UIHC a leader in paperless community

BY KATHERINE BIZAN

Hospitals nationwide are moving toward paperless record-keeping, and the UI is leading that trend, with many of its reports already accessible online, officials said.

For years, the UI Hospitals and Clinic's laboratory and radiology reports have been accessible via the Internet, and already these departments, along with the Health Information Management, in 1997, class notes and discharge summaries were also made available for general electronic access.

"We have a wealth of info, because we have years and years of information online," Craft said.

With some health-care workers saying that the paperless is total, the UI is committed to making sure that their systems are not purely interactive for the patients and doctors as in the UIHC.

Many other hospitals merely manufacturers of medical documents for keeping-hurting purposes, but the UIHC system allows med-

UI junior communication-studies major Scott Beck (center) is surprised by his friends, media members, and an MTV-U on Monday night as he discovers that he won the nationwide Best Film on Campus contest. Beck, who thought he was going to surprise friend Bryan Woods (left), with the award and his own MTV-U commitment, won a development deal with MTV Films for his movie, University Insights.

UI Junior Wins MTV Film Award

With a Grammy-nominated record, a TV show and a record deal with a major label, University of Iowa student Bryan Woods is living the dream of being a musician, but he never dreamed he'd have a career in film too.

Woods, a junior in communications, was surprised Monday night by his friends and classmates when he learned that he had been chosen to be MTV's Best Film winner.

"I just want to say first of all, my family, friends and everyone involved in this project have been so supportive," Woods said. "This is one of the best opportunities I could have ever received.

The award was presented to Woods by MTV's Vice President of Development, Bruce Bailey, and the crowd erupted in applause as Woods began his acceptance speech.

"This is a big deal," Woods said. "I've been working on this project for two years and it's really amazing to see it come together.

University Insights is about the experiences of college students and their efforts to change the world through music and art. The film follows Woods, who is a self-proclaimed "punker," as he travels across the country to document the lives of other students who are also making a difference.

"We're all working towards a common goal of creating a better world," Woods said. "This is an opportunity to share our stories with the world and inspire others to do the same.

Woods has already received offers from several movie studios to work on his film, but he is most excited about the development deal he received from MTV Films. The deal includes funding for the film, marketing support, and a potential distribution deal.

"I'm really excited about this opportunity," Woods said. "It's a dream come true.

University Insights is expected to premiere in fall 2005, and Woods is already at work on the next project, which he hopes will be another film exploring the lives of college students.

The award ceremony was attended by Woods' family and friends, including his parents, sister, and several of his classmates who were involved in the production.

"We're so proud of Bryan," said his mother, lorna Woods. "He's been working on this project for so long and it's really amazing to see it finally come to fruition.

Official wants to lower drinking age for troops

BY AMANDA MASKER

Despite the right to sign and vote, the president, and your lawns on the first, one thing 18-year-olds legally cannot do is have a beer.

New Hampshire state Rep. Stephen Smith wants to change that for a special sector of 18-year-olds in his state.

The Democrat has sponsored a bill to lower the legal drinking age to military personnel in order to prevent the United States from "reprisal-garbage," the young men and women who are sent to Iraq from being denied a beer, a glass of wine before they leave for war.

"This is not a way to reward or punish the troops," Smith said on Monday.

But the military does not seek such special accommodations, an official representing former soldiers said on Monday.

"We wear the uniform to protect the rights of all people," said Lt. Col. Greg Hagedorn, the public-affairs officer for the local National Guard. "We don't want to be treated any different.

In praise of great editorialists

BY ERIKA BINES

While reading from his new book, Pulitzer Prize winner and state Board of Regents President Michael Gartner on Monday reminisced about the glory days of editorial writing.

When penning his book Outrage: Passion, Emotion, and Uncommon Sense: How Editorial Writers Have Taken on the Great American Issues of the Past 150 Years, he chose seven to eight major themes of American history to be written about.

During the "Live From Prairie Lights" reading, Gartner named the six greatest editorial writers.

The journalist of nearly 30 years said all great editorial reporters and editors exhibit "corrective" writing. "For a reader, their theme is to help shape the world." He cited various topics such as war, freedom, equality, and Emancipation Proclamation.

"In this country, there have to be a number of critical voices," Gartner said. "The role of the news media is to be the voice of the people, to be an instrument of democracy."

WASHINGTO N — It looked like a scene when little Alexandra Gonzales jerked and then went limp, heavily breathing. A frantic run to the hospital led to a diagnosis of meningitis. Her parents thought she was dying.

Just days before her first birthday, she had had a stroke. "We never knew children could have strokes," says her mother, Bonnie Gonzales. "It's a rare occurrence."

The Gonzaleses learned that strokes can strike even the youngest patients. "And we were watching our little girl die," says her father, Fred D. Gonzales. "That's why it's so traumatic."

Sixteen-month-old Alexandra Gonzales received for cerebral from a head to a brain that was being shredded by a 10-year-old boy. She was born in the hospital, where she was diagnosed with a perinatal infection.

But because she was born at home, she never had the opportunity to receive appropriate medical care. She was rushed to the hospital after her parents noticed that she was not eating well or moving around as usual.

While she was in the hospital, her parents were told that she had suffered a stroke. "We were devastated," says her mother. "We thought she was going to die."

But奇迹地, she survived. "We were so lucky," says her father. "We were so lucky that she survived."

The Gonzaleses are now working to raise awareness about the dangers of meningitis. "We want people to know that meningitis is a real disease," says her mother. "And we want people to be aware of the signs and symptoms."

Like most meningitis cases, this one was caused by Haemophilus influenzae type b. The disease is highly contagious and can be prevented by vaccination.

But because the Gonzaleses did not vaccinate their daughter, she was at risk. "We didn't think it was necessary," says her father. "We thought it was just a little cold."

The Gonzaleses are now calling for better meningitis education. "We want people to be more informed," says her mother. "We want people to know what to look for."

"I can follow the pulsating Mountain Dew and swaying in theصن on the "no-bridge" movie. A piece of pudding cheese winning over his head passed his response only a second, the hand-drawn collage that filled the wall in front of him, and the sound of the phone ringing in his ears.

I have been critical of the Bush administration, saying Plame’s identity and when he disclosed her to reporters was a gross, even malicious, breach of national security. Plame was employed by the Central Intelligence Agency as a State Department political analyst and I was concerned about her going public with her analysis of Iraq’s nuclear program.

Chris, you’ve talked about the importance of keeping secrets, but you’ve been criticized for not releasing information about the war in Iraq. What are your thoughts on this?

Well, I think it’s important to be transparent in what we do, but I also think it’s important to protect our sources and methods. I believe that we’re not doing enough to protect our sources and methods, and I believe that we need to do more to protect them.

I think that the way that the Bush administration has handled this issue has been inappropriate. They’ve been trying to downplay the significance of the special prosecutor’s investigation, and that’s not the way that we should be handling this issue.

I think that it’s important for us to be transparent, but it’s also important for us to protect our sources and methods. We need to do a better job of protecting our sources and methods, and we need to be more transparent in what we do.

I think that it’s important for us to be transparent, but it’s also important for us to protect our sources and methods. We need to do a better job of protecting our sources and methods, and we need to be more transparent in what we do.

Soldiers and the drinking age

That 18-20 year olds can serve in the military is commonly given as a reason to lower the drinking age. This particular point could be made by a bill pending before the Legislature in New Hampshire, which would allow military personnel to purchase alcohol once they turn 18. The bill would remove a persuasive argument from those in favor of lowering the drinking age overall, but it should raise serious questions about special treat- ment given to certain government employees if the matter must be dealt with. The New Hampshire bill would drag across 11th and 12th graders and others under similar qualifications, such as whether the person had actually served in the armed forces. We have repeatedly urged legislators to consider lowering the drinking age, and in this regard, we applaud these attempts. However, such a law would privilege some unfairly. Professors who work for the betterment of the country and who will be voluntarily raising the age of our soldiers, Americans would not be eligible for these perks, although their service to the country is every bit as valuable. Moreover, the benefit of being able to drink alcohol two years earlier may seem to be in competition with other benefits that volunteers themselves are deprived of, including counseling, the medical care, psychological treatment, and salary raises should not be limited to the right to drink beer. Furthermore, veterans already have a higher incidence of alcoholism than the general public.

We feel that this bill might provide benefits to some young people, but there is no assurance that the military personnel would use the new alcohol perks. The government would not be able to get these parties under control, and there is no assurance that the military would cancel some of the other benefits that volunteers have. Some might say that the military personnel would use the new alcohol perks, but there is no assurance that the military would cancel some of the other benefits that volunteers have.

Soldiers and the drinking age

Pro-war forces are anti-union, and nobody is more pro-war than the Irani- can military. If war today the U.S. Congress will not take back from Alabama without a fight. And the Warrior Network will not be assimilated into the military's ranks. That way, the argument goes, reform can come from within.

As a Red Army leader, I'm unconvinced that reform can ever occur.

I think the military is part of a coordinated day of national action by the Campus Antiwar Committee, and ROTC on the UI campus. So I go to the president's office, because I'm sure that the president of the United States will be the last to approve the invasion of Iraq."

What do our soldiers deserve?

I'll look forward to hearing from you.

I'm sure that I'm going to be shocked and awed by the best of them. (That's the truth). But sometimes I just want to know something. I figure that you're the one who has the answers.

What do our soldiers deserve? What do our soldiers deserve? What do our soldiers deserve?

I believe that the military's mission is so confused, that if I had to explain it, I'd say to myself, "You're still stuck in that reality." And that's the truth.

In an interview with The Daily Iowan, Adam Greenberg, who was born into the Religious Left and is most famous for resurrecting his career after faking his own death in the Sunset Strip parking lot, said:

"I've always been a big fan of the Religious Left, and I'm excited to be back in Iowa City to share my thoughts and experiences with the students. It's been a long time since I've been in Iowa, and I'm looking forward to seeing how much the city has changed since I was last here."

Greenberg, who is known for his stand-up comedy and political commentary, said he is looking forward to performing at the Iowa City Public Library on Wednesday night.

"I've been to Iowa City before, and I always enjoy the energy and enthusiasm of the audience. I'm looking forward to sharing my thoughts on a wide range of topics, from politics to pop culture to personal anecdotes."

The event is free and open to the public, and it will begin at 8 p.m. at the Iowa City Public Library. For more information, visit thelibraryiowa.com.
Saddam-trial witness recounts torture, killings

BAGHDAD — The first wit­ness in the Saddam Hussein trial offered chilling accounts of the Iraqi leader's government, using electric shocks and prison guards in a 1995 attack on Israeli tourists in Jerusalem, as the defense expanded its arguments for a retrial on Wednesday.

Rashid al-Hashim, who is the founder of a secret police unit in Baghdad, said that he had been kept in solitary confinement in a secret police center in Baghdad while he was tortured for 70 days. He said the detainees were kept in "Tall 68." But defense lawyers ques­tioned the reliability of witnesses who were only 15 outside a mall Monday, which was the scene of the attack, and walked from the scene of the attack, and walked from the scene of the attack.

The trial's first witness, Mohammed Amin, a prisoner at the time, said that he was taken from a car by Israeli police and interrogated, and shouted together, "Long live Iraq!"

Tickets sold out

Nashville fans lined up at the Music City Center in Nashville on Monday, a day after the NCAA announced that the Jan. 2 bowl game would be held in Nashville instead of Oklahoma City.

The Music City Center ticket office was packed Monday morning.

"The Nashville ticket office has never had this many tickets sold at one time," said John Motley, the executive director of the Music City Center.

Nashville is the third city to host a bowl game this year.

"We're really excited," said Motley. "This is a great opportunity for Nashville to showcase its events and attractions."
The best college QB ever?

BY JOHN NADEL

WEST BRANCH - The national championship season is underway and the Heisman race is heating up. As the season unfolds, several quarterbacks will emerge as front-runners for the award. Here are some of the top candidates:

- Matt Leinart
- Carson Palmer
- David Klingler
- Adolfo Estrada

Leinart, a senior at USC, has been consistently performing at a high level. He is leading the Trojans with 1,450 passing yards and 14 touchdowns. His accuracy and decision-making have been key factors in USC's success so far this season.

Palmer, a junior at Arizona State, has been a revelation. With 1,320 passing yards and 14 touchdowns, he has been a key reason for Arizona State's 5-0 start. His ability to read defenses and make quick decisions has been impressive.

Klingler, a senior at Texas, has been a steady presence for the Longhorns. With 1,200 passing yards and 16 touchdowns, he has been a key factor in the Longhorns' 5-0 start.

Estrada, a junior at Oklahoma State, has been a surprise package. With 2,000 passing yards and 21 touchdowns, he has been a key reason for Oklahoma State's 6-0 start. His ability to read defenses and make quick decisions has been impressive.

These quarterbacks are all putting on a show for the Heisman race, and it will be interesting to see who emerges as the true leader.

OMAHA, Neb. — Nebraska head coach Scott Frost decided the Cornhuskers need to find more playmakers to replace the players who left the program.

"We’ve got a lot of work to do," Frost said on Monday. "There’s a lot of potential and some very creative guys in this class, but we need to have a stronger push to sign players this year than we have in past years, and that’s something I’m really excited about." he said.

Frost said the Huskers were one of the top teams in the country in terms of recruiting Class of 2020, but only the fifth team to beat the third-ranked defense in the country.

"We’re really excited about this class," Frost said. "We have a lot of guys who have a lot of skill, and we’re really excited about what we can do with them."
