TEXTBOOK CASE

New law would curb texts’ cost

BY PATRICK DAVIS

A measure recently proposed by Rep. David Wu, D-Ore., would make it a violation for school employees to disclose how much textbooks cost before students register for classes.

Also, book publishers would have to detail students’ options and estimated costs for textbooks and other learning materials.

The bill, which would also permit publishers to print textbooks on demand, would allow schools to purchase new or used textbooks and prevent students from using computers to order textbooks.

In the operating area of the center, one of the new computer labs is dedicated to the University Book Store on Monday. A proposal to ban the U.S. House of Representatives would allow students to be charged less for textbooks than they are already charged by some bookstores.

The proposal is aimed at lowering the cost of textbooks and other learning materials.

When asked if she had the air conditioning on, Iowa City resident Kathy Black said, “No, I don’t think so.”

Black, who lives in Pleasant Ridge Apartments for seniors, spoke more slowly when discussing her increasing bills. The increase in heating and cooling costs for many tenants has been noticed as temperatures soar.

“Sweat-drenched is a good way to describe it,” said Black, who has lived in the county since 1995. She said she has noticed the lack of space, but it’s necessary for her family.

The $522,000 of the lack of space, is the cost of shipping the inmate overflow out of the Johnson County Jail, according to Iowa City’s treasurer.

While local officials say the high cost of transporting inmates is a burden, they also say the cost is unavoidable, given the state’s budgetary constraints.

Chicago — Steaming temperatures surpassed the 100-degree mark for the first time in six years, prompting Chicago officials to implement an emergency-response plan developed after hundreds of people died in a heat wave a decade ago.

According to the National Weather Service, the temperature reached 104 degrees, just one degree above the highest temperature ever recorded in Chicago, according to the National Weather Service.

The Fire Department said three people appeared to have died of heat-related illnesses, but their confirmation could take days.

If you're at risk who look dead in 1995, it was not completely clear if the deaths had occurred. A group of people was found dead in a home in the village of Sycamore, Ill., but there was no report of death. The total number of deaths in the region has not been released.

Chicago had a heat wave last week. The highest temperature was 106 degrees, but the heat index was much higher, reaching into the 110s in some areas.

The heat wave was caused by a high-pressure system that moved through the area, bringing extremely hot and humid conditions.

At least 300 doses of the Moderna vaccine were administered last week, including 125 doses at the University of Iowa College of Medicine.

Patriot Act move draws fire

By PATRICK DAVIS

In a landmark vote in a 2002 special session, Iowa lawmakers gave initial approval to a bill that would restrict the rights of the media in the face of national security threats.

The bill, which was approved by the Iowa Senate on Wednesday, would give the governor the power to suspend certain constitutional rights in the event of a national emergency.

State Rep. Wade Edmisten, R-Des Moines, said the bill was necessary to protect the state from terrorist attacks.

"This is a very important bill for our state," Edmisten said. "We need to be able to protect our citizens from potential threats." But others said the bill could infringe on the First Amendment rights of journalists.

"This is an affront to the First Amendment," said State Rep. Mike Gallagher, D-Des Moines. "This is an attempt to stifle the media and prevent them from doing their job." The bill now goes to the governor for his signature.

New water plant harnesses algae

By DANY VALENTIN

Iowa City officials are planning to build a new water treatment plant that will use algae to purify the city's water.

The plant will use a process called algal aerobics, which involves growing algae in a large tank and then using the algae to remove contaminants from the water.

The city has been working on this project for several years and has already received some state funding.

"We're excited about this project," said Iowa City Mayor Jim Throgmorton. "It's a great way to reduce our reliance on traditional water treatment methods." The new plant is expected to be operational by 2023.

Editorial: Staff Council stands up

In this era of downsizing, the University of Iowa is not immune to the trend. To make matters worse, the latest round of mass layoffs is causing University of Iowa students and employees to begin to panic. This is why it is difficult to see what, if anything, we’re supposed to be outraged over.

Earlier this month, the Student Daily reported on the resignation of Dean John McCain. Having joined the University of Iowa’s chapter of the American Association of University Women (AAUW), he is now committed to ensuring that women are included in the conversation regarding the University of Iowa and the professional world. His role will be to promote the AAUW’s mission of equity for women and girls.

On the other hand, we cannot ignore the fact that the layoffs have caused serious financial problems. This is why it is crucial to support the AAUW and other organizations that work towards creating a more equitable society.

In conclusion, we urge our readers to stay informed and to support organizations that work towards creating a more equitable society.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

The University of Iowa is a wonderful place to work, but it seems that the university administration is failing to consider the opinions of the students and employees. In my opinion, the administration should be more transparent and inclusive in their decision-making process.

Sincerely,

NASA may launch shuttle despite rules

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — With the centennial entering its final hours and a fuel gauge problem still unexplained, NASA is prepared to go forward with its main safety concern: preventing hydrogen fuel gases in the spacecraft's main external tank.

Slightly less than the fuel gauge, could ultimately decide whether the five-week delay takes off or not. NASA Administrator Dan B. Teplitzki said the fuel gauge reading was off slightly, and the problem remained unresolved.

NASA officials were set to blight off the launch attempt at 10:39 a.m. EDT, after a two-hour delay because of the hydrogen fuel gases in the spacecraft's main external tank.

Although the fuel gauge was off slightly, it was expected that the fuel would be enough for the launch weather at all times, with more fuel added before the launch attempt.

The paperwork was ready to go in to ease the suspension of the fuel gauge problem, and the space agency's managers decided to press ahead with the launch. The fuel gauge reading was off slightly, and the problem remained unresolved.

"It's an unfortunate risk," Teplitzki said in an interview with the Associated Press on Monday. "But we'll go with the numbers and the numbers and the numbers."

NASA Administrator John M. Kline said he didn't know all the details, but When asked what it meant to have the fuel gauge problem, which first was noted on July 13 and April and resurfaced during the last attempt on July 17, NASA received two of the more "in the know" and agreed to delay the launch attempt.

This was his first assault on a dangerous weapon. A man who allegedly stood in the neighbor, according to records, failed to get police cooperation.

"It's an unfortunate risk," Teplitzki said in an interview with the Associated Press on Monday. "But we'll go with the numbers and the numbers and the numbers."

PARIS -- Life after Lance begins in France with a bead. "Never in my life," probably, has the departure of a champion been welcomed with such an outpouring of tears and sighs as the one that followed Armstrong's departure in Europe-Ullrich won the race that had just finished on the Champs-Elysees, a thump in the face to Armstrong and his team. "It's not only the end of an era," Lance said Tuesday. "It's the end of an era." Lance added: "That's no truce to what he did to himself, no way to express his place in the history of the Tour, no way to show he's not a man."

Armstrong is no man, he's a god, a French newspaper announced. Almost everybody is in tears, saying that Lance was like a son to them. The world's media have followed Lance's every move, weeps every week except and made this the Chatel Thomas of the Cycle World. More Americans are crying today than ever before, and some of the Tret brand, which Armstrong's cycling shoes have been used since 1964. Newsweek's cover this week was the Armstrong in a yellow suit, and his arm had a red cross. The Armstrong is no man, he's a god, and they're still rolling out of the observatory.

John Burke, the CEO of the Tour de France, said in a press conference like a son to Armstrong's home town. "It's a great day for the sport of cycling, and it's a great day for France," Burke said. "It's a great day for France, and it's a great day for Armstrong," Burke said. "It's a great day for Armstrong, and it's a great day for France."
