Study: Aid missing poor students

The Board of Regents found that wealthy students receive more aid

By Alex Lang

Students who come from wealthy families receive more financial aid than they need, while lower-income students are not funded well enough, a study by the state board of Regents found.

The report states that during the 2003-2004 academic year, students from families earning more than $130,000 a year and average was more than $3,100 short of what they needed to attend college. Those students received on average $12,100 in financial aid. In contrast, students who came from families that made more than $80,000 received close to $20,000 in financial aid, but needed an average of more than $84,000.

The study looked at grants, loans, and work-study programs to determine the average aid students received.

"We have to tighten up the process so students can get what they need," said interim Regent President Robert Denson.

Four years after the feminist sex shop opened, financial troubles will cause it to close on March 26

By Nick Petersen

Women looking to satisfy their mental, emotional, and physical needs with sex toys, literature, and workshops will have to look elsewhere when Iowa City's only feminist sex shop closes on March 26.

Four years after Ruby's Pearl, 338 E. Market St., opened, the shop will close because of financial troubles.

"It's this total emotional outcome," co-owner Laura Crossley said. "Ruby's Pearl is a community center. It's part of your community. So a part of your personality isn't how it's open. It's heartbreaking."

Heather Daggett, another co-owner, was in the otherwise empty store with Crossley on Thursday wearing a "smut peddler" printed across her T-shirt.

"She said that the store hasn't been able grow fast enough since they moved the establishment from a location on Lens Street to mercantile sales of sex toys, especially because of the Internet."

"It was a combination of people not being able to find us when we moved to new location and the peer pressure," Crossley said. "We still have people show up and say, 'I thought you were gone.'"

She said the business relies heavily on regular customers — who, she added, haven't been taking the announcement well.

"It's not just our project, but other things as well," she explained. "This is the last project that's going to be positive for everybody." Crossley said.

VIOLENCE IN IRAQ

Suicide bomber kills 47 in Iraq

By Ashraf Juaidi and Monte Norman

A suicide bomber killed 47 Iraqis, including civilians, Thursday, in a nearly empty mosque in the southern city of Basra.

The attack, which came as thousands of Iraqi forces told off a crowd of thousands during a nationwide demonstration against the invasion. The attacks come at a time of political flux, with a late-term Iraqi interim government and many political frictions over territorial questions to form a new national government, nearly six weeks after landmark elections on Jan. 30.

The blast, which came through a large crowd packed in a tent next to Mosque Two,.StringUtilsian Mosque, was the latest in a series of limited setbacks across Iraq that have killed at least 130 Iraqis, most of them Iraqi police and soldiers.

Earlier Thursday in Baghdad, a policeman was shot outside a police station in the predominantly Shiite district of Sadr City.

The $27 million urban-renewal project is ahead of schedule, and all of the condo space has been purchased

By Heather Loeb

Plaza Towers, one of Iowa City's largest urban-renewal projects, is speeding along ahead of schedule, developer Marc Mann said on Wednesday.

The multi-use 82 million facility has been called the last major project in an urban-renewal plan that dates to the 1980s, said Kurt Franklin, Iowa City's director of planning and community development.

"We're seeing some breathing room," Franklin said. "We're trying to work through the infrastructure, but that was completed in January 2004."

Filling the numerous apartments and condominiums on the top two levels has happened quickly. All the condos have been sold, and leases in center apartments have been signed. A marketing push to fill the rest will not begin until June.

"Now most were just canvas at the speed at which they sell," Mann said. The originally expected sale of the condos for $120,000 to $140,000 each has been slowed, but the majority were sold in a matter of months.

The towers, 225 E. College St., will feature a restaurant, hotel, and convention center, center for holistic healing and massage therapy, grocery store, fitness center, and living space for older adults, Mann said. It will not just our project, but other things as well, such as theformerly known as "smut peddler" printed across her T-shirt.

Ex-UI student pleads guilty in last case from alleged hate crime

By Traci Finch

A former UI student charged with assault in what was once alleged to be a hate crime entered a plea of guilty to a lesser charge on Thursday.

Richard Zchahe, 20, was initially charged with a felony count of assault causing serious injury to a student, according to police. He pleaded guilty to assault causing serious injury in connection with an alleged January 2004 incident.

Zchahe was charged with assault causing serious injury, to student, a charge that was originally filed in January 2004, according to police. He pleaded guilty to assault causing serious injury to a student on Thursday.

The incident involved a group of people, including at least one student, who were seen in the school's dining hall on January 31, 2004.

A seminar held Thursday at the University of Iowa introduces educators and apprazied in members of the public to debate and examine the impact of foreign aid.

The seminar, sponsored by the UI Project of the Division of Continuing Education, was part of a series of seminars designed to inform the public about the issues facing the world today.

The seminar focused on the role of foreign aid in promoting economic development and improving the quality of life in developing countries.

The speakers, who included experts from various fields, discussed the history and evolution of foreign aid, its current status, and the challenges it faces.

The seminar also addressed the economic, social, and political implications of foreign aid and its impact on the global economy.

The speakers urged the audience to consider the role of foreign aid in promoting economic development and improving the quality of life in developing countries.

They called for a more robust and effective approach to foreign aid, one that is based on a deeper understanding of the complex issues involved.

The seminar concluded with a Q&A session, during which the audience had the opportunity to ask questions and engage in a dialogue with the speakers.

STUDY: AIDS MISSING LOW-INCOME STUDENTS

FINANCIAL AID

In the past few years, he said, the number of low-income students who qualify to apply for aid has increased. However, he said, the University is not reaching out to those who need financial aid the most.

"There are some very good reasons why financial aid is not reaching the people who need it the most," he said. "Some of the reasons are because the people who need financial aid the most are not applying for it. They may not know how to get the help they need, or they may not be aware that financial aid is available to them."

Community colleges, he said, have a more direct relationship with low-income students. There, community colleges are working to identify more students who qualify for aid, and they are working to ensure that those students are aware of the financial aid that is available to them.

"We are working to make sure that our students are aware of the financial aid that is available to them," he said. "We are working to make sure that our students are aware of the resources that are available to them, and we are working to make sure that our students are aware of the help that is available to them."

NEW YORK — Charges were unexpectedly dropped in the case of two Chicago police detectives, Dan Taylor and John Forcillo, who had been accused of killing Darwin A. Bailey. The detectives were expected to face trial next year, but authorities said on Tuesday that the charges had been dismissed because of insufficient evidence.

The dismissal of the case against Taylor and Forcillo, who have been suspended without pay, comes as the city continues to grapple with the issue of police brutality and racial profiling.

The detectives were arrested in May 2016 after Bailey died while in police custody. Bailey was accused of leading a car chase that resulted in his death. Taylor and Forcillo were accused of using excessive force and failing to provide adequate medical care.

But in a statement released Tuesday, the Cook County state’s attorney’s office said it had found insufficient evidence to support the charges.

Mayor Lori Lightfoot’s office said the decision was made after a thorough investigation and extensive review of the evidence.

The dismissal of the case against Taylor and Forcillo is not the first time that the city has had to confront the issue of police brutality.

In recent years, a number of cases involving police and civilians have resulted in the filing of lawsuits and criminal charges. In some cases, officers have been found guilty of using excessive force or violating citizens’ rights.

The city has taken steps to address the issue, including increasing training for police officers and implementing new policies to prevent misconduct.

But the dismissal of the case against Taylor and Forcillo is a reminder of the challenges that the city still faces in addressing police brutality.

As the city continues to grapple with these issues, it is important to hold the police accountable for their actions and ensure that justice is served.

CHICAGO — The Chicago Police Department has dismissed the case against two detectives, John Forcillo and Daniel Taylor, who were accused of killing a black man in 2016.

The detectives, who were suspended without pay after the death of Darwin A. Bailey, had been facing charges of first-degree murder, official neglect and battery.

“This is the right decision,” said Mayor Lori Lightfoot. “The community deserves justice, and we have to ensure that the justice is done.”

The dismissal of the case against Taylor and Forcillo comes after months of public protest and legal wrangling.

Carrollville zoning policy

Although many students may find it difficult to understand policy, it should not be lost on us that we have a voice and a say. As Carrollville residents, we have a responsibility to ensure that our town is zoned in a way that is fair and just for all. The alleged "jumping on the bandwagon" and saying, "Those are some of the things that others don't have," is not fair. The greatest individual opportunity is the one that is not artificially limited. This seems to be the case for all.

Pro-Syria Lebanese premier returns to power

BY KENNETH ELLINGWOOD AND TYLER MARSHALL

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Ten days after a US missile strike on a Syrian airfield, an emboldened Hezbollah leader vowed late Thursday that Lebanon would not retreat from its support for Syrian President Bashar Assad, whose government has been accused of rights abuses.

Hezbollah's deputy secretary-general, Naim Qassem, said the US strike was an act of aggression and an affront to Lebanon's independence.

Addressing a crowd of supporters in the south of the country, Qassem said the US strike was a response to Syria's assistance to Lebanon in its fight against terrorism.

"The US strike is a response to the support of our brother in Syria," Qassem said.

Qassem's comments came in the wake of a speech by Lebanon's new premier, Saad Hariri, who pledged to work with Syria on combating terrorism.

Hariri, a member of the parliamentary majority, has a strong relationship with Syria's leaders.

"We are in contact with Syria and we will continue to work on combatting terrorism," Hariri said.

The US strike earlier this month was a response to a series of rocket attacks targeting US forces in Iraq, which were attributed to Hezbollah.

US President Barack Obama called the strikes "necessary and proportionate." The US military said the attacks were in response to Syria's "continued support for terrorism."

Favre to return

BY ARNIE STAPLETON

Brett Favre is returning to Green Bay for the 2006 season, according to a report in the Green Bay Press-Gazette.

Favre, who is the all-time leader in passing yards and touchdown passes, could return as early as next week, the report said. If he returns, it would mark the first time Favre has played for the Packers since 1992.

Favre was traded to the New York Jets in 1999, and spent two seasons there before returning to Green Bay in 2004.

The Packers went 13-3 in 2004 and Favre was named the league MVP for the fourth time.

If Favre returns, it would be the third time he has played for the Packers in 10 years, as he also played for the team in 1992 and 1999.

The report said that Favre and the Packers have not yet finalized a deal, but that a decision is expected in the near future.

Favre has said in the past that he would like to finish his career in Green Bay, and he has expressed interest in returning to the team.

If he does return, it would be a significant boost for the Packers, who have struggled to find a quarterback in recent seasons.

The Packers finished 6-10 in 2005, and missed the playoffs for the first time in 17 seasons.

Favre has had some setbacks in recent years, including a knee injury that kept him out for the first six games of the 2005 season.

He said at the time that he would consider retiring if the injury forced him to miss more time.

But Favre's infectious spirit and love for the game have kept him coming back, and he has shown no signs of slowing down.

He is one of the greatest quarterbacks in the history of the NFL, and his return would be a major boost for the Packers and their fans.
