Two senators come to Iowa, attacking administration national-security policies

BY DEAN TREFTZ
THE DAILY IOWAN

Immediately following the congressional election recess, two Democratic senators made Iowa visits to campaign for local politicians in Iowa races.

Sens. Barack Obama, D-Ill., and Evan Bayh, D-Ind., made appearances in eastern Iowa over the weekend, each coming to the Hawkeye State within 24 hours of the midterm election-induced break. Both called for strong Democratic resistance against Republicans' rhetorical dominance of national-security issues.

On Sept. 30, Obama visited Eisenhower Elementary in Davenport after speaking in Rock Island, Ill., in the morning.

Bayh appeared Sunday at Flannigan's Sports Bar & Grill in Coralville during the second day of a three-day tour of the state.

The senator from the most easterly "I" state talked to a small gathering of Democratic supporters on partisanship, oil, health care, and education, while focusing particularly on balanced budgets and national security.

Bayh attacked Republican fiscal policy, saying the GOP's control of Congress has yielded immoral monetary deficits and subsequent debt.

Pataki opens PAC HQ

A potential presidential candidate launches the first headquarters, in Urbandale

BY DEAN TREFTZ
THE DAILY IOWAN

Crammed into a small room in an Urbandale office plaza, New York Gov. George Pataki spoke to Republicans from across the state at the opening of the first Iowa PAC headquarters for his possible 2008 presidential-nomination bid.

In his speech to the supporters, Pataki emphasized the ideological differences between the Republican and Democratic Parties, especially concerning the size and scope of government.

"To those who doubt that there is a difference other than an 'R' or a 'D' after the name, come to New York," Pataki said. He continued espousing Republican policies of limited government over those of the Democratic Party, stressing a "government of the people, not the other way around."

Pataki, who was governor during the 9/11 attacks, also touched on what he called the gap between conservative and liberal views on the disastrous events.

Cheery accordion notes bleated over a tuba bass line, and the smell of sauerkraut-topped bratwursts wafted through the unseasonably hot air on Sept. 30 as droves of beer lovers whooped it up in celebration of Oktoberfest, Amana style.

Held all weekend long in honor of the Colonies' deep-rooted German heritage, the 41st-annual festival saw approximately 25,000 visitors grace the village, many of whom were dressed in traditional German garb. For men, this entailed wearing lederhosen — leather pants and suspenders — and, for women, donning dirndls — old-fashioned colorful dresses.

But not all German stereotypes were fully explored: Some people had not even heard of David Hasselhoff.

"I'm here for the polka music," said Grace De Rycke of Victor, Iowa. She pointed to husband John: "And he's here for the beer."

Given the booze-friendly nature of Oktoberfest and the proximity of Amana to the UI, one might assume there would be a high turnout of college students looking for an excuse to consume massive amounts of beer in a relatively police-free environment.

There wasn't a high Hawkeye turn-out. But there were more young people at the festival than in years past, said beer server Dennis Hahn.

And, in general, "it's a lot busier this year," he noted.

Even so, most of the attendees tended to be older, more seasoned veterans of celebratory rituals. Many elderly couples — some in their 70s or 80s — danced the day and night away to an array of traditional accordion music or share laughs under spacious tents while

STORMS & DESTRUCTION THE AFTERMATH

St. Pat's to relocate

BY RYAN YOUNG
THE DAILY IOWAN

It wasn't until two days after the April 13 tornadoes swept through Iowa City that 57-year-old Linda McHard went to see the damage, joining many who had gathered outside of St. Patrick's Catholic Church to take pictures, hold each other, and cry in memory of their tattered spiritual home.

"You could still see the chandeliers hanging pristinely in the church where they had always been," she said. "It symbolized an ancient part of our city."

The Rev. Jerome Miller clearly remembers when the chapel was struck by the F-2 twister. He said Mass had just ended for the evening when the storm sirens rang, and he immediately gathered the 70 people in attendance and directed them out of the church and into the basement of a nearby building.

Five minutes later, he heard the tornado hit the steeple, and, when it was clear, he went outside to survey the damage.

"The funny part was that there were so many people in the street," he said. "Somebody said, 'Boy, look at the church,' and that's when we saw the damage."

McHard remembers the closely knit, largely Irish congregation that filled St. Patrick's in 1987, when she first became a member. She said that the most amazing thing was to walk into the century-old gothic cathedral with a steeple that rose high above the city

St. Patrick's Catholic Church will be relocated to an unspecified location on the East Side of town, the Rev. Rudolph Juarez announced the news during Mass on Sept. 30. St. Patrick's was built in the 1870s; it was heavily damaged by the April 13 tornado.

Game draws ticket scams

Three out-of-state men were arrested for allegedly trying to sell or trade fake tickets

BY EMILEIGH BARNES
THE DAILY IOWAN

Three out-of-state men were arrested in separate incidents on Sept. 30 after police accused them of peddling counterfeit tickets for the much-hyped Iowa-Ohio State game.

In a situation that university authorities called unusual, UI and Iowa City police jailed the three men — from Florida, New York, and Georgia — for allegedly trying to sell fake tickets in different areas of Iowa City on game day.

According to police: About 4 p.m., Demitrus Williams, a Bronx, N.Y., resident, was allegedly selling counterfeit tickets at the intersection of Linn and College Streets when one purchaser attempted to call 911 to report the incident.

Williams, 29, then allegedly broke the customer's cell phone to stop the subject from calling police. Williams now faces charges of fourth-degree criminal mischief, forgery, and obstruction of justice.

In another incident, Apopka, Fla., resident Calvin Harris was arrested after he allegedly darted away from a police officer who asked to see the tickets he was selling at the intersection of Burlington and Front Streets.

The officer reported spotting the "nervous" looking Harris on Sept. 30 holding several tickets. The 38-year-old reportedly fled on foot when approached by police, who chased Harris and yelled at him to stop.

Once he was apprehended, officers allegedly found several forged tickets as well as a "large amount of cash." Harris was charged with forgery and interference with official acts.

Finally, Kevin Bryant, of Decatur, Ga., was arrested after allegedly trading one of his counterfeit tickets for a leather jacket in the 1000 block of Melrose Avenue on Sept. 30. A search allegedly discovered that Bryant had "numerous" fake tickets as well as cash.

Bryant now faces charges of forgery and fifth-degree theft.

Paula Jantz, an Iowa associate director of athletics, said this is the first game she can recall at which fake tickets were distributed. The sold-out status of the game may have enticed people to forge the tickets, she said.

A UI police officer brought Jantz a fraudulent ticket before

Woman charged with child endangerment

A Fairfield, Iowa, woman was charged with endangering her children after she allegedly exposed them to cocaine in their residence; both of the woman's teenage children reportedly indirectly ingested the drug.

The Department of Human Services was investigating Kimberly Bodkins, 36, on Aug. 31 for allegedly abusing her children, ages 13 and 15, after she was reported for using cocaine in their presence, police said.

Results from hair samples taken from Bodkins and her children on Sept. 12 showed she had "an extremely high level of cocaine in her system," according to a police complaint signed Sept. 28.

Authorities said the hair tests also confirmed that the children had indirectly ingested cocaine. Bodkins said she never used drugs in front of her teens but confirmed cocaine was being used at their residence, according to police reports. Police said Bodkins reported she had not tried to remove the drugs from the residence.

Bodkins now faces charges of child endangerment, an aggravated misdemeanor for the incident.

IC man charged with burglary

Police have charged an Iowa City man with burglary after he allegedly broke into a Dubuque Street apartment and assaulted a person inside.

Craig Vorba, 25, reportedly left his residence at 9 Melrose Place on Sept. 29 to confront several people. When he arrived at 432 S. Dubuque St. Apt. 9, he kicked in the door, according to a police complaint signed Sept. 29.

Authorities said once Vorba had forced entry, he assaulted one subject, causing physical injury.

The extent of the victim's injuries was not released, but police allege they stem from Vorba biting and striking the subject.

Vorba now faces the Class B felony charges of first-degree burglary causing bodily injury. If convicted, he could serve up to 25 years in prison.

In the past, Vorba has been convicted of disorderly conduct with fighting or violent behavior for a Nov. 18, 2005, incident.

Pataki opens office

Dean Trefitz/The Daily Iowan
 Republican Gov. George Pataki of New York speaks to supporters on Sept. 29 at the opening of his 21st Century Freedom PAC's Iowa Headquarters in Urbandale. Many are speculating that Pataki will run for his party's presidential nomination in 2008; the office's opening should do little to quell that conjecture.

'The 21st Century Freedom PAC is a great tool the governor is going to use to provide money and volunteers to all of the close races and turn Iowa red.'

— Iowa College Republican Chairman and UI senior Bobby Kaufman

"We weren't attacked because of what we are doing wrong; we were attacked because of what we are doing right, because of our belief in freedom, the ability to choose our own leaders, to worship as we see fit," Pataki said.

The PAC, for the time being, is focused on 2006, said Sen. Stewart Iverson, R-Clarion, the state's Senate Republican leader.

"The biggest thing we're trying to do is help get Republicans elected," said Iverson, who is working for the PAC as its Iowa chairman.

College Republicans from institutions across the state made up a large portion of the crowd. They took a large group picture with the governor in front of the PAC's office.

"The 21st Century Freedom PAC is a great tool the governor is going to use to provide money and volunteers to all of the close races and turn Iowa red," said Iowa College Republican Chairman and UI senior Bobby Kaufman.

Pataki, who announced last summer that he will not seek a fourth term as New York's governor, stressed grass-roots organizing as the key to close elections.

"For all the importance of radio and TV, I think when you get that knock on the door or when you get a message from a neighbor you trust, that's how you win races," he said.

Pataki said the PAC will decide later whether to keep the office open after the Nov. 7 elections.

Whether the office is maintained, the facility will likely not be the last potential presidential candidate's headquarters to open in the run-up to the 2006 — and 2008 — elections.

Lindsey Walters/The Daily Iowan

Sen. Evan Bayh, D-Ind., speaks during a fundraising reception for local Democratic candidates at Flannigan's Bar and Grill on Sunday afternoon. Bayh came to speak in support of Chet Culver, Dave Loebbeck, Clara Oleson, Mark Nolte, and Becky Schmidt.

OBAMA PUSHES SECURITY

Obama: 'What we [as Democrats] need is a tough and smart national-security policy. The other side's got the monopoly on tough and dumb.'

'War is not sport; war is not politics.'

Bayh: 'Washington is too partisan, too ideologically divided, too gridlocked, and, unfortunately, too corrupt.'

'[The Bush administration] has been cynical and more effective at using national-security politics than it has national-security policies.'

"Sometimes the Congress does need a little adult supervision ... with this president, the kids are home alone," Indiana's junior senator said.

He also insinuated that the Democrats have sometimes allowed Republicans to control the national-security debate.

"We can't run away from this," Bayh said. "We can't flinch and change the subject, because neither events nor the Republicans will let us do that. We've got to stand up and fight back."

Sixty miles east and a day earlier, Obama also called for a stronger Democratic position on national security — an issue long-considered a bastion for the Republicans.

"We need a national-security policy that's tough and smart," Obama told a packed gymnasium in a speech supporting congressional candidate Bruce Braley. "The other side's got the monopoly on tough and dumb."

Obama said at one point that he would be happy to debate the president and the Republicans on national security. He moved on, attacking how the Bush administration has dealt with the Middle East over the past six years.

"The biggest winner out of this president's foreign policy has been Iran," said the young senator. Obama said he believes that the war in Iraq will be one of the most determining issues in the upcoming elections because of the loss of American money and American lives in the conflict.

Both Bayh and Obama have been speculated as eyeing a 2008 presidential nomination run, though in very different ways.

Bayh, the son of former U.S. Sen. Birch Bayh, has been visiting Iowa for several months, stumping and fundraising for Democrats across the state.

Obama, on the other hand, had stayed away from Iowa — despite callings for his candidacy — until a highly publicized Sept. 17 keynote address at Sen. Tom Harkin's annual Steak Fry. So, a second visit in under two weeks, no matter how close to his home state, may bring heightened speculation as to his intentions in 2008.

The focus across the board, however, is on 2006. Both Bayh and Obama the midterm elections, now only 36 days away.

Q: The other night I received a call from some salesperson asking if I have made my funeral arrangements yet, is this something that funeral homes are doing now?

A: Some funeral homes and cremation societies hire salespersons to solicit persons by phone or through the mail into making their preplanned funeral arrangements. These persons are typically not a licensed funeral director, but instead they have an insurance license to sell insurance products. Our funeral home believes that only a licensed funeral director should make those arrangements with a person, and when they are ready, not when they have been called by a salesperson to do so.

People who paid for the fakes were not reimbursed because the tickets weren't purchased through the UI's athletics department, Jantz said.

BEER

indulging in pork tenderloins, hamburgers, and pickles-on-sticks.

And, of course, there's the beer.

Light beers were available on tap, but the full-flavored lagers and ales stirred up just down the street by Millstream Brewing Co. gave the festival an authentic European vibe. In addition to pilsner and wheat varieties, the Amana-based brewery provided Oktoberfest's special Oktoberfest lager, dark in color and hoppy in taste.

Drinking such beer with traditional German music emitting from Amana's historically preserved shops and stages almost creates the illusion of living in 18th-century Bavaria.

Most of Amana's residents are descendants of settlers from the German state of Hessen. Others trace their lineage to northern Switzerland, said Jon Childers, the special-events coordinator for the Amana Society.

Carl Oehl, the village's "burgermeister," pointed out that as recently as the 1980s, nearly everyone in the Amana Colonies could speak German.

"Even now, if you go into the nursing home, you can tell which regions and villages people came from based on their dialect," he said.

As Amana's Oktoberfest "burgermeister" — an honorary position that roughly translates to "master of the citizens" — Oehl is the celebration's official administrator. A distinguished, heavyset man fluent in German, Oehl has traveled through Europe numerous times and has seen his fair share of Oktoberfests in das Vaterland. His feathered green alpine hat is covered with metallic pins — each one representing a village in which he's celebrated Oktoberfest, a practice common among Oktoberfest connoisseurs.

"Over there, it's a huge event, especially in Munich," he said. "It's been going for hundreds of years, and this is a miniature takeoff on that. We're just trying to get into the spirit of things." He motioned to the grill behind his stool. "It wouldn't be Oktoberfest without great food."

When it came time for Oehl to leave and attend to business, it was difficult to gauge whether his parting words were a trademark sign-off, a de facto slogan for the festival, or the man's personal creed.

"Keep smiling," he said. And with that, he returned to duty in the main beer-serving tent, presumably to carry on with the festival's more laborious functions.

St. Pat's will move

skyline. Now all that remains is a standing shell of what was once a cherished building, although that won't soon be the case.

After five months of deliberation, the Davenport Diocese, which oversees Iowa City's Catholic institutions, decided that St. Patrick's will be relocated from 228 E. Court St. to somewhere else on the city's East Side, because of the level of damage to the old church.

The building will likely be torn down after the property is sold to a to-be-determined source, Miller said.

The Rev. Rudolph Juarez announced the church's plan to relocate during a Saturday mass at the St. Patrick's parish hall, which has temporarily replaced the broken cathedral in holding services.

The announcement to relocate the church brought about mixed emotions. McHard said she is puzzled at why other damaged buildings have been quickly repaired, and St. Patrick's has been left untouched.

"It seems to be crying out, 'Help put me back together again,' but we aren't going to do that," McHard said. "I guess buildings like that just can't be rebuilt."

Church officials have not yet established the new location for St. Patrick's, although Miller said that the official site would be announced within a month. He added that, while the assessment of damage is still undetermined, official numbers, to come within a week, will help determine how much insurance will cover and how the parish will establish funding for the new building.

"Some people have been generous donors, and I'm sure parishioners will step in and do the rest," Miller said.

Meanwhile, St. Patrick's is left sitting, and, to some, it's a haunting reminder of the memories they associate with the church.

"Day after day, it's just stood there," McHard said. "It's just been like an open wound in the city."

FBI checking ex-rep.'s e-mails with teen pages

Republicans and Democrats on Capitol Hill have demanded a federal investigation into former Rep. Mark Foley's conduct; he resigned on Sept. 29 when the e-mails came to light

BY JOHN HEILPRIN

Manuel Balce Ceneta/Associated Press

A guest book is seen outside the door of what was the office of former Rep. Mark Foley, R-Fla., on Sunday on Capitol Hill. Foley resigned from Congress on Sept. 29 amid allegations that he sent improper e-mails to a House page.

WASHINGTON — The FBI is examining former Rep. Mark Foley's e-mail exchanges with teenagers to determine if they violated federal law, an agency spokesman said Sunday.

House Speaker Dennis Hastert asked on Sunday for a federal investigation into the case — a lurid scandal that has put House Republicans in political peril.

"I hereby request that the Department of Justice conduct an investigation of Mr. Foley's conduct with current and former House pages to determine to what extent any of his actions violated federal law," Hastert, R-Ill., wrote in a letter to Attorney General Alberto Gonzales.

FBI spokesman Richard Kolko confirmed on Sunday that the FBI is "conducting an assessment to see if there's been a violation of federal law." He had no further comment.

The White House and Democratic leaders in Congress also called Sunday for a criminal probe. White House counselor Dan Bartlett called the allegations against Foley shocking but said President Bush hadn't learned of Foley's inappropriate e-mails to a 16-year-old boy and instant messages to other boys before the news broke last week.

"There is going to be, I'm sure, a criminal investigation into the particulars of this case," Bartlett said. "We need to make sure that the page system is one in which children come up here and can work and make sure that they are protected."

Foley, R-Fla., quit Congress on Sept. 29 after the disclosure of the e-mails he sent to a former congressional page and sexually suggestive instant messages he sent to other high-school pages.

A law-enforcement official, who asked for anonymity because the investigation is ongoing, said agents from the FBI's cyber division are looking into the text of some of the messages and checking to see how many e-mails were sent and how many computers were used. They are also looking to see if some of the teens who were sent messages will cooperate with the probe.

Senate Democratic Leader Harry Reid of Nevada called the Foley case "repugnant, but equally as bad is the possibility that Republican leaders in the House of Representatives knew there was a problem and ignored it to preserve a congressional seat this election year."

Reid said the case should be handled outside Congress.

No personal information compromised in attack, UI says

BY MATT NELSON
THE DAILY IOWAN

An automated computer attack on UI computers may have exposed Social Security numbers and other personal information of roughly 14,500 people, but university officials said on Sunday that the intrusion was caught before information was critically compromised.

The information, used by UI psychology Professor Michael O'Hara and psychiatry Professor Scott Stuart since 1995, involved maternal and child health. The computer attack occurred Sept. 19.

"Monitors caught the information before anything could be compromised," said Steve Parrott, the director of University Relations. "Yet the fact that there was an intrusion, we felt there was an obligation so [research subjects] could take any actions they felt was necessary."

The research information that was left vulnerable by the computer attacks required special software to open and was encrypted, so intruders couldn't match personal information to the person with whom it belonged.

The UI's "Frequently Asked Questions" webpage for the computer intrusion said no evidence shows that access was obtained nor that the information contained was exposed.

"We think it was a robot program looking for space on a computer somewhere to store something," Parrott said.

To further protect the campus' computer system, the computer on which the files were stored was taken down so officials could perform an in-depth security review. All research information contained on the system will be archived, and the contact information of participants will be moved to a computer not vulnerable to Internet intrusions.

The survey participants, who were paid, had their Social Security numbers stored on the computer system under IRS regulations. The UI has been working on a new policy for storing Social Security numbers, with guidelines for better protection than in the past, Parrott said.

The university recommended that participants conduct periodic credit reports through major credit bureaus. The proper authorities have been notified, and test subjects are encouraged to contact O'Hara or Scott with questions.

Hamas action sparks battles

Nasser Shiyoukhi/Associated Press

Fatah-allied militants burn furniture and documents as they ransack the offices of local Hamas lawmakers in the West Bank city of Hebron on Sunday. The violence came in retaliation after Hamas militiamen's efforts to break up anti-government protests Sunday sparked running street battles across the Gaza Strip.

BY IBRAHIM BARZAK
ASSOCIATED PRESS

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip — Heavily armed Hamas militiamen's efforts to break up anti-government protests on Sunday sparked gun battles across the Gaza Strip that killed seven people in the worst internal Palestinian violence since Hamas took power.

Militants from the opposition Fatah group retaliated by torching the Palestinian Cabinet building in the West Bank. The violence comes amid growing frustration over forming a national unity government that could end crippling economic sanctions.

The fighting continued throughout the day and sent schoolchildren and other civilians in downtown Gaza City fleeing for cover.

"This is forbidden in Islam. We are in the holy month of Ramadan," said Majed Badawi, 33, who managed to escape after his car was caught in the crossfire. "It's a shame on Hamas, which calls itself real Islam, and a shame of Fatah as well. Why are they fighting and over what? We are victims because of both of them."

Violence between Fatah and Hamas loyalists plagued Gaza throughout the spring but largely disappeared when Israel launched an offensive here in late June after Hamas-linked militants captured an Israeli soldier.

Israel's army chief, Lt. Gen. Dan Halutz, said on Sunday that the military was considering another ground offensive.

Hours later, Israeli tanks, bulldozers, and troops moved into northern Gaza. The army said the operation was aimed at preventing rocket fire from militants.

Looking to a possible new Israeli offensive, Palestinian Prime Minister Ismail Haniyeh, of Hamas, urged Palestinians to end the internal violence "in the face of a serious escalation from the occupation forces."

Haniyeh spoke with President Mahmoud Abbas, of Fatah, by telephone and called for joint action to end the fighting, Haniyeh's office said.

But in a televised speech, Haniyeh also defended the Hamas militiamen, saying they acted lawfully in trying to break up the protests.

Fatah officials blamed Hamas for the chaos.

"Nothing can justify this violence," Fatah spokesman Tawfik Abu Khoussa said.

Hamas has been under pressure since it took over the Palestinian Authority after its January election victory over the long-ruling Fatah.

Israel and the West, which view Hamas as a terror group, cut off hundreds of millions of dollars in aid and tax transfers to the Palestinian Authority, making it nearly impossible for the new government to pay its 165,000 workers.

S.C. man charged with killing wife, her 4 children

BY BRUCE SMITH
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORTH CHARLESTON, S.C. — A man was charged Sunday with killing his wife and her four children in a domestic dispute at their home, authorities said.

Michael Simmons, 41, appeared at a bond hearing via video link from the Charleston County jail on Sunday and was ordered held without bond on five counts of murder.

Officers discovered the bodies, including that of a 6-year-old, on Sept. 30 after responding to a call. According to an arrest affidavit, a witness saw the bodies in the home, then called police. The affidavit said Simmons was captured as he tried to drive away from the scene.

The victims had been shot with a handgun early on Sept. 30, the affidavit said. Simmons was not the children's father, Charleston County Coroner Rae Wooten said.

Simmons and Detra Rainey had been married for more than a year, said Spencer Pryor, a North Charleston police spokesman. "This appears to have been a domestic situation that turned deadly," he said.

Wooten had earlier identified the victims as Rainey, 39, and her children William Rainey, 16, Hakiem Rainey, 13, Malachia Robinson, 8, and Samenia Robinson, 6.

The jail did not have any attorney information for Simmons.

"Words can't express the impact this has had on our family," relative Gene Fanning said at the bond hearing. "It's a devastating loss. We want him held fully accountable for his actions."

Family members would not comment as they left the bond hearing but said they planned to meet later with reporters.

Monique Singleton, who lives across the street in the subdivision of about two dozen mobile homes, said that four children lived in the home and that her children occasionally played with them.

"They were nice people; they seemed fine," she said.

Rally walks in support of farm animals' treatment

FOR MORE COVERAGE OF THE SEPT. 30 WALK FOR FARM ANIMALS, CHECK OUT DITV ON CABLE CHANNEL 17, CAMPUS 4, OR DAILYIOWAN.COM.

BY BRYCE BAUER
THE DAILY IOWAN

While Hawkeye fans from across the state descended on Iowa City, advocates for the fair treatment of a different — and arguably more tame — type of animal walked to raise awareness in a quiet corner of southwest Lower City Park.

The 2006 Walk For Farm Animals, put on by the national animal-advocacy group Farm Sanctuary on Sept. 30, aimed to raise awareness about abused and neglected farm animals across the state and the nation.

While the 1.5 mile-long walk didn't feature any chickens, cattle, or hogs, many of the roughly 60 attendees brought their dogs

Beth Skogen/The Daily Iowan

Approximately 60 people participate in the 2006 Walk for Farm Animals for 1.5 miles around Lower City Park on Sunday. The purpose of the walk was to raise awareness about abused and neglected farm animals.

to stroll alongside them. And while some may treat man's best friend as royalty, event coordinator Audrey Smith said farm animals, which produce the steaks, bacon, and buffalo wings for this nation, often don't get the same respect.

"Dogs and cats are treated better than factory-farm

'Dogs and cats are treated better than factory-farm animals. I think new laws need to get passed to treat all animals equally.'

— Audrey Smith, Junior

animals," the UI junior said. "I think new laws need to get passed to treat all animals equally."

Smith, a recent convert to vegetarianism, said she was "surprised" by the turnout, especially because the walk took place just hours before the hotly anticipated football game. But she added that those who came out to support the animals probably weren't the sports type, anyway.

Nadia Khatib, an Iowa State University freshman who traveled the 150 miles from Ames for the event, said she agreed with Smith's views.

"I'd like to see animals be treated as actual beings in the world and not as another business," she said.

Khatib said she didn't think that an event similar to Iowa City's would likely occur on her historically agricultural campus.

"I don't think there would be many people to support it," she said.

Smith, who became a vegetarian partially for health reasons, also noted the differences between the UI and the rest of the state.

"I think [the event] would be better in Iowa City than other places in Iowa," she said.

The organization Farm Sanctuary, now in its 20th year, investigates the abuse of farm animals and transports those that are mistreated or neglected to its shelters in New York and California.

Other walks put on by the organization in honor of World Farm Animals day — which is officially today — take place during September and October in various major cities across the United States and Canada. The Sept. 30 event was the only one in Iowa.

While neither Smith nor Farm Sanctuary espouse pure vegetarianism, many at the event wore pro-vegetarian garb, and participants had a chance to indulge in grilled veggie-burgers after the walk.

And Khatib would prefer the rest of the world going meatless.

"We eat meat because we can, not because our bodies need it," she said.

Facility helps students make pet connection

TAKE A STROLL IN THE BARK WITH ALAN MAYER AS HE WALKS DOGS FROM A LOCAL PET STORE ON DAILYIOWAN.COM.

BY JAMIE HANSEN
THE DAILY IOWAN

After leaving home for the first time, UI students often miss their pets as much — or even more than — their parents.

Enter: Pet Central Station, which helps connect volunteers with lonely animals to help fill the void wrought by the increased distance between the student and her or his former companion. Roughly six dogs and 30 cats are available for people to play with at the 114 S. Clinton St. store, which also sells a variety of pets and pet-related goods.

More and more students are capitalizing on this opportunity in pet philanthropy.

"I knew I couldn't have cats or dogs in the dorms or apartments, and I missed animal interaction," UI sophomore Katie Fassbinder said. Depending on her schedule, Fassbinder, who was referred to the store by a friend, can now visit the dogs up to four times a week.

"Two hermit crabs don't really do it for me," she added in regards to her current pets at school.

UI senior Jared Carter was also told by a friend to visit Pet Central Station. He said he enjoys seeing dogs he's walked become adopted by loving owners, but because he gets attached to the animals, seeing them get a new home is sometimes a bittersweet affair.

And UI freshman Lexi Schiano works to help feral cats — strays who are often terrified of people — develop more trust in humans.

Pet Central Station owner and "Top Dog" Tammara Meester said volunteers introduce the dogs to good walking manners, which aids in getting them adopted faster and also helps them burn off energy and be more relaxed in general, among other duties.

In addition, interacting with pets can provide the volunteer with health benefits, including a reduced chance of depression, according to the National Institutes of Health.

Meester said students help "socialize" the kittens. She added that because most volunteers are partial to helping the dogs, store staffers "really appreciate the cat volunteers."

Pet Central Station has been in business for two and a half years; it takes animals in from various shelters, as well as from homes in which the owners have died.

"We get really great dogs," she said.

Meester said she encourages students to consider volunteering at area shelters in addition to their work at the store, since many are in desperate need of more help.

Park project equals unnecessary spending

The so called "Sand Lake Recreation Area" will most likely become a reality, following the Iowa City City Council's approval to purchase the roughly 160 acres owned by S&G Materials south of the city. Rather than holding off on the purchase, to see if the land could be had for a lower price, the City Council decided unanimously to jump at this chance and buy the land for $1 million.

The massive park would provide such vital services as walking trails, biking trails, and boating, including the much-coveted paddleboats. It would join the other 39 city parks, becoming the third largest. All this will be Iowa City's for the mere price of $5.7 million. At least that is one oft-cited figure, though the park is still in the conceptual stage.

Is such a large undertaking appropriate for the city, right now? Rarely is a government entity faced with having money than it knows what to do with, but it is far more often the case that there are more projects and spending than governments have funding for. Spending $1 million just to purchase the land for another park is a large chunk of change that could have aided other programs. There are important funding needs that the city must meet, as well. And because the cost of any spending affects all projects, it is necessary to try to limit inessential expenditures.

Earlier this year, the city spent $600,000 on expanding transit routes and hiring two police officers, but the city is still short two police officers stemming from a cutback two years ago. The West Side fire station needs to be rebuilt, which will cost $1.3 million. Though emergency housing helped 1,200 homeless people this past winter, concerns arose about being able to provide ample shelter. How did the city handle the matter? By lowering the fire-safety ordinance earlier this year from 200 square feet of living space per person to 120 so that more can be housed in current locations. These are far more pressing matters than a new park.

It's not as if we're discussing delaying the construction of a necessary service such as a hospital or suggesting that corners be cut. Rather, we are saying that the funding of this park project is not urgent and is the frivolous spending of dollars that could be put to use elsewhere. The well-being of a community is influenced by the recreational services it provides, but as was previously mentioned, there is no shortage of such facilities. The city should have held out longer, at the very least, to see if the land could be purchased for a lower price rather than rushing to purchase land for an unnecessary project.

Fluids can fly

Last week, the Transportation Security Administration relaxed its rules regarding the carrying on of liquids on domestic and international flights.

If you recall, all liquids, gels, puddings, creams, balms, cough syrups, lotions, and other assorted non-solids were banned from any and all airline flights in the United States, Europe, and other assorted locales. Exceptions were made if you purchased the items from one of the overly expensive, inside-the-terminal gift shops, provided a gift-shop employee personally escorted you and your liquids to the gate. You would then hand the bag off to a friendly flight attendant, who would take possession of your effects for the duration of the flight — after, of course, assuring that your personal items were not, in fact, capable of blowing a hole in the side of the aluminum tube you were about to spend the next few hours sitting uncomfortably in, wishing you had Chap Stick to nervously apply to your dry lips.

ERIC KOCHNEFF

The transportation agency has yet again proven it is merely a reactionary organization and does nothing much at all to proactively prevent dangerous items from entering our aircraft.

The new rule states you can bring on any and all liquids or creams that you want, provided none of it is stored in a container larger than three ounces and all containers of liquid or cream on your person are stowed tightly inside a receptacle no larger than a one-quart Ziploc bag.

That doesn't sound very convenient to anyone but, I suppose it is better than the previous rule.

So, why was EVERYTHING that was considered a liquid banned for the past month? Did the transportation agency do hundreds upon thousands of experiments with different sorts of containers, vials, and personal-hygiene products to determine that the only combination completely incapable of damaging an airplane were containers containing three ounces or fewer of non-solid material stuffed to the hilt inside a clear plastic bag?

I'm guessing not. I would imagine the department simply decided now was as reasonable a time as ever to actually be reasonable. Common sense dictates that it would be difficult to smuggle enough explosive agents inside an aircraft contained within that small plastic bag and assorted containers. It makes sense, right?

So why did it take it a whole month to figure out that a complete ban on all liquids wasn't really necessary and only served to inconvenience the flying public and show the inherent weaknesses an organization such as the transportation agency faces?

Your answer is as good as mine. But agency politics aside, there are still a few gray areas in terms of personal-hygiene products that I am not quite sure are considered liquids or solids. For instance, what about that comfort strip on the tip of my Gillette Fusion razor? It looks like a solid; however, after only a few uses, the green "comfort" disappears into this fairly uncomfortable white thing that does nothing to alleviate the slight burning sensation present on my face whenever I shave without that thin green strip.

Surely my stubble isn't so plentiful that it would create enough friction to completely rub off something solid?

Upon checking the transportation agency's website, "safety razors," including disposable razors, are listed in the "allowed in carryon and checked baggage" columns, regardless of size. It says nothing about comfort strips. Apparently, the transportation agency hasn't considered there being a terrorist clever enough to replace his rubbed off comfort strip with some kind of small, greenish looking, incendiary device with enough power to destroy an airplane.

Some other things listed on the agency's website that are now allowed in carryon luggage are: toy transformer robots, walking canes, and umbrellas.

I definitely feel better knowing that not only can I bring my old Transformers (Robots in Disguise!) onto any airplane I want, but, also, if I ever need assistance walking in the rain, I know my accessories will be deemed appropriate by the agency.

What the airline industry and the traveling public needs is a government agency that does more than just react to terrorist threats as they come across the wire. As of now, the transportation agency only takes action when something negative happens. One would think that with all its politics, funding, and priority, the agency would always be thinking ahead of people who might wish to endanger the public and the airlines that fly them. ■

Shortage, not quality, real cab problem

Once again, from the Sept. 18 article about taxi-cab regulations ("Councilors eye taxi standards"), it seems we have well-intentioned, yet misguided, government leaders.

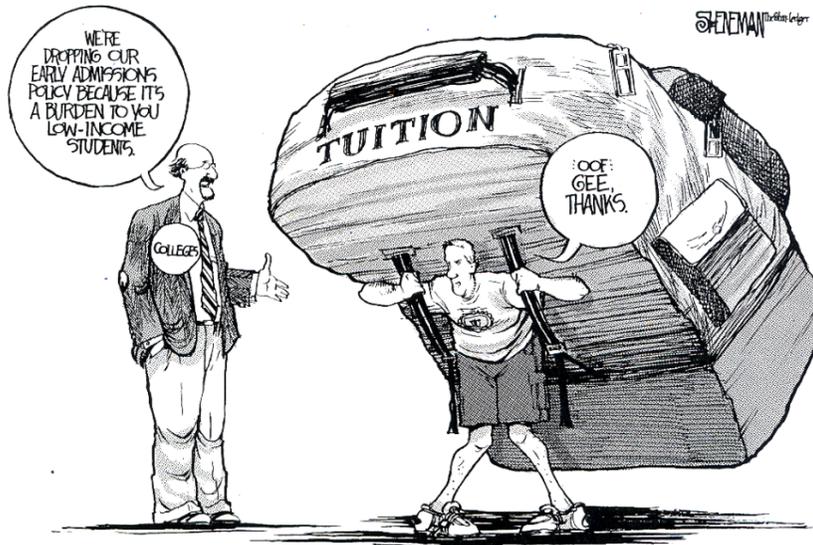

Councilor Regenia Bailey wants to protect consumers from junker taxis. Instead of making new laws, why doesn't she just take her business to one of the cab companies that do provide nice, comfortable rides?

Anyone who has ever tried to call a cab between the hours of 11 p.m. to 2 a.m., when taxis are needed most, knows that the real problem in Iowa City is a shortage of cabs, not their quality. People want to make the right choice by not driving if they have been drinking. That choice gets harder when you're standing outside downtown for an hour waiting for the next cab to become available. That doesn't excuse a poor decision, of course, but we can make it easier for people to make the right one.

If the councilor is really interested in the safety of her constituents, she would be reducing restrictions on cab companies so there's more choice in the cab market. If you don't feel comfortable in a junker, wait for a reputable cab to become available. Just don't restrict my choices in getting home in whatever way I can.

Because a dirty back seat is a lot better than a dirty jail cell.

Letters distorted Leach's record

Over the last few months, the record of Rep. James Leach, R-Iowa, has been distorted by countless letters to the editor. These letters have completely misrepresented Leach's views on the important issues of the day.

I would be hard-pressed to address every one of the charges leveled in these letters, as I would probably go way beyond my word limit for this letter. Yet I feel I should address some of the more egregious claims. On Sept. 12, it was said Leach is "tacitly" supporting President Bush's policies in Iraq and that he is somehow responsible for the policy himself. Leach voted against the Iraq War Resolution, and he has called for a gradual withdrawal of troops in the coming months. How that is "tacitly" endorsing the policy, I do not know.

On Sept. 14, a letter claimed that Leach votes against important environmental policies. That's surprising, considering that Leach has been endorsed by both the Sierra Club and the League of Conservation Voters.

Finally, that same letter claimed that voting for Leach is to vote for special interests. Leach votes with his conscience, and he is able to do so because he has never taken PAC money or money from outside the state of Iowa, something that cannot be said about his opponent. The citizens of the 2nd District have been, and will always be, Leach's only special-interest group.

Voters don't respond to attacks; they respond to leadership and vision. Leach's campaign is based on that, and we should send him back to the U.S. Congress this November.

No sympathy for landlords

The headline about the unfortunate students on West Benton Street ("Zoning code blind-sides renters," Sept. 26) was in error. It should have read "Landlord blind-sides renters," because any landlord ought to know precisely what occupancy a rental property can legally have. The owner (unless the house was very recently sold) according to the Iowa City Assessor's Office, has owned the house since December 2004 and thus is hardly "new to the rental market," as the story claimed.

But even if so, it's hard to imagine the landlord being unaware of the zoning and terms of the rental permit, information that should be at the core of the investment and that is freely available to the public. Other reasons seem far more likely for the over-occupancy.

I do feel badly for the students, who are stuck in the middle. Their choice to try to settle in a quieter, more residential neighborhood is understandable. However, occupancy limits are one of the ways that quieter neighborhoods stay quiet, and the city of Iowa City is right to enforce the zoning code. The landlord, however, does not deserve anyone's pity.

'Daily Show' interview couples intelligent discourse with comedy

Jon Stewart's interview with Pakistani President Pervez Musharraf on "The Daily Show" Sept. 26 was complete with its fair share of comic moments.

Stewart's serving Musharraf jasmine tea and Twinkies particularly stands out. Amid the jovial banter, however, were a few interesting comments that shed some light on the motivations behind the actions of heads of state.

When Stewart asked Musharraf why he cooperated with the United States in its invasion of Afghanistan, Musharraf replied that he knew the United States would pursue Osama bin Laden whether Pakistan assisted in the effort or not. In this case, it was rational to side with the United States, because the only way to Afghanistan is through Pakistan. Musharraf also discussed the treaty he signed with pro-Taliban tribal leaders near the Pakistani border, promising the withdrawal of military forces in exchange for the termination of militant terrorist activity.

These two statements demonstrate the pursuit of national interest and the importance of geopolitics in making policy decisions. In cooperating with the United States, Musharraf recognized the geopolitical realities, namely that the United States would need to go through Pakistan and had the ability to do so. In light of this, he clearly made a rational decision for his country. Similarly, in cooperating with pro-Taliban forces, he is recognizing that establishing security is a requirement that must be fulfilled, even if the pursuit of security does not allow ideological considerations to be tantamount.

This exemplifies that instead of rhapsodizing about how leaders should behave, the more intelligent course of action would be to recognize how and why they do behave the way they do.

Bellying up to euphoria

'It's the power of the shimmy.'

— Marie Wilkes,
Kahraman Dance Studio's founder and artistic director

"Maleeha" dances at Venuto's World Bistro on Sept. 29. Marie Wilkes acquired that name when she danced in California, where her the majority of her audience was Arabic and had difficulty pronouncing her name.

THE DAILY IOWAN

The 12 pairs of hips, hugged by flowing skirts and jangling shimmy belts, seductively move back and forth on Sept. 26 at the Kahraman Dance Studio. Their movement is reminiscent of Hawaiian hula dancing, with its emphasis on sensual hip gyrations. But these women have come to learn a Middle Eastern dance traditionally performed at social events such as weddings — belly dancing. The class commences at 5:45 p.m. The lobby contains a small belly-dance lover's heaven: a shop and studio in one. For the dancers, purchasing pleasure, a turquoise desk is smothered with brightly colored shimmy belts, and a clothes rack is loaded with sequined skirts and beaded tops that jingle at the touch. As each woman enters, voices greet her in unison, similar to the exclamation of "Norm!" on the television show "Cheers." The chattering women gather and sit on navy-blue couches. Above them hangs a painting of Marie Wilkes, Kahraman's founder and artistic director, known to dancers as Maleeha, their teacher. "It's the power of the shimmy," Maleeha says, calling out to the class over the upbeat belly-dance music. The class members smile their enjoyment, and then they demonstrate it: The shaking hips undulate even faster.

Tuesdays are typically busy for Maleeha, with business meetings and appointments early in the day and classes well into the evening.

"I wish it could all be art, dancing, and performing," said Maleeha earlier in the day, when she joined Helen Horton, a student trying to create a belly-dancing venue in Cedar Falls, for a private lesson at 4 p.m.

"Did you know that Marilyn Monroe practiced her smiles in front of a mirror?" Maleeha said, as she critiqued a video of Horton and her class. She emphasized smiling, hand placements, and the importance of being "sassy" in the art of belly dancing.

"The audience members know they're going to get something, but they're not sure what they're going to get," she said, lying casually on the floor in her black leotard and purple- and tan-flowered sarong-like skirt.

The bubbly instructor has been belly dancing for more than half her life, and she has roughly 150 students in the Iowa City area.

"It was the music that first caught me," said Maleeha, who received her M.F.A. in dance from the UI.

UI senior Sara Boeding, a psychology major, said she enjoys belly dancing as a break from university life and a chance to meet members of the community. Maleeha's belly-dancing class is her first dance class since she took ballet, tap, and jazz in elementary school.

"[Maleeha is] a brilliant dancer, but there are many brilliant dancers who can't teach," the 20-year-old said. "She's incredible."

But Maleeha doesn't just teach. The dancer performed for two full houses Sept. 29 at Venuto's World Bistro in Iowa City. Unlike the Tuesday class, both men and women joined Maleeha on stage to partake in the power of the shimmy.

"Sometimes people come specifically to see the belly dancing," said Sara Canfield, a Venuto's server. Maleeha's next performance at the restaurant will be on Oct. 13. The event's popularity demonstrates how belly dancing, known for its erotic nature, often appeals to professionals and non-dancers alike.

"And let's just say at Kahraman, we're into euphoria," Maleeha said.

Who Killed the Electric Car?

★★★½ out of ★★★★★

BY SOHEIL REZAYAZDI
THE DAILY IOWAN

Who killed the electric car? According to Chris Paine's muckraking documentary, the simpler question is this: Who didn't?

Yet another documentary meant to invigorate the left-wing, Paine's Who Killed the Electric Car? examines the disappearance of California's electric autos in the last 10 years. Paine, surprisingly, sidesteps infotainment. Relying on straight news and a tinge of human interest, his film may seem like dry, PBS material to fans of fast-paced comedy-docs, but his thorough analysis effectively awakens the public to the auto industry's fascinating murder mystery.

The electric car's narrative, while meandering and complex, goes a little like this: The California Zero Emissions Vehicle Mandate of 1990 forced auto companies to make cleaner cars, resulting in GM's Electric Vehicle 1 in 1996. As one former owner explains, the EV1 was everything an American would want in a car — it was speedy, quiet, and cost little to fuel.

GM made far too much money on the internal-combustion engine, however, and so it tried to sabotage the car it was forced to make. Oil companies pitched in on the effort, buying editorials in newspapers to spread doubt about the electric car. They, too, had business to lose.

With backing from other car companies and George W. Bush, GM fought the mandate, successfully repealing it before the California Air Resources Board in 2003. GM then swiftly stopped making electric cars, and soon the breed went extinct.

Who Killed the Electric Car?'s most impressive feat is its ability to generate remorse over a car most of us never even knew existed. Through testimonials of former owners, the EV1 becomes a symbol of idealism, of a hope for the future that was squashed before it could gain national momentum. The EV1 owners' dedication provides the film with enough emotional appeal to avoid becoming an animated PowerPoint presentation (chiefly engaging is their 27-day-long vigil outside a GM lot housing the last known EV1s, a standoff that ended with several arrests).

Paine points his critical eye not only at easy super-villain targets, such as Big Oil and Bush, but also at the consumer public for not getting behind the EV1. In this audacious move, the film indicts America for its dread of living too "European" — that is, living eco-friendly sans overindulgence. Without this facet, the entire film would fall apart as a naïve valorization of the public. Society, often stubbornly, doesn't want what it should, an inarguable point that gives Paine's film the pessimistic nuance it requires.

He injects passion into his film but doesn't do so cinematically, resulting in a somewhat stale viewing experience. While he was right to avoid ADD tricks to hook the viewer, Paine doesn't realize that hard facts and pleasing aesthetics are not mutually exclusive.

While it aims to inspire, Who Killed the Electric Car? depresses more than it enlivens. Because Paine spreads the blame evenly among more than half a dozen culprits (the California Air and Resources Board, the hype of hydrogen fuel cells, the Bush administration, oil and auto companies, stubborn consumers, poor marketing, etc.), the film inspires viewers to throw their hands in the air and deem the electric car a lost cause more than anything.

During its final minutes of forced, hard-to-swallow optimism, one recurring talking head draws an analogy between the electric car's battle and David and Goliath.

"If there are enough Davids in the world, we can win," he says. As it stands, there are nowhere near enough. Where you should channel your anger for this — at big business or yourself — remains the driving, provocative question of Who Killed the Electric Car? You might not like the answer.

MLB

Twins clinch, Mauer wins title

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The Twins took home another AL Central championship on Sunday, and Joe Mauer became the first catcher to win an American League batting title by getting two hits in Minnesota's 5-1 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Around 35 minutes after Minnesota's game ended, the Kansas City Royals completed a big comeback and beat the Detroit Tigers, 10-8, in 12 innings — giving the Twins their fourth division title in five years.

After starting the season just 25-33, they will open the playoffs at home Tuesday against AL West champion Oakland, with ace Johan Santana on the mound.

The Twins huddled in the dugout after their game to watch the end of Detroit's game. When Esteban German got the go-ahead hit in the 12th for the Royals, Minnesota players leaped from the bench, spilled onto the field, and starting high-fiving and hugging in a mass celebration.

Fans at the Metrodome who were still on their feet cheered loudly, "Let's Go Royals," and exchanged high-fives with players who went into the stands to give congratulations.

The Twins began the day tied with Detroit for first place, but they needed a victory and a Tigers loss to win the division title, because Detroit won the season series, 11-8, against the Twins.

Cards lose again, but are in ST. LOUIS (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals won their third-straight NL Central title on Sunday, despite a 5-3 loss to the Milwaukee Brewers, backing into the playoffs thanks to Houston's loss in Atlanta.

But the Cardinals, who lost nine of their last 12, avoided perhaps the biggest September collapse in major-league history when the Astros were eliminated with a 3-1 loss to the Braves. The final out in that game came with one out in the bottom of the fifth and the Brewers leading 5-0, prompting a huge ovation from a sellout crowd. Relieved manager Tony La Russa handed out congratulatory hugs in the dugout.

La Russa gambled in the regular-season finale by holding back ace Chris Carpenter for a possible playoff opener, reasoning that his struggling team needed two starts by the 15-game winner in the first round to have a chance against either the Dodgers or Padres in a series that starts Tuesday on the road.

The Brewers knocked out replacement starter Anthony Reyes in the first inning.

The 24-year-old Reyes (5-8), pitching on three days' rest, retired only two hitters and gave up homers to Prince Fielder and Geoff Jenkins in a four-run first. Carpenter would have pitched Monday in the makeup of a rain-out against the Giants if the Astros had won, but now he'll be rested for the playoff opener and could pitch on regular rest in Game 4.

The Cardinals had a seven-game lead with 12 to play; the cushion had dwindled to a half-game before a 10-5 victory over the Brewers on Sept. 29 coupled with a Houston loss.

They finished 83-78, their worst record since going 75-86 in 1999, and the worst record for a NL Central champion. The Padres won the NL West at 82-80 last year.

Is a 24-hour tailgate possible or just a dream? For one group of die-hards, the night game against Ohio State presented the unique opportunity to test strength, willpower, and a love of Iowa football. I joined a core group of Hawkeye fans, the M.B.A. Association, last weekend with just a cooler of food and drink, a Hawkeye shirt, and notebook in hand.

Sept. 29

6:17 p.m. I arrive at the tailgating grounds, first to arrive. I am either really dedicated to this story, or traffic is to blame. I vote traffic.

7 p.m. A truck pulls into the lot near Brian Hill, my first drinking buddy contact, and me. Contents: three coolers, two canopy tents, propane grill, approximately 15 cases of beer, food, water, pop, and enough ice to build an igloo.

I meet Todd Nelson, the president of the association, and Clint Hays, a first-year member.

Errors doom Hawks

DITV CAUGHT ALL THE HIGHS AND LOWS OF THE HAWKEYES' MATCHUP WITH THE NATION'S TOP TEAM. CHECK THEM OUT ON CABLE CHANNEL 17, CAMPUS 4, OR DAILYIOWAN.COM

BY JASON BRUMMOND
THE DAILY IOWAN

Similar to a year ago in Columbus, Iowa didn't take advantage of its few opportunities. Ohio State was too physical, too fast, and too talented in Iowa's first game against the nation's top-ranked team since 1992.

The Hawkeyes spoiled a couple of chances to cut the deficit to seven midway through the fourth quarter, with turnovers in each of their final three possessions, as No. 1 Ohio State rolled to a 38-17 victory at Kinnick Stadium. Iowa is 0-10-1 all-time against the nation's No. 1 team.

Trailing, 31-17, with nine minutes remaining, Iowa crossed into Ohio State territory with a 13-yard pass to Scott Chandler from Drew Tate, but Chandler fumbled at the 47-yard line. After a Buckeye three-and-out, Tate was intercepted by Marcus Freeman to dash any thoughts of a comeback.

"You're losing and trying to move the ball down, and I wasn't protecting the ball as I should," said Tate, who took much of the blame for the loss afterwards. "There's no excuse for interceptions.

"It just came down to throwing the ball and completing the ball like I should. I didn't do that."

Tate, pulled from practice on Sept. 26 with lingering problems from an abdominal strain, connected on just 19-of-41 passes for 249 yards — the first time he failed to complete half of his throws since the Iowa State game in 2005.

Iowa's four turnovers led to 10 Ohio State points.

"You can take two of those away, and it's a close ball game," Tate said.

Ohio State's 21-10 halftime lead wasn't insurmountable, but the next 15 minutes practically put Iowa out of the game. Receiver Anthony Gonzalez scored a 30-yard touchdown after catching the ball on a quick slant, stopping, and reversing field on a wide loop, breaking a handful of tackles and outrunning the rest of the pursuit.

On the ensuing drive, Iowa reached the Ohio State 46-yard line but was forced to punt. Aaron Pettrey booted a 36-yard field goal nine seconds into the fourth quarter to complete a drive that lasted nearly eight minutes, to give the Buckeyes a 31-10 lead.

"That sequence was tough," Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz said. "You can't make errors against a team as talented as them."

Too much Gonzalez

BY IAN SMITH
THE DAILY IOWAN

Déjà vu.

On a night when Kinnick Stadium hosted the biggest game in more than 20 years, the scene on the field danced to the same tune as last season's 31-6 loss to Ohio State.

Anthony Gonzalez, who barely passes the eyeball test at 6-0, 195-pounds, again torched the Hawkeye defense, en route to a 38-17 pasting by the No. 1 Buckeyes.

In Columbus last year, the now-senior caught six passes for 90 yards and two touchdowns. On the big stage in Iowa City, Gonzalez's two touchdowns on five receptions and 77 yards provided the knockout blow to a beleaguered Hawkeye defense.

Jim Tressel and the Ohio State staff wisely lined Gonzalez up in the slot, forcing mismatches. The matchup continually proved favorable.

"That was kind of the plan, to spread them out and get linebackers on receivers — or safeties on receivers," Gonzalez said.

Bye, bye hype

His hands sucked in the pigskin. He turned toward the middle of the field and gave a desperately raucous audience a reason to hope.

But before Kinnick's fans, who had left no seats unfilled more than 20 minutes before game time, could raise and whip those white towels once more, out came the ball from tight end Scott Chandler's grasp, a fourth-quarter fumble recovered by Ohio State. With it seemed to go the Hawkeyes' chances for the ultimate upset, beating the No. 1 team in the nation for the first time in school history.

When powerhouses such as the Buckeyes are presented with missed tackles, turnovers, dropped passes, and poor decisions, it's expected of them to bury the opposition. But this squad gave Iowa chance after chance. And the Hawkeyes faltered, like an overmatched group under the beam of burning lights and pressure of proportions rarely faced.

A Hawkeye defensive stand on the ensuing possession gave the offense yet another chance to narrow the 31-17 margin. With 6:47 left in the final period, Iowa took over on its own six. One play later,

HAWKEYE RECAPS

Women runners stride to A-plus finish

The Iowa women's cross-country team dominated the competition at the Auburn Invitational on Sept. 30. The Hawkeyes placed five runners in the top six to easily take the team title ahead of 22 other teams. The Hawks outdistanced the closest team, Auburn, by 77 points.

Nuruki
Iowa cross country

Junior Diane Nukuri again led all runners with a first-place finish in the 5K with a time of 16:10.

Teammate Meghan Armstrong finished close behind with a time of 16:26. Shannon Stanley and Jolly Burke came in third and fourth, and Racheal Marchand completed the scoring in sixth.

All the returning Iowa runners ran personal record times — some by more than a minute — on the fast, flat course.

"We had an A-plus performance," coach Layne Anderson said. "You never expect to do that well."

The Hawkeyes are looking to improve even more for the biggest meets of the season, starting with Pre-Nationals on Oct. 14.

"We're not at peak, yet," Anderson said on Sunday. "We can score well if we have the type of day that we had yesterday."

average in the Wildcats' sweep to Northwestern's .285. The opponent nearly doubled Iowa's kills (51-29) and committed nine fewer errors (25-16).

The Sept. 30 contest saw a much better effort from the Hawkeyes, but the Illini still out-hit Iowa (.251 to .157) and won the battle in kills, 72-51.

Hawkeye sophomore Catherine Smale led the attack with 21 kills and a .255 hitting average. Fredrick was pleased with freshman Megan Schipper for her eight kills on 20 attacks.

Men's tennis has up-and-down weekend

Iowa men's tennis is whole again after a weekend of separation, after the squad wrapped up its two meets in Minneapolis and Tulsa, Okla., on Sunday.

Monsjou
Iowa men's tennis

Juniors Bart van Monsjou and J.P. Ritchie joined sophomore Christian Bierich in the ITA All-American singles tournament in Tulsa. Bierich shined, defeating Texas' Josh Zavala in advancing to the third round of the tournament. There he fell to Dos Santos of Wichita State. All three Hawkeyes won their opening matches, but van Monsjou and Ritchie lost in the second round.

The remaining members of the team played in the Minnesota Invitational. Among teamwide up and down play, freshmen Patrick Dwyer, Walker Grimes, Reinoud Haal, and Tommy McGeorge all racked up their first wins in Hawkeye black and gold. In doubles play, senior Scott Elwell combined with Haal to post a 3-0 mark. Dwyer and Grimes went 3-2, while Holm/McGeorge finished 2-3.

"Doubles were actually better

V-ball disappointing

The Iowa volleyball team dropped two Big Ten matches over the past weekend, falling to Northwestern, 3-0, on Sept. 29 (30-18, 30-20, 30-25), and Illinois a day later (22-30, 30-24, 31-30, 30-21).

The weekend matches were disappointing for the Hawkeyes, who showed some signs of prowess against some of the country's best last week.

Coach Cindy Fredrick called the Illinois game the most uninspired performances she'd seen from an Iowa team, and the statistics echoed her comments.

The Hawkeyes posted a season-worst .035 hitting

THE DAILY IOWAN

Even with just a split of its two games last weekend, the Iowa soccer team managed to take a lot away.

After falling at home to No. 9 Penn State by a 3-0 margin on Sept. 29, the Hawkeyes went to Des Moines on Sunday and bounced back by beating Drake, 1-0. The Iowa goal was scored by sophomore Kelsey Shaw in the game's 23rd minute of play. The win improved Iowa to 5-6-1, with the remainder of its games coming in Big Ten play, including five in Iowa City.

"I felt we were giving it everything we had," Iowa coach Ron Rainey said after his team's victory on Sunday. "We started out slowly and were a little fatigued from Friday night, but we got a lot of energy from off the bench."

"It was nice to see us with a lead and be able to defend that."

The Iowa soccer team received many tough blows in its contest with Penn State. The game against the Nittany Lions was a lot closer than the 3-0 score indicates. Penn State got two of its goals in the final 17 minutes, and Iowa ended up on the short end of five scoring opportunities, including four in the match's second half. One shot attempt hit the crossbar, one succumbed

Tim Speciale/The Daily Iowan

Hawkeye defender Katie Smeltzer heads the ball down field near the end of the first half in the Hawks' match with Penn State on Sept. 29. Iowa went into halftime down by one to the ninth-ranked Nittany Lions but wound up losing, 3-0.

to a miraculous save by Penn State, and another hit the side of the net.

The players seemed frustrated but were also able to put things into perspective.

"Last year, we lost 8-0 to them, so just a 3-0 loss shows you how much our team has changed," Shaw said. "It could've easily been 1-1 or 1-0, so we had good opportunities, so you can't be upset with a result like that."

One player who had an incredible game for the Hawkeyes in the first game was senior goalkeeper Ali Becker. The statistics say she only recorded four saves, but with 13 of Penn State's 14 shots coming in the second half, Becker prevented many more by breaking up would-be shot attempts. She was a prime reason Iowa kept the game from getting out of hand.

"She stepped out, won balls, made saves, and did all the things we expect her to do on a day-in, day-out basis," Rainey said. "It was a great team defensive effort, and, individually, Ali did some nice things as the last line of defense."

What made the match even more compelling was the crowd turnout. The Hawkeyes drew 201 people for their first home night game of 2006 — the most of the young year.

Becker said. "That's exactly what I've always wanted. A huge crowd, to play a top-10 team, and to just play as hard as you can is all we could ask for."

The Hawkeyes will play their next two matches at home this weekend, with the first contest to take place Friday at 7 p.m. against the Ohio State Buckeyes. It marks the first weekend this season the team won't have to leave its surroundings to play soccer. Iowa's only two home matches thus far have been coupled on weekends that featured road contests.

"It will be good to have a whole weekend at home," Rainey said.

IOWA MEN'S GOLF

Men's golf ends respite

Coming off a two-week layoff, the Iowa men's golf team will compete in the 54-hole Memphis Intercollegiate, beginning with an 8 a.m. shotgun start today. The Hawkeyes placed fourth in the event last season, and they are looking to improve on an eighth-place showing at the Wolverine Intercollegiate.

Sophomore Cole Peevler, who shot a final-round score of 74 in the team's second event this fall, finished tied for 11th place in Memphis last season, and he hopes to lead the team at Colonial Country Club again. Senior Jon Feldick, who tied for 22nd at last year's intercollegiate, paced the squad with a three-round total of 217 in Ann Arbor, Mich., and will also compete this week.

In their first season at Iowa, junior transfers Adam Miller and Scot Glasford will have another opportunity to travel and play early this fall. Including junior Dan Holterhaus, all five players competing are natives of Iowa.

Teams will play 36 holes today, with the final round scheduled for Tuesday morning.

Ohio State took a 21-10 lead into the break, even though both teams gained 11 first downs, and the Buckeyes totaled only seven more yards of offense.

Iowa's Albert Young ran a 15-yard touchdown four minutes into the second quarter, cutting the Ohio State advantage to 14-10. After the Hawkeyes went three-and-out on a possession that started on the 50, Roy Hall caught a 6-yard touchdown pass to cap an 89-yard drive for an 11-point halftime advantage.

The Hawkeyes (4-1, 1-1 Big Ten) will host Purdue on Saturday for Homecoming — a big game for both teams coming off losses. Three of the last four contests between the schools have been decided by less than a touchdown. "I am confident that we will improve, and I think we improved in some aspects this week," Ferentz said. "If we just keep our focus where it needs to be and continue to get good leadership, there is an awful lot of football left, and that is how we have to look at it."

Buckeyes pop Hawk balloon

COMMENTARY

for the second time in the ball game, a Drew Tate pass intended for Herb Grigsby was intercepted.

If the nail wasn't already pounded all the way into the coffin, that last knock shut it tight as could be.

"We're giving [the Buckeyes] a lot of credit, and they deserve credit, because they played a great game, but at the same time, the first half was anybody's game, and even during the third quarter and fourth quarter, it was anybody's game," wide receiver Andy Brodell said. "If a couple plays go our way, if a couple turnovers aren't made, we're gonna be in business. But we didn't take care of business, and it was pretty evident."

Almost every Iowa player spoke the same way after the 38-17 loss. Things could have been different if foolish mistakes had been minimized. Then again, foolish mistakes become a lot easier to make when up against teams of the highest caliber.

"I think we were in it up until the end," defensive tackle Mitch King, arguably the most impressive Hawkeye of the game, said. "I think our offense is capable of making those two scores quickly. We were never out of that game until the clock was done.

"We just made some mistakes, and they jumped on them."

Now it's all gone. All the hype and the glamour was packed into ESPN's and ABC's trucks and led back to the interstate. No more Herky heads on crowd-pleasing commentators, no more parties in Hubbard Park. It was all fun, but Iowa is Iowa again. It's back to ESPNU for Hawkeye football next week.

Kirk Ferentz said after the game he thought his team prepared and played tough.

"I didn't see anything, from where I stand, that left me discouraged," he said. "I think we're going to be a good football team. We feel confident about that, but we're not taking it for granted, either. It's not just going to happen because we've improved in the past. That's not automatic."

Saturday against Purdue is a must-win chance at redemption. The Boilermakers' high-flying offense averages almost 37 points per game.

It's not Ohio State, but it's not a walk-in-the-park. Kinnick must rock just as hard, and the mistakes of the week before must be eliminated, if the hurt is to be stopped at one loss.

Hawk fans thankful Gonzalez a senior

"You saw him on me," Iowa linebacker Mike Klinkenborg said. "He did a little jerk route, then back inside, and he's gone. Gonzalez is a great athlete."

The Ohio State offense came out of the gates firing, and Gonzalez quickly established himself with a 12-yard touchdown grab. The Hawkeye defense blitzed on the third and long play, and Buckeye quarterback Troy Smith correctly read the hot route, hitting Gonzalez on a slant in front of Iowa safety Marcus Paschal.

The second touchdown for Gonzalez — whose 24 catches and 74.6 yards per game lead Ohio State receivers — turned out the lights on any Hawkeye comeback. Leading 21-10 in the third quarter, Smith connected with the flanker on what initially looked like a short gain on the left hashmark. In the blink of an eye, Gonzalez kept his knee from touching the ground, cut right, went sideways and backwards nearly 10 yards, and cut up field with a bevy of blockers leading the way to the end zone.

You could hear a flask drop in once rocking Kinnick.

"Really, and you guys are going to give me a weird look when I say this, but that was a total team effort play," he said about his spectacular 30-yard touchdown. "[Brian] Hartline comes out, gets a huge block at the end. Ted [Ginn Jr.] said he knocked out like two guys. I can't wait to watch that on film just to see all the blocks that took place."

Even on third and long, the Iowa defense came out with three linebackers, one of which was responsible for guarding the slot. Kirk Ferentz said he never really gave any thought to bringing out an extra defensive back. The strategy normally works, just not on the speedy Ohio State receivers.

"We are not a big nickel team," the eighth-year coach said. "That is not what we do, traditionally. When you go that route, it opens you up in other areas, too. We try to do what we do best."

The No. 1 Buckeyes now head into a stretch where they should easily run the table until rival Michigan comes calling the last week of the season. Ginn and Smith continue to get all the Heisman hype, but if the prime-time contest is any indication, Gonzalez might be the Buckeyes' most dangerous offensive weapon.

24 hours of grillin' & thrillin'

TAILGATE

7:05 p.m. Leighton Smith, the tailgate-coordinator, arrives. In our brief phone conversations, I got the impression Leighton bleeds black and gold, but I had no idea.

"Blue," Leighton shouts to me, emulating Will Ferrell. "Do you believe I do not want to see you die here tonight?"

When asked about the likelihood of people actually spending 24 hours "preparing" for the Ohio State game, Leighton responds with:

"Not everyone can live at the level we live at. You've just got to put it out there."

9 p.m. The attention of the group has turned to a dog named Kinnick out on a walk with owner Renee. Renee, who also owns "Carver," is one of many who drive down the night before a game in an RV and park in the dental lot. I estimated no less than 50 RVs in the parking lot, with a few more trickling in.

9:40 p.m. The third or fourth shot gun takes place. If it were amateur night at the Apollo, this one would have been booted off stage; shirts were sprayed, and the ground soaked with the excess.

10:43 p.m. After visiting some friends of Leighton's and seeing Kinnick again, to which Leighton announces, "Kinnick, I want to party with you," we arrive back to our grounds as it starts to rain. Two 10x10 canopies go up in a hurry, and we remain dry during the 20-minute shower.

Saturday

Midnight. It is a new day, technically. Our tailgating neighbors put a 200-pound pig onto their grill, a thing of beauty. Leighton and I team up for a series of bean bags against Brian and a friend. We play one game on each of the three set ups, best two of three wins.

12:49 a.m. Bean bags end in a no contest. After losing game one, Leighton and I rally to take game two, but game three ends without a winner; Brian's partner has to go home to work in the morning. Some of us are less dedicated than others.

1:02 a.m. Some members of the group recognize two women from a Thursday bar trip and invite them over by shouting "Hellooooooo" and pumping their fists. The women stop by and proceed to introduce themselves via bullhorn.

1:30 a.m. Leighton, Jason Hall, myself, and a few others head to Kinnick to check it out at night. Already, a group of around 25 students has formed outside the southwest gate, a sign of the truly dedicated fan in search of front row seats.

4:01 a.m. I head to my tent to sneak some sleep before business picks up in a few hours.

5:57 a.m. I awake to the sound of non-24 hour tailgaters arriving and setting up shop. I make a quick trip to the Port-o-John, and at 5:57 a.m., am pleased to find they are pretty spotless.

7 a.m. "First" beer is cracked open. I'm still shivering, but the sun has almost cleared the Dental Building. Hopefully, things will heat up.

8:01 a.m. Breakfast in belly, and a few more people have shown up. Leighton's wife, Sarah, brought the hot chocolate and sticky buns; everyone is happy.

I get a call from my mother, checking up on me. It lasts 11 minutes, and even she thinks I am a little crazy for doing this. I assure her everything is going smoothly.

8:30 a.m. A lot of our group heads out, either home for a shower and change of clothes or to Hubbard Park to join the masses awaiting Game Day. It is Clint, Jason Kuiper, and myself left holding down the fort. This is the calm before the storm.

11:56 Someone shows up to sell Homecoming buttons, but most of the group members have already made the purchase.

"I already have enough flair," Mike VanMeter says to the woman. The button lady does not find this funny and walks off to the next group of fans.

1:15 p.m. The tailgate is in full force. Rob, a grill-master for hire, cooks for the association. This is, in fact, a corporately sponsored tailgate. Someone else paid for the granola bars and Vault.

3:34 p.m. We catch word the Heisman Trophy is across the street, at the ESPN the Magazine booth, and a group of us set out to have our picture taken with it. I refuse to do the Heisman pose with the statue — it's like wearing the T-shirt of the band you're going to see.

4 p.m. I arrive back at tailgating. I can feel my body wearing down from lack of sleep. I am bending, not breaking, though.

5 p.m. Excitement about the game is at its peak. Some prepare to head to Kinnick to get seats, while the rest of us begin the tear down of our site.

5:25 p.m. As most people prepare for the march to the stadium, I say my goodbyes. It has been a long day, and night, and day again.

BY THE NUMBERS

Ohio State piled up the yardage on the ground, with Antonio Pittman leading the way with 117 yards. The Buckeyes were able to dominate the trenches for nearly the entire game.

The number of times Iowa turned the ball over to the attacking Ohio State defense. Drew Tate threw three interceptions — including two in the fourth quarter. Tight end Scott Chandler also fumbled during a critical moment in the fourth quarter.

The number of crucial third and longs.

The Hawkeyes were successful running the ball in the first half but basically had to abandon the strategy in the second half. They finished game with 106 yards rushing, with only 48 yards coming from Albert Young.

PRIME PLAYS

Drew Tate's first interception, to Brandon Mitchell to start the second quarter when the Hawkeyes could have taken the lead with a touchdown. — Jason Brummond

Scott Chandler's fumble on the Ohio State 47-yard line in the fourth quarter. — Dan Parr

Anthony Gonzalez's 30-yard touchdown reception to make the score 28-10. — Ian Smith

IOWA GAME BALL

MITCH KING AND MATT KROUL

The defensive tackle combination provided energy for the Iowa defense and made a number of big plays. King was all over the field, even running down ball carriers 10 yards past the line of scrimmage. Kroul made consecutive plays behind the line of scrimmage to force an Ohio State punt in the second quarter.

OHIO STATE GAME BALL

ANTHONY GONZALEZ

The senior dominated the Hawkeyes for a second-consecutive year, catching five balls for 77 yards and two touchdowns. His 30-yard touchdown in the third quarter highlighted the difference in speed between the two squads.

THUMBS UP

THE EFFORT IN THE FOURTH QUARTER — Iowa showed heart, remaining competitive in the fourth quarter before giving the ball away on three turnovers. The Hawkeyes had their chances to get back in the game a number of times, and the gritty Tate continued to fire away.

THUMBS DOWN

RUN DEFENSE — The Hawkeye front seven failed to contain Antonio Pittman and allowed him to rack up 117 yards and a touchdown. Iowa needs to stop the run better next week, as another talented rusher — Kory Sheets — comes to town.

LOOK AHEAD

The Hawkeyes stay at home this week to host (4-1) Purdue. The Boilermakers are coming off a 35-21 loss to Notre Dame in South Bend. Purdue running back Kory Sheets already has nine touchdowns for the year and is averaging 5.6 yards per rush.

Club promotes the fencing that is legal

'Fencing is a huge stress reliever. There's nothing like running back and forth, hitting people with swords. It's both very rewarding and very intense.'

— Morgan Engling,
Iowa law student and fencing club president

BY KEVIN MCMULLEN
THE DAILY IOWAN

When Iowa stopped offering fencing as a varsity sport in 1969, the team morphed into a fairly successful club, and for the last 37 years, that club has experienced on-and-off support and success. But now, with the help of a young saber-wielding law student and a seasoned fencing veteran, the club looks to increase interest and return more fencers to the competitive field.

Morgan Engling spent four years as a varsity fencer at Northwestern University before enrolling in the law program here this year. Interested in remaining an active fencer, she researched Iowa's club team and liked what she saw. Soon after being named club president, she began thinking about the future of Iowa fencing.

"We would like to return the team to intercollegiate competitions," Engling said. "If we could get enough women interested, we could form a nine-person competitive team."

Iowa fencing veteran Ron

Herman, who began fencing at Iowa as a graduate student in 1974, now serves as the club armorer and instructor.

"We would obviously like to see more of our people take that next step and engage in competitive fencing," he said. "But fencing is a sport that really goes in cycles."

The club lost most of its serious competitors after last season, he said, and the training of the next group takes time.

"There is quite a gap in this sport between the recreational and the competitive," he said. "We just need to bridge that gap."

In the mean time, both Herman and Engling are striving to increase the awareness of the sport and promote its benefits and rewards.

"Fencing is a huge stress reliever," Engling said. "There's nothing like running back and forth, hitting people with swords. It's both very rewarding and very intense."

Herman also pointed out the mental aspects.

"Other than requiring quick hands, fencing also requires a very nimble mind," he said.

"It's all about setting up your opponents and then exploiting the errors that they make. For that reason, fencing is known as [physical] chess."

However, he said, people should avoid joining the club for the wrong reasons.

"Most people have a very romantic notion of what fencing is, mostly from swordfights in movies and such," he said. "But they lose that pretty quickly once they get here and see what it is really like."

While in movies, sword fighting involves an abundance of blade contact, Herman said, the object of fencing is to stay away from the blade.

Both he and Engling hope the recent success of American fencers boosts the sport's popularity. Saber, one of the three forms of fencing (along with foil and épée), became an Olympic sport for women in 2004, and the United States claimed both the gold and bronze medals.

Engling also said the advent of new technology has greatly aided the club's quest to recruit.

"With Facebook, I am able to search for people at Iowa who have fencing listed as one of their interests or activities," she said. "That way, we are able to get more people who have some background in fencing."

But regardless of one's prior experience, Herman said, the sport can be enjoyable for a wide variety of people, and he hopes for a resurgence of the club's popularity.

"We have a few community members, a couple of high-school kids, about 10 UI students, and a lot of grad students," he said. "Back in the '90s, when they used to teach fencing in gym classes, we would get groups of kids from the dorms who got together and came down to class. It would be great to see that again."

“Under laws that Congressman Foley helped write, soliciting sex from a minor online is a federal crime.”
— Senate Democratic Leader Harry Reid of Nevada. Former Rep. Mark Foley, R-Fla., quit Congress on Sept. 29 after the disclosure of e-mails he sent to a former congressional page and sexually suggestive instant messages he sent to other high-school pages. The FBI is examining the e-mail exchanges

ANDREW R. JUHL
The Girlfriend Files

• My girlfriend is always telling me to grow up, but that's not what she really wants. She loves how silly I am when we're canoodling in bed or loafing around the apartment. No, she doesn't want me to grow up; she just wants me to learn how to act in public. Thing is, she's screwed either way.

• I still don't really know what I want to do with my life. My girlfriend says I should just do whatever my heart tells me. Trouble is, the only thing my heart tells me is: "Stop eating so many raw butter pats."

• My girlfriend hates it when I tell her about my day, mostly because I always pinch her butt when I'm done. I don't know why I do it; I guess I'm just a sucker for a story where the guy gets the girl in the end.

• Sometimes my girlfriend will look at me and say, "I love you." Then, I look back at her and say, "I love cheese," which doesn't sound as good as "I love you, too." But I think she knows what I mean, and she usually brings me cheese.

• My girlfriend loves it when I buy her flowers for no reason. She loves it so much that we usually enjoy a good romp as a result. And that's the reason I buy her flowers for no reason.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Everything will center on relationships and partnerships today. Both in business and your personal life, you will have to make decisions about your direction and the people with whom you surround yourself.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Keep your nose to the ground and your mind on what needs to be done. You can't win emotionally, so don't bother trying. Someone you are close to will be overreacting. It will be a challenging day.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Don't be too quick to make alterations to your plans. You aren't the one who needs to accommodate, and if you hold your ground and follow through with your plans, you will reign supreme. Love is in a high cycle.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): There is a deal to be had, but you have to stop wasting time changing your mind. Make a decision, stick to it, and you will see how profitable it can turn out to be. Change is inevitable, so stop fighting it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Confusion, deception, and a lack of loyalty can affect your day if you aren't on top of things. Don't let an emotional matter cause you to miss out on something that could potentially bring you higher returns.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Worrying will not solve anything; focusing on the task at hand will. Put yourself on the line, and work diligently. Today is about learning, exploring, and doing the best job possible.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Personally, creatively, and socially you will shine, and if you are prepared to promote and present, you will get the reaction you are hoping for. Now is not the day to procrastinate — take action.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Everything appears to be running smoothly, but someone will try to throw a wrench your way. Be careful not to divulge too much. Both your personal and professional life need to be protected.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Go after your goals, and don't be surprised by who helps you and who doesn't. Rely on yourself, and you won't be disappointed by the results you get. Business advancement is looking very positive.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You may be led on a wild goose chase today. Try to take care of matters by phone and e-mail, and avoid a costly trip. Be wise in the way you ask for things, and listen carefully to what's being offered.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A moneymaking deal or a chance to invest in one of your ideas will pay off. Collect an old debt, or pay off what you owe. This is not the day to squander but rather to settle money matters once and for all.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): There will be lots of going on where partnerships are concerned, but make sure you are aware of all the details. Someone may not be forthcoming so do your own research. A unique approach to money and investments will pay off today.

Do You Bleed Black and Gold? The blood drive will take place from 11-5 at the IMU, Richey Ballroom. Thank you to both DeGowin and Mississippi Valley blood centers who will be attending this event. This event is open to the public.

Hawkeye Gold Rush A newly added program to Homecoming festivities this year, the Hawkeye Gold Rush is a scavenger hunt of Iowa trivia across campus. Students will follow hidden clues in hopes of reaching the "treasure" at the end and striking it rich! All students who complete the hunt are required to have an official 2006 Homecoming button. Buttons will be available for purchase at Hubbard Park. After they've found all the clues students will be entered in a raffle for a variety of great prizes including a chance to win a meet and greet with the members of Guster during the Parade on Friday! Students can stop by Hubbard Park for their first clue and finish the Gold Rush at their leisure. This event will take place from 9 am - 5 pm. Fox 100.7 will be in attendance. Open to all UI students.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 3

Havoc at Hubbard consists of a variety of games for the Greek Community, Student Organizations, and Residence Halls. Competitions will be comprised of Flag Football for Greeks and Co-Ed Ultimate Frisbee for Student Organization and Resident Hall Sweepstakes Participants. Havoc will take place from 11-6 pm in Hubbard Park outside of the IMU. Thanks to 94.1 KRNA for hosting a live broadcast this event.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 4

Sports Night will be held at the Hawkeye Hall of Fame from 6-9 pm. This event features a large range of athletic teams, and enables the community to meet one-on-one with the athletes themselves. Athletes will sign autographs and participate in demonstrations in their respective sports. This event not only offers games and prizes, but also features visits from Herky and the 2006 Homecoming Court. At Sports Night the Homecoming Executive Council will be sponsoring a food drive benefiting the Crisis Center in Iowa City. Z102.9 is hosting a live broadcast and Haight's Hawkeye Meat Market will be selling food hot off the grill! This event is open and free to the public.

Ice Cream Social, Movie Night & Canned Food Drive This is a new event to Homecoming this year that will also serve as a can food drive. Sweepstakes participants are encouraged to bring canned food in exchange for ice cream and refreshments. CAB will be showing a free movie and Whitey's will be providing ice cream. This event will take place in the IMU, Wheelroom from 6-9 pm.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 6

Meet the Legends See the 1939 Heisman Trophy won by Nile Kinnick and special exhibits honoring the Rose Bowl Teams of 1956, 1958 and 1981. Then meet and mingle with members of three of the most celebrated teams in Iowa Hawkeye football history. Players and coaches from the 1956, 1958 and 1981 Rose Bowl teams have been invited back to celebrate their 50th and 25th Rose Bowl Anniversary dates respectively.

These teams represent the fabled glory years of Coach Forest Evashevski, which include two Rose Bowl victories and a national championship, and Coach Hayden Fry's first Rose Bowl team that began the Hawkeye's march back to national prominence as a premier football program. It will take place from 1:30-3:00 pm at the Hall of Fame.

Tailgate, Parade, Pep Rally and Free Concert The UI Alumni Association will co-sponsor a new Homecoming tailgate from 3-5:30 pm in the Downtown Iowa City Ped-Mall before the Parade. Performances will include that of Student Organizations and a bluegrass jam session by local favorite Euforquestra String Band. Dance Marathon will be painting faces and hosting childrens activities and the Homecoming Prize Patrol will be surrounding the area. Fox 100.7 will be hosting a live broadcast and free Coca-Cola products will be provided.

Parade step-off is promptly at 5:45 pm in Downtown Iowa City. Each year the parade features sweepstakes participants, local businesses, marching bands, and of course tons of free candy and entertainment for the whole family. The parade will commence at the Pentacrest, just in front of the Old Capital, and the pep rally will begin shortly thereafter.

The pep rally will feature performances by the UI marching band and spirit squad. In addition, there will be an awards presentation for the Sweepstakes participants and the coronation of the 2006 King and Queen. Honored Guest Jim Zabel will MC the pep rally and the 1956-1958 & 1981 Rose Bowl teams including quarterback and Heisman Trophy runner-up Randy Duncan will be in attendance.

Shortly after the Pep Rally a FREE Guster and Kansas Concert co-sponsored by SCOPE Productions will be held on the Pentacrest to help wrap up Homecoming week. Get there early, you don't want to miss out on this FREE show!

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7

GAME DAY! Come watch Iowa crush Purdue in the Homecoming Football Game. The pre-game festivities will include a presentation of the Homecoming scholarship recipients, the 2006 King and Queen, as well as the Homecoming Executive Council. On Iowa, Go Hawks!!

Please support Homecoming by purchasing 2006 Homecoming buttons & t-shirts.

Available at: The University Bookstore, The Hawk Shop and participating Iowa City & Coralville businesses.

The parade starts at 5:45 pm. Please pay attention to special postings along the parade route. Due to large amount of traffic associated with Homecoming festivities, please allow extra travel time.
