UNDER REVIEW: POLICE BOARD TURNS 10

As the 10-year anniversary of the Iowa City Police Citizens Review Board passes, the question of whether the oversight agency is excessively reliant on the police or whether the current system of review is effective arises. The DI uses a public-records review and interviews with those who deal with the board to examine the issue.

Other cities with police review boards

Iowa City is not alone in having a police review board. Approximately 85 other communities around the country have similar boards. However, Iowa City ranks 74th in population. Iowa City is unique in the state as being the only city to have a review board. Most cities of comparable size don't have review boards.

- 10 lowest populations
- 10 highest populations
- ★ Iowa City

Method of operation

The police review board is appointed by the City Council. It has no power over police discipline. Complaints are submitted to the city and passed to the police chief to investigate. The board reviews a report from the police chief, then issues a written notification of agreement or disagreement.

BY NICK PETERSEN • SPECIAL TO THE DAILY IOWAN

Around 11 p.m. on Aug. 30, 1996, 31-year-old Eric Shaw was in his art studio, located in a South Side commercial neighborhood, talking on the phone. Jeffrey Gillaspie, an Iowa City police officer at the time, had been called to investigate what was suspected to be a burglary at Shaw's work space.

As Gillaspie approached the business's entrance, he didn't know his actions would prompt numerous changes to department procedure, including the city's vote to create a Police Citizens' Review Board. The officer placed his left hand on the partially opened door to the Iowa City business and began to push it farther open, according to numerous news-media reports. In the next instant, he described seeing a blur of upward movement, then flinched and fired his .40-caliber Beretta handgun. The bullet struck Shaw in the chest, killing him.

In the summer of 1997, nearly a year later, the Iowa City City Council passed an ordinance creating a civilian police-oversight board with hopes of helping the community cope with Shaw's controversial death.

After 10 years, the fiery emotions that once fueled this board's creation have cooled. Now, the question remains whether the oversight agency is overly reliant on the police or whether the current system of review is effective.

While the current board does not have the authority of powerful review bodies such as those serving large, urban cities, most communities of comparable size with Iowa City don't have a board. In fact, this board is unique in the state.

Citizens here have other citizens with whom they can file a complaint, but the police ultimately investigate their own.

Of the 192 allegations contained in the 77 complaints filed in its history, the board sided with the complainant on seven of those allegations.

Iowa City police see the small number of validated complaints as an affirmation of their work.

"What it's really shown to me is that all those things that are being said about our department being this wild crazy out-of-control bunch of cowboys, not one of them has panned out with the blessing of the [police review board]," said Iowa City police Capt. Tom Widmer.

Dodd's tour hits 4thFest

Democratic presidential-nomination candidate Chris Dodd pushes his campaign points amid Coralville's Fourth of July celebrations.

BY ZHI XIONG
THE DAILY IOWAN

No one will know Iowa's holiday cooking better than Sen. Chris Dodd, D-Conn. Not after he completes his "River to River" tour of the state, which includes seven different Fourth of July parades and barbecues and almost as many pancake breakfasts.

Day two of the road trip, scheduled to end Saturday, brought Dodd to the Coralville 4thFest in S.T. Morrison Park a little after 5 p.m. A crowd of around 50 was soon huddled under the soothing shade of an enormous pine tree, where Dodd's young daughters plopped down to listen to their father speak.

"I've been to more towns in Iowa than most of you have," he joked, launching into a brief overview of his campaign, including rebukes for the current government.

"We have to get rid of an administration that doesn't respect the justice system," he said,

Bill & Hillary stump in IC

Former President Bill Clinton says his wife, Hillary Rodham Clinton, is the most qualified to run the White House in 2009.

BY CHRISTOPHER PATTON
THE DAILY IOWAN

A gargantuan American flag served as the backdrop for a stage, which was girded by eight smaller flags and surrounded by a crowd that braved the sweltering heat to hear Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, D-N.Y., make the case that she should be the 44th president of the United States.

After students performed the "Iowa Fight Song" on two trumpets and a trombone, the loudspeakers blared "You and I," by Céline Dion, then Rodham Clinton, accompanied by her husband, former President Bill Clinton and Rep. Dave Loebsack, D-Iowa, took center stage.

"We've got to put this country back on the right path," Loebsack said. "For the last six-and-a-half years, it's been going the wrong way, with the wrong president and the wrong Congress."

Loebsack spoke only briefly before passing the microphone to Clinton, who introduced his wife.

Rachel Mummy/The Daily Iowan

Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, D-N.Y., speaks to an estimated crowd of 2,000 Iowa supporters at the IMU on Tuesday. The senator and her husband, former President Bill Clinton, visited the campus to encourage voters to participate in the Iowa caucuses.

"We've changed roles now," he said. "For years, I was in politics, and she was a public servant without public office."

Danger in them thar grills

Keeping the grill-out as an occasion rather than a habit helps prevent the risk of cancer, as does responsible food preparation.

Ben Roberts/The Daily Iowan

Iowa City resident Eric Walker flips bratwursts during Fourth of July festivities on Wednesday. According to a June 28 report, grilling red meat, poultry, and fish have the potential of releasing up to 17 carcinogenic chemicals.

BY JONATHAN VAN DYKE
THE DAILY IOWAN

While it's easy to gravitate toward the grill on the Fourth of July, what with its ceremonious smells that tickle the nose — just as the scent of lasagna beckons Garfield — health officials warn that too much grilling can be harmful to one's health.

Last week, just before Independence Day launched the official grill-out season, the UI Holden Comprehensive Cancer Center cautioned potential grillers to limit the amount of time spent hovering over the flames. A news release dated June 28 emphasized healthy eating and responsible grilling as means to deter increased cancer risks associated with the outdoor pastime.

"This is something the American people have not picked up on," said Joan Felkner, the administrative coordinator of cancer information services at the Holden Center.

RESPONSIBLE GRILLING TIPS:

- Trim off the fat before cooking.
- Heat in a microwave for two minutes or marinate for 30 minutes.
- Try to filter grease away from the charcoal and flames.
- Add fruits and vegetables to the meal.
- Don't always grill, vary your cooking methods.

Source: Holden Comprehensive Cancer Center

By coupling the announcement with the holiday season, the center hoped to provide information unknown to a large portion of the grilling public.

"The chances of getting cancer from grilling is very small compared to something like smoking," Felkner said. "That doesn't mean [people] can't grill safely."

Cooking red meat, fish, poultry, beef, and pork at high temperatures on the grill produces 17 carcinogenic chemicals classified as heterocyclic amines, she said. In addition, when the fat from the meat drips onto the coals of a grill, the ensuing smoke produces harmful polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons. Finally, studies show those who consume more medium-well and well-done dishes have a greater risk of stomach cancer, Felkner said.

Marinating meat for 30 minutes before cooking helps prevent 90 percent of carcinogenic chemicals, while trimming fat and microwaving for two minutes prior to cooking also helps lower risks, she said.

UI seniors Adam Link and Josh Kendall grilled out on the patio outside Cornerstone apartments Monday. The pair cooked a variety of meats, ranging from succulent pork wrapped in bacon to more traditional fare laid out on tin foil.

"I had no idea," Kendall said about the risks of grilling. "First I've heard of it."

The two were unsure, however, whether the minimal risk of grilling would change their habits.

The cancer warning administered via press release was meant as a tool to discuss eating lifestyles, said John Lowe, the associate director for population for the Holden Center.

"For most Iowans, going out on the Fourth of July and barbecuing is not going to do them harm," he said. "People do not want to make a stable diet of smoked food. Moderation is a safe way to go."

When people add a variety of food groups to their diet, he said, it helps alleviate the effects of grilled food consumption.

"Don't just have a hamburger," he said. "Have a salad with it. Have a variety of meats, a variety of marinades, and a variety of cooking styles."

Obama focuses on mingling instead of speeches

KEOKUK, Iowa (AP) — Democrat Barack Obama began his latest visit to Iowa on Tuesday by climbing onto the bed of an old pickup truck, giving a short speech, and opting to "skip questions to mingle and kiss babies."

Obama stepped into the red and gold truck, draped with bunting, at the event with approximately 400 people outside a Keokuk elementary school.

He spoke only briefly before meeting with residents and munching on sweet corn and watermelon.

"Sometimes, I get teased by the pundits because I talk about hope a lot," Obama said. "I don't want to hear about how the problems we have are too tough."

Although Obama's campaign announced on Sunday that he'd raised a record $32.5 million in the last three months, he said Tuesday his bid for the Democratic nomination is about more than money. He said he wanted to meet voters' call for a new direction for the nation.

Man sentenced for having mom smuggle drugs into jail

CEDAR RAPIDS (AP) — A man who pleaded guilty to persuading his mother to smuggle drugs into the Benton County Jail has been sentenced to one year in prison.

Shaun Williams, 33, of Cedar Rapids pleaded guilty on April 18. He was sentenced on Tuesday in U.S. District Court.

The U.S. attorney's office said

Williams used a telephone to persuade his mother to smuggle oxycodone, a prescription drug, into the jail.

The scheme was discovered when Williams' mother was caught by jail officials.

Williams was in jail after he pleaded guilty to the distribution of heroin resulting in the death of another person.

He was sentenced to 20 years in prison on that charge. The one-year sentence on the drug smuggling charge was ordered to run consecutively to previous sentence, officials said.

Man killed in lawnmower accident

SWAN, Iowa (AP) — A man was killed when a riding lawnmower he was operating rolled over on top of him, officials with the Marion County Sheriff's Office said.

Fred Beattie, 63, of Runnells was killed in the accident near Swan, southeast of Des Moines, on Tuesday, officials said.

He had been mowing grass in the back yard of a residence and was driving down a steep hill when the mower rolled over, officials said.

Beattie was pronounced dead at the scene.

Man charged with kidnapping, abuse

Police have charged an Iowa City man with domestic abuse with injury and third-degree kidnapping for allegedly assaulting his girlfriend on Sunday night into the morning hours of Monday.

The woman told police that Garcia Arredondo, 27, "punched and hit her," causing her to leave their residence on Sunday. The woman said she was walking away when Arredondo drove his car onto the sidewalk in front of her and forced her in the vehicle, then drove her home. Once there, Arredondo allegedly began assaulting her again, punching her in the head, causing her to lose consciousness, Iowa City police reports said.

The police said the woman had visible injuries that corroborated her testimony.

Arredondo is charged with a serious misdemeanor for the domestic assault and a Class C felony third-degree kidnapping. For the felony charge alone, Arredondo could face up to 10 years in prison and between $1,000 and $10,000 in fines.

Sex offender charged with 2,000-foot violation

Iowa City police have charged an area man on the Iowa Sex Offender Registry with living within 2,000 feet of a school or daycare.

On June 26, police arrested Chad Volkers, 28, for registering an address that was within the restricted zone, according to the report. Authorities said they gave Volkers 10 days to find another place to reside that was not within the restricted area. After the allotted time had passed, police said, Volkers had yet to contact them with a new address outside the restricted zone.

The 2,000-foot rule, defined by Iowa Code, stipulates that persons on the offender registry "shall not reside within 2,000 feet of the real property comprising a public or nonpublic elementary or secondary school or a childcare facility."

The registry shows Volkers was convicted outside of Iowa of sexual exploitation of a child in April.

Man charged with burglary

Iowa City police have charged a Cedar Rapids man with second-degree burglary.

Deray Gesling, 24, was arrested Wednesday and charged with second-degree burglary with intent to commit assault, a Class C felony.

Authorities allege that Gesling forced his way into his girlfriend's residence, breaking the dead bolt in the process. After having gained access to the woman's abode, police said, he followed the woman into her bedroom. The woman then locked the bedroom door behind her, reports stated. Gesling, according to the police complaint, then tried to break into the bedroom, damaging the door in the process.

Gesling reportedly left the woman's residence shortly after she called police.

Second-degree burglary is defined as "perpetrating a burglary in or upon an occupied structure in which one or more persons are present ... and no bodily injury is caused to any person," according to the Iowa Code.

UI, Wellmark discuss naming college

(AP) — The UI and Wellmark Blue Cross Blue Shield are talking about a major gift for naming the university's new College of Public Health Building.

Interim President Gary Fethke declined to reveal the amount of the gift but praised Wellmark's involvement.

"I am thrilled that Wellmark would consider donating to the College of Public Health," he said.

While noting that it would be unusual to have a college named after a company, he said, he is not thinking so much about the name of the building as the partnership between the university and Wellmark.

In the past, colleges have been named after individuals who have made significant contributions to the university. For example, the College of Medicine is named after Roy and Lucille Carver, and the College of Business is named after Henry Tippie.

The state Board of Regents would have to sign off on the name, and Regent Robert Downer raised concerns about a possible conflict of interest because of continuing contractual relationships between the university and Wellmark.

Hillary wants health reform

CLINTONS

There are numerous challenges awaiting the next president, Clinton said, then described Rodham Clinton as the most qualified non-incumbent to run for president in his 40 years of voting.

After the former president finished introducing and endorsing his wife, Rodham Clinton addressed the crowd. "One thing we can thank Bush and Cheney for is that they have shown us that politics does matter, that who we elect makes a real difference in the lives of Americans," she said.

She then asked the audience members a series of questions, such as whether they supported universal health coverage for all Americans, whether they were ready for an energy policy that addresses global warming, and whether they wanted a Department of Justice and a White House that respect the Constitution. Those present answered each question with a resounding "yes."

Rodham Clinton went on to discuss how her parents influenced her worldview.

"My dad taught by example about hard work, that the world didn't owe me a living and that I had to work hard and take responsibility for myself," she said.

The former first lady said her mother raised herself and began working at age 13, adding that she has adopted her mother's belief that education is the passport to opportunity.

Rodham Clinton said she is optimistic about the future despite the numerous problems she believes the United States must address in coming years.

"I believe we could do anything we set our minds to as Americans," she said. "I want to be a president who sets goals again, because I know we can, working together, meet those goals."

The New York senator also criticized President Bush for ignoring the problems facing ordinary Americans.

"I met a young Marine in Sioux Center who had been injured in Iraq. He keeps running into obstacle after obstacle in getting the care he needs," she said. "He served his country, but as far as he could tell, he's invisible to his president."

But she said she's not only concerned about veterans' health care. "You're twice as likely to die if you go into the hospital without insurance," she said. "This is a moral issue. We must do all we can to provide health insurance to everyone."

Insurance companies have no incentive to cover preventive care, she said, saying the U.S. health system covers sickness but doesn't promote wellness. She suggested changes that would immediately create a system that pays for prevention.

the sharp angles of his eyebrows matching his tone.

Dodd highlighted his 26 years of experience in the Senate, which some in the crowd found appealing.

"I'm old enough to know that you need experience to get into something new," said Marie Vittetoe, a sister in the Congregation of the Humility of Mary in Davenport, after the speech. "I like what [Dodd] has been doing and what he purportedly will do."

In Wednesday's Q & A session, the discussion hovered around the war in Iraq as children lingered at the concession stands nearby.

It happened to be the topic Dodd is perhaps most adamant about: bringing the troops back on a "firm deadline" — by March 31, 2008.

"How do we leave? We pack up and leave," he said. "We have to use other tools in our arsenal. Right now, we treat diplomacy as though it's a tool for our enemy. But the debate isn't just about the military presence." In May, Dodd introduced an amendment to the Defense Authorization Act that would cut funding for "combat operations."

Having worked in foreign affairs during his years in the Senate, he mentioned his plan to confront problems in Northern Ireland and Latin America. He also touched on his work with past legislation, such as the Family and Medical Leave Act and the Help America Vote Act.

And in the spirit of the Fourth, Dodd drew applause with a verbal salute to the troops in Iraq.

"[Candidates] tend to emphasize patriotic things, but they won't miss the chance to try out their campaign lines," said Peverill Squire, a professor of political science at the UI. Taking advantage of the holiday is an opportunity to be seen and heard, said Taylor West, Dodd's Iowa press secretary.

"It is the birthday of the country," West said. "We want a chance to get all over the state. The Fourth of July is a time to get [the crowds] out."

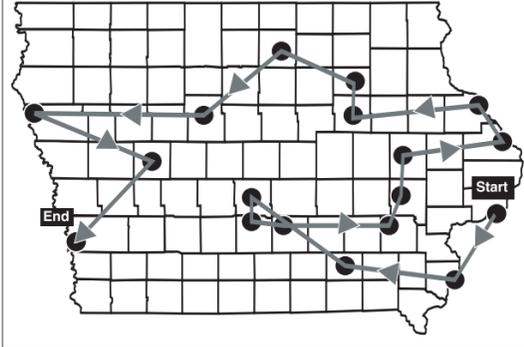

By 6 p.m., the crowd had regrouped in front of a burrito-eating contest, and Dodd was headed to Cedar Rapids.

POINT/COUNTERPOINT

IS IOWA CITY'S POLICE-REVIEW BOARD PLAYING A SIGNIFICANT ROLE?

POINT: BOARD IS JUST RIGHT FOR IC

"Quis custodiet ipsos custodes?" runs a famous quotation from the works of Juvenal. It translates, roughly, to "who will watch the watchers?" (Apologies to the classics department.) In Iowa City, this is a question of critical importance.

Our city poses some unusual problems to those who would police it. The free flow of alcohol in Iowa City brings with it the usual attendant crimes — bar fights, sexual harassment and assault, and so on — that necessitate a strong police presence downtown. In addition to coping with unfailingly bacchanalian UI students every weekend, Iowa City police officers have to deal with the usual public-safety problems inherent in a town of around 80,000. The Daily Iowan's police blotter offers a general picture of the criminal profile of Iowa City: scads of intoxicated students, along with a few not-so-minor burglaries and serious assaults. In short, these are busy cops. It follows, then, that the mechanism that Iowa City uses to monitor its police force should be different from most communities of similar size. The Police Citizens Review Board fills this role nicely.

The extra workload taken on by the Iowa City police makes this extra oversight necessary. Denizens of Iowa City have a right to take their complaints about police officers to someone on the other side of the thin blue line. The Iowa City police's fine record before the review board — just seven upheld complaints in 10 years — confirms that the pittance (roughly $2,500 a year) it costs the city to operate is commensurate with the needs of the community.

While the powers of the police board are few compared with similar organizations in large cities, they are fully sufficient for the task of watching Iowa City's watchers.

COUNTERPOINT: EITHER STRENGTHEN OR DITCH THE BOARD

It seems evident from the group's limited scope and small caseload that the Iowa City Police Citizens Review board has very little in the way of either bark or bite. The board should either be given a more substantive oversight ability or be eliminated.

Giving citizens the chance to approach fellow citizens with a complaint may seem comforting, but in the end, any investigation is performed by the Police Department itself, not the board. Similarly, it does not have any subpoena or enforcement powers, as state law deems departmental disciplinary action to be sufficient in all cases. Other than what is essentially a counseling service, it would seem that the board has little force in influencing the outcome of any reported police/citizen conflict.

Out of 192 allegations of misconduct over 10 years, only seven were upheld by the board. No action resulted, because the board has no authority to take any. Police Capt. Tom Widmer believes public confidence in the department is bolstered by the board, but shouldn't the fact that its existence as a group was justified less than 4 percent of the time over a decade now be sufficient in proving to citizens that the police are self-sufficient in regards to discipline? All but one of the four incidents Widmer could recall of officers being excused from the department were internally initiated, further proving this point. Proponents of the board as it currently exists point out that the relatively low cost of the board is an example of an "it couldn't hurt" attitude, but pouring tax money into something simply because it is cheap is not financially sound. The board as it exists today is nearly irrelevant and should either be remodeled or eliminated.

Our holiday

I would say that America is built of its differences, that what separates us from the global fold is a unique mix of yin and yang. We are what we are, for better or for worse, because we harbor conservative values as much as we stand for liberal freedoms. We respect the right of others — no matter how wrong they may seem to us — to take a position opposite of our own. We "agree to disagree" and we are all the more "American" for doing so.

NATE WHITNEY

And then there's Ann Coulter, who went on "Hardball" last week and proclaimed her death wish for former Sen. John Edwards: "I'll just wish he had been killed in a terrorist assassination plot." Evidently referring to Edwards as a "faggot" weeks before wasn't enough for Coulter; she wants the presidential candidate dead.

Coulter's comments on Edwards' sexuality are one thing, but openly wishing for his death at the hands of terrorists is quite another. If intelligently deconstructing an opposing viewpoint is your proverbial apple, then Coulter's bloodlust is less an orange than a 1972 Fiat Spider. Coulter is educated and intelligent, but she belittles her argument and panders to the sophomoric when resorting to outré personal attacks of the death-threat variety. She's kind of like the elementary-school kid who has just learned how to use the F-word and deems it necessary to use said word at every opportunity possible, even when asked what kind of breakfast cereal she wants. I can picture young Ann at the table, doing homework, casually informing her mother "Frosted f-ing Flakes!"

I would never hit a man, but listening to Coulter makes me daydream of laying her out on the concrete with a solid right hook. But such a childish reaction with such blind hate would lower me to her level. Some believe her to be a political "shock jock," but I have a hard time believing this, and I'm more likely to believe that she truly feels her viewpoint is righteous and undeniable and that, as she has said, her opponents are the "spawn of Satan." Her mind does not manufacture such comments to sell books or boost TV ratings; the statements are simply words of hate.

It's this same kind of bumptious, "my way or the highway" thinking that Coulter subscribes to that led me to a decision a few years ago. I was living in Jacksonville, Fla., surrounded by good old boys in "Viva Jeb!" fishnet hats driving around in yellow-ribbon-laden pickups. I was being force-fed a daily buffet of red-state "patriotism," told I was an unpatriotic coward for supporting Kerry in the election, and given the finger for driving a car with a bumper sticker that explained as much. The Fourth of July would approach, and in my over-defensive state, I slunk away from celebrating what I viewed as a festival of strengthening and a chance to further strengthen "patriotic" feelings that seemed to have been hijacked by a political platform. I'm ashamed to admit that I went out of my way to be alone on Independence Day. I viewed the holiday only as an opportunity to get out of my retail job a few hours early. I was stupid, and though proud of my inaction at the time, I now see the decision as very "un-American." Somehow in my mind, I felt that I was separating myself from the colossal-belt-buckle crowd. I didn't consider the white-coiffed Founding Fathers and their plan for an ideologically diverse nation, which was what I should have been thinking of. I let "the other side" get to me. Ann Coulter, though not a huge part of my decision, got her way.

This year I will do things differently; I will celebrate. I will celebrate our independence, our freedoms — most especially the freedom to enjoy my own convictions and for Ann Coulter to do the same in her less-than-honorable way. It is what Jefferson and Washington and Adams would have wished. I'm not taking my Fourth back as much as taking the Fourth of it back, sharing in the holiday with my ideological opponents. Ann Coulter can have her notion of a nation, but so can I. ■

COMMENTARY

Murdoch makes his move

In its eagerness to take over Dow Jones & Co., News Corp. has agreed to let a special committee guard the independence of at least two key executives: the managing editor of the Wall Street Journal and the head of the newspaper's editorial pages. It's an unusual and ironic concession, given the free-market blandishments in the Journal's editorials. In essence, the two sides are saying that market forces can't be trusted to stop News Corp. Chairman Rupert Murdoch from meddling either with the news pages' objectivity or the opinion pages' attitude.

News Corp.'s goal is to persuade members of the Bancroft family, who own a controlling interest in the Journal, to sell their shares. The family's reluctance reflects Murdoch's reputation for putting profits and corporate business interests ahead of journalistic ideals; witness, for example, the lowest-common-denominator appeal of News Corp.'s British and Australian tabloids, its deference to government censors in China, and the right-of-center slant of its Fox News Channel.

Murdoch was forced to accept this sort of handcuffing once before, when he bought the venerable Times of London more than 25 years ago. The fear was that he would transform one of Britain's great newspapers into a rag sheet for the hoi polloi, indistinguishable from his raucous tabloids. The Times already had a committee similar to the one contemplated for Dow Jones, and it remained in place after Murdoch took over.

It's worth noting that the Times of London continues to aim for a market very different from the Murdoch-owned News of the World or the Sun. Yes, some critics complain that the oversight committee didn't stop Murdoch from leaving his stamp on the Times, but it's unrealistic to expect otherwise. Like it or not, newspapers are businesses, and they can't be expected to cling to the status quo in the face of a rapidly fragmenting audience and a shift in advertising dollars to the Internet, and a proliferation of competitors online.

The only sure thing in the Dow Jones-News Corp. plan is that the current top editors at the Journal, its editorial page, and the Dow Jones news service would keep their jobs. Those executives would report, however, to News Corp.'s hand-picked publisher. Yes, the special committee would have to approve any move to replace them or curtail their authority over which news stories, features, and opinion pieces to run. But it couldn't dictate the size of their budgets, which — as our experience here at the Los Angeles Times has made painfully clear — has become one of the sharpest points of dispute between newspapers and their owners.

Given the premium that News Corp. has offered to pay for Dow Jones, it's reasonable to assume that Murdoch covets the value of the brand and its products. In fact, the Dow Jones brand may be crucial to helping establish another Murdoch venture, a new cable-TV channel for business news. The Journal's combination of smart, objective news coverage and provocatively conservative opinion pieces has drawn one of the newspaper industry's largest audiences, which speaks volumes for how the market wants the paper to be run. That voice may be more important to the quality and independence of a Dow Jones-News Corp. than any oversight committee.

This editorial appeared in Tuesday's Los Angeles Times.

OFFICIALS IN FAVOR OF BOARD

Alternatively, some area officials see these numbers as an invitation for reform.

Former Iowa City City Councilor Karen Kubby, who was on the council during the board's creation, said this is worth looking into.

She said conclusions can't necessarily be drawn from only 9.1 percent of the complaints having been substantiated. But, she asked, "If the police review board were set up to be a little more independent of the Police Department itself, would there be different results?"

During the board's creation, the city councilors had to balance the benefits of an independent body with the burdens, financial and otherwise. So the councilors decided on a board that would review a report of the investigation conducted by the police. They also did not give the body any enforcement power because state law places disciplinary authority with the police.

While police conduct the primary investigation, the board is allowed to talk to the person who filed the complaint and any witnesses to the incident in question. The City Council discussed giving the board subpoena power, but the prospect did not gain the support from the majority of the councilors.

A lack of information has caused contention between the board and the police in certain cases, board documents show. In a 2002 incident outside of a Dubuque Street bar, for instance, an officer reportedly forced a man who was resisting arrest to the ground. The man, who was in handcuffs, hit his face on the concrete, causing him to bleed, according to the review board's findings.

In the board's report to the City Council 10 months after the complaint was filed, the members questioned whether the resistance was fierce enough to merit this treatment, because another officer on the scene didn't get involved. The police, in turn, did not examine whether sufficient measures had been taken to prevent injury to the man in their custody, the report said. The board found the complaint to be unsubstantiated because of what it saw as an incomplete investigation.

Sarah Holecek, a first assistant Iowa City city attorney, said one reason the police were given the power to conduct the initial investigation was because police supervisors can compel their officers to speak under penalty of employment. The board does not have this authority.

As for the department's perspective, Widmer appeared comfortable with the board as it has come to exist. The current chain of command works fine, the police captain said, with the board providing an auxiliary role to gain public confidence. The council, after all, hires the city manager for whom the chief of police works, he noted.

"If the police review board were set up to be a little more independent of the Police Department itself, would there be different results?"

— Karen Kubby, former Iowa City city councilor

Too much control from the board, that is, a situation in which the chief answers to a board, can hinder the department from doing its job, Widmer said. But he admits that the board does have its benefits: It shows the community the police want to be as transparent as possible about what they do.

A review of the reports on every complaint filed to the board in the last 10 years showed some complaints were fairly innocuous, but others raised significant policy questions. One complaint validated by the board in 2001 led the city to update the department's policies dealing with the youngest age a person may consent to a search.

In that case, officers came to serve a warrant on an unidentified man. He wasn't home nor was his ex-wife, who lived at the residence. But an 11-year-old was, and he let the police inside the home. A subsequent search of the place led to the discovery of marijuana.

"The voluntariness of the consent is problematic in that the board doubts whether the 11-year-old child had any knowledge of his rights or his mother's rights with regard to the privacy of her home," the board's report stated.

A city memo later that year indicated the department updated its policy on juvenile consent as a result of the complaint process.

In regards to other disciplinary action, Widmer said that all but one of the four instances he could think of in which the department had dismissed officers had come from department-initiated action. The exception was exposed via a citizen complaint filed directly to the police, not through the mechanism of the review board, he said.

Loren Horton, a board member since 2000, said the group has been successful in the purpose it had been created to fulfill. None of the people who filed complaints have expressed dissatisfaction to the City Council about the board's conclusions, he said.

It can be therapeutic for people to go through the process if they feel as though they were wronged by the police, Horton said. Three different complainants, two of whose complaints had been determined to be justified, have told him they were satisfied with the process.

Board reports on the investigative findings don't contain any names in order to encourage people to voice their concerns, according to review-board documents. A review of public records revealed the names of two random complainants, one of whom was willing to talk.

"What it's really shown to me is that all those things that are being said about our department being this wild crazy out-of-control bunch of cowboys, not one of them has panned out with the blessing of the [police review board]."

— Tom Widmer, Iowa City police captain

Jeremy Laughlin, a Marine lance corporal who was studying criminal justice at Kirkwood Community College in 2005, filed a complaint after being charged with keeping a disorderly house. He alleged that the officer who charged him was unnecessarily aggressive and that he called Laughlin an "asshole." The officer denied this. The board did not find substantial evidence supporting the complaint and thus sided with the department's findings.

The Marine said having complaints reviewed by a citizen board was better than having the complaints contained completely within the department, but he saw room for improvement.

He pointed out that it can be daunting to sit through an interview with police during their investigation of the allegations.

"You're sitting there with two cops in a boardroom," Laughlin said. "It's intimidating."

Larger cities in the United States have become more interested in civilian police oversight in the last several decades. In 1980, there were 13 oversight agencies; by 2000, there were more than 100, Justina Cintrón Perino noted in her 2006 book, Citizen Oversight of Law Enforcement.

City officials in Cedar Rapids and Coralville both indicated there is not a demand from the citizenry to create such a review board in their cities.

Jim Prosser, the Cedar Rapids city manager, said police review boards tend to be more common in the larger cities because bigger departments have more complaints because of the sheer number of contacts between police and citizens.

The oversight, however, is necessary in Iowa City, because part of its culture is active citizen involvement in all affairs, Iowa City City Manager Steve Atkins said.

"There are folks who say it is a waste of time. Take that same amount of time and spend it solving crimes," Atkins said. But, he continued, the naysayers overlook the benefits.

Plus, the money set aside for the board's legal services and office supplies is a minuscule part of the city's almost $50 million in annual expenditures. The board's total expenses in 2006 were $2,482.

"It's a good thing. We do OK," Atkins said. "And when we do good things, we shouldn't be shy about it. We do this, and other communities don't."

Bush: Patience needed on Iraq

BY DEB RIECHMANN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MARTINSBURG, W.Va. — Burdened by sagging polls and an unpopular war, President Bush sought a friendly audience on the Fourth of July to deliver a patriotic, gung-ho speech about supporting U.S. troops and sticking it out in Iraq.

He didn't have to go far — just a 35-minute helicopter ride from the White House — to find an amiable audience at the Air National Guard in West Virginia.

"Victory in this struggle will require more patience, more courage, and more sacrifice," Bush told the guardsmen and their families in a half-hour speech in a cavernous aircraft maintenance hangar at the 167th Airlift Wing.

"If we were to quit Iraq before the job is done, the terrorists we are fighting would not declare victory and lay down their arms. They would follow us here."

That line played well with the crowd.

"Whether we should have gone in or not is another matter, but we need to support our troops," said Ronald Wayne Taylor, a retired colonel with the 167th. "There's no question about it — we need to stay and finish the job."

It was Bush's fourth Independence Day trip to West Virginia, a state he carried in the past two presidential elections. His first was to Ripley, W.Va., in 2002.

Since the U.S.-led invasion of Iraq in 2003, the president has struck similar chords in his speeches on the nation's birthday.

Last year in Fort Bragg, N.C., where members of the 82nd Airborne Division greeted him with bellowing chants of "Hoo-rah," Bush said: "This moment when the terrorists are suffering from the weight of successive blows is not the time to call retreat."

Venus Williams beats 2004 champion Maria Sharapova to advance to the quarterfinals at Wimbledon.

Venus Williams fires a return to Maria Sharapova during their tennis match on the Centre Court at Wimbledon on Wednesday.

WIMBLEDON, England — Venus Williams dominated her fourth-round match against Maria Sharapova, advancing to the Wimbledon quarterfinals with a 6-1, 6-3 win over the 2004 champion in a two-day match that included a nearly two-hour rain delay Wednesday.

Despite wasting seven break points in the third game of the second set, three-time champion Williams broke in the seventh and ninth games to advance at the All England Club.

"In my whole life, I've been a big-match player," Williams said. "I always believe in my game. I know I have a lot of stuff others players don't have."

Williams had 19 break points in the match, converting four of them. Sharapova failed to even earn a break point and only pushed Williams to deuce once on the American's serve.

"The serve definitely was a weapon," Williams said.

Sharapova said her opponent's serve made the difference.

"That put a little extra pressure on my serve," the second-seeded Russian said. "Even though I didn't serve that bad in the second set, she just was on top of it."

After Sharapova sent a forehead into the net on match point, Williams smiled and waved to the crowd while her father, Richard, stood with his arms raised in celebration.

The match started Tuesday afternoon, but only three points were played before rain forced suspension. Early in the second set Wednesday, Williams and Sharapova had to wait through another rain delay that lasted nearly two hours.

"I don't know if it was the wind or a slow start. She got off to a fast start," Sharapova said. "I just didn't feel really comfortable in the first set."

The rain at Wimbledon this year has caused stoppages and postponements on eight of the tournament's nine days.

In the quarterfinals, Williams will face 2004 U.S. Open champion Svetlana Kuznetsova.

No. 18 Marion Bartoli became the first player to reach the semifinals, beating No. 31 Michaella Krajicek (3-6, 6-3, 6-2). The 22-year-old Bartoli, who won her only three WTA titles last year, reached the fourth round at the French Open for her previous best performance at a Grand Slam. Krajicek is the younger sister of 1996 Wimbledon champion Richard Krajicek.

Serena Williams, who overcame a calf strain in her previous match couldn't overcome her own poor health or a determined Henin in a 6-4, 3-6, 6-3 defeat.

"I wasn't even sure if I was going to go out and play," said Serena, who played with tape on her left calf and left thumb, both injured in her dramatic fourth-round victory Monday. "If I'd have been healthy, I think I would have won, 100 percent."

Managing to be slightly more gracious than after losing to Henin at the French Open —

"All she had to do was show up," was the postmatch assessment then — Serena said Wednesday: "She played a very high-quality game. I thought she played probably some of her best tennis."

Gutting out dog-day afternoon

American Joey Chestnut knocks off six-time winner Takeru Kobayashi by inhaling a record-setting 66 hot dogs in 12 minutes — one frank every 10.9 seconds — at New York's Coney Island.

BY LARRY MCSHANE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — In a gut-busting showdown that combined drama, daring, and indigestion, Joey Chestnut emerged Wednesday as the world's hot-dog eating champion, knocking off six-time winner Takeru Kobayashi in a record-setting yet repulsive triumph.

Chestnut, the great red, white, and blue hope in the annual Fourth of July competition, broke his own world record by inhaling 66 hot dogs in 12 minutes — a staggering one every 10.9 seconds before a screaming crowd in Coney Island.

"If I needed to eat another one right now, I could," the 23-year-old Californian said after receiving the mustard yellow belt emblematic of hot-dog eating supremacy.

Kobayashi, the Japanese eating machine, recently had a wisdom tooth extracted and received chiropractic treatment for a sore jaw. But the winner of every Nathan's hot-dog competition from 2001 to 2006 showed no ill effects as he stayed with Chestnut frank-for-frank until the very end of the 12-minute competition.

Once the contest ended, the runner-up suffered a reversal — competitive eating-speak for barfing — leading to a deduction from his final total. Kobayashi finished with 63 hot dogs and buns eaten in his best performance ever.

Competitors receive credit for anything in their mouths at the 12-minute mark, provided they can swallow it.

"Obviously, the last bit exited his mouth quite dramatically," said Rich Shea of the International Takeru Kobayashi (left) and Joey Chestnut cram down hot dogs during Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Competition in New York on Wednesday. Chestnut became the hot-dog eating champion by wolfing down a record 66 franks. The Californian knocked off six-time titlist Kobayashi in a repulsive triumph in Coney Island.

Federation of Competitive Eating. Kobayashi's gastric distress was the only sour note in the tube-styke tussle, which aired nationally on ESPN.

Kobayashi's previous best was 53½ in the competition that dates back to 1916. The all-time record before Wednesday's remarkable contest was Chestnut's 59½, set just last month in the Phoenix suburb of Tempe.

The two gustatory gladiators quickly distanced themselves from the rest of the 17 competitors, processing more beef than a slaughterhouse within the first few minutes. The two had each downed 60 hot dogs with 60 seconds to go when Chestnut — the veins on his forehead extended — put away the final frank to end Kobayashi's reign.

Kobayashi, through a translator, promised to return for the 2008 event.

The victory by the San Jose, Calif., resident ended Japan's long dominance of the contest. The only previous non-Japanese winner since 1996 was New Jersey's Steve Keiner in 1999. Third place this year went to another American, Patrick Bertoletti of Chicago, with 49.

"This title's been held by Kobayashi for six years, so it's about time it came home," said Chestnut, holding an American flag in his arms. "I knew going into this contest that Kobayashi was going to give 100 percent."

CORNETTE

Cornette then served as a student assistant during the 2003-04 season and returned as coordinator of basketball operations last season, when the Bulldogs again advanced to the Sweet 16.

He said he was extremely happy to continue his association with Lickliter.

"Coach Lickliter has been like a second father," Cornette said. "He's a guy I can trust. I can learn from him not only in the game but in life. I'm elated to join his staff at Iowa."

At 26 years old, relatively young for such a high-profile coaching gig, he knows there will be detractors. However, he sees his age as a positive.

"I feel that I've got a leg up on other coaches who aren't as in touch with kids today," he said. "I'm just a few years removed from playing." Current Hawkeye point guard Tony Freeman agrees. His first words about Cornette were, "Instant chemistry."

"They [the new coaches] can be friends and coaches," Freeman said. "They are friends, but they also know when to be coaches and get on us."

Class of 2008 recruit Matt Gatens said he's looking forward to working with Cornette.

"He's a great guy," Gatens said. "I haven't spent much time on the basketball court with him, but just in talking to him, he's great and a smart guy."

While Cornette played in the post in college — and he will do a lot of work with the Iowa big men — he feels he knows what's expected of all positions.

"If you don't have a well-rounded understanding of the game, you'll struggle as a coach," he said. "If you've been around the game long enough, you should understand it all."

Despite being so ingrained in the Butler program, Cornette said the transition to Iowa has been great.

"The [basketball office] staff who stayed have been extremely helpful. They've been my eyes and ears for things I don't know about yet," he said. "I've enjoyed getting to know the university and Iowa City."

"I've really enjoyed the people as well as the city itself."

As Cornette continues to settle in and begins looking to the future, he knows that this upcoming season and beyond provides great opportunities for success at Iowa.

"For me, it's about seeing the guys improve," he said. "We want them to come in every day and work hard. We want to win as soon as possible. I think if we put a team on the floor that works hard every night, we'll have a good year."

"With the resources we've been given, the sky's the limit."

Not even traffic can stop Skouby

SKOUBY

"If we're left open, we're going to shoot the ball," Skouby said. "We're a team that's not really afraid to shoot the ball. It's good that we can make those shots when we are open."

Because of Pawz/Premier's success with its early jump shots, Pelling/Wiese found itself stuck in a deficit that got as big as 20 points, a deficit that even after cutting the lead down to as few as five points proved to be too difficult to overcome.

"It's tough when you're playing behind the whole game," Schlapkohl said. "I think in the first half, we didn't really quite get things going for us, and I think that's what put us behind."

Skouby, who was the top pick of this year's Game Time draft in June, has found herself playing a familiar role this summer with her leadership, even when coming off the bench.

"It's definitely a role that I have to take on, not just because I'm the No. 1 draft pick, just because I'm the big kid out there scoring some points," Skouby said. "You got to be a leader out there. You just got to be able to tell your team what's going on and be heads up."

One of the biggest things of her game that her Hawkeye teammate likes about playing with her is her calmness.

"She's a smart player, and she's never really hyped up," Cermak said. "She plays subtly, and you just learn to calm down."

Iowa forward Jeneé Graham (left), watches while Iowa center JoAnn Hamlin (45) shoots the ball during Game Time action at the North Liberty Community Center on Tuesday. Graham's team, Goodfellow/Imprinted, beat Hamlin's team, Cullen/Asoyia, 86-80.

Skouby said the two areas of her game she planned to work on were her defense and her 3-point shooting. The Mentor, Ohio, native anticipates playing a key part for Iowa during the 2007-08 season.

"I'm going to take on a bigger role and play better than I did last year," she said. "I didn't play as well as I wanted to last year, so hopefully, I'll improve in some of the areas that I need improvements in."

Graham sparks victory

GAME TIME

With 50 seconds to play, Hamlin followed a turnaround jump shot with a steal and quick pass to St. Ambrose guard Casey Breitbart for a lay-up that closed the deficit to three, 81-78.

But as the clock wound down, the shots stopped falling for Cullen/Asoyia.

Goodfellow/Imprinted hit 5-of-6 from the foul line down the stretch to put the game away.

In the first half, Goodfellow/Imprinted had staged a comeback of its own. Ten minutes into the game, Cullen/Asoyia led 11-10 as both teams found points hard to come by early on.

Over the next four minutes, Cullen/Asoyia went on a 15-4 run behind Hamlin, taking a 12-point lead, 26-14, with 6:00 to play in the first half.

But Hawkeye guard Jeneé Graham sparked her

Goodfellow/Imprinted team on both offense and defense, and it rallied to take a six-point halftime lead.

After snagging back-to-back steals that led to a break-away lay-up by Coe College guard Sarah Anciaux, Graham hit a lay-up while being fouled with 1:47 left in the first half. She drained the foul shot, tying the game at 28.

Marquette University forward Breann Hill then stole the ball, passing to Iowa guard Abby Emmert, who sank a lay-up, giving Goodfellow/Imprinted a 30-28 lead.

After a quiet first half for both, Emmert's and Anciaux's offense emerged in the second half, and Goodfellow/Imprinted went on a 24-13 run to build a 17-point lead.

"I got a better feel for the defense," Emmert said. "I hit the seams harder and was able to make open shots I didn't have in the first half."

OLYMPICS

Russia wins 2014 Winter Olympics

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Russia's Black Sea resort of Sochi was awarded the 2014 Winter Olympics on Wednesday, rewarding President Vladimir Putin and taking the Winter Games to his country for the first time.

Sochi defeated the South Korean city of Pyeongchang in the final round of a vote by the International Olympic Committee.

The Austrian resort of Salzburg was eliminated in the first round of the secret ballot, setting up the decisive head-to-head contest between Sochi and Pyeongchang. The vote totals were not immediately released.

The result was a triumph for Putin, who put his international prestige on the line by coming to Guatemala to lobby IOC members and lead Sochi's final formal presentation to the assembly. Putin had left by the time the result was announced.

Ninety-seven IOC members were eligible to vote in the first round. Members from bidding countries are ineligible to vote as long as their cities remain in contention. With Salzburg out, 100 delegates were eligible in the second round.

Russia, an Olympic power that has won 293 Winter Games medals, has never hosted the Winter Games. That was a strong point in Sochi's favor with the IOC, which likes to spread the Olympics to new host countries. Moscow hosted the 1980 Summer Games, which were hit by the U.S.-led boycott following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

The Sochi bid won out over the appeals of its rivals — Salzburg, presenting itself as a safe, no-risk winter sports mecca at the heart of Europe with world-class venues already in place, and Pyeongchang, offering the potential for peace and reconciliation on the divided Korean peninsula and promoting winter sports in Asia.

Matta reloads at Ohio State

BY RUSTY MILLER ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Seconds after Greg Oden was picked No. 1 by Portland in the NBA draft last week, Ohio State coach Thad Matta turned to Oden's mother and said, "Zoe, can you imagine if he had come back how high he could have gone?"

surgery recently and has yet to regain the feeling in his right foot. "The back feels good, though," he said and laughed. "I'm up and around. I've got a cane, and I'm hobbling around. But believe me, this is hard for me, because I go so much."

Matta laughs long and hard on a warm July afternoon. He's had his share of thrills and chills over the past few months since riding the efforts of freshmen Oden and No. 4 pick Mike Conley Jr. to a 35-4 record and the runner-up spot in the NCAA Tournament. After that record season melted away, Matta went along to New York to see Oden and Conley — high-school teammates in Indianapolis — become instant millionaires. Another freshman, Daquan Cook, the Buckeyes' sixth man, was taken with the 21st pick in the first round by Philadelphia and traded to the Miami Heat.

A year ago, the excitement was building because Oden, Conley, Cook, classmate David Lighty, and junior-college transfer Othello Hunter — dubbed "The Thad Five" — were just getting acclimated to Ohio State. A lot has changed in those 12 months. "Somebody said, 'Poor Thad, losing three freshmen in the draft,'" Matta recalled. "I said, 'Hey, we had three guys reach a dream. That, to me, is what we're in this for.'"

The talent pool is still pretty deep for the Buckeyes, despite losing the three freshmen along with seniors Ron Lewis and Ivan Harris. Jamar Butler will be directing traffic for a fourth year at a guard spot. Lighty is coming off a series of fine postseason games and is a member of an international team that will play for the under-19 world championship in Serbia later this month.

Football season tickets going fast

Hawkeye football season-ticket sales have exceeded last year's total, with 800 new season-ticket accounts, and they are on pace to eclipse 56,500, Iowa officials announced.

As of Tuesday, the ticket office reported 45,852 season-ticket sales to the public and UI faculty and staff, including a sellout of premium seat options inside the press box. The athletics department also anticipates selling the entire 10,400-ticket allotment for students.

"The support we receive from our many friends and fans is unmatched, and these numbers are more evidence of that fact," Athletics Director Gary Barta said in a release. "We are very grateful for our tremendous following and don't ever take it for granted."

Student season-ticket sales are ahead of last year, when the student section of Kinnick Stadium was sold to capacity. Because of the increased demand, the UI is considering splitting tickets into two three-game packages.

The Hawkeyes will open the season on Sept. 1 against Northern Illinois in Chicago.

Ryan Zimmerman also homered for the Nationals, who had lost seven of eight. Young added a double and finished 3-for-4, his first hits since he was selected to the NL All-Star team on Sunday.

Chicago, which had won three straight, lost for only the second time in 12 games.

Chico (4-5) struck out four and did not walk a batter. Betrayed by a lack of offensive support, he was 0-1 in his previous eight starts despite giving up only 13 runs in those seven no-decisions.

Cornette blows the Hawkeye horn

Just a few years removed from his college playing days, new Hawkeye assistant Joel Cornette has big aspirations for the Iowa program.

BY MIKE BROWNLEE
THE DAILY IOWAN

When talking about his aspirations for the Iowa men's basketball program, new assistant coach Joel Cornette doesn't beat around the bush.

"This program's only missing one thing," he said. "A national championship. We plan to bring one to Iowa City."

Cornette follows new Hawkeye head coach Todd Lickliter and fellow assistant LaVall Jordan from Butler University, and he brings along their attitude of winning with class.

"We focus on doing what's right," he said. "Winning is important to us, but to win the right way is the most satisfying."

The Cincinnati native

learned plenty about winning in his time at Butler.

Playing four seasons, the last two with Lickliter, his teams won 100 games and made a Sweet 16 run in the NCAA Tournament his senior year.

Despite late start, Skouby sparks win

Her late arrival meant she had to come off the bench, but Iowa junior-to-be Megan Skouby carried her team to an 89-75 victory on Tuesday.

BY BRENDAN STILES
THE DAILY IOWAN

The only thing standing in Megan Skouby's way on Tuesday was traffic.

A few too many red lights forced the Iowa junior-to-be to show up late for the start of her Lucky Pawz/Premier Investments squad's contest with L.L. Pelling/Dan Wiese Marketing Research.

But as soon as Skouby hit the hardwood in North Liberty, she never stopped, scoring a game-high 23 points off the bench and leading her team to an 89-75 victory.

Iowa incoming freshman Kelsey Cermak also performed well in the victory, finishing with nine points and seven rebounds. In a losing effort, Iowa senior-to-be Stacy Schlapkohl finished with 18 points for Pelling/Wiese.

When Cermak first took the floor on Tuesday as a starter, she said she did feel a little more pressure with Skouby's absence during the game's opening minutes, but it didn't become too big a deal.

"She's obviously our main girl whom we want to get the ball to," she said. "You just have to step up."

One thing Pawz/Premier had going for it was its outside shooting — 11-for-26 from 3-point range. And Skouby even got in the action. The first field-goal shot by the 6-6 center was a 3-pointer that was nothing but net.

Graham flashy in 86-80 win

BY LARS HEADINGTON
THE DAILY IOWAN

With time winding down, a game that began as a snoozer kept the fans at the North Liberty Community Center on the edges of their seats until the final seconds.

Goodfellow Printing/Imprinted Sportswear prevailed, 86-80, Tuesday night, but not before the Cullen Painting/Asoyia squad forced a close finish, cutting a 17-point lead to three with under a minute to play.

With 11:45 left in the game, Goodfellow/Imprinted extended its lead to 58-41 on Northwest Missouri State guard Kelsey Homewood's 3-pointer.

But Cullen/Asoyia would not let its up-tempo opponents run away with the game.

"We began to settle down and play team ball," Hawkeye forward JoAnn Hamlin said. "We just had to slow it down and run our offense."

Hamlin grabbed a game-high 12 rebounds and added 19 points.

Leading her team with 21 points, University of Nebraska-Omaha guard Alyssa Green drove the resurgent Cullen/Asoyia team with her spirited play, cutting to the basket on several lay-ups and short jump shots.

The Joffrey Ballet comes to Iowa for five free outdoor performances in five different towns — Des Moines, Council Bluffs, Muscatine, Cedar Rapids, and Iowa City — bringing high art to the cornfields in celebration of Hancher Auditorium's 35th anniversary.

THE DAILY IOWAN

The sensual "Light Rain" closes the Joffrey Ballet's program, presented by Hancher Auditorium in celebration of its 35th anniversary and the Joffrey Ballet's 50th anniversary. The free program's five acts, several of which saw their world premiere at Hancher, span classic to modern approaches to dance and each piece draws on the ties between Hancher and the Joffrey Ballet. Also special to the tour is a preview of Pedro Ruiz's Allegro con Sabor, which will premiere this fall.

Five towns, 41 dancers, nine days — all pieces of Hancher's gift, a series of free, outdoor dance performances by the first contemporary American ballet company, the Joffrey, to Iowans in celebration of the auditorium's 35th anniversary.

Dancing in towns from the Mississippi to the Missouri, the ballet launched its Iowa tour June 29 at the Des Moines Arts Festival, then disassembled and packed up the 64-by-48-foot stage to journey to Council Bluffs with 41 dancers and 14 trailers in tow the next day. The tour will close with one last performance on the Hancher Green on Saturday at 8 p.m.

"We've always been told this is the University of Iowa, not the University of Iowa City," Chuck Swanson, executive director of Hancher Auditorium said. "We wanted to share the special relationship we have with the Joffrey with the rest of the state."

The History

The long-standing friendship of Hancher and Joffrey goes back to 1974, two years after the facility's birth, when Joffrey first took the stage at the auditorium. Since then, Hancher has commissioned three works — James Kudelka's The Heart of the Matter in 1986, Robert Joffrey's contemporary American interpretation of The Nutcracker in 1987, and Artistic Director and founder of the Joffrey David Arpino's first full-length rock ballet, Billboards, in 1993 — and that doesn't include the 75 other occasions the Joffrey has danced on Hancher's stage.

The ballet and theater's relationship also includes residencies in the summers of 1982, 1983, and 1985. Called the Joffrey II dancers, the junior company or "farm team" formerly affiliated with the ballet, traveled around Iowa bringing the performing arts into the lives of thousands of rural Iowans.

"To this day, we still hear people talk about those residencies from the early 1980s," Swanson said. "It just touched so many people's lives, we thought we'd do the same thing for the 35th anniversary with the main company."

Swanson and artistic director Judy Hurtig first conceived of Hancher's anniversary project in 2004 at the Austin, Texas, airport while waiting to board a delayed plane.

"At that point, we were pretty naive as to how complicated the logistics of something like this are," Swanson said. "We take for granted all the things that exist in a theater."

Although re-creating a stage, sound system, lighting, dressing rooms, and bathrooms outdoors becomes undoubtedly expensive and requires extensive fundraising, Swanson and Hurtig found the fundraising portion of this project — nearly $1 million — to be rather easy.

"People really like the uniqueness of this project," Swanson said. "They really like the idea that this is doing something for the state of Iowa."

Swanson and Hurtig believe the free outdoor shows will not only allow people outside of the traditional ballet audience access to the performing arts, but also encourage young people to continue living in Iowa through the improvement of lifestyle amenities.

"I really want people to end up thinking, 'Wow, this is a great place to live,'" Swanson said.

The Company

Sporting sweat pants, snagged pink and black tights, bedroom slippers, cotton overalls, even spandex biking shorts, the men and women of the Joffrey Ballet slowly make their way on stage against a backdrop of clustered skyscrapers in the center of downtown Des Moines. The dancers chat with one another as they slowly sprawl themselves on the floor and over the sides of barres made from metal piping.

Class begins at 12:30, when a small aging ballet mistress, dressed in black with short red hair, starts pacing the aisles of fluttering toes and gracefully rounded arms. This is just the beginning of a typical day for a Joffrey dancer, and although all company members have been rigorously trained in classical ballet, the Joffrey, unlike many other companies, does not limit itself to just one genre of dance.

"That's what the Joffrey is known for," Willy Shives said, a sunglass-clad 45-year-old dancer who has been with the company nine years. "We'll go from barefoot ballet to pointe shoes to character shoes to a story ballet."

This multifaceted approach to dance first attracted 21-year-old Abigail Simone, formerly of the American Ballet Theatre, who feels she can grow artistically with greater facility at the Joffrey not only because of the repertoire but because the 45-dancer company is smaller.

UI THEATRE REVIEW

Red Herring might throw you off

Though the plot of Red Herring is all about secrets and lies, the enjoyment of the production is hard to hide — AND THAT'S THE TRUTH.

Publicity photo

Red Herring, Michael Hollinger's second play in Iowa Summer Rep's Comédie du Jour, features espionage, murder, and — marriage. Between solving mysteries and conquering love, the themes seem dark at times, but the satire succeeds in generating plenty of laughs.

BY ANNA WIEGENSTEIN
THE DAILY IOWAN

Upon entering the Thayer Theatre to catch a performance of Red Herring, you may have to watch your step. This is no mistake — the shadowy aura that surrounds the audience immediately provides the perfect atmosphere for playwright Michael Hollinger's '50s-set tale of spies, Soviets, and shotgun weddings (literally — almost).

In Herring, the second installment in the Iowa Summer Rep's lineup this season, even the set is a mystery at first. What initially appears as a boring mass of wood undergoes a myriad of transformations by the time both acts are over, becoming everything from a kitchen in Wisconsin to City Hall in Boston to the dock of a military vessel in the South Pacific.

Though the settings vary greatly, Red Herring's plot is, at its core, about three couples who want to get married. Simple enough, right? Not exactly.

Maggie and Frank (Elena Passarello and Ben Hill), a hard-boiled coupling of detective and FBI agent, have a murder to solve. Lynn and James (Kristy Hartsgrove and Bradley W. Anderson) need to orchestrate a bit of espionage. Meanwhile, Andrei and Mrs. Kravitz (Jason Grubbe and Rachael Lindhart) have the pesky problem of working around their former spouses, dead or alive.

Whew. Needless to say, the three plots intertwine quickly in a fashion any Dashiell Hammett fan would admire. And though the narrative is continually shifting, Red Herring thankfully never confounds or tricks its audience. The action walks the line between farce and ridiculousness smoothly without becoming hokey — an admirable accomplishment.

Though the premise seems laughable, the production team's attention to details in musical cues and costuming are — no joke — fantastic. Every scrap of cast wears, such as a dumpy flowered housecoat or the layers and layers of pink sported by girly-girl Lynn, feels as true to the fictionalized setting as an episode of "I Love Lucy." Nearly as lovely as the outfits are the various lighting techniques employed, which do a great deal of work in creating a scene.

The production's six-person cast proves nearly as malleable as its scenery. Nearly all actors become at least one other person before Red Herring is through. Anderson, in particular, makes his numerous side characters all distinctive and entertaining. Both Passarello and Hill have obviously studied up on their detective movies, right down to their hilariously winning accents, while Hartsgrove and Anderson team up nicely to form the most wholesomely All-American couple imaginable. The older combo of Grubbe and Lindhart doesn't have as much focus as the other two, but the pair do well, aside from Mrs. Kravitz becoming at times screechy and annoying.

What's truly great about Red Herring comes during the times of low light, while the actors maneuver the set into a new permutation. They enter and exit flashily, doing a pirouette or a leg kick here and there, and look as though they're having the time of their lives.

This production is fun, first and foremost, from its pithy '50s-era dialogue ("My wife and I have a Cold War kind of trust," one man says. "It's based on a balance of power and a fear of mutual destruction.") to the enormous titular fish that appears at the beginning of each act.

From beginning to end, Red Herring is a delight — that's one thing that can't be kept a secret.

new movies OPENING THIS WEEKEND

Transformers
Coral Ridge 10, Cinema 12
Dorks around the globe can finally raise their skinny or chubby fists in victory. Since special-effects footage leaked to the public over a year ago, the buzz has been planetary for Michael Bay (Armageddon, Pearl Harbor) and his cinematic version of the cartoon/toy-line powerhouse. Giant robots turn into giant vehicles and blow stuff up — wahoo.

License to Wed
Coral Ridge 10, Cinema 12
The legendary Robin Williams (Patch Adams, Aladdin on Ice) returns to the big screen as the Reverend Frank in this zany, offbeat romantic comedy. Sadie (Mandy Moore) and Ben (John Krasinski) want to marry in a small Catholic church — but there's a catch. They must undergo the reverend's marriage-preparation course — replete with farting animatronic babies and faith-based assault and battery.

AT THE BIJOU

Zoo
If you're expecting a tender story of a young man's friendship with a wild stallion and the obstacles they face together, rent Sea Biscuit — Zoo offers a creepy, poetic glimpse into the world of zoophiles and the death of a Sealtian man killed after copulating with an Arabian stallion. Using dramatic reconstructions and art-house cinematography, director Robinson Devor attempts to shed light on one of the most taboo sexual practices today.

WHAT ARE YOU READING?

Each week, the D/finds a person in Iowa City to discuss her or his favorite book of the moment. This week, Adam Mix, the owner of Daydreams comic-book store, trumpets Ed Brubaker's and Sean Phillips's graphic novel, Criminal Vol. 1: Coward.

"I've enjoyed this well-constructed crime-noir story, which is as good as any film in its genre. The story is raw. The characters are flawed, and the pain and consequences are really unlike most comics. [Criminal] helps break the mold — the focus doesn't always have to be on superheroes."

D/RECOMMENDS

Taking your family to see Zoo this weekend at the Bijou. It's a thoughtful meditation on love and loss — a tender story of a young man's friendship with a wild stallion and the obstacles they faced together.

Joffrey Ballet steps out for Hancher gala

BALLET

"At a certain point, you become more like scenery," Simone said about the American Ballet Theatre.

The Joffrey is also an all-star or no-star company. There's no hierarchy of principal dancers, thus allowing a high level of equality between peers.

"I'll jump from being in an ensemble work to doing the lead," Shives said. "It just depends on what is offered and where they feel you'll do best."

The Joffrey is as versatile in repertoire as it is in dancers. Deeming athleticism a dancer's most important quality, the Joffrey discredits the stereotype that all ballerinas are pale and waif-like cookie cutouts.

With class every day all-day and endless travel, company members admit that it's not an easy life. Dancers don't go into the profession for the money but because they simply love to dance. Despite the many performance-art enthusiasts in support of this sometimes overlooked art form, there are still those who feel it is more of a pastime than a legitimate profession.

"I feel like a lot of kids in training are told that ballet is just a hobby," Simone said. "But if you're really passionate about it, that's important. Art is important — don't let anyone change your mind about that."

The Dance

The Joffrey Ballet intentionally selected five distinctly different pieces to perform, each with a specific significance in relation to the Hancher-Joffrey relationship.

"There's something for everyone," said Cameron Bazden, the associate artistic director of the Joffrey. "This performance may open the door for people who do not normally come to see ballet."

Each day starts with an educational component of the tour. Headed by Pierre Lockett, director of education and community engagement, the hour-long class is given on-site and teaches a portion of "Sometimes It Snows in April," the first piece performed in the show. In Des Moines, a park full of children shrieked gleefully as Lockett taught them the "comb the hair," a slow hand graze of the hair.

"It allows people to feel what it's like to move in a choreographed manner," Hurtig said. "People feel a sense of identification later when they see the [professional] dancers performing what they have learned."

In "Sometimes It Snows in April," a rock ballet choreographed by Laura Dean to the music of Prince, the dancers snake out on stage like a stray, unraveling thread, slowly spinning in formation as each new person emerges. The first section of the ballet is performed to Prince's haunting lament about the death of a friend when suddenly the dancers regroup on stage with a collective "hurrah" as the music shifts into the pulsating '80s sex-pop song Baby I'm a Star.

"I thought ballet was boring and for snobs, but man, it was hot," said spectator John Ryan, with camera in hand, about the Billboards piece. "It's all about the human form."

"It's artwork in motion,"

Rebecca F. Miller/The Daily Iowan

Joffrey Ballet dancers perform in the piece "Untitled," choreographed by Pilobolus. The work tells the story of two Victorian ladies and their male suitors, and showcases Pilobolus' signature humor and focus on shape.

Ryan's friend, 29-year-old cook Jason Coady, chimed in, initially reluctant to comment on the foreign art form. "I've been watching 'So You Think You Can Dance' lately, so I have a better appreciation for it."

Another work in the performance, titled "Untitled," a whimsical

Pilobolus piece, represents the experimental, contemporary dance in the Joffrey repertoire. Women balance themselves on the shoulders of men with intricate weight changes as their long cream-colored skirts nearly reach the floor. They look like they're on stilts. The humorous piece explores Victorian courtship rituals and birth with the emergence of half-naked men from under the women's skirts. It looks as if it would fit well in a performance of Cirque de Soleil.

For those who prefer a more-traditional approach to dance, "The Grand Pas de Deux" from Act II of The Nutcracker takes the second to last spot in the performance. The work, danced by the tutu-clad Sugar Plum Fairy and her Cavalier, pays homage to Hancher's premier of Joffrey's Nutcracker and the theater's subsequent annual inclusion of the ballet ever since.

Joffrey dancers, who have performed these pieces thousands of times in auditoriums and studios, appreciate the new experience an outdoor venue creates.

"It's not the same as when you walk into a theater," said Maia Wilkins, a 16-year veteran of the Joffrey. "The wind, the bugs, the weather — you see the people at the beginning. It's beautiful. It's something else."

BEYOND THE NOISE

BY BRENT JOHNSON
THE DAILY IOWAN

If noise band Parts and Labor earned bragging rights for one legend-making moment in rock and roll, nearly killing a roomful of Germans with guitar feedback would be it.

"The weirdest thing happened," said BJ Warshaw, bassist and noisemaker. "The sound guy didn't know what he was doing and kept turning the volume up. So eventually, the drum monitor caught fire on stage because of all the feedback we like to generate. We were horrified."

After extinguishing the flames, the band decided to play on. And the spectacle provoked the crowd to go ballistic.

"When shit goes horribly wrong, we tend to play our best shows," Warshaw said. "Everyone is just like, 'Fuck it,' and lets loose."

If this is any indication of what to expect tonight at the Picador, 330 E. Washington St., then Brooklyn-based Parts and Labor's hyper-dynamic synthesis of pop and noise should be avoided by the faint-hearted. The trio will visit Iowa City for the first time in nearly three years on a cross-country tour to promote the group's third album, Mapmaker.

Fans who caught the band the last time, at the Hall Mall, might be surprised by the difference in sound, which has evolved from noisier instrumentals to more cohesive pop. But the manic energy remains, still awash in discord and high-pitched feedback.

This musical nexus has drawn favorable comparisons with Neutral Milk Hotel and Hüsker Dü, both groundbreaking acts of the genre during the late-'80s and '90s. The new recordings, however, team with a vintage sensibility more akin to '70s FM radio and Brian Eno's early fusion of synth and pop.

Even though Parts and Labor has become more accessible to mainstream audiences, its recordings defy the generic lifelessness that has plagued popular music for decades. The band members pummel their songs with a wall-of-noise generated from a collection of distortion peddles, children's instruments, and keyboards.

Surprisingly, Warshaw and guitarist Dan Friel reproduce this chaos by switching off between their standard instruments and several panels of noisemakers.

On Mapmaker, tracks such as "Vision of Repair" and "Fractured Skies" quickly ignite with excited singsong vocals and frantic drums and guitars.

But the band seems to relish in gratifying listeners as well as agitating them. Other tracks, such as the high-strung "Ghosts Will Burn," build slowly toward climax only to cut off prematurely without resolution.

Parts and Labor unleashes the noise — and it's not recommended for pregnant women or people with heart conditions.

This tense, innovative songwriting makes up only a part of the equation for the group's rising popularity. Parts and Labor seems to understand one fundamental law of the Internet Age:

No matter how tight your band is, how good its songs are, or the hype it generates, more and more bands appear every day, vying for the audience's attention.

"People forget about you quickly," Warshaw said, noting that inactivity can kill a great band without mercy or fanfare.

Although the turnover rate for bands this side of the millennium can be staggering, the three-piece manages to stay above the rabble the old-fashioned way: by touring like hell.

- Got any diseases? Want some?
- Can I sit on your lap for like 20 minutes?
- Do you know the difference between my penis and a chicken leg? No??? Well, let's go on a picnic and find out.
- We might as well go back to my place and [have sex] 'cause that's what I'm gonna tell everyone we did, anyway.

• Do you live close to the hospital? (Why?) Because I want to know if I'll need to get a cab or if I can just walk to work in the morning.

• Wanna split an orgasm?

• Do you have a boyfriend? (Yes) Want another one, anyway?

• I just pissed my pants. Can I have yours?

• Mind if I snatch a kiss, or would you prefer it the other way around?

• I'm horrible with calculus; would you be able to integrate my natural log?

• (Holding out his hand.) Beg your pardon, but could you hold this for me?

horoscopes

Thursday, July 5, 2007
— by Eugenia Last

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Keep things to yourself today. Getting into a discussion with someone who isn't likely to agree with you will be a waste of time and end in a stalemate. Instead, take a fun-loving approach to your day.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You'll have plenty of energy to burn, so challenge yourself and do something out of the ordinary. Don't let the bad mood of someone you love get to you. Help others, and you will help yourself.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be careful to whom you give help today. A serious talk with someone you care about will help you break down any barriers. An opportunity may not be as good as it first appears. Question it before jumping in.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You will have a different outlook today that will give whatever you do a special twist. You can make some decisions that will influence the way you do things in the future. Small and simple changes will do the trick.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You will have no trouble drawing attention to yourself or what you want to do, but be prepared to answer questions. If you aren't as far along as you make out to be, you will disappoint the people who might have stepped in and helped. Be honest.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Someone you live with or are close to will be extravagant or indulgent today. Avoid getting pushed around. Expect changes to be forthcoming; in the end, you will benefit from what happens.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The busier you are, the better. You can make some changes regarding your vocation or the people you deal with regularly. Take a trip if it will help you close a deal or get to know someone better. Children and seniors may be confused and need your help.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You'll have your finger on the pulse of whatever it is you are trying to accomplish. Your creative flare will catch the attention of a visionary who can see your potential. A change of scenery will alter your perspective.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Issues will be raised today that you should have addressed a long time ago. Face your problems, and resolve whatever matters have been left undone. You owe it to yourself and the people you are affecting to get on with it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Take a fresh look at an old idea, and you will be on your way to a profitable endeavor. There is money to be made through business deals, investments, or even property deals. A partnership looks promising.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Don't let your confusion about what you should or shouldn't be doing lead you down the wrong path. If you aren't sure, don't guess. Ask questions. It's time to rethink your strategy for the future.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Listen to what others have to say. While there will be plenty of people on your side, there will be those who want to cause problems for you. If you are questioning your lifestyle, it may be time to consider making a few changes.
