Nurse shortage grows

An aging population and retiring work force are expected to worsen Iowa's nursing shortage in coming years.

By Carla Keppler
THE DAILY IOWAN

With an aging population increasing demand and a retiring work force lessening supply, Iowa's ongoing nursing shortage is expected to worsen in coming years.

The state's lack of nurses is driven by labor-market shifts that the Iowa Nurses Association said are unlikely to reverse.

The shortage occurs at a time when nationally, 78 million baby boomers are nearing retirement and experiencing health problems. Demands for health-care staff from the aging population coupled with a significant decline in health-care personnel will further the ongoing nursing crisis in Iowa, the nurses group said.

Virginia Wangerin recognized the severity of the crisis in her former role as Des Moines Area Community College director of nursing and as a member of the recently created Iowa Nursing Task Force.

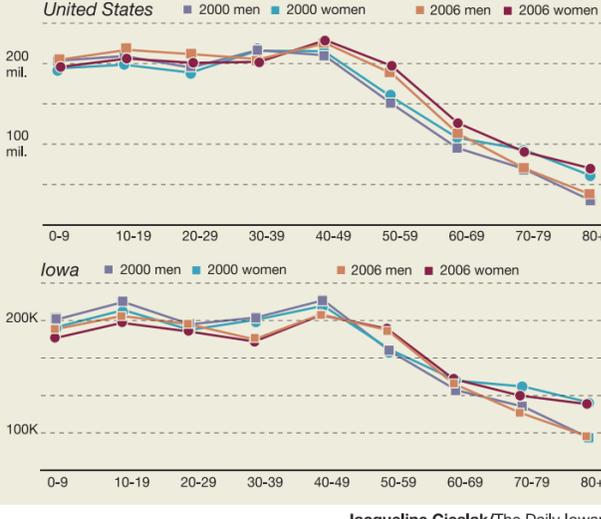

"The nursing workforce is aging rapidly," she said. "It's very clear by data that we have that there won't be an adequate number of nurses to take care of us."

Tonsils linked to frequent fevers

Surgically removing tonsils seemed to help some children with a 'mysterious' fever. One physician weighs in on possible risks.

By Zhi Xiong
THE DAILY IOWAN

Greg Licameli's infant daughter once suffered frequent fevers — mysterious fevers — for months.

They made the little girl lethargic, resisted antibiotics and ibuprofen, and returned predictably every few weeks. This dragged on for months, and the child saw experts in at least three departments in Children's Hospital Boston.

Then she got her tonsils removed. The fevers stopped.

Licameli, an assistant professor of otology and laryngology at Harvard Medical School, included her case among 26 other young patients in a recently published paper. Tonsillectomies seemed effective in curbing a relatively unknown disease, PFAPA syndrome, which is named for a set of symptoms, such as periodic fever, sore throat, and lymph-node inflammation.

Licameli's 27-patient study is the largest study to date about surgical outcomes of PFAPA. Twenty-six children had "complete resolution" of their fevers.

The pitch: "Why taking out tonsils works is unclear, but it works in almost every single kid," he said in a March 28 news release.

But one ear-nose-throat specialist urges parents not to be overzealous as Licameli's research hits the media. After all, it is a surgical procedure that involves anesthesia, possible bleeding and infections, and can be fatal in rare cases.

17 briefs back gay marriage in Iowa

The issue of same-sex marriage comes to the fore again.

By Olivia Moran
THE DAILY IOWAN

UI faculty members are among a large number of Iowa-based individuals and organizations who will file at least 17 briefs this week with the Iowa Supreme Court on behalf of six same-sex couples seeking marriage in Iowa.

Attorneys with the New York-based organization Lambda Legal — which supports the civil rights of lesbians, gays, bisexuals, and transgender people — opened the case in Polk County and are expecting a response by the end of May.

Lambda Legal originally filed a lawsuit with the 5th District Court in December 2005. On Aug. 30, 2007, District Court Judge Robert Hanson ruled that Iowa's Defense of Marriage Act, which doesn't recognize same-sex marriage, is unconstitutional.

Since then, Hanson has issued

a stay on the ruling. On Jan. 28, Alliance Defense Fund attorneys filed a friend-of-the-court brief with the Iowa Supreme Court, claiming Hanson was wrong and out of his jurisdiction in his decision to put the ruling on hold.

"It's ludicrous to suggest that he doesn't have the authority to rule," said Camilla Taylor, a Lambda Legal attorney handling the case.

ENERGY

Heat may not go on

A Winter Moratorium Law that ensures power for low-income residents ends today.

By Clara Hogan
THE DAILY IOWAN

April could mean some Iowans may get a lot chillier.

Starting Wednesday, energy providers can disconnect those who are behind in their heating bills.

Under Iowa's Winter Moratorium Law, utility companies can't shut down power from Nov. 1-April 1 for past-due accounts of those receiving assistance from the federal Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program. Although MidAmerican Energy, which serves Johnson County, issued 28,584 disconnection notices in February, the company is unsure of how many residences will lose service on Wednesday.

The energy-assistance program aims to help low-income Iowa residents by awarding them an average of $385 a month for utility costs. That number is up from last year's $300 a month.

New provost a giver

The UI receives five new scholarships, courtesy of Wallace and Barbara Loh.

By Melanie Kucera
THE DAILY IOWAN

The new UI provost comes bearing gifts.

Less than a week after Wallace Loh was named the new UI provost and executive vice president, he has already shown his generous side.

Loh announced Monday that he and wife Barbara Loh have committed to donating five four-year full-tuition scholarships to the UI.

"We hope that this will be the first installment of a way of giving back to Iowa," Loh said in a press conference at the UI Monday morning.

The scholarships have no name, but Loh said they will be added to the provost scholarships offered through the Provost's Office.

Loh also said that few restrictions apply in order for a student to be eligible to receive one.

"There are no limitations other than the fact that they be Iowa residents, and it is on the basis of need," he said.

Full-time tuition for Iowa residents in the fall 2008 semester is $3,272, according to the Registrar's Office.

UI President Sally Mason was thrilled by Loh and his wife's generous donation.

"It's a huge gift, a wonderful gift," she said.

Mason said she was surprised by such a generous contribution from a new person.

"It's basically him demonstrating not only his love for Iowa but his commitment to affordability and accessibility — the way we have been talking," Mason said.

Loh

Loh was appointed to his new position on March 26 by Mason, and he will be on campus through Saturday. For the remainder of his visit, he said, he will meet with the various UI deans individually in addition to faculty, staff, and students.

Loh is the dean of arts and sciences and professor of public service and psychology at Seattle University.

Several dozen people attended a Community Conversation on Underage Drinking on Monday evening at the Iowa City Public Library. The forum discussed methods of combating and preventing teen drinking.

Meeting focuses on teen drinking

Iowa City community shifts focus on underage drinking away from the college campus.

By Lauren Sieben
THE DAILY IOWAN

The average boy first drinks at 11, and a girl's first sip happens at around 13, according to the National Council on Alcoholism and Drug Dependence.

This data, along with the Surgeon General's Call to Action to Prevent and Reduce Underage Drinking, served as the basis for a community conversation on underage drinking at the Iowa City Public Library Monday night. Local substance-abuse center MECCA funded the event with a grant from the Iowa Department of Public Health.

The surgeon general's report said alcohol is the most widely abused substance by America's youth, and the peak years for alcohol initiation are seventh and eighth grades.

"This is really looking at underage drinking from all perspectives," said Amy Fletcher, a UI fitness education specialist. "Recently, we've talked a lot about college-age drinking, but this is helping the community understand that it's not just a college-age issue."

Fletcher and other community leaders, including Johnson County Sheriff Lonny Pulkrabek, United Action for Youth Director Jim Swaim, and Health Iowa Associate Director Sarah Hansen served as small-group discussion leaders.

MECCA plans to use input from the meeting in its application for the Sober Truth on Preventing Underage Drinking Act

Grant, which provides money for communities to implement and expand upon programs to decrease underage drinking and educate people about the problem.

Community participants rated the underage-drinking problem in Iowa City on a scale from one to 10, one being least severe. UI graduate student Emily Blaedel, who completed her undergraduate degree at Iowa State University, gave the community a nine.

"Even the difference between ISU and Iowa is a big difference," she said. "Just the crimes that have been taking place, it's scary. And as a future parent, it's scary."

UI graduate student Sarah Davis said that although she did not grow up in Iowa City, she noticed the prevalence of underage drinking in the community.

"From the people I know who have grown up in Iowa City, [alcohol use] is blown so out of proportion with university students," she said. "People who grew up in Iowa City don't view alcohol the same way as students in other communities."

Suggestions for possible methods to decrease underage drinking included more expansive elementary-school programming, programs to reinforce accountability among parents, using Facebook to promote non-drinking messages, expanding alcohol education at the high-school level, and encouraging bars to promote events that don't necessarily involve drinking.

Some, including Davis, acknowledged that pushing for change in local businesses may prove challenging.

"There are hidden politics in how businesses are able to afford downtown rent," Davis said. "Businesses aren't going to do anything to change the way they operate without financial incentive."

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services will provide $3.93 million for drinking-prevention grants. Recipients will receive up to $50,000 a year and may submit proposals for up to three additional budget years.

Council touches on fees, after hours

The Iowa City City Council discussed housing inspection fees and the possibility of problems with an after-hours club.

By Kelli Shaffner
THE DAILY IOWAN

Although rental-property owners may see an increase in the number of inspections in upcoming years, their probability of seeing an increase in inspection fees is not high, Monday night's Iowa City City Council discussion demonstrated.

Councilors agreed changing the rate of inspections from every three years to every two would allow them to generate an increase in income, but adding fees would be too large of a burden.

"Rents are high in Iowa City anyway," Councilor Mike O'Donnell said. "Anything we put on the landlords is passed on to the renter."

He noted that every councilor has talked about how they wanted affordable housing in the city.

Mayor Regenia Bailey said that although the council's general fund is running low, it is not the right time to look for this money in fees with the current state of the economy.

Although Councilor Connie Champion said the boost would be something she would want to look into in six months, the council would not see the effects of these changes until fiscal 2011.

The councilors also discussed some of their concerns about the possibility of an after-hours club in Iowa City.

The council considered the idea of prohibiting consumption of alcohol in the club but decided that may not be realistic because the reason to have an after-hours club is to "get more intoxicated," Champion said.

If opened, the club would allow patrons to bring their own beer or wine coolers, but no liquor.

"And we all know you can't get drunk off beer," O'Donnell said, then later added: "I think the only way you should do it is if the bottle you bring in is no stronger than milk."

Councilor Amy Correia said her biggest problem with having a club downtown was that because the club would not have an age limit — because it wouldn't sell alcohol — high-schoolers would be able to enter.

And the question on who is the responsible party concerns Bailey, especially because an incapacitated person would have no place to go.

"The one difference when going to an after party at someone's house is if you become so intoxicated and can't get yourself home, you can stay," Correia said. "You can't stay in an after-hours club."

The easiest way to address all the concerns — if the after-hours club opened — would be to make an all-around nuisance law, City Attorney Eleanor Dilkes said.

Some to lose heat

"Disconnection is the last thing we want to do," said Allan Urlis, the MidAmerican director of media relations. "We work closely with customers to come up with payment arrangements."

Only those with the worst account history and the most money due will be disconnected Wednesday, he said. From there, MidAmerican will continue to cut power from residences based on amount of money owed and the residents' attempt to work with the company.

The majority, if not all, of the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program participants fail to pay their bills over the winter and are therefore subject to disconnection come April 2, said Jason Fisher, the assisted-energy's program manager for the Hawkeye Area Community Action Program, which oversees Johnson County and five other counties.

Because power is ensured during the winter, some people put off paying bills until it's too late, he said, noting that the increased cost of heating also hinders on-time payments.

"These people don't have extra cash lying around for them to use on heating," he said. "It's hard to make due, which is why the law is in place."

More people needed assistance paying heating bills this winter compared with last, and more people are behind on their payments, Fisher said.

More than 76,000 Iowa households faced disconnection at winter's end, a 5 percent increase over last year — around a quarter of them were from Johnson County. There were 218,360 past-due accounts across the state in February, a 6.29 percent increase over February 2007, according to the Iowa Utilities Board's website.

Those who are subject to disconnection should contact their energy supplier to work with it on payments, Urlis said.

"We are much more lenient to those who make a good effort to work with us," he said.

Budgeting help is provided at the program's offices, and a class on energy conservation exists in each county.

Around 800 to 1,000 people participate in the class each year, which teaches how to save money by saving energy. An energy kit is given out to the class, which includes compact fluorescent light bulbs and a high-efficiency shower head.

Applications for assistance during the next year will be accepted until April 15, Fisher said.

FIRST IN A FOUR-PART SERIES NURSING DEMOGRAPHICS

Shortage coming

Phoebe Webb/The Daily Iowan

Janet Leet concentrates on paperwork on Monday at Mercy Hospital in Iowa City. Mercy Hospital is expected to have a nursing shortage in the future.

"There's no doubt whether we're going to have a shortage, and that it will have an effect on quality of care. What concerns me is that we continue to gather data and validate concerns, yet we've failed to follow through and implement solutions."

— Virginia Wangerin, member of the Iowa Nursing Task Force

And while Iowa's nurse force declines, the state's population is expected to increase.

The U.S. Census Bureau estimated Iowa's population in 2006 at 2,982,085 with a median age of 37.8 years. The estimated national median age was 36.4 years.

Iowa has one of the oldest populations in the nation.

The age of nurses in the state reflects that trend.

Age of registered nurses in Iowa was estimated in 2006 by the Iowa Department of Public Health to average 46.8 years.

As the decade comes to a close, the number of Iowans over the age of 65 is expected to increase by 7.5 percent to approximately 462,000 people.

This aged population directly affects the number of nurses available for employment.

"Definitely, as we get older, we have more and more health issues that hit us," said Cathy Abrams, vice president of nursing at Iowa City's Mercy Hospital.

Abrams witnesses aging of the field at Mercy, where the average age of nurses is 44.6 years.

Though not currently undergoing a severe shortage, Abrams said, she expects a scarcity of nurses to hit Mercy in the future.

The state government projects an 11-percent — 3,400 nurses — shortfall for 2010.

Lorinda Inman, the executive director of the Iowa Board of Nursing, said that if current trend continues, the shortfall will reach 27 percent by 2020, leaving the state 9,100 caretakers short.

That number is nearly one-fourth of the state's now-active staff.

"There's no doubt whether we're going to have a shortage, and that it will have an effect on quality of care," Wangerin said. "What concerns me is that we continue to gather data and validate concerns, yet we've failed to follow through and implement solutions."

While the majority of nursing associations and government groups focus on recruitment as a solution, others suggest focusing on long-term efforts.

Wangerin characterized recruitment as a "Band-Aid fix."

"The short-term fix is to bring nurses in," she said, "But in the meantime, we need to make some significant fixes in our currently existing system."

Iowa nurses suggest increasing wages, offering tax credits, and student-loan forgiveness for those entering the occupation as possible solutions to the issue.

Abrams agreed, and said, "One of the main things in practice is that you have to focus on retention more than recruit. As employers, we need to look at how we do our work and adjust our mindset as we see less and less resource."

17 file on gay marriage

Taylor said the organization is asking the court to exercise its "constitutionally mandated role" and consider the claims brought by the six couples.

In a case statement, Taylor, Lambda Legal attorney Kenneth Upton, and Dennis Johnson of the Dorsey and Whitney law firm in Des Moines wrote that all six same-sex couples in "loving, long-term relationships" were once denied a marriage license by Polk County. The couples come from Cedar Rapids, Iowa City, Urbandale, Sioux City, Decorah, and Council Bluffs.

Dianne McBrien, a clinical associate professor of medical services at the UI and expert witness in the case, said excluding same-sex couples from legal marriage is not only discriminatory to the couple, but to their children as well.

McBrien said children of a same-sex couple are more limited in health-care options and have less-involved parents during emergency situations due to legal issues.

"Having society legally recognize their parents' relationship is likely to be beneficial to these kids," she said.

Kevin Mumford, a UI associate professor of history, said in a press release that providing same-sex couples with access to marriage "will be another proud moment in Iowa history," and UI law Professor Angela Onwuachi Willig said Iowa has "long been a leader in protecting rights and extending equality."

Taylor said she thinks the majority of the state's residents will eventually support same-sex marriage, although total approval will take some time.

"It will take advocacy on many different levels," she said. "[But] with or without this case, we see huge advances as far as acceptance."

Tonsils, fevers may be linked

"This fever syndrome — you don't want to just pile into it," said Kevin Carpenter, an otolaryngology specialist with Physicians' Clinic of Iowa.

"I would hope the surgeon would try to weigh out the risks and benefits," he said.

Tonsils are lumps of lymphatic tissue on either side of the throat. They are normally helpful as part of the body's infection-fighting immune system, but they can become swollen or covered with sores when they get infected: a painful case of tonsillitis.

Carpenter, who performs around 12 tonsillectomies each week, said children who suffer five such infections each year or three annual cases for several years in a row are usual candidates for tonsil removal.

"I'm usually on the back burner," he said. "As far as I get involved, if their ears are clear and tonsils are not an issue, I say it's not worth me doing a procedure."

Licameli's patients had seemingly normal tonsils, according to the news release.

At the UI Hospitals and Clinics, a tonsillectomy costs $5,000 without insurance, according to the business office. Consumer-healthratings.com said the procedure was $3,800, based on an average from 100 procedures done in U.S. hospitals in 2003.

"That said, the economic impact of frequent primary-care and ER visits, lost time at work for the parents, lost time at school for the children, and the significant quality-of-life issues justifies an intervention, which has a very high success rate," Licameli wrote in an e-mail.

Nonetheless, he also gave a nod to common advice that children may outgrow their fevers by the time they are 7 or 8 years old.

Holding hope for Kenya

A UI professor discusses peace in Kenya on Monday afternoon.

By Lauren Skiba
THE DAILY IOWAN

Peter Klopfenstein/The Daily Iowan

UI history Professor James Giblin gives a lecture for International Mondays titled "The Crisis in Kenya: A Historical Perspective" on Monday. Giblin outlined how the sociopolitical history of Kenya influenced the recent violence in the country.

Though Iowa City residents are an ocean and a continent away from the conflict in Kenya, more than 60 people crowded into a lecture Monday afternoon to listen to "A Crisis in Kenya."
UI history Professor James Giblin didn't claim to be an expert on Kenya — he has spent more time in neighboring Tanzania — but he did know about the political unrest following the last election in late December.
"I believe that the roots of violence lies between the political parties," he said.
Kenya's government has two major parties — the Party of National Unity and the Orange Democratic Movement. Kenyan President Mwai Kibaki, a Party of National Unity member, was up for reelection against the Raila Odinga of the Orange Democratic Movement in the December election.
But Giblin said there was an upset when, at the last minute, Odinga lost the election. Many people now say there is "more than just a suspicion" that the election was rigged in favor of Kibaki.
"This is what people are fighting about," Giblin said. "To them, it is the ultimate betrayal ... to see [Kibaki's] refusal to abide by the voices of the people."
Since then, he said, riots broke out in central and western Kenya. He said the riots can be split up between two parts — the "unrestrained firing of police in residential areas" and the conflict among different ethnic groups.

These groups are split up into regions of Kenya: Odinga's group lives in the poorest part of the country, in the west, and Kibaki's followers, who are wealthier on average, largely reside in central Kenya.
So far, 1,000 people have died in Kenya and between 350,000 and 500,000 people have been displaced from their homes.
"I have concern for the people of Africa, particularly in Kenya," said Iowa Foreign Relations Committee member Arnold Lindaman. "There is so much potential."

And there is, says Giblin. On Feb. 28, Kibaki and Odinga signed a power-sharing deal, with Kibaki retaining the presidency and Odinga taking the newly created post of prime minister.
Giblin noted three factors afflicting Kenya: poverty, unemployment, and inequality within the population.
"The notion that Kenya is so prosperous is exaggerated," he said.
In 2001, 40 percent of the population was unemployed, and many people had jobs that came with no benefits. Kenya is the fifth most socially and economically unequal nation in Africa and the 10th most in the world. The richest 20 percent of the population makes 50 percent of the income.
"Some are tootling around in the Mercedes, and others literally cannot put a roof over their heads," Giblin said.
But the government is trying to address these problems, Giblin said. They take politics seriously.
"I hope that they continue negotiations of power sharing," he said. "I hope the two parties work together to go back to job implementing and promoting economy and poverty."
UI graduate student Sunday Goshit said he came to hear Giblin's perspective on the issue.
"I'm from Nigeria, and we share a lot of similarities politically with Kenya," he said.
And though Giblin notes that Kenyans must resolve their differences, he said there is still hope for peace in the nation.

Waterfront Hy-Vee hit with another suspension

Iowa City's Waterfront Hy-Vee, 1720 Waterfront Drive, received its second liquor-license suspension of the year on March 24.
This is the store's third offense since July 2006.
The 60-day suspension and $1,500 fine resulted from a Jan. 17 incident when an employee sold alcohol to a minor, said Iowa Alcoholic Beverages Division administrator Lynn Walding.

A similar event prompted a 30-day license suspension and $1,500 fine from Jan. 29 to Feb. 28.
A July 21, 2006, incident resulted in a $500 fine.
Waterfront Hy-Vee has faced 90 days suspension and paid $3,500 in fines over the past three years, Walding said.
If a fourth violation occurs within this same three-year period, Walding said, the store will face revocation of its liquor-selling privileges indefinitely.

Waterfront "is going to have to be squeaky clean" until July 2009 if it plans to keep selling alcohol, he said.
Walding suggested store officials provide training to employees to lessen the likelihood of future problems.
"They might want to look into how they service the sale [of alcohol] to narrow down sale in their retail department," he said.
This, he said, is as simple as "taking a little time when making sales."

Mason on alert, rating

Q&A with MASON

By Ashton Shurson
THE DAILY IOWAN

DI: Last week, the Hawk Alert system received criticism for the messages sent out. What are your thoughts on the program and how do you hope to see it improve?

UI President Sally Mason: We're working on improving it. If nothing else, let's put the tragedy of last week aside because that was truly horrific. What happened in Iowa City last week is something that no community ever wants to see happen. Did we respond correctly? Was the Hawk Alert the right thing to do? I believe it was the right thing to do. I believe it gave us an opportunity to see how the system would work in a situation in which we could learn. And we are learning. We certainly learned that if you are going to put out a message, it's got to be much more explicit. We have to better understand how that system can work for us in situations in which we're probably going to be in greater need to respond faster. It raised questions for us that we're just now beginning to answer, and I think that's a good thing.

DI: Are you a fan of the rankings system as in the U.S. News & World Report, or do you just ignore them?

Mason: Whether we like rankings or not, they are with us — they are here. If we say we are going to ignore them, I think we are probably sticking our heads in the sand like the ostrich does when it doesn't want to confront something that maybe it doesn't want to see. Human nature is such that we are going to pay attention to these things. We may not like it, we may not agree with the methodology that is used to create rankings. But by the same token, it does give us a sense in some instances in how well we do compare with some of our peers out there. With last week's U.S. News & World Report graduate rankings, I was absolutely thrilled to see the large number of programs at the University of Iowa among public universities rank in the top 10 — five No. 1 rankings, that's remarkable.

Mason

DI: Are there any goals you have about having a more sustainable campus?

Mason: I think that what we're going to be working hard to do is have a much more coordinated, straightforward approach to the whole issue of sustainability. We've got a lot of great things going on in this campus — everything from using oat hulls in our coal-fired boiler instead of coal for power. There are a lot of things we can do to make this a more energy efficient and a more sustainable campus going forward. The building we'll do in the future, we'll pay much more attention to our efficiencies in sustainability issues. We have to be good stewards of our environment, right along with being good stewards of all the resources all the people put in our hands and trust us with. It's all part of the same mission.

DI: Student debt seems to be a concern among Iowans and even Regent David Miles. Are there ways we could improve this?

Mason: There are a number of things we're actively engaged in doing. Increasing financial aid has always been a priority, and there are lots of ways you can do that. We can provide more scholarship opportunities, which means I've got to get out there and raise more money, which is fine. The debt load for our students at the University of Iowa is lower than any place else in the state. On a national average, we're right about that average.

Study plays down 'fit'

A recent study suggests there is not a relationship between how 'fit' students are for a university and how well they perform.

By Briana Byrd
THE DAILY IOWAN

If you're a high-school senior, don't worry so much about which college fits you best — your academic performance will likely be the same wherever you chose to go, a recent study suggests.

The College Board studied different ways in which college performance can be predicted other than through high-school GPA and test scores, according to an article printed in The Chronicle of Higher Education. The researchers suggested that colleges no longer assume students will do poorly if they attend a school that may not be "fit" for them. This is because the perceptions of high-school students on what colleges are right for them don't have a bearing with how well they perform.

"We recommend coming to campus to see for themselves," said Michael Barron, the UI assistant provost for enrollment services and director of Admissions. "When my two children were looking at schools, when they visited and saw how some of their characteristics played out, they re-evaluated some of their priorities as they gained more experience in seeing places."

In addition to the study, a paper by College Board researcher Krista Madden reported that it didn't matter whether students felt they would be happier at specific schools — the graduation rates didn't change.

Eric Peterson, a guidance counselor at City High, said high-school students are advised to consider different aspects, including possible majors, college selectivity, location, size, cost, whether the school is state or private, extracurricular activities the school offers, and the surrounding community. Although he said that no college meets every criteria, as counselors, they encourage the students to visit different campuses so they can "experience the campus and make judgments as to how it meets their criteria."

Adam Segal, an English major and freshman at the UI, said that when he decided on a college to attend, some of the additional characteristics of the school didn't come into play.

"Coming into the University of Iowa, I wasn't really concerned about whether it fit me," he said. "I just assumed I'd make friends. I'm from Milwaukee, and I knew there'd be differences. I assumed that where there's a good English program, there are people like me."

Peter Klopfenstein/The Daily Iowan
UI junior and campus tour guide Kelli Russell shows prospective students around the UI campus on Monday. A recent study by the College Board recently found that students who enroll at colleges they thought would be a good fit for them are no more likely to graduate than students who thought they'd be happier at a different school.

Choosing a college or university

Some things to consider:

- Public or private
- Two years or four years
- Single sex or coed
- Small, medium, or large
- Location
- Academic offerings
- Majors
- Faculty
- Residential and social life
- Athletics and recreational sports
- Extracurricular activities
- Diversity of students
- Religious affiliation that help to determine whether a student will attend a certain school, including social aspects, Barron said.

"All these things come into play, filling in the gaps to create a composite picture of each school to look at what's best for them across all of these characteristics," he said.

April fool

Apparently, it's always 3 a.m. for Hillary Rodham Clinton, and she's waiting for a phone call.

(Well, some political observers would say it's later than that for her campaign, but it might be a tad early to write her political obit just yet. I tend to see Rodham Clinton the way I see the New York Yankees — no matter how many times people write them off, they they are, always gaining on the Red Sox.)

The 3 a.m. phone-call thing has become one of the centerpieces of Rodham Clinton's nomination run, if, indeed, her campaign can be said to have such things. It started, you'll probably remember if you managed to look up for a moment from the disaster that is your NCAA Tournament brackets, as a national-security thing — if the red phone rings at 3 a.m., who will answer it? Was the theme of a Rodham Clinton ad.

BEAU ELLIOT

The answer to that question is, of course, some national-security duty officer answers the phone, then decides whether to wake up the president. (Some presidents, it appears, are easier to wake up than others.) The notion that the president — any president — would be sitting up at 3 in the morning, sipping coffee and waiting for the red phone to ring, is as ludicrous as an administration sending the first lady into a free fire zone where she would have to duck sniper fire.

Oh, wait. The Rodham Clinton people apparently decided the 3 a.m. phone call was so successful that they would extend it to financial crises. You know, those typical U.S. financial crises that occur at 3 in the morning. So many of them do. (Well, OK, I suppose some financial crises could happen at 3 a.m., but I suspect most of them would involve drug deals gone bad or convenience-store robberies — not exactly wake-up-the-president sorts of things.)

It's hard to figure why Rodham Clinton is thrashing around with these imaginary 3 a.m. red-phone calls, although it's probably more enjoyable for her than looking at real-life delegate numbers. (Last I heard, for instance, even though she won the Texas primary, she's trailing Barack Obama in the number of Texas delegates won. It's been that kind of political year.)

And one can make a pretty good argument that the 3 a.m. red-phone call she should have received would have been the one warning her not to try to peddle the sniper-fire-in-Bosnia story.

I mean, the whole thing sounded like an April Fools' joke: the corkscrew landing of the airplane, the sniper fire, the dash across the tarmac with only the protection of Sinbad the comedian. (Well, OK, the Secret Service was there, too. I assume. I admit, a bit of the spirit of April Fools' crept in there. The last time I wrote an April Fools' column, the DI publisher received a very angry phone call about it from the head of the state Department of Public Safety. You'd think I'd learn.)

Even when Rodham Clinton first trotted out the sniper-fire story, in January, as I remember, sometime around the New Hampshire primary (though I confess that I'm not certain; most of my attention recently has been on the Superfund toxic site that is my NCAA brackets), reporters questioned the veracity of the story. For one thing, when Rodham Clinton took that trip, March 1996, the war in Bosnia was over.

For another, she was accompanied by a comedian. (Who, as Rodham Clinton's luck would have it, reported that the only red-phone moment was where to eat. I wonder if the first lady made Sinbad sample the food first.)

But she kept telling and retelling the sniper story, long after it was so obviously untrue. So long after, actually, that she has become something of a national joke.

And it's awfully hard to run for president if most of the people are laughing at you.

I mean, where else did she come under sniper fire? Tajikistan? Burma? Nigeria? Detroit? The Moon?

Monday was the 40th anniversary of LBJ's shocking the country by telling it he would not run for president.

Maybe Hillary should take the hint. The laughter will die away, eventually. ■

Contrary to reports, Beau Elliot does not sit up at 3 a.m. waiting for phone calls. He sits up at 3 a.m. wondering why he so intelligently picked Xavier to win the NCAA Tournament.

More than 4,000: Don't forget about Iraqi civilian casualties

Last week marked a series of grave milestones for the United States. Roaring into the sixth year of our involvement in Iraq, the circumstances there remain dire. What the Bush administration vowed would be a clean, decisive military victory for democracies everywhere has become an embarrassing, insoluble failure. While violence in certain segments of Iraq has been quelled by the unsustainable U.S. troop "surge," the country teeters on the brink of collapse. A mounting insurgency grips the nation's south, a fledgling infrastructure leaves millions without clean water or reliable electricity, and a humanitarian crisis of titanic proportions seems imminent, as millions of displaced Iraqis search for refuge.

The toll the war has taken in terms of life and capital is impossible to quantify objectively. To date, the United States has squandered more than $508 billion, well more than 29,000 combat-troops have been wounded, and last week, newspapers across the country proclaimed in bold ink that the 4,000th U.S. servicemember had been killed in combat.

And while we in the United States mourn the passing of 4,000 sons, daughters, brothers, and fathers, let us not overlook another catastrophic consequence of our involvement in Iraq: The toll it has taken on the Iraqi population.

The casualty figures pouring out of Iraq remain murky. A recent report by the Iraqi-based Independent Institute for Administration and Civil Security Studies suggests that the death toll there, as a direct result of the invasion and occupation, now surpasses the 1 million mark. In October 2006, a highly publicized study conducted by Iraqi physicians with the backing of Johns Hopkins University's Bloomberg School of Public Health estimated the death-toll at 655,000. According to the most recent survey, on average, one of four families in Iraq has experienced the death of a family member.

Although now-retired U.S. General Tommy Franks boldly proclaimed, "We don't do body counts," when asked about the civilian death toll in Iraq, the American public surely does. According to Iraqbodycount.org, a database of casualty reports spilling from Iraq, from the onset of the war in March 2003 through March 2007, more than 59,000 innocent civilians have perished. That averages more than 41 civilian deaths per day. These figures only reflect violent deaths — through mortar fire, suicide attacks, and direct bombings — when factors such as disease, starvation, and indirect trauma are figured in, the numbers mushroom.

For millions of Iraqis caught in the cross hairs of violence, fleeing home was the only option. The U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees now counts more than 4.2 million displaced Iraqis. More than 2 million have crossed their country's borders to escape the smoke and uncertainty, most relocating to such neighboring countries as Syria, Jordan, and Lebanon. Another 2 million Iraqis remain displaced internally — most jobless, hungry, and desperate.

Five years have come and gone. With the lofty campaign rhetoric of presidential hopefuls extolling the importance of concluding our engagement in Iraq, our soldiers remain bunkered down, their guns still blazing. The insurgency shows no signs of slowing down, imposing stability proves elusive, and the United States' extended presence in Iraq seems unavoidable. And, while we hold candlelight vigils to vent the senseless loss of our young men and women, let us not forget the people for whose freedom we're fighting for. Iraqi mothers, just like us, are mourning the bloodshed.

All or nothing

Amid the countless political polls being thrown at us from all directions, one particularly disappointing one has recently taken hold of the Democratic spotlight. Despite the lack of any significant policy disagreements between the Democratic candidates, many supporters of each campaign have decided that, come November, it's going to be all or nothing. That is, Democrats on both sides have made it clear that, if their candidate doesn't win, they'll either vote for John McCain or not vote at all.

It has never been disputed that the policies of Sens. Barack Obama and Hillary Rodham Clinton have much in common. Nor has it been disputed that this lack of substantive difference is likely the reason the nomination race is rapidly becoming the largest, most expensive popularity contest in history. However, in allowing themselves to become so beguiled by the peaks and valleys of this ongoing personal squabble, these supporters have reached a level of obstinacy so unwavering as to put the success of a candidate before that of her or his party. Wasn't the underlying objective of this Democratic nomination to cauterize the contemporary wounds that have been inflicted by Bush, Cheney, and the like? Perhaps the indisputable damage caused by the current administration left Democrats believing that a presidential victory was all but certain. Very likely, though it may be, such is a prediction that can only be affirmed if Democrats actually go out and vote — and vote for the candidate of their own party.

Supporters on both sides would do well to limit their considerations to the four years after the presidential election. Even the most stubborn Democrats will admit that the policies set to be put in place by the candidates are remarkably similar; that is, the things these candidates would actually do as president are nearly indistinguishable. Considering the obvious and widespread regret at having allowed George W. Bush to take office, it seems that these are the things Democrats ought to be considering. Because, without a doubt, most liberals would admit that a second-choice Democrat is greatly preferable to an extended conservative reign.

Protected monopolies no stroll on the boardwalk

The Justice Department's antitrust division, whose job it is to defend us against monopolies, blessed the proposed merger between XM Satellite Radio Holdings Inc. and Sirius Satellite Radio Inc. last week, potentially subjecting more than 17 million listeners to something that looks like, well, a monopoly. The division argued that satellite radio is not a distinct market but instead a small slice of the broader one for audio news and entertainment. That's the right framework to judge the deal, because it reflects how consumers measure XM and Sirius — as an alternative to local radio, the Internet, and whatever they can load on their iPods and phones.

Digital technologies are bulldozing the barriers to markets for all forms of media, including newspapers, magazines, television, and movies. That's why antitrust officials should take the same expansive approach to defining other media markets as they did with XM's and Sirius'. But that doesn't mean the federal government should give media companies, networks, and broadcasters a free pass to consolidate. Antitrust officials and the Federal Communications Commission still need to consider the relative power of new competitors versus established sources and the degree to which the public is being compensated for the use of its assets.

The market for audio entertainment is unique in the extent to which consumers have adopted digital alternatives. They've equipped themselves with more than 140 million iPods, and they're tuning in to online radio by the tens of millions. But local radio broadcasters still have the largest audience by far, and consequently the most powerful voices. Meanwhile, the market for video has been fragmented by the proliferation of cable and satellite networks. Yet content providers that have direct access to a TV set, as opposed to a computer screen or a cell phone, have a significant advantage over those that don't — for now, at least.

The most powerful incumbents in the video and audio markets are the ones that have enjoyed a huge government subsidy: free, exclusive licenses to the public's airwaves. The supply of those frequencies is finite, and it's reasonable to limit their accumulation by broadcasting chains. It's also reasonable for the FCC, which has the final say over mergers by license holders, to impose conditions designed to promote innovation and the public interest. XM and Sirius have already delivered a financial benefit in return for their licenses — they paid $173 million for them — and they've pledged to offer more-affordable packages of their service. Nevertheless, the FCC should require the same kind of openness from XM and Sirius as it has started demanding from some wireless companies. It should direct the merged company to open its service to any manufacturer wanting to build compatible devices, and then let customers make their own choices.

Lili Haydn
Place Between Places
 ★★ out of ★★★★★

Ah, music for a blue mood. Lili Haydn's debut album Place Between Places offers the strains of something sophisticated and a taste of what one might hear in an epic movie's score. Chock-full of simple piano melodies, gentle violin, and fluid vocals, the album is reminiscent of the cameos she did with Josh Groban and Radha Botofasina on their albums. Haydn's classical training blends effortlessly with tinges of pop and rock with songs "Strawberry Street" and the title track "Place Between Places."

Haydn might benefit greatly from a slight diversification of her own sound at times — the lengthy string riffs grow repetitive over the album. Setting that aside, Haydn has secured a place in the industry with her distinctive instrumentation, sweeping climaxes, and sincerity packed into each track.

Accelerate
 ★★★★★ out of ★★★★★

The beginning chords of "Living Well's the Best Revenge," the opening track on R.E.M.'s latest album, Accelerate, are the rainbow after a decade-long thunderstorm in the band's career. R.E.M. finally shakes out of the rut it called home since original drummer Bill Berry departed the band for the confines of his Georgia farm. After years of toiling through a maze of atmospheric light electronic pop, the band members are picking up their instruments, turning up their amplifiers, and finally rocking out.

On Accelerate, R.E.M. members reclaim the youthful rage and aggression that made them standouts in the crowded college-rock landscape from which they emerged. The album combines the experimental high-points of '90s R.E.M. releases Monster and New Adventures in Hi-Fi with the rebellion and rawness of the band's older '80s classics, such as Life's Rich

Pageant and Document.
Accelerate accomplishes the goal many R.E.M. fans, and perhaps even the band itself, thought impossible: It is the first album in Berry's absence to feel like a new R.E.M. album instead of an album by three guys who used to be R.E.M.

Muse
HAARP Live from Wembley Stadium ★★★★★ out of ★★★★★

Go to dailiowan.com to read an extended version of this review.

It is a good thing Muse band members Matthew Bellamy, Chris Wolstenholme, and Dominic Howard are such conspiracy buffs; the only way their new live concert recording CD/DVD, HAARP, will ever become popular in the United States is through grass-roots methods popular among Bigfoot followers, UFO sighters and Ron Paul supporters.

Please, don't get the wrong impression. For aficionados of the British band, HAARP is an excellent album. Wolstenholme's improvisations on "Supermassive Black Hole" and Bellamy's extended keyboard arpeggios on "Butterflies and Hurricanes" are particularly well done. However, the original albums themselves are so intricate and grandiose that a new listener might not notice.

Recently, Muse hasn't had much radio airtime. Without new songs, HAARP won't change that; stations will be wary of playing cuts similar to those that just dropped off the charts. This album won't promote itself — the band and its fans will have to aggressively market the CD or face falling victim to the American public's short attention span.

mission creek MUSIC FEST

Today marks the final day of anticipation before the kickoff of the third-annual Mission Creek Music Festival. The manic four-day weekend starts Wednesday and runs until Saturday with roughly 60 indie acts rocking six Iowa City venues.

Starting Wednesday, The Daily Iowan will feature coverage of each day's festival events, highlighting key must-see bands and providing full schedule information. Also, check out the D/ website, dailiowan.com, for an extensive Mission Creek schedule with short profiles, pictures, and MP3s of the bands that will hit the many stages throughout the next four nights.

For those who cannot take the wait any longer, Daytrotter, a music and entertainment website in the Quad Cities, presents a festival pre-party tonight with performances by Bon Iver and Headlights at Huckleberry's Great Pizza, 223 18th St., Rock Island, Ill. (approximately an hour's drive from Iowa City).

Surrendering to the tour

Despite the name, Just Surrender has proved to do anything but give up, lineup changes or otherwise.

By Anna Wiegenstein
 THE DAILY IOWAN

"Touring's not for everyone," Dan Simons said with conviction. "It's a series of peaks and valleys." If anyone should know, it's Simons and the other members of his band, Just Surrender. Not only have they not taken a break since July of last year (well, a week and a half for Christmas, but come on), but they're among one of numerous bands who have lost a member because of the strains of the touring lifestyle.

Publicity photo

But not all groups tend to welcome those members back.

Barely under a month ago, Just Surrender announced that original guitarist Andrew Meunier had rejoined the band. Replacement guitarist Alex Haycraft was shuffled over to bass, leaving Jason Maffucci, the other lead vocalist along with Simons, without an instrument.

"Jay's now able to get in the audience's face, and it creates a lot more energy," Simons said. "It gives the crowd a recognizable face. It's clearer now — he's the frontman."

Tonight's show at the Picador, 330 E. Washington St., marks the second date on the rock group's tour along with Crime in Stereo, Inept, and headliners A Day To Remember.

Let's one think that Meunier was welcomed back with completely open arms, Simons candidly sets the record straight: "Oh, no, it was bad, but he apologized, and I'm not the type to hold grudges, and the other guys aren't, either."

All that said, Just Surrender has proved it can last, even if the lineup changes again.

"We toured for a year without [Meunier], and that kind of showed that we didn't really need him," he said. "I mean, if it happens again, there probably won't be another reconciliation."

Experimentation and change has been a theme for Just Surrender in recent months. Since releasing sophomore album We're In Like Sin, following debut If These Streets Could Talk, a record Simons describes as "straight-up pop-punk," the band has allowed a wider range of sonic influences into its sound.

Fans need not worry, though — the group's biting lyrical style ("You'd Be In Great Shape If You Ran Like Your Mouth" is one example) remains intact.

"Honestly, I'm more into country music," Simons said. "I really like the way that the melodies in those songs are structured. Plus, stuff like rap music, it tends to overglorify violence or having sex. Country music is, for the most part, about regular people doing regular things."

And the boys of Just Surrender are regular people, besides the fact they spend 50 weeks a year sleeping in the back of a van. "Eventually, it all blends together," said Simons matter-of-factly. "It all turns into buildings and streets. We keep going, because that's our job. Playing for these kids night after night, it's very heartwarming to know that people care that much."

Ultimately, Just Surrender seems to be well-aware of the paradox that is the life of a touring musician. As Simons put it paradoxically: "It's not unfortunate, but it's unfortunate. Does that make sense?"

Rodham Clinton: Plan falls short

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Democrat Hillary Rodham Clinton on Monday criticized the Bush administration's plan to overhaul regulation of U.S. financial institutions, saying the proposal "comes late and falls short."

The New York senator said the government must move more assertively to contain the mortgage and credit crisis rattling financial markets, especially in finding ways to ease soaring rates of home foreclosures.

"No amount of rearranging the deck chairs can hide the fact that our housing and credit markets are in crisis, and they're sinking deeper every day," Rodham Clinton said at a campaign appearance. "Every day we fail to take aggressive action is a day lost."

She has focused on the nation's economic woes in appearances in Pennsylvania and other states holding primaries in coming weeks, trying to persuade voters that she is better prepared to tackle economic challenges than rival Barack Obama and Republican nominee-in-waiting John McCain.

The former first lady pledged as president to offer $100 billion in tax cuts for middle-class families to pay for health care, education, and other costs. Among other things, she proposed a $3,000 tax credit to help pay for the care of an elderly parent or a disabled child and said she would expand the Earned Income Tax Credit to make it available to a broader range of low-income workers.

It's OK to skip mouth-to-mouth

NEW YORK (AP) — You can skip the mouth-to-mouth breathing and just press on the chest to save a life. In a major change, the American Heart Association said Monday that hands-only CPR — rapid, deep presses on the victim's chest until help arrives — works just as well as standard CPR for sudden cardiac arrest in adults.

Experts hope bystanders will now be more willing to jump in and help if they see someone suddenly collapse. Hands-only CPR is simpler and easier to remember and removes a big barrier for people skittish about the mouth-to-mouth breathing.

"You only have to do two things. Call 911, and push hard and fast on the middle of the person's chest," said Dr. Michael Sayre, an emergency-medicine professor at Ohio State University who headed the committee that made the recommendation.

Hands-only CPR calls for uninterrupted chest presses — 100 a minute — until paramedics take over or an automated external defibrillator is available to restore a normal heart rhythm.

This action should be taken only for adults who unexpectedly collapse, stop breathing, and are unresponsive. The odds are that the person is having cardiac arrest — the heart suddenly stops — which can occur after a heart attack or be caused by other heart problems. In such a case, the victim still has ample air in the lungs and blood and compressions keep blood flowing to the brain, heart, and other organs.

Blood pressure drugs can prevent heart attacks and stroke

CHICAGO (AP) — Two big studies offer good news to people with high blood pressure, finding that novel ways to use cheap drugs already on blood pressure drugs, said Dr. Nigel Beckett of Imperial College in London, who led one study in the elderly that also was published online by the New England Journal of Medicine.

More than 70 million Americans have high blood pressure — readings of 140 over 90 or more — and only a third have it well controlled by medicines. Guidelines advise starting on one, usually a "water pill," and adding others as needed.

With each new medication, "You get more pills, more copays," said Dr. Kenneth Jamerson of the University of Michigan. "Our idea is, if you have to add on, why not do two right off the bat" in a single pill.

He led a study testing a single daily pill combining a diuretic and the ACE inhibitor benazepril versus a daily pill containing benazepril and a calcium channel blocker, amlodipine. ACE inhibitors dilate blood vessels to lower pressure. Calcium channel blockers do the same in a different way.

A total of 11,462 people in the United States and Nordic countries were given one combo or the other. Their average age was 68, and besides high blood pressure they were obese, had diabetes or other health problems.

HUD secretary quits amid criminal probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing and Urban Development Secretary Alphonso Jackson, his tenure tarnished by allegations of political favoritism and a criminal investigation, announced his resignation Monday amid the wreckage of the national housing crisis.

He leaves behind a trail of unanswered questions about whether he tilted HUD toward Republican contractors and cronies.

The move comes at a shaky time for the economy, with soaring mortgage foreclosures imperiling the nation's credit markets.

In announcing that his last day at HUD will be April 18, Jackson said only, "There comes a time when one must attend more diligently to personal and family matters."

In historic change, Army lets husband-and-wife soldiers live together in Iraq

BAGHDAD (AP) — When American soldiers get off duty in Iraq, the men usually return to their quarters, the women to theirs. But Staff Sgt. Marvin Frazier gets to go back to a small trailer with two pushed-together single beds that he shares with his wife.

In a historic but little-noticed change in policy, the Army is allowing scores of husband-and-wife soldiers to live and sleep together in the war zone — a move aimed at preserving marriages, boosting morale, and perhaps bolstering re-enlistment rates at a time when the military is struggling to fill its ranks five years into the fighting.

"It makes a lot of things easier," said Frazier, 33, a helicopter-maintenance supervisor in the 3rd Infantry Division. "It really adds a lot of stress, being separated. Now you can sit face-to-face and try to work out things and comfort each other."

Kosuke Fukudome

Brewers beat Cubs to spoil Fukudome's debut

CHICAGO (AP) — The start of the Cubs' 100th season since winning the World Series ended like so many seasons at Wrigley Field — with a loss.

Tony Gwynn hit a sacrifice fly in the 10th inning, and the Milwaukee Brewers beat Chicago, 4-3, Monday.

Kosuke Fukudome went 3-for-3, hitting a tying three-run homer in the ninth off Eric Gagne (1-0), but it wasn't enough for the Cubs, who haven't even reached the World Series since 1945.

Pinch-hitter Craig Counsell opened the 10th with a double off Bob Howry (0-1) and moved up on a sacrifice. And after Rickie Weeks was hit by a pitch for the second-straight inning, Gwynn delivered the go-ahead fly. David Riske pitched the bottom of the 10th for the save.

Milwaukee's Ben Sheets and Chicago's Carlos Zambrano pitched shutout ball, the Cubs ace forced out in the seventh because of a forearm cramp.

The Brewers went ahead in the ninth off Kerry Wood. Ryan Braun hit an RBI single before falling down coming out of the batter's box, and Corey Hart's two-run double made it 3-0.

Wrestling team gets 'day'

Every other year, April 3 is just another day on the calendar. It's only association with fame stems from its close relationship to April Fools' Day.

No longer will this Thursday suffer in anonymity.

This week, the Iowa wrestling team will head to the state capital, where Gov. Chet Culver will name April 3 "University of Iowa Wrestling Day."

The ceremony will be held at 4 p.m. in the governor's office in Des Moines, with the entire team invited to attend.

The recognition comes after the finish of a dominant season for the Tom Brands grapplers. Not only were the Hawkeyes crowned NCAA team champions, but Brent Metcalf and Mark Perry also brought home individual titles.

Metcalf was named the winner of the Dan Hodge trophy last week after taking home Outstanding Wrestler honors at the NCAA Tournament. At that tournament, Brands' efforts were acknowledged with the NCAA Coach of the Year award.

A Taste of Triple-A

Iowa pitcher Kyle Heim delivers a pitch on March 26 at Banks Field. The Hawkeyes will play the Triple-A Iowa Cubs tonight in Des Moines.

Fresh off a four-game sweep at the hands of Michigan, the Hawkeyes will try to find their bats tonight in an exhibition against the Triple-A Iowa Cubs.

By Diane Hendrickson

THE DAILY IOWAN

This isn't the way the Iowa baseball team wanted to start its conference season.

After finishing 31-23 last season and placing fourth in the Big Ten, the Hawkeyes sit at 7-13 after being swept by No. 25 Michigan in the opening weekend of league play.

Iowa hopes to turn things around tonight in an exhibition against the Iowa Cubs in Des Moines.

Coach Jack Dahm says for his team, notoriously slow starters, it's not time to panic yet at 0-4 in conference.

"We haven't exactly been very good starters in Big Ten play, for whatever reason," he said. "So we've been here before."

Despite dropping all four games against the Wolverines, Dahm saw considerable improvement in his pitching staff, but now the offense needs to get on track. Iowa limited the explosive Michigan offense to fewer than five runs per game, but the Hawkeyes could only manage 20 hits in the series.

The Hawkeyes took Michigan to extra innings in the first game and stayed even in the finale until the seventh inning. The Wolverines scored five runs in one inning and six through the first three in the middle games.

"We were right there in every game," Dahm said. "We had a chance to win every game. We just couldn't come up with the big hit when we needed to or shut them down when we needed to."

"We just could not swing the bat."

This exhibition comes at the perfect time for the Hawkeyes. Dahm criticized his team a week ago after a 5-3 loss to Northern Illinois, in which he said Iowa needed a better approach to midweek games. The Hawkeyes can use this as a tune up to try to get over the

Hawks face ISU

The Iowa softball team is prepared to end the final intrastate showdown of the season on a positive note.

By Eric Mandel
 THE DAILY IOWAN

There will be no Cy-Hawk Trophy falling into the Hawkeye mitts in 2008.

Down 18-7 with just one intrastate battle remaining this season, the trophy signifying Iowa sporting supremacy has already been swallowed by the swirling winds of the Cyclones.

But surprise, surprise, you would never realize it by talking to any of the Iowa softball players.

The trophy aside, the fight will rage on as Iowan blood pumps on both sides of the diamond when Iowa (20-11, 1-1) travels to Ames to take on Iowa State (23-14, 1-3) at 4 p.m. today.

"As is always the case when you play the Cyclones, they come ready to play you," said Iowa head coach Gayle Blevins. "A lot of the athletes know each other because there are a lot of Iowa kids on both teams, and we are going into their backyard."

"... They'll hustle and are real scrappy — always looking to take that extra base. We have to be real sharp, play good defense, and pitch to positive counts."

The Hawkeyes have won three of their last four games after dropping four in a row, and they are coming off a series split with No. 22 Ohio State. However, the Hawkeyes haven't fared well as the visiting squad, posting a 2-5 record in away games this year with four road conference games coming April 5-6.

"This kind of competitive game should give us some momentum going into Michigan this weekend," said pitcher Brittany Weil, who is scheduled to take mound today for the Hawkeyes.

Weil needs the Iowa sluggers to swing with consistency — something that has eluded the squad all year.

Although the Hawks have hit well in spurts as a team during the early part of the season — with freshman Chelsey Carmody and junior Colleen McGlaughlin leading the regulars with .371 and .361 batting averages respectively — only five Iowa hitters are hitting better than a .260 average.

Emily Nichols, the Hawkeyes' all-time home-run leader and member of the 2008 USA Softball Player of the Year Watch List, is swinging one of the most frigid sticks on the squad despite leading the team with four home runs, batting .205 with a .267 on-base percentage.

"I'm not really worried about [Nichols]," Weil said. "Emily really peaks when we need her to peak. I wouldn't really be surprised if this weekend is when she starts to shine."

"If we can pitch and continue to get timely hitting like we've been trying to do all year, I think we'll be fine," Blevins said.

'Ins' and 'outs' for Hawks

By Bobby Loesch

THE DAILY IOWAN

Indoor-Outdoor. Outdoor-Indoor. Indoor ... Ugh.

The Iowa men's tennis team spent its entire pre-spring-break season playing indoors, but when break finally came, the Hawkeyes found themselves outdoors in the Texas heat and wind trying to adjust to playing conditions they hadn't seen since fall. It wasn't catastrophic — Iowa went 3-1 on the trip — but still, as the Big Ten season begins in the Midwest, the uncertainty of where the team will play isn't exactly helping matters. As of last week, Iowa hadn't even practiced outdoors in Iowa City.

Bart van Monsjou, Iowa's No. 1 singles player, believes the Hawkeyes will excel if and when outdoor play is made possible.

"I think our team is better outdoors because of the style we play," he said. "Our team feels more confident outdoors."

Over the last weekend, Iowa played indoors against Michigan and Penn State, and both meets resulted with an added number in the loss column. While the team would never blame indoor courts or make excuses, you certainly have to wonder what the outcome could have been if the contests had been outside. Van Monsjou said that sometimes, the Hawkeyes don't know where they will play on the road until right before they arrive at the meet.

"Most of our players feel more comfortable outside because it goes a little slower," van Monsjou said. "A lot of the guys on the team like long rallies."

That could speak to how well the team is conditioned. First-year assistant coach Steve Nash has run the players all season in practice, and outdoor play might help to enhance the

ISU coach: Get physical

By Chuck Schoffner
 ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMES — Gene Chizik's message to his Iowa State football team this spring has been clear and simple: "Fellas, it's time to bear down and get more physical."

"That's kind of the theme of where we're going this spring," he said on Monday. "When we're in pads, we're going to use the pads."

Quarterback Austen Arnaud sees that message getting across.

"It's getting real physical," he said. "Not for me so much, just because I'm a quarterback. But I can see those other guys getting after it and working hard. Those pads are definitely popping out there."

That sound has to be music to Chizik's ears because he felt the Cyclones got pushed around too often while finishing 3-9 last season, his first as ISU's coach.

They held up at times, beating Kansas State and Colorado late in the season, hanging with Oklahoma for an entire game, and staying with Missouri for three quarters. But they got swamped by Texas and Texas Tech and were outmuscled in early season losses to Kent State and Northern Iowa.

Chizik said the team is stronger overall because of off-season work in the weight room and he hopes that translates into a more dominating presence on the field.

Arnaud
 ISU quarterback

"Right now, I'm really pleased," he said. "They're doing everything we ask them to do. They are very much trying to be a physical football team."

Linebacker Jesse Smith likes that approach.

"We're more concentrated on our individual drills being more physical and using our hands," said Smith, who was third on the team with 79 tackles last fall. "I think that's good. We needed to be more physical. I think with this point of view, we're going to win more games."

One area getting a lot of attention is the offensive line, even though four of the five starters return. Chizik is looking for more consistency from that group, which played well in some games, not so well in others.

"We felt like there were times when we ran the ball fairly well," Chizik said. "And there were times when we couldn't move it an inch. When that happens, there's generally inconsistencies in there."

Indians top ChiSox

CLEVELAND (AP) — Their ballpark may have a new name. Little else changed about the Cleveland Indians.

The defending AL Central champions won in familiar fashion at Progressive Field — home to so much late-inning drama when it was called Jacobs Field for the past 14 years. Casey Blake hit a three-run double in the eighth inning Monday to give the Indians a 10-8 season-opening win over the Chicago White Sox.

It may not be known as the Jake anymore, but everything else seemed in place for the Indians, who won 23 times in their final at-bat last season.

With the score 7-7, Kelly Shoppach and Jhonny Peralta opened the eighth with singles off Octavio Dotel (0-1), who bounced back and got two quick outs. Franklin Gutierrez, who hit a three-run homer in Cleveland's seven-run second, walked to load the bases.

Blake followed with a shot high off the 19-foot-high wall in left, starting a new chapter of memories for Indians fans, who have resisted the ballpark's new corporate moniker.

Unlike last year, when a blizzard wiped out the home opener and Cleveland's first home stand, the game was played in unexpected 60-degree temperatures but a strong tail wind that helped the teams combine for five homers, including a pair of two-run drives by Chicago's Jim Thome off reigning AL Cy Young winner C.C. Sabathia.

Jermaine Dye homered in the ninth off Cleveland closer Joe Borowski, last year's AL saves leader who once again had pulses racing before retiring Joe Crede on a foul pop to get the save for winner Rafael Betancourt.

The GymHawks' regular-season success produces two deserved conference honors. Simbhudas, Libby honored

By Lars Headington
 THE DAILY IOWAN

No individual accolade can substitute for a team victory, and for that reason, Iowa's women's gymnastics head coach Larissa Libby said she had mixed feelings receiving the Big Ten Coach of the Year award March 29.

"While it's certainly special and exciting, I felt like it was a little anticlimactic because I wanted the team to be up on the podium," Libby said following the GymHawks' fifth-place finish at the Big Ten championships. "If I could trade it for second or first, I would."

Despite a disappointing finish at the conference finale, the GymHawks have enjoyed a turnaround season under Libby's watch.

Iowa compiled a 10-4-1 record — its first winning campaign in four years — behind six 195-plus performances. The GymHawks hadn't scored a single 195 performance since 2005.

as 19th nationally and finished the regular season ranked third in the Big Ten with a 3-1-1 conference record.

"We've shown so much improvement this year, and our gymnastics has totally proved it that she's helped us," said junior Jenifer Simbhudas.

Simbhudas — named to the All-Big Ten team — is just one gymnast Libby has seen grow stronger in competition this year.

Twice a Big Ten Gymnast of the Week, she led Iowa in three events and averaged a 39.205 in the all-around for No. 29 in the country.

"It was a great honor for Jenifer," Libby said. "She has worked very, very hard to be recognized as one of the better athletes at the conference ... she's had a stellar year."

The Markham, Ontario, native, who was second team All-Big Ten last year, said this year's honor validates the hard work she has put in to improve. "I definitely worked through what I had to this year in order to show that I'm capable of being first team," Simbhudas said. "I've done so well this season — I only want to do better and qualify for nationals and hopefully make the podium."

The Big Ten championships tested the improved GymHawks' competitive resolve.

Libby felt her team beginning to wilt at the meet's midway point and took advantage of the intermission between events to refocus her squad.

"When we pulled together before bars, I tried to shift the focus to hitting 24-for-24 and focus on the positive that we are now 50 percent of our way through the meet and have been perfect as far as hits," Libby said. "We tried to focus on that and us representing Iowa well and with the spirit that they've had all year long."

Getting her gymnasts' minds off the score and onto execution worked well; Iowa posted a third-place 49.0 on bars, matching its best of the year in the event.

giving the rest of the lineup a shot in arm.

"I think that made a difference right there," Libby said. "It kind of brought the life and a little bit of magic back into them."

Iowa went on to a third-place 48.975 mark on beam, vanquishing the ghost of its fall-ridden 2007 Big Ten beam collapse.

In the end, Libby's GymHawks hit 24-for-24 with no falls to compile a 194.775 and salvage a fifth-place finish — its best ending at the event in four years. The GymHawks now look to retain their confidence as they prepare for NCAA regionals April 12.

"She always tells us that she believes in us, and she always pushes us to our fullest potential," senior Katie Burke said. "Just working with her and discovering my own strengths and the team's strengths is just a great spot to be."

team's particular strength in that area.

While the transition to outdoors might be tough now, it was considerably harder in years past. Before construction of the Hawkeye Tennis & Recreation Center — which became the Iowa's home last season — the Hawkeyes played home meets at the dated Recreation Center. The courts, notorious for unrealistically fast points, forced Iowa to make an awkward transition when outdoor play came around.

"It's a lot easier now because [the Hawkeye Tennis & Recreation Center] is exactly the same surface that we played on outside," van Monsjou said.

As playing conditions change, so do strengths and weaknesses of players involved.

"Big serves, big games," said Iowa head coach Steve Houghton, discussing players who typically find success indoors. "Powerful serves are not quite as important outdoors."

With a slate of two home meets approaching this weekend and the weather hovering in the 50s with scattered showers, van Monsjou probably speaks for a lot of players when he says he just wants some consistency.

"I would prefer California," the Oirschot, Netherlands, native joked. "The switch from being indoors for a long time to outdoors is tough; going from outdoors to indoors is easier. If you keep switching during the season, it can be annoying for you and throw off your game."

"I hope it heats up."

sting of the weekend.

"We're all very disappointed and frustrated with losing," said pitcher Michael Jacobs, whose work against Michigan was praised by his coach. "We need to find ways to win ... We just didn't put a complete game together. We played good in spurts, but we didn't play good for a whole, complete game."

The only worry is if Iowa will have enough arms to last the week. The Hawkeyes will take on Illinois State Wednesday and play a four-game set against Purdue this weekend. In the teams' last meeting, some I-Cubs pitched against their team because the Hawkeyes were short on pitchers.

If history is any indication, this game could be a launching point for the struggling Hawkeyes, who can't afford to fall behind in the conference race.

"For whatever reason, the past two times we've played the Iowa Cubs, we've come out and played pretty good the next week," Dahm said.

Baseball begins damp

Kevorc Djanezian/Associated Press

Los Angeles Dodger manager Joe Torre is introduced at Dodger Stadium before the Dodgers' opening-day baseball game against San Francisco Giants in Los Angeles on Monday.

By Ronald Blum

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Opening day — version No. 3 — was a soggy affair for much of the country.

Yankee Stadium's 84th and final home opener was rained out Monday, as was the Cardinals' opener in St. Louis.

There were a pair of delays at Wrigley Field as the Chicago Cubs began their 100th season since winning the World Series the same way so many of their seasons have ended — with a loss.

But there was plenty of baseball, too, with Joe Torre winning his first game as manager of the Los Angeles Dodgers and Johan Santana getting the victory in his debut with the New York Mets.

"I called several of my players — my former players, I should say — to wish them luck," Torre said before the game, adding he heard back from Yankees manager Joe Girardi, catcher Jorge Posada, and shortstop Derek Jeter.

"The guys I've been with, I basically called and wished them luck," Torre said. "They meant a lot to me. We had a great relationship."

Detroit's $138 million Tigers opened with a thud, losing 5-4 to visiting Kansas City in 11 innings, while Tampa Bay won 6-2 at Baltimore. In later AL games, Texas was at Seattle and the Los Angeles Angels was at Minnesota.

In the NL, Milwaukee beat the Cubs 4-3 in 11 innings, Los Angeles defeated visiting San Francisco 5-0, the Mets won 7-2 at Florida, Arizona won 4-2 at Cincinnati and Washington won 11-6 at Philadelphia.

Later, Pittsburgh was at Atlanta and Houston at San Diego.

The World Series champion Boston Red Sox and Oakland officially began the season last week when they split a two-game series in Tokyo. And in the first game at Nationals Park, Washington defeated Atlanta on Sunday night.

But the other 26 teams were scheduled to get under way Monday. With baseball now starting in March some years and the World Series threatening to stretch in November, weather increasingly factors into the start and finish.

In the Bronx, the tarp was still on the field when New York's game against Toronto was called after a wait of approximately 85 minutes. Players never got introduced, and Girardi's debut as Yankees manager was postponed.

"You want to get the first one in," Alex Rodriguez said. "Just have to wait."

St. Louis led NL champion Colorado 5-1 in the third inning behind an Albert Pujols homer when its game was stopped, then called after a 1:39 wait. The Blue Jays and Yankees, and Rockies and Cardinals will play makeups Tuesday night.

At Wrigley Field, Tony Gwynn hit a sacrifice fly in the 10th inning for Milwaukee. Kosuke Fukudome went 3-for-3, hitting a tying, three-run homer in the ninth off winner Eric Gagne, but it wasn't enough for the Cubs, who haven't even reached the World Series since 1945.

Because of the 100th anniversary, even more attention has been focused on the Cubs' travails.

"How do I view it? ... It's not something I came up with, believe me," manager Lou Piniella said before the game. "It seems rather improbable. I mean a long time."

Santana struck out eight and allowed three hits in seven dominant innings, David Wright hit a three-run double, and New York opened its season with a 7-2 win.

"It's always good to get the first one out of the way," Santana said. "I wasn't trying to put anything in my head or anything. Just another game, another opening day, different uniform, lot of expectations. But I felt good."

If only the Mets had Santana last September, when they blew a seven-game lead in the NL East with 17 games left. The collapse became complete when the Marlins scored seven times off Tom Glavine in the first inning on the season's final day.

Santana was traded to the Mets from Minnesota this winter and wound up signing a $137.5 million, six-year contract with New York.

Arizona's Brandon Webb allowed three hits and a pair of runs in six innings. He hadn't gotten a victory in his two previous opening-day starts.

All eyes on Lions' QB

By Genaro C. Armas

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Hands on knees, Joe Paterno surveyed Penn State practice from his perch 30 yards behind the secondary. He was looking straight at the offense when a pass got broken up.

"Quarterback made a wrong read there," Paterno yelled twice in his familiar shrill voice.

From the head coach to the Blue and White faithful, it seems everyone is watching spring practice for signs of who will be the new starting quarterback.

Daryll Clark and Pat Devlin are the top candidates to replace departed two-year starter Anthony Morelli. Paterno has insisted that Paul Cianciolo, who did not get into a game last year, was in the mix, too.

"I don't have to make that decision. Why should I make it?" Paterno said in response to a question about the quarterback race after a recent practice. "All I want to do is make everybody out there as good as I can be."

Fair enough, Joe. The season opener against Coastal Carolina is still five months away.

Yet, after the topic of Paterno's contract, the quarterback question has been front and center in Happy Valley ever since the Alamo Bowl win in December over Texas A&M, Morelli's final college game.

A drop-back passer with a strong arm, Morelli compiled gaudy statistics and two bowl wins in his two seasons leading the offense. But he had trouble at times in the clutch, especially in Big Ten games, and he wasn't a fan favorite.

So the athletic Clark intrigued the Nittany Lions' ardent fans when he rushed for 50 yards and a touchdown on six carries as a change-of-pace-type quarterback against the Aggies in the most meaningful playing time of his college career.

Paterno said his son and quarterbacks coach, Jay Paterno, wanted to play Clark more last season, "and I tied his hands. I blame myself for that."

Clark, who will be a senior this fall, has an edge in experience over Devlin, who will be a redshirt sophomore. A Downingtown East graduate, Devlin holds an impressive credential on his resume — Pennsylvania's high school career passing leader.

With Morelli gone, Penn State has dusted off some option and read plays that the offense successfully employed in the 2005 season with dual-threat QB Michael Robinson at the helm. Just running through some of the old plays that helped the Nittany Lions finish 11-1 in '05 excited receiver Deon Butler.

It should make for some busy practice sessions for the defense, too. Double-threat quarterbacks are the hardest to prepare for, defensive back Lydell Sargeant said.

Moving to such a scheme might give the starting edge for this year's team to Clark, who is described as more of an option quarterback. Butler, though, cautioned that Devlin's agility shouldn't be underestimated.

"He's a mobile quarterback who you can get out on the edge and you can run the option with him and he can be a threat," said Butler, who has a team-leading 15 TD catches over the last three seasons. "Maybe not take it to the distance, but he's more than capable of running the option."

There's one other scenario Paterno could consider — could Penn State turn to a two-QB system, similar to what teams like Florida have successfully used?

A week into practice, Paterno wanted to hear nothing of it.

"Maybe three, I don't know," he said with exasperation. "Do I talk clearly or don't I? I just said, I don't know."

wish we were still playing, but I am happy with the success we had this season." The 6-10 Beasley averaged 26.5 points and 12.4 rebounds for the Wildcats, shooting 53.5 percent from the field including 38.9 percent from 3-point range. He is Kansas State's first All-American since Bob Boozer in 1959.

Hansbrough, a second-team selection last season, compiled impressive numbers (23.0 points, 10.4 rebounds) and lived up to his "Psycho T" nickname while leading the Tar Heels to a school-record 36 wins and their 17th Final Four. The last North Carolina player to be picked to the first team was Joseph Forte in 2001.

The 6-9 Hansbrough and Beasley joined Jameer Nelson of Saint Joseph's and Emeke Okafor of Connecticut in 2004 and J.J. Redick of Duke and Adam Morrison of Gonzaga in 2006 as unanimous tandems. Hansbrough said he knew his name and Beasley's were linked most of the season by fans and media.

"I think everybody wants to make comparisons about stats and things," Hansbrough said. "To me, I thought he was definitely in a different situation from here. ... He definitely had a good year and has had a lot of accomplishments." The 6-foot Augustin was named on 66 ballots and had 346 points. He directed the Longhorns to the regional final, averaging 39.2 minutes and 5.7 assists in 17.2 minutes. It is the second-straight year a Texas player was on the first team — Kevin Durant and Ohio State's Greg Oden became just the third and fourth freshmen to be so honored since 1972.

Until this group. Hansbrough, a junior and the ACC Player of the Year, and Beasley, the Big 12 Player of the Year and third freshman to lead the country in rebounding, were named on all 72 ballots and received 360 points from the same national media panel that selects the weekly Top 25. The voting was done before the NCAA Tournament.

"To be one of just two players in the country to receive such an honor is very humbling," said Beasley, who led Kansas State to its never NCAA bid since 1996. "I have never been about individual accomplishments, but about helping my team win games. I saying goodbye. What made it hurt so bad was that only three years earlier, he'd turned his alma mater down and vowed his everlasting allegiance. Thousands of relieved fans gathered in the football stadium that night to watch the news conference live on the video board. They still remember the famous quotation — spoken in that familiar North Carolina drawl that once charmed but now grates on so many Midwestern ears — "I'm stayin'."

"It's not so much that he left. Coaches change jobs all the time," said Chris Debacker, a second-year law student. "It's the way he did it. You can't blame him for wanting to go home and coach his alma mater. But he said he was staying, and then it felt like he betrayed us. That's why so many people are still upset with him."

Kansas fans who so love their basketball had reason to love Roy Williams and the Roy Williams era. He was personable and likable, and from 1989-03, his teams went 418-101 for a spectacular winning percentage of 80.5. They made four trips to the Final Four, twice advancing to the title game. They won nine conference championships.

He was probably the most popular man in the state. "Everybody loved him," said Jerry Nerverve, who owns the Red Lyon Tavern just up the street. "When Roy would walk down this sidewalk and wave at you, you just felt great."

Daily Break

“My economic plan is better than my bowling.”
— Presidential hopeful Barack Obama after bowling a 37 out of a possible 300 points.

the ledge

This column reflects the opinion of the author and not the D/ Editorial Board, the Publisher, Student Publications Inc., or the University of Iowa.

MITCH FICK Funny people who aren't funny

• Frank Caliendo: Congratulations. You can do an impression of George W. Bush. So can 27 million other Americans. Your show sucks. Get out of my life.

• Larry the Cable Guy: Sounding like an inbred life-long detassler is actually more sad than unfunny. Besides, anyone who NASCAR fans adore can't be good. Those guys don't know what proper entertainment is.

• Rob Schneider: The man can't play anyone his own race. Does that even require effort?

• Andy Dick: He has to overdose at some point, right?

• Sarah Silverman: Great. You said poop. I'll go grab a 3-year-old for you to talk to. And who isn't f*cking Matt Damon?

• Carlos Menica: You're probably the main reason our government wants the borders sealed. At least you have a gig pedaling Bud Light now. Pretty appropriate, considering I'd rather have alcohol poisoning than deal with the pain of listening to you speak.

• Michael Richards: We all loved Kramer. It's just the whole you-hating-black-people thing that we're a little iffy about.

• Pauly Shore: No one knows where he is, and that's just fine with me.

— Mitch Fick dedicates this Ledge to the memory of Mitch Hedberg, one of the funniest men of all-time.
E-mail him at: mitchell-fick@uiowa.edu.

Think you're pretty funny? Prove it. The Daily Iowan is looking for Ledge writers. You can submit a Ledge at daily-iowan@uiowa.edu. If we think it's good, we'll run it — and maybe contact you for more.

horoscopes Tuesday, April 1, 2008

—by Eugenia Last

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be bold, and ask for what you want. You will be surprised how many organizations are there to help out when someone is in need. Sometimes you need to go outside your circle to get results. New relationships can be formed.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Don't judge others, or you will be judged in return. Pick up knowledge and skills so you are well-informed about what interests you. A short trip will be valuable in terms of the people you meet or the lesson you learn.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Show your true feelings. Getting emotional will prove to others how much it means to you to follow the path you've chosen. This will encourage enthusiasm, inviting greater momentum and credibility to the table.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You have plenty to contribute, and by doing so, you will put yourself in a good position. Positive changes are upon you, so don't shy away from something that could lead to exactly what you need to spice up your life.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Check your bank statement before you spend anything. You'll have to say no to anyone trying to borrow or asking for a handout. Emotional issues will arise involving someone with whom you are trying to work.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Start a new hobby, or put yourself in a situation that allows you to meet new people. Don't let anyone make you feel guilty for wanting to enjoy life and try new things. Love is on the rise, so enjoy.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Jealousy or criticism will work against you. Give others the benefit of the doubt. You can master something that will help you get ahead and also make some interesting new friends.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Someone will work against you. It's probably got more to do with her or his own problems, not what you are doing. Focus on outside participation. Get involved with new people who can stimulate your mind.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Don't let your emotions lead you into temptation, arguments, or taking a stubborn, nonproductive stance. It will be up to you to get whatever job you are working on done. Don't expect someone else to pick up the slack.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): There is no power play that you can't overcome and win. A challenge is exactly what will get you moving. Money will not be hard for you to obtain. A settlement, loan, or agreement will turn in your favor.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be sure you understand what the people who count in your life are expecting from you. Use your imagination, and you will come up with an inventive solution. Think on your feet, and act quickly if you want others to respect you and accept your decisions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do what you think is right and not what someone who is trying to confuse you wants. As soon as you give someone the upper hand, he or she will take over. Stick to your game plan, and make the alterations that best suit your personal and professional needs.

KAY SYRAH, SYRAH

Devotay waiter Morgan Weiss pours a glass of Syrah at the restaurant on Monday. Kurt Friese, who owns Devotay with wife Kim Friese, said the turnout for the wine tasting was the largest the restaurant has had in 11 years of holding the monthly event. Four Syrahs imported from France, Argentina, and South Australia were served with tapas.
