UI KARRO ATHLETICS HALL OF FAME

Hall of Fame not pulling them in

UI officials hope the addition of a tennis and recreation center will bring visitors to the Karro Athletics Hall of Fame

BY JIM BUTTS
THE DAILY IOWAN

Like a forgotten castle surrounded by a grassy moat, the UI Karro Athletics Hall of Fame stands alone at the campus' western edge. Its attendance numbers are significantly lower than the university's original estimates, but the addition of new neighbors should help turn the figures around, officials say.

In April 2000 the university issued a press release outlining a $37 million "state-of-the-art" facility anchored by the Athletics Hall of Fame located at the northwest corner of the Melrose Avenue/Mormon Trek Boulevard intersection.

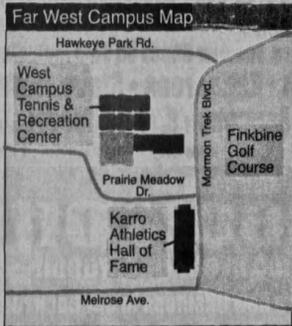

"The Hall of Fame is expected to draw several hundred thousand visitors in its first years of operation," said an April 2000 press release.

However, Dale Arens, the director of the hall, said on Wednesday the facility's attendance grew to a mere 12,000 paying visitors in 2004. He called "several hundred thousand visitors" an unrealistic figure.

At the hall, he said, attendance is growing, and the building is hosting more receptions, auctions, and other events. Still, the extra traffic from tennis buffs won't hurt.

"The addition of neighbors is just going to be great," Arens said.

The Hayden Herky in the entrance to the Karro Athletics Hall of Fame greets fewer visitors than the university had originally predicted before it was built. Officials hope there will be an increase in visitors with the opening of a nearby recreation facility.

Pierce getting rent aid

BY TRACI FINCH
THE DAILY IOWAN

While taxpayers pick up most of former Hawkeye basketball star Pierre Pierce's rent tab, his parents have shelled out $15,000 to date in attorney fees for their son's legal troubles, according to a court document filed Wednesday.

The affidavit of financial condition filed Wednesday indicates that Pierce's parents have paid the sum to employ an attorney. Pierce also wrote that he was $3,000 in debt. He filed the same affidavit form on June 16 but wrote that neither he nor someone else had employed or paid for an attorney.

Pierce former Hawkeye basketball player

Pierce, 2402 Bartelt Road Apt. 2C, pays $10 in rent each month for his Pheasant Ridge apartment, the document indicates. Pheasant Ridge is a development providing low-income housing under the Housing and Urban Development's appropriation bill, which "is all taxpayer dollars," said Dale Gray, a HUD public-affairs officer.

According to a UI phone book search online, approximately 45 UI athletes — many on scholarships — reside in Pheasant Ridge. Belinda Marner, an assistant vice president for Student Services, warned that the addresses may not be accurate or up-to-date. Students are in charge of updating their addresses on ISIS.

Pheasant Ridge manager Steve Finley would not comment on certain scenarios,

Where's the beef?

An Iowa farm specializes in raising cows the size of 'giant Chihuahuas'

BY PATRICK DAVIS
THE DAILY IOWAN

On a farm outside Rockwell, Iowa, Dustin Pillard raises a herd of what neighbors call "living lawn ornaments."

He breeds and sells miniature cattle, which, when fully grown, typically weigh in at a modest 400 pounds for the heifers and 500 pounds for the bulls. Compare those numbers with normal cattle weights, which can reach more than a ton, and it's easy to see how he has been jokingly called a breeder of "giant Chihuahuas."

"Most of our buyers are hobbyists or people who want them for the novelty," Pillard said. "We don't get many buyers in Iowa. People around here think more like, 'You eat cows; you don't keep them for pets.'"

Alice Fulton, the director of the Honors Program, chats with political-science Professor John Nelson (center) and Nicholas Colangelo (left), the director of the Bellin-Blank Center, at the Blank Honors Building on Wednesday. Fulton, who is also a biochemistry professor, is stepping down as director of the Honors Program after seven years. Nelson will become the new director.

Honors' backbone stepping down

BY SAM EDSILL
THE DAILY IOWAN

UI biochemistry Professor Alice Fulton has seen a lot of changes during her seven years as director of the Honors Program.

Honors residence-hall floors. A flood of new students. More scholarships. And, of course, a state-of-the-art building that opened in January 2004, which she was instrumental in developing.

"There isn't a communication jack on these floors that Alice didn't have a hand in placing," said Lola Lopes, the UI associate provost for undergraduate education, said at a reception in the Blank Honors Center honoring Fulton, who will step down as program director today.

But while Fulton's choices have affected virtually everything in the building, right down to the color of the carpet, all were made with student input and driven by her desire to create a student-focused program, which stemmed from her experiences as a student at Brown University, in Rhode Island.

"When I came in as director, I wanted to make sure our students had the same opportunities I had as an undergraduate," she said.

"I tried to use a philosophy that students should be in charge of the direction of their education."

Local public broadcasters hopeful about restored funds

BY JASON PULLIAM
THE DAILY IOWAN

Local public broadcasters are cautiously optimistic that measures to restore $100 million to the Corporation for Public Broadcasting will be upheld when the Senate takes action on the appropriations legislation later this summer.

Formed in 1967, the corporation helps to provide funding for more than 1,000 public radio and television stations across the nation.

An amendment co-sponsored by Rep. James Leach, R-Iowa, reinstated $100 million in the funding last week, which was slated for elimination from its $400 million budget. The House Appropriations Committee proposed the reductions as it worked to complete a spending bill for health, education, and labor programs for fiscal 2006. The Iowa delegation in the House split 3-2 on the amendment, with Reps. Leonard Boswell, D-Iowa, Tom Latham, R-Iowa, and Leach voting in favor. Rep. Steve King, R-Iowa, and gubernatorial candidate Rep. Jim Nussle, R-Iowa, voted against the amendment.

Joan Kjaer, the interim director of UI Broadcasting Services, said that while averting the 25 percent reduction in federal funding was a relief, the future remains tenuous.

"It looks kind of iffy," she said. "If we would have lost the $100 million, we would've seen roughly $65,000 go away [from KSUI and WSUI]."

WSUI, the oldest educational radio station west of the Mississippi River, and KSUI are the UI's public radio stations, and they receive approximately 18 percent of their annual funding from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. KSUI and WSUI received more than $320,000 in community-service grant money for programming during the fiscal 2005. The remainder of the stations' budget is supplied by the UI and donations from private and corporate sources.

While much of the broadcasting corporation's funding was restored by the Leach amendment, portions that covered such items as digital conversion, software, and infrastructure enhancements remain in limbo. While KSUI and WSUI have completed the conversion from analog to digital radio, some member stations of the recently formed Iowa Public Radio network have not.

Steve Parrott, the director of University Relations and a member of the Iowa Public Radio Executive Council, said continued federal funding will be an important component to the network's continued development in its effort to expand statewide coverage to unserved and under-served areas.

"It would be good to have our sister stations converted to digital as soon as possible," he said. "A small amount of tax money to make sure public radio is there seems reasonable, and there are a substantial number of people in the public that agree with that."

Kjaer believes public broadcasting will ultimately survive efforts to remove federal funding largely because of public support.

"We have a pretty good feeling about support in the Senate," she said. "I believe public broadcasting is important in a democracy, and a lot of people have come to value what can be found on public airwaves."

Schizophrenia clinic opens

People diagnosed with schizophrenia may now be able to go to a new clinic in Iowa City specializing in their needs.

The UI Hospitals and Clinics announced on Wednesday the opening of a schizophrenia clinic, with UI associate professor of psychiatry Peggy Nopoulos as the director. She has been working on establishing such a clinic for the past couple of years.

"The clinic will provide specialized medication management to patients affected by schizophrenia and schizoaffective disorder," a UI press release said. "The clinic will enhance the continuity of care for patients and also provide opportunities to participate in research."

A portion of the patients from the general adult psychiatry clinic will benefit from the assistance now available from the new clinic, Nopoulos said. She added there would also be an outpatient care for stable patients for routine follow-ups.

She emphasized the "academic difference" in having a specialized schizophrenia clinic at UIHC. The new clinic will have specialists doing research who are well-versed in all aspects of schizophrenia, she said.

At the new clinic, open 8 a.m. to noon on Thursdays and 1-5 p.m. on Fridays, Nopoulos said she and her staff would be able to provide research opportunities and specialty care that patients can't get from a general health care provider.

Adjustment board joins shelter appeal

The Iowa City Board of Adjustment joined the Shelter House on Wednesday in appealing a judge's ruling not to let the homeless facility expand to a second location at 429 Southgate Ave.

The board's motion comes weeks after a 4-1 vote to challenge Judge David Remley's reversal of an exception that would have allowed the center in a commercial zone. Board member Michael Wright said after the decision that he felt Remley had misinterpreted the evidence.

In his ruling, Remley said the board didn't provide enough evidence to show a shelter wouldn't drive down property values in the surrounding neighborhood. Hilltop Mobile Home Court and business owners in the area appealed the Board of Adjustment's exception to allow the building of the facility, also citing concerns of drawing criminals to the vicinity.

The current shelter, 331 N. Gilbert St., accommodates up to 29 people, the lawsuit said. A second location was needed, the facility's staff said, to temporarily house 70 more.

The Shelter House filed an appeal in 6th District Court last week to push for the expansion.

Energy use skyrockets

Because of the constant, scorching heat, Iowans set an "unofficial" record for energy use on Monday, MidAmerican Energy officials said.

On June 27, Iowans used an unofficial 3,956 megawatts of energy, surpassing the previous mark of 3,935 set Aug. 20, 2003. Monday's count will not become official until an audit is complete at the end of the month, MidAmerican spokesman Allan Urlis said.

"With the current trend, it wouldn't be that surprising to go higher than that," he said.

Compared with last June, energy use has jumped 15.9 percent, he said.

MidAmerican has approximately 17,000 more customers this year than it did in 2003, he said. He added if the trend continues, Iowans could set records for energy use during the summer months.

"It depends how hot it is going to get," Urlis said. "Everything points to higher use."

In an effort to curtail energy use, MidAmerican offers two volunteer programs Iowans can join. Under one, MidAmerican remotely controls home air conditioners during peak-use times in the summer — something it has activated five times this year, compared with once last year. Another program is an agreement with certain industrial facilities to turn off their power at peak times.

Local man charged with domestic assault

Coralville police charged a man with domestic assault causing injury Tuesday after his 6-year-old daughter called officers to tell them he was choking her mother.

Curtis David Shaw, 45, of Coralville was also charged with public intoxication outside his home, police said after allegedly discovering he had a 0.33 blood-alcohol level.

Officers arrived at the residence to find Shaw "sweaty and aggravated," police records show. His wife allegedly told them Shaw used both hands to strangle her and said, "I will kill you." The woman reportedly had red marks on her neck.

Shaw and the woman are married but do not live together, the record stated.

Shaw has been charged numerous times with domestic assault since 1997, according to online court records. He pleaded guilty to domestic assault without intent causing injury twice in 1998 and to second-offense domestic-abuse assault in 2000. The police record indicates he has three prior domestic-abuse convictions; Iowa Code states that if a person has three or more domestic-abuse assault charges, he or she faces a Class D felony, punishable by up to five years in prison and a maximum fine of $7,500.

Shaw also pleaded guilty to third-degree burglary in 2002 and assault on a peace officer in 2004.

Bush sets up new intel agency

J. Scott Applewhite/Associated Press

FBI Director Robert Mueller discusses President Bush's decision to create a national-security service within the FBI during a press conference in Washington on Wednesday. Mueller will share authority for choosing the head of the new service with National Intelligence Director John Negroponte.

BY KATHERINE SHRADER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush, embracing nearly all the recommendations of a White House commission, said Wednesday he was creating a national security service at the FBI to specialize in intelligence as part of a shake-up of the disparate U.S. spy agencies.

A fact sheet describing the White House's broad acceptance of changes said three recommendations were under review and a fourth, which remained classified, was rejected.

Bush also issued an executive order allowing the freezing of any financial assets in the U.S. of people, companies, or organizations involved in the spread of weapons of mass destruction. The order designates eight organizations in Iran, North Korea, and Syria. Americans also are barred from doing business with them.

"This really is intended to take what we've found to be a very effective tool against terrorism targets ... and expand that to counterproliferation targets," said Bush's homeland-security adviser, Frances Fragos Townsend.

Treasury Secretary John Snow said the order sends a message that "if you deal in weapons of mass destruction, you're not going to use the U.S. financial system to bankroll or facilitate your activities." Many of the intelligence changes deal with the bureaucracy. But Townsend said it was not just a reshuffling of boxes but a "fundamental strengthening" of intelligence agencies.

Those changes include directing the Justice Department to consolidate its counterterrorism, espionage, and intelligence units. Bush also will ask Congress to create an assistant attorney general position to help centralize those operations. Bush wrote in a memo to intelligence agency leaders that "further prompt action is necessary" at the Justice Department and FBI to address security challenges.

FBI Director Robert Mueller will share authority for choosing the head of the new service with National Intelligence Director John Negroponte, who also will have a say in the unit's budget. Though FBI directors have long guarded the bureau's autonomy, Mueller said, "I don't see it as a loss of independence at all."

Attorney General Alberto Gonzales, appearing with Mueller at a news conference, addressed concerns that the new service would be a domestic spy agency that would answer to Negroponte. "Every law enforcement official within the FBI is going to remain under the supervision of the FBI director and ultimately, the attorney general," Gonzales said.

In March, a nine-member commission led by Republican Laurence Silberman, a judge on U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, and former Sen. Charles Robb, D-Va., presented a scathing 600-page report about U.S. intelligence agencies and its ability to understand and protect against the threat from weapons of mass destruction.

Robb said it was "truly extraordinary" that Bush had accepted so many of the commission's proposals.

"By embracing 70 of the 74 recommendations, the commission's batting average is now almost .950. Even Ted Williams would have envied that," Robb said in a written statement.

Bush asked for the review in early 2004 after it became clear that prewar intelligence on Iraq was flawed. After a 13-month investigation, the commission concluded the intelligence community was "dead wrong" in almost all of its prewar findings on Iraq's arsenal. Those bruising critiques followed a number of others of the CIA, FBI, Defense Department, and other elements of the intelligence community since the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, and the botched Iraq intelligence estimates.

As a result, numerous reforms had already been ordered by Congress, the White House, and within government agencies. Many were contained in an intelligence overhaul law passed by Congress in December, which created a national intelligence director to oversee the 15 U.S. intelligence agencies.

A recommendation that the White House left for further review would have the national intelligence director hold accountable those organizations that contributed to the flawed assessments of Iraq's weapons programs. The administration said that the intelligence director was still reviewing the need for reforms "that may include greater DNI oversight and changes in organizational roles and responsibilities."

Among the changes accepted by the administration were:

- forming a National Counter Proliferation Center to coordinate the U.S. government's collection and analysis of intelligence on nuclear, biological and chemical weapons. The task is now performed by many national security agencies.

- asking Congress to reform its oversight of intelligence agencies.

- putting CIA Director Porter Goss in charge of all overseas human intelligence, or traditional spy work, done by government operatives.

- proposing legislation that would extend the duration of electronic surveillance in cases involving foreign agents.

- put in place new procedures for dissenting intelligence analysis to be allowed to reach senior officials.

- giving the intelligence director a staff of "mission managers" who will develop strategies for specific intelligence areas. As an example, the commission said the director could have a mission manager focused on a specific country, such as China.

People still head south, west

BY JENNIFER C. KERR
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Skyrocketing housing prices are driving people from San Francisco, Boston, and other big cities. Warm weather and more affordable living are behind the rapid growth in midsize cities in Florida, Arizona, Nevada, and California.

Census Bureau figures being released today show no letup in the migration to the South and West, which are home to all 10 of the fastest-growing cities with at least 100,000 people.

The Phoenix suburb of Gilbert, Ariz., topped the list. The city grew by more than 46,000 people, or 42 percent, to just over 156,000 residents in a little over four years.

Next on the list ranked by percentage gain was Miramar, Fla., followed by North Las Vegas, Nev.; Port St. Lucie, Fla.; and Roseville, Calif. Rounding out the top 10 were Henderson, Nev.; Chandler, Ariz.; Cape Coral, Fla.; and Rancho Cucamonga and Irvine, both in California.

San Francisco and Boston found themselves among the cities losing the most people between April 2000 and July 2004. Boston, for example, shed more than 19,000 people, 3.4 percent of its population. San Francisco lost 32,000, 4.2 percent.

"People like to live in smaller places, and a lot of it's propelled by the sharp spike in housing costs in the inner and more attractive cities," said William Frey, a demographer at the Brookings Institution in Washington. "People want to get as much housing as they can for their dollars."

The median price for a single-family home in Gilbert is around $220,000, compared with more than $387,000 in Boston and $641,000 in San Francisco.

Peter Ragone, a spokesman for San Francisco Mayor Gavin Newsom, said the city recognizes the problem and has begun a number of affordable housing initiatives, such as redevelopment projects aimed at producing more moderately priced homes.

Greg Svelund, city spokesman in Gilbert, said many new residents are coming from higher-priced communities in California.

Canada may stop exporting drugs to U.S.

BY BETH DUFF-BROWN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TORONTO — Canada's Health minister threatened Wednesday to overhaul the country's regulations on exporting prescription drugs, saying Canada would no longer be a cheap "drug store for the United States."

Health Minister Ujjal Dosanjh said Canada would ban the bulk export of prescription drugs when its supplies were low at home. But he left vague how the ban would be put into place — and whether it would affect the thousands of individual purchases that take place across the U.S.-Canada border and over the Internet.

The ban is an attempt to head-off an anticipated onslaught of drug demands from Americans if legislation pending in Congress legalizes Internet and bulk import of prescription drugs from Canada.

"Canada cannot be a drug store for the United States of America; 280 million people cannot expect us to supply drugs to them on a continuous, uncontrolled basis," Dosanjh said at a news conference.

Canadians must be assured access to an adequate supply of safe and affordable prescription drugs, he said.

Individual sales would not necessarily be affected by the ban, but it could affect drug wholesalers or manufacturers in Canada. They are not permitted to export to the United States under U.S. law, but they could do so under the legislation being considered in Congress.

Dosanjh said he would introduce legislation when the House of Commons reconvenes this fall that would allow for the temporary ban of bulk exports when supplies are running low at home.

Americans pay the highest prescription-drug prices in the world, and U.S. lawmakers are pushing to legalize the importation of wholesale prescription drugs as well as Internet purchases from Canada and other countries. Four bills are pending in Congress, but they have met with opposition from the pharmaceutical lobby and from the Food and Drug Administration.

Some supporters of the Canadian exports said the proposed ban is a direct response to threats from the U.S. pharmaceutical industry.

"This is a big strong, wealthy industry, and it's fighting as hard as it can fight so that it can charge the highest prices in the world for prescription drugs to U.S. consumers," said Sen. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D.

While it's legal in Canada for pharmacies to mail Americans drugs — after having been faxed or mailed their physician's prescriptions — it's illegal in the United States, though the laws are generally not enforced.

The Canadian government also maintains it is unethical for doctors to sign prescriptions without examining patients. Dosanjh said the definition of patient-physician relationship had to be clarified, but would not confirm whether that meant American patients would have to meet in person with Canadian doctors.

Any change in that definition, which Dosanjh said needed further study, could affect individual purchases.

"Our priority must be the health and safety of all Canadians and the strength of our health care system," Dosanjh said.

All may be dead in Afghan crash

U.S. officials say a Special-Ops helicopter took hostile fire and went down in eastern Afghanistan

BY DANIEL COONEY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

KABUL, Afghanistan — U.S. military officials said Wednesday they feared all 17 troops aboard a special-operations helicopter were dead after hostile fire downed the craft and it slid or rolled into a rugged mountain ravine in eastern Afghanistan.

If those aboard were confirmed killed, the crash would be the deadliest blow yet to American forces in Afghanistan, already grappling with an insurgency that is widening rather than winding down.

The officials said they knew of no communications from the crash site, accessible only by foot. Stormy weather hampered rescue efforts after the MH-47 helicopter crashed Tuesday while ferrying in reinforcements for troops already on the ground pursuing Qaeda militants near the border with Pakistan.

The officials cited reports from the region that the helicopter struck or landed badly on the side of a mountain, then went down into the ravine, suggesting little hope of survival. They said, however, they could not confirm the deaths, and they spoke on the condition of anonymity because rescue operations were still underway.

Only eight months ago, Afghan and U.S. officials were hailing a relatively peaceful presidential election here as a sign that the Taliban rebellion was finished. That bravado has been yet another casualty in a war some feel could escalate into a conflict on the scale of Iraq's.

The loss of the helicopter follows three months of unprecedented fighting that has killed approximately 465 suspected insurgents, 43 Afghan police and soldiers, 125 civilians, and 29 U.S. troops. Afghan and U.S. officials have predicted the situation will deteriorate before legislative elections are held in September.

The Taliban has stepped up attacks, and there are disturbing signs that foreign fighters — including those from Al Qaeda — might be making a new push to sow mayhem. Afghan officials say the fighters have used the porous border with Pakistan to enter the country, and they have called on the Pakistani government to do more to stop them.

Even before the crash was announced, a Taliban spokesman claimed responsibility and said he had footage of the attack. As of Wednesday, no video had surfaced.

U.S. military spokesman Col. James Yonts said the helicopter was fired on as it was approaching a landing zone while rushing reinforcements to a battle in an area known to harbor "terrorist organizations." It flew on, but crashed about a little over a mile away at dusk, he said.

"The aircraft was taking indirect fire and direct fire from elements on the ground," he said.

Coalition and Afghan troops "quickly moved into position around the crash to block any enemy movement toward or away from the site," a U.S. military statement said. Yonts said fighting was continuing Wednesday.

Beside the bad weather, recovery operations were also hampered by the rugged terrain of the remote crash site, reachable only by foot, officials said. The crash took place in the mountains near Asadabad, in eastern Kunar province.

The helicopter was carrying forces into the area as part of Operation Red Wing against Qaeda militants.

Afghan Defense Minister Rahim Wardak told the Associated Press this month that intelligence indicates at least half a dozen Qaeda agents had slipped into the country recently and that two of them blew themselves up in car bombs.

The downed chopper, a special-operations variant of the CH-47 Chinook, was carrying Navy SEALs, one U.S. official said. Another said it was carrying Special-Ops forces but was unsure if they were SEALs or from another unit. The officials spoke from Washington on the condition of anonymity because rescue operations were still under way.

U.S. Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Peter Pace said the "tragedy ... appears to be a shutdown of one of our special-operations helicopters."

"We think it was a rocket-propelled grenade, sir, but not 100 percent sure. And that will come out in time as we're able to get to the scene and the investigation required," Pace told a Senate committee during a hearing on his nomination to be chairman of the joint chiefs.

"Our hearts go out to their families," Pace said.

Kunar Provincial Gov. Asadullah Wafa told the AP the Taliban downed the aircraft with a rocket. He gave no other details.

Purported Taliban spokesman Mullah Latif Hakimi telephoned the AP to claim responsibility for downing the chopper. He also claimed that rebels killed seven U.S. soldiers in an attack in the same area, although U.S. spokeswoman Lt. Cindy Moore said no such attack had been made on an American convoy.

Hakimi often calls news organizations to claim responsibility for attacks on behalf of the Taliban. His information has sometimes proven untrue or exaggerated, and his exact tie to the group's leadership is unclear.

Haitian kidnappings roil troubled island

BY CAROL J. WILLIAMS
LOS ANGELES TIMES

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Maryse Gilbert's cell phone lighted up with her husband's number at 7 a.m., half an hour after he was kidnapped in front of the private high school he founded nearly three decades ago in the upscale neighborhood of Paoot.

"It was one of the kidnapers, and he told me, 'Your husband was very arrogant, so we had to shoot him in both legs,'" Gilbert recalled of the June 1 conversation. "Then he told me: 'Usually, we don't put bullets in people's legs. We put them in their heads.'"

Jean-Gerard Gilbert was put on the line just long enough to confirm that he was indeed wounded and that his wife should do as she had been instructed: Deliver $200,000 in cash to the kidnapers by noon.

As with other sky-high demands made by gangsters who have snatched hundreds of victims in the past two months, the abductors agreed to settle for significantly less: $15,000.

Unlike most other recent cases, however, Gilbert didn't surface after the ransom payment. His wife believes he is dead. A diabetic with hypertension, he either bled to death from his wounds or went into a diabetic coma before the medications sent along with the money could reach him, she speculates. No body has been found.

"Everybody is afraid," Maryse Gilbert said from the garden of her suburban home. "I'm even more afraid, now that I'm alone with my kids."

Police officials insist that armed supporters of exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide are behind many of the kidnappings. In the past nine months, their violent uprising and subsequent Haitian police retaliations have killed more than 700 people and sown an atmosphere of paralyzing terror.

"It was one of the kidnapers, and he told me, 'Your husband was very arrogant, so we had to shoot him in both legs.'"

— Maryse Gilbert

Gangland shootouts have taken their toll mostly in the capital's teeming slums. The kidnapping wave, by contrast, has targeted politicians, doctors, businesspeople, foreigners, and even those thought to have access to a few hundred dollars.

Fatalities have been few, but the abductions have spurred an exodus of the middle class, shuttered businesses, and stalled efforts to hold elections this fall that could restore constitutional order.

Gessy Coicou, the inspector-general for the

A Chilean U.N. peacekeeper (left) stands guard during a visit to Haiti by U.N. peacekeeping chief Jean-Marie Guéhenno and Juan Gabriel Valdes, the U.N. envoy to Haiti, in Cap-Haïtien, Haiti, on June 25.

U.N. peacekeeping chief Jean-Marie Guéhenno arrives at the airport of Cap-Haïtien, Haiti, on June 25.

Haitian National Police, contends that the kidnapping wave is a strategic ratcheting up of the violence by pro-Aristide gangsters to disrupt economic recovery and prevent the elections.

"It's not being done just to get money," he said. "Witnesses tell us the same story in the same words every time, that the kidnapers said they will continue doing this 'until our chief comes back.'"

The U.S. State Department warned Americans in late May against traveling to Haiti, and it evacuated nonessential embassy personnel. The Peace Corps pulled out its volunteers in mid-June. After a 65-year-old Canadian woman was kidnapped and released after payment of a nearly six-figure ransom, Ottawa's embassy here e-mailed Canadian passport holders in Haiti to advise them to stock up on food and water, stay indoors as much as possible, and keep in touch with neighborhoods' emergency wardens.

Streets once jammed with traffic are now eerily abandoned. Restaurants and cafés in the well-to-do suburb of Petionville have cut nighttime hours or closed for summer. At rental-car offices, the few new arrivals are advised to take a lengthy detour into the city because the airport road has joined the growing list of no-go zones.

"Everyone is being targeted now."

— Ettore di Benedetto, International Crisis Group analyst

"I've never seen Haitians like this before," said Ettore di Benedetto, an International Crisis Group analyst who has lived seven of the last 10 years in Haiti. "Everyone is being targeted now."

He fears that authorities' long-standing indifference to death and suffering in the roiling slums is worsening as pressure mounts on an ill-trained police force to crack down on the gangs doing the kidnapping. A report last month by the Crisis Group blamed much of the recent bloodshed on Aristide supporters but lamented that police excesses have contributed to the siege atmosphere gripping the city.

Few Haitians trust their police enough to call them in to deal with a kidnapping. But a new 24-hour hotline inaugurated by U.N. civilian police has drawn some calls. The joint effort with the Haitian National Police succeeded in freeing Port Authority manager Mariette Thomas four days after her June 17 kidnapping in an operation that killed one abductor and wounded three others.

The hotline received 30 kidnapping reports in its first 10 days, said Michel Gemme of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, one of the U.N. peacekeeping mission's major-crimes specialists.

"Sometimes they just want to inform us about what is going on," he said. "They want us to know, but they don't want us to intervene."

Haitian and U.N. police encourage families to leave the negotiations to authorities but acknowledge they confront a powerful legacy of public mistrust and preference to deal with a crisis on a family basis.

"People in this country are used to taking care of their own problems," said Coicou, the inspector general.

Although the scope of the kidnapping phenomenon is unknown, Haitian radio stations have taken to offering daily updates on some of the cases. Kidnapping reports now take up more airtime than traffic tips or the weather.

University upgrades deserve more scrutiny

With questionable planning, some projects won't realize their full worth — and some aren't worth doing at all

New buildings, and new features for many existing ones, are springing up across campus as the UI spends millions on an ambitious construction campaign. Most of these projects — such as the new Adler Building, the home of the still newer Daily Iowan newsroom, whence this editorial comes — are much needed and welcome. But some could benefit from further review.

For example, Iowa's new $39.6 million cancer center was a worthy investment, as was the concept of Kinnick Stadium's $90 million overhaul. But was there really much need for an elite skybox in which faculty, boosters, and other VIPs may rub drunken elbows together? The $11.25 million Old Capitol Town Center acquisition may give a permanent home to some of the programs and offices floating around, and it may help shore up the downtown economy, but was this purchase cost-effective when the entire mall was sold in 2003 for $12 million?

Another example is the West Side campus initiative. Phase I gave us the Karro Athletics Hall of Fame and an outdoor soccer facility, placed near Hawkeye Drive apartments and the commuter lot at an expense of $9.7 million. Phase II is supposed to bring an aquatic center and 20 outdoor tennis courts for an additional $12 million.

The 24,000-square-foot Hall of Fame Building was supposed to "draw several hundred thousand visitors in its first years of operation," according to an April 11, 2000, press release from Mark Jennings, an associate athletics director. However, anecdotal evidence suggests the Hall of Fame, distant from the main campus and even such major athletic facilities as Kinnick or Carver-Hawkeye Arena, is rarely used. Colleges with even richer athletic traditions than ours lack halls of fame, so the need for one here at all bears scrutiny.

The West Side expansion is even more troubling, given the university's recent decision to scrap its plans to remodel the nearby Hawkeye Apartments. The complex needs a makeover, but in March, the UI balked at the expense involved and canceled a planned overhaul (which was rather ill-advised anyway). On top of all this, the university is planning to build a $55 million recreation center virtually across the street from the existing Field House. While this may be a good addition to our campus, it would have been better planning to combine the new facility with the underutilized West Side developments.

Many other facilities are also in need of an overhaul — including the English-Philosophy Building. Projects such as the Adler Building were aided by private donations, and the university can hardly be faulted if wealthy alumni are choosy with their money. Yet with budgets tight, part of the bills for some projects are being collected through student fees — and students are facing a mid-year tuition hike. With this in mind, it does behoove the school to be prudent with what funds it has.

We are excited about the ongoing development of and improvements to the UI and Iowa City communities and are confident that our school will continue to be at the forefront of academic and college life well into the 21st century. But after looking at the larger picture, it seems a strong possibility that some modifications are in order.

Judging success

President Bush's speech on Tuesday night was perhaps the most important moment of his second term. Amid declining support for the Iraq war, he needed to reassure the public of political and military progress as well as the importance of persevering through tough times. In the end, the speech was one the president needed to make, and he delivered a strong performance. Yet, getting a clear assessment of progress in Iraq remains difficult, because there isn't a clear criterion for judging overall success.

On one hand, Iraq has had several significant political achievements. Drafting an interim Constitution in February 2004, creating an interim government in June of that year, smoothly transferring sovereignty earlier than expected, and conducting free and fair elections last January are all important political milestones. Even today, Sunni Arabs, who boycotted the election and thus were left out of the newly formed Iraqi government, are beginning to take a greater role in the political process.

Trying not to overreach at such an early stage of political development, the Shiite majority has been inclusive to Sunnis, who now represent nearly one-fifth of the new government. While drafting the permanent Constitution, Sunnis initially held only two seats on a 55-member committee. However, after negotiating with Shiites, Sunnis received 15 additional seats as well as a commitment from Shiites to gain consensus when approving the new constitution.

All this is important, because despite its various ethnic groups and past conflicts, Iraqis are now pursuing their different agendas through a political process rather than violence. The respect that minorities have received so far is a fundamental aspect of any free society and illustrates the moderating influence democracy can have on countries trying to create sustainable political systems. To fully understand the political progress taking place, just consider the fact that in a few short months Iraq will be governed by a Constitution rather than the whim of a dictator. That, by all means, is substantial progress.

The military aspect, on the other hand, is less clear. But in this area too, determining success is dependent on how one judges progress. While insurgents retain the ability to kill Iraqis and U.S. troops, they are losing mightily when it comes to traditional metrics of guerilla warfare. By attacking innocent civilians of all ethnic groups, the insurgents have basically eliminated the possibility of creating unified opposition to the Iraqi government and U.S. forces. Additionally, the insurgents offer no clear vision for an alternative Iraqi future and therefore are failing to gain political influence. Unlike Vietnam where there was a populist revolt led by a domestic leader, Ho Chi Minh, the insurgency in Iraq is led by a Jordanian, Abu Musab al-Zarqawi. Instead of uniting Iraqis under a common political cause, al-Zarqawi is killing the very people who should be rallying around him if the insurgency is to be successful.

Looking at the situation in Iraq, people need to ask themselves the following questions: Does the insurgency win if it merely continues to exist? Does it win if it simply has the ability to conduct random suicide bombings? What level of success has the coalition achieved when the Iraqi military can fully fight the insurgency on its own? To what extent is the coalition successful as Iraqis continue to gain confidence in their government?

On Tuesday, the president gained ground, but giving a speech after the polls start to drop is too reactionary. In the months and years ahead, the president needs to keep a steady dialogue with the American people. Prime-time speeches and press conferences appealing directly to the public and unfettered by media spin need to be a regular part of the administration's strategy. The public has long known the media haven't given them a balanced picture of Iraq, and they are eager to hear stories of real progress. It's up to the president and his administration to be messengers of this progress, giving people rational optimism and reason to stay the course. ■

The adults in the herd are mostly around 36 inches tall and are generally well-tempered visitors, and the calves are patiently in line for milk.

"Cows are more than people give credit for," Pillard said, "I did not think that they would be so house-trained."

He moved to the farm 15 years ago, when he bought the Mason farm. He is interested in raising animals after he sees a magazine.

The farm sits on a 15-acre plot, with a pasture.

On that limited plot, Pillard has 35 adult and 14 calves.

"We can easily keep four cattle per acre," he said. "Most people would need at least 10 acres."

Miniature cows are between one and two years old and produce milk a day, enough for a family well-stocked with milk. He does not use any hormones for milk.

COMMENTARY

Presidential disconnect

President Bush's pep talk to the nation Tuesday night was a major disappointment. He again rewrote history by lumping together the terrorist attacks of 9/11 and the need for war in Iraq, when, in fact, Saddam Hussein's Iraq had no connection to Al Qaeda. Bush spoke of "difficult and dangerous" work in Iraq that produces "images of violence and bloodshed," but he glossed over the reality of how bad the situation is. He offered no benchmarks to measure the war's progress, falling back on exhortations to "complete the mission" with a goal of withdrawing troops "as soon as possible."

Bush spoke at Ft. Bragg, N.C., and offered proper respect and thanks to U.S. troops, more than 1,700 of whom have been killed in Iraq. But his address on the first anniversary of the transfer of sovereignty to Iraq gave no glimpse of how much longer 140,000 U.S. troops must remain there. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld gave no timetable either but did say on Sunday that the insurgency could last a dozen years. That realistic analysis marked quite a change from Vice President Dick Cheney's claim a few weeks earlier that the insurgency was in its "last throes."

Last week, the top military commander in the Middle East, Gen. John Abizaid, also recognized reality by telling Congress that the strength of the insurgency was about the same as six months ago, before Iraq's national-assembly elections. The January vote, hailed again by Bush as a landmark on the journey toward democracy, was soon overshadowed by renewed violence, as legislators dithered in forming a government.

The U.S. has had too few troops in the country since right after the March 2003 invasion. Bush said Tuesday that if commanders ask him for more troops, he will send them. But he quickly announced why no one should bother asking: Sending more Americans would undercut Iraqis' will to lead the fight against insurgents and would signal "that we intend to stay forever."

Who could disagree with the administration's goal of a democratic Iraq that respects human rights? But again, time for a reality check. A Los Angeles Times report last week noted complaints that the country's special security forces resemble too much those of Saddam's day, abusing and torturing those they arrest. A report Monday told of conservative Shiite militia groups taking over the southern city of Basra, killing political foes and punishing those violating their interpretation of Islam.

Bush might be right to now put Iraq at the center of the "global war on terror," but it didn't have that status before the invasion. Al Qaeda flocked to Baghdad after the invasion and used Iraq as a rallying point for Muslims outraged by the U.S. invasion of an Arab nation.

Recent polls indicate that Americans are understandably upset at spending $200 billion and so many lives in Iraq, while hearing only rhetoric about staying the course. If more months pass with Iraqi forces leaning on the safety net of U.S. troops, politicians putting tribe and religious community ahead of nation, and the daily havoc of suicide bombers, presidential scrutiny through rose-colored glasses will fall on ever-deaf ears. The public can recognize the difference between rhetoric and reality.

This editorial appeared in Wednesday's Los Angeles Times.

LETTER

More bad leadership

President Bush's arguments for the war on Iraq keep changing. In his speech to the nation, he didn't once utter the words "weapons of mass destruction" but said the principal reason for his war is to fight terrorists. Yet, his war has stirred up a hornets nest of terrorists and made our nation much less safe.

This president has botched the fight against terrorists since he took office in 2001. Why should we trust him now? After ignoring intelligence reports with titles such as "Bin Laden Determined To Attack Inside United States," the United States was attacked on 9/11, but not by Iraq. As former National Security Adviser Richard Clarke has stated, declaring war on Iraq after 9/11 made as much sense as Franklin Roosevelt declaring war on Mexico after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

After 9/11, Bush didn't go in for the kill at Tora Bora, Afghanistan, which allowed Osama bin Laden to escape. Instead, he pursued a war with a country that had nothing to do with 9/11, diverting valuable personnel and resources away from the war on terrorism and bin Laden and, as his father's own national-security adviser predicted, inflaming the Muslim world, creating thousands of new terrorists.

The president's disdain for other nations' views, both before and after 9/11, has made it more difficult to get international support in our war on terrorism. And let's not forget that he opposed the creation of a Homeland Security Department for nine months and opposed creation of the 9/11 commission.

Simply saying Bush "misled" us into war in Iraq, while true, does not connect the dots on why that undermines our war on terrorism. He has botched things up every step of the way, making our nation less safe.

HALL OF FAME

After political wrangling forced more than five years of delays, construction of a controversial new $12 million UI tennis and recreation center on the West Side of campus is finally under way and going smoothly, said Hugh Barry, the head of construction.

While many are excited the 20-tennis court, fitness, and recreation facility is finally slated to open in June 2006, the building won't be what planners once dreamed up in happier financial times.

Since the facility's proposal in 2000, UI planners eliminated an Olympic-sized swimming pool, redrew plans in order to avoid bulldozing a university storage facility, and drew fire from some students concerned about the nearly $300 raise in student fees the facility sparked.

"In a nutshell, the original vision is not what it is now," Arens said.

Opened in 2002, donors completely funded the construction of the Hall of Fame. The new recreation center, on the other hand, is predominantly funded by a $291 increase in student fees.

Although the men and women's tennis teams will practice and play at the center, university officials insist that the facility is primarily for student recreation use.

"Generally, we've had a deficit of recreation facilities," said Larry Wilson, the UI campus planner.

He noted that the fee increase would also fund the East Side recreation center, which will include a workout facility and new swimming pool, to be built at the intersection of Burlington and Madison Streets. The fees will also help to fund improvements at the IMU.

That meant putting more students on the Honors Program staff, increasing the number of honors courses, and expanding students' opportunities to work with faculty.

One example of why Fulton believes in giving students freedom is a student's project from a seminar she taught last semester on the probability of life on other planets: a quilt, covered with facts and formulas from the course, as well as dozens of iron-on photos of familiar "aliens," such as E.T. and Spock.

"I don't think I could have told people, 'Make a quilt,'" she said.

She was faced with many challenges after taking over as director in 1998, including high staff turnover, said assistant director Bob Kirby, but she persevered.

"Alice was always there to calm me down and reassure me that it would all fall into place," he said.

The program's next director, UI political-science Professor John Nelson, will take over on Friday. He praised Fulton for her steady hand in guiding the program.

"I think, personally, of Alice having saved the program from really difficult circumstances," he said.

Nelson said he wants to focus on expanding academic opportunities for students, particularly those with more time-intensive majors.

including how athletes manage to secure rooms when there is a three- to 12-month waiting period for the apartments.

"HUD has taken a very serious look at this," Gray said. Income-verification forms do not account for parental income, she said, but the department is trying to give more "leverage" to housing inspectors, so they can look at all aspects of a prospective resident's earnings.

Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, introduced a bill last summer that would have closed the "loophole" of parental income, but the legislation was not approved, said Jenny Carrier, the senator's press secretary.

"[Harkin] is continuing to look into the matter," she said.

Pierce was charged in February with three felonies, two first-degree burglary charges, assault with intent to commit sexual abuse, and a misdemeanor after an alleged incident at his female friend's West Des Moines townhouse. Police contend that Pierce became angry when he saw text messages from the woman's boyfriend and, as a result, threatened her.

Iowa men's basketball coach Steve Alford, who is listed as a possible defense witness in the upcoming Aug. 16 trial, booted Pierce from the team in February.

It is the second time in recent years the standout guard has been accused of a sex-related crime. In 2002, he pleaded guilty to a lesser charge of assault causing injury after being charged with sexual assault.

Fifth District Judge Gregory Hulse in Dallas County ruled Tuesday that Pierce's attorney, Alfredo Parrish, could not view the alleged victim's counseling records. Parrish said earlier this week that depositions would take place Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday.

MINI COWS

Miniature calves generally weigh 20 to 30 pounds and stand 21 inches tall.

The adults in the herd, mostly around 36 inches tall, are generally welcoming to visitors, and they will wait patiently in line for rubdowns.

"Cows are more intelligent than people give them credit for," Pillard said, although he did not think that they could be housetrained.

He moved to his farm 12 years ago, when he was hired by the Mason City Fire Department. He became interested in raising the unique animals after he saw them in a magazine.

The farm sits on a modest 15-acre plot, with 12 acres of pasture.

On that limited space, the Pillards are able to keep a herd of 35 adults and 14 calves.

"We can easily keep three to four cattle per acre of pasture," he said. "Most regular cows would need at least an acre per head."

Miniature cows can produce between one and two gallons of milk a day, enough to keep a family well-stocked, he said, but he does not use any of his own cows for milk.

Ben Roberts/The Daily Iowan

Dustin Pillard comforts his quite nervous dog, Duke, at Pillard's farm on Tuesday near Mason City. Pillard says a regular cow weighs from 1,500 to 1,700 pounds. His average 400-500 pounds.

"They're very low maintenance," he said.

"Through the summer, they pretty much take care of themselves."

According to the International Miniature Cattle Breeders Society website, miniature cows are more suitable for small farms — they consume less food — and owning several small bovines is better than owning a single large one — a solitary cow gets lonely.

The miniature-cattle market has been lucrative for the Pillard's. An average animal sells for around $2,000, and they have never had any trouble selling out their annual stock.

The Pillard's website, www.miniaturebull.com, gets more than 100 hits per day, and it has had 150,000 visitors since its inception.

The family hope that they will be able to breed the stock so that they are all under 3 feet tall and have a wide range of colors.

BY RICARDO ALONSO-ZALDIVAR

LOS ANGELES TIMES

WASHINGTON — Congress is moving to crack down on financial-planning strategies increasingly favored by middle-class families to shift the cost of nursing-home care for elderly parents onto the federal government.

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, on Wednesday denounced the practices as "legal shenanigans" and vowed to help stop maneuvers he said were turning Medicaid into an asset-protection program, instead of what it was supposed to be — an insurer of last resort for elderly persons too poor to afford care.

Under present law, Medicaid, the federal program providing health-care benefits to the poor, will cover nursing home costs if residents can show that they do not have sufficient assets to pay for their own care — which experts say now averages between $50,000 and $70,000 a year.

As costs have risen, it has become commonplace for families to transfer elderly relatives' assets to others — often to adult children or to grandchildren — through gifts or other legal devices in order to keep the assets instead of letting them be used for nursing home care. So widespread is the practice that some estate planners hold seminars complete with video presentations, refreshments, and spreadsheets.

Tightening the rules could save Medicaid between $1 billion and $2 billion over five years, according to Grassley, though Medicaid's long-term care bill is now projected at $290 billion over the next five years.

"PIRATE JUICE"

What you need:

- Large punch bowl
- 750 ml vodka
- Peach schnapps
- Three cans of frozen lemonade
- Pineapple juice
- Oranges
- Cherries

Prepare frozen lemonade as directed, replacing three cans of water with three cans of vodka. Add a liberal amount of peach schnapps and all of the pineapple juice. Garnish with orange slices and cherries.

Nonalcoholic: Skip the vodka and mix the lemonade as directed. Instead of peach schnapps, try pomegranate juice or peach nectar.

BLUE HAWAIIAN

What you need:

- Blender
- 2 oz. coconut rum
- 2 oz. pineapple juice
- 1 oz. Blue Curaçao liqueur
- 1 slice of pineapple
- 1 cup of ice

Blend at high speed until smooth, and garnish with a slice of pineapple.

Nonalcoholic: Replace the liquor with a handful of fresh mixed berries, and add a scoop of sherbet.

SUMMER FLORAL CENTERPIECE

What you need:

- Circular frame or piece of foam board
- Large collection of various fake flowers
- Scissors
- Hot-glue gun and glue
- Tall pillar candle

Pick the flowers off of their stems, and trim away unwanted leaves or pieces of plastic. Hot glue them to the frame or foam board, making sure you cover as much visible area as possible. More flowers provide a thicker centerpiece.

GLAZED ORANGES À LA MODE

What you need:

- Large orange
- Strawberry jam
- Fruit juice or juice concentrate
- Baking sheet
- Ice cream

Peel and separate the orange. Mix a spoonful of jam with a splash of fruit juice, and dip the orange slices in the mixture. Place them on the baking sheet, and broil for one to two minutes. Let the oranges cool for five minutes, and serve with ice cream.

SWEET-AND-SOUR ORANGE CHICKEN PICKERS

What you need:

- Grill and skewers
  - Chicken
  - Sweet-and-sour sauce (available in the foreign-foods section of the grocery store)
  - Oranges
- Optional: Veggies (peppers and onions work best)

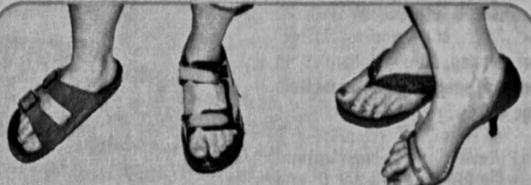

Skewer pieces of chicken and orange alternately (add veggies as you go if you like). Brush a light layer of sweet and sour sauce on the entire skewer, and grill until the chicken is done.

COLORFUL FLOWER LIGHTS

What you need:

- Various colors of construction or vellum paper
- Scissors
- Hole punch
- Christmas lights

Make your Christmas lights work overtime. Cut your paper into squares, and fold it in half twice to make a small square. Trim away the design to make the petals. Open up the flowers, and punch holes in the middle. Remove a bulb gently from the strand of Christmas lights. Put the bulb through the holes in the flowers, and reattach it.

BEAT THE HEAT ON YOUR FEET

Men:

Birkenstocks are a classic choice for summer footwear. Pair with cargo shorts and a light T-shirt to stay cool.

Sports sandals are great for the beach (or the Coralville Reservoir). With a pair of board shorts or swim trunks, you'll be ready and wading.

Women:

Flip-flops are cheap and colorful, and you can buy them almost anywhere. Try a plain pair coupled with denim skirts and a tank top or swimwear.

Dressy sandals are perfect for going out on the town. Match with a colorful sundress and a bright handbag.

Iowa set to host NC State

The Iowa men's basketball team will host perennial rival North Carolina State on Tuesday as part of the Big Ten/ACC Challenge. The game is scheduled for 8:30 p.m. Wednesday. The game will be televised on ESPN2. The Hawkeyes, coming off an NCAA Tournament appearance, return to the Big Ten/ACC Challenge for the first time since the 2002-03 season. "It's exciting to be back in the Challenge and hosting a team in Carver-Hawkeye Arena," Iowa coach Steve Alford said in a statement. "It's a real challenge for our home schedule to host an ACC opponent, and it's an overall non-conference challenge that much stronger."

The Wolfpack posted a record last season, advancing to the Sweet 16 in the NCAA Tournament. The team has three starters and eight reserves. Iowa is 1-3 in the ACC Challenge, defeating Virginia Tech at home in 2001 and Maryland in 2000, 2002, and Florida State in 2003. The remainder of the nonconference schedule is expected to be released in the next two months.

BY TYSON WIRTH
 THE DAILY IOWAN

The dog days of summer can be brutal. With Iowa baseball and softball long out of the picture and the Hawkeye football season-opener still months away, Iowa City can be boring for sports fans. Which is where the UI Karro Athletics Hall of Fame comes in. "The building is unique — I don't think there are three like it on campuses around the country," said Dale Arens, the hall's director. "We had roughly 12,000 people through here last year, but we're never satisfied. I would concede that we're still a well-kept secret." DI reporter Tyson Wirth looks at eight things a Hawkeye fan shouldn't miss at the hall: 8. Go stare at a wall: The ribs of the almost 3-year-old building are incredible. As soon as patrons walk in, they're flanked by two towering walls that boast plaques, pictures, and info bites on the greatest athletes in Iowa history. Keep moving though, or closing time will arrive, and you'll still be trying to absorb everything on just one of these massive surfaces. 7. Shoot a free throw in front of 22,000: The museum, located on west campus near the soccer fields, is home to a mini-gymnasium. The second-floor court boasts a maple floor — exactly like in the old home of Iowa basketball, the Field

Horner faces off with Henderson

BY BRENDAN STILES
 THE DAILY IOWAN

NORTH LIBERTY — If Wednesday night's Prime Time League game was supposed to be a fight between Hawkeye teammates Mike Henderson and Jeff Horner, there wasn't a clear-cut winner. However, Henderson's Deli-Mart/Iowa City Ready Mix team got the best of Horner's team, Carousel Ford Lincoln Mercury, 122-109. Horner, who finished with 35 points and seven assists, spoke highly of Henderson and what he brings to the table every night, even with a deep cut on his chin that he said would require a couple of stitches Wednesday night. "Playing against a kid like Mike helps you work on getting to the basket," Horner said. "I know he's a lot quicker than I am, so anytime I get a chance to go to the basket, I just try to do that, because it's something that I need to work on." Likewise, Henderson, who scored 20 points and grabbed eight rebounds, was complimentary about the player he's been competing with since fifth grade at the AAU level. "We play against each other just about every day, and we always go at each other," Henderson said. "We always play hard against each other, and it's fun to still be playing hard against each other at a collegiate level." Former Hawkeye Kurt Spurgeon started the game out as the hottest shooter on the floor, going 7-of-7 from 3-point range, with six of those coming in the first half for Deli-Mart. Even though Spurgeon finished with 23 points, three more than Henderson, he

NORTH LIBERTY — A mixture of sizzle and steak, style and substance, power and finesse. Adam Haluska's game is full of strengths and lacks any major weaknesses. However, his constantly good yet sometimes unremarkable games last season led the 6-5 junior guard from Carroll, Iowa, to focus on shoring up all aspects of his game this summer. "My 3-point shot has always been there for me," he said. "I've just really been working on bringing the ball up court and my ball-handling skills. I've also been working on all of the little things, too, such as passing and trying to play within myself." A testament to that statement was on display Wednesday, when Haluska paced his Accident Fund Insurance/AW Welt Ambrisco team against

Will Pierre Pierce ever make it to the NBA?

YES

Just like life, there are certainties in sports. Every game, when one team wins, another loses. The pitching mound is always 60-6 from home plate. Football fields will forever be 100 yards long. And when it comes to evaluating individual players, talent will always outweigh character.

So for the same reasons that the Denver Broncos selected Maurice Clarett in the third round of this year's NFL draft, Dennis Rodman had a long and prosperous NBA career, and Ricky Williams will find a new backfield in which to call home, Pierre Pierce will make an NBA roster.

Granted, his legal troubles lowered his draft stock, but he is simply too talented not to take a chance on. On athletic ability alone, he could play for most teams.

Example one: The playoff-bound Chicago Bulls had former Hawkeye Jared Reiner on their roster. And not only was he on the squad, but he actually got playing time — in the playoffs! And Reiner didn't exactly dominate the Big Ten.

So instead, the question shouldn't be if, but rather, when Pierce will make it. We're talking about making the NBA, in which the win-now mindset has the best available talent nightly in fear of losing their respective jobs.

Pierce's off-court troubles also pale in comparison with those of several NBA players. There were more red flags raised about Allen Iverson coming out of college than Pierce, and what exactly has he done to change his image since then? Nothing. It is his talent that got him where he is today, not the public's perception.

So Pierce might not exactly come from the same mold as Tim Duncan, Grant Hill, or Joe Dumars, but still, Pierce has the otherworldly ability to put the ball in the basket.

And after all, that is the object of the game.

NO

If there's one thing we've learned about athletes, it's that they have more chances than NASA to get things right.

However, if you're Pierre Pierce and your legal troubles kept you from any serious pre-draft workouts, the risk doesn't seem even semi-equivalent to the reward. You think the Pacers would have been as loyal if it had been a collect-your-pay-check 12th man instead of Ron Artest who went into the stands? Or that the Vikings would stand for Randy Moss antics from someone other than Randy Moss?

It's about as likely as Pierce ever playing in the NBA.

The former Hawkeye guard may have a few options, if he's cleared of the charges he faces. He could go the National Basketball Development League, make $50,000 a year, and try to work his way through the NBA's wastebasket. Or he could head overseas if he really wants to continue his basketball career. But the reality is, for an alleged two-time offender whose game might have landed him a spot late in the second round with a clean record, it was two times too many.

Sure, Pierce isn't vertically challenged, and he can explode in the open court, but his jump shot is suspect, his free-throw shooting is criminal, and he's careless with the ball.

In Tuesday's draft, several players from prospect powerhouses such as the SEC and the ACC went undrafted. Some believed they had first-round talent. Some did but had attitudes that turned teams away. Some must have been listening to a stockbroker, because they never had a shot. Well, Pierce falls in his own category. Because he never gave himself a shot.

By showing people two chances weren't enough, he made it easy for scouts. They didn't even have to look at him. Earlier this year, he seemed a good bet to go at the back of the draft. Now, he's not even in the back of anybody's mind.

Marquette keeps Golden Eagles nickname

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Marquette will keep its Golden Eagles nickname after all. Following months of controversy, the school said Wednesday that 54 percent of voters picked the Golden Eagles, while 46 percent chose the Hilltoppers, the school's old nickname. About 23,000 Marquette students, alumni, and staff voted. "We did give the people a choice. They want tradition," said the Rev. Robert Wild, Marquette's president. Last year, two Marquette trustees offered to give the school $1 million each if it returned the nickname to Warriors, which was changed in 1994 because it was insensitive to American Indians.

The school rejected the trustees' offer and this spring announced a switch from Golden Eagles to Gold, which was strongly opposed by students and alumni, because they weren't consulted.

The board relented May 11 and opened the issue to a vote, which was held in two phases. The first phase eliminated eight of the 10 options — Blue and Gold, which was Marquette's first nickname from 1892-1916, Explorers, Golden Avalanche, Golden Knights, Saints, Spirit, Voyagers, and Wolves. Marquette said on Wednesday the Golden Eagles name also led the Hilltoppers in the first phase of the voting. Hilltoppers was connected with school athletics from 1917 until it was changed to Warriors in 1954. It was first used because the original Marquette building was built on top of a hill. People cast nearly 5,600 write-in votes during the first round, including 3,264 for Warriors, even though Marquette officials said they wouldn't consider votes for that nickname valid.

Danica? Danica who?

Legge challenging Patrick as racing's first lady

BY TOM WITHERS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND — Katherine Legge plants her foot on the gas pedal of the modified Ford pickup truck she climbed into for the first time minutes earlier, spins the rear tires, and shifts gear.

Barreling down the straightaway at more than 120 mph, Legge (pronounced "leg") seems oblivious to a rapidly approaching tirewall when — VROOM! she slams down the shift, sending the truck into a turbulent sideways slide through the turn. "I'm going to get into trouble for this," she screams above the test truck's roaring engine and screeching rubber. "This really kills the tires, but it's the most fun!"

In her first season driving in the U.S., the carefree and confident Englishwoman is having more fun than even she could have imagined.

While Danica Patrick has become racing's darling following her historic rookie run at the Indy 500, Legge already has done something that Patrick couldn't in two years driving in the Toyota Atlantic Series: win.

On April 10 at Long Beach, Calif., Legge, who crashed during qualifying and damaged her car in the first few laps, became the first woman to win an open-wheel race in North America.

Patrick may be the one appearing on David Letterman and the cover of Sports Illustrated, but Legge could be gaining on her.

"I'm in her shadow," said Legge, quickly casting one of her own. The bubbly 24-year-old, whose first exposure to racing came as a 9-year-old when she got behind the wheel of a go-kart while on vacation in Spain, is in fifth place in the overall standings in Toyota Atlantic, Katherine Legge (right) zips along on her motorscooter toward the pits to get ready for qualifying for the Toyota Atlantic race in Cleveland on June 25. Legge has done something in the Toyota Atlantic Series that much-hyped Danica Patrick hasn't in two years: win.

Champ Car's pipeline program. A relative novice to pro racing, Legge is getting better every time out of the pits. Her hope is to one day drive in Champ Car or in the Indy Racing League with Patrick.

"If I can learn everything I need to learn, win a few more races, and compete for the championship this year," she said, "then there is no reason why I shouldn't move on to something else. All I need is experience." Legge has passion and drive — lots of it. "I've never had anything handed to me on a platter," said the native of Northampton, England. After competing in a Renault Series last season, Legge wanted to try IRL, and she paid her own way to Texas for a team test drive. Although she was one of the fastest drivers among a group of men, she was turned down.

Determined to advance her dream, she found out that Champ Car co-owner Kevin Kalkhoven was coming to England to do business at Cosworth, which builds engines for the series. When Kalkhoven arrived at Cosworth, Legge was waiting in the lobby, resumé in hand.

"I told him I wanted to drive and that I was as good as any driver he had," she said. "How did she know that?" "That's what he said," Legge recalls with a laugh. "But I had been racing against people in Europe, and I always knew that I could do it."

Kalkhoven put her in touch with Pam and Jim Griffith, the owners of Polestar Racing, based in Chardon, Ohio. Upon their first meeting with her, the Griffiths were taken by Legge's charm. Her talent soon caught their eyes, too.

A trove of memories

'The building is unique — I don't think there are three like it on campuses around the country. We had roughly 12,000 people through here last year, but we're never satisfied. I would concede that we're still a well-kept secret.'

House — and the sound of 22,000-plus rabid fans plays when patrons shoot. A field-goal post also exists but isn't used anymore, because, as 87-year-old ambassador Charlie Smith put it, "We have to be careful of injuries." Bet you've never heard that in a museum before.

6. Get in touch with technology: The hall is home to a mini-theater that raises hair and heart rates by showing last season's football highlights. Fans can see everything from The Catch to Iowa's first touchdown against Kent State. In addition, there are several interactive monitors that contain databases of past letter winners, legendary teams, and memorable moments in Hawkeye history. Visitors can view anything from the infamous 1953 Fainting Irish football game to the 1992-93 women's Final Four squad that went 15-0 at home.

5. Memorize Nile Kinnick's Heisman speech: While submerged in a recording of the Heisman winner's speech, visitors can marvel at a Sports Action comic book with the halfback on the front, bowling over four helpless opponents. A game worn uniform by the legend is also present, complete with cup holder and all. Patrons could spend an entire day at this single section, but more treasures remain.

"For me, the Nile Kinnick exhibit is the heart of the museum," Smith said. "Nile was not only a wonderful athlete but eloquent and a brilliant speaker. At age 22, he thought like a 52-year-old."

4. Brush up on your history: Who knew that Fred "Duke" Slater was Iowa's first black All-American more than 80 years ago or that he is the man Slater Hall was named after in 1972? Or that prior to 1916, there was no admission fee (oh, how the wallet yearns to rewind time) for football games? Or that in 1937, Nile Kinnick led the nation in punting at more than 43 yards per attempt? That trivia is smaller than a Fred Russell footstep when compared with everything even a seasoned Hawkeye fan can learn at the historical exhibits.

3. Host a party: "[Former Iowa basketball guard] Ryan Luehrsmann held a wedding reception here recently. We've had everything from birthdays to coaches' conventions to bar mitzvahs to 50th wedding anniversaries," Smith said. The museum does have its advantages — the entire building is air-conditioned, parking is free, and a kitchen allows for easy catering of almost any event. Just be sure there's no one from Ames in your party.

2. Go back to the future: Younger fans may find it hard to connect to the legends of Iowa yesteryear. Everyone, though, can appreciate seeing pictures of Robert Gallery's grungy locks hovering over the Outland Trophy. And it seems like just yesterday when former football coach Hayden Fry prowled the sidelines of Kinnick in his homemade ostrich-skin boots, which are proudly on display. It's not all football memorabilia either — each men's and women's varsity sport has its own section, as do the Marching

1. Speak with a legend: Imagine entering the complex and being spotted by two elderly gentlemen sporting vests and kind smiles. They shout a greeting and wave you over, where the first thing you notice about the nearest man (the one who graduated from Iowa with Nile Kinnick in 1940) is a tiny gold Tiger Hawk sticker in the bottom corner of his Coke bottle-thick eyeglasses.

He pulls up a chair for you and asks how long he has for the tour. You tell him about your meeting in an hour, but 45 minutes later, ambassador Smith is only gaining steam, telling you about a pair of geese that like to visit the museum and how when geese mate they mate for life.

You don't have the heart to tell him you must depart, so you skip the meeting and enjoy the Hawkeye history lesson for another 45 minutes without a second of regret. Such is the magic of the Hall of Fame ambassadors.

HALUSKA

Asoyia/Steindler Orthopedic with 38 spectacular points along with six rebounds and four assists in a 113-100 loss. He also managed to energize a somewhat lethargic crowd with a powerful dunk in which he slammed on two opponents as the first-half buzzer sounded.

The loss was a total team effort, though; no one on Accident Fund had an answer for Greg Brunner, Haluska's Iowa teammate. He was a force on both ends of the court, finishing with 30 points, 18 rebounds, and seven assists, along with several monster rejections on the defensive end.

Because of Brunner's equally impressive display, Haluska was not too disappointed with the outcome.

"Brunner's team is playing really well right now, and it is a pretty deep team all the way through," he said. "Maybe we'll get them in the playoffs. Next time, we might win. It all depends on who is on each night."

Although the Prime Time offers many players an opportunity to get back into playing shape, Haluska said he and his Hawkeye teammates have more important things on their minds.

"We all know that we are talented enough to win an outright Big Ten championship, and then from there," he said. "I'd love to go to the Final Four. We might as well set our goals lofty, because Brunner, [Jeff] Horner, Erik Hansen, and Doug Thomas are in their last years."

Despite improved statistics, playing time, and accolades, Haluska admitted that the most important thing that he gained last year was experience. When Pierre Pierce was dismissed in early February, it didn't necessarily mean that Haluska, who was already a starter, would be playing more.

Instead, he was counted on to not only provide the scoring punch that was lacking, but also the leadership — a role he admits to not necessarily being ready for.

"Last year, my biggest thing was to let the other guys who had played a couple years do their thing, and I would try to do some of the dirty work," he said. "I didn't think it was my role to come in and be a big factor."

Let last year be a lesson. He was only two years removed from suiting up for Iowa State. And amid all the distractions, he managed to steadily improve as the season went on.

With improved ball handling and sharper decision-making to go with a silky-smooth jumper and Iowa's best dribble-drive combination, Haluska will force opponents to game plan against him.

Kind of like how teams used to prepare for Iowa when Pierce was on the floor.

said Henderson's a good teammate because he provides more than scoring.

"He plays hard all the time," Spurgeon said. "He handles the ball well, and he plays tough D."

Ex-Hawkeye Darryl Moore, who led Carousel Ford in scoring with 36 points, said he enjoys playing alongside Horner because he feels that he has knowledge about certain situations and how to handle them as a point guard.

"It's always good to play with a good point guard," Moore said. "He knows the game and has got a lot of experience. He knows when to take shots and when to take over the game and knows when to get individual players the ball when they need it and where they need it."

Both Horner and Henderson also felt that being able to compete in Prime Time improves their playing abilities in a lot of ways, because they compete against guys from other schools and work on playing with other guys as a team.

"With all the other guys in this league, it's just great competition, and it gives you a chance to play in game-type situations, which you can't get in the summer when you're playing against your own teammates," Horner said. "It's just a good environment with people coming to watch, and it keeps you going throughout the year."

Henderson enjoys playing because he likes being able to improve in areas that he couldn't improve on if he wasn't competing.

"You're able to see the little things — like getting your players involved, coming off pick-and-rolls, seeing all your options you have — things like that that you might not get to work on a day-in, day-out basis, when you're working on your game by yourself," he said.

Wakefield, BoSox hold off Indians

BOSTON (AP) — Doug Mirabelli and Mark Bellhorn hit consecutive homers in a four-run sixth inning that backed Tim Wakefield, and the Boston Red Sox beat the Cleveland Indians 5-2 Wednesday.

Wakefield's scoreless streak of 19 innings ended in the fifth when Casey Blake tied the game 1-1 with his 10th homer. Victor Martinez's ninth homer gave Cleveland a 2-1 lead in the sixth.

Aaron Boone went 0-for-3 against Wakefield with a groundout and two flyouts. Boone faced the knuckleballer for the first time since his 11th-inning homer capped the New York Yankees' comeback in Game 7 of the 2003 AL championship series.

Wakefield (7-6) allowed two runs and five hits in seven innings, improving to 3-0 in his last four starts after losing five in a row. Matt Mantei pitched a hitless eighth, and Mike Timlin finished with a two-hit ninth for his first save since April 24 last year — just his fourth in three seasons with the Red Sox.

Boston, coming off a 12-8 loss, had six hits in the sixth inning for the second-straight day and took a 5-2 lead off Scott Elarton (4-3).

Astros 7, Rockies 1

DENVER (AP) — Craig Biggio homered and set the modern record for being hit by pitches, and Roy Oswalt pitched seven scoreless innings for his fourth straight win to lift the Houston Astros over the Colorado Rockies 7-1 Wednesday.

Biggio was hit on the left elbow in the fourth inning by Byung-Hyun Kim (2-7), breaking Don Baylor's post-1900 record of 267.

Oswalt (10-7) allowed six hits, struck out six and walked one. Morgan Ensberg hit his 20th homer, Jason Lane added his 13th and the Astros stole six bases as they won for the seventh time in nine games. Kim (2-7) gave up three runs — two earned — six hits and three walks in five innings.

Dodgers 4, Padres 2

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jeff Weaver (7-7) allowed one run and six hits in 7½ innings, and Antonio Perez broke a 1-1 tie in the fifth with a three-run homer off Darrell May (1-3). Los Angeles won for just the fourth time in 16 games.

Yhency Brazoban worked the ninth for his 15th save, allowing an RBI double to pinch-hitter Mark Sweeney.

Blue Jays 12, Devil Rays 3

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Toronto's Josh Towers didn't allow a hit until the seventh inning and won for the first time since May 17.

Towers (6-7) allowed just one runner through six innings, hitting Nick Green with a pitch in the third, then gave up Aubrey Huff's ground single to left with one out in the seventh.

Towers, 0-6 in his previous seven starts since winning at Minnesota, gave up one run and two hits in seven innings, struck out a season-high seven and walked one. Five of the strikeouts were called.

Coming in, opponents were batting .301 against him. Scott Downs and Justin Speier completed the four-hitter.

Rookie Russ Adams homered and drove in a career-high five runs for the Blue Jays (40-39), hitting a three-run homer in the second off Mark Hendrickson (3-5) and a two-run double in the eighth against Trevor Miller.

Royals 3, Twins 1

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — David DeJesus had four hits with an RBI and D.J. Carrasco rebounded from a rough start last week to help Kansas City end an eight-game losing streak.

Kansas City avoided a franchise-worst 0-9 road trip, a mark set in 1986 and matched in 2000. New manager Buddy Bell's young team started 12-6 after he was hired, then skidded again.

Carrasco (3-3), making his ninth start of the season, gave up eight runs in 3½ innings at Colorado last week. He allowed one run and five hits in 6½ innings. Mike MacDougal got four outs for his ninth save in 11 chances.

Brad Radke (5-8) lost his fourth-straight start, yielding three runs and 10 hits without a walk in seven innings while striking out five.

White Sox 4, Tigers 3, 13 innings

DETROIT (AP) — Frank Thomas homered leading off the 13th inning to give Chicago the victory.

Paul Konerko also homered for Chicago, and Chris Shelton, who had a career-high four hits, connected for Detroit.

Shinjo Takatsu (1-2) pitched 2½ innings for the win. He worked out of a one-out bases loaded jam in the 13th, striking out Brandon Inge and getting Placido Polanco to hit a grounder to second to end it.

Fernando Rodney (2-1) allowed Thomas' home run.

Rangers 7, Angels 6, 11 innings

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Alfonso Soriano's two-out RBI single in the 11th inning lifted the Rangers over Los Angeles.

Mark Teixeira had a one-out infield single off Scot Shields (6-5) and advanced to second on a wild pitch. Soriano followed with a looping fly to short right field that fell between second baseman Adam Kennedy and right fielder Vladimir Guerrero to drive in Teixeira.

Kameron Loe (1-1) allowed one hit in two innings for his first major-league victory.

The Rangers carried a 6-4 lead into the ninth and closer Francisco Cordero got the first two outs, but Jeff DaVanon doubled and Dallas McPherson hit a pinch homer on an 0-2 pitch to tie the game.

'Freer' Roddick flies

BY HOWARD FENDRICH
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WIMBLEDON, England — Andy Roddick knows he's a work in progress, a young player with a record-setting serve, a fearsome forehand, a Grand Slam title, and key parts of his game that occasionally let him down.

That's why he was so pleased that excellence in two troublesome areas, volleying and returning, played such a large part in a 3-6, 6-2, 6-1, 3-6, 6-3 victory over No. 9-seeded Sebastien Grosjean on Wednesday, which put Roddick in the Wimbledon semifinals for the third-straight year.

Roddick has accomplished plenty, but he seems to be carrying a slightly manufactured chip on his shoulder now that it's been 21 months since he won the U.S. Open and his ranking has dropped from No. 1 to No. 4. A long drought and big drop? Not in the least. But add in a five-match losing streak in five-setters coming to the All England Club, and even Roddick might have been excused for harboring doubts.

By outlasting Grosjean to join Roger Federer, Lleyton Hewitt, and Thomas Johansson in the final four — the first time since 1993 all of Wimbledon men's semifinalists owned major titles — Roddick maintained he took a step toward reestablishing himself.

Anja Niedringhaus/Associated Press

Andy Roddick returns to Sebastien Grosjean during their quarterfinal match at Wimbledon on Wednesday.

"I feel freer. A lot freer," said Roddick, who lost in the second round at the French Open. "There was a lot of heat on me coming into this tournament. I wanted to prove that I'm still a pretty good tennis player. I'm not gone. I'm 22 years old.

"I'm still up in the world, still competing for Slams, basically three out of four of them, throughout the year. I felt like I still deserved a little bit of respect. But that being said, I'd love to take it further. I'm not satisfied yet."

He certainly wouldn't be all that pleased with a loss Friday to the 12th-seeded Johansson, who beat No. 18 David Nalbandian (7-6 [5], 6-2, 6-2) to reach the second major semifinal of his 11-year pro career. The other? Johansson won the 2002 Australian Open; his progress was stymied when left knee surgery wiped out his entire 2003 season.

CRUEL SUMMER FUN ON CAMPUS

— by David Ancelet

• Go to a Summer Rep show and heckle the actors.

• When approached by a lost Orientation student looking for parents, direct him to the Oakdale bus and tell him to get off at the last stop.

• Play phone tag on the blue emergency phones. Run like hell.

• Try to argue for a minority scholarship on the basis of being double-jointed.

• Pose as a hot lady. E-mail Beau Elliot, and tell him you actually think he's witty.

• Sneak into a campus tour and continually ask, "Are we there yet?"

• Take a bongo drum and knock on President Skorton's door. Ask if he wants to jam.

• Spraypaint "Pepsi Kills Workers" around campus. See what kind of a following it gets.

• Take advantage of free university counseling by making regular appointments to address lost causes, such as your apprehension over Steve Alford's coaching abilities.

• Guys, go to Student Health and say your condom broke and request morning after pills. Wait, I don't think that Student Health would buy that.

quote of the day

[Iranian President-elect Mahmoud Ahmadinejad] is the guy. There's no question about it. You could make him a blond and shave his whiskers, put him in a zoot suit, and I'd still spot him.

— Chuck Scott, a retired Army colonel who was one of the 52 Americans held hostage for 444 days after militant Iranian students seized the U.S. Embassy in Tehran on Nov. 4, 1979.

horoscopes

Thursday, June 30, 2005
— by Eugenia Last

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Don't take sides or try to put the blame on someone else today. Protect your own interests; anger will lead to more trouble. Don't let work-related problems affect your personal life.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be aggressive if you want things to happen. All talk and no action will lead to disappointment. Make changes that reflect the lifestyle you see yourself living. It's a new beginning.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Don't let emotional issues lead you down the wrong path. Confront someone who isn't being upfront with you. Read between the lines to get a true sense of what is going on. Romance is looking good.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You may have to juggle more than you are prepared to do, but if you refrain from letting yourself get upset, you will feel good at the end of the day. Put your memory and imagination to good use, and you will come out on top.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Don't let personal issues get you down. It's only a matter of time before the tide turns, so let it go. Don't neglect your responsibilities, or someone you thought you could count on will not be in your corner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You can accomplish what you want by going through the back door. An aggressive attitude will show everyone you mean business. Love and romance may be changeable, but the outcome will be beneficial.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may want to help out an organization or even a friend, but don't let either cost you financially. You stand a far better chance of really doing something worthwhile if you make suggestions and physically assist in some manner.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Don't take everything to heart, but be aware of a pending problem with a partner. Get everything in writing before you agree to proceed with a project. Your ability and talent are obvious, so don't be taken for granted.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Get busy, and you will achieve all that you set out to do. Your determination to do your best work will be recognized by someone who can help you in the future. Advancement is headed your way.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Focus on business and personal partnerships. This is a perfect day to settle disagreements or to set up plans for future events, activities, or deals. Don't give your money freely to an organization that hasn't proven to be legitimate.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A partner you thought you could count on is likely to take a turn, leaving you alone. Take care of your own responsibilities. Don't fool yourself — look at all sides before taking action.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Change is good. The sooner you realize that, the sooner you will be able to take advantage of the opportunities around you. A romantic encounter is looking positive. Be creative in your approach to love.
