Huckabee pushes the arts

Former governor of Arkansas and Republican presidential-nomination candidate Mike Huckabee stops at the West Music store in Coralville to play a few songs and talk about the importance of arts education.

BY STEPHEN SCHMIDT
THE DAILY IOWAN

With his sports coat hanging on a mike stand nearby and his pink tie dangling from his neck, Republican presidential-nomination candidate Mike Huckabee leaned over a black and white Fender bass Monday afternoon, smiling and thumping along to a Chuck Berry song, backed by two West Music employees.

For the former governor of Arkansas, it was one of many stops this week in Iowa, at which he expressed his views on the importance of religion in politics, discussed his health-care plan, and talked about the need for creativity in the economy of the future.

On the Coralville stop, though, a part jam, part question-and-answer session in West Music, 1212 Fifth St., he focused on the significance of music and arts programs in schools.

Teaching the arts, especially music, is important because it helps students "learn how to learn," Huckabee said, citing improvements that students involved with music have in math, language, and science.

"You've probably never heard a presidential candidate talk about music and art and the importance of it," Huckabee said. "But if I don't get to do anything else running for president, I want to make sure that this country hears that this is a vital part of future and a critical part of our education system."

Alice Stewart, a spokeswoman for Huckabee, said the governor is a lifelong music lover who has played the guitar since he was a child. Huckabee also plays bass in a band called Capitol Offense, made up of former staff members of the governor's office.

Vets back Dems

Democratic veterans show that Republican candidates don't have a monopoly on military support.

BY CHRISTOPHER PATTON
THE DAILY IOWAN

The 2008 Democratic presidential-nomination hopefuls all advocate ending the war in Iraq. Even as they criticize the Bush administration's foreign policy, however, candidates have been careful to emphasize their support for the men and women serving in the U.S. military.

As do the Republican hopefuls, many Democrats are touting their veteran supporters as evidence of their pro-military stances. David Redlawsk, a UI associate professor of political science, said veterans' support of antiwar candidates isn't unusual.

"It's probably not right to believe that veterans go in one direction or the other politically," he said.

Sen. Joe Biden, D-Del., has made veterans an important part of his campaign by encouraging them to join his Veterans for Biden organization.

J.B. White, the national coordinator of Veterans for Biden, served in Iraq from 2003-04. White supports Biden's campaign because he thinks the senator has the best plan for dealing with the situation in Iraq.

"Anyone who tells you that we're pulling out of Iraq tomorrow is not telling the truth, and anyone who says we have to stay indefinitely is delusional," he said.

Holding Iraq's ethnic and religious groups together is a failed strategy, White argued. He said the United States needs to support a solution involving semiautonomous status for Iraq's various religious and ethnic populations.

Beware the SUPERBUG

The UI Hospitals and Clinics are working to ward off drug-resistant bacteria.

BY ASHTON SHURSON
THE DAILY IOWAN

That which doesn't kill a bacteria makes it stronger.

And hospitals in Iowa City and across the country are facing the reality of a "superbug," or a harmful staph infection that is projected to infect 5 percent of hospital and nursing-home patients, according to a study.

"They're not blowing smoke," said UI Pathology Professor Gary Doern. "This is the real deal."

And while he said Iowa only sees half the level of infections as the overall national rate, the UI Hospitals and Clinics is doing its part to ensure the germs stay under control.

A study released by the Association for Professionals in Infection Control and Epidemiology said the superbug — methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus — could infect 30,000 patients at any given time, and the strain is more dangerous than previously thought.

Doern said community-associated resistant staph is more resistant to antibiotics and can cause "horrific" infections in the skin and lungs — or pneumonia.

Embracing the world

The 'hugging saint' has traveled the world delivering her message of love.

BY SAMANTHA MILLER
THE DAILY IOWAN

Thousands of barefoot people walked through the doorways of the Marriott Hotel conference room Monday, toward the song, lecture, and warm embrace of Amma, the "hugging saint."

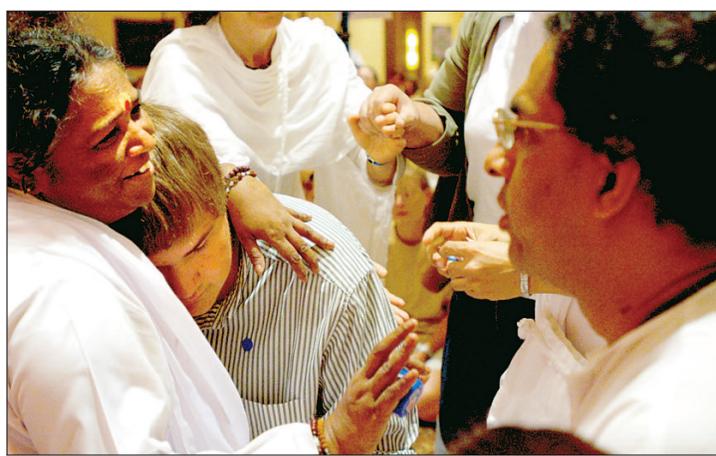

Guru Mata Amritanandamayi, or Amma — meaning "Mother" — as she is affectionately called, has traveled the world delivering her message of love and self-believing, sealed with a hug.

"There is no guarantee for the next moment or for even the next breath," she told the crowd. "We must make the best use of the present moment."

Amma appeared in the hotel conference room twice on Monday, where she is scheduled to show again today, as part of her summer tour through the United States. She drew a crowd Monday of more than 1,000, said event organizer Toni Rubin.

As Amma entered through the large doorway and headed toward a stage inside the brightly adorned conference room, she passed thousands of empty shoes removed by those in the audience. She spent approximately three hours preaching and singing Hindu songs.

A large group flocked toward her as she entered. Amma's own bare feet were washed and worshipped during a ceremony called "pada puja," as konk shells bellowed, singing resounded, and some prayed.

In addition to their shoeless garb, a large portion of Amma's followers were clad completely in white.

"[The white dress] is a sign of respect in this specific tradition," said Melissa Ingram, a follower of Amma's teachings for 14 years.

Those teachings differ from one's typical guru, Ingram said, because Amma gives hugs as blessings.

"It's great because you get a wonderful hug and blessing at the same time," she said.

Biden details Iraq solution

Biden reaches out to gay community, in addition to focusing on solutions to the Iraq conflict and health-care conundrum.

BY SHAJIA AHMAD
THE DAILY IOWAN

Red, white, and blue banners shared the stage with a few more colorful flags as Sen. Joe Biden, D-Del., hosted a conversation with the Iowa City gay community on the outdoor patio of Givanni's on Monday night.

Outside the guarded rail enclosing the senator and his audience, several people passing through the Pedestrian Mall also stopped to listen to the presidential-nominee hopeful as he spent most of the night fielding questions about health care and speaking about his political solution for the conflict in Iraq, which he likened to a boulder sitting in the middle of the road.

"It's the thing we have to solve to regain our credibility in the world," Biden said.

Biden, the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, touted himself as the only candidate with a detailed political solution to the conflict. He advocated the installation of a federally limited central government within defined borders that would allow different regions autonomy to retain their cultural fabrics.

The senator said he doesn't want to sustain the war or increase troops but wants to protect them as long as they are overseas.

"I would do everything to bring them home, but while at least one soldier is there, I want to do everything to protect them," he said.

David Klemm, an Iowa City resident for 24 years and a gay-rights supporter, wore a "Biden for President" button next to his rainbow ribbon.

"The gay-rights community is an educated and intellectual community, and they, too, have to think about health care, and Iraq, and other issues," he said.

Klemm said he respects that the senator assumed "not one iota of difference of how people are treated in this country."

Toward the end of his speech, Biden addressed gay-rights issues specifically, calling the current administration "homophobic." He praised the community for its efforts in protecting civil rights.

"You've done an incredible service to humanity," he said.

He emphasized to the crowd that gay-rights supporters are the majority, calling the opposition a "dying dinosaur breed."

"Because of all of you here, sitting in the crowd, supporting gay rights to preserve what little gain you've made, you're beginning to change America," he said. "It's a different America from what it was 10 years ago."

Carlton Blackburn, the president of Connections — a gay-community group in Iowa City — and a supporter of Biden, organized the senator's appearance. He said it was the first convention held by a presidential hopeful in Iowa City specifically for the gay community.

"The Democrats, most of them are all the same — Biden understands what's going on with the gay reality," Blackburn said. "What he's doing to break this barrier is coming out and speaking with this community and saying it's not a big deal, it's equality in action."

Blackburn is planning to invite other presidential campaigns, both Republican and Democratic, to speak if they, too, want to reach out to the gay community, he said.

Bill extending rights in effect

The Iowa Civil Rights Act has been updated, giving protection based on sexual orientation and gender identity.

BY CLARA HOGAN
THE DAILY IOWAN

The bill that grants civil-rights protection to gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender Iowans was one of many new laws that took effect July 1.

The measure, which Gov. Chet Culver signed into law in May, updates the Iowa Civil Rights Act. The original act protects against discrimination based on age, race, creed, color, sex, national origin, religion, and disability. The newest legislation adds statewide protection based on sexual orientation and gender identity.

Rep. Mary Mascher, D-Iowa City, who has co-sponsored similar measures for more than a decade, feels it's an important issue to many in the Iowa City area.

"It's long overdue," she said. "There is no doubt it took too long to pass — it should have passed clear back in the '80s."

She noted that when legislation was proposed in the late 1980s, the Statehouse was only aiming to add "sexual orientation" to the bill, excluding "gender identity."

"At least now that we've waited to pass the bill, we have more people protected," she said. "I don't think we would have gotten that passed back then."

Iowa City was one of few cities in Iowa to have protection for gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender people in its city code prior to May 25, when Culver signed the new bill into law, Mascher said.

Dustin Wagner, a recent UI alumnus who has served on the executive board of the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, Transgender and Allied Union, currently works as an HIV outreach coordinator. He clerked for Mascher when the bill struggled in the Legislature.

"I saw the problems the legislation had," he said. "There was a lot of changing the language in the bill in order to please both parties. But they found a compromise, and it's fantastic that it passed with bipartisan support."

Before the bill passed, only four cities other than Iowa City offered legal protection to the gay community, he said.

"It's a bit of a relief to the [alternative] community in Iowa City, now we are protected statewide," Wagner said. "I think it sends the message to the community that the community is here, and I hope it brings more change."

Rep. David Jacoby, D-Coralville, who also supported the bill, believes it will benefit both individuals and economic development.

"It's saying that all people are equal and deserve equal treatment," he said. "It also sends the message that Iowa is open for business and that we are a friendly state."

Mascher believes the legislation will attract people to the state.

"Hopefully, it will bring back those who have left the state because of their lack of civil rights," she said. "We want to show the nation that Iowa is welcoming."

Woman charged with theft

Johnson County sheriff's deputies arrested an Iowa City woman on Monday and charged her with first-degree theft.

Lisa Marie Stuelke, 41, is charged with stealing $40,000 during her employment at Iowa City Regency Trailer Park, 4455 Oak Crest Hill Road S.E.

Stuelke managed the park from May 2005 until August 2006. In that month, the trailer park's managerial company — the Churchill Group of Carbondale, Colo. — reported the missing money to the Johnson County Sheriff's Office. According to officials, an investigation allegedly connected the missing money to Stuelke.

First-degree theft is a Class C felony in Iowa, defined by Iowa Code as theft of property exceeding $10,000 in value. It is punishable by 10 years in prison and a fine of up to $10,000.

Stuelke is being held in Johnson County Jail with bail set at $50,000.

Advance America robbed

Iowa City police are looking for a man who robbed Advance

America, 1705 S. First Ave., on Monday.

Police responded to the cash-advance business after receiving a report of a robbery. They said the man entered the store, displayed a weapon, and then demanded money from an employee. After an "undisclosed amount of cash" was taken, the man fled from the scene, heading north.

No one was injured during the incident, police said.

Initial police reports describe the man as a white male, 5-10, around 150 pounds, with "some facial hair," and in his mid-to-late 20s. The suspect was reportedly wearing blue jeans, a black long-sleeve shirt, and a black baseball hat at the time of the robbery.

Councilors discuss city-manager search

The Iowa City City Council met Monday morning to discuss the preliminary steps involved in hiring a new city manager.

For the first order of business, the councilors have decided to employ a consultant to aid them in the hiring process, following the difficulties seen in Cedar Rapids during a similar transition.

"We're in a much better place now," said Mayor Ross Wilburn. "We're getting organized, and unlike the situation in Cedar Rapids, we've got plenty of time."

Each councilor will rank the qualities he or she thinks are most important for a consultant firm to embody, and then a matrix will be compiled and discussed during a meeting on Aug. 28.

Following that meeting, the seven councilors will meet with a few selected consultants during day-long interviews, tentatively scheduled for Sept. 15.

The search for a new manager began in June, when the present city manager, Steve Atkins, announced his retirement.

According to the city of Iowa City website, the city manager is listed as the chief administrative officer for the city, with such duties as implementing policy decisions, enforcing city ordinances, and supervising the directors, administrative personnel, and employees of the city's operating departments.

The survey also indicated that approximately 75 percent of patients with the bug who entered hospitals were already infected.

Staph infections can be transmitted by direct contact and through open wounds — one reason it's prevalent in hospitals. In addition, if an infection isn't treated properly, a secondary infection can occur once it enters the blood stream, which could potentially be fatal.

Loreen Herwaldt, a UI professor of internal medicine, said the infections are reminiscent of the flu pandemic, because it destroys tissue, specifically of the lung.

Once it's clear that a patient has the infection, Doern said, there are infection-control procedures: washing hands, putting patients in single rooms, and contact precautions — wearing a gown, mask, and gloves during interaction with the patient.

"[Precautionary measures] clearly prevent transmission," he said. "But how do you know when you should impose those precautions?"

One in three people have the risk of carrying the bug but are asymptomatic, Doern said.

"We have an effective means of intervention but no way of identifying asymptomatic [people] who are just as capable of transmitting," he said.

A screening process is in place to identify carriers in high-risk areas of the UIHC, such as surgery, transplant, and oncology, but not all who enter the hospital are tested.

"Music was life-changing for me," he said.

He believes "education is a function of the states," and his education plan would preserve much of the framework that has been established by No Child Left Behind.

No Child Left Behind added music to the required curriculum for the first time in American history, Huckabee said, but because there is no objective test of performance for music and art, as there is for math and English, schools have been ignoring it.

"What I would want to do as president is to help states to understand why [setting high standards for music and art] is in their best interest academically and economically," Huckabee said.

Another improvement he would like to see in education is to empower individual students to develop curriculum that would keep them interested, he said. He also supports parental choices for education, whether that means public, private, or home schooling, he said.

Martin Bontrager, a dairy farmer from Kalona, attended the event leaning toward voting for Huckabee. As a home-schooled father of nine,

"I'm really concerned with the health care veterans receive after they have served their time," he said. "In the past, we have taken care of our military people."

The Walter Reed Hospital scandal is a complete shame, he

"I know a lot of people in my generation who served in Vietnam are still suffering as much as these guys coming back from Iraq," McMillin said. "We need leadership that will address this issue."

Rodham Clinton realizes there are problems in Iraq, he said, noting it's important that she recognizes the need for a change in strategy there.

This Independence Day, ponder the meaning of real patriotism

On Wednesday all over the country, the American flag will be on display. We have an interesting relationship with the American flag in this country. Americans have a history of relying on symbols to express themselves. An American flag in the front yard or a yellow ribbon magnet on a vehicle may be a well-intended display of support or patriotism, but in the end, it is only a symbol. The power is not in its exhibition but in the sentiment that it is intended to express.

Sept. 11, 2001, provided a clear display of this divide. It was a time when the entire nation banded together, a time of bipartisanship, a time of crisis in which retailers sold through their stock of American flags to patrons eager to show their patriotism. But that surge of patriotism went beyond an increase in flag sales. Masses of people stood in line to donate blood to the Red Cross. Strangers mourned together as a country of deeply affected people gave a part of themselves with two common goals: to show the strength of our country and its people and to show that we could not be defeated.

Now, it is nearly six years later, and many of the flags still remain. Yet now, they seem to be a symbol of the strength that once was. At what point did these symbols with so much meaning become reduced to simple ornamentation? In the politically charged climate of post-9/11 America, not only has the flag become a more visible adornment, but patriotism itself has become a more sensitive subject. This is the underlying and unspoken implication of patriotic paraphernalia: If your car does not bear a yellow ribbon, you do not support our troops. If you lack a "9/11: Never Forget" bumper sticker, you don't think that the events of that terrible day were all that terrible. It's a subtle, pernicious phenomenon. As difficult as patriotism may be to define, it's something that nobody wants to be accused of lacking.

In a Republican primary debate on May 7, Mitt Romney was asked, "What do you dislike most about America?" A ridiculous question, to be sure; but Romney's ingenuous response gives food for thought: "Gosh. I love America," he said, seemingly misunderstanding the question, and followed this with his explanation of what he feels makes America so great. It is not Romney's sincerity we question, but his motivation behind this answer. Given the nature of the question during a live debate, in which the candidates had to think on their feet, it's more likely that Romney feared creating a negative sound bite, and his upbeat answer was likely given in lieu of a legitimate complaint about the status quo.

Of course, we don't know what he was thinking and merely use this as an example of what seems to be an underlying fear in our political climate. In a country in which we celebrate freedom of speech, why is it so difficult to openly criticize our country and our government? There are two things that we should ask ourselves over this Independence Day as we see the Stars and Stripes on display at every corner: What does the flag really stand for? And what is the measure of a patriot?

This Editorial Board believes that true patriotism is having the strength to speak freely and to openly question our government when we feel our values are not being represented. True strength comes from having the courage of our convictions to speak out against the status quo. Exercising freedom of speech demonstrates our pride in a way that merely waving a flag can not communicate.

Wicked wacky

In this wonderfully wacky corner of the universe called America, the hits just keep on coming, don't they.

No wonder (there's that word again) we're so black-and-blue.

Take the Supreme Court. The good justices (five of them, anyway — the usual suspects) recently decided that the Constitution's freedom of speech does not cover a high-school student unfurling a banner reading "Bong Hits 4 Jesus" (on a public sidewalk, not on school grounds).

On the other hand, the same five usual-suspect justices ruled that the campaign-finance law attempting to regulate corporate and labor-union campaign donations (among others) infringes on their freedom of speech.

BEAU ELLIOT

Now, like any good American, I'm in favor of freedom of speech. I mean, of course I'm in favor of freedom of speech — I write for a newspaper, and freedom of speech is what keeps us in business. Well, that and the ad revenue.

So it would be hypocritical of me to suggest that corporations' and labor unions' freedom of speech ought to be regulated, because once you regulate freedom of speech, it's no longer freedom of speech.

That being said, it does seem a bit curious to me (if not wacky) that those five justices would rush to protect freedom of speech for corporations and labor unions but deny it for a high-school student.

Wonderfully wacky. Or wackily wonderful.

Of course, in the universe of wackiness, everyone runs a distant second to the vice president.

Vice president in name only, apparently.

If you've been paying attention, you'll know that it turns out that the Stealth President Cheney is apparently not actually in the federal government.

Whew, what a relief. For six years, I thought he was the government.

Well, OK, what the Stealth President is actually contending is that his office is not an entity of the executive branch.

Yeah, I know — those of us who took junior-high civics are looking to the heavens (or the sheltering sky, if you're an atheist) with an incredulous expression and going, "What?"

You know what? I don't think the Stealth President is even on this planet. I think he's in a secure, undisclosed location in the Mars Rover.

Talk about getting beyond the long arm of subpoenas.

Maybe he'll find Saddam's long-elusive (how many places can they possibly find to hide, anyway?) WMD up there.

The Stealth President's office is taking this bizarre position because of a dispute with the National Archives agency over the keeping of classified documents. Cheney is arguing that his office is not covered by the rules of that agency, the Information Security Oversight Office, because his office is not part of the executive branch. So, under this thinking — if that's not a gross misuse of the word — his office does not need to file the required security reports to the oversight office.

Even the Supreme Court can't touch this wackiness (well, maybe in 2000).

I mean, Cheney seems to have had no problem invoking executive privilege in keeping the names of the people on his energy panel secret.

What's more than a little bizarre is that the Stealth President's office filed the required reports about classification and declassification of secrets in 2001 and 2002 but stopped filing them in 2003 and subsequently.

So it would appear that the Stealth President believed he was part of the executive branch in the first two years of the administration, but in 2003, he was suddenly reborn as a non-executive-brancher.

Huh? What happened in 2003 to cause such a sea change? you might well ask.

Ah — in 2003, CIA agent Valerie Plame's identity was leaked. And that leak seems, at least in part, to have come from the Stealth President's office. Cheney's former chief of staff, Lewis Libby, was once famously facing a prison term for his role in the scandal, until wackiness stepped in.

Now, far be it for me to suggest there's some connection between the Stealth President trying to remove himself from oversight from the secrets agency because of the Plame affair — it might just be coincidence that both occurred in 2003 and both center on his office, wherever that might be now.

But as my father, a man far wiser than me, once told me, When you see a coincidence in politics, there's probably no coincidence.

It's a wacky, wacky world.

Even if so much of it is a secret. ■

Beau Elliot doesn't really believe the Stealth President is on Mars. A black hole is more his style.

COMMENTARY

Lugar's break signals trouble for administration's Iraq policy

Precious few politicians know how to hold their tongues, and even fewer are lambasted for doing so. But Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., the former Senate Foreign Relations Committee chairman, has taken fire — including on this page — for his refusal to criticize the Bush administration's disastrous conduct of the Iraq war. Until now. In a speech that sent tremors through the White House and deserves to be widely read, Lugar last week laid out a compelling case for changing course in Iraq now, before Army Gen. David Petraeus reports to Congress in September, before broader U.S. interests in the Middle East are irrevocably damaged, before the American presidential-campaign season makes domestic political compromise impossible, and before the U.S. military itself is gravely wounded.

The media gave Lugar's speech extensive coverage in part because of what defines news today. Conventional wisdom in Washington holds that President Bush has for the moment won a game of political chicken with the Democrats, who haven't found a way to cut off funding for the Iraq war without succumbing to charges that they are endangering American troops. The White House will be influenced on Iraq policy only by Republicans, the thinking goes. So when a loyalist such as Lugar, who faces no political challengers and hails from one of the few states where the president is still popular, publicly breaks ranks with the president — and is joined by another GOP centrist, Sen. George Voinovich of Ohio — that's news.

But that political calculus presupposes that the president can be influenced by other politicians — or by public opinion. And that's dubious, judging from the passionate and deeply ideological speech he delivered three days after Lugar's. Contrary to reports that the White House is looking for a compromise, Bush gave a lofty defense of his "surge" strategy and asserted that Iraqis of all ethnic stripes are joining together to fight what they now realize is a common enemy: Al Qaeda.

Would that it were so, and inshallah, as Arabs say, "if God wills." So far, evidence of such a divine plan is lacking, while human strife multiplies: not merely Shiite versus Sunni but Shiite against Shiite, Shiite radicals against Americans, Kurds against Arabs, Sunni Iraqis in Al Anbar province against Sunni Qaeda supporters, criminal gangs against their powerless prey, and on and on. The president's narrative about the need for a global struggle against the terrorist evil would be more compelling were it less simplistic and Manichaean.

That's why the White House should listen to Lugar. The right will dislike his conclusion that the current strategy won't be worth the costs and his recommendation for a troop drawdown. The left won't like his recommendation that the United States leave a substantial number of troops in Iraq to protect broader Middle East interests. But Lugar's dissent, however belated, provides a basis for sensible bipartisan discussion on Iraq — if such a civil debate can still be had.

Corps works to bring M.D.s to underserved

Communities lacking health professionals look to loan-forgiveness programs to attract physicians.

BY ZHI XIONG
THE DAILY IOWAN

Will work for loan forgiveness — a mantra for many newly minted M.D.s around the nation. The average graduate from the UI Carver College of Medicine bears an $115,000 debt, says Linda Bissell, the director of financial services at the medical school.

But in order to lighten the financial baggage, they might have to work in areas where fellow physicians are sorely lacking.

Rep. Bruce Braley, D-Iowa, presented a bill June 28 reauthorizing the National Health Service Corps, a scholarship and loan-repayment program that implants primary-care professionals into clinician-deficient communities around the nation.

The bill also hikes the corps' annual budget to $300 million — more than doubling its current funding — as part of the federal government's Health Center Initiative. Efforts go to provide health care to 1,200 disadvantaged communities around the country.

Such national programs send physicians to health centers that are typically established in urban areas with low-income populations, said Peter Damiano, a professor in the UI Public Policy Center.

The state has approximately 60 needy areas, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. But compared with inner city Chicago or even Davenport, smaller Iowa communities are at the back of the line in receiving help from such national programs, Damiano said.

The effects are notable in such areas as Black Hawk County.

"More health centers are being established, but the funding hasn't been adequate to reach rural America," said Jennifer Lightbody, the executive director of the People's Community Health Clinic in Waterloo. "We're not eligible for any [corps] providers."

THE NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE CORPS

- More than 4,000 participating as of 2003
- More than 27,000 have served since 1972
- Forgives $50,000 in loans for a minimum two-year commitment
- $85,000 for three years
- $120,000 for four years

Source: U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, UI Carver College of Medicine Office of Student Affairs and Curriculum Financial Services

The clinic last had a National Health Service Corps physician in 2001, she said. Meanwhile, it recruits doctors with a combination of federal and state incentive programs.

For the physicians, dentists, and psychiatrists who relocate to such needy areas, the transition can be initially intimidating, Damiano said. He did dental work in the 1980s on a Navajo reservation.

"You come out of school not having seen anything like that before," he said.

Other concerns might include working in very specific medical fields.

"It locks [students] somewhat into disciplines before they're exposed to all different kinds," Bissell said.

Commonly needed services include gynecology, family practice, and general internal medicine, Lightbody said.

"It's a mixed picture," she said. "Some fulfill their loan obligation and are still working here 10 to 15 years later."

Currently, no one from the Carver College of Medicine, College of Dentistry, or College of Pharmacy is enrolled in the program.

Officials: Take the Fourth safely

Fireworks cause 25,000 fires annually, with half occurring on the Fourth, and the number of fireworks-caused injuries skyrockets.

Ben Roberts/The Daily Iowan

BY RYAN GRESAVAGE
THE DAILY IOWAN

As if the number of bangs and crackles flaring from fireworks in the last few days weren't enough to remind us, the Fourth of July is almost here.

Fireworks have been a part of Independence Day celebrations for generations, and this year, as with any other, officials are emphasizing safety and common sense.

Although Iowa law prohibits discharging most types of fireworks, some enthusiasts are willing to cross state lines to purchase the explosive devices and bring them back home.

Capt. Joe Lalla of the Johnson County Sheriff's Office said sparklers, snakes, and caps are the only legal fireworks in the state. And while Iowans won't see roadblocks or checkpoints set up along the border, officers have said they will not tolerate illegal firework use.

"Fireworks are not illegal to possess, just illegal to shoot off," Lalla said.

Police are permitted to use their discretion when responding to a call about fireworks. Typically, officers confiscate the illegal products and charge the violator with a simple misdemeanor, though large quantities and sizes of individual fireworks can lead to more serious charges, ranging from a serious misdemeanor to a Class B felony.

If people intend to set off fireworks, Ohio's Phantom Fireworks Vice President William Weimer's best advice is to use common sense.

"These products burn to function, and you must respect that functionality," he said.

Weimer also suggested to keep children away from fireworks no matter how small or innocent the fireworks might seem; even the smallest sparklers can lead to burns.

"There really are no child firework accidents, there are stupid-parent accidents," he said.

Charles Jennissen, a UI clinical associate professor of emergency medicine, said he sees the majority of fireworks-related injuries during the three weeks surrounding the Fourth. Many serious injuries are to the eyes, he said.

"If the eye is involved, blindness is a high likelihood," Jennissen said.

While personal injury is a main concern, fireworks can also cause bush and grass fires.

Iowa City Fire Marshal John Grier said fireworks cause 25,000 fires annually, 50 percent of which occur on the Fourth.

"Fireworks are fast and unpredictable; the best way to enjoy fireworks is to leave it to the professionals," he said.

The Iowa City Jaycees will host an event in Lower City Park on Wednesday, beginning at 5 p.m. and incorporating children's games and a food tent. A KRNA radio broadcast is slated to take place at 7 p.m., with the firework display beginning at 9 p.m.

No prison for Libby

President Bush commutes the 2½-year prison term of former Dick Cheney aide Lewis Libby, who was convicted in the Valerie Plame affair.

BY BEN FELLER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush spared former White House aide I. Lewis "Scooter" Libby from a 2 1/2-year prison term in the CIA leak investigation Monday, delivering a political thunderbolt in the highly charged criminal case. Bush said the sentence was just too harsh.

Bush's move came just five hours after a federal appeals panel ruled that Libby could not delay his prison term. That meant Libby was likely to have to report soon, and it put new pressure on the president, who had been sidestepping calls by Libby's allies to pardon Vice President Dick Cheney's former chief of staff.

"I respect the jury's verdict," Bush said in a statement. "But I have concluded that the prison sentence given to Mr. Libby is excessive. Therefore, I am commuting the portion of Mr. Libby's sentence that required him to spend thirty months in prison."

Special Prosecutor Patrick Fitzgerald disputed the president's assertion that the prison term was excessive. Libby was sentenced under the same laws as other criminals, Fitzgerald said. "It is fundamental to the rule of law that all citizens stand before the bar of justice as equals," the prosecutor said.

Bush's decision enraged Democrats and cheered conservatives — though some of the latter wished Bush had granted a full pardon.

"Libby's conviction was the one faint glimmer of accountability for White House efforts to manipulate intelligence and silence critics of the Iraq war," said Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid. "Now, even that small bit of justice has been undone."

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., said Bush's decision showed the president "condones criminal conduct."

Unlike a pardon, which would have wiped away Libby's criminal record, Bush's commutation voided only the prison term.

The president left intact a $250,000 fine and two years' probation for his conviction of lying and obstructing justice in a probe into the leak of a CIA operative's identity. The former operative, Valerie Plame, contends the White House was trying to discredit her husband, a critic of Bush's Iraq policy.

Bush said his action still "leaves in place a harsh punishment for Mr. Libby."

Libby was convicted in March, the highest-ranking White House official ordered to prison since the Iran-Contra affair roiled the Reagan administration in the 1980s. Arms were secretly sold to Iran to gain freedom for American hostages, with the money funneled to anticommunist guerrillas in Nicaragua in spite of a congressional ban. Bush's father, former President George H.W. Bush, issued pardons for six former officials shortly before leaving office in 1992.

Testimony in the Libby case revealed the extraordinary steps that Bush and Cheney were willing to take to discredit a critic of the Iraq war.

Libby's supporters celebrated the president's decision.

"President Bush did the right thing today in commuting the prison term for Scooter Libby," said House Republican Whip Roy Blunt of Missouri.

"That's fantastic. It's a great relief," said former Ambassador Richard Carlson, who helped raise millions for Libby's defense fund. "Scooter Libby did not deserve to go to prison, and I'm glad the president had the courage to do this."

Already at record lows in the polls, Bush risked a political backlash with his decision. President Ford tumbled in the polls after his 1974 pardon of Richard Nixon, and the decision was a factor in Ford's loss in his bid for re-election.

White House officials said Bush knew he could take political heat and simply did what he thought was right. They would not say what advice Cheney might have given the president.

Allen happy to be a Celtic

BY JIMMY GOLEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WALTHAM, Mass. — It didn't take long for Ray Allen to show his new coach what adding a veteran can do for the Boston Celtics.

Holding up his No. 20 uniform on Monday for the traditional news-conference photo shoot, Allen displayed it front-facing, so the jersey read "Celtics." Minutes earlier, when newly minted draft choices Glen "Big Baby" Davis and Gabe Pruitt posed for a similar picture, they held it so their names were shown.

"OK, now turn it around," Boston coach Doc Rivers chided them. "That's the only name that matters."

The Celtics acquired Allen on draft night last week for the fifth overall pick, which turned out to be Georgetown forward Jeff Green, along with Delonte West and Wally Szeczerbiak. The move signaled Boston's intention to build a playoff contender around Paul Pierce and Al Jefferson, rather than adding more young pieces to an already young team.

"When you're playing with veterans, they know what to do. It's going to make it a lot better," Rivers said at the team's practice facility. "They're professional. It helps everyone. It helps Ray having Paul. It helps Paul having Ray. It helps Al." Rivers said another draft choice might have helped out the starting lineup. But by adding Allen, a seven-time all-star, instead of another highly touted youngster, he also gets a veteran presence that can carry the team when Pierce needs a rest.

"When Paul comes out, you have Ray on the floor," Rivers said. "Hopefully, we won't have the times anymore when Paul sits for 30 seconds, and we've got to bring him back into the game."

The Celtics picked Pruitt, from Southern Cal, with the 32nd overall pick and then grabbed Davis with the 35th selection that they got back from Seattle with Allen. They're both expected to leave today for the Las Vegas Summer League.

"It's an honor for me to play with Ray Allen and Paul Pierce, two guys who are really supreme at their positions," Pruitt said.

Davis was a star of LSU's Final Four run in 2006 and nearly declared for the draft after last season. But he returned for his junior year, and his stock dipped when his numbers dipped and missed several late games with a strained quadriceps.

Davis, who led the Southeastern Conference in rebounding last season while averaging almost 18 points, admitted being disappointed that he wasn't drafted in the first round, but vowed to make the most of it.

"Everybody wants to go in the first round. ... In spite of what happened, I have the chance, and I'm in the NBA now," he said.

"It just means so much, being in basketball, to hear the 'Boston Celtics.' You think about immortality, all the championships, being a part of this organization is a blessing. I'm happy they gave me the chance, happy they believed in me."

Allen, who will turn 32 later this month, averaged a career-high 26.4 points last season, April 17. He had surgery on his 11th toe to remove bone spurs in both ankles but said Tuesday his feet were "perfect ... like having two new pairs of feet."

WIMBLEDON

Serena beats pain, advances

BY HOWARD FENDRICH
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WIMBLEDON, England — Hobbled, hurting, and essentially playing on one leg, Serena Williams managed to gut out a three-set victory at Wimbledon on Monday against an opponent who helped by fading right along with the daylight.

Williams crumpled to the grass in the second set with a left calf injury, was treated on court, then kept on playing, barely able to move. Given a reprieve by a nearly two-hour rain delay, Williams returned to compete over her mother's protests.

And she won, prolonging her bid for a third title at the All England Club by getting past No. 10-seeded Daniela Hantuchova of Slovakia (6-2, 6-7 [2], 6-2) to set up a quarterfinal showdown against No. 1 Justine Henin.

When Hantuchova dumped a backhand into the net for the last of her 28 unforced errors, Williams blew a kiss to the charcoal-colored clouds above Centre Court.

"I thought about not finishing, but very briefly, I thought I wouldn't be able to live with myself if I hadn't at least tried," the No. 7 Williams said. "I've never dealt with such pain. I can't believe — I can't believe I won, really."

It was, in many respects, an all-around startling day at Wimbledon, particularly for the Williams family.

Serena's older sister, Venus, double-faulted 14 times, faced 23 break points, trailed 5-3 in the final set, and still figured out a way to beat Akiko Morigami of Japan (6-2, 3-6, 7-5) in a match suspended because of rain June 30.

"Two crazy matches," said the sisters' mother, Oracene Price, summing up her daughters' day.

Anja Niedringhaus/Associated Press

Serena Williams reacts after winning a point on her way to defeating Daniela Hantuchova in their match on the Centre Court at Wimbledon on Monday.

"I've got to say, they've got fight. If they don't have nothing else, they've got fight."

Well, Serena and Venus Williams happen to have plenty more, which is why they have won a combined 13 Grand Slam singles titles, five at Wimbledon. And why they are still in this year's tournament, with Venus to face 2004 champion Maria Sharapova today for a quarterfinal berth.

If she's able to play, Serena will meet Henin in a rematch from last month's French Open, where the Belgian won their quarterfinal en route to the title. Henin, trying to complete a career Grand Slam at Wimbledon, beat No. 15 Patty Schnyder (6-2, 6-2).

Asked about the matchup against Henin, one that would be worthy of a major final, Serena sidestepped looking ahead, saying, "Getting through today is great. That's the only thing I'm focused on right now."

Hantuchova had just hit a forehand winner to make the score 5-5, 30-15 in the second set when Serena, walking along the baseline, suddenly felt a grab in her lower left leg. She whacked herself in the calf three times with her racket, then clutched at the muscle and sprawled on the ground.

The 2002 and 2003 Wimbledon champion was down for more than five minutes, grimacing and dropping her head in the grass while a trainer massaged her calf and applied ice. It was diagnosed as a spasm-induced calf strain.

but Serena limped around, sometimes struggling merely to walk. While she wiped away tears, up in the stands Venus used both hands to cover her eyes, and Price shook her head.

After Hantuchova went up 6-5, Serena somehow held serve to force a tiebreaker, getting to 6-all with a 110 mph ace and a shriek. With Hantuchova up 4-2 in the tiebreaker, a drizzle forced a suspension.

A crowd that suddenly was behind Serena actually applauded the chair umpire's announcement of a rain delay, something unprecedented in these parts.

"I was definitely saved by the rain," Serena said later. "I couldn't move before the rain. Just everything stopped."

The former forward hasn't been far from the game or Iowa City since finishing his Hawkeye career in 2002.

He's playing his ninth Prime Time season in 10 years.

Along with former Hawkeye guard Jason Price, Henderson runs Bound 4 Glory, an individual basketball training business. The program is for boys and girls players ranging from fourth grade through high school.

His competitive career isn't complete yet, either.

He's taken the route of many former Hawkeyes to European basketball, and he will enter his sixth year in Germany this upcoming season.

"I love it," he said. "A lot of guys from the United States like to bounce around countries, but not me. After my first few years, I fell in love with the culture."

Whether he's in Iowa City or Germany, Henderson is always at home on the basketball court.

HOLY COW! HOW BROADCASTERS CALLED FAMOUS SHOTS

Some famous home run calls in baseball:

Russ Hodges, on Bobby Thomson's pennant-winning home run against the Brooklyn Dodgers, Oct. 3, 1951:

"Branca throws. There's a long drive. It's gonna be, I believe — the Giants win the pennant! Bobby Thomson hits into the lower deck of the left field stands! The Giants win the pennant! And they're going crazy! They're going crazy!"

Phil Rizzuto on Roger Maris' 61st home run, Oct. 1, 1961:

"Fastball hit deep to right. This could be it! Way back there! Holy cow! He did it! Sixty-one for Maris! Look at 'em fight for that ball out there!"

Milo Hamilton on Hank Aaron's 715th home run, April 8, 1974, vs. Los Angeles:

"Here's the pitch by Downing. Swinging. Here's a drive into left-center field. That ball is gonna be — outta here! It's gone! It's 715! There is a new home-run champion of all-time ... and it's Henry Aaron!"

Curt Gowdy on Aaron's 715th:

"The ball's hit deep ... deep ... it is gone! He did it! He did it! Henry Aaron ... is the all-time home-run ... leader now!"

Vin Scully on Aaron's 715th:

"Fastball ... there's a high drive into deep left-center field. Buckner goes back, to the fence, it is gone! [Scully then paused around 25 seconds as the crowd cheered.]

What a marvelous moment for baseball. What a marvelous moment for Atlanta and the state of Georgia. What a marvelous moment for the country and the world.

A black man is getting a standing ovation in the Deep South for breaking a record of an all-time baseball idol. And it's a great moment for all of us and particularly for Henry Aaron, who is met at home plate not only by every member of the Braves but by his father and mother."

Jack Buck on Kirk Gibson's home run against Oakland in the World Series, Oct. 15, 1988:

"Gibson swings, and a fly ball to deep right field. This is gonna be a home run! Unbelievable! A home run for Gibson! And the Dodgers have won the game, 5-4! I don't believe what I just saw!"

Mike Shannon on Mark McGwire's 62nd home run, Sept. 8, 1998:

"A shot into the corner! It might make it! There it is — 62, folks! And we have a new home run champion — a new Sultan of Swat!"

Joe Buck on McGwire's 62nd home run:

"Down the left field line — is it enough? Gone! There it is, 62! Touch first, Mark, you are the new single-season home-run king!"

Jon Miller on Barry Bonds' 71st home run, Oct. 5, 2001:

"There's a high drive deep into right center field, to the big part of the ballpark ... NUMBER 71! And what a shot over the 421 foot marker!"

Scully on Bonds' 71st:

"The 1-0 pitch. A fastball hit into deep right-center field. It's a way out and gone. There it is, No. 71."

Duane Kuiper on Bonds' 715th home run, May 28, 2006:

"The pitch. Bonds hits one high, hits it deep to center. Outta here! 715! The wait is over. They are on their feet at AT&T Park. Bonds passes Babe Ruth, he is second on the all-time home-run list!"

CALLING THE BALL

Preparing for the inevitable, Giants announcers wait for Barry Bonds to pass Hank Aaron.

BY JOSH DUBOW
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Dave Flemming is best known for the call heard nowhere in the world.

On the air in the San Francisco Giants' radio booth when Barry Bonds hit his 715th career home run to pass Babe Ruth for second place last year, Flemming's microphone went dead just before Bonds' drive sailed over the fence.

A call that likely would have been preserved for history at the Baseball Hall of Fame instead became one of the more memorable broadcasting blunders.

"It wasn't heartbreaking, but it wasn't fun," Flemming said. "I was really disappointed the day it happened because I love those big moments, and I thought I made a good call. But I got over it. There's no reason to feel sorry for it. In the end, more people remember it because of what happened than if the call had just been normal."

Flemming ended up getting national TV interviews and plenty of other exposure all because his microphone for KNBR radio went dead just as he was saying, "The payoff pitch, a swing, and a drive to deep cen..."

Then there was only applause from the fans instead of Flemming calling it a "Ruthian shot to pass the Babe" and the description of the celebration surrounding the milestone. Broadcast partner Greg Papa eventually took over, recapping the scene well after the home run.

"I might have shot somebody if I had been on the air and that happened," said Giants' broadcaster Jon Miller, who was in Texas that day preparing for a game on ESPN. "I almost got physically ill just hearing about it. I can't even think of a story to match that in the history of broadcasting. What can you say to Dave? Next time a guy hits No. 715, you'll have a chance to do that one. When will that be?"

But Flemming could get a chance to call an even bigger home run later this season. Bonds has 750 career home runs, six shy of breaking Hank Aaron's career record of 755.

And while all of the Giants' play-by-play announcers would like the honor, they are also pulling for Flemming.

"If he calls it, I think it would be great," said Duane Kuiper, who called 715 on television. "I would love it if he'd be able to call it. I'm still very upset the whole microphone thing went out."

Bonds' has had so many milestone homers over the years that Miller, Kuiper, Flemming, and Papa have all had shots at describing them. In recent years, Bonds has reached career milestones of 500, 600, and 700. There was also the record setting 2001 season, when Bonds hit Nos. 71, 72, and 73 on the final weekend.

There were the shots to tie and pass Willie Mays' mark of 660 in 2004 and most recently the National League record No. 734 last season.

Having called nearly all of those homers on either TV or radio, Kuiper has one piece of advice he always follows.

"I write the number of the home run in big letters on either a piece of paper or on the counter," he said. "I always felt like the only thing you can really do to look bad is get the number wrong. If you get the number right, at least you're off to a good start. If you get the number wrong, you can't put that bullet back in the gun."

Some announcers prepare lines to use for milestone homers, as Milo Hamilton did in his call of Aaron's record-breaker in 1974: "There is a new home-run champion of all-time ... and it's Henry Aaron!"

That call, which Miller described as "genius," is the definitive one of Aaron's 715th, although the Giants broadcasters all said they had no prepared phrases to use and would let the specifics of the moment dictate their call.

Curt Gowdy offered a more subdued call of Aaron's record-breaker on NBC's national telecast, and Vin Scully's description on the Dodgers' radio broadcast gets little play but was cited by both Miller and Kuiper as one of their favorites.

Aaron remembered as complete player

AARON

"Hank was such a great player when you saw him in the '50s and '60s, when he wasn't pulling everything," Selig said. "I never saw a guy hit so many line drives all over the ballpark. ... What an absolutely magnificent career."

For some reason, though, it's a career that never seemed the spark the adulation that followed Ruth, or the wonder inspired by Willie Mays, or even that scornful disdain that Barry Bonds — the soon-to-be home-run king — faces in every ballpark but his own. (Of course, it should be noted that Aaron got plenty of bigoted hate mail as he closed in on Ruth, the burden of being a black man who dared to break a white man's hallowed mark.)

Sure, Aaron was respected. But in his time, and even today, few would think to put him at the top of a list for the game's greatest players, or even anoint him the most fearsome slugger. Never mind those 755 homers, a number that has reigned supreme for three decades.

"When it comes to home runs, we think of guys who hit those monumental blasts," said Cal Ripken Jr., who will join Aaron in the Hall of Fame this summer. "He generated a lot of power with his hands and wrists. Many of his home runs were line drives, not those towering blasts like some other guys did."

When Tony Gwynn was growing up in Los Angeles, he spent a lot of time watching Aaron and the visiting Braves from the right-field bleachers at Dodger Stadium.

"He might be the greatest player of all time," said Gwynn, who also will be inducted into Cooperstown this summer. "Just look at his numbers. Everybody characterizes him as a home-run hitter because he's held that record so long. But he was a great baserunner, a great defender, a great player period."

When Aaron came to the big leagues in 1954, Hall of Fame pitcher Robin Roberts quickly speculated: This might be the next guy to hit .400.

"He didn't look like he was going to be a home-run hitter," Roberts said. "He was quite slender. He hit for a good average and hit a lot to right field. But when he decided to start trying for home runs, he was quite good at that, too."

REDS CAN MANAGER

BY JOE KAY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Now, it's Pete Mackanin's turn to end the enduring slump.

The Cincinnati Reds turned to their advance scout on Monday to try to jolt the major leagues' worst team out of its doldrums. They fired manager Jerry Narron on Sunday night, barely a year after he got a two-year contract extension that suggested stability.

Instead, they've chosen change. Mackanin will be the team's fourth manager since it moved into Great American Ball Park in 2003. The franchise also has been through two owners and three general managers during that whirlwind, five-year span. Instability is becoming the Reds' hallmark.

"Baseball is a tough business," owner Bob Castellini said on Monday. "If people want to perceive we're a rocky ship, they can do that. But I can tell you we have a direction."

This season has been one of their biggest shipwrecks in the last 25 years.

The Reds are behind for their seventh-straight losing season, their longest stretch of futility in a half-century. Since winning the World Series in 1990, they've made only one playoff appearance — in 1995 under Davey Johnson.

At 31-51 and are in last place in the weak NL Central, trailing Milwaukee by 16 1/2 games. Fans have lost interest as rapidly as the team has lost games: Cincinnati is on pace for its first 100-loss season since 1982.

"These are not popular times," Castellini said.

They hope the managerial change makes them more palatable.

"History will tell you when a new guy comes in, there is often a good initial response," general manager Wayne Krivsky said. "It has a way of re-energizing a team often times, and I think Pete will energize our team."

Big Ten Network announces launch date

Big Ten Network President Mark Silverman announced on Monday that the conference-devoted station is set for a national studio launch on Aug. 30.

The network, which had previously said it hoped to launch at some point in August, set a final date and even a 7 p.m. starting time for its inaugural telecast of "Big Ten Tonight" — a signature news, information, and highlight show.

A press release from the network also announced the distribution commitments for more than 75 cable systems spanning eight states, including Illinois and Iowa. The network had previously established and announced a distribution commitment with DirecTV.

"With these commitments, we're well on our way toward ensuring that roughly half the subscribers to smaller cable systems across the Midwest have better access to their favorite Big Ten schools and teams than any time in history," Silverman said in the release.

Of the select cable systems with commitments listed in the release, Iowa Network Services was included.

Cubs 7, Nationals 2

WASHINGTON (AP) — Alfonso Soriano still has great times at RFK Stadium, even when he's wearing another team's uniform.

Soriano returned Monday night to the stadium that helped earn him a nine-digit contract and looked right at home again, getting two hits, a run, an RBI, and a stolen base in the Chicago Cubs' 7-2 victory over the Washington Nationals.

Manager Lou Piniella was concerned that this would be a trap series for the Cubs, who were leaving an 8-1 home-stand before energized crowds at Wrigley Field to play a last-place team in a half-empty stadium. He needn't have worried: Soriano and three other players had at least two hits, and Ted Lilly (7-4) allowed only three hits over seven innings to put Chicago (41-40) above .500 for the first time since they were 16-15 on May 9.

Before the game, Soriano visited Washington's clubhouse and spoke of his fond memories of his eventful but productive season in the nation's capital. He reluctantly converted from second base to left field, then hit 46 home runs and stole 41 bases in a blockbuster performance that earned him a $136 million, eight-year contract as a free agent from the Cubs in November.

PRIME TIME LEAGUE

Horner, John Licklitter bow out

Brett Slezak/The Daily Iowan

John Licklitter, the son of Iowa men's basketball head coach Todd Licklitter, dribbles the ball during Prime Time League play on Monday in North Liberty. Licklitter plays with ex-Hawkeye Jeff Horner on Randy Larson's Asoyia/Hodge squad.

Asoyia/Hodge won big Monday night in the Prime Time finale for former Hawkeye Jeff Horner and high-schooler John Licklitter.

THE DAILY IOWAN

With former Hawkeye teammate and second-round draft pick Adam Haluska in the stands Monday night, Jeff Horner played his final Prime Time game of the summer, scoring eight and dishing out nine assists to lead his team to a 129-93 win over Deli Mart/Iowa City Ready Mix.

"It's a great deal for Adam," Horner said about Haluska, who was drafted 43rd overall by the New Orleans Hornets in last week's NBA draft. "He definitely deserves it."

Now, Horner is looking to punch his own ticket. He will leave later this week to play for the Houston Rockets in the NBA's summer league.

But a ticket to the pros is far from certain — the Rockets have already stocked up on point guards. Two weeks after trading for Minnesota's Mike James, Houston drafted Aaron Brooks — another point guard — from Oregon in the first round of last week's draft.

"I feel the chances are pretty much slim to none," Horner said. He hopes to attract attention from other NBA teams, he said. If not, he will head back to Europe for his second professional season there; he played for Euphony Bree in Belgium last season.

"I'll keep playing, as long as I can," Horner said.

Asoyia/Hodge will lose a second guard in John Licklitter, who was planning to leave this morning to play in an AAU league in Indiana. Licklitter, the son of Iowa basketball head coach Todd Licklitter, said the transition from Indiana to Iowa City was a difficult one.

"It's tough, knowing what you have back there," Licklitter said. "But the guys here have made it easy."

Like Horner, Licklitter's future is still relatively uncertain. He will decide later this month whether to come to Iowa City for his senior year and play for City High or return to Franklin Central High School in Indianapolis.

Whatever he decides, Asoyia/Hodge coach Randy Larson liked what he saw this summer.

"He's a Division I player in my opinion — a great shooter," Larson said. "But his best asset is that he makes the right pass all the time."

Larson's team moved to 2-3 on the season with Monday night's victory. After a six-minute drought to open the game, UNI's Jordan Eglseider notched the first two of his 21 points on the night. Asoyia/Hodge quickly made up a 10-0 deficit and didn't look back, controlling the tempo for the rest of the game.

"It's always a mismatch when Horner's here," Larson said. "Anytime you can draft a first-round pick in the eighth, you have to do it, but also taking into account that he wouldn't be here for the whole season."

The departures of Horner and Licklitter will open up the previously crowded back court. Incoming freshmen Hawkeyes Jeff Peterson and Jake Kelly will likely see more playing time, as will sophomore-to-be Danny Bohall, who scored a game-high 24 points Monday night.

Larson feels confident his young team can continue the hot streak and make a run at the title.

"If we play the right way, we're as good as anybody," he said.

The Tony Duez Show

BY MIKE BROWNLEE
THE DAILY IOWAN

The Iowa basketball of past, present, and future was on full display Monday night.

Current Hawkeye guard Tony Freeman scored 28 points and class of 2008 recruit Matt Gatens scored 25 to lead McCurrys/Mike Gatens Real Estate to a 110-95 win over Imprinted Sportswear/Goodfellow Printing in Prime Time League action.

Freeman's team busted the game open with a 11-0 run early in the second half, and the game wasn't closer than eight points the rest of the way.

"I'm going to keep pushing the ball and take it to 'em," Freeman said. "After 30-35 minutes, teams get tired. We seem to always pull away at the 30-35 minute mark in the game."

Freeman added seven rebounds and seven assists in leading his team to a 5-0 record.

Gatens, who also had nine rebounds in his first game of the summer season, said he was happy to finally get out there.

"It's fun to play with these guys; I love playing out here," the City High senior-to-be said. "It's good to develop your game against great competition like this."

A familiar face from the Hawkeye past, Duez Henderson, did all he could in leading Imprinted/Goodfellow, scoring 37 points and grabbing five boards.

He raised his season average to 26.8 points per game.

Aaron will never be caught in class

Even as Barry Bonds approaches the home-run record, the quiet, often underrated Hank Aaron won't lose his special place in baseball history.

BY PAUL NEWBERRY

ATLANTA — For Bud Selig, the greatest of Hank Aaron's 755 homers is easy to pick out.

No, it's not the one that pushed him past Babe Ruth as the most prolific home-run hitter in baseball history. It's one that Aaron launched much earlier in his career, when no one could have envisioned a skinny kid from south Alabama taking down the Sultan of Swat.

On Sept. 23, 1957, while the commissioner-to-be watched from the upper deck at County Stadium, Aaron came through in the 11th inning with a two-run homer off St. Louis' Billy Muffett that clinched the NL pennant for the Milwaukee Braves.

"One of the greatest moments of my baseball career, of my life really," Selig recalled. "So dramatic. So emotional."

That was Aaron's prime, when Hammerin' Hank was so much more than a power hitter.

Fielding, you say? Aaron won three-straight Gold Gloves in right field, gliding along with a smooth style that made the tough catches look easy, while keeping runners at bay with his strong right arm.

What about baserunning? He had nine-straight seasons with double-figure steals, and he became just the third member of the 30-30 club — 30 homers and 30 stolen bases in the same year.

Could he hit for average? Even while playing in an era of dominant pitching, Aaron put up 14 seasons at .300 or better, going as high as .355 one year and nearly winning the Triple Crown another time, which he still laments as the only real void on his resumé.

San Francisco Giant Barry Bonds hits a fifth-inning double against the Arizona Diamondbacks on June 30 in San Francisco. It was Bond's 376th career double, tying him with Willie Mays for the most doubles in the Giants' history. The Giants beat the Diamondbacks, 4-1.
