Low numbers cause frat to close

UI chapter Vice President Scott Murphy said membership has dwindled to the 70s and 80s. "Our board voted last semester that, because we didn't have enough guys to fill the house next year, we needed to be real," he said.

Murphy said the large number of members dropping out, getting the UI, or being too busy to participate in activities has hindered the group to fewer than 10. "It's not looking real good that we're going to be around anymore," he said.

The club has been the home of Alpha Tau Omega since it purchased it from the non-profit Kappa Sigma Foundation in 2003. The Kappa Sigma Housing Corp. sold the property without notifying the UI chapter's members or alumni, causing financial difficulties to the Alpha Tau Omega chapter. The news caused a stir among members who said they would have contributed funds to keep the house.

Alpha Tau Omega has faced similar difficulties. Murphy said in a few years it was joining the list of members had to be cut in succession.

Young girl in a brightly colored swimsuit takes a big handful of leaves, throws them into her mouth, and then jumps into the pool. Dives into the pool, at the water's surface, a young boy's head is blazed by a powerful stream of water as he rolls in the depths. In the maynard, a platinum grins to himself before he drives his lethal, throwing two young kids from his dive and another into the water. GDP offers scaled-down Social Security changes

BY DAVID ESPO

WASHINGTON — Rolling retrospective policies with political overtones, the Republican-led House passed a bill to introduce Social Security private accounts on a one-to-one basis.

"This is the first bill at this stage of the process," said Rep. Joe Barton, R-Texas, who led the Republican amendment. "We are making a commitment to social security reform."

The bill is a blow to the House, Republicans said their members will not commit any of the politically painful meat, and cutting steps needed to start Social Security privatization — higher taxes, an increase in the retirement age, or cuts in benefits.

Bush has made welfare and private accounts favored from party to party for months. In the lead-up to the bill, he noted that Republicans have failed to get the public support for their proposals.

Democrats have virtually shared in their opposition and are preparing to the issue in the 2006 elections.

While Bush has called for faster progress, a major step to create a permanent new system for personal accounts, Republicans opted for a different approach. And after weeks of working, political hurdles, they said they would introduce a Social Security amendment. It does stop the risk of Social Security scrapes," said Rep. Clay Shaw, R-Fla., echoing claims made by the Republican bill. "It demands that under the proposal, for an initial three-year period, surplus Social Security funds would be used to establish individual accounts for workers. The money would be held in a form of "marketable Treasury bonds" seeming to a version of the "private accounts." Unlike current law, according to Rep. Jim McCrery, R-La., the effort would be to create a financial obligation to individual workers by means of contracts, but that the current arrangement, which he said had been the government providing. "We're going to pay you those Social Security benefits, and we're going to get them from your account."
The GOP approach, "effectively new that none of the Social Security benefits and just Social Security," he said.

The White House did not comment directly on the proposal, but supported any attempt to increase Social Security benefits.

"The proposal has a real appeal to today's challenge."

"The president believes his appeal to the proposal may be the best proposal for a Social Security amendment to the Constitution or ran afoul of its language to be added to the Constitution or ran afoul of its language to the Constitution.

The art of war without war

In his speech at the Republican National Convention last weekend, former President Bush quoted a passage from the book "War" by Henry Kissinger, in which the former Secretary of State described the situation in Iraq as a "war without war supportive of a war." The phrase has since become a shorthand for the idea that the United States is engaged in a global war on terror without formally declaring war. The term has been controversial, with some arguing that it is inaccurate or misleading, and others seeing it as a useful way to describe the current state of conflict.

Here's a thought: boxing might be the perfect sport for us. It's cheap, it's clean, and it's fun. And besides, we're all looking for ways to improve our mental and physical health in these trying times. Believe me, I'm not advocating a return to the Golden Gloves era, but just the chance at a little fun and a little prize.

I imagine a world in which George W. Bush and Saddam Hussein go about their daily business, with the president sitting at golf and network, and the dictator going about his day in a world where conflict and conflict are met with little more than a nod of the head and a wave of the hand. It's a world where pixels go out of the tip of a paintbrush instead of out of the barrel of a gun. It's a world where you can help create such a world.

That is why, for all of us, we can agree to disagree and go our separate ways. We can sit down with our guns and low-tech solutions and have a philosophy battle, or we can just get back and throw down the middle of the ring. And we don't see each other as a peace and try to end our games. This is a battlefield. It's war.
Iraq asks nations to help defeat insurgency

IRAQ OCCUPATION DAY 827

Saturday September 23, 2006

IRAQ

U.S. military pressure near the heavily fortified Green Zone in central Baghdad, the official said, was a result of a three-day explosion that was aimed at the capital, killing at least 1,727 members of the Iraqi police and military forces since the war began in 2003, as the insurgents continue to attack Iraqi forces and civilians.

The largest attack Wednesday was a roadside bomb explosion near the key border crossing of Shura, located about 10 miles west of Baghdad, according to a U.S. military official. The bomb killed at least 1,727 members of the Iraqi police and military forces since the war began in 2003, as the insurgents continue to attack Iraqi forces and civilians.

On Thursday, a car bomb exploded near the key border crossing of Shura, located about 10 miles west of Baghdad, according to a U.S. military official. The bomb killed at least 1,727 members of the Iraqi police and military forces since the war began in 2003, as the insurgents continue to attack Iraqi forces and civilians.

The U.S. military official said the explosion was the result of a coordinated attack, and that it was likely the work of a group of insurgents who had attacked the patrol earlier in the day. The attack was the largest of the week so far, and came as the U.S. military intensifies its efforts to foil insurgent attacks.

Relatives of Ameena Iman, one of the victims of the attack, said they were shocked and saddened by the news.

"We have lost our daughter," said Zainab Iman, Ameena's mother. "She was a sweet and kind girl, and we are unable to accept this news." Ameena, 18, was killed when a roadside bomb exploded near her home in central Baghdad. The blast killed at least 1,727 members of the Iraqi police and military forces since the war began in 2003, as the insurgents continue to attack Iraqi forces and civilians.

Ameena was a student at a local high school, and had dreams of becoming a teacher. Her family was never far from her, and often visited her in her free time. "She was a bright and talented girl, and we are NUMEROSOS-thinking of her and the pain she must have been going through," said Zainab.

The attack on Ameena and her family was just one of many recent attacks on civilians in Baghdad. In recent weeks, the U.S. military has increased its efforts to protect civilians, and has launched a number of operations targeting insurgent leaders and networks.

On Wednesday, U.S. forces launched a series of air strikes targeting insurgent leaders in Baghdad, killing at least 1,727 members of the Iraqi police and military forces since the war began in 2003, as the insurgents continue to attack Iraqi forces and civilians.

The U.S. military official said the strikes were part of a larger campaign to disrupt the activities of insurgent leaders and networks. "We will continue to target those who are responsible for these attacks," said the official.

The attacks on civilians have caused widespread outrage, and have prompted calls for the U.S. military to increase its efforts to protect civilians. "We demand that the U.S. military do more to protect civilians," said a senior Iraqi official. "These attacks are unacceptable, and must be stopped immediately."

In recent weeks, the U.S. military has increased its efforts to protect civilians. "We are doing everything we can to protect civilians," said a U.S. military official. "We will continue to target those who are responsible for these attacks."

BLOWOUT LEADS TO FIRST VICTORY

By Brendan Stiles

North Liberty - On Wednesday night in an atmosphere that was electric, the second-seeded Iowa Hawkeyes lost to the fourth-seeded Penn State Nittany Lions in the second round of the NCAA Division I women's basketball tournament, 69-55.

The loss was the fifth in the last six games for the Hawkeyes, who finished the season with a record of 15-17.

"We knew coming in that Penn State was going to be a tough game," said Iowa head coach Lisa Bluder. "They have a lot of talent and they play well together. We just didn't have an answer for them tonight."

Bucks fire Porter

ST. FRANCIS, Wis. — The Milwaukee Bucks fired coach Terry Porter on Wednesday, four months after firing their playoff-bound team to a season-ending collapse.

"We believe it was necessary to make changes," GM John Hammond said.

Hammond said the decision was made by the Bucks board of directors and not owner Herb Kohl.

The Bucks won 42-22 last season and dropped five of their last six games, finishing their worst season in almost two decades.

The Bucks have the first pick in next year’s NBA draft.

"We certainly need to do better," coach Terry Porter said. "I take full responsibility for this."

Porter said they were in the midst of the terms of his third year of his contract.

Porter said the team was "very close" to making the playoffs this season.

"I was very gratified for what I thought we accomplished this year," Porter said.

Hammond said the team was not going to look around for an "overnight cure."

"We don’t have a coach locked up," he said.

Porter will take over speculation about whether he will coach the Seattle SuperSonics.

"I have no idea," he said.

He said the team has "no doubt about his ability to coach."
