Safety, housing top issues

The new City Council will face many issues besides the entry age for the town's bars.

By Patrick Larkin
THE DAILY IOWAN

As the municipal election nears, City Council candidates discuss their plans for some of the top issues, including how to fund more police and firefighters, how to create affordable housing, and how to stimulate economic growth for the city.

More manpower for public safety

The Iowa City police chief wants 13 more police officers and two more sergeants, according to an Oct. 25 memorandum.
"We're at minimum staffing levels fairly often," Police Chief Sam Hargadine said, noting that mandatory overtime for officers is a daily occurrence. "Right now, we're not doing any community policing." The Oct. 25 memorandum shows that Iowa City's current 73 officers fall well below policing levels around Iowa and the country. Iowa City, with a U.S. census population of around 63,000, has 1.16 officers per 1,000 people. Dubuque, with 57,546 residents, has a total of 93 police officers, or 1.62 cops per 1,000 people. An additional 15 officers for Iowa City would meet the West North Central U.S. average of 1.4 officers per 1,000.

It would cost about $75,000 per new officer, Hargadine said. That price tag includes equipment and training.

Meanwhile, building a fourth fire station in northeastern Iowa City has for years been a priority for Fire Chief Andy Rocca.

"It's time to re-examine fire-protection service," he said.

A plot of land for the station sits vacant at the intersection of North Dodge Street and Scott Boulevard.

The current response time for parts of northeast Iowa City is as much as 10 minutes, depending on the time of day, he said. The department's goal is to have its first unit at the site of a fire within six minutes 90 percent of the time. The goal is based on national benchmarks.

Kevin O'Malley, Iowa City's finance director, said finding the funds to staff the station has been the limiting factor.

Rocca estimated it would cost about $60,000 per new firefighter. To staff the station would require nine firefighters — three shifts of three firefighters, he said.

On Oct. 24, an apartment fire at 804 N. Dubuque St. had most of Iowa City's on-duty firefighters at the scene. Of the 15 on duty, only six weren't at the structural fire.

"Structure fires are labor-intensive and require at least 14 people," Rocca said.

2008 PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN

Richardson hits Bush on war, vets' care

On Nov. 2, Bill Richardson criticized the Bush administration's handling of the Iraq war and veterans' health care.

By Christopher Patton
THE DAILY IOWAN

CEDAR RAPIDS — During a Nov. 2 campaign event focused on veterans and their families, Democratic presidential-nomination hopeful Bill Richardson said that upon becoming president, he would bring a quick end to American military involvement in Iraq.

The New Mexico governor also pledged to engage in aggressive diplomacy, which, he said, would help mitigate the ongoing violence in the Middle Eastern country.

"I believe that this war has become a terrible American dilemma that can only be fixed by taking all of our troops out," he said, adding that the military could complete a full withdrawal in a single year.

The governor said his plan for removing all American troops from Iraq during his first year in office distinguishes him from the three Democratic-nomination hopefuls who are most popular in Iowa: New York Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, Illinois Sen. Barack

Richardson
candidate

Obama, and former North Carolina Sen. John Edwards.

The UI's October Hawkeye Poll put Richardson in fourth place with 7.2 percent support, down from 9.4 percent in August.

Stressing his diplomatic experience, Richardson said he dealt extensively with Iraq in his capacity as U.N.

21-only would change bars

If ordinance passes, bars may consider creating underage areas or offering alcohol-free underage nights.

By Jennifer Delgado
THE DAILY IOWAN

If the 21-ordinance is passed on Tuesday, UI students may see a few changes in how downtown drinking establishments are run.

Instead of only allowing 21-year-olds to enter, the Iowa City Council has also spoken briefly about ways to keep bars open to underage patrons. Splitting bars into sections of underage and of-age customers, creating specific evenings during which alcohol is not sold on the premises, and investing in identification scanners are some of the possibilities that bar owners may consider.

"The whole idea of the ordinance is not to penalize underage people but to continue to offer venues for entertainment purposes," City Councilor Dee Vanderhoef said.

But some bar owners are optimistic and haven't given these ideas much thought.

"I don't think anyone has thought about what would happen if this passes," said Leah Cohen, the owner of Bo-James, 118 E. Washington St. "We are all planning on a big 'No.'"

In terms of staff training and identification, many believe that the current process will not change at all.

"I don't think that this procedure will change as long as bars are still checking IDs and turning away persons under 21 after 10 p.m.," Iowa City police Sgt. Troy Kelsay said.

Cohen said most bars have identification methods. "If this passes, mass fake IDs might be a problem," she said. "Everyone might have to do a little more training there."

Adding ID scanning machines could assist with curbing the problem, but the City Council has not talked about the idea recently, Vanderhoef said.

Closely knit preemie aid

The Preemie Project held its first College Knit Night, in which members made items to be donated to the UI Hospitals and Clinics' neonatal intensive-care unit.

By Zhi Xiong
THE DAILY IOWAN

For Arianna Criss, who was born at only 27 weeks, donning a tiny hat and bootie set is vital when her mother, Alycen Noel, holds her or changes her diaper outside of the incubator.

"It's a big thing to keep her warm," said Noel, who drives from Dubuque to visit her daughter at the UI Hospitals and Clinics' neonatal intensive-care unit six days a week. "If she's spending energy to keep warm, she loses weight."

Now a little over three pounds, Arianna has two matching sets of hats and booties — pink and multicolored — made by members of the Preemie Project, a charity organization that donates knitted items to premature children in the neonatal unit.

Since its creation in 2005, the project now has more than 250 volunteers on its e-mail list and another chapter in Michigan. The Iowa chapter has donated more than 1,700 hat and bootie sets and 1,500 blankets, according to the group's website.

On Sunday's College Knit Night, three members gathered at 118 S. Clinton St. to work on their knitting.

Though she has no family members with premature children, UI alum Callie Byers said the financial and emotional effect of the experience is clear.

"It's so expensive to have a baby in the hospital for a month," she said, holding her first knitted creation, which was a simple square. "Especially if you don't have insurance."

At birth, Arianna, hooked up to lines and tubes, could not even wear clothes. And even preemie clothing Noel bought were "gigantic."

A photo of Arianna shows her curled in a lavender-lined incubator, with various lines still criss-crossing her small body. Her head and feet are swathed in multicolored knitted covers. Her eyes are still closed.

"The stuff looks cute on her," Noel said.

Noel said that although doctors said Arianna is growing, she feels the strain and heartache of having a premature child.

"It's expensive and emotionally and physically draining," she said. "Most people don't really understand what it's like."

Sarah O'Brien/The Daily Iowan

Meg Gillette adjusts son Benjamin's pumpkin hat in the neonatal intensive-care unit at the UI Hospital and Clinics on Oct. 30. Benjamin was born on Oct. 5, weighing only two pounds, two ounces. His hat was donated by the Preemie Project.

Though the project is not officially associated with the UIHC, the bulk of its donations go to the hospital. To help families in more ways, the project expanded to bake sales, diaper and formula drives, and supporting March of Dimes events.

The group members even make bereavement packages — miniature burial outfits, handkerchiefs, and small charms — for families whose baby "didn't make it," UI graduate student Emily Thomas said.

Thomas helped Byers sew the square into a hat. The two are part of the project's community outreach committee, which is working to put together a craft-a-thon in February. They are recruiting local businesses to support the seminar, to be held at the hospital.

As she started on a crocheted bootie in lavender-colored yarn, Thomas said the knitted items take the edge off the sight of numerous instruments connected to the babies.

"When you see their pictures, it's just a hat, a lot of tubes, a diaper, and some booties," she said. "If there were no hat and booties, it would be the most depressing thing ever."

Two face numerous charges

Iowa City police responded to a report of suspicious activity Nov. 1 and wound up charging two Davenport residents with burglarizing AutoZone, 13 Highway 1 W., authorities report.

Police charged Charles Harvey, 42, with third-degree criminal mischief, possession of burglar's tools, second-degree theft, and third-degree burglary. Edna Wales, 42, is charged with third-degree burglary, second-degree theft, and possession of burglar's tools. Both face two felonies.

As of Sunday, Harvey was being held at Johnson County Jail on a $17,000 cash-only bond; Wales was being held on a $15,000 cash-only bond.

A witness reportedly alerted police after seeing Harvey force his way through AutoZone's steel door with a prybar. Once inside, Harvey removed a small metal safe holding $1,800 in cash that was bolted to the business's floor, police allege.

Wales was waiting in a car, which police reported contained numerous burglar's tools, including a police scanner, rubber gloves, and a sledge hammer.

Harvey and Wales have extensive records, including other alleged and prosecuted burglaries, possession of drugs, and domestic abuse, according to Iowa Courts Online.

Second-degree theft and third-degree burglary are Class D felonies, each punishable by up to five years in prison and a fine of up to $7,500.

Possession of burglar's tools and third-degree criminal mischief are aggravated misdemeanors,

Man charged with 2 felonies

A man faces two felonies after he allegedly forced his way into a woman's residence and abused her, Iowa City police reported Oct. 26.

Officers charged Timmie Smith, 36, address unknown, with third or subsequent domestic-abuse assault, first-degree burglary, and third-degree criminal mischief, according to reports.

Police responded after a child called 911 to report his mother was in a fight with Smith, with whom she had had an intimate relationship until March, officers said.

Smith had reportedly forced entry into the residence and assaulted the woman, causing an abrasion to her left elbow, reports said.

After the alleged fight, Smith reportedly threw two rocks through two school-bus windows nearby, causing damage in excess of $500.

Smith has previous convictions of domestic abuse from March, May 2006, and October 2005.

First-degree burglary is a Class B felony, punishable by up to 25 years in prison.

Third-offense domestic-abuse assault is a Class D felony, punishable by up to five years in prison and a fine of up to $7,500.

Third-degree criminal mischief is an aggravated misdemeanor and carries a penalty of up to two years in prison and a fine of up to $5,000.

Police charge man with 3rd OWI

An Iowa City man faces a felony after police charged him with an OWI Nov. 1, authorities reported.

Iowa City police charged Quinton Frazier, 43, 2203 Hickory Court, with third-offense OWI and driving with a revoked license after authorities allege that he registered an blood-alcohol content of .085.

Officers stopped Frazier in a black 1989 Cadillac DeVille for reportedly driving 39 mph in a 25-mph zone.

Frazier did not pull over immediately when officers activated their lights and sirens, but they eventually made contact and noticed Frazier smelled of a "strong odor of alcohol," police said. He reportedly failed field-sobriety tests.

Frazier has prior OWI charges from January 2006 and June 2007.

Third-offense OWI is a Class D felony, punishable by up to up years in prison and a fine of up to $7,500.

Sex assault reported at Mayflower

A sex assault reportedly occurred Oct. 31 at Mayflower Residence Hall, UI officials said.

UI police received information that the incident happened at the residence hall at some point in the evening hours on Halloween.

Officials released the information Nov. 2 in a UI news release, citing the Jeanne Clery Disclosure of Campus Security Policy and Campus Crime Statistics Act, which requires colleges to disclose information about crimes on campus and crimes that may be threats to other students and faculty.

No other information was available on the assault as of Sunday night.

Local man faces drug charges

Iowa City police collected 87 grams of marijuana after a drug bust Nov. 2, authorities report.

Officers arrested Asa Anderson, 26, 1020 N. Summit St., and charged him with a controlled-substance violation, drug tax-stamp violation, and second-offense consumption/intoxication, according to reports.

Anderson faces two felonies.

Police served a search warrant at Anderson's residence and allegedly discovered 87 grams of marijuana, along with a digital scale, cash, a heat-seal machine, and other drug paraphernalia.

According to reports, Anderson did not have a drug tax stamp for the marijuana.

The consumption charge comes after Anderson was outside walking his dog when officers reportedly found he had red, watery eyes, slurred speech, and smelled of alcohol. Anderson admitted to drinking beer; he has a public-intoxication conviction from December 2002.

The controlled-substance violation and drug tax-stamp violation are Class D felonies, each punishable by up to five years in prison and a fine of up to $7,500.

Second-offense public intoxication is a serious misdemeanor, punishable by up to a year in prison and a fine of up to $1,500.

ambassador during the Clinton administration. He also cited the current Iraqi government's inability to bring about political reconciliation as well as widespread anti-American sentiment throughout the country as evidence that the Bush administration's Iraq strategy can't succeed.

"I feel strongly that diplomacy is the way out — not our troops," he said, suggesting a U.N. peacekeeping force composed exclusively of Muslims could replace the American presence and stabilize Iraq.

After removing the U.S. military from Iraq, the governor said, he would refocus the government's national-security priorities on combating international terrorism.

Richardson also charged that soldiers returning from Iraq are not receiving proper treatment.

"Our men and women in uniform do so much, and yet we just slap them on the back," he said. "We don't give them the respect they deserve."

The governor said the United States is doing a particularly poor job of assisting veterans suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder and other mental-health problems. Because many of the tens of thousands of American soldiers injured in Iraq have suffered brain injuries, he said, the government needs to commit more resources to mental health treatment.

Aside from pointing out the current system's flaws, Richardson also suggested several improvements. "I would give every veteran a hero's health card," he said. Noting that many veterans live in areas without easy access to Veterans Administration medical facilities, he said his proposal would allow them to receive health care anywhere they want. He also said he would increase funding for mental-health programs, excuse veterans from paying the federal income tax during their first year back in the United States, and create a program to make college more accessible to veterans.

Cedar Rapids resident and Vietnam-War-era veteran Marty Baldonado said he supports Richardson because he believes the governor really cares about veterans.

"I hope he gets [elected] in some capacity," he said. "I'd love to see him as vice president if he's not president." E-mail DI reporter Christopher Patton at: chris-patton@uiowa.edu

21-only looms over bars

The machines are also costly, ranging from $1,000 and up, and have some pitfalls.

The scanners have not proven to be effective, Cohen said. The City Council would want to check the designs of the identification cards that could bypass the machines and look into the machines' reliability, Vanderhoef said.

Splitting bar space is another option for owners. This could prove tricky in terms of the dance floor, but the idea could work depending on how bars petition to do so.

Allowing bars to have underage nights is another option but is strictly up to the owner.

"I don't see many bars doing this, because their sales certainly include alcohol," said Cohen.

At the earliest, the ordinance would take effect in late January. Even if passed by citizen vote, the motion can still fail in the City Council. For an ordinance to take effect, it must be passed three times at three City Council meetings. If it fails once, the ordinance is dead.

IOWA CITY ELECTIONS

4 vie for 2 at-large council spots

Matt Hayek

City High graduate Matt Hayek, 38, said his good background as an active volunteer and his partnership in a local third-generation law firm led him to run for a seat on the Iowa City City Council.

"With that experience, working with nonprofits and city staffers, I learned how the city functions," he said.

Hayek's "meaningful experiences" started during the time between his undergraduate degree and law degree from the University of Michigan, when he went to Bolivia with the Peace Corps. He is now fluent in Spanish.

He calls learning Spanish by immersion "baptism by fire."

His activities include serving as president of the Englert Theatre board of directors and being the former head of the Housing and Community Development Commission and a task force on housing.

His involvement in these committees may be why he said he would support more live music and alternative venues instead of the proposed 21-ordinance.

Though the self-described moderate said he believes conditions in Iowa City right now are "excellent," he thinks improvements are necessary.

"It's prosperous," he said. "There are no crises. But there is always room for improvement."

Hayek also said that the city may face a budget crunch if economic growth is not expanded, noting that police and fire protection are especially important.

He said he would also like to see the city become greener — "reduce our environmental footprint" — in terms of municipal operations.

Hayek said in terms of the MidAmerican franchise proposal that the council is currently discussing, he feels it would be good to have a franchise but that pressure for renewable energy should be pushed.

Terry Smith

Terry Smith, the director of compliance and delivery support for MidAmerican Energy, "climbed the ladder" to his current position. He started as a night custodian while he attended Black Hawk Community College during the day.

"I worked hard to advance my career over the past 27 years," he said.

Smith moved to Iowa City in 1995 because of a job transfer when MidAmerican merged with other utility companies. He said his company strongly supports community involvement for all employees.

Smith said he supports the MidAmerican franchise proposal.

"I join two-thirds of the community in support of the agreement," he said, adding that it has been a long effort, and he is pleased with the current City Council. He hopes the issue will continue to move forward in November.

The Rock Island native said he considers himself to be open-minded, and he looks fairly at both sides of an issue but admits he has a bias when it comes to the proposal.

"When trying to look past bias and look at it objectively, I come up with the same results," he said. "It's in the customers' best interest, the employees' best interest, and the community's best interest."

Smith said there were two reasons he decided to run for the council. Current Councilor Bob Elliott decided not to run, and it "seemed like the next logical step." He has been on the City's Planning and Zoning Commission since 2005.

Smith said he will personally vote no on the 21-ordinance, mainly because he thinks it is the wrong solution to the underage-drinking problem.

"I'm not sure another law will change [the problem]," the 45-year-old said.

— by Kelli Shaffner

Dee Vanderhoef

Current Iowa City Councilor Dee Vanderhoef said she was originally pushed into running for City Council. Former Iowa City Mayor Susan Horowitz talked her into it in 1996.

"I didn't know how to run the campaign," the 68-year-old said. "I had decided I wasn't going to run when the mayor at the time called me to say, 'I hope you're going to run.'"

Running for the council was never anything she had ever considered, and she said she learned on the "fast track." The UI nursing graduate said she still continues to learn.

Vanderhoef said her ability to take monetary concerns out of issues councilors face serves her well.

"Once we make the commitment, we can find ways to make it happen," she said, which is what Vanderhoef would like to do with the proposed joint emergency-communications center.

"It's one of those things that may not save any money," she said. "But we would have so much better public safety."

Vanderhoef, a resident of Iowa City since 1968, said finding funding for public safety, hiring a new city manager, and starting to tackle affordable housing issues are the main issues facing the city.

Vanderhoef's favorable position on the MidAmerican energy-franchise proposal comes from being a part of the negotiation team.

"There are lot of things citizens would like that we cannot bargain for," she said, adding that citizens would need to go to the state code or the Iowa Utilities Board.

She also noted that even though she supports the proposed 21-ordinance, she will work with whatever the citizens tell her they want.

— Kelli Shaffner

Mike Wright

Mike Wright believes his two opposite and "very valuable" perspectives led him to what he calls "the ultimate volunteer opportunity" — he has served on both the North Side Neighborhood Association and the Iowa City Board of Adjustment.

"I've seen how city government and zoning have affected neighborhoods and the individual city," he said, calling services on the Iowa City City Council "a terrific way to serve the community."

Wright believes the largest issue for this election will be construction and staffing of a North Side fire station, which is one of three issues mentioned on his candidacy website. He said hiring new police officers comes in a close second. The proposed joint emergency-communications center will improve public safety as well, he said.

He hopes this "terrific idea" will come to pass.

A terrible idea, Wright said, would be to give MidAmerican Energy approval of its proposed franchise.

"There are no advantages," he said. "It's a poor move from a public-policy standpoint."

He added that, at the very most, a five-year contract would be acceptable.

The 49-year-old Detroit native said his sense of humor, along with ability to work hard and be a good listener, is a valuable asset.

"Beyond my sense of humor, I don't take things too personally," he said. "Unless they're personal."

Wright studied sociology and studio art at Central Michigan University and received a graduate degree from the University of Minnesota. He currently works in the UI's library system.

City faces issues

An additional nine firefighters would mean that the whole on-duty firefighter force would not have to be at the scene. Nine firefighters is "realistic given the fiscal budget," he said.

Ways to pay for cops and firefighters

Cost estimates for the recommended cops and firefighters total around $1.7 million.

Candidates discussed three different ways to get bucks for these extra public-safety personnel.

One way, favored by candidate Mike Wright, involves a city levy currently used to fund emergency dispatchers. If a proposed Johnson County joint emergency-communications center project goes through, Iowa City dispatchers would move to the county center, and their salaries would be paid for with a county levy, as opposed to the city levy.

The city levy allocates more than $800,000 to city dispatchers, and though the county communication center would free up most of the money, the police department would still require five staff members to run its front desk, which is currently handled by dispatchers, said Hargadine. The five front desk staff would be funded by the city levy.

Candidates Terry Smith and Dee Vanderhoef both said they favor a local-option sales tax for public safety. A local-option tax is capped at 1 percent and requires public approval in the form of a ballot.

Another means by which candidates said police officers and firefighters could be paid includes reallocating monies from the city's $50 million general fund.

Smith suggested a plan which would add three firefighters per year for three years by reallocating $200,000 a year from the general fund.

"You're looking at a very small percentage of the budget," he said.

Vanderhoef, however, said the general fund is the city's "most limited fund available."

"I don't think there would be four votes on council" to fund firefighters with the general fund, she said.

Candidate Matt Hayek said that cutting from existing spending would be "a painful process." He suggested gaining funds for public safety through economic growth. He said attracting new businesses and helping current businesses expand could create growth.

Affordable abodes

The affordable housing situation in Iowa City is a "perpetual Catch-22," said Robert Saunders, the chairman of the Johnson County Planning and Zoning Commission. "The private builders all want to build those big houses."

Ninety-five percent of the housing market comes from the private sector, said Tracy Hightshoe, an associate planner for the Iowa City Housing and Community Development Commission.

Jeff Davidson, the director of the city's planning and community development, said Iowa City needs more housing for the workforce. "Right now, there are not a lot of good housing options" for the middle of the income spectrum such as police or teachers, he said.

Saunders said the scarcity of affordable housing in Iowa City comes from a lack of motivation for private developers to build smaller, affordable homes. Smaller homes mean smaller profits, he said.

Smith said affordable housing could be created by creating alternative housing options for students. He said that developments such as the 12-story apartment building proposed by Big Ten Rentals could move students away from affordable housing options around downtown. Students take away from available cheap housing, he said.

Currently, the city Planning and Zoning Commission is recommending the City Council not allow Big Ten Rentals to build. Davidson said the building seemed like it would be "an unsupervised dormitory" and that furthermore, the project would perpetuate a lack of parking in the area.

Wright said that land trusts, in which a house is built on land held by a nonprofit trust, could help create affordable housing. He said building on a trust avoids the costs of buying land and paying taxes on it.

Wright also said inclusionary zoning is a means to create affordable housing options. He said the city could make zoning regulations that would make developers sell a certain number of homes at or below the market average.

Hayek said the city should provide "density bonuses" for developers to build denser housing. "We're stuck on a house with a two-car garage," he said.

Vanderhoef said she saw the rehabilitation of older housing as means of creating affordable housing.

"You can't build your way out of housing need," she said.

Stimulate economic growth

Under the blanket term "economic development" lies a variety of candidate proposals for stimulating the Iowa City economy.

The Iowa City market "continues to be pretty strong," said Joe Raso, the president of the Iowa City Area Development Group. "Many companies have had very positive relationships with the city."

Davidson echoed Raso's sentiment. "We're not desperate for growth," he said.

Smith said that Iowa City needs to "cut through the red tape," explaining that he thinks Iowa City is considered an unfriendly business atmosphere, and that developers prefer other areas.

Wright pointed to historic preservation as means of economic growth. He said historic preservation is recognized nationally as a good source of economic development and noted that it can draw tourists.

Hayek said the city needs to recruit businesses and to help them come here by providing financial incentives such as tax breaks. Though, he added, "Iowa City is an attractive community."

Vanderhoef focused on enlarging the city's industrial park, Scott Six Industrial Park. She said the park needs "a huge addition with many large lots" to draw new companies to the area.

Consumer safety czarina should resign

About this time every year, the Consumer Products Safety Commission usually goes on morning news shows and press junkets to show, in absurdly imaginative pantomime reminiscent of MacGyver, how popular holiday gifts can start fires, choke children, and generally cause havoc. Considering the job the commission has been doing, it's no wonder its improv displays are, as of yet, nowhere to be seen. What consumers have seen recently are recalls on baby cribs, fake teeth used in Halloween costumes, and various children's toys, to name some of the more egregious offenders. These incidents display a serious lack of effectiveness on the part of the commission and lend necessity to legislation that might expand and strengthen the commission's abilities. For once, it would seem, increasing the power and funding of a government agency would be a good thing. But for once, the official in charge of the agency being offered expansion, Chairwoman Nancy Nord, is against such increases, leaving legislators scratching their heads in confusion and consumers scratching their heads in consideration of the safety of future purchases.

The Consumer Products Safety Commission Reform Act increases the maximum civil penalty for companies that violate safety standards from the current paltry $1.8 million to $100 million. The act allows for a significant increase in staff (the commission at present employs only one full-time toy tester), something that should be welcome for an agency that has seen a 15 percent cut in the last three years. It would also make safety violations known to the public almost immediately, similar to the National Transportation Safety Board's approach to vehicle ratings. Currently, the commission allows corporations to respond to specific issues before the public is notified. The bill would require independent testing labs to observe commission standards, which Nord also opposes. The biggest no-brainer in the act is a complete ban on toys made with lead, a measure that — presumably — everyone can agree on.

As if the lackluster on-the-job effort and hostility toward an increased capacity to perform her duties weren't enough, the Washington Post reported last week that Nord and her predecessor, Hal Stratton, accepted free travel from law firms and lobbyists representing commission-regulated products, as well as directly from the manufacturers themselves. All this while the administration says Nord is doing "a fine job." Sound familiar?

Is Nancy Nord scared of more accountability? This would be understandable; she seems to shun the responsibility already given to her. Is her hesitation in increasing fines for manufacturers a sign she worries more about the well-being of industry rather than that of the American public? Is she prepared to explain to the public what possible advantage the continued use of lead in toy manufacturing could have? No matter these questions, the answer to the many recent recalls would seem to be twofold: increasing the ability of the commission to perform its duties through the proposed reform act and calling for the resignation of Nancy Nord. Departmental incompetence can be remedied, individual ineptitude cannot.

Fifty-eight million Americans over the age of 18 suffer from mental illness. This number might seem surprising high, but it's true — more than a quarter of us struggle with our minds every day. Sadly, these fights often go unrecognized. They are individual, silent tragedies.

Though these disorders are common, a social stigma remains around them. We deem people "crazy" and are generally cautious of those exhibiting symptoms. We wash away the impacts of mental ailments with declarations of laziness, lack of will power, or other descriptors of poor character.

In fact, it is almost impossible to truly explain the experiences of mental illness to a mentally healthy person. The words we give to these afflictions — depression, bipolar, etc. — are not sufficient to describe the malaise these orders inflict. The author Joshua Wolf Shenk, in an essay titled "A Melancholy of Mine Own," has written, "... what we call 'depression,' like the mythical black bile, is a chimera. That it is cobbled together of so many different parts, causes, experiences, and affects as to render the word ineffectual and perhaps even noxious to a full, true narrative." One could certainly say the same thing about any other mental disorder — an outsider cannot ever possibly grasp their nature.

ANDREW SWIFT

Shenk's seminal work, Lincoln's Melancholy: How Depression Challenged a President and Fueled his Greatness, has given me greater understanding of the world of mental illness. Our present perceptions of mental health — that we should consistently strive to be happy — ignores fundamental parts of our psyche. Lincoln, Shenk writes, was able to rise to the challenge of the Civil War in part because of his battles with his own mind.

This may seem difficult to comprehend, given the societal belief that mental illness is something to overcome or defeat. In truth, there is no such victory. The fight is constant. Dealing with mental illness is not about linear progression toward health, it is about acceptance and utilization of unique conditions. It is lifelong — the proverbial light-at-the-end-of-the-tunnel is a farce.

As Shenk makes clear, words cannot possibly describe the indescribable feelings brought by mental illnesses. He writes, "When I spoke, it was with stumbles and stammers. Words — 'unhappy,' 'anxious,' 'lonely,' — seemed plainly inadequate, as did modifiers: 'all the time,' 'without relief.' Ordinary phrases such as 'I feel bad' or 'I am unhappy' seemed pallid. Evocative metaphors — 'My soul is like burnt skin, aching at any touch'; 'I have the emotional equivalent of a dislocated limb' — were garish. Though this language hinted at how bad I felt, it could not express what it felt like to be me."

Though treatment — most commonly medication and therapy — is available, there is no cure for any mental illness. Even in times of normalcy, victims know they are never far from an episode. Flu or a cold can be beat easily enough, but there is no similar remedy for depression, bipolar disorder, or their relatives.

Indeed, mental illnesses are a part of their hosts' characters. Shenk, whose own battles with mental illness have given him unique insight, writes, "Psychiatrists and medical texts treat depression as a discrete entity and assume it adheres to a particular course and treatment. Ads for drugs, herbal remedies, and nutritional supplements refer to depression as though it is a foreign invader, unrelated to the authentic self."

It is unlikely our views of mental illness will change in the near future; 21st century American society refuses to acknowledge complexities of any kind, let alone those stuck in the recesses of individual brains. This is shameful. While discussing our inclinations to use "phrases like 'running out of gas'" to describe mental illness, Shenk offers a damning critique of this mindset. When we funnel a sea of human experience into the linguistic equivalent of a laboratory beaker; when we discuss suffering in simple terms of broken and fixed, mad and sane, depressed and 'treated successfully'; we choke the long streams of breath needed to tell of a life in whole.

Shenk is an inspiration to me and anyone else who has ever been affected by mental illness. He was the first speaker suggestion I ever brought up as a University Lecture Committee member — he will speak in Macbride Hall Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. today. Mental illness is a process of discovery — and I know his thoughts will help me understand mine. ■

I question the choice of photos and captions to accompany the article that reported yet another assault on an Iowa City victim.

One photograph was of a woman in a short skirt taken on Oct. 6, the night of the Studio 54 party at Union Bar (whereas the assault being reported took place nearly a month later, on a woman who was wearing athletic shorts — or in other words, what was the relation of the photograph to the article, other than that it was of a woman in the evening?). The second photograph included as part of its caption "Despite 30 plus sexual assaults in the past year, women continue to walk alone after dark." Setting aside the fact that many of us have no choice in the matter (after all, beginning next week, "dark" starts at 5 p.m. or earlier), the choice of materials to run alongside the article takes the emphasis off the person assaulting women and puts the emphasis instead on women's behavior, implying that how women dress or whether they walk somewhere after dark causes them to be assaulted. While we can all make prudent choices, the DI's article only adds fuel to the fire for those who would blame the victims.

21-ordinance is the way of sanity

Let me ask you this: If we already limited bar access to those legally allowed to buy alcohol, would you vote to lower the age of entry in order to limit house parties and bolster downtown business? If not, please join me in supporting sane regulation of bars by voting yes for 21.

I'm not oblivious to the side effects of limiting bar access to those legally allowed to buy alcohol. Not every young person excluded from bars will seek out a house party, but some will. That means that we as a community will have to take the next step in our effort and find ways to manage that problem. Again, I have to be frank. Managing house parties will be much easier politically than managing underage drinking downtown has been. No one's going to donate tens of thousands of dollars to support house parties.

I'm also well aware that eliminating between 10,000 and 20,000 potential customers for downtown bars will reduce their profitability. It seems likely that downtown rents and property values will drop. Every economic change produces winners and losers. In this case, the losers are bar owners who rely on underage patrons and (at least temporarily) downtown commercial-property owners. The winners are entrepreneurs who will take advantage of lower costs to introduce new businesses downtown. In the 21 years I've lived in Iowa City, downtown has been reinvented in at least two ways. Don't tell me our community isn't creative enough to reinvent it again.

Writing in my role as a private citizen, I urge you to vote yes on the 21-ordinance and call five of your friends to make sure they vote, too.

Commentary

Bush shouldn't be surprised by Pakistan coup

On Nov. 2, Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice pleaded with Pakistan's president, Gen. Pervez Musharraf, not to declare a state of emergency. On Nov. 3, he declared a state of emergency, suspending the Constitution. Did he not believe that the Bush administration really would object, or did he not care?

If the former, his judgment would be understandable. From the start, the administration has exempted Pakistan's dictator (among many others) from President Bush's supposed commitment to democracy promotion, which is based on the idea that freedom offers the most attractive alternative to Islamist extremism. Mr. Musharraf took power in a coup in 1999, promising to bring "true" democracy to his Muslim state. That promise, like many others — to give up his uniform, for example — was discarded. But with every broken promise, the administration was tolerant, even supportive, always citing the general's claimed willingness to fight the extremists. Even on Nov. 3, as Rice's spokesman asserted that the United States was "deeply disturbed," there was no mention of suspending military cooperation or otherwise giving meaning to those words.

The irony is that Pakistan seems to be bearing witness to Bush's professed belief that autocracy breeds more extremism. The Taliban and Al Qaeda have strengthened in parts of the country, rebuilding safe havens they can use to plan attacks in Afghanistan, in Europe, and beyond. They have managed to bring their battle to urban Pakistan in ways they never did before. The institutions that could have provided some defense against extremism — Pakistan's two largest political parties, the judicial system — have been weakened by Musharraf in his desperation to cling to power. That was again his motive Nov. 3; he feared that the Supreme Court was about to rule that he was ineligible to serve another five-year term as president. His declaration, punctuated by arrests, the firing of the chief justice, and the seizure of television networks, will further weaken moderation and exacerbate Pakistan's crisis.

No one pretends that there are easy answers in Pakistan, where nuclear weapons and growing extremism could come together in the ultimate nightmare scenario. With varying degrees of intensity over the years, Musharraf has opposed Al Qaeda, and his troops have taken many casualties in the fight. But the state of emergency is basically an admission of failure. He has led his nation down a dead-end street. If Bush had listened to his own speeches, he might have predicted it.

ALBUM REVIEW Jay-Z American Gangster ★★★★ out of ★★★★★

Believe the hype or the rumors: Jay-Z's American Gangster is a concept album/unofficial soundtrack to Ridley Scott's film of the same name.

The parallels to the movie begin with the intro — numerous definitions of a gangster accompanied by sound clips from the film. From there it flows solidly through 14 tracks, with direct references to the movie (including descriptions of scenes), sounds of Frank Lucas (Denzel Washington) in the background, and soulful '70s music with each rhyme.

This works because Sean Carter and Frank Lucas are, for all intents and purposes, the same person. Jay-Z's raps are personal, regret-filled, and always self-righteous, which in this case is a good thing.

Critics bashed his first break from retirement (Kingdom Come) for being too soft or more about his wealth and fame than his struggle. With this album, he returns to his roots, filling in gaps about his father, money laundering, and how he feels about the success.

At the same time, he ties the CD and the film together. One track mirrors speeches given by Washington throughout the picture and the last track, "American Gangster," is definitely a closing-credits track — an appropriate ending to the album connecting Jay-Z and Frank Lucas.

'Better than Sex' dessert

from DI reporter Ann Colwell

So my mom claims that this dessert recipe is really named "Heath Bar Crunch," but I'm not buying it. Whether or not it lives up to its scrumptiously risqué title is for you to decide.

- 1 box chocolate-cake mix (and any ingredients needed to bake it)
- 3 oz. box of instant chocolate pudding
- 6 Heath bars
- CoolWhip

Bake a chocolate-cake box mix according to directions in a 9 x 13 pan. Let cool. Cut into 1 inch cubes and layer cubes (about 1/2 of the cake) in the bottom of a clear glass salad bowl. Prepare 1 (3 oz.) box of instant chocolate pudding and pour over cubed cake layer. Break up 6 Heath bars and pour over pudding layer. Add another layer of cubed chocolate cake. Cover with CoolWhip. Top with two Heath bars, also broken up. Refrigerate.

Some characters get movies written around them — from George Patton to Patch Adams, there's an understanding that whatever the plot, whoever the actor, these people need their stories told. Frank Lucas is just such a character.

Richie Roberts isn't. Yet, as Ridley Scott's American Gangster memorably explains, neither would make a great movie without the other. And a great movie it turned out to be.

Frank (Denzel Washington) is, as Winston Churchill once put it, is a riddle wrapped in a mystery inside an enigma, this time clad in a well-cut suit. He moves through the streets of Harlem as though he owns them — even before he uses his impressive business head to flood the streets with his "product." The use of "American" as an adjective in the film's title is no mistake — Lucas is a bona-fide example of our nation's dreams of success. It just so happens that his business is heroin.

This pesky little detail gets brought up over and over throughout Scott's film, lest the audience members get a little too charmed by Lucas. There are horrifying shots of dying junkies shooting up their feet, lying on filthy mattresses next to wailing children, and overdosing on Thanksgiving. Meanwhile, Lucas himself uses one of those nifty automated knives to serve turkey to his family in a mansion bought with drug money.

Roberts (Russell Crowe), on the other hand, is about as plain and sad as his own Thanksgiving meal: a tuna-fish sandwich on Wonder Bread. He's persecuted by his fellow New Jersey officers for being too honest. His ex-wife is moving his son across the country, and all the womanizing in the world can't make him feel better. What does eventually work is his hunch that something's amiss with this new, near-perfect heroin on the New York Streets. Roberts hunkers down and laboriously connects the dots toward Lucas, the whole film leading to the one explosive scene they share.

The pairing of Washington and Crowe, two of the best actors working today, is a major selling point for American Gangster. (I'm overlooking Virtuosity, as everyone seems to do out of courtesy.) Their dichotomy is fascinating — Washington's brutal charm versus Crowe's ragged persistence — and Scott allows their paths to intertwine slowly and precisely, making the final payoff that much better.

While ultimately Roberts' story can't quite measure up to his counterpart's (those tedious custody courtroom scenes don't help), you can't really blame him — who could honestly compete with a dude who lights people on fire, takes

Digging into Lincoln, depression

Joshua Wolf Shenk's lecture will explore one of the nation's most revered presidents through an uncommon scope: mental illness.

By Meryn Fluker
THE DAILY IOWAN

The tone of an interview is usually set by the topic at hand, but apparently that rule was never explained to Joshua Wolf Shenk. Despite the heavy subject matter of his latest book, Lincoln's Melancholy: How Depression Challenged a President and Fueled His Greatness, he made witty asides and even laughed during his interview with The Daily Iowan. He responded giddily when prompted about Harold and Kumar Go to White Castle, a movie featured under the "That Which Rocks" section of his website.

"There's only so much you can talk about melancholy and depression," Shenk said. "You need a break, and that movie is one thing that has given me a break over the years."

Tonight, he will speak about less jovial topic than Harold and Kumar's debauchery; Lincoln's Melancholy delves into

UI Lecture Committee Joshua Wolf Shenk

When: 7:30 p.m. today
Where: Macbride Auditorium

Abraham Lincoln's struggle with mental illness.

Melancholy and depression are two things Shenk is quite familiar with, not only that of President Abraham Lincoln, who was known to have suffered from depression throughout his life (though in his time "depression" was known as "melancholy"), but also because of Shenk's personal struggles with the illness.

"I was looking for something to focus on in my writing, and I was also suffering a lot [from depression]," he said. "I thought that if I could write about mental illness that it might give me some kind of outlet."

His proximity to many of the issues discussed in Lincoln's Melancholy made it almost impossible for him to exclude his feelings from the book.

"I really tried as much as possible to set myself aside," he said. "To some extent, I'm sure I identify with the material and had empathetic insights and understanding that grew out of my own suffering."

An essay arguing Lincoln was suicidal throughout many parts of his life led Shenk to begin the seven years of research that serve as a basis for Lincoln's Melancholy.

His book asserts that Lincoln's depression was integral to his success as president. His observations fall into three main categories: that Lincoln's depression made him "a crucible of sanity," instilled in him a sense of duty even though he felt his life was insignificant, and gave him "clarity about the reality of his situation."

Lincoln's life wasn't totally dark, and Shenk doesn't plan to have his lecture, sponsored by the UI Lecture Committee, focus only on the sadder sides of the president's life.

"I will also be telling several of my favorite jokes," the author said. "Lincoln was a big humorist, and it was one of his ways of dealing with his depression."

Lincoln's use of humor may also explain Shenk's appreciation of Harold and Kumar Go to White Castle.

"It's not like that movie is the most important movie of my life," he said. "It's one of these movies that's like slipping into a warm bath. It just is a great escape."

Group's lingua franca is buddy system

Two UI students look to create lasting relationships and networks among speakers of foreign languages.

Speak in foreign language
To find out more about a UI student group that networks among foreign-language speakers, watch Daily Iowan Television at dailyiowan.com.

By Jennifer Delgado
THE DAILY IOWAN

Two UI sophomores are looking to help students on campus make a deeper commitment to foreign languages outside of the classroom.

The Language Connection, a student organization that partners different level foreign-language speakers, is the brainchild of UI students Kristen Meylor and Chelsea Georges, the cofounders of the Language Connection, discuss plans for the group in an empty classroom at Phillips Hall on Oct. 31. Meylor, a French and Spanish major said, "I felt like I wasn't speaking enough foreign language outside of class," Meylor said. "I was also too intimidated to go to the other language-speaking groups on campus. I wanted to speak one-on-one with someone so I could get more of a personal benefit."

Meylor, a Spanish and French major, came up with the idea last spring and passed it to Georges, a friend and former Daum floor-mate. They immediately worked on a constitution and plans for the group. Their inspiration also comes from many of their engineering friends, who take classes together every semester and have a close network.

"With this group, we want language speakers and majors to sign up for classes together and create a language community on campus," said Georges, a Spanish and international-studies major. "Buddies also get the dual benefit of teaching and learning at the same time."

Both women said they have always taken an interest in foreign languages. At the UI, they have studied both Spanish and French.

Still in its infancy, the group is gaining members every day. As of last week, the women had paired more than 60 students.

"Our goal is for people to just get out there and practice," Meylor said. "And also have fun."

As a member of the group, buddies meet every week for a half an hour and only speak a foreign language of their choice. The meetings have no specific setting— buddies can jog, play Frisbee, or even grab coffee, as long as they engage in conversation.

Currently, the group only pairs Spanish and French speakers, but the two women are working with other UI foreign-language departments and hope to expand to all languages taught on the UI campus by next semester.

"Both women are very enthusiastic about foreign language and cultures," said Tom Lewis, the chairman of the UI Spanish department. "They see foreign language as exciting in both the academic and social world."

With the help of UI language departments, offices, and organizations, Georges and Meylor believe their group will be successful.

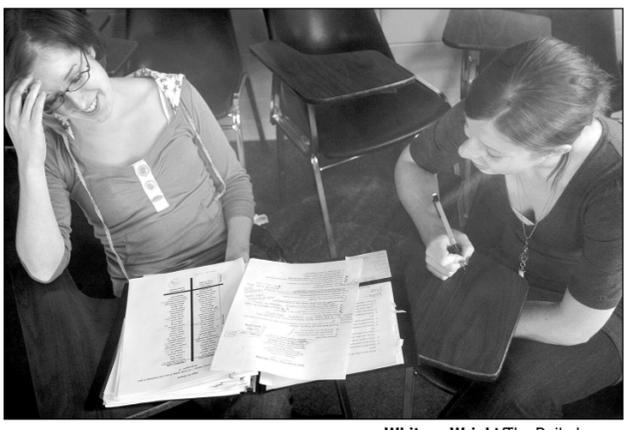

"It would be really cool to get the group to expand," Meylor said. "Sixty is a great start, but why not 200?"

Field hockey takes tourney

Sinking top-seeded Michigan, 4-1, on Sunday, coach Tracey Griesbaum and the Iowa field-hockey team are once again Big Ten Tournament champions.

By Ryan Young

THE DAILY IOWAN

They did it again.

After winning the title as a fifth-seed sleeper in 2006, Tracey Griesbaum and the third-seeded Iowa field-hockey team staged an encore performance Sunday in the Big Ten spotlight, repeating as tournament champions in Columbus, Ohio.

In the program's 30-year history, the Hawkeyes have never had the joy of wearing back-to-back conference crowns — a streak that ended with Iowa's 4-1 victory over Michigan.

But for Iowa, history has been known to happen in the Buckeye State. The Hawkeyes hoisted their first Big Ten Tournament trophy in 1994, when Ohio State hosted the event.

"The whole weekend was everyone doing her part," Griesbaum said over the phone from her hotel. "It didn't matter who stepped up, we just knew someone was going to step up. And they did."

Tony Freeman

Freeman out 4-6 weeks

Iowa men's basketball coach Todd Lickliter announced that Tony Freeman, the team's leading returning scorer and starting guard, will miss four to six weeks with a foot injury he suffered in last week's exhibition against Simpson.

The injury, which took Freeman out of the Hawkeyes' only preseason tune-up, is a fracture of the fifth metatarsal on his left foot and required surgery — a surgical screw was placed in Freeman's foot on Nov. 2. "It's unfortunate for Tony, and we all wish him a speedy recovery," Lickliter said in a release. "Injuries are a part of athletics and a part of life. Tony has worked extremely hard to be ready for the start of the season. Our staff and players will have to make the necessary adjustments until Tony returns for the majority of the season."

Freshman Jeff Peterson appears a likely short-term replacement for Freeman; the freshman played 31 minutes in Freeman's absence during the Hawkeyes' 56-30 win over Simpson. Iowa will open its regular season Friday night against Idaho State.

Soccer heads to Big Ten tourney

With a 1-0 win over Minnesota on Nov. 2, Iowa clinched a berth in the Big Ten Tournament for the first time since 2001.

The Hawkeyes were led by Stephanie Hyink, who recorded the team's only two shots. In the 33rd minute, freshman Amanda Martin sent a pass up the right sideline to a streaking Alex Seydel. The sophomore corralled it, fighting off a defender and sending a flawless cross to Hyink, who knocked it home for the winner.

The defense clamped down against an aggressive Gopher attack, fending off 18 Minnesota shots to keep the lead. Freshman goalkeeper Stephanie Swanson was a late addition to the lineup, replacing an injured Kali Feiereisel. Swanson notched three saves and a shutout in her first collegiate start.

"We didn't know Swanson was starting until about 3 o'clock [Nov. 2]," head coach Ron Rainey said. "She stepped in there and played beautifully."

The Hawkeyes will return to Minneapolis this week for their first conference tournament in six seasons. With the eighth seed, Iowa will face off against first-seed Penn State on Thursday. The Nittany Lions, ranked seventh nationally, edged Iowa, 1-0, last month in Iowa City.

Another week, another comeback

Iowa avenged Northwestern by rallying from a two-touchdown deficit for the second week in a row to win, 28-17, and climb back to .500.

THE DAILY IOWAN

EVANSTON, Ill. — It was only one week earlier, in the midst of yet another slow start and a forgettable first half against Michigan State, that head-shaking Hawkeye fans turned for the exits and a fed-up Kirk Ferentz admitted turning his thoughts toward spring drills.

Trailing by two touchdowns at Kinnick Stadium and appearing poised to plummet to their sixth loss in nine games, the Hawkeyes second-straight losing season seemed inevitable while a seventh-straight bowl appearance sounded impossible. But Ferentz's tirade at the end of the first half over a minute no-call marked the turning point in the team's comeback win over the Spartans.

Fast forward one week with another dismal opening half, and Ferentz's made-for-HBO halftime speech helped Iowa erase a once insurmountable 14-point deficit in a 28-17 win over Northwestern.

A slow start, then brilliant defensive play

After a brutal first quarter, the Iowa defense turned the tables, playing a vital role in the Hawkeyes' 28-17 victory at Northwestern.

THE DAILY IOWAN

EVANSTON, Ill. — When the 2007 season began, everyone knew the Hawkeyes' biggest strength was on the defensive side of the ball.

Once again, that strength proved to be a valuable asset for Iowa in its 28-17 victory over Northwestern.

At the start, it didn't seem as though it would be, however. The Hawkeyes' defense not only trailed 14-0, but it was on the field for more than 11 of the first 15 minutes for a total of 33 plays.

"14-0, our mindset is 'We're in a hole,'" senior cornerback Charles Godfrey said. "It's like our backs are against the wall, and we have to come out fighting if we want to win this game."

The defense began to hold its own as the first half wore on, and both the offense and special teams bailed them out in the final minutes of the half. The offense scored a touchdown that trimmed Northwestern's lead to 14-7, while the special teams managed to block a field goal on the final play.

"For us to be down 14-7 at halftime, that was a miracle," coach Kirk Ferentz said. "It really was, so to come up with a big play because we really hadn't done anything offensively, and certainly the blocked field goal was real big."

In the second half, the defense's ability to hold Northwestern to three points proved to be enormous. Senior linebacker Mike Klinkenborg, who played the game with a fractured hand and finished with nine tackles and a near-interception, said the difference was simply in execution.

"Our only job on defense is to get the ball back for the offense," he said. "There was no switch that we flipped or anything. We just kept playing consistently, and eventually, it tightened out on them."

COMMENTARY The tortoise

EVANSTON, Ill. — Almost every kid has heard of Aesop's fable "The Tortoise and the Hare."

You know, the one where the hare jumps out to a massive lead, then gets comfortable, only to find the tortoise come out of nowhere to win the race?

As I observed the Iowa Hawkeyes come from behind to win for the second-consecutive week, a combination of that with the old Bugs Bunny cartoons I watched as a kid immediately came to mind.

Once the gun went off, Northwestern shot out of the gates. It only took seven plays and two and a half minutes for the Wildcats to go 73 yards for a touchdown and an immediate 7-0 lead.

Meanwhile, the Iowa offense was moving about as slowly as a tortoise, only advancing 12 yards on nine plays in 3:45 during the entire first quarter. It would only get worse as the 'Cats struck again, and with a 14-0 lead, the lead appeared to be insurmountable for the Hawkeyes.

But like the hare, Northwestern started to get comfortable, and to Iowa's credit, the Hawkeyes made the proper adjustments. The comfort level quickly set in once the Wildcats missed a 49-yard field goal.

What made that miss significant was that even though the Hawkeyes didn't score on the ensuing drive, a time-out was called by Iowa just before the kick, right after the Wildcats had used a time-out themselves to think things over.

At that moment, the Wildcats learned Iowa would come to play.

Slowly but surely, the Hawkeyes began creeping their way back into the contest. On a critical third down and eight at the Northwestern 20, the Hawkeyes struck when Jake Christensen connected in the end zone with receiver

Patriots rally to nip Colts

By Dave Goldberg
ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — No running up the score this week. Against the Colts, Tom Brady was content to close out another victory for the New England Patriots by kneeling down three times.

In what was hyped as the biggest NFL regular-season game ever, the Patriots stayed on course for an unbeaten season as Brady threw two of his three touchdown passes in a four-minute span of the fourth quarter Sunday to overcome a 10-point deficit and beat Super Bowl champion Indianapolis, 24-20.

The win keeps the Patriots (9-0) on course for the NFL's first unbeaten season since Miami did it 1972 and gives them the first tiebreaker over Indianapolis (7-1) in the AFC playoffs.

"This is the first time we were in a ball game late," said Brady, whose team had never before trailed in the fourth quarter and had beaten its previous eight opponents by an average of 25 points a game.

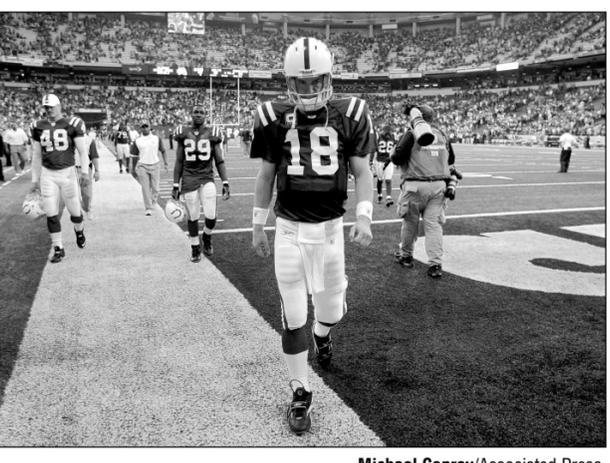

"There wasn't any loss of confidence or determination."

Added New England line-backer Junior Seau: "We were going against a hostile crowd, an undefeated team, we took our hats off to them. But we still played well enough to win."

New England, which had been scoring more than 41 points a game, had piled points on late in several games in which they were far ahead, including last week's 52-7 win over Washington, when they kept playing hard well into the fourth quarter.

In this contest, anticipated since the schedule came out last April, they had to work their hardest just to win against perhaps the only team in the NFL close to them.

"We had an opportunity to do a lot of things," said running back Joseph Addai, the Colts' best offensive player on this day with 112 yards rushing and a 73-yard score on a short pass from Peyton Manning. "We left some points squandered and got field goals when we should have gotten touchdowns, but that's the nature of the game. Those guys are good. We'll see them again."

New England trailed 20-10 after Manning, who threw for 225 yards and a touchdown, scored on a one-yard sneak with nine minutes and 42 seconds left in the game, and the crowd roaring.

But on a second-and-10 from the Patriots 42, Brady hit Randy Moss over the top for 55 yards to the Colts' three on a play in which Indy lost Bob Sanders, its best defensive back to injury. That set up a three-yard TD pass to Wes Welker.

Junior forward Caroline Blum was the Hawkeyes' hero in the semifinal, round-two showdown with second-seeded Michigan State.

Blum, who was named the tournament's MVP, recorded a pair of goals in the game against the Spartans, including the game winner that lifted Iowa, 3-2, over Michigan State and into the championship matchup.

Unmarked near the top of the Michigan State circle, the third-year attacker received a pass from junior Lauren Pfeiffer and swiftly slapped it into the Spartan cage two minutes into sudden-victory overtime.

Senior Adrienne Dybus also scored for the Hawkeyes, which attempted 10 shots and held Michigan State to three penalty corners during the contest.

"We had a very good game plan, and we had to follow it," Griesbaum said. "We weren't going to make it easy for them."

After avenging one of its two Big Ten regular-season losses, Iowa continued to retaliate by subduing top-slotted Michigan.

Sophomore midfielder Jess Werley shone for the Hawkeyes in the championship, netting two goals in the second half to secure Iowa's title victory.

Attempting to maintain a high-energy attack, the Wolverines substituted numerous times throughout the game. But Iowa was unaffected by the strategy, having prepared for it during their day off before the championship.

Still, the Wolverines took 11 shots and were awarded seven penalty corners, though none resulted in a goal.

In the first half, Iowa flirted with a shutout and went into the intermission up 2-0. Michigan didn't score until the 50th minute, after Wolverine forward Ashley Lenington sneaked a rebound past Hawkeye goalkeeper Lissa Munley.

"You're not going to go into a Big Ten championship game thinking that you're going to hold a team scoreless," Griesbaum said. "Our strong commitment to defense allowed us to have good scoring opportunities and good attack."

Offensively, Iowa attempted 12 shots from the field and earned four penalty corners.

Junior forward Katie Naughton scored first for the Hawkeyes during the 17th minute, and Pfeiffer managed the second goal off a converted corner shot.

Afterwards, Werley provided the insurance that lifted the weight off the Iowa shoulders.

"When it was 4-1, I started to feel a little better about things," Griesbaum said. "I told the women on the bench, with about 10 seconds, I said, 'You better sprint out there as fast as you can.'"

Hawks rally again

Ending a two-game losing streak to the Wildcats in remarkable fashion at Ryan Field, the Hawkeyes (5-5, 3-4) relied on senior leadership and three second-half interceptions to move within one win of being eligible for a bowl.

"It just says a lot about the way these coaches prepare us to play our best football in November — that's always the plan for us," said quarterback Jake Christensen, who finished 21-of-36 for 299 yards and a touchdown. "Whether we started the season off good or bad or indifferent, I mean obviously we lost four straight, but we've never given up, and our seniors have led us the entire way."

While Iowa stormed into the locker room with the momentum of Adrian Clayborn's blocked field goal on the final play of the half, Ferentz felt the stagnant first quarter warranted a blaring wake-up call midway through week 10.

"He didn't call anybody out, he was just yelling about how poorly we were playing," said senior tailback Damian Sims. "That's our MO — outworking people — and we were just letting them do what they wanted to do in the first half. We didn't do anything in the first half."

It didn't take long for Ferentz's message to translate on the field; senior tailback Albert Young's 16-yard touchdown scamper knotted the game at 14 on the opening possession of the second half.

Northwestern marched right back down the field and hit a 42-yard field goal to recapture the lead with seven minutes left in the third, but another deficit hardly shook the confidence of the Big Ten's comeback kings.

Not with nicked-up seniors Mike Klinkenborg (fractured hand) and Mike Humpal (sprained ankle) playing hurt, not with one of the nation's youngest offenses firing on all cylinders, and certainly not with 22 minutes remaining to avenge consecutive losses to the Wildcats.

Stamping the comeback in a season-defining fourth quarter, Iowa combined a pair of interceptions from defensive backs Bradley Fletcher and Charles Godfrey with a couple of red-zone touchdown runs by Sims — including the go-ahead score from two yards out with 7:44 left on the clock.

While the Hawkeyes front four put constant pressure on the conference's leading passer, C.J. Bachér, Christensen finally meshed with a corps of young receivers. Booed for a blatant overthrow to fullback Tom Busch earlier in the game, his completions of 53 yards to sophomore Trey Stross and 30 yards to Derrrell-Johnson Koulianos put Sims in position to seal the victory.

"The throw to Busch, I can't describe it," he said. "It was probably the worst play of my career, of my life since I've been playing football. But you have to move on, you can't dwell on the past."

"... I think things clicked for our whole offense like they haven't been all year in that second half. You know, run and pass — Albert got that big touchdown run, and Damian had a great run, too. We were throwing to set up the run after the touchdown, which is something that all great offenses do."

While Young moved into third all-time on the Iowa rushing list, the defense held Northwestern scoreless in the game's final 15 minutes. Closing the doors on their doubters and turning now toward Minnesota, the players know what's at stake in the last two weeks of the season.

"Obviously, we're disappointed that we've lost as many games as we have, but it's not over," Sims said. "Like I said a few weeks ago, everyone was kind of marking us off and taking the season as it's over, saying it's a rebuilding year."

"We've gotta keep fighting and win out."

Defense comes through

One example of the execution came in the third quarter. After accepting a holding penalty on a third down Northwestern failed to convert, a sack by redshirt freshman Christian Ballard the following play put the Wildcats out of field-goal range.

"The guys bailed me out on that one," Ferentz said. "You're rolling the dice that you can get off the field. I was just hoping to break even and we came out ahead, so that was lucky."

Then an avalanche of C.J. Bachér interceptions followed.

The first takeaway occurred late in the third quarter. Northwestern attempted a flea-flicker, only to have Bachér throw the ball into the hands of senior linebacker Mike Humpal, who also had 11 tackles.

"I saw it was a flea-flicker there, and [the receiver] wasn't really running aggressively," Humpal said. "I saw him turn around, so I just got some more depth, and just read the quarterback."

Humpal played the game on a sprained ankle that Ferentz originally thought would keep the Hawkeyes' leading tackler out of action entirely, and the coach said both his senior linebackers were examples of the leadership coming from the team's upper class.

"I thought [Humpal] had no chance to play today," Ferentz said. "He sprained his ankle Wednesday, and he's out there gutting it up. Klinkenborg's the same way."

"I can go right down the list, but it starts with our seniors, who are really doing a great job for us."

Once the Hawkeyes got the lead, both starting corners got in on the action. Junior Bradley Fletcher, who played for an injured Adam Shada and finished the game leading the Hawkeyes with 12 tackles, got the first of two-straight fourth-quarter interceptions. The other came from Godfrey, who now has five this season, and it was followed by a touchdown that put the game out of reach.

Heading into the Nov. 3 contest, the Hawkeyes led the Big Ten in turnover margin, and they were ranked 11th nationally in that category. With two games left, Iowa now has 20 takeaways while only surrendering the ball nine times.

"That's really been saving us," Ferentz said. "The guys have done a great job. The defense has done a good job with the takeaways, and for the most part, our ball security has been a little better offensively and on special teams."

QUOTED

“ [Coach Kirk Ferentz] didn't call anybody out, he was just yelling about how poorly we were playing. That's our MO — outworking people — and we were just letting them do what they wanted to do in the first half. We didn't do anything in the first half. ”

— Damian Sims on Ferentz's halftime speech

BY THE NUMBERS

The total points the Hawkeyes scored at Ryan Field: Iowa more than doubled its previous best road-scoring effort of 13 points scored, at Iowa State and Wisconsin.

Number of rushing touchdowns by Iowa running backs. Damian Sims had two and Albert Young had one. It was the second week in a row Iowa had a trio of rushing touchdowns after just three running scores in Iowa's previous eight games.

PRIME PLAYS

Trey Stross's 20-yard touchdown catch. The strike from Jake Christensen gave the Hawkeyes some life heading into the locker room down by seven points instead of 14.

Damian Sims' first touchdown. The two-yard run put Iowa in the lead 21-17 and the driver's seat for the first time all day. The score ultimately turned out to be the game-winner, though Sims would add a second score later to give the Hawkeyes some breathing room.

Iowa's final two interceptions. Cornerbacks Bradley Fletcher and Charles Godfrey each picked off C.J. Bachér passes between two touchdowns runs by Damian Sims. The turnovers kept the Wildcats from scoring drives and the Hawkeyes out of reach with their second and third interceptions of the game.

IOWA GAME BALL

JAKE CHRISTENSEN

Easily the sophomore's best road performance of the season, the southpaw missed on his first four attempts before finishing with a 21-of-36 for 299 yards, a stat line that included a touchdown and six completions for 20-plus yards. Two of those went for more than 30 yards and one more than 50.

NORTHWESTERN GAME BALL

TYRELL SUTTON

The running back rushed 23 times for 116 yards and a touchdown. Sutton also was the Wildcats' leading receiver with seven catches for 40 yards. He finished with a 5.2 yard average per touch.

THUMBS UP

Iowa freshmen — The class accounted for 191 yards of receiving, 69 return yards, 436 yards on 10 punts, three of which were downed inside the 20-yard line, 21 tackles, and three sacks.

THUMBS DOWN

Slow start — For the second-straight week, the Hawkeyes performed in reverse throughout most of the first half. Iowa fell behind 14-0 before getting its engine going. Iowa's first five drives ended with Ryan Donahue punts before two consecutive touchdown drives in the second and third quarters got the Hawkeyes offense in gear.

LOOK AHEAD

Iowa heads home for its final two contests of the season, taking on a 1-9 Minnesota team this weekend. The Golden Gophers, who lost to I-AA North Dakota State three weeks ago, have yet to win a Big Ten game, while the Hawkeyes have won three of their last four. Minnesota has held onto Floyd of Rosedale rivalry trophy since last season's 34-24 win in Minneapolis, the Hawkeyes' first loss in the series since 2000.

By Diane Hendrickson
THE DAILY IOWAN

For the first eight minutes of Iowa's 73-51 exhibition win over the University of Nebraska-Omaha, the Hawkeyes didn't allow a field goal. With five minutes left in the half, and leading by 28 — its biggest lead of the game — Iowa had allowed 10 points.

After stressing defense and rebounding during the off-season, coach Lisa Bluder, hoping the squad would bounce back from last year's 14-16 record, was refreshed to see a marked improvement on the defensive end of the court. Last season, Iowa ranked near the bottom of the conference in scoring defense, field-goal-percentage defense, steals, and blocked shots.

"I just was really happy with our defense because it was our prime thing that we really worked on," she said following the win Nov. 2. "I really liked the energy that we used on the defensive end."

Although Iowa jumped out to a large lead early, the Mavericks outscored Iowa 41-35 after Iowa switched to zone coverage.

"Obviously, our zone defense, we haven't had as much time to work on it, and so it wasn't as good," Bluder said. "We didn't box out as well as we did in our man-to-man."

"But going back to our man, which is mostly our bread and butter, I was very, very happy with that, but I wanted to spend some time working on the zone."

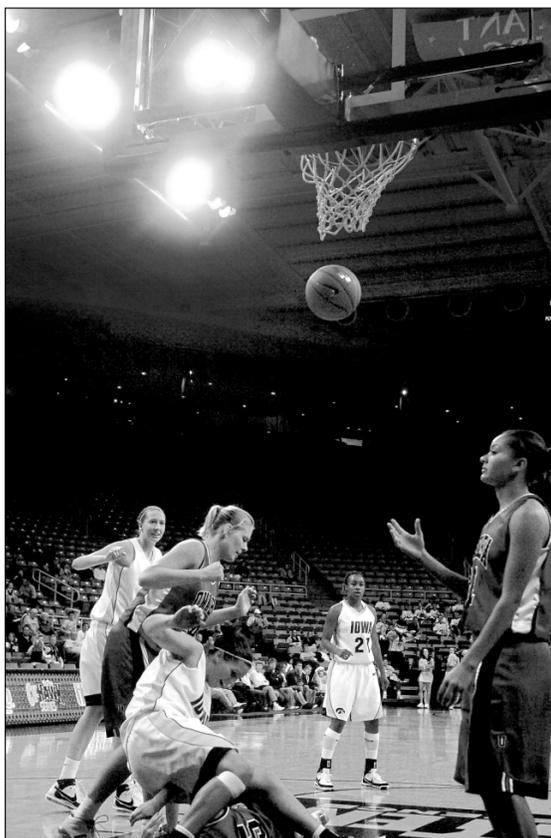

Offensively, Wendy Ausdemore led the Hawkeyes in scoring with 10 points, the only player in double-digits. Kristi Smith added nine, while Lindsey Nyenhuis and Johanna Solversen each scored eight. Every Iowa player contributed at least two points.

With one exhibition remaining before the Nov. 11 season-opener, Bluder's challenge is to find a lineup that works best.

"There's so many different pieces to this puzzle right now," she said. "And, you know, you want it to be that way. It's just a luxury we have not had. We're not had the ability to be able to experiment with different lineups, and tonight, we were able to do that."

"We were able to play a lot of different lineups ... and that's definitely what we want to get out of these exhibitions is who's going to play well together."

Hawkeye forward Wendy Ausdemore takes a fall after making a shot during Iowa's exhibition against Nebraska-Omaha on Nov. 2. Ausdemore led the Hawkeyes in scoring with 10 points in Iowa's 71-53 win at Carver-Hawkeye Arena. Iowa's next game is on Thursday against Missouri Western.

HAWKEYE SPORTS

Men's golf

The Iowa men's golf team will head south today for the final tournament of the fall season. The Wolverine Invitational in Howey-in-the-Hills, Fla., will feature a 54-hole format played over two days — 36-holes today and 18 Tuesday.

Seniors Dan Holterhaus and Todd Larson will be atop the scorecard for the Hawkeyes after stellar performances a little more than a week ago at the Landfall Tradition. Larson led the way last week with a three-under third-place finish, and Holterhaus closed out in an even-par fifth-place tie.

Head coach Mark Hankins said the team is trying to build a consistent pattern of preparation and confidence from the Landfall finish.

"They're gaining confidence in themselves, and I'm gaining confidence in them," Hankins said.

Volleyball

In an otherwise disappointing season, tonight's matchup against Michigan (18-7, 6-7) is a reminder of how good the Hawkeye volleyball team (9-15, 1-12) can be.

Iowa's previous outing against Michigan on Sept. 28 shines as one of the season's lone bright spots — the Hawkeyes overcame a 2-0 deficit to shock the then-No. 11 Wolverines. The win was the program's first over a ranked opponent since 2000.

Unfortunately for the Hawkeyes, the upset was its last win.

During Iowa's current season-high nine match losing streak, the squad has only scratched wins in two games, being swept in their last five.

Rowing

The Iowa rowing team concluded the fall season Sunday with a strong showing at the Cal-Sag Shootout race on the Calumet River in Blue Island, Ill.

In the morning, the Hawkeye varsity 8 boat finished sixth with a time of 16:11, putting it in the "B" final sprint race.

"They were aggressive and went after it," Iowa head coach Mandi Kowal said. "They did a great job."

In the "B" final, Iowa finished second to Notre Dame. The Hawkeyes, with a time of 7:01.65, narrowly beat Wisconsin (7:01.70) and Indiana (7:02.81).

"It was a really tight race," Kowal said. "In the head race, Indiana beat us, so coming back to beat them in the sprint was nice."

The second Iowa 8 struggled to a 22nd-place in the head race but bounced back with a time of 7:06.44 and second-place finish in the "E" final. The Iowa novice team, rowing for the only time this fall, had a strong showing to finish third, fourth, and ninth in the head-style race.

Women's swimming

The Iowa women's swimming team lost to Nebraska, 170-130, and Nevada-Reno, 158-142, in a triangular Nov. 3 in Lincoln, Neb.

All three teams competed at the same time, but the scoring format was configured to create two dual meets.

AquaHawk junior Alison Gschwend won the 200 backstroke and placed second in the 100 backstroke, and sophomore Julie deBruin won the 50 freestyle. The 400-freestyle relay team of Gschwend, Christine Kuczek, deBruin, and Kelsie Neubauer also took home first-place honors.

Also contributing for Iowa were junior Ashley Dell, who was second in the 1,000 and 500 freestyle, and sophomore diver Deidre Freeman, who picked up second place in the 1-meter diving.

Movie morals

- Big: If you wanna get a hot girlfriend, act like a 12-year-old.
- Gidget: Size doesn't matter.
- Mad Max: Max is mad.
- Dogma: God wrote "You Oughta Know."
- The Butterfly Effect: Sometimes, the only way to make the world a better place is to kill yourself.
- Die Hard 2: You can remake Die Hard in an airport.
- Under Siege: You can remake Die Hard on a submarine, too.

- My Cousin Vinny: Fuck. Shit. Hell. Damn. Fuck.
- Mad Max 2: Max is still pretty mad.

- The Blair Witch Project: Movies that really suck can make a lot of money if properly marketed.

- White Chicks: The Wayans Brothers are not funny.

- Wee Man: Yep, not funny.

- American Beauty: Naked cheerleaders make life worth living.

- 50 First Dates: Brain damage is hilarious!

- Mad Max Beyond Thunderdome: Max is still pretty mad, and now he's beyond Thunderdome.

horoscopes Monday, November 5, 2007

—by Eugenia Last

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Like it or not, you have to pay close attention to your work, your peers, and your competition today. Stay on top of what you do, and don't allow anyone to twist your words or make you look bad. Not everyone will play as fairly as you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You've got the world by the tail, so stop procrastinating, and start to put your plans into motion. Personally and professionally you can make a difference. Someone will make a change to accommodate you in the end.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You will be led astray by someone who pretends to have your best intentions in mind, so don't let your emotions blind you. Be clever; you will outsmart even your sneakiest opponent. Don't overreact.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Keep things mellow. If you let your emotions get the better of you, a heated discussion will take its toll. Bide your time, and let others make the mistakes. Make your home your haven.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Check out all sorts of real estate, investments, and interesting proposals. You are bound to come up with something to help you dig your way out of a mess, situation, or financial hole. You will need to reduce, revamp, or recycle.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You will have to go behind someone's back in order to get things done your way. Don't feel guilty — sometimes it's necessary. Nothing lasts forever, so stop hanging onto things that are holding you back.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Keep a tight lid on what you think and do. Someone is waiting to spread rumors if you give reason. Don't get angry if someone beats you to the punch. Stop being indecisive, and you will resolve that problem once and for all.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Take a leap of faith. It's time you took a chance. You have to put that need to make everything perfect aside and promote something you have done as is. It only makes good business sense.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Don't be fooled by sweet talk. You have to put emotions, love, and anything else that makes you loopy on the back burner so that you can keep a clear head. Make a decision that won't break you financially, physically, or mentally.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Take an unusual approach, and you will throw everyone off guard, giving you the edge. Money, love, intrigue, and travel are all up for grabs. Aggressive action may scare some, but you'll want the ones who don't run away on your team. Love is looking hot.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Use your head, and you will get ahead. Money is in the picture. This is a great day to size up your situation and prepare for the future. Think big, but don't go overboard when it comes to the real deal.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You may feel pulled in several different directions. Don't let anyone bully you into missing out on something you want to pursue. A chance to hook up with someone who interests you in many ways can be set up.
