have to keep writing about it. We maintain our diehard stance against a 21-only ordinance, but ideas like these appear to be pushing that possibility more toward reality.

COMMENTARY

Finally learning where Pakistan is

AMIRA JADOON

DI editorial writer

'No, Pakistan is certainly not in Iowa.'

"No," I heard myself say in an excruciatingly shrill voice, "Pakistan is certainly not in Iowa."

I sincerely hope that by now, this is not news to anyone.

Before I set off from my home country to conquer the world, figuratively speaking, being privileged enough to go to college in the United States, I received much counseling and advice from my well-wishers. Among many tips was a gentle warning: Answering a jillion questions about my part of the world would be very much a part of my college experience. Not a problem, I thought. I knew Americans were notorious for not knowing much about what went on outside the U.S. periphery. I wouldn't either, I figured, if I lived in a continent of a country.

Nothing could have adequately prepared me for this question. Or perhaps because of my naiveté, I didn't see it coming. It was in my freshman calculus class, when the guy sitting next to me trying to figure out where exactly I was from asked me whether Pakistan was in Iowa.

Later, more frustration came when I flipped through American news channels in my then mold-free Hawkeye Court apartment. After waiting for hours, I'd experience a short-lived moment of ecstasy, seeing a glimpse of international news. By the time I was calm enough to focus, the story was over. I began to wonder if my annoyance with the guy from calculus had been a little unfair.

Months later, something appalling happened — the 9/11 terrorist attacks. It was devastating and heart-rending. Yet I realize now the seeds it cultivated in America as a nation and as individuals. It did more than put the nation in a temporary state of gloom. It was a brutal awakening for the American public and media. It stirred the entire country, but it unexpectedly became a particularly enriching and budding experience for the mass media and college students. The media again knew the essence of international news and its undeniable importance. Suddenly, there was a rush to provide the most extensive coverage of the world outside and America's interaction with it. Suddenly, Americans had to make up for decades worth of news to explain why the attacks happened. People wanted to know why the United States had such venomous enemies who would formulate such an atrocity against America. People outside this country were less surprised. They had been following world's events closely.

As I have grown through my ongoing education here, I have witnessed a profound level of development in the U.S. media and my American peers. The media have abandoned their isolationist policy, and they are keeping the American public informed and active on a global level. Many perceive the media here as bias-ridden or a lie-generating factory. But at least they are delivering a much wider spectrum of topics and issues now than ever before, and there are no restraints on anyone from accessing various media such as the Internet and delving into innumerable alternative views. The real problem is not the bias of the media; the real problem is embedding ignorance in people by overlooking the outside world.

My eyes glimmer and get a little misty and I grin to my mouth's limit when someone now asks me about the current political situation in Pakistan.

Oh joy! They already know where it is!

GUEST OPINION

Driver's licenses necessary for illegal immigrants, too

As UI students and loyal DI readers, we were extremely disappointed with the xenophobic arguments set forth in a staff editorial ("Illegal immigrants obtaining Iowa driver's licenses is just that — illegal," Jan. 24). Besides the tautological reasoning (e.g., see headline) and erratic analogies that pervade the editorial, the conclusion that illegal immigrants should not be allowed to obtain driver's licenses runs counter to the best interests of Iowa and its residents.

In our experience working with immigrant communities in Iowa City, getting a driver's license is a recurring concern of responsible and hardworking families eager to comply with driving standards and to obtain valid identification. Unfortunately, under current Iowa law, it is impossible for them to do so. Further, all Iowa drivers and pedestrians should also be concerned because these families cannot obtain liability-insurance coverage without driver's license. Just like the rest of us, the "legal" people, these "illegal" families depend on driving their cars to work and to take their children to school or to the doctor, among other essential functions. Not driving is simply not an option in the rural state of Iowa, especially for the majority of these families, who live and work in areas far removed from the routes of mass transit.

The substantive purpose of a driver's license is to certify that the licensee has the skills to properly maneuver a motor vehicle in accordance with traffic laws, and to keep a record of the licensee's personal information. It is laughable to suggest that "to grant driver's licenses to illegal immigrants is tantamount to legitimizing their residence in this country and state." Huh?

Hypothetically speaking, an illegal immigrant could have a driver's license from all of the 50 states and the territories, and he or she would nevertheless face the threat of deportation, just like an illegal immigrant without a driver's license. Putting it bluntly, state governments, including that of Iowa, have no jurisdiction whatsoever pertaining to American citizenship, immigration, and deportation.

With regards to terrorism, what could be a simpler way to strengthen national security and reduce fear than to allow illegal immigrants to come out of anonymity and to be voluntarily added to the registry of Iowa drivers? These people are not terrorists except in the eyes of paranoid xenophobes. They come here to do the dirty, lower-than-minimum-wage-paying work for us. Prohibiting them from acquiring a driver's license is not a deterrent to immigration. They have much bigger problems to worry about.

While we do not agree with those who argue that the state's refusal to grant driver's licenses to illegal immigrants raises a serious constitutional issue, it is imperative to correct Iowa's public policy through the legislative process. Such a correction would benefit not just illegal immigrants, but all Iowans.

Equal opportunity

FIRST LADY LAURA BUSH recently announced that in America, we really need to take better care of boys. Her concern arose because a larger percentage of women than men are attending college and receiving bachelor's degrees. Laura Bush wants to stand for equality.

But I think she's missed a few key facts that negate her concern. According to the 2000 census, there are approximately 5.3 million more women than men living in the United States. When you do the math using the exact figures provided by the Census Bureau, you'll find that women should be (if we're keeping it fair) attending college in slightly greater numbers than men (a little more than 1 percent). And they are, at right about 1.3 percent more than men. Seems to me that we are right on track.

One of the Bush-backing examples of concern I came across: "In 1970, there were only 68 women in college for every 100 men. Today, there are almost 130 women for every 100 men enrolled in college" (Myrtle Beach Sun News, Jan. 23). Interesting that in 1970, women made up 5.2 percent more of the population than men, yet their majority status did nothing for them in terms of equal higher education. Thirty-five years ago, this was the status quo. Now that women seem to be making advances, the first lady takes up the cause of protecting the men? Can't we instead just accept a shift in favor of the ladies as either natural, or at the very least, finally leveling the playing field and making up for the past?

Besides, a degree does not guarantee a job, and it certainly does not guarantee one you want or one which your diploma states you could reasonably handle. One of my mentors is a visiting professor at the UI. When her visit is over, she will, hopefully, move on to another university position elsewhere, but more likely, as she has lamented many times, she will be back to waiting tables with her Ph.D. in philosophy doing little to no good when explaining what side dishes come with Chicken Monterey.

Instead of worrying about a bunch of guys, Laura Bush could help us understand why in 2000, when 76.8 percent of women were working outside the home compared with 64 percent in 1980, women shouldn't be going to college in greater numbers. Shouldn't women be preparing for better and possibly higher-paid positions if we are going to help support the economy through our employment more than ever before? After all, Laura has a master's degree that was necessary to her work in the education system. You'd think she'd understand its worth.

Degree-holding women are making some strides in the workplace. But just because companies claim to be promoting women more than ever does not mean we are catching up. A recent study (actually, an entire book — Women Don't Ask, by Linda Babcock and Sara Laschever) examines the way men negotiate salary and notes that they are much more likely to ask for raises and promotions. Women are not as willing to negotiate and ask for what they really want or need because of the environment of the workplace and societal gender norms. The wage gap not only exists because women are not promoted and paid enough, but because women do not feel comfortable and are not encouraged to speak up.

Babcock and Laschever use the example of international accounting and consulting firm Deloitte & Touche to illustrate their point. In 1991, the firm noticed that despite hiring a large number of women since the 1980s, fewer than 10 percent of the company's partners were female. Instead of blaming the women, Deloitte began instituting new policies to equally evaluate women and men and to make both sexes feel comfortable asking for all benefits without penalty (such as requesting time off or company travel opportunities). Today, their number of female partners has nearly tripled.

Education is a foundation for many quality careers — marrying your way to the top is an option if you live in central Texas, I suppose — but for many of us who want to effect change, we want to gain knowledge and have hard facts at our disposal. Too bad Laura Bush didn't consider the hard facts in full before she decided to promote men as the next group in need of assistance. ■

"If America wants the rest of the world to be part of the agenda it has set, it must be part of [the world's] agenda, too."
 — Tony Blair, British prime minister

Blair has sharp words for U.S.

World leaders urge rich nations to contribute billions to fighting AIDS, poverty, and natural disasters

BY ROBERT WIELAARD
 ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAVOS, Switzerland — British Prime Minister Tony Blair said Wednesday the United States must do more to address the concerns of the rest of the world if it expects support for its own policies, and he cited global warming as a prime example.

"If America wants the rest of the world to be part of the agenda it has set, it must be part of [the world's] agenda, too," he told the annual meeting of the World Economic Forum, a gathering of 2,500 world political and business leaders.

Blair and French President Jacques Chirac — who appeared on a video link — both urged the world's richest nations to provide billions of dollars to help developing countries combat AIDS, poverty, and natural disasters.

Blair's unusually sharp comments directed at the United States come at a time of growing public anger in Britain over his support for President Bush in Iraq and months before British general elections.

Referring to one of the key issues dividing the United States from Europe and much of the world, Blair said: "I support the Kyoto Protocol. Others will not ... but business and the global economy need to know this isn't an issue that is going away."

The British leader added, however, that Bush's speech at his second term inauguration last week indicated "there is a wish to reunify" in Washington.

The World Economic Forum has taken on increased importance in recent years as globalization and common threats — from terrorism to increased vulnerability to natural disasters — have made nations more dependent on each other.

Chirac alluded to such interdependence, saying that natural disasters, political unrest, uncontrolled migration, and extremism are "breeding grounds for terrorism."

Blair and Chirac said large-scale assistance for the poor can only make the world a more stable place but outlined different scenarios on how to get there.

Prevented by bad weather from going to Davos, Chirac suggested in his video message from Paris that rich nations raise billions of aid dollars through new taxes and other measures.

Referring to the Dec. 26 tsunami that struck Asia, he added: "The world suffers chronically from what has been strikingly called the 'silent tsunamis.' Famine. Infectious diseases that decimate the life force of entire continents."

Blair said that in Africa, 3,000 children under age 5 die of malaria daily and "6,000 people die each day of AIDS."

Britain wants rich nations to set a timetable for raising development aid and for more countries to join the "International Finance Facility," which is designed to double aid to Africa from $50 billion a year.

Michael Probst/Associated Press

That would help the United Nations' Millennium Development Goals that foresee cutting poverty in half by 2015, boosting the fight against AIDS and educating some 100 million children not now in school.

While Chirac focused largely on global poverty, Blair also touched on terrorism and global warming.

In his first term, Bush worked hard to rally international opinion behind the fight against terrorism — but his administration also abandoned the 1997 Kyoto climate-change agreement, arguing it would hurt American industry.

Blair said the United States and other leading industrialized nations must give a clear signal this year that they are serious about cutting greenhouse gases.

"We need to send a clear signal that whilst we continue to analyze science ... we are united in moving in the direction of greenhouse-gas reductions," he said.

Israelis, Palestinians inch closer to summit

Newly confirmed Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice may join the peace process as well

BY STEVEN GUTKIN
 ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israeli and Palestinian negotiators achieved significant progress Wednesday toward ending violence and resuming peace talks, completing a plan for deploying Palestinian forces in the southern Gaza Strip and aiming for a summit within two weeks between the Israeli and Palestinian leaders.

And there were signals that Condoleezza Rice, the Bush administration's newly confirmed secretary of State, would join the peace process soon.

"She is planning to go to the region," Israeli Foreign Minister Silvan Shalom said after a meeting with Rice on Wednesday.

"I think it will be in a short time," the Israeli official said in an interview with CNN's Wolf Blitzer. "It will be a positive step."

New violence, however, underscored the fragility of the new momentum for peace. A Palestinian preschooler in southern Gaza was killed by Israeli gunfire after militants fired a rocket at Israel. Israeli troops shot a Palestinian militant to death and wounded two others in a West Bank arrest raid.

Approximately 100 Jewish settlers disrupted a meeting between Israeli and Palestinian commanders in southern Gaza, throwing stones and slashing tires of participants' vehicles.

None of this appeared to spoil a new flurry of peace moves offering the prospect of an end to four years of Israeli-Palestinian bloodshed, following the Nov. 11 death of Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat.

A senior aide to Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon and a Palestinian Cabinet minister sat down together to discuss the summit idea and an emerging truce deal — the first high-level diplomatic contact between the two sides in months.

"These talks are promising in all aspects," Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas said.

Palestinians said they expect to take control of five West Bank cities within 10 days, and Israel indicated it would refrain from targeted killings of militants.

After cutting off ties with Palestinians two weeks ago in response to a militant attack in Gaza that killed six Israelis, Israel resumed diplomatic contacts on Wednesday.

Sharon aide Dov Weisglass and Palestinian Cabinet minister Saeb Erekat met for two hours and concurred that their bosses would meet as soon as the two sides agree on an agenda, participants said. Erekat and Weisglass were to meet again next week.

Palestinian official Hassan Abu Libdeh said a summit could be held within two weeks. Sharon spokesman Ranaan Gissin confirmed a summit is planned but said "our main concern is security — that the Palestinians continue to take additional steps to end the violence, terrorism, and incitement."

Palestinians want the agenda to focus on other issues, such as the release of Palestinian prisoners and stopping Israel's construction of the separation barrier in the West Bank.

Speaking in the West Bank city of Ramallah, Abbas said the Palestinians asked the Israelis to release "an initial group of prisoners, and we asked that the release be in coordination with us."

Jamal Lewis

SENTENCED

Ravens RB Lewis gets 4 months in drug case

ATLANTA (AP) — Baltimore Ravens running back Jamal Lewis was sentenced to four months in prison Wednesday for using a cell phone to try to set up a drug deal about 4½ years ago.

The sentence issued in federal court was what Lewis expected under an agreement reached with prosecutors in October.

Lewis, who tried to set up the deal a few months after he was the No. 5 overall pick in the 2000 NFL draft, also will spend two months in a halfway house and perform 500 hours of community service following his prison term.

Prosecutors agreed to drop more serious drug conspiracy and attempted cocaine possession charges.

FIRST LOSS

Duke suffers first loss to Maryland

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — For once, Duke ran out of magic, leaving only two unbeaten teams in Division I.

Nik Caner-Medley had 25 points before leaving with an ankle injury, and his Maryland teammates finished off the second-ranked Blue Devils at the free-throw line in a 75-66 victory Wednesday night.

The Terrapins (12-5, 3-3 Atlantic Coast Conference) had lost three of their previous five games, all by at least 15 points. But they hung with Duke (15-1, 5-1) throughout and completed the improbable victory by allowing only two points in the final 3½ minutes.

Ekene Ibekwe gave Maryland the lead for good with a tough lay-up in traffic off an inbounds play, set up during a timeout by coach Gary Williams. That made it 66-64 with 1:23 left, and the Blue Devils had no answer.

Daniel Ewing missed badly on a 3-pointer, and Travis Garrison started a parade at the line for the Terps. He was 5-for-6 in the final minute and Ibekwe was 4-for-4 to close it out.

PAYOFF

Former H.S. coach says he took payoffs

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A former high school coach told a federal jury Wednesday that he got offers of money, a job, and free law school for his wife before he accepted a $150,000 payoff to steer his best player to sign with Alabama.

Lynn Lang, the former head coach at Trezevant High School, testified for the second day at the trial of Logan Young, a Memphis millionaire who is on trial on federal bribery and money laundering charges.

Lang is awaiting sentencing on a guilty plea to racketeering conspiracy. He said he took the money to convince defensive lineman Albert Means to sign with the Crimson Tide in 2000.

In testimony Tuesday in U.S. District Court, Lang said that coaches at two other Southeastern Conference schools, Kentucky and Georgia, gave him money.

NORTHWESTERN 75, NO. 23 IOWA 74, OVERTIME

WHAT A DISAPPOINTMENT

Northwestern's Michael Jenkins is hoisted up by teammates and fans after hitting a last-second 3-pointer to give Northwestern a 75-74 overtime victory over Iowa on Wednesday in Evanston, Ill.

BY RICK GANO
 ASSOCIATED PRESS

EVANSTON, Ill. — Michael Jenkins' 3-pointer at the overtime buzzer hit the rim, bounced high and fell through and gave Northwestern a stunning 75-74 victory over No. 23 Iowa on Wednesday night.

Northwestern's players and fans raced to the floor to mob Jenkins, a senior walk-on, following the dramatic victory that saw the Wildcats rally from 11 down with six minutes to go in regulation.

Vedran Vukusic, who was doubtful to start because of a sore shoulder, scored a career-high 32 points for Northwestern, including 13 in the final 2 minutes of regulation to spark the Wildcats' remarkable comeback that ended a four-game losing streak.

Greg Brunner had a career-high 28 points for Iowa (14-5, 2-4) in the Hawkeyes' second crushing defeat in three games. Six days ago, they lost in overtime to top-ranked Illinois.

Jeff Horner's 3-pointer put Iowa up 71-68 in overtime and Pierre Pierce's jumper gave the Hawkeyes a five-point cushion before Vukusic had two free throws and a lay-up to make it 73-72.

Brunner made one of two free throws and then Horner missed twice at the line, giving the Wildcats another chance with 18 seconds to go.

After a timeout with 10.6 second left, Northwestern's T.J. Parker turned it over with a bad pass, only to get the ball back when the Hawkeyes lost it on the inbounds play. Following two timeouts with 2.7 seconds left, the 5-9 Jenkins took an inbounds pass in the corner and his high-arching shot finally fell through.

Vukusic sent the game to overtime when he hit three-straight free throws after being fouled by Pierce on a 3-point attempt with 13.8 seconds left in regulation.

Pierce's jumper just before the buzzer went off the rim, forcing overtime.

After going six minutes without a field goal, Northwestern (9-9, 2-4) trailed by 11 with 6 minutes to play before Vukusic hit two 3-pointers, two lay-ups and the three free throws to rescue the Wildcats.

IOWA (14-4, 3-4) VS. MICHIGAN (5-13, 1-6)

TONIGHT, AT CARVER-HAWKEYE ARENA, 7:05 P.M.

FINAL STRETCH BEGINS

BY RYAN LONG
 THE DAILY IOWAN

The most crucial point of the season begins tonight.

The Iowa women's basketball team is unranked for the first time since week four, and it has lost four of its last five games. The Hawkeyes (14-4, 3-4) will look to improve their conference record to .500 against Michigan (5-13, 1-6) as the second half of Big Ten play approaches.

Iowa coach Lisa Bluder said tonight's game is a good stepping-stone to the Hawkeyes' final stretch of conference play.

Although Michigan's record appears to be subpar, she sees the matchup as being similar to the Hawkeyes' 81-76 victory over Northwestern on Jan. 16.

"Michigan is a team that makes me a little bit nervous because it seems to me much like the Northwestern game," Bluder said. "[Michigan is] coming in with not an impressive record. But it's coming in here off its first conference win."

The victory that Bluder speaks of was a home game against Indiana on Jan. 23. The Wolverines won, 63-61, led by senior power forward Tabitha Pool — who had game highs in both points (21) and rebounds (nine). She comes in averaging 16.7 points which ranks sixth in the Big Ten, and she ranks third in rebounds with nine per game. The Ann Arbor, Mich., native possesses a very balanced style of play, Bluder said.

"She's a special player," she said. "She's a player who can shoot well from the outside and the inside."

The Wolverines will also feature some youth in freshman center Ta'Shia Walker and freshman shooting guard Jessica Starling. Starling is shooting just over 40 percent since Big Ten play began, while Walker ranks No. 17 in scoring in conference action with 13.5 points per game.

Bluder will turn to center Jamie Cavey to slow down the talented Walker. Cavey, who passed the 1,000-point milestone in her career, will have to continue her leadership role against the Wolverines.

"She's playing incredibly well. She's so accurate inside, her shooting percentage is wonderful, her rebounding has increased since last year," Bluder said.

"I'm just really proud of Jamie and the effort that she's giving us because I think she's just a rock for us right now."

Cavey believes that tonight's game and the Hawks' final nine regular-season games will be the key for the team in meeting its goal of an NCAA Tournament berth.

"The end is when you make sure you don't plateau," she said.

Eagles trainer says Owens plans to try to play

The All-Pro receiver has received doctor's advice against playing

PHILADELPHIA — Terrell Owens is treating his doctor's orders the way he deals with pesky cornerbacks: shrugging them off and forging ahead.

Philadelphia Eagles head trainer Rick Burkholder said Wednesday that Owens started jogging and plans to continue rehabbing his injured ankle in an attempt to play in the Super Bowl.

Dr. Mark Myerson, the surgeon who operated on the All-Pro receiver in December, said Tuesday he would not clear Owens to suit up against the New England Patriots on Feb. 6.

"We understand Dr. Myerson's point of view. It's just that our risk-reward is different than his risk-reward," Burkholder said.

"He has great risk in clearing Terrell to play and no reward. We think there's some risk and we think there's great reward, so right now we're going to progress with his rehab."

The final decision on Owens' status will come down to the player, coach Andy Reid and the team's medical staff.

"We're never going to put Terrell at risk," Reid said.

Owens was at the Eagles' practice facility for rehab work Wednesday, but the team said he wouldn't be made

POINT/COUNTERPOINT

Will the Bulls win home-court for the first round?

Playoffs!
 That's right, Jim Mora Sr., I'm talking about playoffs. However, these post-regulation-season events concern the NBA and the Chicago Bulls. This season's youthful Bulls will not only make the NBA playoffs but will also earn the home-court advantage in the first round of action. This talented squad, which is the youngest in the NBA, has a 21-19 record, the sixth best in the Eastern Conference.

The Bulls have also proven that they are one of the deepest teams in the entire league. With an eight-man rotation on a nightly basis, the they boast tremendous leadership for a team that is generally inexperienced. Fourth-year big men Eddy Curry and Tyson Chandler are having their most productive seasons yet. Chandler is tied for 10th in the NBA with the Houston Rocket's Yao Ming in blocks per game with 1.85. He's also No. 17 in total rebounds per game with 9.2. Curry is averaging a 15.8 points and has shown a tremendous amount of heart in the low post.

As far as the rookies go, we're looking at four potential players who could earn spots in the rookie game at the All-Star weekend. Ben Gordon has been dropping 13.1 points, Luol Deng has been incredibly complete, Andres Nocioni has been a solid role player with a "Charlie Hustle" type of game, and Chris Duhon has shown a solid amount of poise.

However, of all the youngsters on the Bulls, the most important player to this team has been point guard Kirk Hinrich. The second-year player is averaging 16.2 points, 1.58 steals, and 7.1 assists, and he is shooting nearly 35 percent from the arc. Defense has been the theme all season long. The Bulls held 27-straight teams under 100 points until they let up 107 against the Denver Nuggets on Tuesday. They are also No. 1 in the NBA by holding opponents to a total of 40.8 percent shooting per game.

— by Ryan Long

Until a little after 9 p.m. Monday, the Bulls hadn't been over .500 this late in the season since the 1997-98 campaign.

The last time the Bulls mattered past the NFL playoffs, "Jump Jive An' Wail" topped the Billboard charts, and the four fresh faces of N'Sync were blowing up.

Michael Jordan's timely butt-tap on Byron Russell's posterior is the last, best, worst memory for a demoralized fanbase.

Six years and a few Jerry Krause decisions later, the Bulls have been nothing but a historic team with a dismal future. However, in a less-than-formidable Eastern Conference, and rookie Ben Gordon playing the role of Mariano Rivera late in games, the Bulls seem to have a formula for success — one that begins and ends with defense.

The Bulls are league leaders in field-goal percentage against, holding teams to 40.8 percent.

However, let's not sound the horns yet. Yes, Eddy Curry has been consistent, and yes, Kirk Hinrich has stepped up, but this team isn't going anywhere. They have a less-than-flashy point guard in Chris Duhon, whose game is as dry as Dennis Miller's humor. And another starter, Antonio Davis, has an ancient body to go along with his ancient game.

If they finish with a better record than the Atlantic Division winner, which almost certainly will have the worst record of conference champions, the Bulls would have home-court advantage in the first round if they met an Atlantic team. But I still feel it's a long-shot.

The schedule lately hasn't been a grinding 10-day, eight-game road trip through the Texas triangle. Home-and-home games with the Hawks and Knicks have made the Bulls look real good. Their only real test was against the reigning champion Pistons, who have struggled to regain their identity this season.

The Bulls are young, untested, and definitely have holes. However, the United Center has once again become home to a winning team, and that for now is good enough.

Cowher: QB exaggerated about broken toes

BY ALAN ROBINSON
 ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBURGH — Rookie quarterback Ben Roethlisberger was exaggerating when he said he broke two toes on his right foot during the AFC championship game, Pittsburgh Steelers coach Bill Cowher said on Wednesday.

Roethlisberger told reporters on Tuesday he wore down physically during the lengthy NFL season and broke two toes while scrambling late in the first half of the 41-27 loss to the New England Patriots.

Cowher seemed irritated Roethlisberger would go public with such a claim, that, in effect, suggested the Steelers gambled with the health of the NFL Offensive Rookie of the Year by playing him when he was hurt.

"We are unaware of any problems with his toes, OK?" Cowher said.

Roethlisberger didn't specify which toes were broken and wasn't walking with an apparent limp Monday or Tuesday.

"Ben does not have broken toes," Cowher said, talking publicly for the first time since Sunday night, when the Steelers lost an AFC title game for the fourth time in 11 seasons. "At the end of the first half, while scrambling, he aggravated some toes he has broken in the past, in high school and college. He mentioned something to Ryan Grove, our assistant trainer, and said he may have broke his toe. When he came off, he said he was fine, and he went back out in the second half and didn't say anything to anybody else for the rest of the game."

Cowher said the injury was

NFL COMMENTARY

Is there a doctor in the house who will tell T.O., 'No'?

BY JIM LITKE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

The reason an athlete visits an orthopedic surgeon as opposed to a faith healer should be evident: You can't always count on divine intervention.

And so while it was uplifting to hear Terrell Owens say, "Spiritually, God is healing me, and I'm way ahead of where a lot of people expect me to be," it's a good thing he bothered to get a second opinion. Even if it wasn't the one he wanted, it was the one Owens needed.

A month ago, Dr. Mark Myerson needed two screws and a plate to put Owens' right ankle back together. After Tuesday's weekly checkup, Myerson said he was pleased with his patient's recuperation, but he still refused to clear him to play in the Super Bowl.

Myerson reasoned it takes eight to 10 weeks to recover from the surgery; when the Eagles and Patriots meet Feb. 6, Owens will have been on the mend and rehabbing for about 6 1/2. Still, the team's doctors and trainers apparently have the final say. If they green-light Owens for the Super Bowl, the only place any of them should be allowed to operate an X-ray machine is at an airport.

It's easy to understand the temptation on all sides, of course. Games that mean as much to a player as the Super Bowl only come along every so often, and pro football careers are notoriously short and risky to begin with. On top of that, the most inspirational moments in sports are about guys playing with pain that makes you wince just reading about it.

The hands-down winner in the category is Muhammad Ali going all 12 rounds against Ken Norton in 1973 after his jaw was busted by a punch in the second.

Myerson's decision absolves the doctor of any blame should Owens re-injure the ankle — or worse. But more likely, Myerson made it knowing the sheer number of disastrous outcomes are what make the rare successes so memorable.

What's that smell? Jacksonville

BY TONY KORNHEISER
WASHINGTON POST

Right after Chad Lewis caught that touchdown pass with about four minutes to go, the touchdown that cemented the victory and ensured the Philadelphia Eagles would be in the Super Bowl, some guy in the stands joyfully held up a sign that said, "We're Going To Jacksonville."

And I thought: What on earth is second prize? You have to build there?

How did Jacksonville get the Super Bowl? What, Tuscaloosa was booked?

If going to Jacksonville for a week is the reward New England and Philadelphia get for being the best teams in the NFL this year, Peyton Manning ought to be happy he didn't get there. Imagine how Manning would have felt, having to play all year in Indianapolis and then landing in Jacksonville? Which gods would he have offended to get that killer quinella?

The NFL must see itself as handing out some sort of charity when it awards the Super Bowl to any place other than New Orleans, Miami, and Southern California. Because, believe me, nobody wants the game to be anywhere but there. So when the NFL insists on putting it in such outposts as Detroit, Houston, or Minneapolis, people ask, "Are you guys nuts?" But when you pick Jacksonville, people are agape and say, "Who in Jacksonville has a photo of Tagliabue with a goat?"

At least these other places are big cities, with some history and a longtime affiliation with the NFL, as opposed to Jacksonville, which has now been in the league for about 15 minutes. Detroit is where American cars are made and where Motown music originated. Minneapolis-St. Paul is the home of 3M and General Mills. Houston is the home of NASA and, thanks to Enron, the gold standard in white-collar corporate crime. Jacksonville is what? (I'm just taking a shot here, Tony, a dump? No. Cut that out. It's a 'Ville! The only good 'Ville is a Coupe de Ville.)

Have you ever been to Tampa? It's heaven, if you like Waffle Houses.

Jacksonville makes Tampa look like Paris!

Jacksonville has this one great thing, the TPC course with the island green on No. 17. (Which is actually in Ponte Vedra.) And the rest of it can be described with this phrase, "Welcome to Hooters."

People in Jacksonville will be very upset with this piece. They will say it's a cheap shot by an effete Northerner who didn't want to be the 28th person on his own paper to write about how great, and smart, and handsome Tom Brady is. (Which is true, but come on, we kid because we love.) They will yell and scream that their city is hardly a backwater — it's the 14th-largest city by population in the country! Yes, and that's because it's the largest city by area by far. It's an octopus. It's 840 square miles! It takes in almost all of northeast Florida. If Jacksonville annexes all of southern Georgia, it could maybe crack the population top 10.

The NFL will tell you Jacksonville is a warm-weather site because it's in Florida. But Jacksonville is barely in Florida. It gets cold in Jacksonville. Tuesday morning, the low was 31 degrees. That's below freezing, boys and girls. That's cold enough that you need to keep the space heater turned on in the double-wide.

And Jacksonville is 20 miles from the beach. Jacksonville is one of the smallest and most remote stops in the NFL. Green Bay is smaller and more remote. But Green Bay has Lombardi, Starr, Favre, and the frozen tundra. Jacksonville has a Dairy Queen.

Jacksonville may be in Florida technically. But this isn't South Beach, gang. It isn't the home of Gloria Estefan, Enrique Iglesias, and Luther Campbell. Jacksonville is where Pat Boone was born (sometime around the Martin Van Buren presidency), and where the Southern hair band .38 Special got together.

Somehow, it doesn't sound like hip-hop. It's more like I-Hop.

Get used to it, brothers and sisters, Freeman wrote, this is what they're all going to do.

Brady, table for five. Brady, table for five. Welcome to Applebee's. Eatin' good. In the neighborhood.

Yikes!

ARENA FOOTBALL

Former ferocious linebacker ready to coach

BY RUSTY MILLER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Chris Spielman was known for his ferocity during an 11-year NFL career. As an All-American at Ohio State, he said his goal was to see a ball carrier's eyes roll back in his head.

Spielman new coach of the Columbus Destroyers

Things have changed for Spielman as he approaches his first game as coach of the Arena Football League's Columbus Destroyers on Friday night.

He's still intense. But he no longer is the fire-breathing linebacker who led the Detroit Lions in tackles seven years in a row.

Spielman, who will turn 40 in October, has been mellowed by the years, by his four kids, by his time away from the game, and particularly by wife Stefanie's ongoing battle with breast cancer.

"I've been a humbled man. I've been humbled so much, and I probably needed humbling," he said, surrounded by the grunts and groans of football players at work. "This is fun, and this is challenging, but I will not let it define me anymore, like it used to."

He grew up in Massillon, a rust-belt city where nurses used to place a miniature football next to babies right after the newborns were first put in their cribs.

The son of a coach, he was weaned on the game. When he and his friends couldn't get on a field, they played on tennis courts, leading to skinned knees and elbows. In the winter, they laced on ice skates and played football on frozen ponds. Spielman learned early that you wanted to avoid falling down or you might catch a skate in the back.

He was a hero in his football-crazy town, even appearing on a Wheaties box in his Massillon uniform.

From there he moved on to Ohio State, where it didn't take long for coach Earle Bruce to get a true glimpse of the tightly wound Spielman. Bruce was on the sideline during a game and could sense someone behind him pacing back and forth. He turned to see Spielman, fighting an injury, almost shouting to himself: "Why doesn't he let me go in? I can play! I'm not hurt!"

Despite a glittering college career, Spielman's name wasn't called until the second round of the 1988 draft. But he made an impact almost immediately for the Lions, bouncing around the field like a pinball to make tackles.

He was adored by fans for decking offensive players and for his toughness. He played in 114 games in a row until his streak ended in 1997. A neck injury eventually ended his career after two years with the Buffalo Bills and another with the Cleveland Browns.

In 1999, Stefanie Spielman was diagnosed with breast cancer. When she lost her hair because of chemotherapy, Chris Spielman shaved his head so she wouldn't be alone. The cancer went into remission, but it has returned twice. She is going through treatments again.

"She's a warrior," her husband said softly. "She's really a warrior." The Spielmans have raised $2.6 million for cancer research and prevention. They appear at fund-raisers, in print ads, and on television seeking donations. Their fight has been embraced by many who recognize Stefanie Spielman's toughness as much as her husband's.

"It's been on his mind since the day they found out, and it'll probably be on his mind until eternity," said Jim Lachey, a former teammate at Ohio State who also went on to a solid NFL career.

"It's a terrible disease, and unfortunately, there are too many families in the world that have to deal with this, and the Spielmans are one of them. I commend him."

NORTHWESTERN 75, NO. 23 IOWA 74, OVERTIME

Hawks fall to Wildcats

LOSS

Pierce added 15 points for the Hawkeyes, who were hurt by shaky free-throw shooting in the second half and overtime when they made just 15 of 26.

As Northwestern went six minutes without a field goal, a basket by Doug Thomas and two free throws by Pierce pushed the lead to 56-47 with 7:44 left.

Pierce then hit a floater from the baseline, and the Hawkeyes had an 11-point lead with just over six minutes to play.

Northwestern got to 62-58 when Vukusic hit a 3-pointer and then made a lay-up with 1:11 to go after Iowa was called for a lane violation on a free throw.

Brunner made his first six shots and scored 12-straight Iowa points in the first half, finishing with 14. Iowa led, 32-29, at the break.

Hawkeyes need to stay positive

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

"We don't want to plateau; we don't want to get worse at any point. Many teams will do that right now. We have to make sure that we keep getting better and better. And we can do that."

Guard Jenna Armstrong said that in order to make Iowa's tournament dream a reality, the Hawkeyes need to use their 13-0 start as something to build on the rest of the way.

"I think in the long run, if we just keep positive and think back to the ways that we won those games in the past, I think that we'll be fine," she said.

Bluder realizes the importance of this regular-season stretch as well.

"We did a great job in the nonconference season, making a good claim for a NCAA Tournament [spot], but we've got to finish it up now," she said. "I think they will take six teams from the Big Ten. I really think that's a strong possibility, and we've got to make sure we're in one of those top six spots to end the Big Ten season."

Final decision to play is up to Owens

"He has great risk in clearing Terrell to play and no reward. We think there's some risk and we think there's great reward, so right now we're going to progress with his rehab."

The final decision on Owens' status will come down to the player, coach Andy Reid and the team's medical staff.

"We're never going to put Terrell at risk," Reid said.

Owens was at the Eagles' practice facility for rehab work Wednesday, but the team said he wouldn't be made available to reporters until next week's mandatory media day at the Super Bowl.

On Monday, before hearing Myerson's bad news, Owens said: "Spiritually I've been healed and I believe that I'll be out there on that field Sunday, regardless of what anybody says."

Myerson inserted two screws in Owens' right ankle and a plate on the outside of the ankle three days after he was injured against Dallas on Dec. 19. By not clearing Owens to play, Myerson should be absolved of any blame if Owens goes against his wishes and winds up re-injuring the ankle.

Owens was told after surgery that he had only an outside chance of returning for the Super Bowl, which was 6½ weeks away at the time. But he rehabbed vigorously, hoping to help Philadelphia win its first NFL championship since 1960.

After a checkup Tuesday in Baltimore, Myerson said that while he's pleased with Owens' recuperation, the operation requires a recovery period of eight to 10 weeks. Myerson added that any attempt to accelerate the rehabilitation process poses the same risk for injury.

Burkholder said Owens worked out on a treadmill when he returned to Philadelphia on Tuesday.

"We will continue to see whether he can jog and see how he does day in and day out, see if he can change direction," Burkholder said.

"If he passes all those tests, then we'll start talking about practice time. Right now, the game isn't even in our vision right now. If he has any setbacks in his rehab, then the whole idea of playing in the Super Bowl is probably off."

In his first season with the Eagles after eight years in San Francisco, Owens led Philadelphia with 77 catches for 1,200 yards and 14 TDs.

Quarterback Donovan McNabb and other Eagles have said they don't need Owens to beat the defending champion Patriots, who are 7-point favorites.

"If T.O. plays, it's an added bonus," McNabb said. "If he doesn't, it's not going to stop anything we're doing. You have to have it in the back of your mind about your future, so that's a tough call. That's something as a player you have to think about."

Olabayo Olaniyi rests for a moment while directing performers who will be in the Friday night reception. "Don't dwell on what is done," he encouraged, and, "Frustration is good only if you use it greatly."

The Bayo Gallery is prepared Monday night for "Artists of Uniform." The show will feature artists and performers with uniformed jobs, which, Olaniyi said, will show the artistry of life's apparel.

People in the Arts OLABAYO DAVID OLANIYI

BY ALI GOWANS
THE DAILY IOWAN

At the Bayo Gallery in Old Capitol Town Center on Jan. 21, mall security guard Scott VanHorn sat down to play the piano. He was there to practice for "Artists of Uniform," an art show and reception being organized by Bayo owner Olabayo David Olaniyi and his wife, Reena Patel.

With no music before him, VanHorn's fingers moved gracefully over the piano keys in a beautiful rendition of "Somewhere Over the Rainbow."

"I'm taking an old standard here and adding classical elements to it," he told me. He paused. "Shall we get a little more difficult?"

The song gained complexity, the notes ringing from the grand piano to fill the air with music.

"How about something people haven't heard before?" Patel suggested.

VanHorn's fingers began to move again, improvising notes and chords on the spot. I was witnessing the composition of art.

Art and its composition are not strangers to the gallery nor to its owner. Open since December, the gallery features dozens of pieces of original art, including paintings, carvings, sculptures, and mixed-media pieces. Many are by Olaniyi, and many have a distinctly African feel to them. Olaniyi is quick to point out, however, that an African feel does not make the piece African.

An intricately carved post stood in the front of the store, covered with Christmas lights that twinkled through the window into the mall.

"That was carved out of Iowa wood, here, in this space, in Iowa," Olaniyi said. "So what is African art? What is Iowan art? That's what art does, it asks those questions. People have called it 'primitive art,' but if they know it comes from Iowa, they call it modern or contemporary art."

Escaping the PG-13 wasteland

After acting in too many arty flicks, Ethan Hawke looks just plain uncomfortable holding a gun.

Precinct 13 is a remake that stars Ethan Hawke and Laurence Fishburne

FILM REVIEW

By David Frank

Assault on Precinct 13

When: 12, 2:25, 4:50, 7:15, and 9:40 p.m.
Where: Cinema 6
★★★★½ out of ★★★★★

In the remake of 1976's Assault on Precinct 13, Sgt. Jake Roenick (a solid Ethan Hawke) is a burnt-out police officer in charge of Detroit's soon-to-be-closed Precinct 13. By happenstance — and a monstrous blizzard — the city's prime gangster, Marion Bishop (a cool and precise Laurence Fishburne), and numerous petty criminals end up in the undermanned police station.

It seems that Bishop had dealings with some corrupt cops led by Gabriel Byrne, and these dirty pigs yearn to prevent Bishop from ridding them. Their persuasive method of choice: death. Soon the precinct is under siege by Byrne and friends, and between frequent Mexican standoffs, the trapped cops and criminals unite to fend off the attack.

Writer James DeMonaco has changed some things from John Carpenter's version, such as the setting, villains, characters, and ending (how everyone ends up in a forest is beyond me, but that's more of an annoyance rather than a buzzkill), but he remains faithful to the basic gist of the story and its violent spirit. And that's the kind of remake I want to see; something that's recognizable, but not a pointless shot-by-shot redo à la Gus Van Sant's Psycho.

Director Jean-François Richet also eschews Carpenter's simple uncluttered framing and editing for glitzier visuals and fast-paced cutting. It's not as taut as Carpenter made it (an argument for less is slightly more), but Richet still fashions a slick, well-executed, and continually entertaining action flick that doesn't deserve to be released in the studio dumping ground of January.

The original Precinct 13 (a Western-in-disguise remake of Rio Bravo) is the type of gritty, no-nonsense action film that's rarely made anymore because whiny parents, moral crusaders, and the domination of marketing demographics has leashed and gagged Hollywood like the Gimp from Pulp Fiction and turned the movie landscape into a PG-13 wasteland. Has any straight action movie in recent years contained a moment as brutal as a little girl's chest cavity getting pummeled with lead while she innocently holds her ice-cream cone (hell, Carpenter doesn't even cut away as she gets capped)?

The remake doesn't manage to top the savage ice-cream scene of the original, but it sure makes a go for it. Brains fly, jaws get knifed, foreheads eat bullets, fatty guts explode, flesh burns, bodies are skewered, and icicles meet eyeballs (a nice homage to Die Hard 2) in a flick that doesn't care if you're squeamish by squibs galore.

Laurence Fishburne, the perennial badass, proves that he always looks good in sunglasses.

If you froth at the mouth and sing "The Evils of Gratuitous Violence" anthem every time blood spurts across the silver screen, then buy a ticket for the PG blandness that is National Treasure. If you're looking for classy drama or a cerebral film, check out The Aviator or Primer. Here's a movie that has no metaphors, allegories, subtext, or pretensions. Precinct 13 simply exists to provide the titillating thrills of badass action, and it succeeds in gory glory. Some might consider it disposable junk food, but junk food sure is tasty.

new movie AVP: ALIEN VS. PREDATOR

I love these franchises, but yelping Jesus, I hate "writer/director" Paul W.S. Anderson! AVP is similar to watching someone thrash my mother with a towel full of oranges. Anderson reduces the swell idea of meshing two hard-core monsters into a tedious sub-preschool PG-13 dung pile in which Predators (looking like the fat offspring of The Rock and Corky Thatcher) visit Earth to thaw out some Aliens in Antarctica. Humans are involved, too, but I wouldn't consider them "characters."

PREDATOR 2

Underrated sequel centers on a Predator vacationing in LA as he hunts Danny Glover for making Gone Fishin'. Stuffed with early '90s guilty pleasure schlock. Regardless, it's sweaty fun with great set-pieces, makeup, spinal-cord detachments, and a coked-up Gary Busey. Plus, it answers the question of who would prevail in an epic clash between a Predator (weapon: wrist knives) and Bill Paxton (weapon: rubber ball).

ALIENS

James Cameron's allegory for the Vietnam War is a masterpiece of unremitting carnage. Sigourney Weaver and some badass Marines battle hundreds of aliens in an intense ride that holds up against any CGI-laden blockbuster of recent years. Oh yeah, I also cry during the climax ... I'm weird like that. It's one of my favorite movies, and the DVD also contains an extended edition — which I prefer.

"Plus you don't see many Christmas lights in Africa," Patel added with a laugh. African influences are certainly evident, however, in the art and in the person of Olaniyi himself. Born in Nigeria, he came to the United States at 18. Since then, he has traveled across the country, studying, teaching, and creating art. He met Patel while teaching a class on the philosophy of "Life is a Performance" at the University of Michigan.

The two took the philosophy on the road for the next four years, Patel said, making art, traveling, and writing a play. Now they live in Iowa City with their 7-month-old son, Dawood, and two children from Olaniyi's former marriage, Aluna, age 4, and Obasantos, age 7. The children can usually be seen at the store playing and interacting with the adults who come in. They complete the image of fun-loving artist that Olaniyi and Patel exude.

The "Life is a Performance" philosophy is the driving force behind the idea for "Artists of Uniform." The show will open at the Bayo Gallery on Friday from 6-8 p.m., with a suggested $5 donation. The performers — who will include a U.S. Marine recently returned from Iraq, a parking-garage employee, ex-Navy member VanHorn, and other former members of the armed forces — will paint, dance, make music, and tell stories.

The idea behind the show, Olaniyi said, is the artistry that all people have on them.

"What is a uniform?" he asked. "Your clothes are designed by artists, and you pick them to represent something, to represent who you see yourself as or want others to see you as. That's your uniform. That's art."

More shows are planned. February will bring a show featuring art objects crafted out of hair. March's show will focus on guns and the concepts surrounding them.

"If someone says, 'You are a terrorist,' that's like, bang!" Olaniyi said. "That's a gun. A curse word, a knife, an arrow — anything can be a gun."

Olaniyi and Patel wanted to focus on the conceptual and metaphorical ideas surrounding guns, they said, in order to make people examine the way they feel about them.

"It gives people a great opportunity to think and reason," Olaniyi said. "The horizon just gets widened."

The life as a performance philosophy also shapes Olaniyi and Patel's plans for the future. Eventually, they would like to open a school and art space in their own building.

"It will house everything we do," Olaniyi said. "It will be a school for higher thought, based on the idea of training people artistically."

In the meantime, he hopes Bayo Gallery will become more than just a place to showcase art. It should be a space, he said, for the community to engage in.

"This is everybody's space," he said. "If you like music, then come play. If you like theater, sculpture, painting, storytelling, come here."

Olaniyi's wish for community interaction is already coming true. As we talked, two young men stopped in to say hello. They sat down at the piano and started playing, and Olaniyi told me one of them is a rapper. Before leaving the gallery, Olaniyi suggested to them the simple melodies they were playing could become the beats for a rap song.

"We want to nurture talents," he said. "An idea is like a corn kernel — if you nurture it, it can grow, into a plant with even more kernels on it. Keep going, and you have an entire field. 'Art,' he said, "dictates the direction the world goes. The whole society thrives on it."

horoscopes

Thursday, January 27, 2005
— by Eugenia Last

ARIES (March 21-April 19): This is not the time to make waves with people who can affect your future. Do whatever you have to do, and get on with it. Being accommodating can lead to getting what you want.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You can make some very crucial moves today that will enable you to accomplish something really important to you. Forget about what has happened, and focus on what you can do.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may want to take note of what others are telling you today. Not listening will result in making a mistake that you can't alter. Don't get angry; just be careful how you handle things.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Partnerships may have a different spin to them today. Observe what others do, and you will be much more inclined to make the right choice. Help will be offered if you need it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You can make a change that will mean making more money or giving you more of a positive challenge. You will be able to make personal improvements as well as nurture your love life.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Not a good day to let your heart rule your head. You will be set off by comments or criticism. Keep in mind that sometimes an outsider can see your situation more clearly than you can.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Take the route you believe is most likely to help you avoid conflict. Something may be going on behind your back. Rely on yourself, and keep an eye on everyone else.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Form alliances with anyone who can contribute to your future. Consider changing your direction or trying something new. Use your creative attributes in order to get ahead.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Don't blow it by being too pushy or telling everyone what you think. Aggressive action will lead to trouble. Put your energy into something concrete that will bring good results.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Go after what you want. Love and romance are in a high cycle. The more you do to please someone you care about, the more you will get in return. Travel will lead to knowledge.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A little time spent sorting through your belongings, having a garage sale, or putting a little effort into your home will pay off. You'll feel better about your life and your future.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Keep a close eye on what everyone else is up to. Someone may try to set you up or bring you down. Do your best, but don't let anyone take you for granted. Change may be inevitable.
